First, in the minde and understanding, is commanded here the true confession and acknowledgement in the hearts of the only God: as our Saviour saith, This is life eternall, that they know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ, Ioh. 17. 3.

Against this duty, the offences and transgressions are these:

1. Ignorance of God, which is of two sorts: either simple ignorance, such as was that of the disciples of Ephesus, that did not know whether there were any holy Ghost or no, Act. 19. 2. or affected and wilfull ignorance, as Psal. 14. 1. The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God: Such an one was Pharaoh, who said, I know not the Lord: Such are all Atheists, as wicked Diagoras, and Theodorus, that denied there was any God: and Protagoras, with the Machiavellians, and Cotta in Cicero, with the Academikes, which were irresolved, whether there were any God, or no.

2. They also offend here, which erroniously bring in other Gods: As 1. Some doe worship Devils, as the Apostle saith, That the things which the Gentiles sacrificed, they sacrificed to Devils, 1. Cor. 10. 20. Of this sort are all Conjurers, Witches, Sorcerers, that make any compact or contract with the Devill. 2. Some among the Heathen worshipped the Sunne, Moone and Starres: As Ierem. 44. the Idolatrous women in imitating the Gentiles, worshipped the Queene of heaven, as they called the Moone. 3. Some worshipped the elements, as the Persians the fire, the Egyptians the water. 4. Some adored men, as Gods, under the names of Iupiter, Mars, Mercury: And the Papists have set up their Saints, whom they invocate, and make their prayers unto: and so rob God of his honour, imparting the glory of the Creator, to the creature. 5. Some have worshipped unreasonable creatures: As the Egyptians a Calfe, an Oxe, Vultures, Crocodiles, the Syrians and Phenicians a Fish: the Persians a Dragon. 6. They which erre concerning the worship, where of see in the end of the 3. doctrine following.

Secondly, God must have our whole heart, and entire affection: as 1. Our love. 2. Feare, and reverence. 3. Confidence, and trust. 4. Thankfulnesse.

1. God is to be loved above all: as our blessed Saviour saith, He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, Matth. 10. 35. Contrary unto this affection of love, are, 1. The naturall enmity of the heart by nature, against God: as the Apostle saith, The wisdome of the flesh is enmity against God, Rom. 8. 7. 2. Selfe love, 2. Tim. 3. 2. and the love of earthly things. Vrsi.

We must feare God above all, Deut. 6. 13. Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him. As we are to feare God, because of his mercy, goodnes, and bountifulnesse: so we feare him for his justice and power in punishing of sinne: And this feare bringeth forth reverence, worship, serving and adoring of God: as it is said by the Prophet, If I be a father, where is mine honour? if I bee a master, where is my feare? Mal. 1. 6. God therefore is to be honoured as our father, and to be feared as our Lord. Contrary hereunto is 1. Carnall security, and casting off the feare of God: as it is in the Psal. 10. 11. He saith in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hideth away his face, and will never see. 2. Prophanenesse, and irreverence in the presence of God, as in Eutychus, that fell asleepe while Paul preached, Act. 20. 3. Hypocrisie, when men draw neere with their lips, but their heart is farre from God. Simler. 4. Servile feare, which differeth from true feare, in these three respects. 1. In the beginning and cause thereof: the Filiall feare proceedeth from love of God, whom the children of God are afraid to offend, because he is so gratious and mercifull a father unto them: but the Servile feare ariseth, from the consideration of the justice and wrath of God.

The difference of filiall and servile feare.

2. In

2. In the object they differ: the Filiall feare worketh upon ſinne it ſelfe: the Servile, upon the puniſhment of ſinne. 3. In the fruits and effects: the Filiall feare is joyned with aſſurance and confidence: the Servile with deſpaire. Vrſin. 4. As theſe vices are in the defect, ſo curioſity is in the other extreme of exceſſe, when preſumptuouſly any attempteth to ſearch and pry into the ſecrets of God. Simler.

3. Affiance and confidence followeth, which relieth upon the wiſdome, power, and conſtancy of God, which is accompanied with faith and beliefe, 2. Chron. 20.20. Put your truſt in the Lord your God, and ye ſhall be aſſured, beleeve his Prophets, and ye ſhall proſper. A fruit and effect of this confidence is prayer: How can they call on him, upon whom they have not beleeved? Rom. 10.14.

Contrary hereunto, are, 1. Incredulity, and want of faith: as Chriſt comming into his countrey, marvelled at their unbeliefe, Mark. 6.6. 2. Doubtfulneſſe, as in Peter, when he would have come to Chriſt walking upon the water: to whom our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, O thou of little faith, wherefore diddeſt thou doubt? Matth. 14.13. 3. Diffidence and diſtruſt, as in the Courtier, who ſaid, Though God would make windowes in heaven, this thing cannot come to paſſe, 2. King. 7. 2. 4. Deſpaire, as in Cain, Geneſ. 4. and in Iudas, that hanged himſelfe. 5. Confidence in man, in riches, ſtrength, wiſdome, or in any thing but God.

4. Thankfulneſſe for benefits received, is alſo a part of Gods worſhip, as the Prophet David ſaith, Pſalm. 116.12. What ſhall I render unto the Lord, for all his benefits toward me? This thankfulneſſe and acknowledgement of Gods bounty, bringeth forth theſe two ſingular effects: Firſt, Humility, that no man aſcribe ought to himſelfe, or his owne worthineſſe, but all unto Gods mercy: as Daniel ſaith, Unto us appertaineth ſhame, &c. but compaſſion is with the Lord, Dan. 9.9. Secondly, Patience in adverſity, to be thankfull as well for adverſe things, as proſperous, as Iob ſaith to his wife: Shall wee receive good at the hands of God, and ſhall we not receive evill? Iob. 2. 10.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. Forgetfulneſſe of Gods benefits and Ingratitude, as in Nabal, that conſidered not who had endued him with riches. 2. Pride, and vaine glory, as in the Phariſie, that ſtood upon his workes, Luk. 18. as alſo the Romaniſts doe, the Phariſies of this age. 3. Impatience, and murmuring againſt God: as in that wicked meſſenger, ſent from the King, to take off Eliſha his head; who ſaid, Behold this evill commeth of the Lord, ſhould I attend on the Lord any longer?

Thirdly, with all our ſtrength we muſt love God, in the acts and workes of our life, referring all to his glory, Matth. 5. 16. Contrary whereunto, is the diſhonouring of God by our life, and cauſing the ſame thereby to be evill ſpoken of, as the Apoſtle chargeth the Jewes, Rom. 2. 24.

2. Doct. Of the unity of the Godhead.

NOw out of this firſt Commandement: Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before me, that excellent doctrine is inferred and concluded, concerning the unity of the Godhead: And further, the Scripture elſewhere doth plentifully beare witneſſe hereunto, as Deut. 6.4. Heare O Iſrael, the Lord our God is Lord only: likewiſe, Iſay 44.6. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I am the firſt, and I am the laſt, and beſide me, there is no God. Beſide the evident teſtimony of Scripture, Damaſcen doth thus ſhew the unity of the Godhead by demonſtration of reaſon, againſt thoſe which beleeve not Scripture: 1. Deus perfectus eſt, &c. God is perfect: Si multos aſſerimus deos, in multis differentiam contemplari oportet: If we affirme many gods, in many we muſt needs find a difference: Si autem differentia in eis, ubi perfectio? But if there be a difference among them, where is perfection? For if there be difference in reſpect of wiſdome, goodneſſe, verrue, aliquid deficit, there is a failing in perfection: if there be no difference, but an identitie, there muſt alſo needs be an unitie, in the Godhead. 2. Deus incircumſcriptus eſt, God is incircumſcriptible, he cannot be circumſcribed, defined, or limited to a place: Quomodo, ſi multi diverſiq; ſunt, incircumſcripti erunt? &c. But if they be many and divers, how can they bee incircumſcriptible? For whereſoever is one, there cannot bee another. 3. Differentia contrarietatem induxit, &c. Difference bringeth contrariety, and repugnance: if there world were governed by many, how can it be, but it ſhould be corrupted, and diſſolved? Attema in gubernantibus pugna: conſidering the ſtrife betweene theſe governours. To this purpoſe Damaſcen de fid. orthodox. cap. 5, 6, 7.

Bernard alſo thus ſetteth forth the unity of the Godhead: God is one, but not as the Sunne or Moone is one, becauſe there is not another: But he is Vnus ſibi, idem eſt ſemper & uno modo: But he is one to himſelfe, the ſame alwayes, and after the ſame manner; ſo is not the Sunne and Moone: Clamat uterq; ſe eſſe unum ſibi, ille motibus, iſta defectibus ſuis: Both of them proclaime, that they are not one and the ſame themſelves, the one by his motions, the other by the waine, and changes: So Bernard lib. 5. de conſidera.

But againſt the unity of the Godhead, it will be thus objected out of the 82. Pſal. verſ. 6. I ſaid ye are Gods, and ye are children of the moſt high. Origen thus anſwereth, he calleth them, Deos, ſanctos Dei, &c. Gods, but made Gods by God: Vere Deus, unus eſt Deus, cæteris, qui ab ipſo creati ſunt, contulit nomen iſtud, non natura, ſed gratia: The true God is but one God, unto the reſt, which were created, he by grace hath given this name: Origen. in mandat. primum.

That place alſo of the Apoſtle will be objected, 1. Cor. 8.5. Though there be that are called Gods, whether in heaven, or in earth, as there be many Gods and many lords, &c.

Cyril. contra. Iulian. l. 8. To this Cyrillus maketh this anſwer: Nuda appellatione honorantur, alterius ab ipſo exiſtentes naturæ: They are ſo called only in name, being of another and divers nature from God, &c. that is, they are ſo called of thoſe that ignorantly worſhip them: the Gentiles tearme their Idols Gods, which are none: therefore followeth in the ſame place of the Apoſtle, Yet unto us, there is but one God. Howſoever the Heathen being blinded, have imagined to themſelves divers Gods: yet the people of God, to whom the …eaketh the truth, acknowledge but one God. Cyril also in the same place, thus answereth touching the other place: Nunquid igitur, qui honorati sumus, ut vocemur Dii, propterea naturæ nostræ mensuram ignora- …? Shall we therefore, which have received this honour to be called Gods, be ignorant of the mea- …e and condition of our nature?

3. Doctrin. That the beliefe in the Trinity is commanded in the first precept.

AS this Commandement enjoyneth us to beleeve the unity of the Godhead, so therein also is implied a Trinity of persons, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, who as one God, are of us to be worshipped: thus it may be concluded out of this precept. Jehovah the only God, is to bee worshipped; but not Father onely, but the Sonne, and the holy Ghost are of us to be worshipped: Ergo, the Father, Sonne, holy Ghost are that one God. Simler. So our Saviour saith, Yee beleeve in God, beleeve also in mee, Ioh. …. Christ the Sonne of God, is God, because he is to be beleeved upon. And againe, This is life eternall, …ey know thee to be the only very God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ, Ioh. 17.3. God the Father …, and Christ his Sonne, are the only very God.

And that the Sonne of God is to be worshipped with the Father, the Prophet David sheweth, Psal. 2. …. Serve Iehovah in feare, &c. Kisse the Sonne lest he be angry. In the former verse, whom hee calleth …e here, he nameth Jehovah. So wee reade in the words of the Prophet Agur, Prov 30.4. Who hath …ished all the ends of the world, what is his name, and what is his Sonnes name, if thou canst tell?

Further, that the Spirit of God, is also one God with the Father and Sonne, to be worshipped and glo- …: beside plentifull evidence out of the new Testament, which shall not need to be inserted here, be- …e we are in hand with the law of the old Testament; sufficient testimony may be taken from the law, …Prophets: as Gen. 1.1. The Spirit of God moved upon the waters: But God only created the world. So …ise the renovation of the heart, is onely the worke of God, because it is a new creation: as David …: Create in me a new heart, Psal. 50.10. but this is also the worke of the Spirit: Take not thine holy …t from me: ibid. vers. 11. Likewise it is only Gods worke to teach us his will, and to bring us to life …rnall: but this is wrought by the Spirit, Psal. 143.10. Teach mee to doe thy will, for thou art my God, let …y good Spirit lead me unto the land of righteousnesse.

Ambrose very fitly proveth the Spirit to be God, by that place, Iudg. 14.5. where it is said, That the Spi- …t of the Lord came upon Sampson: But Iud. 16.20. after his lockes were polled, it is also said: Hee knew …not that the Lord was departed from him: Hee which came upon him before was the same, that departed …m him now; there called the Spirit of the Lord, and here the Lord and Jehovah: therefore the holy …irit is Lord and Jehovah. Ambros. lib. 2. de Spirit. cap. 2.

Damascen doth thus excellently prove the Trinity by this demonstration: Unus Deus, non sine Verbo …t: God being heere, is never without the Word; but this Word hee hath in himselfe, begotten of his …wne substance, not like unto our word, which hath no substance, but vanisheth in the aire, because the …ondition of our nature is temporall: But like as our word proceeding from the mind, neq. per totum …ei idem est, &c. is neither the same with the mind, nor yet altogether divers from it: So is the Sonne …o the Father, which is his Word, the same in substance, but divers in subsistence: Oportet autem & Ver- …m Spiritum habere: nam & verbum nostrum nequaquam spiritus est expers: But the Word also must …a Spirit, for neither is our word without a spirit: but here is the difference, our spirit is not of the …e substance with us, but the drawing in of the aire, for wee are of a compound nature: but the Spi- …of the Word, is of the same substance with the Word. To this effect Damascen lib. 1. de fide orthodox. …).

And in the same place he useth another demonstration: Impossibile est Deum destitutum esse nativa fa- …ndia, &c. It is impossible that God should bee destitute of naturall fecundity: The Lord therefore …ould beget, Sed ex propria substantia generat, but he begetteth out of his owne substance, and that …m all eternity: for if the Sonne had not beene from the beginning coexistent with him, of whom hee …begotten, we shall bring in a change of his substance: Nam cùm non esset Pater, postea factus est Pater, …hen he was yet no Father, he afterward should become a Father, &c. Damascen ibid.

…m out of the first Commandement, both the unity of the Godhead, and the Trinity is concluded: …Austin thus elegantly inferreth: Quid sibi vult iste, ut ita loquar, sine numero numerus? si tria, quomodo …erus? si unum, ubi numerus? What meaneth this number without a number? if there be three, how …can be but a number? if one, where is the number? But here I have what I may number, and what I may …number: there is one substance, and three persons, &c. Bernard. lib. de considera.

…ius by the unity of nature the errour of the Gentiles is abolished, and by the joyning of the Word …the Spirit to the Father, the Jewish opinion is overthrowne: Et ex utraque secta nobis accedit utilitas, …dæa opinione naturæ unitas, ex Gentilitia sola personarum discretio: So by either sect wee receive some …by the Iewes opinion the unity of nature, by the Gentiles, the discerning and difference of the persons only. …ibid.

…gressors then of this Commandement concerning the unity of the Deity, and Trinity of the per- …1. They which affirme and hold one God, but deny the three persons: as the Montanists, and …ians in times past, and the Turkes and Jewes now. 2. They which hold not the distinction of three …only, but the division also of substance, as the Tritheists. The Arrians and Eunomians are of the …, qui filium Deum confitentur, sed conditum asseverant: which confesse the Sonne to bee God, but yet …him to be made:* So they bring in another God, contrary to this precept, Thou shalt have no other …. Theodoret. 3. They which brought in a quaternion of persons, as Anastasius the Emperour, and the the Apollinarians. 4. They also which affirme the three persons to be but three names given unto God in Scripture: and therefore they say that the Father became man, and suffered for us: which are therefore called Patripassians.

Heresies concerning the Trinity against the first Commandement.

3. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That justifying faith is not contained or commanded in the law.

1. BUt although to beleeve in the Trinity be commanded in the first precept, to adore and worship the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost, as the only God: yet it followeth not that justifying faith which properly belongeth to the Gospell, whereby we apprehend Christ and his merits, should be commanded and included in the law: therefore we mislike that assertion of Bellarmine, concurring therein with other Romanists, That the Gospell differeth from the law, as a perfect thing from an imperfect: and that the Gospell is contained and included in the law, as the tree in the seed. Bellarm. de justif. lib.4. cap.4. Some Protestants also come somewhat neere this opinion: as Marbachius saith, that they offend against this precept, Qui Christi cognitione carent, quæ cognitio, non aliare, quàm fide in Christum constet: Which want the knowledge of Christ, which knowledge consisteth in nothing else, than in faith in Christ. Marbach. Comment. in hunc locum. Against this opinion, that faith in Christ is not commanded in the Morall law, the reasons follow afterward, but first the question must further be explained.

Of divers kindes of faith.

1. First then we are to distinguish of faith: which is of foure kindes or sorts: 1. There is fides initialis, or fundamentalis, the faith of beginnings, or the fundamentall faith: whereof the Apostle speaketh Hebr.11.6. That he which commeth unto God, must beleeve that God is, &c. And this kinde of faith toward God, the Apostle referreth to the doctrine of beginnings, Heb.6.1. This faith apprehendeth one the being and essence of God: to know him to be the only Lord. 2. There is another faith, called fides miraculorum, the faith of miracles, touched by the Apostle, 1. Cor. 13.2. If I had all faith, so that I could remove mountaines. 3. There is fides historica, an historicall faith, which beleeveth all things to bee true that are written in the Scriptures: in which sense, S Iames saith, The Devils beleeve and tremble, they beleeve there is a God, and that all is true which the Scripture speaketh of God, of his justice, power, punishing of sinners, rewarding of the righteous. 4. There is beside these a justifying faith, whereof S. Paul maketh mention; In that I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, and given himselfe for me, Galath.2.20. This faith is the life of the soule, whereby hee which beleeveth is able in particular to apply unto himselfe the merits of Christs death. Now this is the difference betweene these foure kindes of faith: the first apprehendeth the essence and being of God: the second, the faith of miracles, his power: the third, which is the historicall faith, his truth: the fourth, namely the justifying faith, his mercie. The three first, to beleeve God to be, to beleeve him to bee omnipotent, to beleeve him to be just and true, are included in the first precept, Thou shalt have no other Gods, &c. but not the last: wherein is the errour of the Romanists, that make all these kindes of faith the same in substance, differing only in property: which if it were true, then it were possible for them that have the one faith, to have the other, and so Devils also, which in some sort doe beleeve, should also be capable of justifying faith. But this matter, that all these kindes of faith are not the same in substance, nor of like nature with the justifying faith, is shewed elsewhere, whither I referre the Reader.

Iames 2.19.

Synops. pap. pag. 879.

2. Further, we are to distinguish of the law: for it is taken sometime more largely, either for all the Scriptures of the old Testament: as Luk. 16.17. It is more easie that heaven and earth should passe away, than that one title of the law should fall. So Ioh.15.25. It is written in their law, they have hated me without a cause: which testimony is found in the Psalmes, Psal.35.19. or else the law is taken for all the bookes of Moses: and so the Law and Prophets are named together, Matth.7.12. This is the Law and the Prophets. But the law is sometime taken more strictly for the Morall law, whereof the Apostle speaketh Rom.7. I knew not sinne but by the law: and so S. Paul opposeth the law of workes, to the law of faith Rom.3.27. Now as the law is taken generally, either for all the old Scriptures written by the Prophets, or for the writings of Moses, it cannot be denied, but that faith in Jesus Christ, is in this sense both contained and commanded in the law: for of Christ the Lord spake by the mouth of his Prophets, Luk.24. 70. And Moses wrote of Christ: as our Saviour saith, Had yee beleeved Moses, yee would have beleeved me: for Moses wrote of mee, Ioh.5.45. But as the law is taken strictly for the Morall law, the law of works which containeth only the ten words or Commandements, so we deny this justifying faith to be commanded in the law.

3. Indirectly, or by way of consequent it will not bee denied, but that this faith also is implied in the law: because we are bound by the law to beleeve the Scriptures, and the whole word of God: for this is a part of Gods worship, to beleeve his word to be true: and so some define faith: Est certa persuasio, qua assentimur omni verbo Dei nobis tradita: It is a certaine perswasion, whereby wee give assent to all the word of God. Vrsin. And so by this precept wee are bound to receive all the promises and doctrines concerning Christ delivered in the old and new Testament. But directly as a part and branch, and so a worke of the law, wee deny justifying faith to be in this precept, or any other, prescribed or commanded. The reasons are these:

Divers reasons shewing, that justifying faith is not commanded or contained in the Morall law.

1. The Morall law and the Gospell differ in the very nature and substance: for the one is naturally imprinted in the heart of man, the other is revealed and wrought by grace. The first the Apostle testifieth where he saith: The Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, Rom.2.

The other also is witnessed by the same Apostle, Rom. 2. 24. We are justified freely by his grace. The argument then may be framed thus: The morall law is graft in the heart of man by nature: but faith in Christ is not by nature, but by grace above nature: for if it were naturall, all men should have faith, which the Apostle denieth, 2 Thessal. 3. 2. Faith then in Christ belongeth not to the law. Therefore it is strange, that Augustine confessing in another place, that praecepta decalogi sunt explicationes juris naturae: that the precepts of the decalogue are the explications of the law of nature, Lib. 2. de Imaginib. Sanctor. cap. 7. could not discerne hereupon, that the precepts of faith and of the Gospell are no explications of the law of nature, and therefore have no dependance of the morall law. Ambrose useth this very argument: Nemo sub lege fidem habeat, lex enim intra mensuram, ultra mensuram gratia: Let no man place faith in the law: for the law is within the measure (and compasse of nature) but grace is beyond measure. Ambros. in 12. Luc.

3. The effects of the law of works, and the law of faith are divers: for the one worketh feare, the other love and peace, as the Apostle saith: Ye have not received the spirit of bondage to feare againe, but yee have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we crie Abba Father, Rom. 8. 17. Againe the Apostle saith, The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life, 2 Cor. 2. 6. Thus then the argument standeth: the same thing cannot bee the ingender of contrary things, of life and death, peace and terror, love and feare: for a Fountaine cannot send forth both salt water and sweet, Iam. 3. 12. But the law is the minister of death, of feare and terror: Ergo, not of life and peace, and so consequently not of the faith of the Gospell, which bringeth all these.

4. The same thing doth not both make the wound, and give a plaister to heale it. The law doth shew our sinne, faith by grace in Christ healeth it: the law reviveth sinne: Without the law sinne is dead, Rom. 7. but we are dead to sinne, and alive to God in Iesus Christ our Lord, Rom. 6. 11. The same cannot make us to die unto sinne, and revive sinne: the law doth the one, therefore not the other. So Augustine saith: Ad hoc data est lex, ut vulnera ostenderet peccatorum, quae gratia benedictionis sanaret: Therefore was the law given, that it should shew the wounds of our sinnes, which it should heale by the benediction of grace. Aug. de poenitent. medic.

5. The Preachers, publishers, and givers of the law and Gospell are divers: The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Iesus Christ, Ioh. 1. 17. But if justifying faith were commanded in the law, then it also should come by the ministrie of Moses, that gave the law. This is Bernards reason, who further proveth this: Venit proinde gratia plenus & veritate Dominus noster, &c. Therefore Christ our Lord came full of grace and truth; that what could not bee done by the law, might bee fulfilled by grace. Serm. 22.

6. The qualities and conditions of the law and the Gospell are divers, the law promiseth life to him that worketh: Moses thus describeth the righteousnesse of the law, That the man which doth these things, shall live thereby, Rom. 10. 5. But the Gospell requireth not the condition of working, but beleeving, to him that worketh not, but beleeveth in him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse, Rom. 4. 5. If then faith were commanded in the law, to beleeve, should also be a worke of the law: then the Apostles conclusion were in vaine: I conclude that a man is justified by faith, without the works of the law. But if faith be excluded out of the works of the law, then it is not commanded or contained in the law, for then it should be a worke of the law.

7. Further, the invocation of Angels and Saints, which is commonly practised, and stifly maintained in the Church of Rome, is another apparent transgression of this first commandement: because they give a speciall part of the divine worship, which consisteth in prayer, and invocation, unto the creature. First we will heare and examine the arguments, produced by the Romanists, in defence of this superstition, and then by solide reasons out of the Scriptures convince and confute them.

The Romanists Arguments answered, brought in defence of the invocation of Saints.

1. THe Saints doe pray for us: therefore we may and ought to pray them. The antecedent or first part, that the Saints doe pray for us, they would prove by these places of Scripture: Exod. 32. 13. where thus saith he in his prayer, Remember Abraham, Izhak and Iakob thy servants, &c. Ierem. 15. 1. Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet could not my affection be toward this people. Baruch. 3. 4. O Lord almightie, heare now the prayer of the dead Israelites. 2 Maccbab. 14. 15. And Onias spake and said, This is a lover of the brethren, who prayeth much for the people, to wit, Ieremias the Prophet of God.

Ans. 1. As for the testimonies cited out of Baruch, and the booke of Maccabees, they prove nothing, because they are no books of Canonicall Scripture. 2. The other testimonies are impertinently alleaged: for in the first Moses maketh no mention of the prayers, which Abraham, Izhak and Iakob made for the people, but of the covenant which the Lord made with them. In the other, of an hypothetical and conditionall proposition, they make a categoricall and absolute affirmation: The text is, Moses and Samuel stood: they inferre, that Moses and Samuel did stand. Simler. But it may better be translated: that if these were alive among the people to stand before the Lord for them in prayer, &c. as the like, Ezech. 14. 14. Though these three men, Noah, Daniel and Iob were among them, they should but deliver their owne soules by their righteousnesse. 3. The Saints doe pray unto God by their generall wishes and desires, as wishing that the Kingdome of God were accomplished: as Revel. 6. 10. The soules under the Altar crie with a loud voyce, saying, How long Lord, &c. doest thou not judge and avenge our blood? But our particular necessities they are ignorant of, and so doe not make particular requests for for us: therefore the argument followeth not; they pray by their generall desires for the Church: & they pray for us in particular. 4. Seeing that the Romanists doe hold, that the Patriarks and Fathers of the old Testament, were in Limbo, which they make a member or part of hell: they doe contradict themselves, in making them mediatours and intercessours in heaven.

2. Argum. The Angels, they say, know our affaires and pray for us: As Zachar. 1.12. The Angel of Iehovah answered and said, O Lord of hosts how long wilt thou bee unmercifull to Ierusalem? &c. Therefore it is lawfull to pray to the Angels.

Answ. 1. That the Angels doe report our affaires unto God, and so may make relation of our prayers and words also, as of our other gests and acts unto God as the Lords messengers and ministers, we will not denie: but that they make any particular requests for men, the Scripture no where speaketh, and we are not bound to beleeve: the relation of our prayers unto God is one thing, and mediation and intercession is another. 2. That Angell of Iehovah, which prayed for Jerusalem, was the Lord Christ, who maketh intercession for his Church: unto whom the rest of the Angels returne their message, vers. 11. who is also called Iehovah, vers. 20. 3. Neither doth it follow, if it could bee proved out of Scripture, that the Angels prayed for us, that we are to pray to them: because they are not alwayes present to heare us: and we are forbidden in Scripture to worship them, Revel. 22.9. and therefore to pray unto them, which is a part of divine worship.

3. Argum. The Saints that are living doe one pray for another, much more the Saints being dead, because their charitie is more perfect: and seeing there is a communion of Saints, as of the living, so also of the dead, which communion being not in faith and hope, whereof there is no more use with them that are at rest, it remaineth it is in charitie: As therefore we may request the living to pray for us, so we may pray the dead also, to entreate for us.

Answer. 1. The argument followeth not, for the Saints alive doe one know anothers necessities, so do not the Saints departed this life: Isay 63.16. Abraham is ignorant of us, and Israel knoweth not us: and they might as well inferre thus; The Saints alive doe one instruct and teach another, Ergo, much more the Saints departed. 2. Their charitie is seene, in that they doe in generall long to have us joyned with them in that blessed estate, though in particular, because they know not our wants, they cannot wish or supplie. 3. And though it be granted that this communion is in charitie, this proveth no particular intercession made by them for us: but as we in generall give thanks in earth, for their peaceable departure, and deliverance from the miseries of this life: So they in generall desire, that we may be partakers of the same blessed rest with them. 4. Wee request the living to pray for us, because they are present with us, but the dead are absent, and heare us not: it may as well be inferred from hence, that we may also consult with the dead, and aske counsell of them: which is directly forbidden, Deut. 18.11.

4. Argum. Absolom could not bee admitted to his fathers presence, till Ioab had mediated for him: and Bethshaba Salomons mother, entreated for Adoniah: So it is necessarie to have mediators to come unto God.

Answer. 1. We have also one sufficient Mediator Christ Jesus, who is able sufficiently to reconcile us unto God. 2. Though many mediators are used in Princes Courts: because either the Prince is ignorant of our affaires, or his affection estranged: yet it is not so with God, who knoweth all things, and the love of Christ toward us exceedeth the love of all other inferiour mediators which men can seeke unto. 3. The example of Bethshaba, is unfitly alleaged, for shee obtained not her suite.

5. Argum. Invocation of Saints is warranted by the Scripture: 1. Gen. 48.16. Iacob saith concerning Iosephs two sonnes: Let my name be named upon them. 2. Iob 5.1. Eliphaz saith to Iob, Call now, if any will answer thee, and to which of the Saints wilt thou turne thee? 3. Praise the Lord in his Saints, Psal. 150. 4. Ezech. 22.30. I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, &c. but I found none.

Answer. 1. Iacob meaneth by that phrase, that they should be called by his name, and counted his children, as the same phrase is used, Isai. 4.1. seven women shall take hold of one man, and say, let us be called by thy name, take away our reproch: who will say, that they prayed to their husband? they desire to be called by his name. 2. Though that had beene Eliphaz meaning, that Iob should have made some of the Saints his patrones: yet because Iobs friends maintained an evill cause, and afterward are reproved of God for it, all that they say, is not to be justified: but that is not Eliphaz meaning; he speaketh of the holy and righteous living, to see if Iob could finde among any of them a patrone to defend his cause. 3. The place in the Psalme is to be read, Praise God in his Holinesse. Iun. Or in his Sanctuarie. Vatab. How doth it follow, because God is praised in his Saints, therefore wee are to pray to Saints: as it followeth the next words, Praise him in the firmament: will they have also the firmament prayed unto. 4. That phrase in Ezechiel, is understood of men living, not of the dead.

6. Argum. The honour given unto the Saints, redoundeth unto Christ, as he saith, Matth. 25.40. In as much as yee did it, unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me.

Answ. Our Saviour speaketh of his members living here upon earth, to whom we are to extend our charitie, not of the dead: and of such honour, as is due unto the Saints, not of that which is due unto God, for to give that to any creature, were not to honour, but dishonour God.

7. Argum. Many miracles have beene done, at the tombes and sepulchers of the dead, where prayers are made: therefore God is well pleased, that they should be prayed unto.

Answer. 1. The argument followeth not: so by the touching of Elishaes bones, one that was dead was restored to life: this was to confirme their doctrine and propheticall calling. 2. Many of those miramiracles are fained, and ſmall credit is to bee given unto them. 3. Some of them were wrought by the illuſion of Satan to deceive: as the Lord warneth his people to take heed of ſuch falſe Prophets which worke ſignes, Deut. 13. And S. Paul ſaith, That Antichriſt ſhall come by the power of Satan, &c. in lying wonders. Among the Gentiles, ſuch miracles and wonders alſo were wrought. This may ſuffice for an anſwer to their reaſons. Our arguments follow.

Reaſons out of Scripture, diſproving the invocation of Saints.

1. Moſes neither precept nor example extant in Scripture, to warrant the invocation of Saints; the Scripture ſendeth us to God: Call upon me in the day of trouble: and our Saviour teacheth us to pray to the Father, Our Father. In matters of doctrine, an argument drawn negatively from the Scriptures, is to conclude ſtrongly.

2. The Saints know not our affaires: Abraham is ignorant of us, Iſai. 63. 16. they are not preſent to heare us, they are at peace, their ſoules reſt under the Altar, Revelat. 6. they doe not know our hearts, therefore they are not to be prayed unto: all theſe things are requiſite in them, to whom we ſhould offer our prayers. But they ſay, that the Saints in the divine eſſence, as in a glaſſe doe behold our affaires. Contra. Whether doe they behold all, or what it pleaſeth God to ſhew them? not the firſt, for they know not the time of the comming of Chriſt to judgement: If the ſecond, then God muſt firſt be prayed unto, to reveale our affaires unto them: were it not then much better for us to goe the next way unto God?

3. John ſaith, We have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, 1 Joh. 2. 8. We need no other Advocates: for we have greater cauſe to doubt of the love and inclination of the Saints to us, than of the love of Chriſt.

4. Chriſt biddeth us aske in his name, and promiſeth we ſhall receive, Joh. 16. 24. Then are prayers made to Saints ſuperfluous: ſeeing by Chriſt we are promiſed to obtaine our requeſts.

5. There is none other name under heaven, (than Chriſts) whereby wee muſt be ſaved: If we have ſalvation in Chriſt, then all other good things: It is the Apoſtles reaſon: If God gave his Sonne for us, How ſhall he not with him give us all things alſo? Rom. 8. 32.

6. This invocation of the Saints, maketh a way for ſuperſtition and Idolatrie, for ſo the Heathen did conſecrate the name of the dead, and place them in the number of the gods, erect Temples and Altars, and conſecrate feſtivall dayes unto them.

7. God only is to be worſhipped; invocation is a part of the divine worſhip; therefore to bee yeelded unto God. They would ſhift us off here, with a diſtinction of religious adoration: one which is in the higheſt degree, and ſo proper unto God, another inferiour, which may bee yeelded to Angels and Saints.

Contra. In the adoration, which they yeeld unto Saints, they doe the ſame things, which they offer unto God: as conſecrating of Altars, Temples, Holydayes unto them: and they doe attribute unto them omnipotence, and omniſcience, to know all things, and to be every where preſent, in a manner as they attribute theſe things to God. Ex Simler.

Morall Obſervations upon the firſt Commandement.

1. Obſerv. The neglect of the honour and worſhip of God the cauſe of calamities in the world.

The firſt precept, which commandeth the worſhip of God, teacheth what is the cauſe why the Lord plageth the world with famine, warre, unſeaſonable weather, ſcarcitie of the fruits of the earth: becauſe his worſhip is neglected, as the Lord ſaith by his Prophet: Becauſe of my houſe, that is waſt, and every man to his owne houſe: therefore the heaven over you ſtayed it ſelfe from dew, and the earth her fruit, Hag. 1. 9. Cyprian to the ſame purpoſe thus elegantly writeth: Quereris quòd nunc minores ſontes, &c. Thou complaineſt, that now adayes the fountaines are not ſo flowing, nor the aire ſo cleare, nor the raine ſo plentifull, nor the earth ſo fruitfull, &c. Tu enim Deo ſervis, per quem tibi ſervitur? tu famularis illi, cujus nutu tibi cuncta famulantur? For doeſt thou ſerve God, by whoſe things ſerve thee? Doeſt thou waite on him, by whoſe becke all things waite on thee? Cyprian. contra Demet. Whereby we are admoniſhed, that when ſuch calamities and judgements are in the world, we muſt returne to our dutie, and ſet up the worſhip of God, and give him the praiſe: then will hee in mercie returne unto us, as hee ſaith by his Prophet: Build the houſe, and I will bee favourable in it, &c.

2. Obſerv. Not to truſt in riches.

Againe, this precept reproveth them, which put their truſt or confidence in any thing beſide the Lord: as they doe which put confidence in man, or repoſe their truſt in riches: And therefore the Apoſtle doth not to call the covetous man, an Idolater, Epheſ. 5. 5. becauſe hee thinketh his life ſtandeth in the abundance of riches; David therefore exhorteth rich men, If riches increaſe, ſet not your heart upon them, Pſal. 62. 11.

3. Observe, Against those that run unto Witches and Soothsayers.

FUrther, as in this Commandement, witchcraft and all kinde of sorcerie is forbidden, so also is it wicked and abominable thing to seeke unto Witches, and Soothsayers, which is condemned by the Prophet Isay 8.19. When they shall say unto you, enquire at them, that have a spirit of divination, and of Soothsayers, &c. should not a people enquire after their God? from the living to the dead? For herein foolish people offend two wayes, in forsaking God, and running unto such meanes, which cannot helpe them: as the Prophet Ieremie saith, My people have committed two evils, they have forsaken me the fountaine of living waters, to digge them pits, even broken pits, that can hold no water. *Ierem.*2.13. So Ahaziah King of Israel sending to Baalzebub for recoverie of his hurt, found therein no helpe; and beside, he shewed his infidelitie, in not seeking unto the God of Israel, 2 *King.*1.16.

Vpon the second Commandement.

1. Questions discussed.

QUEST. I. What a graven Image is.

4. Thou shalt make thee no graven Image, neither any similitude, &c. 1. Some in stead of graven read, an Idoll, and they make this difference betweene an Idoll, and an Image or similitude: an Idoll is a representation of a thing that is not, neither hath any being in the world: as if one should make the Image of a mans bodie, with the head of a dog, or a bodie with two faces: such a shape, Quamvis non vidit, sed animus sibi fingit, which the eye hath not seene, but the minde imagineth, they say is an Idoll: a similitude or Image is of such things, as are seene in the world: and to this purpose they alledge the saying of the Apostle, 1 *Cor.*8.4. We know, that an Image is nothing in the world. Gloss. ordin. ex Origen. Contra. But this place of the Apostle is not rightly applied: for there the Apostle speaketh in generall of all the Idols of the Heathen, of what shape or fashion soever, that they were as nothing in the world, that is, vaine things, which mens superstitious fancies had devised: which saying of the Apostle, is agreeable to that of Samuel, where the Prophet exhorteth the people to serve the Lord, And not to turne backe after vaine things, which cannot profit you, nor deliver you, 1 *Sam.*12.21. And further, the word pesel here used, signifieth any thing that is graven, of pasal to grave. Oleaster. 2. This then is the difference betweene these two words, pesel, a graven Image, and temunah, a similitude or likenesse: the first is a picture proportioned and fashioned out of stone, wood or mettle, and so carved, and graven: a similitude is an Image Picta in superficiebus ex solis coloribus facta, painted in plaine tables, onely made of colours: and these similitudes though they be evill, yet Non tantum nocent sicut statua, doe not so much hurt, as the other resemblances, because these come nearer to the nature of things living, and so may more easily deceive. Tostat. quæst. 3. also Lyran. 3. Some Hebrewes thinke, that temunah signifieth any similitude, either of things visible, or invisible: but Oleaster thinketh, that the representation of things visible, is rather understood by this word, as *Deut.*4.15. it is said, Yee saw no Image in the day that the Lord spake unto you: the first opinion is more probable, because the invisible spirits, as Angels use to be pictured, as well as visible things.

QUEST. II. What things a similitude must not be made of, to worship.

Of the starres. That are in heaven above, &c. 1. By this are forbidden first the worshipping of the celestiall bodies, the Sunne, Moone, and the Starres, as is more at large shewed, *Deut.*4.19, for the Gentiles worshipped these: whose corruption the Israelites followed: as the Idolatrous Kings of Judah did dedicate horses to the Sunne, 2 *King.*23.11. and the superstitious women did offer incense to the Moone, whom they called the Queene of heaven, *Ierem.*44.18. They were not then to make any similitude of these celestiall bodies to worship them. Beside, the fowles of the aire are comprehended under those things that are in heaven, as it is explained *Deut.*4.17. Or the likenesse of any feathered fowle, that flieth in the aire: for the Gentiles also worshipped fowles and birds; as the Eagle which they consecrated to Iupiter, the Dove to Venus, the Peacocke to Iuno, the Raven to Phœbus, the Bat to Minerva: *Tostat. quæst.*4. 2. Neither were they to

Of the Beasts. make any likenesse of beasts of the earth to worship them: for divers of the Heathen did adore the foure footed creatures: as the Egyptians made Apis, which was a plde Bull, their god: they also worshipped a Ramme: for so they pictured Libycus Ammon with a Rammes head: and generally the Egyptians worshipped all those cattell, which the Hebrewes used to sacrifice unto God, as it appeareth *Exod.*8.26.

Of Fishes. 3. They are forbidden also to make the likenes of any thing in the waters, as fish, or other creeping things, as it is further explained, Deut 4. 18. For the blind Gentiles did worship fishes: for although at the first beginning, when Idolatrie was first taken up among the Heathen, they at the first fell not to this grossenesse, because in those first ages, navigation was not so common, and so they had not any great experience of the waters, and fish: yet afterward, the fondnesse of the Heathen brought them also into this foolish vanitie, to worship fishes: as the two fishes they made one of the signes in the Zodiak, because Venus and Cupid two of their gods, when they fled away from Typheus the giant, did take upon them, as their Poets fain, the shape of two fishes: likewise, they set the Delphine as a signe among the starres, in memorie of Arion the Musitians deliverance, who being cast into the Sea by the mariners that robbed him of his riches, was carried by a Delphine, being allured by his musicke, safe to the land. *Ex Tostat. quæst.*4. 4. The waters are said to be under the earth, not in respect onely of the higher parts of the earth, or because it descendeth in the concavities and hollow places of the earth, cum tamen sit supra terram, being yet of it selfe situate ove the earth, as Tostatus: but rather, as Cajetane thinketh, Situs aquarum est terra habitabili inferior, e situation of the waters is indeed lower than the habitable earth: as it is said to be founded upon the , *Psal.*24.2.

Whether the waters be under or above the earth.

QUEST. III. Of the difference betweene bowing downe and serving.

Vers. 5. Thou shalt not bow downe to them, neither serve them, &c. 1. Cajetane referreth both these unto the externall act of worship, as in bowing the knee, uncovering the head and such like, and ring of sacrifice: which he understandeth under the name of service: Omnis enim oblatio sub servitutis mine comprehenditur: For all kinde ob oblations are comprehended under the name of service. The internall of adoration hee would have contained in the former precept, Thou shalt have no other gods, &c. To same purpose *Tostat. quæst.*4. But this being a divers commandement from the former, it forbiddeth kinde of worship of Idols, both externall and internall: Idolatrie is the proper transgression of this pre- , and therefore therein is absolutely and generally condemned. 2. Their opinion then is rather to bee ved, that doe thus distinguish these two: the first word shacah, to bow downe, signifieth that outward ion, which is done by the bodie, or the members thereof: the other word ghabad, betokeneth to serve: importeth such service, as the servant yeeldeth to his master. Oleast. which is in the minde. So also Cultus proficiscitur ex animo, adoratio fit specie quadam cultus: Worship proceedeth from the , adoration is in outward shew. He that worshipped Idols, doth also adore them, that is, outwardly: but adoreth, or boweth himselfe unto them, that is, by externall gesture, doth not alwayes worship. As may be constrained by torment to give outward adoration to Idols, which in his minde he knoweth nothing. So it is forbidden, ut nec affectu colas, nec specie adores, that neither thou worship them in tion, nor adore them in shew: Gloss. ordinar. Nec excusatur Marcellinus Papa, qui timore impulsus ivit illis obtulit illis thura: Neither is Pope Marcellinus excused, who being compelled by feare, did in all offer incense unto them. Cajetane.

QUEST. IV. In what sense the Lord is called a jealous God.

Vers. 5. I am the Lord thy God, strong, jealous. 1. Origene sheweth well how the Lord is jealous of his people: Zelans dicitur Dominus, quia animum sibi mancipatum non patitur dæmonibus admisceri: e Lord is said to be jealous, because he will not suffer the soule addicted to his service, to have any societie devils. Like as a man is jealous over his wife, but that shee may keepe her selfe onely to his love, but other women hee careth not: So the Lord was jealous over his people: but as for the Gentiles, hee ffered them to continue in Idolatrie, he was not jealous over them. The jealousie therefore of the Lord oceedeth from his love: but if his people, whom he is jealous of, shall commit spirituall fornication , then the Lord threatneth to cast them off, and to be no more jealous of them: as the Lord saith by Prophet, *My jealousie shall depart from me, and I will cease, and be no more angrie, Ezeck.*16.42. Zelus m charitatem declarat: The zeale therefore of God sheweth his love. Theodoret. 2. Zelare dicitur Deus eaturam quam non vult perire, castigat: God is said to be jealous of his creature, which he doth chastise rewall, that it perish not. Augustin. 3. The Manichees tooke exception to this, that the Lord calleth selfe a jealous God: which they tooke to be an affection unmeet for God: and so they would deprave uthor of the old Testament. To whom Augustine maketh this answer: That like as the wrath of , non est perturbatio mentis, sed potentia vindicandi: is no perturbation of minde, but his power of re- sic zelum Dei non cruciatum animi, &c. So the zeale of God we understand, not to be a vexation of , such as the husband is tormented with against the wife, or the wife against the husband, sed ssimum sincerissimamq; justitiam, but Gods most sincere and calme justice, &c. And further he excel- heweth the cause, why the Spirit of God in Scripture useth such termes of God, quæ apud homines ent solent, which among men are taken in the worse part, ut inde admonerentur, &c. that men ld be admonished, that even when they speake, as they thinke, with honour of God, they speake not of the divine Majestie: cui honorificum potius silentium, quàm ulla vox humana competeret: to able silence better agreeth, than any speech of man. 4. Iulian the Apostata also here thus ob- : whereas the Lord is said to bee a jealous God; either hee suffered Idols to bee worshipped in the , then is not Idolatrie to be condemned: or if they were worshipped against his will, then is he not potent.

Ans. 1. A man is jealous of his owne wife onely, and not of another woman: therefore because God e care of the Gentiles, as of his owne people that were espoused unto him, he is not said to be jealous . 2. Hee suffered them to walke after their owne lusts: not because hee could not have hindred but the wise Creator permitteth the reasonable creature to follow the instinct of their nature: yet ng some by grace whom he pleaseth, and punishing the rest for abusing the light of nature, who there- re left inexcusable, because knowing God by the creatures, they yet did not glorifie him as God: Apostle sheweth, *Rom.*1.21.

QUEST. V. Of the titles which the Lord here giveth himselfe, and wherefore.

e Lord thy God, strong, jealous, &c. The Lord giveth unto himselfe here foure severall titles, the e to inforce this commination following: 1. He calleth himselfe their God, because he had taken into his speciall protection, and had bestowed many benefits upon them, therefore they ought to love him more than any other. Toſtat. 2. He is a ſtrong God, poteſt ſe vel uno nutu vindicare, which ... revenge himſelfe at his becke. Lippom. And he is ſtrong, as well to effect his promiſes to the obedient ... to puniſh the diſobedient. Vrſin. 3 Zelotes eſt nolens habere conſortium in amando: He is jealous, he ... abide no partner, in that which he loveth. Toſtat. And this as well ſignifieth his indignation, qua ... movetur ſuis contumeliis, whereby he is moved for the contumelies that are offered unto him. Vatab. ... the love of God toward them: for jealouſie ariſeth, ex amore ejus, qui laditur propter turpitudinem, ... from the love of him that is hurt, becauſe of ſome uncleanneſſe committed, &c. Vrſin. 4. Laſtly, in ſaying viſiting the iniquities he ſheweth his ſeveritie: in tantum non connivet ad impietatem, &c. he is ſo farre from winking at impietie, that hee puniſheth it even in the poſterity of the wicked, and their ſonnes and ... phewes. Lippom.

Quest. 6. Of the generall commination and promiſe annexed.

Viſiting the iniquitie, &c. 1. Some take this to be a ſpeciall perſwaſion added to this commandement: Quia inter omnia præcepta nullum majus eſt, quam hoc: Becauſe there is none among all the precepts greater than this. The generall motive was ſet before, becauſe he brought them out of the land of Egypt. Toſtat. 2. But I approve rather their opinion, which take this commination and promiſe to appertaine unto all the commandements: but to be joyned to this, becauſe it is fundamentum cæterorum, the foundation of the reſt. Vrſin. Huic mandato tanquam principali ex quo alia oriuntur, addidit Dominus minas, &c. To this commandement as the principall, out of the which the other take their beginning, the Lord added threatnings and promiſes, &c. Lippom. And this is confirmed by the words here following, verſ. 6. to them that love me, and keepe my commandements: the Lord maketh mention of keeping his commandements, not of one but of all. 3. It might have pleaſed God ſimply to have propounded his commandements: but he both adjoyneth promiſes to ſtirre up our dulneſſe, and threatnings to terrifie the perverſe and froward: which promiſes are rendred, not as the deſerved reward of our obedience: for it is of mercie: as the Lord ſaith, ſhewing mercie unto thouſands: otherwiſe we doe no more than our dutie, and therefore deſerve nothing. Simler.

Quest. VII. How it ſtandeth with Gods juſtice to puniſh the children for the fathers ſinne.

The iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, &c. 1. Theodoret upon this place hath this ſingular opinion by himſelfe: Quod nuda litera inſiſtere impium ſit, &c. That it is evill to inſiſt here upon the bare letter, ſeeing the law ſaith, The fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, but every man ſhall be put to death for his owne ſinne. Deut. 24. 16. And he addeth further: Majores apud Deum ſunt comminationes, quàm pœnæ, &c. That God uſeth greater threatnings, than puniſhments: as every one that was not circumciſed at the eight day is threatned to be cut off: and yet many in the deſert were uncircumciſed at that age, whom Ioſhua circumciſed in Gilgal: and ſo here he thinketh that this is threatned onely to terrifie parents from ſinning. So Theodoret.

Contra. 1. But this were to give great libertie to offenders, to thinke that God onely threateneth for terror: it might be inferred as well, that God doth but dallie alſo with his promiſes, as with his threatnings: which were impious to thinke. 2. If God doe not alwayes puniſh as hee threatneth, it doth not argue any revocation of his judgements, but his mercifull forbearing to call men unto repentance. 3. The commination againſt the neglect of circumciſion is not denounced againſt the infant, whoſe fault it was not, if he were not circumciſed the eight day, but againſt them that did not ſee it performed on their infant, as appeareth by the example of Moſes, Exod. 4. puniſhed for the neglect of circumciſion. And accordingly all they, which deferred the circumciſion of their children in the wildernesſe, their carkaſſes fell there.

2. Origene maketh this allegoricall expoſition: The father that ſinneth he maketh the Devil: Pater peccati diabolus eſt: The devill is the father of ſinne: all they are his children which doe his works: Diabolus ergo, dum hic mundus ſtat, non recipit ſua peccata, &c. The devill, while this world ſtandeth, doth not receive puniſhment for his ſinnes: redduntur in filios, i. in eos quos genuit per peccatum: but upon his children whom he hath begotten by ſinne, are their ſinnes rendred: for men, while they are in the fleſh, are conceived of God, &c. Contra. But that this is a forced, and farre fetcht expoſition, the other oppoſite part manifeſteth, of the Lords ſhewing mercie unto thouſands: but the devils expect no mercie. And againe, though this commination is ſpecially made to terrifie wicked parents; it can no wayes concerne the Devill, to whom the law was not given, but unto men.

3. Hugo de S. Victor. giveth this reaſon, why children are puniſhed for the ſinnes of their fathers: becauſe they are, Sicut aliquod membrum ipſorum, quia in ipſis malefactoribus quodammodo erant ſimul & peccabant: They are as a part of them, becauſe they were in ſeed in the malefactors themſelves, and ſo in a manner ſinned in them. Contra. But the Prophet ſaith, the ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die: the children being but yet in the loynes of their fathers, as the tree in the ſeed, had no ſoules, therefore then could not ſinne.

4. Some doe reconcile this law, and that other Deut. 24. where it is ſaid, that the fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, after this manner: that there a rule is given for proceedings in civill judgement, that one ſhall not ſuffer for another: but this is underſtood of Gods judgement, before whom all are held as guiltie, and who preſcribeth no law to himſelfe. Acacius. Contra. But this ſolution is not ſufficient: for Ezechiel, which ſaith, the ſame ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die, ſpeaketh alſo of the judgements of God, which ſhould not be inflicted upon the children for the fathers. Ex Simler.

5. Cor...

5. Cajetane giveth this ſolution : Although God in the law command, that the ſonnes ſhould not bee put to death for the ſinnes of the fathers : Ipſe tamen qui creator, conſervator & Dominus eſt unicuiq; nemini facit injuriam, &c. Yet he that is the Creator, preſerver, and Lord of every mans life, doth no man wrong, if he temporally chaſtiſe the ſonnes, &c. His reaſon dependeth upon Gods right, and power, which hee hath over every mans life, that as he gave it, ſo he doth no wrong to take it away at his pleaſure. Contra. But the Lord ſaith by the Prophet, *Ezech.*18.32. I deſire not the death of him that dieth. Now if there were no other cauſe why the Lord ſhould puniſh the children of the wicked, in taking away their life, but the will and pleaſure of God, the Lord ſhould ſeeme to deſire the death of men : contrary to that ſaying of the Prophet.

6. Procopius giveth this expoſition : that God threatneth to puniſh the poſteritie of the wicked, ut parentes à peccandi licentia retraheret : to withdraw the fathers from ſinning : parentes non tam dolent ſua morte, quam liberorum, præſertim ſi his fuerint authores mortis : Fathers doe not ſo much grieve for their owne death, as for the death of their ſonnes, eſpecially if they were the cauſe of it. Contra. This is true, that the puniſhment of the children redoundeth to the parents : but this is not all, that by this meanes the fathers ſhould bee drawne to repentance : for although their children be neere them, yet they are neerer to themſelves, and their owne puniſhment would much more move them.

7. There remaine two moſt uſuall expoſitions : the firſt is, that temporally ſonnes may be chaſtned for their fathers, but not eternally : for *aeternaliter quilibet punitur pro malo, quod egit, &c. For eternally every one ſhall be puniſhed for the evill, which he doth himſelfe. Toſtat. quæſt.*5. So alſo Thomas : Si loquimur de pœna, quæ habet rationem medecinæ, &c. If we ſpeake of that puniſhment, which is by way of medicine, we may be puniſhed for another. Such are all temporall and bodily corrections, they are medicinall, and tend to the good of the ſoule : and the ſonne, quantum ad animam non eſt res patris : in reſpect of his ſoule is not any thing of his father, but in reſpect of his body. *Sic Thom.*1.2.*quæſt.*87. *artic.*8.

Contra. Although this expoſition be ſound and true, yet it doth not fully take away the doubt moved before : 1. For the Prophet Ezechiel alſo ſpeaketh of temporall puniſhment, namely of captivitie, which the ſonne ſhould not beare for the father. 2. And this place is rather underſtood of eternall puniſhment, than temporall, which the ſinne of Idolatrie deſerveth. Simler. 3. And the phraſe here uſed, viſiting the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, ſheweth that the Lord ſpeaketh rather of penall judgements, which ſhould bee inflicted upon the ſonnes of the wicked, than of medicinall corrections. 4. And Auguſtine further urgeth this reaſon : that if it bee underſtood of temporall chaſtiſement, as of captivitie, then non ſolum odio habentibus, ſed diligentibus ſe redderet peccata, &c. God ſhould not onely render the ſinnes to thoſe that hate him, but to thoſe that love him ; for Daniel, and the three children, and Ezechiel with other righteous men, went into captivitie. Sic Auguſtin. quæſt. 14. quæſt. veter. & novum Teſtamen.

8. There remaineth the ſecond common and received ſenſe of theſe words, which moſt of the fathers thus underſtand, that the Lord will viſite the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, if they alſo continue in the wicked race, and follow the evill example of their fathers: as Hierome ; Ideo iniquitates eorum memorantur, quia imitatores eorum in nequitia extiterunt, Therefore they doe beare the iniquitie of their fathers, becauſe they did imitate them in their wickedneſſe. Hieron. in oration. Ierem.

Some agreeing in generall with the reſt, that it is to be expounded of the wicked children of wicked parents: yet doe underſtand it of originall ſinne, which is properly called the ſinne of the fathers, becauſe they received it from them, which is puniſhed in unregenerate children of the wicked, but is pardoned in thoſe that are regenerate. To this purpoſe *Gregor. lib.*15. *Moral. cap.*22. Contra. But originall ſinne is extended further than to the third and fourth generation, which are here mentioned : therefore it is not that the Lord meaneth that ſinne. Ex Simler.

Some will not have this place at all underſtood of the ſinnes of the fathers, but of the children onely, quæ ſuæ ſunt patres, which ſinne as their fathers did. But, as Toſtatus well argueth againſt this aſſertion: God will not to puniſh the ſinnes of the fathers in the children, Sed peccatorum filiorum malorum in ſeipſos, for the wicked ſonnes in themſelves. *Toſtat. quæſt.*5.

Therefore the former expoſition is currant, to expound theſe words of the ſinnes of the children, which they learned of their fathers : *Quia patrum extiterunt æmulatores, hæreditario malo de radice in ramos propagine : They are puniſhed, becauſe they did emulate their fathers, this hereditarie evill growing from the roote unto the branches. Hieron. in Ezech. cap.*18. So alſo Auguſtine, Ex eo, quod addidit, qui me oderunt, &c. that he addeth, which hate me, it is underſtood, that they are puniſhed for the ſinnes of their fathers, Qui eadem perverſitate parentum perſeverare voluerunt : Which would perſevere in the ſame perverſitie of their parents : Auguſt. cont. Adimant cap. 7. *Gregor. Quiſquis parentis iniquitatem non imitatur, nequaquam debito gravatur, Hee that imitateth not the iniquitie of his father, is not burdened with his ſinne, lib.*15. *mor. cap.*22. Chryſoſtome. Si nepos ſecutus fuerit vias patris & avi ſui, &c. If the nephew doe follow the wayes of his father, and grandfather, then wilt render unto them to the third and fourth generation. Chryſoſt. homil. 84. Super illa, non in æternum irascêris, &c. Severus. Therefore it is added, Of thoſe that hate me. Ut apertum fiat, non ob parentum peccata, ſed ob illorum odium adverſus Deum eos puniri : That it may be manifeſt, that they are not puniſhed for their fathers ſinne, but for their owne hatred againſt God. Lippoman. Diodorus : In eiſdem peccatis perſiſtentes juſtas pœnas exolvetis : Perſiſting in the ſame ſinnes you ſhall pay juſt puniſhment. Rabanus. Peccata patrum iniquorum non redundant ad filios, ſi eorum exemplis in malo non ſiant. The ſinnes of the wicked fathers, doe not redound to the children, if they doe not imitate them in evill. Ex Lippom. All theſe fathers doe underſtand, that clauſe, eorum qui oderunt me,

Of

Of those that hate me, not of the fathers alone, as Tostatus, but of the children also named before: that it answereth to them all: and so not onely the construction of the words giveth it: for this clause being the last of the sentence, sheweth it hath reverence to that which goeth before: but the other opposite part, Vnto thousands that love me, doth more manifest it: for there is no mention made of fathers, but of thousand generations, unto whom this condition is annexed, Of those which love me. But against this exposition, which in this place I preferre before the rest, it will be thus objected.

1. Obiect. If the father be evill, and the sonnes evill, they shall not onely be punished unto the third and fourth generation, sed etiam in mille, but to a thousand. Tostat.

Answ. It is true, that the generation of the wicked shall be punished for ever, so long as they continue evill: but the exemplarie sinnes of the fathers, are said to be visited onely to the third and fourth generation, because so long the impietie of the fathers may be had in remembrance. Wee therefore here understand, not the particular sinnes onely of the wicked children, but the exemplarie sinnes also of the fathers concurring with the other.

2. Obiect. The children of righteous parents are rewarded to a thousand generations onely for the righteousnesse of their fathers: therefore the other are punished onely for the wickednesse of their fathers. Tostat ibid.

Answ. This argument may better be retorted: for as the posteritie of the righteous, if they doe degenerate, shall bee punished, notwithstanding the righteousnesse of their fathers, as the Prophet sheweth Ezech. 18.13. so the children of wicked parents, leaving their fathers sinnes, shall not be partakers of their punishment, as the Prophet saith, Hee shall not die in the iniquitie of his father, Ezech. 18.17. Then as the Lord sheweth mercie to thousands, but conditionally, Of those that love him: so he visiteth the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, with the like condition, Of those that hate him: if both father and children, are alike haters of God.

3. Obiect. If the children bee punished, because they doe participate with their fathers in their sinnes: Tunc non patris portat iniquitatem sed suam, Then he beareth not his fathers sinne, but his owne. Lippom.

Answ. It followeth not, they are punished for their owne sinne, therefore not for their fathers: for one and the same punishment, there may be divers causes: but the iniquitie of the fathers and the children may concurre together, to make one punishment. Vrsin.

4. Obiect. The sense of the punishment of the posteritie, cannot reach unto those which are dead of their ancestors: therefore this commination is nothing to the parents.

Answ. 1. The evill parents are vexed with the punishment of their children, Cum videant eos cruciari viventes, When they see them to be tormented while they live: for unto the fourth generation men may live to see their offspring. Tostat. 2. Or though they live not to see the punishment of their children, yet this may move them while they live, that they know assuredly, that God will punish their seed after them, for their sinne, when they are dead.

5. Obiect. But why doth not God give grace unto all the posteritie of the wicked, as well as to some, that they may repent, and turne from the wickednesse of their fathers?

Answ. God is not tied to any man, he doth them no wrong in withholding his grace, and leaving them to their owne nature, for God giveth his grace to whom he will, and detaineth it from whom he pleaseth: and though he should denie his grace to all, none could complaine. Galas.

So then wee resolve upon this sense, that both this commination here threatned, and the promise of mercie exhibited, are conditionall; the one, if the children doe continue in their fathers sinnes: the other, if they embrace the love of God, together with their righteous fathers: And herein together with the consent of the ancient Fathers and Interpreters, doe concurre our new writers: Pelarg. Marbach. Cabel. Simler. Galas. Borrh. Pellican. Oleast. Osiand. with others, whose particular sentences herein agreeing with the testimonies already alleaged, it were needlesse to rehearse.

Lyranus toucheth both these last interpretations, yet seeming to preferre the latter: Temporali poena justè filii puniuntur à Deo pro iniquitate patrum, quia in hoc puniuntur patres: The children are justly punished with temporall punishment of God, for their fathers iniquitie: because herein also the fathers are punished: Alio modo intelligitur de pœna æterna, quæ infligitur filio pro iniquitate patris, in quantum est imitator paterni sceleris: It is understood another way of eternall punishment, which is inflicted upon the sonne for the iniquitie of his father, because he is an imitator of his fathers sinne.

QUEST. VIII. Why mention is made of the third & fourth generation.

VNto the third and fourth generation, &c. 1. Some thinke that this was no generall law, but onely concerned that present age of the Israelites: and therefore the Lord maketh mention of the third and fourth generation, because now the Israelites came out of Egypt in the fourth generation, as the Lord foretold unto Abraham, Gen. 15.16. and in this fourth generation, they committed that grievous idolatrie in making a golden Calfe: therefore the Lord threatned them, that if they committed Idolatrie, he would bring upon them the sinnes committed by their fathers in Egypt, in the second and third generation, in worshipping the Idols of Egypt. Ex Procop. But this cannot bee the reason, why mention is made here of the third and fourth generation: for as the other part of the promise of mercie to a thousand generations is generall, so also is this commination generall: because also the precept is generall, to take heed of Idolatrie.

2. Rupertus giveth this reason, Iniquitatem patrum, qui fratrem suum Ioseph vendiderant nunc redderat, &c. He rendred now upon the fourth generation, the iniquitie of their fathers that sold Ioseph:

mount Sinai ſmoked in terrible manner, as though the Lord came downe to take revenge of them.

Contra. 1. But in this fourth generation God delivered them out of bondage, and had wrought wonderful things for them, both in Egypt, and in the wildernesse: therefore this was a time rather of mercie, then of judgement. 2. And if God had viſited that iniquitie upon them now, the poſteritie of Ioſeph ſhould have ſmarted as well as the reſt. 3. Further, this commination is ſpecially intended for the ſinne of Idolatrie, which the brethren of Ioſeph were not guiltie of then: for Iakob before had buried all their ſtrange gods under an oke, Gen. 35.

1. Procopius thus underſtandeth theſe foure generations, for the foure ages of the world, the 1. from the creation to the floud, the 2. from Abraham till the giving of the law, the 3. from thence to Chriſt, the 4. from the comming of Chriſt unto the end of the world: which Chriſt calleth a generation: when he ſaith, this generation ſhall not paſſe, till all theſe things be fulfilled. Auguſtine not much differing, underſtandeth theſe foure generations: the 1. from Abraham to David: the 2. from David: to the captivitie of Babylon: the 3. from thence to the comming of Chriſt: the 4. from Chriſt unto the end of the world: in the which fourth generation God viſited upon the Jewes the iniquitie of their fathers, and caſt them out of their land. Auguſt. cont. Admant. cap. 7.

Contra. 1. But if theſe foure generations ſhould be taken for the continuance of the world, then what difference ſhould there be, betweene the third and fourth generation, and the thouſand generation, limited for the Lords ſhewing of mercie?

2. The generation that our bleſſed Saviour ſpeaketh of, was that preſent age, wherein thoſe things concerning the deſtruction of Jeruſalem ſhould be fulfilled.

3. And lawes are made to meet with inconveniences following, not alreadie paſt: to what end then ſhould the generations be counted, which went before the making of the law? And at the comming of Chriſt, he found not the Jewes given to Idolatrie: for the which ſinne, ſpecially this puniſhment was threatned.

4. Hierome maketh this allegoricall expoſition: thus myſtically applying theſe foure generations, to the foure degrees of ſinnes: the firſt in the thought; the ſecond in the will, and purpoſe; the third when the ſinne is brought into act; the fourth, Si in tuis ſceleribus glorieris, if thou glorieſt in ſinne: Theſe two are the Lord uſeth to puniſh, and not the former. Hieron. in Ezech. cap. 18.

Contra. 1. If the third and fourth generation are thus to bee expounded, then ſo muſt the thouſand mentioned afterward: but it will be hard to make a thouſand degrees of vertue. 2. Neither is it true, that God onely puniſheth the two laſt degrees of ſinne, the act, and glorying in it: for our Saviour ſheweth, that adultrie may bee committed in the heart, Matth. 5. and Moſes was puniſhed for his incredulitie at the waters of ſtrife, which was internall, Numb. 20.

5. Lippoman hath this conceit, that the third and fourth generation are to be put together, and ſo they make the ſeventh generation, and then this is the ſenſe, Deus tanta ſeveritate, &c. God is of ſuch ſeveritie, that he puniſheth impietie in the ſeventh generation, when as it ſeemeth to be forgotten: the poſteritie being by ſo many degrees diſtant from their anceſtors, that ſinned.

Contra. But Lippoman in the ſame place doth anſwer himſelfe, ſhewing out of Scripture, that theſe numbers muſt be counted, not as one added to another, but as included one within another, as Prov. 30. 18. There be three things hid from me, yea foure, that I know not: he meaneth not three and foure, but foure in all, as it followeth in the next verſe.

6. Therefore this is the beſt reaſon, why the Lord nameth the third and fourth generation; becauſe many live ſo long to ſee their offſpring to the fourth generation: as it is ſaid of Ioſ. chap. 42. Ad hunc uſque videre poſſunt, & filii peccata parentum ad imitandum, & patres pœnas filiorum ad dolendum: that they may mutually ſee, both the ſonnes the ſinnes of their parents to imitate, and the fathers the puniſhment of their ſonnes to grieve at. Thomas 1. 2. queſt. 87. art. 8. And two other reaſons beſide are added hereof, both that the parents by this long ſuffering of God in not puniſhing preſently, might bee led to repentance: Vt ex hac punitione tolerationem divinam non parvi pendant patres, &c. That the parents ſhould not lightly eſteeme this divine forbearance. Cajetan. And beſide, to ſhew, that if they cannot be moved with this lenitie and longanimitie of God; that they ſhall not goe unpuniſhed: Longanimis ſum patribus, &c. I am long ſuffering toward the parents, and toward their ſonnes: Si autem nepotes majorum impietate ſceleri ſuccenſi fuerint, ultionem inſligam: But if the nephewes doe follow the ſinnes of their anceſtors, at laſt I will inflict puniſhment. Theodoret.

Quest. IX. Why mercie is promiſed to be ſhewed to a thouſand generations.

Shewing mercie unto thouſands. 1. Auguſtine underſtandeth this of a thouſand yeeres: as if any of the ſeed of David love the Lord, Quem conſtat utique ante mille annos fuiſſe, who was a thouſand yeares before. For two cauſes God will ſhew him mercie: Quia & ipſe Dei cultor eſt, & ex ejus ſemine, qui amaverat: Becauſe both he himſelfe is a worſhipper of God, and of his ſeed that loved God: Quæſt. veteris teſtam. cap 14.

Anſw. But it is evident by the conſtruction of the words, that in this clauſe muſt be ſupplied, the word generations, which is underſtood before: the words in the originall are. To the thirds and the fourths: those which are in the third and fourth generation from their fathers, and ſo muſt thouſands be underſtood here: now a thouſand generations is more than a thouſand yeares.

Theodoret maketh particular application of this unto the calling of the Gentiles, Qua per Abrahæ benedictionem divinam adepta ſunt: Which through Abrahams ſeed obtained the divine bleſſing after so many yeeres. But this is not fitly applied, for here mercie is promised to a thousand of them that love God: but the Gentiles were Idolaters before they were called to the knowledge of Christ, & therefore they are without the compasse of this promise: It was rather fulfilled in the beleeving Jewes, who while they followed the faith, and did the works of Abraham, continued the Lords people more than two thousand yeeres.

ſo

3. Acacius expoundeth thus: Interminatum tempus significavit, in quo anima ipsa, postquam exhac vita transmigraverit, indeficientem a Deo misericordiam consequetur: Hee signifieth an undetermined time wherein the soule, after it is passed out of this life, doth obtaine mercie never fayling, at the hands of God. Contra. But this terme of thousands cannot be referred to the immortall state in the next world: because hee speaketh of the time of keeping Gods commandements, which is in this life: and beside, as the one part of the third and fourth generation, must be understood of the time of this life, so likewise must the other.

4. Neither can it be taken literally, for from the first man Adam to the last, shall there not to be a thousand generations: seeing from our blessed Saviour to Adam there are rehearsed, not full out fourescore generations, Luk. 3. and yet here it is said, to thousands, which cannot bee lesse than two thousand. Testatus.

5. Wherefore the best solution is this: that here ponitur numerus certus pro incerto: a certaine number is put for an uncertaine. Tostat. q. 5. Soleo meminisse probitatis parentum in perpetuum: I use to remember the righteousnesse of the Fathers for ever. Lippom. And this is according to the Lords promise to Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, Gen. 17. without any limitation, that is, for ever.

Quest. X. How men are said to hate God.

Vers. 5. Of them that hate me. 1. God cannot be said properly to be hated, as man is said to hate: for when one man hateth another, he wisheth he might perish or lose his honour, riches, or such like: but so man hateth not God, as if they would have God to perish. Tostat. qu. 5. 2. Neither are they said to hate God in respect of his essence, which is goodnesse it selfe, which no man can hate, Quia de ratione boni est, ut ametur: Because it is of the nature of goodnesse to be loved: Thom. 2. 2. q. 34. ar. 1. in Corp. 3. Neither can God be said to be hated in respect of all his effects: for some are naturall effects created by God, as to live, to move, to understand: these effects of God no man hateth, for then he should hate himselfe. 4. But there are two sorts of effects, for the which God is hated of the world, because he is peccatorum prohibitor, pœnarum inflictor: a prohibiter of sinnes, and an inflicter of punishment. Thom. ibid. So they which keepe not Gods commandements, which hate vertue, and love vice, are said to hate God: as they doe love him which keepe his commandements. Tostat. qu. 5.

2. Places of Doctrine out of the second Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the particular contents of the second Commandement.

THe things commanded in this second precept are these: 1. Verus Dei cultus, the true worship of God: Ursin. Quem constat spiritualem esse, ut ejus naturæ respondeat, which must be spirituall, answering unto his nature: Calvin. For God is a Spirit, and will be worshipped in Spirit, Iohn 4.

2. A rule is prescribed, how God will be worshipped, according to his will revealed in his word: to the which it is not lawfull to adde any thing, nor to take therefrom. As the Lord said to Moses, According to all that I shall shew thee, so shall yee make the forme of the Tabernacle, Exod. 25. 9.

3. God requireth the true devotion and affection of the heart in his worship: as the wise man saith, My sonne give me thy heart, Prov. 23. 26. And the Prophet David, Mine heart is prepared, O God, Psalm. 56. 7.

4. All our service and worship of God must be referred to his praise and glorie, as the Church prayeth, Not unto us O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give the praise: Psalm. 115. 1.

These things likewise are forbidden: 1. To make any similitude or likenesse of God, Isay. 40. 18. whom will yee liken God? or what similitude will ye set up unto him? Marbach.

2. Ne quid de Deo crassum vel terrenum imaginemur: Wee must not imagine any grosse or earthly thing of God: Calvin. As that hee hath a bodie, or parts, or affections like unto man: as the Antropomorphites, and Homoformians, as Rupertus calleth them: Grande sibi fingunt simulachrum, doe imagine a certaine great image, which sitteth in heaven, and the feet thereof reach unto the earth: because the Scripture saith, Heaven is my seate, and earth is my footstoole. Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 32.

3. Idolatrie, when any divine worship, internall or externall, is given to any image, set up to represent God, of what kinde and fashion so ever it be, is here especially forbidden: as Ezechiel found the elders of Israel offering incense to the similitude of creeping things, and abhominable beasts, Ezech. 8. Wherein they commit a double errour, both in robbing God of his honour, giving it unto dumbe creatures, and insensible things: Again, Se turpiter infra creaturas abjiciunt: They doe basely abject themselves to these creatures which the Lord hath given them dominion of: Borrh. Here then the Romanists are found to bee transgressors, that doe prostrate themselves most basely before Idols: as shall be further seene afterward.

4. Not onely the adoring of Images, but the setting of them up to be a stumbling blocke, and occasion of offence to the people, is likewise here prohibited: therefore Hezekiah when he saw the brasen Serpent be abused to Idolatrie, he brake it in peeces, that the occasion of that sinne might be taken out of the way. 2 King. 18. 4. The Lutherans therefore are here overseene, that tolerate Images in their Churches, which are dangerous to the weake, though they be taught by them, not to worship them.

3. Not onely Idolatrie is here forbidden, but all other kinde of superstitious worship devised by man, which the Apostle calleth ἐθελοθρησκεία, will worship, Coloss. 2. 23. for we must be contented ritibus sive cæremoniis Deo ipso præscriptis, with rites and ceremonies prescribed of God himselfe. Such were the sacrifices of the old Testament, and the Sacraments in the new. Piscator. Here the Romanists likewise offend, which make seven Sacraments, whereas Christ hath ordained but two: and unto these two they have added many superstitious rites of their owne.

4. It is a breach also of this Commandement, even to applie things of themselves indifferent, so unto the service of God, as to make them a necessary part thereof: as our Saviour reproveth the Pharisies, for washing of their hands often, and for washing of cups and tables, because they put holinesse therein, Mat. 15. 3. Vrsin.

5. Hypocrisie is another transgression here, when men externally observe the ceremoniall or morall law of God commanded, without faith and true devotion. Such the Lord by his Prophet reproveth: This people commeth neere unto me with their mouth: but they remove their heart farre from me, Isai. 29. 13.

6. Prophanenes is here also prohibited, which is a contempt either of the whole outward worship of God, or of some part thereof: Vrsin. as it is written of one of the Popes of Rome, that he cast the Sacrament into the fire: and some of the Romanists have spoken unreverently of our Communion, calling the Communion table, an Oyster table.

2. Doct. All is to be ascribed to Gods mercie, nothing to mans merit.

Shewing mercie, &c. Nothing then is to be ascribed to any merit or desert: for all proceedeth from the mercie of God. Vrsin. The obedience then of the parents, and their posteritie, is not the meritorious cause to procure the favour of God: but hee crowneth their service in mercie: as Iakob confesseth this holy confession: I am not worthie of the least of all the mercies, and of all the truth which thou hast shewed unto thy servant, Gen. 32. 10.

3. Doct. True obedience proceedeth from love.

Of them that love me, and keepe my Commandements. Though we are brought first by feare to stand in awe of God, and to reverence his law, yet our obedience is not acceptable, unlesse it proceed of love. Oleaster: as our blessed Saviour said unto Peter: Lovest thou me, &c. Feed my sheepe, Joh. 21. 16. Peters discharge of his dutie in feeding the Lords sheepe, proceedeth from love.

3. Places of Controversie.

1. Cont. That an Idoll and an Image are all one.

Thou shalt make thee no graven image, nor any similitude. The first word is pesel, any thing that is carved or graven: the other is temunah, similitude: both the one and the other is forbidden: therefore that is but a vaine distinction of the Romanists, betweene idolum, an Idoll, and imago, an image; they confesse they worship Images, but no Idols, such as the Gentiles adored: for every similitude of any thing whatsoever is forbidden to be made: now their Images are similitudes. Let them heare also the testimonie of some of their owne writers concerning this matter. Cajetane upon this place saith: that it is forbidden, adhibere diis in imagine seu idolo signum aliquod honoris: to exhibite unto God in an image or other signe of honour. Lippoman also thus writeth: Dicitur Hebraica est pesel, quæ est sculptile & idolum vertunt, Septuaginta, &c. The Hebrew word is pesel, which is a graven image, and an Idoll as the Septuagint turne it, and an image, as the Chalde readeth, &c. quæ tamen omnia idem sunt: which all signifying are the same. See more elsewhere of this matter, Synops. p. 397.

2. Cont. Against the Popish difference betweene Idoll worship and Idoll service.

Thou shalt not bow downe to them, nor serve them. The word is ghabad, which Oleaster pronounceth abad. Iunius useth to expresse the letter (ain) with a double aspiration, hhabad: the word signifieth to serve, as servants doe service to their masters. Pelargus then noteth well hereupon, that the Greek distinction betweene εἰδωλοδουλεία, and εἰδωλολατρεία, Idoll worship, and Idoll service is by this commandement, for we are forbidden here to give δουλείαν, service unto Idols.

3. Cont. Against the Turkes that allow of no Images.

Thou shalt not bow downe to them. Simply then we are not forbidden to make images: for there is a great use of pictures, in describing of histories, drawing of Cards, and Mappes: and Moses Tabernacle set forth with the pictures of Cherubs, and Salomons brasen Laver stood upon twelve Oxen: therefore the curiositie of Turkes is here reproved, that abhorre and detest all Images, even of beasts, yea of men: whereas they worship a great and abominable Idoll in their minde, and with externall adoration the wicked Mahomet.

4. Cont.

4. Cont. That it is not lawfull to make any Image at all of the Trinitie.

Vers. 4. THou shalt make thee no graven image. Further against the Romanists we observe: that it is lawfull to make any image or similitude at all to represent God the Father, the Sonne, or Holy Ghost by. Our reasons are these: 1. The Scripture speaketh evidently, Deut. 4. 15. Take heed unto your selves, for yee saw no image in the day, that the Lord spake unto you. Isai. 40. 18. To whom will you liken God, or what similitude will you set up unto him? Act. 17. 29. We ought not to thinke, that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone graven by art and the invention of man. Rom. 1. 23. They turned the glorie of the incorruptible God to the similitude of the Image of a corruptible man. Out of these places of Scripture these reasons may be gathered: 1. From the interdict or prohibition, God forbiddeth any image to be made of him. 2. From the nature of God, which being infinite, and incircumscriptible, cannot be portraited by an image. 3. It is a dishonour unto God, to liken him to a corruptible man. Vrsin.

2. Lactantius useth this reason: Images are made of men, Ut ex ea solatium capiat absentis: that to take comfort over him that is absent: Supervacua ergo hominis Imago, cum passio est: so is a man then is superfluous, when hee himselfe is present: Dei autem, cujus Spiritus ac numen ubique diffusum abesse nunquam potest, semper utique, supervacua Imago: Then an Image of God, whose divine Spirit can never be absent, being dispersed every where, is alwayes superfluous. Lactant. de Origen. error. lib. 2. cap. 2.

3. Augustine thus testifieth, Aut id ipsum quod sedere Pater dicitur, flexis poplitibus fieri putandum est, ne illud incidamus sacrilegium, &c. Neither whereas God the Father is said to sit, must wee imagine it to be done, as with bowing of the knees, lest wee fall into that sacriledge, which the Apostle chargeth them with, that changed the glorie of the incorruptible God, into the similitude of a corruptible man: Tale simulachrum nefas est Christiano in templo collocare: Such an Image it is a wicked thing for a Christian to set up in the Church, much more wicked in his heart, &c. August. de fid. & Symbol. cap. 7. Augustine taken from the incorruptible nature of God, grounded upon that place of the Apostle, Rom. 1. 23.

4. Nicephorus lib. 18. cap. 53. reporting of the Jacobites and Armenians, which did make the Image of the Father, and the holy Ghost: saith, Quod per quam est absurdum, which is a very absurd thing: and he useth this reason: Imagines eorum sunt, quæ videri & circumscribi possunt: Images are of those things which may be seene, and circumscribed.

5. Ioann. Aventin. lib. 7. writeth of Iohn. the 22. that certaine in the coasts of Bohemia and Austria which pictured the Trinitie like an old man, a young man, and under the shape of a Dove, he held to be Anthropomorphites, and some of them he condemned to the fire.

6. Varro writeth that the Romanes worshipped God 170. yeares without any image: Quod si adhuc mansisset, castius dii observarentur: Which use if it had continued, the gods should more chastly and sincerely have beene reverenced: August lib. 4. de Civitat. Dei, cap. 31. The making of images of God, even in the Heathen writers judgement was a decay of true religion and devotion. Ex Simler.

7. Plutarke in the life of Numa, reporteth, that he forbad the Romanes to have any image of the god under any shape of man or other creature: and he giveth this reason: Quòd nefas esset præstantiora deterioribus ad similare, neque Deum aliter, quàm mente attingi posse censerent: Because they judged it unlawfull to resemble the most excellent things to the baser, and that God could not otherwise than by the mind be attained unto.

The contrary Objections answered.

1. Object. BUt it will bee thus objected: The Scriptures doe ascribe unto God humane parts, as hands, eyes, feet: therefore it is not unlawfull in such manner to describe and resemble God.

Answ. 1. There is great difference betweene words and deeds: God which in Scripture so useth to speake to our understanding; yet hath forbidden any such image to be made of him. 2. God useth metaphoricall speeches, for our edifying to applie himselfe to our capacitie: but in making such images there is no such edifying or building of faith, but rather the contrarie, the corrupting and destroying of it. 3. There is no adoration or worship tied unto these words, as there is unto such images. Vrsin.

2. Object. God hath manifested himselfe in humane shape, as to Daniel, chap. 7. therefore it is lawfull for us to make the like representations of him. Polarg.

Answ. 1. The argument followeth not: we may in like manner speake of God as the Scripture speaketh: but to devise other signes to represent God, than he himselfe hath appointed, we may not. God may manifest himselfe how it pleaseth him: but man must not presume further, than hee hath warrant from God: so to speake of God, as the Scripture doth, is not forbidden; but to make an image of God is prohibited, therefore they are not alike. Simler. 2. Those manifestations of God had a promise of his presence: but to attribute so much unto an image, were plaine Idolatrie. 3. Those visions were but for a time, so long as it pleased God by such meanes to manifest himselfe: and therefore there was no feare of any abuse: Images are permanent, and still in sight, and so give occasion of Idolatrie. Vrsin.

5. Cont. Whether it be lawfull privatly to have the Image of Christ.

SOme thinke, that privatly to have the image of Christ it is not unlawfull, so that we take heed of offence: ne homines existiment nos illos adorationis causa habere: lest men should thinke wee have them to worship. Simler. But I rather approve herein the judgement of Vrsinus, who subscribeth to the decree of the 7. Synode held at Constantinople, where it was decreed, ne Christus pingeretur, that Christ should not be pictured at all. And the Synode yeeldeth this reason: because Christ being both God that the Image of Christ must needs be a lying image, which cannot expresse his Godhead. So that either in such an image they divide the natures of Christ, separating his Godhead from his humanity, and so fall into the Nestorian heresie: or else they must make the Godhead of Christ also circumscriptible, and so with Eutyches confound his natures. 2. Beside, who seeth not that there is great perill of adoration, in such an image of him, who in that humane shape was worshipped? The like danger there is not in having private pictures of the Apostles and Martyrs: for to their persons, while they lived, no adoration was due.

Eusebius Pamphilus hereof thus writeth unto Constantia the Empresse, who writ unto him, to send her the image of Christ: who dissuadeth her from it by this argument: Quis gloriæ ejusmodi & dignitatis lucentes & fulgurantes effigiare mortuis & inanimatis coloribus possit? &c. Who can with dead and lifelesse colours expresse the shining beames of such great glory? the glory of Christ, which appeared in his humanity, cannot be pictured.

Epiphanius writeth of the Carpocratites, that they had certaine pictures made with colours, and some of silver and gold, quas imagines Jesu esse dicebant: which they said were the images of Jesus, and were made in the time of Pontius Pilate, when Christ was among men: these Images they kept secretly.

Augustine thus writeth to Theodosius, lib. de vera fide: Num tanquam hominem adorabimus Emmanuelem? Magnum hoc esset, & deceptio: Shall we then worship Emmanuel, as a man? by no meanes: for it were a great madnesse, and deceit: & tamen imagines nihil nisi Christi corpus repræsentare possunt: and yet images doe represent nothing but the body of Christ. Simler. who seemeth to allow the private use of such images, but not in publike: but these reasons condemne all images of Christ in generall.

See more of this question, Synops. pap. pag. 490.

6. Cont. Against the toleration of Images in Churches.

Another abuse beside concerning Images, is in tolerating them publikely in Churches, though they be not adored and worshipped, which is the errour of the Lutherans: as Marbachius thus delivereth his opinion: Quod ad templa attinet, servandum imaginum discrimen, ut non quælibet imagines in eis habeantur &c. Concerning Churches a difference of images is to bee observed, that not all images be there kept, but only those which have some godly instruction, &c. To the same purpose Osiander. But that the very sight and spectacle of Images in the publike place of Gods service is dangerous, and unlawfull, it may thus appeare:

1. Such Images set up in the place of Gods service, are an occasion of Idolatry: for mans heart being naturally corrupt and prone to Idolatry, by such objects is nourished in errour. And therefore Hezekiah, when hee saw the brasen Serpent to be abused to Idolatry, did breake it in peeces, and so tooke away the very occasion of stumbling. Augustine saith to this purpose: Cum idola his locantur sedibus, honorabili eminentia, ut spectantibus & immolantibus attendantur ipsa similitudine animatorum membrorum, &c. afficiunt infirmos animos: When as Idols are set in such places of honour aloft, that they may be beheld of those that pray, and offer, by the very likenesse of humane parts they doe affect the mindes of the weake. Epist. 49. ad Dardan.

2. Images set up in the Church for the people to gaze upon, doe winne away their minde from celestiall cogitations: therefore as the Prophet David saith, Turne away mine eyes from regarding vanity, Psal. 119. 37. so all such vaine objects should be removed from the peoples sight. The ancient Romanes would have no Images in their Churches, that the worship of God might bee more pure: And the Lacedemonians would allow no pictures in their Courts, and places of assembly, lest the beholding of them might have withdrawne the Senatours mindes from thinking of the affaires of the Common-wealth. Simler. The weake are offended by such Images: the superstitious and obstinate confirmed in their errour: which are without, as the Turkes and the Jewes, are by this meanes hindred from embracing Christ.

3. It is directly against the Commandement to make any image to represent God by: therefore it is unlawfull also to keepe or retaine them. Ursin.

4. The Lord commandeth all such Idols to be broken downe, Exod. 23. 24. and 34. 13. And the good kings of Scripture are commended for destroying and pulling downe of Idols: as Asa, Iehu, Hezekiah, &c. Ursin.

The contrary objections for the toleration of Images in Churches, answered.

Moses caused Cherubines to be made over the Arke, and a brasen Serpent for the people to looke upon. Salomon made the images of Oxen in the Temple, for the brasen Laver to stand upon: therefore it is lawfull also to have Images now.

1. These images had Gods speciall commandement, who giveth lawes to others, not to himselfe, and may commandeth things, beside the generall law: as hee did the Israelites to carry away the goods of the Egyptians. 2. These images were not in the view of the people, which were made in the holy Tabernacle, but there whither the Priests only had accesse. Simler. 3. And they were not set up as images are to be worshipped: but onely made to set forth the worke of the Tabernacle, and Temple. 4. The brasen Serpent was used as a figure of Christ: which figures doe now cease, the body being come, which is Christ. Ursin.

Obj. Images are Lay mens bookes: that they which cannot reade, may learne by the history what what was done: so Gregory reasoneth reproving Serenus a Bishop, for pulling downe of Images.

Answ. 1. This was the very defence which the Heathen used for their Idols: as Athenagoras alleadged: Si ista vobis sunt pro literis, ad divinitatem speculandam, ut falsò jactatis, &c. If these things be unto you in stead of letters to behold the Deity, as you falsly boast, why doe you set more by the signe then the thing signified? 2. If Images were a meanes to instruct rude and ignorant people, it is like God would not have omitted this meane in the old Testament, for the instruction of that rude people: but the Lord was farre from approving any such way, that he doth straitly forbid it. 3. If Images serve for instruction, they must have an interpreter: for they are dumbe of themselves: and an interpreter may better instruct without them. 4. The Scripture saith that an Image is the teacher of lies, Habak. 2. 18. and that Idols speake vanity, Zachar. 10. 2. If they serve then as Lay mens bookes, they only teach them lies. Similer.

3. Object. The Commandement of abolishing and destroying Images, was ceremoniall, and therefore it concerneth not Christians now.

Answ. To take away all occasion of Idolatrie, is not ceremoniall, because it tendeth to the maintenance of a morall commandement.

4. Object. Images are an ornament to Churches: therefore they may be tolerated.

Answ. 1. Churches are ordained for the assemblies of the living Images of God, not for dead Images. 2. The adorning of the Church must not bee contrary to Gods commandement, and so to his dishonour, nor to the offence of the members of Christ. Ursin. 3. A man would not have his wife decked with an harlots attire: neither is it fit that the Temple of God should borrow ornaments from Idolaters. Similer.

5. Object. A thing is not to be taken away for the abuse. Answ. If the thing bee good it selfe, and necessary, it must not be condemned for the abuse: but the case is divers, where both the thing and the abuse are unlawfull.

6. Object. It is sufficient that the people be taught and admonished, that Idols are not to be worshipped, though they be not taken away.

Answ. 1. The Apostle biddeth us to abstaine from all appearance of evill. 2. And the surest way is to remove from the sight, the occasion of stumbling: as Moses did beate the golden Calfe to powder, and Hezekiah brake in pieces the brasen Serpent.

7. Object. Images were not simplie forbidden, but because of the proneneſſe in those dayes of the people to Idolatry: but now the fulnesse of time being come, the people are not so prone. Paul. Burgens. addit. 2. in cap. 20. Exod.

Answ. 1. The experience of former times in the dayes of Popery proclaimeth the contrary, that the people were as blindly led, to offer to Images, to goe in Pilgrimage unto them, to prostitute themselves before them, as ever were the Israelites. 2. And this being a morall precept, is as needfull now, as it was then: and therefore S. Iohn concludeth his Epistle with this precept as most necessary, Babes, keepe your selves from Idols, 1. Ioh. 5. 21.

Against the adoration and worship of Images.

7. Controv. Against the adoration of Images.

THe Romanists beside the publike tolerating of Images, and setting of them up in their Churches doe also maintaine and defend the adoration of them. Paulus Burgensis hath this position: Eadem adoratione adoratur Imago representans in quantum talis, & res per ipsam representata: The Image is adored with the same adoration, with the thing represented, as it doth represent it. Addit. 2. in cap. 20. So Bellarm. de Imagin. lib. 2. cap. 25. That this is a blasphemous opinion, and contrary to the Scripture, is thus proved.

1. The Lord directly here forbiddeth any Image to be made to be worshipped, under paine of his heavy indignation, upon all Idolaters, and their posterity, to the third and fourth generation: yea the Lord accounteth them all haters of him, and enemies unto him, that doe worship such abominations.

2. They are accursed, which make any Images to worship them, Deut. 27. 15. Cursed bee the man, that shall make any carved, or molten Image, an abomination to the Lord, &c. and shall put it in a secret place.

3. Another reason is taken from the nature of such Idols, They are but silver and gold, the worke of mens hands: they have a mouth and speake not, they have eyes and see not, &c. Psalm. 115. 4. and vers. 8. They that make them are like unto them, and so are all they that put their trust in them: They are vaine and deceitfull and of no power.

4. From the effect: the setting up and adoring of Idols, is a robbing God of his honour, Isay 42. 8. I am Iehovah, this is my name, and my glory will I not give to another, nor my praise to graven Images.

5. From the fruits of Idolatry, the grosse blindnesse and ignorance of men, that bow themselves unto the worke of their owne hands, as the Prophet Isay doth describe it, 44. 19. None considereth in his heart, &c. I have burnt halfe of it in the fire, and have baked bread also upon the coales thereof, &c. and shall I make the residue thereof an abomination, shall I bow to the stocke of a tree?

6. From the end: No Idolaters shall inherite the Kingdome of God, 1. Cor. 6. 10. Idolaters and all liars have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone.

The objections of the adversaries answered.

1. Obiect. We doe not worship the Image, but that which is represented by the Image.

Answ. 1. So did the Gentiles maintaine their Idolatry as Arnobius sheweth, Lib.6. contra Gentes. Simil. the Israelites in making their golden Calfe, had relation unto God, for they proclaimed an holy day to Iehovah: yet that pretext excused them not. Ursin. God therefore forbiddeth all Idolatry, under what pretence soever. 2. If they doe not worship the Image it selfe, why doe they give divers kindes of worship unto Images, to the Image of Christ more, to the Images of Saints lesse?

2. Obiect. The honour of the signe redoundeth unto the thing signified thereby.

Answ. If the signe be pleasing unto him, that is signified: but if it be such as hee forbiddeth, and condemneth, it is rather a dishonour, than an honour: and so the adoring of Images is a dishonour unto God.

3. Obiect. The contumely or dishonour offered to the Image of God, is a dishonour to God himselfe: therefore the honour thereof redoundeth also unto God.

Answ. If any with a despiteful intention against Christ, doe deface his Image or picture, it is contumely against Christ, because of the evill intention of his heart: but if any doe it of a zealous mind against Idolatry and superstition, it is no dishonour unto Christ: as Epiphanius did rend a certaine picture of Christ in a cloath, which he found in a Church: Epist. ad Ioan. Hierosol. and therefore the argument followeth not. Ursin.

4. Obiect. Some say, that the second precept against the making of Images was only temporall, and concerned the Iewes. Ambros. Catharinus, in opuscul. de imaginib.

Answ. The condemning of Idolatrie in the new Testament, as in the places before recited, 1. Cor. 6. 9. *Revel.*21. sheweth that the precept is morall, and so perpetuall.

5. Obiect. The Idols of the Gentiles are condemned, because they represented those which were no Gods. Answ. The Gentiles in their Idols also had a relation to God: they were instituted, as Maximus Tyrius saith, Vt admoneamur Divinæ naturæ, to admonish us of the Divine nature.

6. Obiect. The Lord saith by his Prophet Zephanie, 2. 11. He will consume all the Gods of the earth: but Popish Images Images are not yet destroyed: therefore they are not the Idols condemned in Scripture.

Answ. This Prophesie was fulfilled under the reigne of Constantinus, and Theodosius, when Idols were every where destroyed: And this Prophesie concerneth the true Church of Christ, that all Idols should be taken away: and therefore the Romanists shew themselves not to bee the true Church of Christ, because Idols are not removed from among them. Simler.

Of humane precepts and traditions.

8. Controv. Against humane traditions.

That hath beene briefely touched before, that among other transgressions of the first Commandement, this is one, the bringing in of superstitious inventions and usages into the service of God, without the warrant of his Word: See before Deut 1. transgress. 5. Here then exception is to be taken against the Romanists, for their presumption herein.

But first, let us see the divers kindes of those things, which are commanded by men: which are of two sorts: 1. The Governours Civill and Ecclesiasticall, doe sometime command such things as are indifferent, the Lord, and prescribed by the Word: as such are the Christian lawes of Princes, inflicting punishment upon the offenders against the Morall law, concerning our duty toward God, or our neighbour: such are the exhortations and admonitions of the Ministers of God, out of the Word: these Commandements, all men are bound in conscience absolutely to obey. Of this kinde of precepts is that place to be understood, Deut. 17. 12. That man, that will doe presumptuously, not harkening unto the Priest that standeth to minister before the Lord, or unto the Iudge, that man shall dye.

2. There are also politicke constitutions of the Magistrate, which determine of circumstances concerning the better keeping of the duties of the second Table: such are the positive lawes of Princes: as to beare armes, to appoint law dayes, to prescribe orders and rules for apparell, and such like: wherein we are commanded to yeeld obedience to our superiours: As the Apostle teacheth, Rom. 13. 1. Let every soule be subject to the higher powers: and *vers.*7. Give to all men their duty, tribute, to whom tribute, custome to whom custome, feare, to whom feare, &c. And these precepts doe not simply binde in conscience, in regard of the matter commanded, but in regard of the generall band, whereby wee are bound to obey the Magistrate in all lawfull things, and to avoid offence.

3. There are also Ecclesiasticall precepts, which concerne ceremonies, and other Ecclesiasticall orders, belonging to the duties of the first Table, which concerneth the worship of God: as to appoint times and places of prayer, to prescribe a forme of prayer, and what gesture is meet to be used therein, as to kneele, stand, in what order the Scriptures should bee read: these and such other Ecclesiasticall constitutions are appointed according to the generall rules of the Word, that all things be done to edifying, in order, and without offence, are obediently to be received: in such things men should not bee contentious, but readily yeeld their obedience: as the Apostle saith: If any man lust to bee contentious, wee have no such custome, nor the Churches of God. And these ordinances of the Church doe not binde in conscience, otherwise then in regard of offence and scandall, and as wee are generally bound in conscience, in all lawfull things to obey our superiours.

4. The fourth sort of humane precepts, are those, which are superstitious, and command things not agreeable to the Word, but rather contrary unto it: Such are the seven Popish Sacraments, the multitude of ceremonies, which they have brought into the Church: their superstitious fastes, their pilgrimages to Saints, processions with the crosse, and such like: Such were the traditions of the Pharisies, which our blessed Saviour speaketh against, Mark.7. Such precepts are not to be obeyed: but herein we must follow the Apostles resolution, It is better to obey God, than man. Ex Vrsin.

These foure kindes of precepts are thus distinguished: the first doe absolutely binde in conscience, as part of Gods worship directly: the second doe binde in conscience, not in respect of the matter commanded, but of our obedience, which we owe unto the Magistrate in all lawfull things: the third, for avoiding of scandall and offence: the fourth sort doe not binde at all, as being unlawfull, and contrary to the Word of God. But for the traditions of the Church, that they are a part of the worship of God, it will be thus objected.

1. Object. God commandeth obedience unto our Superiours.

Answ. No otherwise than they command such things as are agreeable unto his will, either directly which are prescribed in the Word; or by way of consequent, that are consonant to the rules of the same.

2. Object. Such things as are done to the glory of God, are a part of his worship: such are the determinations of the Church.

Answ. Those things, which of themselves serve to the glory of God, as being by the Lord himselfe commanded, belong unto his worship: not all those things, which accidentally onely serve to that end, and are secondary meanes attend upon the service of God.

3. Object. Some of the Saints did worship God after a manner not prescribed, so also may the Church now: so Samuel sacrificed at Ramah, and Elias in Carmel.

Answ. 1. To sacrifice unto God, was a thing commanded: though the place were indifferent before the building of the Temple. 2. These were Prophets, and had the extraordinary direction of the spirit. Vrsin.

4. Morall observations upon the second Commandement.

1. Observ. God is full of long suffering.

Vers.4. Visiting the iniquity of the fathers, upon the third and fourth generation, &c. Hieron out of these words, well observeth the lenity and longanimity of God, that so long forbeareth to punish. And whereas some thus object, Quanta in eo crudelitas, ut iram suam usq; ad tertiam & quartam extendat generationem? How great cruelty is in God, who extendeth his wrath to the third and fourth generation: he maketh this sufficient answer: Non severitatis est iram tenere usq; ad tertiam & quartam generationem, sed signum misericordiæ pœnam differre peccati: It is no signe of severity to containe anger unto the third and fourth generation, but of clemency to deferre the punishment of sinne. Hieron. in Ezech. cap.18.

2. Observ. That fathers for love unto their children should feare to offend.

Augustine further doth gather hereupon a profitable instruction, both for parents, and for their children: that the fathers, Affectu filiorum revocarentur ad reverentiam Creatoris: should be reduced unto the reverence of the Creator, by the affection unto their children: knowing that their sinne shall be punished in their posterity: and that the children, Timentes ne incurrerent peccata patrum, legi Dei obedirent: fearing lest they should incurre the sinnes of their fathers, should obey the law of God. Augustin. quæstion. veter. & nov. Test. cap.14.

3. Observ. God is more inclined to mercy than to severity.

Vers.5. Shewing mercy unto thousands. Whereas Gods justice is extended but to the fourth generation, his mercy to the thousand; herein appeareth how much more prone the Lord is to mercy, than unto severity: as Cajetane well noteth, Ad conferendum bona Deus est propensissimus, ad inferendum mala parcus: God is most ready to conferre good things, but sparing to bring upon men evill: and the reason is, because he conferreth and bestoweth good things of himselfe, but evill being urged thereunto, by the evill demerites of men.

Vpon the third Commandement.

1. Questions discussed.

Quest. I. What is signified by the name of God, and how diversly it is taken.

Thou shalt not take the name of Iehovah, &c. 1. The name of a thing is that whereby it is knowne from others, and severed and distinguished from other things. In this latter respect God needeth no name, because he is but one: neither properly can any name be given him, because he is infinite, and cannot be comprehended in a name: neither is a name given unto God in respect of himselfe, but to us, that in some sort he may be made knowne unto us: that there is a God, we all know by nature: but what God is,

…not, but as it pleaſeth himſelfe to reveale. Toſtat. qu. 6. 2. The name of God is not here only, that nomen tetragrammaton, Iehovah, conſiſting of foure letters, as the Hebrewes ſtrictly take it: but for whatſoever, whereby the Lord is made knowne to us, as his wiſdome, mercy, juſtice, truth. Calvin. 3. The name of God is taken, 1. for God himſelfe, Ioel 2. Whoſoever calleth upon the name of God ſhall be ſaved. 2. For the word of God, as Ioh. 17. our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, I have manifeſted thy name. 3. For the wiſdome, mercy, and other attributes of God: Malac. 1. Great is my name, that is, my glory, power and Majeſtie. 4. For the commandement of God: as Ioh. 17. I came in my fathers name. 5. For that whereby God is called: as Iehovah, Exod. 3. This is my name for ever. Marbach. 4. The names which are given unto God are of three ſorts: Firſt, the names whereby the divine nature and eſſence is expreſſed, as Elohim, God, Adonai, Lord, Iehovah: for theſe only are peculiar unto God. Secondly, the names taken from his attributes, as his wiſdome, goodneſſe, juſtice, and ſuch like: which properties though in moſt excellent manner they agree unto God, yet are alſo communicated unto men. Gods name is properly taken in vaine, by reaſon of the firſt ſort: and of the ſecond alſo, when they are uttered with ſome ſpeciall note and reference to God: otherwiſe we may ſpake of wiſdome, clemency, juſtice, in generall, without reverence, and yet not prophane the name of God. The third ſort of names, are thoſe, which are given to our bleſſed Saviour both God and Man, as Ieſus, Chriſt: which are the names of God: who although he were man, yet the name is not given to the parts, but to the whole ſuppoſitum or perſon: now Chriſt is divinum ſuppoſitum; and not an humane ſuppoſitum or ſubject: becauſe Chriſt was from the beginning: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 13. Chriſt yeſterday and to day, and the ſame for ever. Now then to prophane and abuſe theſe bleſſed names of our Saviour, is to take the name of God in vaine. Toſtat. qu. 6.

Quæſt. II. That it is more to abuſe the name of Ieſus, than ſimply of God.

It is more offenſive to abuſe the name of Jeſus, and a greater diſhonour, than ſimply to abuſe the name of God, or any other appellation given unto him: and that for theſe reaſons: 1. Becauſe God hath magnified and exalted the name of Jeſus above all names, in reſpect of his great humiliation and obedience even to the death of the Croſſe: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Philip. 2. 2. Becauſe there is no other name under heaven, whereby we are ſaved, than the name of Jeſus, Act. 3. 3. The name of Jeſus betoketh both the divine nature, and the ſecond perſon of the Trinity: the name of God ſheweth the divine nature only: and that name, quod ſignat Deum ſub pluribus perfectionibus eſt honorabilius: that name, which deſcribeth God with more perfections, is the more honourable name. 4. The name of God, ſheweth him to be our Creator: the name of Jeſus, ſheweth him to be both our Creator and Redeemer. Toſtat. qu. 7.

Quæſt. III. How many wayes the name of God is taken in vaine.

Ne jures in vaine. 1. As Gods name is hallowed and ſanctified three wayes: in our mind, and thoughts, when we conceive and thinke nothing unworthy or unbeſeeming the glory of God: in our words, when we ſpeake reverently of God, and his workes: and in our workes, when wee glorifie God in our life and deeds: So Gods name is profaned in like manner; both in our minde and thoughts, in idle, curious and vaine ſpeculations of God: in our words, by raſh or falſe oathes: in our deeds, when the name of God is abuſed to ſorcery, inchantment, or ſuch like. Simler. 2. Two wayes is Gods name taken in vaine: Cum nomen Dei aſſumitur ad confirmationem falſitatis, vel fruſtra: when the name of God is taken up to confirme a falſe truth, or to no purpoſe. Lyran. For he is ſaid to doe a thing in vaine, qui nullo fine præſuppoſito, which doth a thing no end at all propounded: or malo & indebito fine præſuppoſito, or an evill and unlawfull end pretended. Toſtat. qu. 8. 3. Oleaſter noteth theſe three wayes, when the name of God is taken up in vaine (for ſo the word naſha ſignifieth, according as it was their manner to ſweare with lifting up of the hand, as Abraham did, Geneſ. 14.) Firſt when they uſe the name of God, pro re futili, for any vaine or trifling thing. Secondly, in rem, quam non intendis impleri: upon a matter, which thou doeſt not purpoſe to fulfill: as they which ſweare falſly. Thirdly, in vaine, that is, without cauſe: ne jures niſi neceſſitate: thou muſt not ſweare, but upon neceſſity. 4. Thomas more diſtinctly ſheweth: firſt, what a vaine thing is, and then how the name of God is taken in vaine:

That is a vaine thing is taken for that which is falſe: as he that ſweareth falſly: then for that which is inconſiderable; and here they offend, which doe ſweare de re levi, for a ſmall and trifling matter: ſinne vaine, or vanity is taken for ſinne, and iniquity; and in this reſpect they take the name of God in vaine, which take an oath to doe any wicked thing, as to commit theft, or any ſuch thing: of this kinde is Herods oath.

Secondly, the name of God is aſſumed or taken up, upon theſe reaſons: 1. Primò ad diſti confirmationem: to confirme our ſaying: and here they offend, which ſweare by any other than by the name of God. 2. Secundò ad ſanctificationem: The name of God is uſed for ſanctification, as Baptiſme is ſanctified in the name of God. Here they tranſgreſſe which abuſe the Sacraments, or holy things. 3. Tertiò ſumitur ad confeſſionem & invocationem: Thirdly, it is taken up, for confeſſion, and invocation. Here they which abuſe confeſſion and the invocation of God to ſuperſtitious ends, as to enchantments, or ſuch like, doe profane the name of God. 4. Quarto ſumitur ad operis completionem: Fourthly, it is taken for the perfiting and finiſhing of a worke, as the Apoſtle, Coloſſ. 3. Whatſoever you doe in word, or in deed, doe all in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. They therefore which have begun a good profeſſion, and afterward fall away, doe take the name of God in vaine, So Thomas 2. 2. quæſt. 122. art. 3. 5. The Hebrewes then doe take this Commandement too ſtrictly, that here is forbidden only prolatio nominis Dei tetragrammaton indebita: the undue pronouncing of that foure lettered name of God, which is Iehovah, which it was lawfull, they only for the high Priest to use, and that only in the Temple, and only then when he blessed the people. Lyranus.

QUEST. IV. What is required in taking of a right oath.

Seeing perjury, and taking of a false oath is a breach of this Commandement, as it is a dishonouring of God (for as our brother is hurt thereby, it belongeth unto the ninth Commandement) it shall not be amisse here to shew, what conditions are required in an oath, that perjury may bee the better prevented: this the Prophet Ieremy declareth in these words: Thou shalt sweare in truth, in judgement, and righteousnesse, Ierem. 4. 2. Which three shall now be declared in their order.

1. The first thing required, is truth in every oath, whether it be assertorium, or promissorium: whether it be an affirming oath, or promising oath: the first must have conformity with the truth unto the thing already done in present, which is affirmed to bee true, other wise it is a false oath: the other respecteth the minde and intent of him that sweareth: for he promiseth not certainly that it shall be done, because he is uncertaine of the future events: but si intendat facere, et promittit, verum est: if he intend to do as he promiseth, it is a true oath, otherwise not. Tostat. qu. 8. 2. And not only falsity is contrary to truth in taking oathes, but deceit and fraud also: as he sware fraudulently, that having made a truce with his enemies for certaine dayes, set upon them in the night: and the woman that sware she was with childe by the Bishop of Antioch, which was not the Bishop, but another common person of the City of the same name. And not he only which sweareth falsum cognitum, a false thing knowne, but falsum dubium, a false thing that is doubtfull, taketh a false oath: but he that having exactly sifted his memory, and yet is deceived, formaliter jurat falsò, formallie doth not sweare falsly. Cajetan. He that thus sweareth falsly, injuriam facit Deo sibi, & omnibus hominibus, doth offer wrong to God, to himselfe, and to men. To God, because an oath being nothing else, but the calling of God to witnesse, he that sweareth falsly beleeveth, Deum velle, verum aut diligere mendacium, that God either knoweth not the truth, or that he loveth a lye. To himselfe he doth wrong, for he bindeth himselfe to the judgement of God, wishing that the Lord may punish him, if he speake not the truth. To men hee offereth wrong, because there can bee no society or dealing among men, if one may not trust another. Thomas, in opuscul.

2. He that sweareth must doe it in judgement, that is, deliberatly and advisedly, not rashly, and hastily. The Romanes had an use, that hee which would sweare by Hercules, should goe forth of the doores, that he might be well advised, and take some pause before hee sware: for they held that Hercules did sweare but once in all his life, and that was to the sonne of King Augeas. This deliberation in their idolatrous oathes, should admonish Christians to be well advised in swearing by the name of God. Simler.

3. They must sweare in righteousnesse: that it be a just and lawfull thing which hee sweareth. Herod offended, which sware in his rage to put Nabal and his whole house to the sword. Simler. And he must not only sweare that which is just and lawfull, but justly: as he which hath seene his brother commit any offence secretly, if he take a voluntary oath to discover it, being not urged to depose so before a Magistrate, sweareth not justly. Tostat. quæst. 8.

QUEST. V. Whether men be bound to sweare often.

Some of the Jewes held, that it was a part of Gods worship, to sweare by his name, and therefore thought they did well in often swearing: and this their custome, they would warrant by that place Deut. 6. 13. Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serve him, and sweare by his name. Contra. 1. The former conditions, to sweare in truth, judgement, and righteousnesse must be observed, and kept in every oath: which cannot be, if men were bound or commanded often to sweare. 2. An oath was brought among men for necessity, for this is laid upon man, as a punishment, that one is not beleeved of another upon his bare word: and our Saviour saith, Whatsoever is more than yea and nay, commeth of evill: therefore where no necessity urgeth for one to sweare, it is no acceptable service unto God. 3. An oath is not altogether unlawfull, as shall be shewed afterward, in the places of controversie against the Anabaptistes, for then it should in no case be permitted, as adultery, and murder, are simply prohibited: and we reade in Scripture, that divers of the servants of God have taken oathes: So neither is an oath simply to be taken, where there is no just cause: and yet an oath is restrained, Non propter seipsum, sed propter ea quæ sequuntur ex eo: not for it selfe, but for the evils and inconveniences that follow: as wine is to be used warily, not for that it is evill, but because being abused, it procureth drunkennesse: so the swearing of an oath is not good, because perjury often followeth. 4. Therefore that text alleaged is no commandement to sweare: for then they which sweare most, should be counted the most holy and religious men: but Loquitur ex permissione, the text speaketh by way of permission: that when one is minded he may and ought only to sweare by the name of God, and not of any other. Tostat. quæst. 9.

QUEST. VI. Whether it be lawfull to use cursing.

Not farre dissepant or differing from the nature of an oath, is execration or cursing: which is to be considered: 1. That simply it is unlawfull to curse, as offending both against the first table in the abuse of Gods name, and against the second, in the breach of charity, when men of hatred, and in their rage doe curse, and wish evill unto their neighbours. 2. Yet there are examples in Scripture of holy men, as David, who in the Psalmes often wisheth the destruction of his enemies; and of Paul, who saith, I

...take off that trouble you. But here there are divers considerations to be used: 1. That divers of ...crations were denounced with a prophetical spirit, and so were prophetically pronounced, of which ...ation, rather than maledictions. 2. They wished not their destruction as revenge upon them, but ...that God would bring their wickednesse to an end, by cutting them off: which kinde of prayer is ...against the glory of God. 3. They did not pray as private persons, wishing they might be revenged ...their enemies: but as publike persons respecting the glory of God, and the good of the Church. ...these examples are very carefully to be followed. Sharpe.

Quest. VII. For what things a man is not to take an oath.

...these five things a man is not to take an oath of: 1. Of things that are false, for hee that so sweareth ...maketh God the witnesse of a lye. 2. Of things doubtfull and uncertaine: for it were presumption ...call God to be witnesse of that which he is uncertaine, whether it be true or not. 3. Of things unlaw- ...for so he maketh God contrary to himselfe, in calling him to be a witnesse to that, which hee himselfe ...forbidden. 4. Of things impossible which are not in our power. This were a mocking of God, for ...cannot have a serious purpose, when he sweareth to doe that, which hee knoweth hee cannot doe. ...Of light and frivolous matters, for he that sweareth upon small occasion, giveth not due reverence un- ...God. Vrsin.

Quest. VIII. Whether all kinde of oathes are to be kept.

...will be here further questioned, whether all kinde of oathes are strictly to bee kept. 1. Whether ...made unto enemies and theeves are to bee performed. The answer is, they are: 1. In the 15. ...Psal. he is described to be a righteous man, that sweareth to his owne hinderance, and chan- ...geth not. 2. The cause why a man keepeth not touch with his enemy, is the feare of the losse of life or ...but the honour of God should bee more deare unto us. Regulus is commended in the Romane ...for keeping his faith in returning to his enemies. 3. Beside, if faith should not be kept to such, ...inconvenience would follow, that in such like extremities no credit would bee given unto others.

Of oathes made to enemies.

2. Concerning oathes made to theeves: for the preservation of the life, though they bee extorted ...if the things be lawfull and possible, which he sweareth, as a man bindeth himselfe to a theefe, by ...to pay him a summe of money, and to be silent, to save his life, the innocent party is bound to keepe ...oath. It will be objected, that this oath is hurtfull to the commonwealth, for by this meanes theeves ...escape unpunished. But it may be answered: 1. That the hurt here by redounding to the State, is not in ...this case to be redeemed, or prevented with the losse of a mans life. 2. It is for the good of a Common- ...wealth that the life of every honest member thereof should be preserved. Vrsin.

Of oathes made to theeves.

3. But there are unlawfull oathes that are not to be kept: such as Novarus exacted of his followers, ...they should not returne unto Cornelius the Bishop of Rome his communion. Such is the oath of ...and obedience made to the Bishop of Rome: these oathes are better broken than kept: 2. That ...is unlawfull to sweare, it is unlawfull also to performe being sworne: it is but a doubling of ...wicked oath, as Herod did in putting Iohn Baptist to death. Vrsin. 2. David brake the ...which he made against Nabal's house: and the Israelites, which had entred into covenant, and ...themselves by oath to serve Baal, who was thereof called Baal berith, Iudg. 8. 33. yet afterward ...Baal and his worship, when they turned unto God. 3. And the reason is, because in all oathes there ...exception of the higher power, and former oathes made. God is greater than man, and wee ...bound our selves unto him: therefore no oath ought to be performed, which is against God, or ...

Of unlawfull oathes.

4. As touching the oath which Iosua made to the Gibeonites, it was a lawfull oath, though Iosua was ...deceived in it: 1. Because those Canaanites were not excluded which sought peace, and im- ...religion of the Israelites; as appeareth, Iudg. 1. 19, 20. 2. The Lord approved this oath, and ...house of Saul, because he violated it, 2. Sam. 21. Sinder. 3. Iosua kept this oath, lest it might ...brought a slaunder upon the name of God among the Gentiles, by whom they had made this oath, if ...have beene violated. Vrsin.

5. There are certaine oathes that are lawfull in the promising, and fall out to be unlawfull in the per- ...If a man binde himselfe by oath to assist his friend, and he afterward prove an enemy to his ...

Although unlawfull oathes are better broken than kept, yet it is not to bee done rashly, lest others ...be incouraged to violate lawfull oathes: as, though the Israelites had sworne, that they would not ...daughters in marriage to them of Benjamin, which was no lawfull oath, yet they were carefull ...keepe it. Sinder.

Quest. IX. Of the commination added to the third Commandement.

The Lord will not hold him guiltlesse, &c. 1. The Hebrewes, when they will increase the signification ...a thing: Id per negationem nominis, quod nos per superlativum, facere solent: Use to expresse that ...negative, which wee use to doe by the superlative: The Lord shall not hold him innocent or guilt- ...lesse, pro impio & scelerato habebit, &c. shall hold him for a wicked man. Lippom. 2. And it is ...to say, as, he will punish him: for whom the Lord holdeth innocent, he punisheth not. Vrsin.

3. This

3. This comination here added, sheweth a treble office of the law: Quatenus unum in docendo, unum Deus, &c. The one is in teaching the will of God, what should be done, what not done: the other in inflicting the punishment for the duety omitted. Borrh. 4. And by comination is signified: that although the Lord be full of long-suffering: Compensare tamen sua diuturnam patientiam supplicii, &c. Yet he doth recompence the slacknesse of the punishment, with the greatnesse thereof. Lapide. This sheweth, that although blasphemers escape the censure of men, yet the Lord most certainely punish them. 5. Paulus Burgensis here taketh up Lyranus, because he maketh this comination, causa prohibitionis, the cause of the former prohibition: which he correcteth thus: he saith, is comminatio pœnæ, a threatning of punishment, not the cause of the prohibition. But if Lyranus be interpreted with favour, as the Replier to Burgensis thus expoundeth, that, comminatio est causa motiva observantiæ præceptorum: The comination is a motive cause of the observation of the precepts; Burgensis no great reason to take this exception to Lyranus.

3. Doctrines observed out of the third Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the generall and particular contents of this Commandement.

THe contents then of this Commandement in generall, are, that as in the negative is forbidden the abuse and profanation of the name of God: so in the affirmative included, wee are commanded with all reverence and feare to use the name of God.

The particular vertues here required, with their opposite vices are these: 1. The propagation of the true doctrine of the will and workes of God, and setting forth the same unto others, as the Lord charged his people, Deut. 4. 9. Take heed to thy selfe, &c. that thou forget not the things which thine eyes have seene, but teach them thy sonnes, and thy sonnes sonnes, &c.

Contrary hereunto are: 1. The neglect of this duty, in not declaring the will and workes of God to others: for it sheweth, that they are forgetfull of Gods benefits, and so have and know them in vaine, as that unprofitable servant saith in the Parable: I was therefore afraide, and went and hid thy talent in the earth, Matth. 25. 25. 2. The corrupting of the true doctrine concerning the will and workes of God, as Ieremy saith of the false Prophets, that they prophesied lies in the name of God, Ierem. 14. 14. Vrsius: This is a speciall transgression of this Commandement, when any abuseth the name of God, ad confirmandam erroneam religionis doctrinam: To confirme any erroneous doctrine of religion: Ofiander. As they doe, which alleage Scripture in defense of their errours. And to this purpose, Gloss. Interlinear. Nomen Dei, ligno, lapidi, vel hujusmodi non attribues, &c. Thou shalt not give the name of God to stockes or stones, or such like, &c.

2. The setting forth of Gods praise, blessing of his name in all his workes, seeking of his glory, reverencing of his Majesty, is here commanded, as the Apostle saith, Coloss. 3. 17. Whatsoever you shall doe in word or deed, doe all in the name of the Lord Iesus, giving thanks to God even the Father by him.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. The contempt or neglect of the glory of God, as Rom. 1. 21. When they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God: which transgression is committed, when men doe not acknowledge God the giver, and author of all good things which they injoy. 2. Blasphemy, which is to speake evill of the name of God, as to murmure and repine against him, to make him the author of evill, and such like: against this sinne, it was decreed by Moses law, that he that blasphemed the name of God, should be put to death, Levit. 24. 17. 3. Cursing and execration is contrary hereunto, when men doe curse others from God, as wishing the plague of God to light on them, or such like: for so they make God but as an executioner, to take revenge according to their lust, and wicked desire: of such curses speaketh David, Psal. 109. 17. As he loved cursing, so shall it come unto him, as he loved not blessing, so shall it be far from him.

3. Confession of the truth, is another vertue here prescribed, Rom. 10. 10. With the heart man believeth unto righteousnesse, and with the mouth man confesseth to salvation: So Saint Peter, Sanctifie the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready alwayes to give an answer to every man, that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, 1. Pet. 3. 15.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. The deniall of the truth through feare and infirmity, as Peter with others denied Christ. 2. A generall apostasie, and falling away from the truth: of such the Apostle speaketh, They went out from us, for they were not of us, 1. Ioh. 3. 19. 3. Dissembling of the truth, as they which confessed Christ, lest they should have beene cast out of the Synagogue, Iohn 11. 42. 4. Offence and scandall in life or life, whereby God is dishonoured. Such were the Jewes, of whom the Apostle saith, The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles, because of you, Rom. 2. 24.

4. Invocation of the name of God: which is a devout petition and asking at the hands of God of such things as we need, grounded upon the confidence of the promises of God in Christ. So the Prophet David saith, Praise the Lord, and call upon his name, Psalm. 105. 1. Invocation, as it is a part of Gods worship, and so belongeth unto him, is a branch of the first Commandement: wherein I rather follow Sixtus Senensis judgement, who maketh invocation of Saints a breach of the first Commandement, than Vrsius who referreth it to the third. But in respect of the manner, required in prayer, that it should be done, with true heart, and unfained devotion, is appertaineth to the third precept.

Contrary unto true and faithfull invocation, are, first the neglect of prayer, Psalm. 14. 4. They call not upon the Lord. Secondly, the abusing of prayer and invocation of the name of God to unlawfull ends of ſorcery and enchantment. Borrh. Thirdly, the asking of ſuch things, as are not agreeable to the will of God, as the Apoſtle ſaith, *Ye aske and receive not, becauſe ye aske amiſſe, Iam.*4.22. Fourthly, lip labour in prayer: when many words are uſed, but without any true devotion. As the Prophet ſaith, *This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is farre from me, Iſai.*29.13 as it is cited, *Mark.*7.6.

3. Here is commanded a due, and reverent taking of the name of God into our mouthes, by a lawfull oath, whereby we call God to be a witneſſe unto our ſoules, that we ſpeake the truth: this is a kinde of invocation of the name of God, and a part of his worſhip, *Deut.*6.13. Thee ſhalt ſerve him, and ſweare by his name.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. The refuſall of a juſt and lawfull oath: when any refuſe to teſtifie the truth upon their oath, which may make for the glory of God, and the good of our neighbour: as the Apoſtle ſaith, *An oath for confirmation, is among men an end of ſtrife, Hebr.*6.16. 2. To take a falſe oath, either in not performing that which is promiſed by oath, or in teſtifying upon an oath, otherwiſe, than the truth is. 3. An idolatrous and ſuperſtitious oath, which is made by any other name, than of God only. 4. An oath to performe any unlawfull thing, ſuch as Herods oath was. 5. A raſh oath, lightly and vainely made, without any neceſſity, as in common and uſuall talke: which abuſe is reproved by our bleſſed Saviour, Matth. 5. Vrſin.

2. Doct. What an oath is.

Concerning an oath then, briefely this it is: 1. In a generall ſenſe, to take an oath, or to ſweare, is uſed for the whole worſhip of God, as Iſay 45.23. Every knee ſhall bow unto me, and every tongue ſhall ſweare unto me: and the reaſon is, becauſe we profeſſe him to be our God, by whom we ſweare. 2. But more partically and properly, an oath is defined thus: It is an invocation of the name of God, as the onely ſearcher of the heart, whereby he that ſweareth, taketh God to record, that he ſpeaketh the truth, and wiſheth God to puniſh him, if he doe otherwiſe. Vrſin. So that two ſpeciall things are intended in an oath: 1. To call God to be a witneſſe, that he ſpeaketh the truth: as the Apoſtle ſaith, *Galath.*1.20. Now the things that I write unto you, behold I witneſſe before God that I lye not. So Thomas: Iurare per Deum nihil aliud eſt, quam Deum ejus teſtimonium: To ſweare by God is nothing elſe, but to call him to witneſſe. 2. Hee that taketh an oath, deſireth that God may puniſh him, if hee ſweare falſly: as the Apoſtle, I call God for a record upon my ſoule: or unto, or upon my ſoule, 2. Cor. 1.13. Nihil aliud eſt dicere per Deum ita eſt, niſi quòd ſe puniat me, ſi non ita eſt: It is nothing elſe to ſay, by God it is ſo, but, that God puniſh me, if it be not ſo. Thom. in opuſcul.

3. Places of Controverſie.

1. Cont. It is not lawfull to ſweare by Saints, or other creatures.

They take the name of God in vaine, which doe ſweare by any other, than by the name of God: and therefore the Romaniſts are in errour, which maintaine the ſwearing by the name of Saints. *Rhemiſt. annot. Matth.*23.*v.*21.

God commandeth that we ſhould ſweare only by his name: *Deut.*6.13. Thou ſhalt feare the Lord thy God, ſerve him, and ſweare by his name: which text our Saviour alleaging, *Matth.*4. interpreteth it by the word only: him only ſhalt thou ſerve. So alſo Deut. 10. 20. and Exod. 23. 13. it is directly forbidden, that they ſhould take the name of any other Gods into their mouthes.

God reproveth thoſe which ſweare by any other, than by him: as *Zephan.*1.5. I will cut off &c. them that worſhip and ſweare by the Lord, and ſweare by Malcham.

Inuocation belongeth only unto God; but the taking of an oath is a kinde of invocation: therefore is a ſervice due only unto God.

In the taking of an oath, we call God to be a witneſſe unto our ſoule: but God only knoweth the ſecrets of the heart: neither Angell, nor Saint. Ergo.

He that ſweareth giveth unto him power to puniſh him, if he ſweare falſly: but God onely is able to deſtroy the ſoule. *Matth.*10.28. Vrſin.

Obj. This will be objected thus: 1. Our Saviour alloweth ſwearing by creatures, *Matth.*23.21. Whoſoever ſweareth by the Temple, ſweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein. Rhemiſt, annot. in hunc locum.

Reſp. 1. Our Saviour here doth not juſtifie ſwearing by creatures: but confuteth that nice diſtinction of the Phariſies: that it was nothing to ſweare by the Temple, but by the gold of the Temple, verſ. 16. proveth, that they could not avoid ſwearing by God, when they did ſweare by the Temple, becauſe it is the place of his habitation: and ſo they did in ſuch an oath take the name of God in vaine. 2. For to what purpoſe if our Saviour ſhould here allow ſwearing by creatures, as by heaven, ſaying, He that ſweareth by heaven, ſweareth by the throne of God, he ſhould be contrary to himſelfe: for elſewhere he ſaith, *Sweare not neither by heaven, for it is the throne of God, Matth.*5.34.

Obj. 2. Ioſeph did ſweare by the life of *Pharaoh, Gen.*42.15.

Reſp. 1. Some ſay that this was no oath, but a vehement kinde of aſſeveration: as Hannah ſaith to Eli: As thy ſoule liveth, 1. Sam. 1. and Abner to Saul, 1. Sam. 17. 56. and ſo they would have the meaning to be, as truly as Pharaoh liveth, or, as I wiſh his life and health, ſo it is true I ſay: Vrſin. Iun. But it is a ſtraine kinde of phraſe, to ſay unto one preſent, as thy ſoule liveth; and of one abſent, to ſay, by his ſoule. 2. It ſheweth therefore ſome infirmity rather in Ioſeph, though hee worſhipped the true God, yet he had learned to ſpeake as other Courtiers did, to ſweare by Pharaohs life: yet rather of cuſtome ſtome of ſpeech, or the more cunningly to conceale himſelfe from his brethren, than of any purpoſed imitation of their ſuperſtitious oathes: therefore Ioſephs example here can bee no warrant. See more of this Hexapl. in Geneſ. c.42. v.15.

Objections anſwered, made in defence of ſwearing by Saints.

3. Obiect. It is uſuall for men in taking of an oath to lay their hand upon the Goſpell: therefore it is lawfull to ſweare by a creature.

Anſw. 1. Men uſing this externall ſigne doe not ſweare by it: no more than Abrahams ſervant did ſweare by his maſters thigh, when he put his hand under it, *Gen.*24.2. he ſware by the name of God. So the Lord ſaith, I lift up mine hand to heaven, and ſay, I live for ever, Deut. 32.40. And the Angell lift up his hand to heaven: but *ſware by him, that liveth for ever, Revel.*10.6. So they lay their hand upon the booke as a viſible ſigne, or ſeale of the oath: but they ſweare not by the booke, but by God, the Author of the booke: to this effect, as the words are repeated unto them: as helpe thee God, and the contents of that booke.
So Them. Cum jurat per Evangelium, jurat per Deum, qui dedit Evangelium: When thou ſweareſt by the Goſpell, thou ſweareſt by God, which gave the Goſpell.

4. Obiect. It is not lawfull to profane or ſpeake irreverently of the name of the Virgin Mary, or of the Saints: for this alſo is a taking of the name of God in vaine, quia habent quandam connexionem ad Deum: for they have a certaine connexion unto God: and a certaine kinde of adoration belongeth unto to them. *Toſtat. qu.*7.

Anſw. 1. The argument followeth not, the name of Saints is not to be irreverently uſed, therefore we muſt ſweare by them: for neither is the name of the Prince to be abuſed, yet it is not lawfull to ſweare by it: there is a meane betweene ſwearing by a name, and profaning or abuſing of it. 2. The reverent uſing of the names of Saints dependeth not upon any adoration due unto them, or upon any connexion unto God, by any kind of worſhip: but upon that bond and connexion of love, which we owe unto them as the Miniſters and ſervants of God: as our Saviour Chriſt ſaith of his Apoſtles, *Hee that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me, Luk.*10.16. So that this deſpiſing or contempt offered to the Miniſters of Chriſt, is rather a breach of the fift Commandement in the ſecond table, than of this, which only preſcribeth our reverence and duty toward God.

2. Controv. Againſt the Romaniſts, that ſay, faith is not to be kept with Heretickes.

2. THe Romaniſts have another poſition, that faith is not to be kept with Heretikes: for ſo contrary to the ſafe-conduct given by the Emperour to John Hus, and Hierome of Prage in the Councell of Conſtance, they condemned them to death: and for the juſtifying of this fact they further alleage, that it belonged unto the Magiſtrate to puniſh Heretikes, having them in his power. Ex Similes.

Contra. 1. They having the chiefe Magiſtrates licence to goe and returne ſafely, were free and privileged perſons, and ſo exempt from the Magiſtrates power and juriſdiction. 2. Neither ſhall they ever bee able to prove them to have beene Heretikes. 3. Under this pretext and colour, oathes ſhall be of no force or validity among men, which would be a great hindrance and prejudice to humane ſociety. 4. And by this meanes Gods name is blaſphemed and evill ſpoken of; when they which profeſſe themſelves Chriſtians, doe more lightly eſteeme the name of their God, than the Heathen did their Idols. 5. Abraham made a covenant by oath with Abimelech, Iacob with Laban, Ioſhua with the Gibeonites, all which were ſtrangers from the true worſhip of God, and yet they kept their covenants and oathes.

3. Controv. Againſt the Anabaptiſtes concerning the lawfulneſſe of an oath.

3. FUrther againſt the Anabaptiſts, it followeth to ſhew the lawfulneſſe of an oath among Chriſtians, which is thus proved:

1. If it had beene unlawfull to ſweare, and if the thing were evill in it ſelfe, then the holy ſervants of God would not have ſworne at all: as Abraham did to Abimileeh, *Gen.*22. Iacob to Laban, *Gen.*31. *
Ionathan and David each to other, 1. Sam. 20.42.

2. God commandeth us to ſweare by his name, *Deut.*6.13. *Deut.*10.20. but God commandeth no evill to be done.

3. The end of an oath is to make an end of controverſies and ſtrife, *Heb.*16,16. therefore it is to God's glory, and profitable to humane ſociety, that by oathes ſuch buſineſſe ſhould be ended.

1. Obiect. But the Anabaptiſts obiect, that although it were permitted in the old Teſtament to the Fathers to ſweare, yet it is forbidden in the new.

Anſw. 1. Chriſt ſaith he came not to diſſolve the law, meaning the Morall, but to fulfill it: to take oath belonged to the Morall law: which being perpetuall, the other ſtill remaineth in uſe. Urſin. 2. The Prophets ſpeaking of the times of the Goſpell, and of the ſtate of the Church under Chriſt, doe foretell that they ſhould ſweare by the name of God: as Iſay 65.16. He that ſweareth in the earth, ſhall ſweare by the true God. 3. Wee have the example of S. Paul, who often called God to witneſſe, as *Rom.*1.9. 2. Cor.
23. *Rom.*9.1. *Philip.*1.8. *Galath.*1.23.

2. Obiect. Our Saviour giveth a generall prohibition againſt ſwearing, *Mat.*5.34. Sweare not at all, neither by heaven, for it is the throne of God: nor by the earth, for it is his foote ſtoole: And S. Iames ſaith, Above all things, my brethren, ſweare not, &c. but let your yea be yea, and your nay, nay, leſt you fall into condemna-Iames 5.12.

Anſw. 1. Our Saviour doth not generally condemne all kinde of oathes, but only raſh and unadvi-oathes, which were uſed in their common and ordinary talke: for he intendeth here to correct the abu-among the Jewes: they were allowed to ſweare by the heaven and earth, and by ſuch like, as thoſe such kinde of oathes nothing concerned God: our Saviour telleth them, that even in such oathes the name of God is prophaned, and abused, because there can be no part of the world named, where the Lord hath not set some prints and markes of his glory. Simler. 2. And againe our Saviour saith in this Chapter, that he came not to dissolve the law, which allowed the publike use of an oath.

3. Object. Our Saviour saith further, Let your communication be nay nay, yea yea, for whatsoever is more, is of evill: an oath therefore is not to be used, as proceeding of evill.

Answ. 1. Our blessed Saviour speaketh against such frivolous formes of oaths, which were used among the Jewes in their ordinary talke, which came indeed of an evill minde: for otherwise hee himselfe used no other then base, nay nay, yea yea, in his speech: often saying, Amen, Amen. Ursin. 2. S. Paul also, often calling God to witnesse, should have gone against his Masters rule, if it had not beene lawfull at all to take an oath. Ursin. 3. Oathes indeed proceed of evill, not in him which taketh a just oath, but in the other, that will not beleeve him without an oath: And therefore because of the incredulity and deceitfulnesse of men, the necessity of oathes was brought in: in this sense the argument doth not follow: for good things are caused by mens evill manners, but it cannot thereupon be inferred, that they are evill. Simler.

4. Object. It is not in a mans power to performe that which hee sweareth to doe, for the things to come are not in our power: therefore it were better to forbeare an oath, than fall into apparent danger of perjury.

Answ. 1. Though this were granted, this taketh not away the use of all oathes, but onely those which are made for performance of covenants ad promises: there is another kinde of oath, which is called assertorie, which affirmeth the truth of something already done: this oath by this objection, if it were admitted, is not taken away. 2. Yet this doubt is easily removed: for it sufficeth, that hee that sweareth to doe some act afterward, have a full intent and purpose to doe it, though it fall out otherwise afterward. Simler.

5. Object. The oathes which are allowed in Scripture, were publike, such as were required by the Magistrate: this giveth no liberty unto private men.

Answ. 1. Jacob sware to Laban, Joseph to Jakob, Jonathan to David, and David to him: all these, when they made these oathes, did sweare privately, and as private men. Simler. 2. And seeing an oath serveth for the evidence of the truth, and for the ending of strife, and controversies, in this behalfe there may bee as well, and as necessary an use of an oath privately, as publikely, not upon every occasion, but when the cause is urgent, and the case so requireth. Ursin.

4. Morall observations upon the third Commandement.

1. Observ. Against common and rash swearing.

Thou shalt not take, &c. Here that common, and notorious abuse of rash swearing, in common and ordinary talke, is reproved: when the name of God is taken up, prophanely and scoffingly, without any shew of reverence at all. Chrysostome in his time finding fault with this abuse, thus writeth, Among the Jewes the name of God was so reverenced, that being written in plates, it was lawfull for none to carry it, but the high Priest: but now, Volut quiddam vulgare sic ipsius nomen circumfecimus: We beare about every where the name of God, as a common thing. Chrysost. ad popul. Antioch. homil. 26. Theodoret useth this fit reason, Si veterum pauci pretiosiorem in dies festos multi adservare consuerunt, &c. If many use to keepe their raiment for holy dayes, how much more should the name of God bee consecrated unto prayer, and holy exercises? Ex Lippom. It was an use among the Heathen, to keepe secret such names, as they esteemed had in reverence: there was a certaine hid and secret name of the City of Rome, which is not yet knowne, which they say, by the decree of the Gods was kept secret: and one Marcus Servius discovering the same but once in publike, was adjudged to death. Solinus in polyhistor. cap. 1. de Roma. The name also Demogorgon, which the Gentiles held to bee the first God, was not to bee uttered: they feared, when he was named, the earth would tremble: and Lucanus lib. 6. de bell. civil. writeth, how Erictho the witch, would thus adjure the Furies, that if they did not consent, shee would name Demogorgon. Ver. 3. If the Gentiles were thus curious in not prophaning the names of their Idols: it teacheth us, that it is a shame for them, so irreverently to use the name of the great God of heaven and earth, whom they doe not only name, but sweare by, without any feare or reverence.

2. Observ. Of the fearefull judgement of God threatning against blasphemers.

The Lord will not hold him guiltlesse. Though blasphemers, and common swearers may escape the censure of men, yet the Lord will not surely suffer them to goe unpunished: If railers upon men, are excluded the kingdome of God, 1. Cor. 6. 10. much more they, which blaspheme the name of the living God. Their hand should not be upon them here, yet in the next world they are to expect nothing but everlasting torment, unlesse they doe repent. These that make a jest of religion, and doe scoffe at the name of God, are those abominable persons, spoken of, Revel. 21. 8. which shall have their part in the lake, that burneth with fire and brimstone. Cajetane here noteth well: Quoniam futurum hoc judicium divinum non videmus in hac vita, &c. Because wee see this divine judgement seldome to be fulfilled in this life, it followeth, that it is to be referred to the judgement following after this life. Therefore let us stand in awe of this fearefull judgement, that is threatned against all prophane swearers and blas-

3. Observ.

3. Obser. Against breakers of their oath, and perjured persons.

FUrther, as rash swearing is condemned, so it is a most horrible and fearefull sinne, for one to take an oath and not to doe and performe as he hath sworne: a righteous man, and such an one as shall abide in Gods Tabernacle, is described, that hee sweareth to his owne hinderance, and changeth not, Psal. 15. such therefore are condemned, which make shipwracke of a good conscience herein: Such are the Knights of the post, that will be hired to take false oathes: like unto the Turkish Soiti, and Chaus, for a Ducket, will take a thousand false oathes. Oleaster useth this comparison: If a man had pawned his sonne, or any other precious thing, for the performing of his oath, he would labour by all meanes to redeeme it: how much more, when men have as it were pawned the name of their God?

Upon the fourth Commandement.

1. Questions discussed.

QUEST. I. Of the order of the fourth Commandement, why it is put after the other.

8. Remember the Sabbath day, &c. 1. Remotis impedimentis veræ religionis, &c. The impediments of religion being removed in the former Commandements, as idolatry and prophane irreverence of the name of God: this precept followeth, Per quod homines in veræ religionis fundamento, By which men should be grounded in true religion. Thom. 2. 2. quæst. 122. art. 4. in Cor. Prius enim sunt removenda impedimenta alicujus rei instituendæ, &c. For first the impediments of a thing to be instituted, are to be removed before the thing can be instituted. Lyran. 2. And this is the cause, as Cyrill noteth, why the other Commandements before going, are propounded negatively, but this affirmatively: Quia ad actum nos impellit: Because he presently draweth us here unto the act and execution. Cyril. lib. 4. in Isai. cap. In the other Commandements, first they are commanded to take away the impediments, before the precept could be acted.

QUEST. II. Why it is said only in this Commandement, Remember, &c.

3. IN the other Commandements, they were taught, Deum primò venerari corde, deinde ore: First to worship God in heart, then in mouth: now it followeth here, that we should worship him, opere, in deed. Thom. Remember. 1. Whereas Deut. 5. Moses rehearseth this Commandement thus: Keep the Sabbath day, that thou sanctifie it: but here he saith, Remember the Sabbath day, R. Salomon hath a conceit, that both of these sentences were pronounced at once, by a double sound of the trumpe, which sounded forth the Commandements: which is a fansie without any ground: there Moses as the lawgiver, doth not tie himselfe to the very same words, keeping the sense. Ex Tostat. 2. This memento, remember, some thinke is not referred to the Sabbath day, but to the reason of the institution of the Sabbath taken from the creation: this law therefore sendeth us backe, to call to minde the creation of the world, and how the Lord rested upon the seventh day, after that in six dayes he had finished all the works of the creation. Tostat. So also Thomas, Ponitur ut rememorationem beneficii præteriti: It is put as a remembrance of a benefit past. But the connexion of the words sheweth, that Remember, is to be referred to the Sabbath day it selfe. 3. Some will have this, Remember, to bee applied to the things to come, shadowed in the Sabbath: Memento dicit de Sabbato, quia quâ umbra depingebantur, ut futura speculari debemus: In saith of the Sabbath, remember, because they ought to behold the things to come, which were described by the shadow. Cyril. ibid. But this remembrance is to this end, as the words of the law shew, to sanctifie the Sabbath. 4. R. Salomon thus understandeth it, that if they had any precious garments, or any other things of price, they should remember to keepe them till the Sabbath. Lyran. But the Sabbath is not sanctified by the putting on of costly garments. 5. Cajetanus giveth this interpretation, Ut intelligamus præceptum esse recordativum, &c. that we should understand, that in remembrance consisteth the nature of the precept: that the rest from the outward workes, is not pleasing to God, Nisi ratione internæ & interni cultus: But in regard of the memory and inward worship: But although the sanctifying of the Sabbath specially consist in the internall worship, yet it is not so well gathered out of this word. 6. Therefore, this rather is the meaning, Remember, that is, Inprimis memoria tenendum esse, that the sanctifying of the Sabbath, as a speciall thing, is to bee remembred. Galat. And to this end is it so said, because we being hindered by the six dayes workes, will hardly dispatch all to keepe the Sabbath, unlesse we remember it and cast aforehand for it. Oleaster. As also they are bid to remember it, because of old this day was sanctified before by the Lord, and accordingly observed by the people of God.

QUEST. III. Why the Lord thought good to appoint a day of rest, and that upon the seventh day.

THE Sabbath day. 1. Some Jewes are of opinion, that the Sabbath being the seventh day, was appointed to be kept holy, because it is Saturnes day, which is evill and unluckie to begin any worke in: this is a Heathenish superstition, to seeme to worship those things for feare, that are thought to hurt us. Tullus Hostilius, the third King of the Romanes made the Quartane, and Pilnor, Pallor, Fear, and Paleness Goddesses. The Lord taught his people otherwise, that they should not be afraid of the stars, &c.

ven, not to worship those things, which God had given for the service of men, Dent. 4. 19. Tostat. The speciall reason therefore, why the seventh day was kept holy, was grounded upon the Lords ex- that rested upon the seventh day, after the works of the creation were finished. 3. But that a day was necessary to be appointed for the people of God, divers reasons may be yeelded: 1. This day appointed and given, ad destructionem erroris, for the destruction of error: because the Lord did fore- that divers in the world would make question of the beginning and creation thereof: as they, 2 Pet. 3. shall say, where is the promise of his comming: for convincing their error, the Lord commanded this day to be kept, as a monument of the creation. 2. Datum fuit ad institutionem fidei redemptionis: it was gi- ven to instruct in the faith of our redemption: to signifie that Christs flesh should rest in the grave: accor- ding to that saying in the 16. Psalme, My flesh shall rest in hope. 3. Datum fuit ad figurandum veritatem rei: it was given to prefigure the truth of the promise: both in our spirituall rest from sinne, Cor- porum juvorequiescere facientis: Causing our body to rest from the yoake, and servitude of sinne: Aug. lib. 4. de orthodox. fid. cap. 24. as also in our everlasting rest in the Kingdome of God: Futuram ibi requiem hinc significans: Signifying hereby the rest of the Saints to come. Cyril. in Ioan. lib. 4. c. 51. we looke for rest from three things, A laboribus hujus vitæ, à tentationum concussione, à diaboli servi- From the labours of this life, from the trouble of tentation, from the service of the Devill. Thomas. It was ordained, ad inflammationem amoris, to inflame our love, that being free from worldly labours, might better attend upon God. 5. Datum fuit ad opera pietatis, it was given for the works of pietie: otherwise some would be so covetous, that they would never leave working for gaine. Thom. in opusc. Ut mens repararentur corpora, That the bodies should be refreshed by this rest: For some through their naturall greedinesse, could scarse have afforded any rest unto themselves, especially unto them, which are at the command of others, as children and servants. Simler.

QUEST. IV. Whether the precept of keeping the Sabbath were altogether ceremoniall.

SOme were of opinion, that the Sabbath was onely temporary, that did bind the Jewes for a time thinking that the ancient Patriarks, as Adam, Evah, Noe, kept no Sabbath. Tertullian. Which is some of the observation of the Sabbath in generall: seeing it was sanctified by the Lord himselfe, im- mediately after the creation, which the Patriarks were not ignorant of: but onely of that strict, exact, and curious observing the Sabbath, which indeed was onely enjoyned the Jewes. Simler. 2. Other seeme to be of opinion, that the Sabbath was altogether ceremoniall, and that Christians therefore are not now bound unto the observation of dayes, as the Apostle for this rebuketh the Galathians: Ye observe dayes and moneths, times and yeares, Galath 4. 10. Thus the Anabaptists object. But if this precept were altogether ceremoniall, it could be no part of the Morall law: and seeing the Israelites were charged to keepe other festivals also, as well as the Sabbath, as the feast of the Passeover, of Pentecost, and of Tabernacles, with others, wherein no mention is made in the Morall law, but onely of the Sabbath: it is evident that the Lord himselfe did make a manifest difference betweene that, and all other festivals: neither is the keeping of the Lords day now, an observing of dayes: seeing Christians doe celebrate this day, without any opi- nion of holinesse or necessitie tied unto the day, as the Jewes kept their Sabbath. But this error of the Ana- baptists shall be confuted more at large afterward, among the places of controversie. 3. Wherefore this precept is partly morall, partly ceremoniall; as to have some set time to attend the service of God, it is mo- rall: Secundum dictamen rationis naturalis aliquod tempus deputat homo: Man according to the dictate of naturall reason, will appoint some time for Gods service. Thomas. For all nations in the world, unlesse they bee these inhumane and savage people, which inhabite in the extreme and remote parts of the world: as the Garamants, and Anthropophagi, Men-eaters, which dwell toward the South pole; and which inhabite the Islands Oreades, and other remote regions toward the North: all other na- tions by humanitie and civilitie, did spend much time in the worship of their gods. Tostat. But it is le- gall and ceremoniall, in that some speciall day, is prescribed and set apart for the service of God: In quantum habet determinationem, in signum creationis: in that a speciall time is determined, in signe of the crea- tion: ceremoniall. Thom. And in this manner, the Jewes onely kept the Sabbath upon the seventh day, other nations beside: and therefore Seneca derided the Jewes, as though they did Septimam partem vitæ amittere: Lose the seventh part of their age, without any profit: because they rested every se- venth day unto the Lord: and Ovid calleth the Jew, virum Septimum, the seventh man, because hee kept the seventh day. Tostat. Lib. de arte amandi.

QUEST. V. To observe one day of seven unto the Lord, is Morall.

Yet this must be added further, that the prescribing of some certaine day for the service of God, is not ceremoniall, as Thomas before seemeth to affirme: but the speciall limitation of the seventh day: the exception and taxation of which day precisely, is now abrogated; yet so as that still, one day of seven be kept still. This then may be safely affirmed: that to keepe one day of seven holy unto the Lord, is morall, and not ceremoniall: and although the precise rest of the seventh day, which was enjoyned the Jewes, be now abrogated by the libertie of the Gospell, (because it was a type of our rest in Christ, and the thing being come, the shadow ceaseth:) yet Christians are bound to observe one day of seven: for the rea- son annexed to this Commandement, taken from the example of God, which rested on the seventh day, is not onely for the ceremonie of the seventh day, but is also morall, to put us in minde of the crea- tion of the world, made in six dayes: and beside, in regard of the benefit of the creatures, which after six dayes labour, are to rest the seventh: the rule of the Creator, in this morall equitie is to be followed, not to exceed that time, in affording rest unto the creature that laboureth: Novit Dominus mensuram virium creaturæ, for God best knoweth the measure of the strength of the creature. Lippom. and hath appointed the time of rest for the same accordingly. Yet somewhat more fully to explaine this matter: there are some things, which are simply morall, and simply ceremoniall: some things are of a mixt kinde, as being partly morall, partly ceremoniall: simply morall, are those things, which are grounded upon the judgement of naturall reason: as to appoint some time for the service of God, is simply morall, as is shewed before: all nations through the world agree herein, that a time must be set apart for the Lord: but precisely to appoint the seventh day, more than any other of the weeke, is simply ceremoniall: Quia non habet fundamentum à ratione, sed à sola voluntate condentis legem, &c. Because it is not founded upon reason, but upon the will of the law maker. Tostat. But to appoint one day of seven, and that day wholly for the space of all houres to consecrate unto Gods service, and therein to abstaine from all kinde of works: these things are not purely or simply ceremoniall, but partly morall, as grounded upon the judgement of reason, though not totally, and wholly: for the first, if above one day in seven should be kept perpetually holy, grave esset laborantibus toties vacare, it would bee burdensome to those that labour to rest so often; and if but one day in a fortnight or moneth should be appointed, Obliviscerentur Dei per desuetudinem cultus ejus. By discontinuing of the worship of God, we should grow to be forgetfull of him: it standeth therefore with reason, that one day of seven should be celebrated to the Lord. Likewise that the whole day should be consecrated to that end, though there be somewhat ceremoniall in it, yet it is grounded also upon reason, because the service of God requireth great attention: Et non est rationabile opus Dei facere negligenter. And it is not reasonable to doe the worke of God negligently: for if but two or three houres in the day were appointed, all could not so well prepare themselves for Gods service, as now, the whole day being set apart. And for the third, the cessation or resting from all kind of worke, it hath this reason: because the mind being occupied in other affaires, could not be so free for God; and therefore abstinence from all servile works is enjoyned, Ut sic liberum esset nos tota die vacare Deo, si vellemus: That so it might bee free for us to attend upon God the whole day, if wee would. Now then those things, which in the Sabbath were meerely ceremoniall are abolished, but the other remaine, which are not purely and simply ceremoniall. To. quæst. 12.

Quest. VI. What things in the Sabbath were ceremoniall, what morall.

NOw then it may appeare, what things in the Sabbath were ceremoniall, what morall, what mysticall. 1. These things in the Jewish observation of the Sabbath were ceremoniall: 1. The prescript of the day, seventh day. 2. The manner of keeping it, with sacrifices, oblations, and other rites. 3. The strict prohibition of all kinde of works, even concerning their meat, as in gathering, and preparing of Manna. Exod. 16. yea it was not lawfull upon that day to kindle a fire, Exod. 35. 3. and that under paine of death: as he that gathered sticks was stoned, Numb. 15. 4. The Sabbath was a shadow of our spirituall rest in Christ, and of Christs rest in the grave. In all these respects was the Sabbath ceremoniall, and bindeth us not now.

2. These things also in the Sabbath are morall, and perpetuall: 1. The rest, and relaxation of the creatures from their ordinary labour: which was not the chiefe and principall, but accidentalis finis, the accidentall end of keeping the Sabbath, that they might better attend upon the service of God: Calv. 2. The Sabbath was instituted specially for the service of God: for the remembrance of his benefits, the setting forth of his praise; the meditating upon his works: as the creation of the world, the redemption, the resurrection of Christ. Simler. 3. Conservatio Ecclesiastici ministerii: The conservation of the Ecclesiasticall ministry, was not the least or last end of the Sabbath: that there should be in the Church ordained and so preserved, Pastors and Doctors, who should divide the word of God aright, instruct the people, exhort them to repentance. Bastingius, Vrsinus.

3. The Sabbath also as it was unto the Israelites typicall and ceremoniall, in shadowing forth Christs rest in the grave, and our spirituall rest in him: Marbach. so now it is mysticall, in shewing our spirituall rest and cessation from the works of sinne, as the Prophet applieth it, Isai. 58. 14. teaching us how to keepe the Sabbath, in not doing our owne waves, nor seeking our owne will: it is also Symbolicall, being a pledge unto us of our everlasting rest in the Kingdome of God: as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 4. There remaineth then a rest to the people of God. Simler.

4. Thomas maketh the Sabbath ceremoniall in these foure respects: First, in the determination of the day. Secondly, in the allegoricall signification, as it was signum quietis Christi in sepulchro, a signe of Christs rest in the grave. Thirdly, in the morall sense, prout significat cessationem ab omni actu peccati, as it signifieth cessation from every act of sinne. Fourthly, in the anagogicall signification, ut præfigurabat quietem, &c. as it prefigured our rest in the Kingdome of heaven. So Thomas 2. 2. qu. 122. artic. 4. But I rather with Vrsinus take this spirituall Sabbath, which is begun in this life, in ceasing from the works of sinne and perfited in the next, to belong unto the morall and internall part of the Sabbath, than to the externall and ceremoniall: the two first indeed are ceremoniall in the Sabbath: the other are not properly ceremoniall, seeing they are perpetuall, but morall rather, spirituall and mysticall.

The difference betweene the Sabbath of the Jewes and Christians.

5. So then by this which hath beene said, it is easie to make a difference betweene our Lords day, and the Jewish Sabbath: 1. In that we are not tied to the necessary prescript of the day. 2. And have more liberty and freedome in the rest. 3. And their Sabbath was a type and figure of those things, which are now fulfilled and accomplished in Christ. Bastingius.

Quest. VII. What it is to sanctifie the Sabbath day.

To sanctifie it. 1. God is said to sanctifie the seventh day one way, and man another: God by instituting that day and consecrating it unto his service: man by referring it unto the use and end appointed Tostat. Qu. 2. Neither is God said so to sanctifie it, as though this day had any speciall kinde of holinesse in it selfe affixed to it, but in regard of the use, because it was consecrated and set apart for holy duties. Simler. 3. And this sanctifying signifieth two things, both a separating of this day from other prophane and common dayes, and the speciall addicting and appropriating of the same to the service of God. And it is not referred onely to the day, sed ad ipsos homines, &c. but to the men themselves, that they should be sanctified, and prepared for the service of God, Gallas. 5. They then are deceived, which thinke to sanctifie this day onely in the corporall rest, and that they have done the duties here required by abstinence from labour: for the day must be sanctified, that is, consecrate to the service of God: Deus non tantoperè desiderat quietem corporum; God principally doth not take care for the rest of the bodie: sed curat animas: but he taketh care for his service: the bodily rest is commanded to no other end, than as it is referred to the setting forth of Gods worship. Tostat. qu. 13.

Quest. VIII. Of the labouring six dayes, whether it be a Commandement.

Six dayes shalt thou labour. 1. In the Hebrew it is, Six dayes shalt thou serve, and it seemeth to have speciall reference unto the servant, that hee should dispatch all his masters worke in six dayes, and deferre none unto the seventh: the other clause, and doe all thy worke, concerneth the master himselfe, and those which were free: for the servant did not his owne worke, but his masters: but the master and the free man did his owne worke, Oleast. 2. God here enjoyneth not to labour six dayes, as though it were not lawfull upon any occasion to rest upon the weeke dayes: sed ipsa facilitate ad parendum invitat: but he doth perswade to obedience, by the easinesse of the precept, Calvin. 3. And hereby the Lord sheweth how liberally he dealeth with us, that whereas wee ought to spend every day in his service, he giveth unto us six dayes for our affaires, and reserveth the seventh onely to himselfe, Basting. 4. And yet further God so giveth unto us six dayes to worke in, as that the private worship of God be not neglected in prayer, and hearing of his word, as occasion serveth: but the seventh day is set apart for his publike service in such sort, as that then all other affaires must give place unto it, Vrsin. 5. Three reasons then are usually used to move unto the obedience of this Commandement: one is from the end, because it is to be kept holy to the glory of God: another from Gods example: which two reasons are mentioned afterward: the third here is propounded נ֝ Sadon, the easinesse of the precept: that seeing wee have libertie to worke six dayes, we may the better rest upon the seventh, Pelargus.

Quest. IX. What works were permitted to be done upon the Sabbath.

Thou shalt not doe any worke. 1. We must observe that there was a great difference among the Jewes in the observation of their festivall dayes. For the Sabbath was more strictly kept for the rest: therein they were forbidden to prepare or dresse that which they should eat, Exod. 16. 23. to kindle a fire, Exod. 35. 3. In the other solemne dayes, as in the first day of the Patch, those works are permitted, which were about their meat, chap. 12. 16. onely they are restrained from all servile worke, Levit. 23. 7. And the reason hereof was, because the Sabbath was a speciall figure and type of our spirituall rest in Christ: and figures are most exactly to bee kept, for the more lively shadowing forth of that which is figured. And therefore we have now more libertie in keeping of the Lords day: wherein it is lawfull to provide for our food, and to doe other necessary things; because the figure and shadow is past, and the truth is come, Tostat. qu. 13.

2. Notwithstanding the strict injunction of bodily rest, certaine works it was lawfull for the Jewes to worke under the law; much more for us now: as first, works of necessitie, quæ non poterant bene differri, nec commodè impediri, which could neither conveniently bee deferred, nor yet prevented: Lyran. Of this kinde is the defence against the invasion of the enemies: as Mattathias resolved to fight against the enemies upon the Sabbath day, lest they should have beene put to the sword, as their brethren had beene before, 1 Macab. 2. 40. So Joshua with his companie compassed the walles of Jericho seven dayes together, in which number the Sabbath was one: it was also lawfull for them on the Sabbath to lead their oxe or asse to water, Luk. 13. 15. and if their beasts were fallen into the pit, to helpe them out, Luk. 14. 5. And it was lawfull to save their cattell, so also their other substance: as if an house were set on fire, to quench it: if their corne were like to be lost in the field, to preserve it. They might also in case of necessitie seeke their food upon the Sabbath: as the Apostles rubbed the eares of corne, Matth. 12. Secondly, it was lawfull to exercise works of mercie and charitie upon this day, as to visit the sicke, to cure and heale the same: so our Saviour healed the woman, that had beene bowed together, upon the Sabbath, Luk. 13. 11. at another time hee recovered a lame man upon the Sabbath day, and bid him take up his bed and walke, Joh. 5. 8. Thirdly, works tending to pietie were not inhibited upon that day: as the Priests did sacrifice, and doe other bodily works that belonged thereunto: and therefore they are said to breake the Sabbath, and yet were blamelesse, Matth. 12. 5. not that indeed the Sabbath day was broken by them, but is spoken in respect of the vulgar opinion, that thought the Sabbath violated, if any necessarie thing were done therein, Tostat. qu. 14.

QUEST. X. Why the children, servants, and cattell are commanded to rest.

Vers. 10. Thou, nor thy sonne, nor thy daughter, &c. 1. The father of every house must not onely provide that himselfe keepe a Sabbath unto the Lord, but hee must have a care of those who are under his charge, as of his sonnes and daughters, then of his servants, whom he is bound to instruct the wayes of the Lord. 2. But the case is divers, where the servant is of the same profession, and where he is not: for if he be of the same religion, the master is to instruct him, and to see he keepe the Lords Sabbaths; if he be of another profession, as a Jew or Saracen, now the servant is to be considered as a thing appertaining to the master, and so he is to keepe the Sabbath, though non propter se, not of conscience respect of himselfe, yet propter Dominum, because of his master, who cannot observe the Sabbath quietly seeing his servant to breake it in his sight: and so for the same cause the precept is given in the next place concerning the rest of the cattell. 3. The beast also is to rest for these causes: first, that mercie and compassion should be extended even unto the dumbe creature, that it may sometime be spared, and have some respite from labour. Secondly, because the beast cannot be employed, but man also thereby is constrained to worke also, and so to violate the Sabbath, in taking care for his beast. Thirdly, that by the sight of the cattell resting from their labour, man also might be put in minde of his dutie, to keepe the Lords rest: likewise as for the same cause, in publike fasts the beasts were enjoyned abstinence, that men seeing them in that kinde to mourne, might be stirred up unto griefe and sorrow, Simler. 4. But whereas mention is made onely of the sonne and daughter, man servant, and maid servant, and not of such women as were married, the wife therefore must be comprehended under this word, thou: because the Matrone of the house is in some sort joyned with the father of the house in the administration of the familie, Tostat. qu. 14. 5. Cajetane also here giveth this note: Quod nulla fuit mentio pastorum: That no mention is made of shepheards which tended their flocks, but onely of the domesticall servants, which were as a part of the house, because it was impossible to leave the great flocks of sheepe without a superintendent or keeper every seventh day.

QUEST. XI. What strangers were enjoyned to keepe the Sabbaths rest.

Vers. 10. Nor thy stranger that is in within thy gates. 1. Tostatus understandeth such strangers, as dwelt in their walled cities: for the word here used, signifieth both gates and cities: so also Vatablus: and Oleaster here alludeth unto that use and custome of strangers, which inhabited rather in the suburbs, and about the gates, than in the heart of the citie: but it is more largely taken, than for the gates of the cities, because many strangers might dwell among them in townes and villages, where were no gates. By gates then by a certaine metaphor are understood the bounds and limits of every ones jurisdiction: Iun. whether it were in citie, towne, or familie. 2. Tostatus thinketh that here the stranger is meant, which was converted to the Israelites faith, and such as were circumcised: for then they were bound to keepe the whole law, otherwise not, quæst. 14. But I preferre rather Cajetanes opinion, that they were to compell even the Ethnikes among them to keepe the corporall rest, though they did not communicate with them in other parts of the divine service: Quoniam dedecet publicum festum turpi reddi à peregrinis: Because it was not fit that the publike festivall should be defiled by strangers. To the same purpose Lippoman: Nulli cohabitanti permittitur Sabbati dissolutio: None that cohabited was to be permitted to dissolve the Sabbath. And this was commanded for these two reasons: Ne suo exemplo scandalum inferrent Ecclesiæ: Lest they might give offence unto the Church by their example: and lest the Jewes also by this occasion might have taken libertie to violate the Sabbath, Vatab.

QUEST. XII. Why a reason is added to this Commandement.

Vers. 11. For in six dayes, &c. 1. This is a reason, not of the morall, but of the ceremoniall part of the Commandement, for the observation of the seventh day: for otherwise we should be bound to the keeping of the same day still, Lippoman. 2. And the Lord herein doth propound his owne example, to draw us to obedience: that as children wee should imitate the example of our heavenly father, Basting. 3. Now the cause why a reason is annexed to this Commandement concerning the Sabbath, but, de cæde nihil tale adjecit, &c. no such thing is added touching murther; Chrysostome yeeldeth hee this, because the conscience of man by nature telleth him, that murther is evill, but the Commandement of keeping the Sabbath, being but particular and for a time, non est de principalibus & per se notis tam exquisitis, &c. is not one of the principall things, such as the conscience enquireth of. But Thom. doth more fully explaine this reason: Illa, quæ sunt pure moralia habent manifestam rationem: those precepts, which are meere morall, are evident enough, and need not have any other reason annexed: but those precepts, which beside the morall part, have a ceremoniall consideration, as in the second of graven images, and in the fourth of the determination of the day: oportuit rationem assignari, it behoved a reason to be assigned: because being not wholly grounded upon naturall reason, magis notum erat, it was more apt to fall out of the minde. 4. Cajetane also giveth another reason: Inseruit Deus proprio aliquid juris positivi juri morali, naturali, &c. God with his owne mouth did insert somewhat of the positive law, into the naturall and morall law, to authorise such positive lawes, as should afterward be given by Moses; lest if the Lord had not given with his owne mouth some positive law, Moses might have beene thought to have framed them himselfe.

Chrysost. in ser. ad popul. Antioch. pro gratiarum actione.

Thom. 1. 2. q. 100. art. 7. ad. 2. & distinct. 37. art. 2. q. 1. ad. 3.

Quis

QUEST. XIII. How the Lord is said to have rested.

Q Eſted the ſeventh day. 1. Quievit à condendo alio mundo, non quievit ab adminiſtrando : God reſted from creating another world, but not from the adminiſtration and government thereof: Lippoman. as the bleſſed Saviour ſaith in the Goſpell, My father worketh, and I worke. 2. But God reſted not, as though he were wearie: for virtus infinita non eſt fatigabilis, an infinite power cannot be wearied: as Gods power is infinite; though Ariſtotle ignorantly denie it, giving this for a reaſon, why the earth moveth not, becauſe there is no power ſufficient to ſtirre it out of the place, lib. 2. de Cælo. And beſide, potentia incorporea, a power which is incorporeall, is not ſubject to be wearie, though it be not infinite: as the Angels, and the reaſonfull part of man: though this ſeeme ſometime to bee dulled not in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of the organes and inſtruments: but if ſpirits of a finite nature are not fatigable, or apt to be wearied, much leſſe God who is an infinite ſpirit. Toſtat. qu. 15. 3. Therefore God is ſaid to reſt, both that this reſt might bee monumentum perfectæ & abſolutæ creationis, a monument of the creation perfited: and that God by his example might induce us in like manner to reſt from our labours upon his Sabbaths.

QUEST. XIV. Of the changing of the Sabbath from the ſeventh day, to the firſt day of the weeke.

The ſeventh day. 1. The Apoſtolicall Church changed the holy day of reſt from the ſeventh day to the firſt, which is the Lords day, in remembrance of our Redemption by Chriſt: which in the time of the new law, is maximum beneficiorum, & recentiſſimum, the greateſt benefit, and the neweſt and moſt freſh in memorie: as the greateſt benefit in the old law was the creation of the world. 2. And although our redemption was purchaſed by the death of Chriſt, yet becauſe this benefit ſhould not have a full perfection; but that we ſhould riſe againe unto life eternall, this day was to be aſſigned rather in memoriall of Chriſts reſurrection, than of his paſſion: and though the reſt of the Sabbath did ſignifie the reſt of Chriſt in the grave, having conſummate and finiſhed the painfull works of his paſſion: yet becauſe, pretioſior nobis fuit reſurrectio, &c. the reſurrection of Chriſt was more precious unto us, than his reſt in the grave: therefore not upon the Sabbath, but upon the day of the reſurrection, doe we keepe an holy memoriall unto God. Idaquæſt. 11. 3. The Apoſtolicall Church according to their Chriſtian libertie, in ſtead of the ſeventh day made choyce of the firſt, in remembrance of the reſurrection of Chriſt, ut ſe à Judaica ſynogoga diſcerneret: that they might be diſcerned from the Jewiſh Synagogue. Vrſin.

QUEST. XV. How the Lord is ſaid to have bleſſed and ſanctified the day.

Gen. 2. 3. Wherefore the Lord bleſſed the Sabbath day, &c. 1. Not that other dayes were accurſed: ſed quod præ aliis hanc celebrem fecit; but becauſe he preferred this before the reſt: for if thoſe dayes are counted bleſſed, and had in remembrance, wherein ſome good is wrought for the Church, or Common-wealth; much more this day, wherein all things were finiſhed. Simler. 2. Of the other ſix dayes, it is not ſaid, the Lord bleſſed them, for it was ſufficient, quod in ſingulis illis creaturæ productæ ſunt, that in every one of them ſome creature was brought forth: but of this day it is ſaid, God bleſſed and ſanctified it: what is this, He ſanctified it? ab aliis illum ſegregavit: he did ſeparate and ſet it apart from other dayes. Chryſoſt. homil. 10. in Geneſ. 3. Benedictio ſemper importat multiplicationem, &c. Bleſſing doth alwayes imply multiplying. So God beſtowed many bleſſings and good things upon this day, beyond other dayes. Aug. qu. 16. 4. Iſidore doth ſpecially referre this Commandement to the holy Ghoſt, for theſe reaſons, Spiritus ſanctus ſeptiformis dicitur, &c. becauſe the holy Ghoſt in reſpect of the manyfold graces there-in is ſaid to be ſeven-fold, the ſanctifying of the ſeventh day peculiarly belongeth unto the Spirit: & quia non eſt luminata ſanctificatio niſi in Sabbato: and becauſe no mention is made of ſanctification, but in the Sabbath day: and further, for that dono ſpiritus ſancti nobis requies æterna promittitur: by the gift of the Spirit eternall reſt is promiſed unto us: whereof mention is made in this precept. 5. But how is the Lord ſaid to bleſſe the Sabbath here, ſeeing the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, I cannot ſuffer your new Moones, and your Sabbaths? Iſai. 1. 13. The anſwer is, that the Jewes ſinned, carnaliter obſervantes ſabbatum, in obſerving the Sabbath carnally: and ſo the Sabbath is not acceptable unto God: but when it is ſo kept, as that it putteth us in minde of our everlaſting reſt in the Kingdome of heaven. Iſidor. Reconcile.

2. Places of Doctrine obſerved out of the fourth Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the generall and particular contents of this Commandement.

In this Commandement generally, all ſuch holy works and duties are preſcribed to be done, whereby the worſhip of God is advanced: and likewiſe therein is forbidden, either the omiſſion, and neglect of ſuch holy works, or the prophanation thereof, by all ſuch works as do hinder the holy exerciſes, and are contrarie unto.

In particular, here is commanded, the faithfull and diligent preaching and ſetting forth of the Word of God, to the Apoſtle ſaith, Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Goſpell, 1 Cor. 9. 16. and he chargeth Timothie to preach the Word, to be inſtant, in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon. 2 Tim. 4. 2.

Contrary to this dutie, are: 1. The neglect and omitting of teaching and preaching: as the Prophet reproveth the idle and careleſſe watchmen: They are all dumbe dogges, they cannot barke, they lie and ſlumber, all delight in ſleeping, Iſai. 56. 10. 2. The abuſing and counterfeiting of this holy function, when the Word of God is not ſincerely and purely handled, but according to mens fanſies, and humours: but the Apoſtle ſaith, We are not as thoſe, that make merchandize of the Word of God, 2 Cor. 2. 17.

The often adminiſtration of the Sacraments, as occaſion ſerveth, is another exerciſe, whereby the Sabbath day is ſanctified: as Act. 2. 42. They continued in the Apoſtles doctrine, & fellowſhip, & breaking of bread.

Contrary hereunto on the Ministers behalfe, are: 1. The negligent administration of the Sacrament and omitting to call upon the people often to resort unto them: 2. The corrupting or perverting of the Sacraments, as the Romanists have turned the Sacrament into a sacrifice: being ordained for the living they applie it to the dead: Christ biddeth us to eat and drinke it, they hold it up to be gazed upon: and many such things have they degenerated from the institution of our blessed Saviour.

3. The carefull hearing of the Word of God is commanded, and diligent resorting to the exercises of religion, as the Bereans are commended for searching the Scriptures, whether those things were so, which the Apostle preached, *Act.*17.11.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. The negligent resorting to the holy assemblies of the Lords people, in generall men, or the wilfull refusall in obstinate recusants; who are like unto those in the Gospell, who being invited to the marriage feast, excused themselves, and refused to come, *Matth.*22.5. 2. The careless and fruitlesse hearing of the Word, as Eutychus fell asleepe while Paul was preaching, Act. 20.

4. The reverent and often receiving of the Sacraments is prescribed: as *Act.*20.6. On the first day of the weeke the Disciples came together to breake bread.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. the neglect of the Sacraments: 2. The prophanation of them, when they obtrude themselves, that are not prepared, and so receive unworthily, 1 *Cor.*11.17.

5. Publike invocation upon God, and faithfull prayer is another exercise for the Lords day: as Act. 16.13. On the Sabbath day we went out of the Cuie beside a river, where they were wont to pray.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. The neglect of publike and private prayer. 2. To pray with the lippes, and not with the heart. 3. Unfruitfull prayer in an unknowne tongue: against the which S. Paul speaketh 1 *Cor.*14.17. Thou givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

6. Charitie is upon this day to be exercised, and extended to the poore, as our blessed Saviour healed upon this day, *Mark.*3.3.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. The omitting of the works of charitie, and despising of the poore, as the rich glutton did despise poore Lazarus, Luk. 16. 2. Or the giving of almes for praise and ostentation, as the Pharisies did, *Matth.*6. Ex Vrsin.

7. Meditating upon the works of God, is peculiar for the Lords day, as *Psal.*92. which was appointed for the Sabbath day, *vers.*4. the Prophet saith, I will rejoyce in the works of thy hands.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. To be occupied in carnall and worldly thoughts, and bodily labour, as in buying, selling, travelling, working: 2. To follow prophane games and sports, to spend this day in quaffing, drinking, dancing and such like: as the Israelites kept an holy day to the golden Calfe: *They sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play, Exod.*32.6.

2. Doct. How the Sabbath is to be sanctified.

Vers.8. Remember the Sabbath day, to keepe it holy, or to sanctifie it. In this precept, two things are to be considered: quid cavendum, quid faciendum, what is to be taken heed of, and what is to be done.

The things to be avoided upon the Sabbath day are these: 1. All corporall worke and labour. So Israel saith, chap. 17. 24. Sanctifie the Sabbath, so that you doe no worke therein. But yet bodily works may be done upon the Sabbath, upon these foure occasions: First, propter necessitatem, for necessity, as our Saviour excused his Disciples for pulling the eares of corne, being hungry, *Matth.*12. Secondly, propter Ecclesia utilitatem, for the profit of the Church: as the Priests did all necessary things that were to bee done in the Temple upon the Sabbath, and were blamelesse. Thirdly, propter proximi utilitatem, for the good of our neighbour: as our Saviour healed upon the Sabbath one which had a withered hand, *Matth.*12. Fourthly, propter Superioris authoritatem, because of the authoritie of the Superiour: as the Jewes circumcised upon the Sabbath, because the Lord so commanded, that they should circumcise their males upon the eight day.

Upon what occasion some works are allowed to be done upon the Lords day.

2. Debemus cavere culpam, we must take heed of sinne: as the Lord saith by his Prophet, *I cannot suffer your new Moones, nor your Sabbaths, Isai.*1.13. and then he giveth this reason, *vers.*15. your hands are full of blood.

3. Debemus cavere negligentiam: We must take heed of negligence and idlenesse upon the Lords day, as it is said of the Israelites, they sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play, Exod. 34.

The things wherein wee must be exercised upon the Lords day are these: 1. In faciendis sacrificiis, in offering of our sacrifices: that as the Jewes offered up their externall sacrifices, so Christians now must present unto God, their spirituall sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiving: as the Prophet David saith, Let my prayer be directed in thy sight as incense.

2. We must corpus nostrum affligere, humble and afflict the body, not pamper it upon this day, and make as it were our belly our God: so the Apostle exhorteth, *that we would give our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, Rom.*12.1.

3. Dando eleemosynas, in giving of almes: as the Apostle saith, *to doe good, and distribute forget not: with such sacrifices God is pleased, Heb.*13.16. So Nehemiah adviseth the people: *Send part unto them, for whom none is prepared, for this day is holy unto the Lord, chap.*8. *vers.*10.

4. In divinorum exercitiis: Wee must bee occupied in divine exercises: as our blessed Saviour saith *Joh.*8. He that is of God heareth Gods words: for herein consisteth the delight and rest of the soule: this is that Sabbatisme or rest which the Apostle speaketh of, Heb. 4. There remaineth then a rest to the people of God. This pleasant rest of the soule is begun in this life, and perfited in the next. But before we can attain that perfect rest in the Kingdome of God, three kinds of rests must goe before: 1. Ab impetuositate peccati: From the restlesse condition of sinne: for as the Prophet saith, The wicked are like the raging sea, that cannot rest, Isa. 57.20. A passionibus carnis, from the passions of the flesh, for the flesh lusteth against the spirit: Galath. 5. Ab occupationibus mundi, from the troubles and businesses of the world, as our blessed Saviour said to Martha, thou carest, and art troubled about many things, Luk. 10.41. Et tunc post hæc animabus requiescit in Domino: and then after all this, the soule shall freely enjoy rest in the Lord: Sic ferè Thomas in opuscul.

Divers kinds of rests in the soule.

3. Places of confutation.

1. Cont. Against the Iewes, and the Sabbatarians that contend for the Iewish Sabbath.

Whilst the Jewes doe thus object against the Christians, for the perpetuitie and continuance of their Sabbath upon the seventh day.

1. Object. The morall law is perpetuall, but this Commandement for the sanctifying of the seventh day, is part of the morall law: Ergo.

Answ. This Commandement as it is morall, continueth still: namely, that a certaine day should be set apart for the publike service of God: yea and further, as Chrysostom saith, In circulo hebdomadis diem unum quemque segregandum, &c. That in the compasse of a weeke, one whole day should be severed from the rest. Hom. 10. in Genes. But the ceremoniall part of this precept, in the prescript of the seventh day, bindeth us not now: as the Apostle saith, Let no man condemne you, &c. in respect of an holy day of the new Moone, or of the Sabbath, &c. Coloss. 2.16. Vrsin.

2. Object. The lawes which were instituted before Moses, are immutable and perpetuall, but such was the institution of the Sabbath.

Answ. The proposition is not true, for the fathers before Moses used to offer sacrifices: Circumcision was given to Abraham: even from the beginning there was a difference betweene cleane and unclene beasts: and yet all these being types and figures of things to come, are abrogated by Christ. Simler.

3. Object. The lawes given before mans fall in the state of his innocencie, could bee no types of the Messiah, being not yet promised, and therefore they doe bind all Adams posteritie: such was the sanctifying of the Sabbath.

Answ. 1. Such lawes, the ground whereof was printed in the soule of man in the creation, as are all morall precepts, are perpetuall, but not all in generall given unto Adam, as was the prohibition to eat of the tree of life. Vrsin. 2. But it may be further answered, that the Sabbath was not instituted before mans fall: for he is held to have fallen upon the sixth day, the same day wherein he was created, as it is at large handled in that question upon the 3. of Genesis. 3. This law of sanctifying the Sabbath in substance remaineth still, though the ceremonie of the day be changed.

4. Object. The keeping of the Sabbath is called an everlasting covenant, Exod. 31.16. it is therefore to remaine for ever.

Answ. 1. So Circumcision is called an everlasting covenant: because they were to continue till the coming of the Messiah, and so long as the Common-wealth of Israel continued, to them it was perpetuall: but now their state being dissolved, the covenants made with them are expired also. Simler. 2. It is called everlasting, in respect of the signification and substance thereof, our rest in Christ, and so it remaineth still, and shall for ever: as the Kingdome of David in the Messiah shall never have end. Vrsin.

5. Object. The reason and cause of the law is immutable, namely, the memoriall of the creation, therefore the law it selfe also: and seeing the knowledge of the creation is necessarie, so also is the symbole and instrument thereof, the celebration of the seventh day.

Answ. 1. The cause or reason of a law being immutable, the law it selfe also is immutable, if it bee so tied unto the law, as that it cannot stand, if the law be changed: but so is it not here, for the creation may as well be remembred upon another day, as upon the seventh. Vrsin. 2. All the sacrifices and ceremonies of the law, were symboles and signes of necessary things, as Circumcision, the paschall Lambe, of the Circumcision of the heart, and of the Messiah, which things remaine still, but the symboles are abolished. Simler.

Now then, that Christians are not bound unto the Jewish Sabbath, it is evident by these reasons: 1. By the doctrine of the Apostles, Galath. 4.10. You observe dayes and moneths, times and yeares, I am in feare of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vaine: and by name S. Paul speaking of the Sabbaths, saith, they were shadowes of things to come, but the bodie is in Christ, Coloss. 2.16. 2. The Apostles by their example shewed, that the Jewish Sabbath was determined, for they began to keepe the first day of the weeke, Act. 20.7. and 1 Cor. 16.2. 3. All types and shadowes were but to continue untill the bodie came, which is Christ, but the Sabbath was one of those shadowes. 4. The Sabbath was a note of cognizance, and a marke of distinction, and difference betweene the Israelites and other people: which difference and partition, is now taken away in Christ, for now there is neither Jew, nor Grecian, but all are one in Christ, Gal. 3.4.28. Ex Vrsin.

In Gregories time there were, Qui die Sabbati aliquid operari prohiberent, which did prohibite to doe any worke upon the Sabbath or Saturday; whom he refelleth thus: Quos quid aliud nisi Antichristi præcursores dicerim, &c. whom what else should I call, than the preachers of Antichrist, who when he commeth, shall cause both the Sabbath, and the Lords day to be kept without doing any worke: for, because he he ſhall faine himſelfe to die and riſe againe, hee ſhall cauſe the Lords day to be had in reverence: and the cauſe he ſhall compell them unto Judaiſme, he ſhall likewiſe command the Sabbath to be kept: And the he concludeth, Nos, quod de Sabbato ſcriptum eſt, ſpiritualiter accipimus, &c. We ſpiritually obſerve the which is written of the Sabbath: for the Sabbath ſignifieth reſt: Verum autem Sabbatum, Redemptor noſtrum habemus, and we have our Redeemer and Saviour our true Sabbath.

Gregor. lib. 13. epist. lib. 11. Epist. 3.

2. Cont. Againſt the Iewes carnall obſerving of the Sabbath.

BEſide this, that the Jewes would enforce upon us their Sabbath, they have another errour, in the manner of keeping their Sabbath, which they ſolemnize in taking their eaſe, in eating and drinking, and giving themſelves over to all pleaſure, and licentiouſneſſe: for, as Burgenſis reporteth of them, The Jewes thinke they are bound upon every Sabbath, to eat thrice, that is, one dinner, and two ſuppers: and in doing they ſhall eſcape the puniſhment of hell. Burgenſ. addition. 4.

Contra. 1. Thus their forefathers kept an holy day to the golden Calfe, in eating and drinking, and riſing up to play: God will not be ſo ſerved. 2. The way to Paradiſe is a ſtrait and narrow way: by many afflictions we muſt enter into the Kingdome of heaven, not eating, and drinking, and taking our pleaſure. 3. Auguſtine ſaith, Quanto melius fœmina eorum lanam facerent, quàm in neomeniis ſaltarent? How much better might their women ſpinne, than dance in their new moones? Tract. 4. in Ioan. 4. Chryſoſtome ſo thus proveth, that the Sabbath is not, otii, but ſpiritualis actionis materia, not an occaſion of idleneſſe, but of ſpirituall exerciſe: becauſe the Prieſts were by the law upon that day to offer double ſacrifice: but if it were a day of eaſe, Oportebat Sacerdotem omnium maximè otium agere, it was meet that the Prieſt moſt of all ſhould take his eaſe then. Concion. de Lazaro.

3. Cont. Of the Iewes ſuperſtition in the preciſe and ſtrict keeping of the Sabbath reſt.

AGaine, the Jewes were ſuperſtitiouſly addicted to the corporall reſt; which they would not break upon any occaſion: as our Chronicles doe make mention of a Jew, that being fallen into a jakes, refuſed to be taken out thence upon their Sabbath day: and the next day being the Lords day, the Governour would not ſuffer him to be pulled out upon that day, becauſe it was the Chriſtians Sabbath, and ſo the wilfull Jew there periſhed.

Of the like ſtrictneſſe were ſome among the Chriſtians in keeping of the externall reſt upon the Lords day, therein imitating the Jewes: as Gregorie in the fore-cited place writeth, how ſome did forbid any to waſh themſelves upon the Lords day: whom he thus confuteth: 1. Si pro luxu animi ac voluptatis quis lavari appetit, &c. If any man deſire to be waſhed of wantonneſſe and pleaſure, it is not ſo lawfull upon any day: ſi autem pro neceſſitate corporis, &c. But if it be for the neceſſitie of the bodie, we doe not forbid it upon the Lords day: for no man hateth his owne fleſh. 2. If it be a ſinne to waſh upon the Lords day, neither is it lawfull ſo much as to waſh the face: Si hoc in corporis parte conceditur, cur hoc exigente neceſſitate toti corpori negatur? If this be permitted in one part of the bodie: why, neceſſitie ſo requiring, ſhould it be denied to the whole bodie?

So then neither were the Jewes ſo ſtrictly bound from all corporall labour, as they ſuperſtitiouſly obſerve: as may appeare by Ioſhuahs and the whole hoſts compaſſing of Jericho ſeven dayes together, Ioſh. and by the Macchabees fighting upon the Sabbath, 1 Macchab. 2. 41. And Chriſtians have more liberty herein, than the Jewes had: for it is lawfull for them to prepare their food upon the Lords day, which it was not lawfull for the Jewes to doe upon their Sabbath: for, as Thom. Aquinas well reſolveth: Opus ſeruile pertinens ad conſervandum ſalutem proprii corporis, non violat Sabbatum: A corporall worke belonging to the conſervation of the health of ones bodie, doth not violate the Sabbath: and this is grounded upon that ſaying of our bleſſed Saviour: The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, Mark. 2. 27. God would not have the Sabbath, which was made for mans benefit, to be uſed to his hinderance. Lyranus yeeldeth this reaſon, betweene the ſtrictneſſe impoſed upon the Jewes, and the liberty of Chriſtians: quia illa vacatio figuralis erat: becauſe their reſting was figurative, and therefore was more ſtrictly to be kept: & à figura quantumcunq; modico ſubtracto mutatur tota ſignificatio: and take never ſo little from a figure, the whole ſignification is changed: as if you take l, from lapis, or, ſ. from ſtone, that which remaineth, ſignifieth nothing: but though ſomewhat be taken from the ſubſtance of a ſtone, it is a ſtone ſtill.

4. Conf. Againſt the Anabaptiſts, that would have no day kept holy unto the Lord.

IN the next place are the Anabaptiſts to be met withall, and who elſe doe condemne the obſervation of the Lords day among Chriſtians: becauſe the Apoſtle reproveth the Galathians, for obſerving of dayes and moneths, Galath. 4. and in other places.

Contra. 1. The obſerving of dayes is not ſimply prohibited by the Apoſtle, ſed cum opinione cultus neceſſitatis: but with an opinion of religion placed in the day and neceſſity: the Jewes kept their Sabbath as making the obſervation of the day a part of Gods worſhip: and they held it neceſſary to keepe that day unchangeable. It was alſo unto them a type and figure of the ſpirituall reſt. But the Chriſtians now keepe not the Lords day, in any of theſe reſpects, either as a day more holy in it ſelfe than others, or as of neceſſitie to be kept, but onely for order and decencie ſake: becauſe it is meet, that ſome certaine day ſhould be ſet apart for the worſhip of God. Vrſin.

2. As in the practice of Phyſicke, and in politike affaires, and in the trade of husbandrie, there is both a lawfull obſervation of dayes, and an unlawfull: for to obſerve ſeaſons of the yeate for the earth, and for miniſtrie

...nistring unto the bodie of man, as also to make choice of the most convenient times for civill businesse, ...not unlawfull: yet the superstitious respect of dayes, as making some fortunate, some unfortunate, and ...depend wholly upon the aspects of starres, is a vaine and idle thing. So likewise in the businesse of re... ...as dayes may bee superstitiously kept, so they may also for order sake, and to other good uses bee ...ointed. 3. Like as then, though Christians yeeld a comely reverence unto the publike places of ..., yet not in like sort, as the Jewes accounted of their Tabernacle: so according to the same rule, ...re is a preeminence given unto the Lords day, but not with the like difference of dayes, as the Jewes ...erred their Sabbath, Simler.

5. Conf. Against the Zuincfeldians, that hold the preaching of the Word superfluous, whereby the Lords day is sanctified.

The Zuincfeldians doe also faile in the manner of celebrating the Lords day, counting the ministery of ...the Gospell, and preaching of the word of God, whereby the Lords day is sanctified, a superfluous ...and leaving wholly unto their vaine speculations, and phantasticall visions and revelations: whereas it ...is evident out of the Scriptures, that both the old Sabbath of the Jewes was solemnized and kept in hea... ...Moses read, and preached, Acts 15. 21. and the Lords day in like sort was sanctified by the Apostles ...preaching, Acts 20. 7. ex Bastingio.

Now proceed we on to deale against the Romanists, who diversly erre as touching the Lords day.

6. Conf. That the Lords day is warranted by Scripture, and not by tradition onely.

...and they hold, that the keeping of the Lords day in stead of the Jewish Sabbath, is not warranted by ...Scripture, but onely by tradition from the Apostles. To this purpose the Rhemists, Matth. 15, sect. 3. ...and there are other beside in these dayes, that make the observation of the Lords day onely an Ecclesiasti... ...constitution.

Contra. 1. There are three most evident texts of Scripture usually alleaged, which doe make it evi... ...that this change of the Sabbath began in the time of the Apostles, and so by their Apostolike autho... ...being thereto guided by the Spirit, is warranted, and so declared and testified in Scripture. These ...are the places: Act. 20. 7. 1 Cor. 16. 2. Revelat. 1. 10. In the first we have the exercises of religion, preach... ...and ministring the Sacraments, which were peculiar to the Sabbath, transferred to the first day of the ...week. In the second, publike charitable collections for the poore, which was also used upon the Sabbath. ...In the third, the very name of the Lords day is set downe.

2. And further, that this day was consecrated by divine authoritie, the great works doe shew, where... ...with this day from the beginning hath beene honoured: as Augustine hath sorted them together: Vene... ...rabilis est hic dies in quo transgressi sunt filii Israel mare rubrum, &c. This day is to be reverenced, wherein ...the Israelites passed over the red sea, wherein Manna first rained upon the Israelites in the desert, our Lord ...was baptized in Jordan, water was turned into wine in Cana of Galile; wherein the Lord blessed the five ...loaves, wherewith he fed five thousand men; wherein he rose againe from the dead, entred into the house ...the doores being shut; wherein the holy Ghost descended upon the Apostles, &c. Serm. 154.

3. This reason also may perswade it, because the Lords day is now sanctified to holy uses, as the Sab... ...was to the Jewes: but it belongeth onely unto God to sanctifie by his word: as the Apostle saith, ...every creature is sanctified by the word of God and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 5. Therefore the Lords day must be war... ...ranted by the word, before it can be sanctified, and set apart to holy uses. 5. And seeing the Jewes Sabbath ...was warranted by the word, it must also be changed by the word: there must bee the same authority in the ...alteration of it, which was in the first institution. The Lords day then was not appointed by the ordinary ...authority of the Church: for then the Church by the same authority might constitute another day, if there ...were cause: which cannot be admitted: but as Vrsinus saith, Apostolica Ecclesia, pro libertate sibi a Christo ...data. The Apostolike Church, according to the liberty given them of Christ, did make choice of the ...first day for the seventh. The Church then by the extraordinary power of the Apostles, directed specially ...and moved by the Spirit of God, did alter the day: and Tostatus saith well; Tota Ecclesia Spiritu sancto ducta, ...hoc instituit: The whole Church being led by the holy Ghost, did institute this day, quæst. 11.

7. Conf. Of the preeminence of the Lords day beyond other festivals.

Another errour of the Romanists is, that they require sanctification, and necessary keeping of all holy dayes: as making a necessity of keeping all alike. Rhemist. annot. Galath. 4. sect. 5.

Contra. 1. The same difference that was betweene the legall Sabbath and other their festivals, re... ...steth still betweene the Lords day observed among Christians, and other holy dayes: but the Sabbath ...was more strictly observed, than the greatest festivals besides: for on their Sabbath it was not lawfull ...to make a fire, Exod. 35. 3. nor to dresse their meat, Exod. 16. 23. but on other festivals they were not ...forbidden to doe such works, as were to bee done about their meat, Exod. 12. 16. they were onely re... ...strained from doing servile works, Levit. 23. 7. but the works about their meat and drinke were not ser...vile. 2. The observation of the Lords day doth simply binde every Christian in conscience, though there ...be no positive Law of the Church for it; that whersoever a Christian liveth in any part of the world, ...he is duetie in remembrance of the resurrection of our blessed Saviour, to sanctifie the Lords day: ...but other festivals of Saints a man is not bound in conscience simply to keepe, but as hee is bound in ...all to yeeld obedience to the superiour authoritie in lawfull things: for onely Gods immediate ...commandements doe simply bind in conscience in respect of the thing commanded: as the Apostle saith,

There

T[illegible]*er, that is able to save, and destroy, Iam.*4.12. and no more but he alone: therefor[e] this re[illegible] day hath a preeminence before other festivals. 3. Hereunto I will adde Tostatus re[a]son: Sabb[illegible] quacunq; esset dies in hebdomada observanda, videbatur dependere à ratione naturali. The Sabbath, or [illegible]ther day is to be kept in the weeke, seemeth to depend upon naturall reason, as shewed before, quæst. [illegible] cætera observationes sunt magis ex voluntate legislatoris: Other observations depend rather of the will [illegible]e lawmaker: *Tostat. qu.*13. So our Lords day succeeding the Jewish Sabbath is grounded in part even upon the law of nature: but other festivities depend ab arbitrio Ecclesiæ, of the determination of the Church. So then to conclude this point, as Augustine saith: Quomodo Maria mater Domini inter omnes mulieres principatum tenet, sic inter cæteros dies, hæc omnium dierum mater est. As the Virgin Marie the mother of our Lord is the principall among women; so among other dayes, this day is as the mother of the rest, *Sermon. de tempor.*36.

8. Controv. To commit any sinne upon the Lords day, is a double transgression.

THe Romanists here have another erroneous assertion: that the internall act of religion pertaineth [illegible] to the keeping of the Sabbath, but the externall, and so consequently they denie, that any sinne committed upon the Sabbath is thereby the greater, *Bellar. de cult. sanctor. lib.*3. *cap.*10. *prop.*4.

Contra. 1. But the contrarie is evident out of Scripture, that it belongeth to the rest of the Sabbath to abstaine from the works of sinne: ut vacantes à pravis actionibus, &c. that being vacant, or ceasing from evill actions, they might suffer God to worke in them by his Spirit: therefore the Lord saith, speaking of his Sabbath, It is a signe betweene me and you, in your generations, that I the Lord doe sanctifie you, Exod. 31.13. And to the same purpose *Ezechiel chap.*20.12. I have given them also my Sabbath to be a signe betweene me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that doe sanctifie them. These places are urged to this purpose by Pelargus, Bastingius.

2. So the Fathers expound that precept, of doing no servile worke upon the Sabbath: Ne nos vitiosa corporis & libido succendant: That the pleasure and lust of the bodie should not inflame us upon this day: qui enim facit peccatum, est servus peccati: for he that committeth sinne, is the servant of sinne. So *Hieron. in Esaiam, cap.*59. Likewise Augustine thus writeth: Spiritualiter observat Sabbatum Christianus, abstinens se ab opere servili, &c. A Christian man doth spiritually observe the Sabbath, in abstaining from servile worke: what is this, from servile worke? from sinne, Tractat. 4. in Ioann. So also Thomas: Est triplex servitus; una, qua homo servit peccato, &c. There is a threefold service; one, when a man serveth sinne: alia qua homo servit homini, &c. another, when man serveth man: and this service is according to the bodie, not in the minde: tertia est servitus Dei, the third is the service of God. If we understand servile worke this last way, it is not forbidden upon the Sabbath day: sed alia opera servilia primo, vel secundo modo, &c. but other servile works the first or second way, are contrary to the keeping of the Sabbath. *Sic Thom. 2.2. quæst.*122. *art.*4. *addit.*3.

3. Hereunto I will adde Tostatus reason: Hence it followeth, that hee which committeth adulterie, killeth, or is drunken upon the Lords day, magis peccat, quàm si aliis diebus idem ageret: sinneth more than if he should doe the same thing upon other dayes, quia sic est transgressor duplicis præcepti: because he so transgresseth two Commandements: that precept; Thou shalt not commit adulterie, thou shalt not kill, or any other, and this of sanctifying the Sabbath, *Tostat. qu.*12. See more of this question elsewhere *Synops. Centur.*2. *err.*70.

4. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Against hypocrisie and vaine glorie.

Vers.8. REmember the Sabbath day to sanctifie it, &c. Rupertus applieth this text against the doing any thing for vaine glorie, or to bee seene of men: but wee should referre all to the pleasure of God: In omnibus operibus tuis Deiretributionem attende, &c. In all thy works wait for the Lords recompence, that he will prepare eternall rest for thy reward: and this it is to sanctifie the Sabbath. So Augustine: Spiritualiter observa Sabbatum in spe futuræ quietis: Observe the Sabbath spiritually in hope of the everlasting reward: Libr. de 10. Chord. All hypocrites therefore that keepe the Sabbath rest, rather for feare of humane lawes than of conscience, which also come before the Lord with a dissembling heart, are transgressors of this Commandement: for he that will truly consecrate the Sabbath unto the Lord, and *call it a delight, Isa.*58.13. he must with all his soule delight therein.

2. Observ. Against those, which spend the Lords day in carnall delight.

TO sanctifie it. The rest then of the Sabbath is commanded, not as though it were in it selfe a thing acceptable unto God, but that wee might the better attend upon Gods service. They therefore which give themselves upon the Lords day to ease and idlenesse, pampering and feeding themselves, following their owne will and pleasure, doe not sanctifie the Sabbath unto the Lord: for, hee that will consecrate the Sabbath as glorious unto the Lord, must not doe his owne wayes, nor seeke his owne will, as the Prophet sheweth, *Isai.*58.13. Against such, which carnally spent the Sabbath in pleasure and delight, the same Prophet speaketh, *Wo unto them, &c. The Harpe and Viol, Timbrell and Pipe are in their feasts, Isai.*5.12. Of such Chrysostome saith well, Accepisti Sabbatum, ut animam tuam liberares à vitiis, & tu eam magis illa commixtis: Thou hast received the Sabbath, to free thy soule from vice, and by this meanes thou commixest it the more.

Chrysost. concion. de Lazaro.

3. Obs[illegible]

3. Obſerv. No worke muſt be put off until the Lords day.

Thou ſhalt not doe any worke. Here then ſuch coverous and worldly minded men are taxed, which cannot afford one day of ſeven for the Lord, but toile themſelves therein with bodily labour: as if they had a job of worke of their weeks taske to doe, they will diſpatch it upon the Lords day: if they have any thing to take, they will put it off till then, for feare of hindring their other worke: therefore the Lord charging with mens covetous humours, forbiddeth all kinde of worke to be done therein. Gregorie giveth three reaſons, why upon the Lords day we ſhould ceaſe from all terrene labour: becauſe, Omni modo orationi inſtendum. We ſhould altogether attend upon prayer, and ſpirituall exerciſes: ſuch works then muſt be omitted, becauſe they are an hinderance unto the ſervice of God. And againe, Si quid negligentiæ per ſex dierum, &c. if any thing have beene negligently done in the ſix dayes, that upon the day of the reſurrection of our Lord, precibus expietur, it may be expiate and purged by prayer. Greger in Regiſtro, lib. 11. ep. 2. We ſhould not then commit more ſinnes of negligence, when we ſhould pray for forgiveneſſe of former ſinnes, and negligence. Cajetane giveth a good note upon this word (Remember) Ad hoc ſervit recordatio, ut non reſervemus aliquid operandum in diem ſeptimum, &c. therefore ſerveth this remembrance, that no worke be reſerved till the ſeventh day.

4. Obſerv. It is not enough for the maſter of the familie to keepe the Lords day, unleſſe his whole familie alſo doe ſanctifie it.

Thou, nor thy ſonne, nor thy daughter, &c. This is added to reprove their nice curioſitie, who, though themſelves will ſeeme to make conſcience of the Lords day, are content yet that their children and ſervants doe breake it, and put them to labour, or ſuffer them to miſpend the day in vaine pleaſure, thinking it ſufficient if the maſter of the houſe keepe the reſt of the Lords day. But every good Chriſtian muſt ſay with Joſhua: I and my houſe will ſerve the Lord, chap. 24. 15. He thought it not enough for himſelfe to be addicted to Gods ſervice, unleſſe his whole familie alſo ſerved the Lord. So then, none are exempted from keeping the Sabbath: Nullus ſexus, nulla ætas, nulla conditio, &c. no ſex, no age, no condition is excluded from the obſerving the Sabbath. Gloſſ. interlin. Neither young nor old, male or female, maſter nor ſervant.

Vpon the fifth Commandement.

1. Divers Queſtions and difficulties diſcuſſed and explained.

QUEST. I. Whether this precept belong to the firſt Table.

Honour thy father, &c., Joſephus with ſome other Hebrewes, doe make this fifth Commandement the laſt of the firſt Table: both to make the number even in both Tables, and becauſe mention is there of Jehovah, as in none of the other Commandements of the ſecond Table: and becauſe it was fitting as the firſt table began with our dutie toward God our heavenly Father, ſo it ſhould end with our dutie toward our earthly parents.

Contra. Theſe are no ſufficient reaſons for this diviſion of the Commandements. 1. For though the firſt four Commandements in number anſwer not the other, yet they are in the writing upon the Tables, they all conteine a greater ſpace than the other ſix: and better it is to divide the Commandements by the words, referring onely thoſe to the firſt Table, which containe the worſhip of God, than by the number. 2. The name Jehovah is expreſſed in other judiciall and ceremoniall lawes, which follow, and belong not either to the firſt or ſecond Table. 3. The third reaſon better ſheweth, why the fifth Commandement ſhould begin the ſecond Table, then end the firſt. 4. And whereas ſome object that Rom. 13. 9. where the Apoſtle rehearſeth the five Commandements following, omitting this, as though it belonged not to the ſecond Table: the reaſon of that omiſſion is, becauſe the Apoſtle directly in that place treated before of the dutie toward the higher Powers, and Superiours, who are comprehended under the name of parents. But our Saviour putteth all out of doubt, Matth. 19. 19. where he placeth this Commandement laſt, in rehearſing the precepts of the ſecond Table, and joyneth it with that generall one: Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. Calvin.

QUEST. II. Why the precepts of the ſecond Table, are ſaid to be like unto the firſt.

Our our Saviour reduceth all the precepts of the ſecond Table to one generall Commandement, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelfe, and ſaith, it is like unto the firſt; in theſe reſpects: 1. Becauſe the ſecond Table of the morall law, as well as the firſt, hath a preeminence and excellencie above ceremonials, and therefore in regard of this dignitie and prioritie, it is like unto the firſt. 2. Becauſe the ſame kinde of puniſhment, even everlaſting death is threatned againſt every tranſgreſſion, as well of the ſecond, as of the firſt Table. 3. In regard of the coherence and dependance, which the one hath of the other, as the cauſe and the effect; for a man cannot love his brother, unleſſe he firſt have the feare of God, whereof he reverenceth in his brother. Vrſin.

QUEST.

QUEST. III. Why the precept of honouring parents is set first in the second Table.

THis fifth Commandement is set before the other for these reasons: 1. Lyranus, Primo ponitur præ... tum circa operationem boni: First this precept is put, which concerneth the operation of that which good, as in giving honour to parents: the other precepts are touching the shunning and avoiding of e... 2. Thomas giveth this reason, because first those duties, are prescribed, Quibus homo ex aliqua speciali... tione obligatur, &c. whereby a man is specially bound to some particular persons, as to parents: then th... follow, Quæ indifferenter omnibus debitum reddunt: which indifferently yeeld the due unto all m... 3. Tostatus thus divideth the precepts of the second Table, according to the threefold facultie of the mi... which are rationalis, irascibilis, concupiscibilis: the rationall part, the irascible or irefull power, and coveting and desiring facultie: the rationall is the most worthie, in giving honour unto Superiours, for... the rationall part wee desire such things, which are of an higher degree, than those things, which b... beasts do covet: the irefull part is seene in revenge, either against a mans person directly, which is nice w... all in the next precept, Thou shalt not kill: or against some principall thing belonging to his person, a... good name, which is provided for in the ninth precept. The coveting facultie, is seene either in the a... selfe, which is twofold, either in carnall desire toward a mans wife, forbidden in the 7. precept, or in a... vetous eye toward his substance, in the 8. or in the desire onely of these things, as in the 10. Tostat. q... 4. Procopius yeeldeth this reason, why this precept is set first: Quia parentes secunda post Deum causa s... quòd simus: Because parents are the next cause after God of our being. And so as Thomas saith, Est quæ... affinitas hujus præcepti ad præcepta primæ Tabulæ: There is a certaine affinity betweene this precept, ... the precepts of the first Table: Likewise Tostatus, because next unto God we must reverence our paren... as most bound unto them, as the Heathen Philosopher could say, Quòd patribus & diis non possumus re... huere æqualia. That to God and our parents, wee can never render equally, that is, as wee have receiv... Aristot. 8. Ethicor. 5. But the best reason is, because this precept is, Nervus & fundamentum obedi... tiæ, &c. is the very foundation and band of obedience to the other Commandements, which would soo... be violated, if men did not stand in awe of the Magistrate, the father of the Common-wealth. And bec... this precept is set first, because of the promise annexed; that wee should be the more easily allured u... obedience. Vrsin.

QUEST. IV. Why speciall mention is made of the mother.

THy father and mother, &c. Speciall mention is made of the mother, for these causes: 1. Because ... these three things are children bound unto their mothers: because they are the meanes of their ge... ration: as the father is the active and formall cause, so the mother is the materiall and passive cause of th... conception: and beside the conception, it is peculiar to the mother to beare the childe 9. moneths in ... wombe with much sorrow, and griefe: and at the last with great paine and danger to bring forth. The ... cond thing is the education of the childe, which being yet young and tender, is brought up with the m... ther, and is apt then to receive any impressions, either to good or evill: and therefore it is no small he... to make a childe good, to bee brought up under a vertuous mother. The third thing is nutrition: for ... mother doth give the infant her pappes: and though the man and wife should be separated, it is the w... dutie to nurse the childe: and that according to the Canons, till it be three yeare old: Extra de cons... infidel. cap. ex literis. Tostat. quæst. 17. 2. Because women are the weaker vessels, and the chiefe gov... ment of the house is committed to the father, the Lord foreseeing, that mothers might easily grow i... contempt, hath provided by this law, to meet with disobedient children. Basting.

QUEST. V. Whether the childe is more bound to the father or mother.

BUt if here it shall be demanded, to whichof the parents the childe is most bound; the answer hee... is this: that whereas the childe oweth three things unto the parents, sustentation and maintenance, ... nour and reverence, dutie and obedience: the first of these is equally to be performed unto them bot... relieve the parents: because they both are as one, and feed at one table, and therefore in this behalf... difference can be made. Likewise for the second, as they are our parents, they are equally to be revere... and honoured: but where there may bee more eminent parts of wisdome, and vertue, and such like... usually are in the father, there more honour is to bee yeelded unto him; but otherwise to the mothe... shee be more vertuous. Concerning obedience, because the man is the head of the woman, and the ... of the familie, obedience ordinarily is rather to be given to the commandement of the father, than of... mother. Tostat.

QUEST. VI. Why the Lord commandeth obedience to parents, being a thing acknowledged of all.

BUt it seemeth superfluous, that God should by law command obedience unto parents, seeing th... is no nation so barbarous, which doth not yeeld reverence unto them. Answ. 1. So also there ar... nature printed in the minde of man, the seeds of the other precepts: but this law of nature being by ... corruption obscured and defaced, God thought it needfull to revive this naturall instinct by the preci... of his law: and the rather because men might be more allured unto this dutie, by the promise propoun... Simler. 2. And the Lord intending herein to prescribe obedience to all superiours, thought good to ... instance in parents, because these precepts, Sunt quasi quædam conclusiones immediatè sequentes ex prin... juris naturalis, &c. are as certaine immediate conclusions, following out of the principles of the nat...

law, which are easily received and acknowledged of all: but those things which are understood, are, Tanquam conclusiones quædam remotæ, &c. as certaine conclusions fetched further off. Lyran.

Quest. VII. Who are comprehended under the name of fathers and mothers.

Vnder father and mother are understood: 1. Parents of all sorts, whether our naturall fathers or mothers, or those so called by law, as the father, and mother in law: and such as doe adopt children: Tutors likewise and Governours. 2. Publike officers, as Magistrates, which are the fathers of the Commonwealth, Prophets and Ministers, as Elisha calleth Elias father. 2. King. 2. 4 Masters, as Naamans servants called him father, 2. King. 2. and generally the elder sort, and aged persons, whom usually we call fathers. Vrsin. The reasons why all these are comprehended under the name of fathers, are these: 1. Because Lex Dei perfectissima, in qua nihil desiderari possit: the law of God is most perfect, wherein nothing is wanting. If these severall callings should not be here understood, the morall law should be defective, omitting principall duties. Basting. 2. Because all these doe performe such duties, as belong to parents: the Pastor to instruct his child; therefore Pastors and Teachers are our fathers. propter doctrinam, because of the doctrine: the father is to provide for his child; therefore Patrons and Benefactors are our fathers; quia est patris benefacere filio, it is proper to the father, to doe well unto his childe: Princes and Magistrates are saluted by the name of fathers, Quia debent intendere bonum populi, because they must intend the good of the people, as it belongeth to fathers to procure the good of their children.

Quest. VIII. Why the Lord here useth the name of father and mother to signifie the rest.

But although the signification of fathers and mothers here be generall, it pleased the Lord under these termes to comprehend the rest, for these reasons: 1. Because the government of fathers is the first, and the most ancient of all other. 2. For that all other governments are to take their rule and direction from this. 3. The name of father is most amiable, and alloureth unto obedience Vrsinus. 4. Et quia sacrum quiddam nomen, &c. And because the name of a father is sacred, redundat patrum contemptus in Dei ipsius contumeliam, the contempt of the father redounderh even unto the contumely and reproch of God. Calv. Therefore for more reverence to be yeelded unto superiours, the Lord hath comprehended them under the name of fathers.

Quest. IX. What is meant by this word, Honour.

Honour thy father. 1. This word honour, in the originall is cabad, and it signifieth properly onerare, to load or lay on burthens: which sheweth that those, whom we honour, are of great weight and authority with us. Simler. Or that we should honour our parents not in word onely but in deed, loading them with gifts, and recompencing their kindnesse, as when Balaak had sent to Balaam, that hee would promote him to great honour, Num. 22. 17. Balaam understood what honour hee meant, and therefore answered: If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, &c. Oleaster. 2. As our parents doe performe three things for us, so we must render three things to them againe: The parents doe give unto the children, first, stabilimentum quoad esse, nutrimentum quoad vitæ necessaria, documentum, &c. generation, nutrition, erudition: and children must render these three things: Quia esse habemus ab eis, debemus honori: Because we have our being from them, we must reverence them. Which was Chams fault, that hided his fathers nakednesse. Quia dant nobis nutrimentum in pueritia, &c. Because they gave us nutriment in our childhood, we must nourish them againe in their old age: as Ioseph fed his father Iacob. Quia docuerunt nos, debemus eis obedire: Because they instructed us, wee must obey them. Thomas. And of this duty of obedience, Christ is a most perfect example unto us, that was obedient to his parents. Of these foresaid duties of reverence, recompence, obedience, wee must yeeld also unto other our parents, namely all Superiours, both Civill and Ecclesiasticall, and the rest: but unto old men, who also are a kinde of fathers, only one of them is due, namely reverence, as we are commanded, Levit. 19. to rise up before the hoare head: as for sustentation and obedience, they are no more due unto them, than unto any other: nor the first neither, unlesse they be vertuous old men: for old age is a crowne of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousnesse, Prov. 16. and not otherwise. Tostat. qu. 18.

Quest. X. Certaine doubts removed, how, and in what cases parents are to be obeyed.

But here certaine doubts will be propounded: 1. If the father be wicked and ungodly, whether in this case the sonne be tied. 2. If the sonne be a Magistrate, whether hee be to yeeld obedience to his father. 3. What if the sonne be base borne, or one forsaken and left of his father.

Solu. 1. Though the father be wicked: yet, quatenus pater, jus suum retinet in filios, &c. as hee is a father, hee holdeth his right toward his sonnes: so hee command nothing contrary to the will of God. Though the sonne be a Governour, and the father is in that respect to obey, yet things may so be temperated, that neither the sonne be deprived of the honour due unto his place, and yet the sonne, modeste reverentur patrem, may modestly reverence and respect his father. Calvin. 3. Such children are by the Civill law exempted from all duty and obedience to such parents: and it were but just, if such fathers, as doe violate the law of matrimony, received no benefit by the fruit thereof: tamen laudanda videtur pietas, si præstant hæc: yet their piety is more commendable, if they performe these duties of their owne accord. Simler.

Quest. XI. In what sense Christ biddeth us hate our parents.

AGainst this Commandement, which commandeth fathers and mothers to be honoured, will be oppo sed that saying of our blessed Saviour in the Gospell, Matth.23.9. Call no man your father upon earth for there is but one, your father which is in heaven: and Luke 14.26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, &c. he cannot be my disciple. These places may seeme to bee contrary to this precept Honour thy father, &c.

Reconcil. Answ. 1. The former of these places must not be so understood simply, as though it were not lawfu to give the name and appellation of father to any: for then our Saviour should bee contrary to himself who reproveth the Scribes and Pharisies, because they perverted the children, and suffered them not t doe any thing for their fathers and mothers, Mark.7.11. And Saint Paul also should have beene contra ry to his master, who maketh himselfe a spirituall father to the Corinthians, 1.*Cor.*4.15. Therefore th meaning is, that they should not call any their father in earth, as we call God our father, that is, to put o trust in him, and to make him the author and preserver of our life. Simler. 2. The other place is also to b understood comparatively that we must hate them, that is, not regard them in respect of Christ, as it is e pounded, *Matth.*10.37. He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me. So Chrysost Sicut post Deum diligere parentes, pietas est, sic plusquam Deum diligere impietas est: As to love our p rents next after God is piety, so to love them more than God is impiety: Homil. 26. in Matth. And t same Father well noteth upon that place in Luke, that we are not bid onely to hate our fathers and mo thers, &c. but even our owne life and soule also: Nihil est homini anima sua conjunctius, & tamen etiam hanc oderis, &c. Nothing is neerer to a man, than his owne soule; yet if thou doest not hate th also for Christ, thou shalt not be rewarded, as one that loveth him. Homil.36.in Mat.

Quest. XII. How farre children are bound to obey their parents.

NOw then it is evident how farre our duty is extended to our parents: 1. Though they bee froward and perverse and endued neither with vertue, nor wisdome, or any other good qualities, yet they must be reverenced, and relieved as our parents: and the reason thereof is that conjunction, whereby they are joyned unto us by nature: Hanc conjunctionem alia attributa non tollant: This conjunction cannot b taken away by any other attributes: but seeing by Gods providence they are our earthly parents, and th instruments of our outward life, wee must honour them, as herein obeying the will and pleasure of God and submitting our selves to his providence. Simler.

2. But wee must so farre obey them as that wee disobey not God our heavenly father: and so the Apostle doth limite our duty and obedience to our parents: Children obey your parents in the Lord, Ephes 6.1. So Chrysostome: Si habes patrem infidelem obsequere ei, &c. If thou hast an unbeleeving father, obey him: but if he would draw thee into the same pit of infidelity, wherein hee is: plus dilige Deum, quam patrem, quia pater non est anima: then love God more than thy father, for he is not the father of thy soule but of the flesh: therefore render unto every one that which belongeth unto him: Carnalibus parentibus præbete carnis obsequium, &c. Unto carnall fathers yeeld carnall and outward obedience, but unto the father of spirits reserve animæ sanctitatem, the holinesse and freedome of the soule. Homil. 26. in Matt. Our duty then unto God being alwayes excepted, in all other things wee must obey our earthly parents though they be evill and wicked: for officium à personis discernendum, &c. the office and calling must be discerned from the persons: wee may hate their vices, and yet because of Gods ordinance honour the calling. Ursinus.

Quest. XIII. At what age it is most convenient for men to marry to get children.

Tostatus here hath a politicke and wise consideration, that because children are to honour their parents, not only in giving them outward reverence, but in helping and relieving them in their old age when as the aged parents cannot provide for themselves; that parents should neither marry too soon nor yet stay too long, but beget children in the middle and strength of their age: as Aristotle would have men to take them wives about 37. yeeres of age: *lib.7.politic.c.*15. For if they should marry at 20. or 15. yeeres, they themselves being yet but young, and wanting experience, are scarce able to provide for themselves, much lesse for their children: and for the same reason, if they should deferre their marriage till their old age, as to 65. yeeres or thereabout, neither they growing impotent by their age, can discharge the part of fathers in the education of their children: and their children cannot bee of any growth in time, to succour and relieve their aged parents. But if they take the middle age of their strength, both these inconveniences will be prevented: for both they shall be sufficient for strength of body and mind to take care for their children, and they also will bee attained to perfect growth and strength, to help their parents in their age. *Tostat.qu.*17.

Quest. XIV. Whether the reciprocall duty also of parents toward their children be not here commanded.

AS children are here commanded to honour their parents, so the reciprocall duty of parents is required toward their children: for although expresse mention be made onely of honour to be given to parents, and superiours, yet the other also is included: for seeing God tribuit eis nomen, etiam rem, doth give them the name of parents, he doth also give them the thing: and if he would have them reverenced with due honour, his meaning is also, they should doe things worthy of honour. Vrsin.

non veri sunt parentes, qui labores negligunt: For they are not true parents indeed, which doe neglect their children, Basting. And seeing the Scripture doth in many places urge and prescribe the duty and care of parents in bringing up their children, this morall duty should altogether be omitted, and so the will of God should not be perfect, if it were not comprehended in this precept, Calv.

QUEST. XV. Wherein the duty of parents consisteth toward their children.

The care then of fathers toward their children consisteth in these three things, in their education, in providing all things necessary for their maintenance and life, in their instruction and institution, and due and moderate correction and castigation: S. Paul toucheth all these three together, thus writing, Ephes. 6.4. Yee fathers provoke not your children to wrath; then he saith; but bring them up; and for their instruction, and information of the Lord. For provision and sustentation the Apostle saith: If any provide not for his owne, and namely for them of his household, he denieth the faith, and is worse than an Infidel, 1. Tim. 5.8. that is, herein he commeth short of the example of many Infidels, who were kinde and naturall to their children. For instruction, and institution, Moses saith, thou shalt rehearse them continually to thy children, Deut. 6.7. And the Wise-man saith: Teach a childe in the trade of his way, and when hee is old he will not depart from it, Prov. 22.9. Concerning due correction and chastisement, the Wise-man also saith, withhold not correction from the childe, if thou smite him with the rod, he shall not dye: thou shalt smite him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soule from hell, Prov. 23.13,14. And this was the overthrow of Eli and his house, because hee did not reprove his children with a fatherly severity, according to the quality and measure of their sinne, Basting.

QUEST. XVI. Whether all the duties of mercy and charity are commanded in this precept.

Tostatus and Tostatus consenting with him, as he seldome useth to doe, will have by the name of father here understood all men that are in need and necessity, whom we are bound to succour: as Augustine saith: Pasce fame morientem, quod si non poteris occidisti: Feed him that is ready to be famished, for thou dost not feed him, thou hast killed him. And Tostatus, by honour here understandeth all the workes of mercy and charity, and generally all good workes, which a man is bound to doe: nam mala opera, quæ non commanda, &c. for the evill workes, which we are bound to shun, belong unto the other Commandements following, Tostat. qu. 19.

Contra. 1. Paulus Burgensis doth herein finde fault with Lyranus: for it is evident by that sentence borrowed from Augustine, that he which suffereth his brother to perish, when it is in his power to helpe him, in effect killeth him, and so is a transgressor against the sixth Commandement, Thou shalt not kill. And as for the workes of mercy they are commanded in those severall precepts, where the contrary is forbidden: as the same Law which forbiddeth to take away a mans life, commandeth us, if it be in our power, to preserve it: and where we are inhibited to take away our neighbours goods, wee are likewise bound to relieve him with ours, where there is cause: and in the same Commandement, where it is made unlawfull to take away our neighbours good name, it is enjoyned that wee should by all meanes seeke to preserve it.

QUEST. XVII. Of the true reading and meaning of these words, that they may prolong it.

That thy dayes may be prolonged. But in the originall it is put in the active, that they may prolong: as 1. Montanus. 1. Some referre it unto the parents, that they by their prayers and blessings may procure the life of their children to be prolonged, Oleaster. As in the same sense they are said to receive into everlasting tabernacles, Luk. 16.4. and men are said to save, 1. Timoth. 4.16. and Iam. 5.20. 2. Ab. Ezra understandeth it of the precepts and commandements, which shall procure long life to those which obey them. 3. But the verbe is rather here taken impersonally, and in the signification of a verbe neuter, That thy dayes may prolong, that is, may bee lengthened: so the Chalde. And it is a usuall phrase with the Hebrewes, to put the active in a passive signification: as Iob 4. 19. They shall be crushed before the moth, that is, they shall bee destroyed: and Iob 7. 3. They have appointed painefull nights unto mee; that is, were appointed unto me, Iun. And this seemeth rather to bee the sense, because Saint Paul so taketh it, Ephes. 6.3. That it may be well with thee, and that thou mayst live long in the land.

QUEST. XVIII. In what sense the Apostle calleth this the first Commandement with promise.

Ult. whereas Saint Paul saith, that this is the first Commandement with promise, Ephes. 6.2. hereupon this doubt ariseth, in what sense the Apostle so calleth it, seeing there is annexed unto the second Commandement a large promise of shewing mercy unto thousands to them that love God. Hereunto divers solutions are made: 1. Hierom bringeth in two expositions, yet resolving of neither: As first, how some take the whole Decalogue, because it was first given unto the Israelites, after their comming out of Egypt, for one Commandement, and so would have this promise not peculiar unto this precept, but unto all the rest. But this is against the Apostles meaning; for he doth annex this promise as peculiar unto the duty of honouring our parents, and calleth this the first Commandement with promise. 2 Others make that in the second Commandement, Non tam promissionem prolatum, quam sententiam in malos de finitam: That it is not so much a pronouncing of a promise, as an ending of the sentence in the praiſes of God: but herein the fifth Commandement, the promiſe is divided from the precept, and the ſentence is broken off, and not continued as there. But Hieroms reaſon overthroweth this anſwer: Obſerve quòd verba ſunt ſponſiones, &c. Obſerve, that theſe are words of covenant, ſhewing mercy unto thoſe and they are added as a reaſon joyned to the Commandements. Hieron. in 6. ad Epheſ. 3. Ambroſe ſtandeth the Apoſtle thus: Hac cauſa dixit, quod eſt mandatum primum in promiſſione, ut diſcerneret mandata, quæ ad Deum, & mandata, quæ ad homines pertinent: Therefore he ſaid, Which is the firſt Commandement with promiſe, that he ſhould diſcerne betweene the Commandements which appertaine to God, and thoſe which belong unto men: Ambroſ. in 6. ad Epheſ. His meaning is, that it is the firſt precept of the ſecond Table with promiſe. 4. But I rather reſolve with Simlerus, and Urſinus, that this is the precept, that hath any ſpeciall and particular promiſe: the other promiſe added to the ſecond Commandment is generall to all thoſe that love God, and ſo not reſtrained only to that precept, but is extended generally to the obedience of the whole law.

Quest. XIX. Why the promiſe of long life is made to obedient children.

THat thy dayes may be long, &c. 1. Cajetane giveth this reaſon, why this promiſe of long life is made to obedient children: Tanquam gratis accepto à parentibus beneficio vitæ: As being thankfull for the benefit of life received of their parents: for it is fit, that they which are thankfull to their benefactors ſhould enjoy the benefit long. Calvine alſo to the ſame purpoſe: God doth ſhew his favour in preſerving of this life; Ubi ergo eos gratiſſimos, quibus eam acceptam ferre convenit: When we are thankfull to thoſe, of whom we have received it. So alſo Thomas: Qui non honorat parentes, tanquam ingratus meretur vitæ privari: He that honoureth not his parents, deſerveth as an ungratefull man to bee deprived of life which he received of his parents. 2. Thomas Aquin. alſo yeeldeth another reaſon: In thoſe precepts it was neceſſary to adde a promiſe, ex quibus videbatur nulla utilitas ſequi, vel aliqua utilitas impediri: where no profit was either not expected, or ſeemed to be hindred: therefore in the ſecond Commandement, which forbiddeth idolatry, a generall promiſe is propounded, becauſe by the worſhip of Idols, Idolaters looked for great benefits, which ſeemed by this meanes to be cut off: and becauſe parents being aged are wearing away, ab eis non expectatur utilitas, no profit is expected from them, and therefore a promiſe is put to the precept of honouring parents. Sic Thom. 1. 2. qu. 100. art. 7. ad. 3. But this reaſon ſeemeth ſomewhat curious. 3. Oleaſter rendreth this reaſon: Becauſe parents doe prolong the childrens dayes, precibus by their bleſſings and prayers. 4. Thomas addeth further, this reaſon is put to, ne crederatur non deberi præmium, leſt a reward might be thought not to be due for the honouring of parents, becauſe it is naturall.

Thom. in opuſcul.

Quest. XX. What other bleſſings are promiſed under long life.

BY long life here, not only the lengthening of dayes is underſtood, but other benefits alſo. 1. Toſtatus giveth this reaſon, becauſe without other temporall bleſſings, vita laborioſa & miſerabilis mans life ſeemeth to be but full of labour and miſery, and ſo no bleſſing: quæſt. 20. 2. Polanus diſtinguiſheth theſe bleſſings: Ut triplex honor, ita triplex præmium: As a threefold honour is to be yeelded to parents, ſo a threefold reward is promiſed, pro honore obedientiæ vita gloriosa, for the honour of obedience a glorious life: pro honore reverentiæ vita jucunda, for the honour of reverence a pleaſant life: pro honore fidei vita opulenta, for the honour of faithfulneſſe in recompencing our parents, a plentifull life. 3. Thomas Aquin underſtandeth here three kinde of lives: Vitam naturalem, vitam gratiæ, vitam gloriæ: The naturall life, the life of grace, the life of glory. He that honoureth his parents, ſhall have both the grace and favour of God in this life, and glory in the next: as it is in Eccleſiaſt. 3. 9. Honour thy father and thy mother in deed, and in word, that thou maiſt have Gods bleſſing. Another benefit is, habere ſibi filios graves, to have good and thankfull children. Hee that honoureth his father, ſhall have joy of his owne children, Eccleſiaſt. 3. 6. A fourth benefit is, habere famam laudabilem, to have a good and commendable fame by honouring of parents: Eccleſiaſtic. 3. 12. A mans glory commeth by his fathers honour. The fift is, habere divitias, to have riches: Eccleſiaſt. 3. 5. He that honoureth his mother, is as one that gathereth treaſure. Thom. in opuſc. 4. Eccleſiaſticus goeth further, and ſheweth how this duty of honouring parents is rewarded with ſpirituall bleſſings, as namely theſe two: firſt, forgiveneſſe of ſinne: He that honoureth his father, his ſinnes ſhall be forgiven him, chap. 3. 4. And the hearing of his prayers, verſ. 6. Who ſo honoureth his father, &c. whoſo maketh his prayer, he ſhall be heard. And all this may well bee comprehended under this bleſſing: as the Apoſtle expoundeth it, Epheſ. 6. 3. That it may be well with thee, and that thou maiſt live long in the earth, &c. Whatſoever then belongeth to a mans welfare, and well being in this life, is here promiſed.

Quest. XXI. This promiſe of long life, did not only concerne the Iewes.

THis promiſe of long life, and of other bleſſings thereby underſtood, ſeemeth firſt to concerne the Jewes, becauſe mention is made ſpecially of that land, which the Lord promiſed them, namely the land of Canaan: and becauſe they were an obſtinate people, diſobedient, and churliſh to their parents, as it may appeare by that evill uſe, which continued untill our Saviour Chriſts time, which hee reproved Mark. 7. 12. therefore the Lord intended ſpecially to allure them to this duty, by this promiſe of long life. Yet this bleſſing is extended generally unto all that ſhall performe this duty to their parents: which is ſhewed by theſe reaſons: 1. Quia tota terra à Deo benedicta eſt: All the earth is bleſſed of God: as it is in the Pſalme, The earth is the Lords, and all that therein is, Pſal. 24. and therefore whereſoever the Lord giveth long life, it is his bleſſing. Simler. 2. Quia iſta mandata erant moralia, & obligabant omnes homines, &c. Becauſe theſe Commandements are morall, and ſo binde all men, therefore the reward for the obece to theſe morall precepts belongeth unto all, Toſtat. qu. 20. 3. God giveth theſe promiſes, ut ſint in ſuorum terra viventium, that they may be for a type of the land of the living to come, Lippoman. ſhen though the land of the terreſtriall Canaan were peculiar to the Jewes, yet the celeſtiall Canaan ngeth to all the faithfull: then conſequently the promiſe of long life here, a type of everlaſting life e, appertaineth likewiſe to them all. 4. Saint Paul applieth this promiſe generally to all, Epheſ. 6. 2. ding.

Quest. XXII. Whether long life ſimply be a bleſſing, and to be deſired.

t it will bee objected, that this promiſe of long life here is no ſuch bleſſing, ſeeing this life is full of miſery, and of many incumbrances: and therefore Saint Paul deſired to be diſſolved and to be with . 1. Hereunto ſome make this anſwer, that this promiſe of long life, in reſpect of them that lived un- the Law, was a bleſſing, becauſe they imagined, that before the comming of Chriſt, they went not im- ly to heaven, but to Limbus Patrum, which they imagined to be in the brim of hell. Contra. 1. But ugh it were admitted, that the Saints under the Law went not immediatly to heaven, which is not- ding contrary to the Scriptures, Luk. 16. for Abrahams boſome, whither the faithfull went be- Chriſt, was no part or member of hell, even in Auguſtines judgement, becauſe it was quietis habitatio ſanctorum ſpirituum, an habitation of reſt, and place of happineſſe, Epiſt. 99. yet their ſtate in that place, they imagine to be free and exempt from the labours and ſorrowes of this life, ſhould have beene than their condition in this life. 2. But what ſay they then to this promiſe renewed in the new ament by S. Paul? where it is evident that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of a terrene and temporall bleſſing ich is performed in this life? 3. Saint Paul in wiſhing to be diſſolved, ſheweth that everlaſting life is ly and moſt of all to be deſired: yet ſo, as this life alſo, which is a degree unto that, may bee deſired the good pleaſure of God: for otherwiſe the Apoſtle in the ſame place, would not have beene in a not certaine what to deſire, whether to be diſſolved, or to remaine ſtill in life for the good of Church: Simler. 2. Therefore thus rather this objection is to be anſwered: 1. That notwithſtan- the many troubles and miſeries of this life, it is to be eſteemed in it ſelfe as a gift and bleſſing from : quia eum vita miſera eſt, noſtro vitio accidit: and in that our life is miſerable, it is by our fault. ſit per accidens, &c. ſo that is by an accident, that this life is full of miſery, not of it ſelfe, Urſin. The miſeries of this life cannot extinguiſh this chiefe benefit, quod creati ſunt homines & foventur in immortalitatis, that men were created, and are nouriſhed to the hope of immortality, Calvin. 3. God h promiſed unto his children to mitigate and allay the calamities of this life: and further, Celebratio i in hac vita tantum bonum eſt, &c. The ſetting forth of Gods praiſe in this life is ſuch a benefit, as that may counteruaile all the miſeries of this life, Urſin.

Quest. XXIII. Why wicked and diſobedient children are ſuffered to live long.

will be againe objected, that many times the wicked and diſobedient live long, and therefore this pro- ſe of long life is not peculiar unto the faithfull and obedient children.

ſo. 1. Exempla panca non everiunt regulam, &c. a few examples doe not overthrow a generall rule: e moſt part it falleth out ſo, that the wicked and diſobedient to their parents are puniſhed, as Prov. 20. He that curſeth his father or mother, his light ſhall be put out in obſcure darkneſſe; and Prov. 30. 17. The eye that mocketh his father, &c. the Ravens of the vally ſhall picke it out. Urſin. 2. If God doe give life unto the wicked, it is either of mercy to bring them to repentance, or in judgement to make them inexcuſable, Toſtat. quæſt. 20. 3. And oftentimes, vita eorum eſt miſera, furiis eos perſequentibus: their life miſerable, their owne conſcience troubling and accuſing them here, and the judgement of God with them afterward, Simler. 4. Their life alſo is prolonged to their puniſhment herein: Dum ſeruet inhumanitatis à filiis & nepotibus rependitur: while their ingratitude to their parents is ren- and repayed by their owne children and poſterity, Calvin.

Quest. XXIV. How this promiſe of long life is performed, ſeeing the righteous ſeed are many times ſoone cut off.

rther it is alſo objected, that many times vertuous and obedient children are cut off, and their dayes ſhortned, ſo that this promiſe of long life is not alwayes performed to ſuch.

ſo. 1. Quod ordinarium & frequentiſſimum eſt oſtenditur: that which is ordinary and uſuall is here ; extraordinary things muſt be left to the ſecret judgement of God: we ſee by experience, that the moſt part this bleſſing of long life is beſtowed upon dutifull and obedient children, Galaſ. 2. Boni ideo rapiuntur, ne à malitia perturbentur: good children are taken away, leſt they might bee diſturbed corrupted by ſinne, as it is ſaid, Wiſdom. 4. 11. He was taken away, leſt wickedneſſe ſhould alter his under- ding. Toſtat. 3. They are removed from the earth, that they ſhould not ſee and taſte of the miſeries lamities which the Lord intendeth to ſend upon the world, Baſting. Which was Abiahs caſe the of Ieroboam, 1. King 14. 13. 4. He that honoureth his father, though he dye ſoone, may bee ſaid to ed long: for Vita longa non menſuratur tempore, ſed actione, long life is not meaſured by time, but Thomas. As if a man in thirty yeeres have attained to greater perfection of godlineſſe, than the which hath lived an hundred, he may be ſaid to have lived longer than he: as it is ſaid, Wiſdom. Though he was ſoone dead, yet fulfilled he much time, Toſtat. 5. Theſe temporall bleſſings are gran- promiſed upon condition, ſo long as the Lord ſeeth it to be good for his children: and Quamuis ordinata ad futuram remunerationem: as they are ordained to be helpes unto the reward to come, Thom.

If the Lord see that they are rather hinderances, than helpes, in his secret judgement hee doth otherwise dispose of them, as is most for his glory, and the good of his children. 6. Though they have a short life here, In cœlis reposita est major compensatio: a greater recompence is laid up for them in heaven, Calvin. As if a man were promised two akers of ground in the barren mountaines of Liguria, and afterward have them given in the fruitfull soile of Campania; the promise should be more than kept, Simler.

Questions concerning the duty of subjects unto the Civill Magistrate.

Quest. XXIII. Of the duty of subjects toward their Prince.

BEcause, under the name of parents also are comprehended the fathers of the Commonwealth, Princes and other Magistrates: in the next place now commeth to be declared, what duties the subjects are to yeeld unto them.

1. They must submit themselves unto those Governours, which are set over them in the Lord, and honour them by performing all dutifull loyalty and obedience: as the Apostle teacheth, *That every soule should be subject to the higher powers, Rom.*13.1.

2. Honour also must be yeelded unto them, both in heart, in word, and in gesture: So also the Apostle *Rom.*13.7. Give to all men, &c. feare, to whom feare, honour, to whom honour belongeth. So Nathan coming in to King Salomon, made obeysance upon his face downe to the ground, 1. King. 1.23. The Romane histories doe make honourable mention of Q. Fabius Maximus, for reverencing and honouring his sonne, being Consul. But Christians are much better instructed by the Word of God, and ought to shew the same in practice, what reverence, feare and honour is due unto Magistrates.

3. Fidelity and love must the subjects shew toward their Prince, in defending and maintaining his life and state, dignity, and honour, in discovering of treasons, conspiracies, practices, and dangers intended against his life and person. So the people did fight for David against rebellious Absalom, and would not suffer David to hazard his person among them: for thou art now (say they) worth ten thousand of us, 2. Sam. 18.3. So Mardoche bewrayed the treason of two of the Kings Eunuches against Ahasuerus, Ester 6.

4. Subjects also must shew their piety toward their Magistrates, to pray unto God for them: as the Apostle exhorteth, that prayer should be made, especially for Kings, 1. Tim. 2.2. So the Christians in the Primitive Church used to pray, even for the Pagane Emperours in this forme, wishing unto them, *Vitam prolixam, imperium firmum, domum tutam, exercitus fortes, Senatum fidelem, populum probum, orbem quietum: A long life, a sure Empire, a safe house, strong armies, a faithfull Counsell, a good people, and the world quiet, Tertull. Apolog. cap.*30.

5. Humility also and modesty becommeth subjects, not to usurpe upon the office of the Prince, but to bring all their complaints unto him, not seeking to redresse things themselves: as Absalom did sawcily upon the people, and insinuate himselfe into their favour, wishing that he were their Judge to end their matters, 2. Sam. 15.4.

6. Another duty is thankfulnesse to be shewed, testified and acknowledged by all meanes, for the benefits received by their godly government: as Araunah being but a stranger in Israel, expressed his thankfull minde, in giving liberally as a King unto King David, 2. Sam. 24.23.

7. Subjects also are bound to helpe and support the necessities of the Crowne and Kingdome, by giving Subsidies, taxes, and such other reliefe; as the Apostle willeth, To give custome to whom custome, and tribute to whom tribute belongeth, Rom. 13.7. Christ himselfe also paid tribute, *Matth.*19. and Ioseph and Mary went to Bethlem to be taxed, *Luk.*2.

8. All these duties must bee performed unto the Civill Magistrate, both because it is Gods ordinance, from whom they receive their authority, *Rom.*13.1. and in respect of our selves, that under them wee may lead a godly and a peaceable life, 1. *Tim.*2.2. Bucanus.

Quest. XXIV. How far subjects are bound to obey their Governours.

BUt the authority of Magistrates over their subjects is not absolute, it must be limited according to the rules of the Word of God: and subjects are bound no further to obey, than they are obliged in conscience according to the Word of God. And here these considerations are necessary: 1. Who commandeth: 2. What: 3. And where.

1. If it be the inferiour Magistrate that commandeth or requireth any unjust thing, the subject thus grieved, is to make his complaint, and to sue for redresse unto the Superiour, and highest Magistrate: So Paul appealed from the Romane Governours in Judea, unto Cæsar.

2. If it be the Prince himselfe, and chiefe Magistrate, which enjoyneth any thing unjust and unlawfull, it must be considered, of what nature and kinde it is, that is commanded: 1. If it be against piety and our duty toward God, we must rather submit our selves to the punishment, than yeeld unto the Commandment, and so obey rather God, than man: as the three children did rather chuse to endure the flaming fire, than to worship the Idoll, which was set up: and Daniel resolved rather to be cast into the Lions den, than to be barred from making his prayer unto his God. 2. If the things commanded concerne our temporall state, as in grievous impositions, taxes, payments, no resistance at all is to be used: but such burdens must be endured with patience, untill by good meanes, as first prayer unto God, and then making

...nance unto their Governours, they may bee eased. So the people of God did submit themselves to such ...ments, as their land was taxed at by their hard Lords: as the people of Judea paid unto the King of ...ur 300. talents of silver, and 30. talents of gold, which he required of them, 2. King. 18. 14. But Na-...'s case herein was singular, who did well in not yeelding his inheritance unto the Kings desire: be-...se that belonged to the speciall policy of that nation, not to alienate their inheritance, from one tribe ...o another, that a distinction of their families and tribes might be kept, that it might be knowne of what ...be and family the Messiah should come. Bucanus. 3. If the subjects life be by indirect meanes assaulted, ...r the chastity of his wife, or the life of his children, which a man is bound to defend by the law of na-...re, as we see the unreasonable creatures are ready to defend their young ones; the subject in these ex-...remities, is not to rise against the Princes authority, yet the law of nature will binde him by all lawfull ...eanes, to defend him and his. Bucanus. As the Prophet Elisha, when the King sent a messenger unjustly ...take off his head, bid the Elders that sate with him in the house to shut the doore, and to handle the ...messenger roughly.

Whether Naboth did well in not yeelding his vineyard to the Kings desire.

3. The third consideration is, Where, that is, in what kinde of State such unjust edicts and commande-...nts are enjoyned: for if the State bee usurped by some Tyrant, not lawfully possessed of the govern-...ent, it is lawfull for the State to remove him, and to take armes against him: as the Macchabees resisted ...g Antiochus wicked decrees, 1. Macch. 2. who was an usurper upon that State. Againe, where the peo-...le are free, and the Prince received upon condition, to maintaine the ancient franchises, liberties, and ...munities of the country, the State may lawfully maintaine their liberties, against the vexation and vio-...nce of Tyrants: which was the case of Helvetia, when they shaked off the government of the house of ...Austria. And this case is much like unto that, when Trajanus the Emperour delivered a sword to a cer-...ne Governour, with these words: Use this sword for me, as long as I doe justly; and against me, if I doe ...justly. But in an absolute Monarchy the case is otherwise.

QUEST. XXV. Whether it had beene lawfull for David to have killed Saul: against Bucanus.

...t here I cannot let passe untouched that assertion of Bucanus: David potuisse juste interficere San-...lem, &c. That David might justly have killed Saul, because he had violently taken from him his wife, ...d slaine the Priests, and persecuted him with open force: But that David did forbeare, lest hee might ...ve given offence to the Heathen, that would have taken exception to the Kings of Israel, if they had ...ured by blood: and others might have beene encouraged by this example to have attempted the like ...gainst lawfull Kings: and beside David should have obscured his owne calling being of God, and have ...eene thought ambitiously by seeking his owne revenge to have aspired to the kingdome, Bucan. de ma-...gistrat. loc. 77.

Contra. It was neither expedient, nor lawfull for David to have killed Saul, as may be shewed by these ...asons: 1. He himselfe saith, Wickednesse proceed from the wicked, but mine hand be not upon thee, 1. Sam. 24. ...13. That which to doe was wickednesse, was no wayes lawfull: but to have killed Saul was wickednesse, ...David himselfe confesseth: Ergo. 2. Againe, David taketh another reason from the calling of Saul: ...How can I lay my hand upon the Lords anointed and be guiltlesse? 1. Sam. 26. 9. It was not only not expedient, ...but not lawfull to slay the Lords anointed. 3. David maketh this distribution, Either the Lord shall smite ...him, his day shall come to dye, or he shall descend into battell and perish: the Lord keepe me from laying mine ...hand upon the Lords anointed, v. 10. Saul only lawfully could end his dayes in respect of David three wayes; by a naturall ...death, violent in battell, or by the extraordinary stroke of Gods hand: for he that God had set up, must ...be removed also by God: but if David had killed him, he had not ended his dayes by any of these meanes.

2. Places of doctrine observed upon the fifth Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the generall and particular contents of this Commandement.

The duties prescribed in this Commandement are of three sorts: 1. Either of superiours toward their ...inferiours: 2. Or of the inferiours toward their superiours: 3. Or such as are common to them both. ...1. Superiours are first parents, to whom it appertaineth; 1. To nourish and provide for their children, ...1. Tim. 5. 8. If any provide not for his owne, and namely for them of his household, he hath denied the faith, ...and is worse then an infidell. 2. To defend them against wrong, Ephes. 6. 4. Fathers provoke not your children to wrath. 3. To in-...struct them: They must bring them up in the information of the Lord, Ephes. 6. 4. 4. To give them due ...reproofe and correction, Prov. 19. 18. Chasten thy sonne, while there is hope, and let not thy soule spare for ...his crying.

Contrary hereunto are: 1. Either to be careless to provide for the children, as Hagar cast away her ...sonne in despaire, Gen. 21. or to pamper them too much, and bring them up wantonly. 2. Not to protect ...and defend them from wrongs: or to be too much moved for small injuries offered unto them. 3. Not to ...take care to give them good education and instruction: as they whose children called the Prophet bald-...pate. King. 2. 4. Not to give them due correction, but to suffer them to commit sinne without checke, ...as was Eli his fault, 1. Sam. 2.

Magistrates also are the fathers of the Common-wealth: to whom it belongeth first to prescribe ...all Lawes agreeable to both the tables of the Morall law, and therefore the King is bid to read in ...the Law of God all the dayes of his life, Deut. 17. 19. 2. To see those Lawes executed, and the morall ...commandements observed and kept of all, Rom. 13. vers. 4. He is the minister of God to take vengeance, &c.

on him that doth evill. 3. To provide by other holesome positive lawes agreeable to the times and places to governe the people in all equity: as it is said in the Proverbs, By mee Kings reigne, and decree justice. Prov.8.vers.15.

Contrary hereunto are, first, negligence in government, either in not prescribing good lawes to the people; as the Kings of Judah offended herein, that removed not the hill Altars: or in not defending the innocent, as Ahab suffered Iezabel to put innocent Naboth to death: or in not punishing the transgressors of Gods law at all, or not according to the quality of their sinne: as Eli failed herein, in being remisse toward his sonnes, being then the Judge of Israel. 2. Tyranny, either in commanding unjust things as Saul did to his servants to kill David in his owne house, 1.*Sam.*19.11. or in sparing to punish the offenders, as Saul in saving Agag alive, 1.*Sam.*15. or in punishing beyond the quality of the offence, as Saul did for a small or no offence put the Priests to death, 1.*Sam.*22.

3. Pastors and Teachers are also spirituall fathers, whose office is, 1. Faithfully and diligently to teach the people sound doctrine: as S.Paul saith, *I kept backe nothing that was profitable, but have shewed you and taught you openly and throughout every house, Act.*20.20. 2. To exercise with a fatherly clemency the discipline of the Church; as S.Paul did in excommunicating the incestuous young man, 1.*Cor.*5.

Contrary hereunto are; 1. Negligence in teaching. 2. Then insufficiency to teach; for such cannot discharge the duty of spirituall fathers: both these are touched by the Prophet Isay 56.10. The watchmen are all blinde, they have no knowledge: they are all dumme dogs, they cannot barke: they lye and sleepe and delight in sleeping. 3. Teaching of unsound and corrupt doctrine: of such the Apostle saith, *If any man preach unto you otherwise than that which you have received, let him be accursed, Galath.*1.9.4. The negligent administration of the Ecclesiasticall government: as our Saviour reproveth the Scribes and Pharisies, for wresting the Commandements of God to observe their owne traditions, *Mark.*7.9.

4. Masters are also fathers of their family and servants: their duty is, 1. To require of their servants such things as are equall and just, and not beyond their power or strength, Luk. 17.8. 2. To provide for them food and raiment, and other necessaries, Prov. 31.21. She feareth not the snow for her family: for all her family is cloathed with double. 3. To governe the family, and order them with discretion, and to watch over them by domesticall discipline, *Prov.*31.27. She overseeth the wayes of her houshold, and eateth not the bread of idlenesse.

Contrary hereunto are; 1. To command hard and cruell service: as Sampson being a servant to the Philistims, was forced to grinde in the prison house, Iudg. 16.21. 2. To defraud them of provision or maintenance in sicknesse or in health: as the Amalekite did, which left the poore Egyptian being sicke in the field, 1.*Sam.*30.13. 3. To be cruell, and immoderate in correction unto them. Balaam was reproved for his cruelty toward his beast: a much greater fault it is for masters to bee too sharpe toward their servants.

5. The elder sort and ancient must goe before the younger, 1. In example of good life, Prov. 16.31. Old age is a crowne of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousnesse. 2. In good counsell, Iob 32.7. I said dayes shall speake, and the multitude of yeeres shall teach wisdome.

Contrary hereunto are; 1. Evill and light counsell in the elder sort: wherein Iobs friends offended, but Elihu, Iob 32. 2. Evill example in life and manners, as Cham gave an evill example to Canaan his sonne, in deriding his fathers nakednesse. 3. Neglecting of the younger sort, and letting them run their owne course, without any admonition or direction: as Gen. 19.4. both young and old in Sodome came together, and beset Lots house, Ursin.

Duties peculiar to inferiours.

1. HEre is required reverence both internall in acknowledging and approving the divine ordinance in appointing of superiours, and testifying the same by externall obeisance: as David reverenced and respected Saul, because he was the Lords anointed: his heart smote him, for the cutting off the lap of Sauls garment: he indured not to offer unto him the least indignity.

2. Love must be joyned with reverence: for one cannot truly and heartily reverence those whom they love not. As S. Paul testifieth of the Galathians, that if it had *beene possible, they would have pluckt out their owne eyes and given them unto him, Galath.*4.15.

3. Obedience must be yeelded in all lawfull things, and that willingly: as S.Paul would have servants obedient to their masters in singlenesse of heart, as unto Christ, *Ephes.*6.5.

4. Thankfulnesse for benefits received from the superiours: as the Egyptians said unto *Ioseph, Thou hast saved our lives, Gen.*27.25.

5. We must also beare with the infirmities of superiours, such as may be tolerated without Gods dishonour, and directly impugne not the law of God: as Ecclesiasticus well admonisheth, *chap.*3.13. My sonne helpe thy father in his age, &c. and if his understanding faile, have patience with him: and despise him not when thou art in thy full strength.

Contrary hereunto are; 1. Not to yeeld due reverence unto superiours, in word, or in deed: as therefore S.Paul excused himselfe by his ignorance, because he had called the high Priest painted wall, *Act.*23.

2. To hate them, especially in respect of their office: as the Witch at Endor hated Saul, for expelling of Witches and Southsayers, 1.*Sam.*28.9. Or to love them more than God, and to extoll them above the desert: as the people that said Herods voice was the voice of God, and not of man, *Act.*12.

3. To refuse to obey them in lawfull things: as the Reubenites refused to goe with Deborah and Barak ready to battell, Iudg. 5.15. Or to obey only in ſhew, as the ſonne that ſaid he would goe worke in his father's vineyard, and did not, Matth. 21.30. Or in rebelling againſt them, as Abſhalom did againſt his father: or in obeying them in things unlawfull, as Doeg at Sauls commandement killed the Prieſts: or in refuſing to helpe and aid them, as the men of Succoth refuſed to give bread unto Gedeons army, Iudg. 8.

4. To be unthankfull unto them, is another tranſgreſſion; as Pharaohs Butler was unto Ioſeph, that was his keeper and comforter in priſon, Geneſ. 40.

5. And to lay open their infirmities, not hiding and covering them, as Cham did his fathers nakedneſſe, Geneſ. 9. or to flatter them, as Tertullus the Orator commended Felix government beyond his deſert, Act. 24. 3.

Duties common both to Superiours and Inferiours.

1. Here is commanded generally in all juſtice and prudence, to give and yeeld unto every man that which belongeth to his place: as when S. Paul had deſcribed the duty of ſervants toward their maſters, he ſaith likewiſe unto Maſters, Doe ye the ſame things unto them, Epheſ. 6.9. So both ſuperiours and inferiours muſt diſcerne what is due to each one in their place, and accordingly by the rule of juſtice meaſure out unto them.

Contrary hereunto is partiality, and inequality, when any doe exact at others hands, what is due unto them, but are negligent in doing their duty, as the Prophet Ezechiel crieth out againſt thoſe Shepheards, which did feed themſelves fat, but would not feed the flockes againe, Ezech. 34.2.

2. There is required diligence and ſedulity in every one to doe his duty faithfully and ſtudiouſly, whether ſuperiour, or inferiour: as Rom. 12.7. He that hath an office, muſt wait on his office, &c. he that diſtributeth, with ſimplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence, &c.

Contrary hereunto are: 1. Negligence and careleſneſſe in men, either not to know their duty, or knowing it, not practiſing accordingly: as the Prophet Zachary crieth out againſt the fooliſh ſhepheard which ſhall not looke for that which was loſt, &c. Zachar. 11.15,16. 2. Hypocriſie, in doing of the office rather for praiſe or commendation, than of conſcience: which S. Paul calleth ὀφθαλμοδουλίαν, eye-ſervice, Epheſ. 6.6. 3. Curioſity, when one buſieth himſelfe with anothers office, and medleth with things not appertaining unto him: againſt ſuch buſie bodies the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1. Tim. 6.13.

3. Love is commanded both in ſuperiours toward their inferiours, and in them againe toward the other, Matth. 6.24. This reaſon is given why one cannot ſerve two maſters, becauſe he cannot love them both.

Contrary hereunto is: 1. Want of naturall love, which was one of the ſinnes of the Heathen, Rom. 1. 30. 2. Too much indulgence or fooliſh affection, which winketh at their faults, or gratifieth them in things not lawfull: and ſo they one beare with another: as the Prophet ſaith, they wrap it up, Micah 7.3.

4. Mutuall gratitude, in acknowledging the benefits mutually received: as appeareth in Davids kindneſſe toward Mephiboſheth, for his fathers ſake, and his thankfulnes againe for the ſame, 2. Sam. 19.29,30.

Contrary hereunto is: 1. Ingratitude and unthankfulneſſe; as Saul was unkinde to David, who deſerved well of him. 2. Mutuall gratification in things unlawfull; as Ioab ſerved Davids turne in haſtening Uria death.

5. Sobernes and gravity, in a moderate reſpect of our credit and eſtimation in the world in doing of our duty: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Let every man prove his owne worke, and then ſhall he have rejoycing in himſelfe alone: in whom, Galath. 6.3.

Contrary hereunto are: 1. Levity, in being careleſſe to preſerve a good name in the world: ſuch the Prophet ſaith have a whores forehead, Ierem. 3.3. which are impudent, and ſhameleſſe, and bluſh not at any thing. 2. Ambition, and vaine glory, when one doth their duty for the praiſe of men: as Herod, Act. 12. when he apparelled himſelfe gorgeouſly, and made an oration to the people.

6. Modeſty alſo is requiſite, that every one conſider their owne infirmity, neither aſcribing too much unto themſelves in their doings, nor detracting from others: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Galath. 6.3. If any ſeeme unto himſelfe that he is ſomewhat, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelfe, &c.

Contrary hereunto are: 1. Arrogancy, and vaine oſtentation: as Pilate ſaid to our bleſſed Saviour, vaunting of his authority: Knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee? Ioh. 19.10. 2. Diſſimulation, when one pretendeth modeſty, in refuſing of honours, that he may be had in more admiration: as Saul that hid himſelfe among the ſtuffe, when he was choſen King, 1. Sam. 10.22.

7. Equity, and moderation, which is a mutuall toleration of ordinary defects and infirmities both in ſuperiours and inferiours, and a mitigating of the rigour in the full exacting of duties: as S. Peter giveth counſell to ſervants; Be ſubject to your maſters with all feare, not only to the good and courteous, but alſo to the froward, 1. Pet. 2.18.

Contrary hereunto, are: 1. Too much rigour in finding fault, and cenſuring of others, which our bleſſed Saviour reproveth, Matth. 7.3. Why ſeeſt thou the moat in thy brothers eye, and perceiveſt not the beame that is in thine owne eye? 2. Too much lenity in winking at others faults, and not reproving them, as time and place requireth: as it is in the Pſalme 50. 18. When thou ſeeſt a theefe, thou runneſt with him, &c. as they which ſee and ſuffer others to ſinne, and reprove them not. 3. Flattery, and ſoothing men up in their ſins, which the Prophet calleth ſowing of pillowes under their arme holes, Ezech. 13.18. Sic ſere pulvillos.

2. Doct.

2. Doct. Of honouring of the spirituall parents, by giving them due maintenance, as by tithes, &c.

HOnour thy father, and thy mother, &c. One speciall part of this honouring, is to give relief and maintenance, as to our naturall parents, so also to our spirituall fathers, whom Saint Paul would to be had in double honour, 1. Tim. 5. 17. that is, to bee sufficiently maintained: and the reason hereof is Servus communitatis debet sustentari à communitate, the servant of the communalty must bee maintained by the communalty: as Saint Paul reasoneth, that they which serve at the Altar, must live of the Altar Laborant bono publico, &c. they labour for the publike good, and therefore they should bee maintained by the publike good, which is performed two wayes: either by the common treasure, where any such is, or by the goods in common of particular persons, Tostat. qu. 19. But S. Paul giveth a better reason 1. Cor. 9. 11. If we have sowen unto you spirituall things, is it a great thing if we reape your carnall: They therefore which give grudgingly, sparingly, and fraudulently, toward the maintenance of their Pastor and Teacher, and doe withdraw their rights and tithes due unto them, doe offend against this Commandement, in not honouring their spirituall parents.

3. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. Against the Manichees.

FIrst, the Manichies who rejected the old Testament, objected, that this precept of honouring the parents, is contrarie to that in the new Testament, where our Saviour said to one, that asked leave to go and bury his father, Let the dead bury the dead, Luk. 9.

Augustine thus answereth: 1. If herein the old Testament, and the new are contrary, then the new herein should be contrary to it selfe: for S. Paul also urgeth this Commandement, Ephes. 6. 2. Whereby it is manifest, saith he, Honorem parentum, in gradu suo esse servandum, &c. That honour in a certaine degree, is to be reserved unto parents: Eos tamen in divini amoris comparatione, &c. yet that in comparison of the love of God, there is no doubt, but they ought to be contemned, Cont. Adiman. cap. 6.

2. Confut. Against the Anabaptists, which deny government.

SEcondly, the Anabaptists are here condemned, which deny that it is lawfull for a Christian to be a Magistrate, because Christ hath made us free.

Contra: 1. The internall freedome and liberty of the Spirit, doth not take away externall subjection unto Princes, as the Apostle saith, Art thou called being a servant, care not for it, 1. Cor. 7. 21. As one may be a servant, and yet retaine his Christian liberty, so he may also be a subject, Bucan. 2. The Prophet Esay saith, Kings shall bee thy nursing fathers, Isay 49. 23. shewing that even under Christs kingdome, there should be beleeving and faithfull Kings. Serigius Paulus the Proconsull, was converted by S. Paul, and yet he was not charged to leave his calling, Basting. Act. 13.

3. Confut. Against the Papists, that would have the Clergy exempt from the authority of the Magistrate.

THirdly, the Romanists are here confuted, which doe exempt their Clergy, both their persons, lands and possessions from the jurisdiction of the Civill Magistrate. Concerning the first, it is evident Saint Pauls doctrine, in saying, Let every soule be subject to the higher powers, Rom. 13. 1. that none is to be excepted; as Chrysostome saith, Etiamsi Apostolus fueris, etiamsi Evangelista, etiamsi Propheta, Though thou beest an Apostle, an Evangelist, or Prophet, Hom. 23. ad Roman. But the Pope and his Clergy are so farre from yeelding due obedience and subjection unto the Civill power, that they have usurped authority over Emperours and Kings, and commanded them, by whom they should have been commanded, Basting.

Concerning the immunity of the lands and possessions of the Clergy: 1. There is no reason, but they which possesse temporall things, should also beare the burden imposed upon temporalties, and not lay the burden wholly upon others. 2. The Apostles rule is generall, Tribute, to whom tribute; custome, to whom custome, Rom. 13. 7. And our Saviour refused not to pay poll money for himselfe and Peter. 3. Whereas it is objected, that the lands of the Egyptian Priests were free from the payment and tax of the fifth part: the reason is, because their lands were not sold to Pharaoh, as the peoples were: as the text it selfe sheweth, Except the land of the Priests only, which was not Pharaohs, Genes. 47. 25. And the Priests and Levites in Israel were exempted, because they possessed no inheritance among their brethren, but lived onely of the Offerings. 4. Yet it is not denied, but that Ecclesiasticall persons may enjoy such immunities and privileges, as are bestowed upon them, by the liberality of Christian Princes: but they are not to challenge them by any Divine right, Bucan.

4. Mo

4. Morall obſervations upon the fifth Commandement.

1. Obſerv. Of the duty of children to their parents.

Honour thy father, &c. This ſtrait charge of honouring parents, reproveth their ingratitude, which are ſparing in relieving their parents in their age. Calvin ſaith, it is deteſtabilis barbaries, a deteſtable more than barbarous rudeneſſe, for a childe to neglect his parents: a great impiety it is, and too common in theſe dayes. Oleaſter reporteth out of R. Simeon, that God doth preferre the honouring of parents before his owne ſervice; I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice, and rewardeth it more: for thoſe that honour God he honoureth againe: but thoſe which honour their parents, he rewardeth with long life, which is more than honour. But this is ſomewhat too curious: indeed, honouring of parents is preferred before the ceremoniall part of Gods ſervice, which conſiſted in ſacrifices, but not before the morall part of it, ſet forth in the firſt Table: And the honour which God promiſeth, is more than long life, even the glory of this life and the next: But yet the Lord commandeth honouring of parents as a duty; for the neglect whereof our Saviour reproveth the Phariſies, Mark.7.

2. Obſerv. Of the care of parents toward their children.

Againe, on the other ſide, parents are to be carefull to provide for their children, and to ſee to their good education; not to provide only for their bodily life, for ſo brute beaſts doe for their young ones, but eſpecially to ſee that they be brought up in the knowledge of their heavenly Father: which Paul requireth at parents hands, Epheſ.6.4. And Solon made a law, that the children ſhould not be bound to relieve their Father, that had not brought them up in ſome good trade.

The ſixth Commandement: Thou ſhalt not kill.

1. The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. Why this precept is ſet before the other that follow.

AS the former Commandement exacteth and requireth to doe good, and to performe our duty unto man: ſo theſe following concerne our innocency, in doing of no hurt unto our neighbours and brethren. Pelarg. Lyran. 2. And they are propounded negatively: Quia negativa ſunt majoris efficaciæ, quoniam gravioris tranſgreſſionis: becauſe negatives doe bind more ſtrongly, and the tranſgreſſion is more grievous; for it is a greater ſinne, to doe evill, than not to doe good. Toſtat. quæſt. 21. 3. There are two Canons in Scripture, upon the which theſe precepts of the ſecond Table depend: the one is, Quod tibi fieri non vis, alteri ne feceris, That which thou wouldeſt not be done unto thee, doe not to another: Hic canon omnes tollit injurias: This rule taketh away all injuries and wrongs: the other is, What ſoever you would that men ſhould doe unto you, even ſo doe you to them, Matth. 7. 12. Hic canon ad omnem nos exhortatur beneficentiam: This rule likewiſe doth exhort us to all beneficence and doing of good. 4. Now whereas injury is done three wayes unto our neighbour: Pervertitate operis, falſitate linguæ, iniquitate voluntatis: by the perverſeneſſe of the deed, falſeneſſe of ſpeech, and badneſſe of the will: and the perverſeneſſe of the deed, is either offred to ones perſon, or ſubſtance: and his perſon is either conſidered as it is ſimplex, his ſingle perſon, or conjuncta, his coupled perſon, in his wife: therefore three Commandements, which forbid murder, adultery, theft, are ſet firſt. Pelarg. 5. And becauſe the moſt hurt, which can bee done unto a man, is touching his life: Quia mors tollit eſſe ſimpliciter, becauſe it taketh away a mans being ſimply, as other wrongs doe not: therefore this precept is ſet before other, as forbidding the greateſt wrong. Toſtat.

QUEST. II. Whether it be here forbidden to ſlay any beaſts.

Thou ſhalt not kill. Some have imagined, that all kinde of killing is here forbidden, yea even of brute beaſts: but this fooliſh opinion may be diverſly confuted. 1. Auguſtine thus reaſoneth: If it be not lawfull to ſlay beaſts, Cur non etiam & herbas, why alſo is it not unlawfull to pull up herbes and plants? although they have no ſenſe, yet they are ſaid to live, and ſo alſo may dye: as the Apoſtle ſaith, That which thou ſoweſt, is not quickned, except it dye, 1. Cor. 15. 36. And this indeed was the mad opinion of the Manichees, that thought it unlawfull to pull up a plant. If then this, Thou ſhalt not kill, be not meant of plants, becauſe they have no ſenſe; then neither is it underſtood of brute beaſts, Quia nulla nobis ratione conſtant, becauſe they are not partakers of reaſon with us: thus Auguſt. lib. 1. de civitat. Dei, cap. 20. he uſeth this reaſon, Non eſt peccatum uti illis, quæ ſunt ſubdita hominis poteſtati, &c. It is no ſinne to uſe things, which are ſubject to mans power, and made for mans uſe: for there is a certaine naturall order, that plants are for the nouriſhment of beaſts, and beaſts feed one upon another, Omnia in nutrimentum, &c. and all are appointed for the nouriſhment of man: and the Lord hath given us this liberty, As the greene herbe, have I given you all things, Gen. 9. 3. The Apoſtle alſo ſheweth the lawfulneſſe hereof: Whatſoever is ſold in the ſhambles, eat yee, and aske no queſtion for conſcience ſake, 1 Cor. 10. 25. Thom. in opuſcul. 3. Cajetane addeth further, that it is lawfull to kill beaſts, Ut veſcamur eis, vel vel ne molesta sint nobis: To feed upon them, or that they be not noisome unto us. 4. And the word rz here used, in the opinion of the Hebrewes, signifieth properly to kill a man: and therefore there need be no doubt made of the lawfulnesse of killing other creatures for mans use. Simler. Cajetan.

Quest. III. Of the divers kindes of killing.

Thou shalt not kill. There are divers kindes of killing: some doe kill the soule only, some the only, some both the body and soule. 1. They kill the soule, which seduce and pervert it: as the Devill is said to be a murderer from the beginning, Ioh. 8. In quantum traxit ad peccatum drew our first parents into sinne. 2. The body and soule is killed two wayes, occidendo proprium ling of women with childe: for so the infant conceived, is deprived both of body and soule. corpiendo seipsum, secondly when one killeth himselfe: for beside the death of the body, they soule into danger. Thom. in opusc.

3. The body is killed also divers wayes: for Homicidium est internum, externum, murder is ward or outward: the inward is of two sorts, either conceptum conceived as in anger, hatred, venge, which our Saviour forbiddeth, Matth. 5. 22. or, permissum, when it is permitted or one consenteth unto another mans death, Rom. 1. 31. They doe not only the same things, but that doe them. Pelarg. Thom. The externall is committed three wayes, manu, by the hand, as in wounding, and lastly killing: or, ore, with the mouth, in railing, reviling, giving evill counsell: and rie, by ministring helpe, and so being accessary in killing. Thom. This externall murder, is either exoptatum, gestu attentatum, opere designatum: wished in word, attempted in gesture, or designed Pelarg.

Quest. IV. How the soule is killed by evill perswasion.

First then, the seducing and perverting of the soule, is a principall breach of this Commandement Piscator well observeth, that seductio animæ, the seducing of the soule, is one of the transgressio this precept.

1. Augustines reason is taken from the practice of the Devill: Homicida Diabolus, non gladio armo &c. verbum malum seminavit & occidit: The Devill is a murderer, he came not unto men with armo weapons, he sowed evill seed by tempting them, and so slew them. In Ioan. tract. 42.

2. Thomas useth this reason, Occidunt animam auferendo vitam gratiæ: They slay the soule by ta away the life of grace: So Augustine concludeth, Si fratri tuo mala persuades, occidis: If thou perswade unto thy brother, thou killest him. ibid.

Quest. V. That it is not lawfull for a man to kill himselfe.

Some thinke, that by this precept man is forbidden to kill another, but not himselfe: But that i speciall offence against this law, for any man to lay violent hands upon himselfe, it may be prou 1. Augustines reason is: Neq; enim qui se occidit, aliud, quam hominem occidit: Neither he who kil himselfe, doth any other than kill a man. 2. Pelargus useth this reason, Præceptum cum ipsum cui præcipitur, A precept being simply propounded without any other addition, comprehendeth to whom the precept is given: in that it is said therefore, Thou shalt not kill, it is intimated, that shalt not kill thy selfe. 3. Because our life is the gift of God, it cannot be taken away from whom without great impiety, and Facit injuriam humano generi, he that killeth himselfe, doth wrong mane society, in depriving the Commonwealth of a member thereof. Basting. 4. The same reason, a man should not kill his neighbour, because he is the image of God, hee is our flesh and one of members for whom he died; are strong to perswade one not to kill himselfe, for no man ever owne flesh. Ursinus. 5. Whereas it is objected that Sampson killed himselfe, the answer is, he did tu Spiritus Dei: By the instinct of Gods Spirit: so that hee did it Authoritate Dei: By God Thomas.

Quest. VI. The inward murder of the heart forbidden.

Not only the externall act of murther is here forbidden, but the internall also, by hasty rage, hatred, envy and such like. 1. Lex Dei spiritualis est: The law of God is spirituall, and bindeth not only the hands and tongue, but the heart also and affections: as our blessed Saviour, interpreter of the law, teacheth: If one be angry with his brother unadvisedly, he shall be culpable of ment, Matth. 5. 22. Gallas. 2. Another reason is: because, he, qui irascitur sine causa quamvis tem, homicidium facit, which is angry without a cause, in respect of his owne will and purpose, mitted manslaughter: Chrysost. hom. 11. in Matth. Therefore the Apostle saith, He that hateth is a manslayer, 1. Ioh. 3. 15. 3. Bonus medicus non solum tollit malum, quod apparet, sed etiam vel infirmitatis: A good Physitian doth not only take away the evill, that is apparent, but also re the very root of the disease: Thomas. Therefore our Saviour biddeth not only to take heed of but of anger also: ex ira enim homicidium generatur: for homicide or murther is ingendred by and rage: Chrysostome. 4. And where the effect is forbidden, there also the cause and occasion ther restrained: as God would not have us to hurt our brother, so he would have all occasions thereof cut off. Ursinus.

Qu

Quest. VII. What things are to be taken heed of in anger.

Concerning anger and rage, which is the inward killing, five things are here to be taken heed of: 1. Ne citò provocemur, that it be not soone provoked: as S. Iames saith, Let every man be swift to heare, slow to speake, and slow to wrath, chap. 1.19. And there be two reasons why anger should not be soone provoked: because rage is a sinne before God, and so deserveth punishment; and for that every man desireth power: but he that is given to anger, is not Dominus sui ipsius, Master of himselfe. 2. He must take heed, ne diu perseveret, that he continue not long in anger: Psal. 4. Be angrie, and sinne not: Ephes. 4. Let not the Sunne goe downe upon your wrath. 3. Men must bee carefull, ne procedat primò in corde, that anger take not first in the heart, for then it turneth to hatred: and he that hateth his brother, is a manslayer: Quia, soliendo se charitate & alimo: He killeth himselfe, by spoyling himselfe of charitie, and life. 4. Ne procedat in verbo: It must not proceed in word: for he which calleth his brother is in danger of hell fire, Matth. 5. 5. Ne procedat in opere: It must not proceed unto the deed: in every worke wee must consider two things: Facere justitiam & misericordiam: To doe justice, and mercie: but he which is angrie can doe neither. For the first the Apostle saith, that the wrath of man doth not accomplish the righteousnesse of God, Iam. 1.20. It is reported of Plato, that hee should say to his servant, that had offended him: Punirem te, nisi essem iratus: I would punish thee, if I were not angrie. He that is angrie, can shew no mercie: as it is said of Simeon and Levi, in their rage they killed a man, Gen. 49. Thom. in opuscul.

Quest. VIII. Of railing and reviling.

But unto the inward rage and heat of the affections followeth the outward indignation expressed in words, gesture, and other signes: and the third degree is when men fall to plaine railing, backbiting, slandering, threatning: as these three are thus expressed by our blessed Saviour: Whosoever is angrie with his brother unadvisedly shall be culpable of judgement: and whosoever saith unto his brother, racha, is worthie to be punished by a counsell: and whosoever shall say, thou foole, shall be worthie to be punished with hell fire, Matth. 5.22. 1. Here our Saviour maketh three degrees of anger, or rage: the one in the heart, a fear and boyling of the affection inwardly without cause: the second, in the shewing of this indignation outwardly by any disdainfull words: as in calling one, racha, that is, idle head, light braine: for so it is in the Hebrew, to the which this Syrian word agreeth both in sound and sense, signifieth, light, vaine, lewd, Matth. 5. 22. As also this indignation may bee expressed by other signes, as by grinning, frowning, spitting, and such like, Simler. Then the third degree followeth, in open railing, as calling one foole, with other termes of reviling. 2. As our Saviour maketh difference of the sins: so also he sheweth divers degrees of punishment: alluding unto the politike forme of judgement: for first there was the session or judgement of three, who judged of small causes; then of 23. who determined more waightie matters; then of 71. before whom the high Priest, or a false Prophet, and sometime a whole tribe was condemned and judged: Beza. So he that is angrie shall be censured in the secret judgement of God; he that shewes his indignation by opprobrious words, shall be held guiltie before all the assemblie of the heavenly Angels and Saints: he that raileth and revileth, shall bee judged worthie of hell fire, that is, of the greatest punishment, Marlorat. For they used foure kinds of punishments among the Jewes, whereby they executed malefactors to death: strangling, the sword, stoning, and fire: of the which the last was the worst, Ezech. 23. For he that raileth and revileth, tres, quasi uno ictu occidit, killeth three as it were with one blow: him that giveth credit, and the third, whom he slandereth and revileth, Basting.

What it is to call the brother Racha.

Quest. IX. Whether beating and wounding, though there be no killing, be not forbidden here.

The externall act followeth, not only of killing, but in offering any other violence with the hand, in beating, wounding, striking, and such like. 1. Here commeth to be examined the opinion of R. Salomon, that in this precept only murther is forbidden: but other violent wrongs, in maimes, wounds, shedding of blood, beatings and such like, hee thinketh onely afterward to bee restrained in the Judicials. Against this opinion these reasons are enforced: 1. The Judicials only concerned the Israelites, and did not bind the Gentiles: but even among them these kind of violent assaults were unlawfull, therefore they were forbidden not by the Judicials only, but by the Morall law, Testat. qu. 21. He also urgeth this reason: all things which were forbidden by the Judicials of Moses only, it was no sinne for the Israelites to doe, before these Lawes were given them, that is, before they came to Mount Sinai: but it was unlawful before that one to smite another, as for the same cause Moses reproved an Hebrew, that did his brother wrong and smote him, Exod. 2.13. therefore these wrongs were not only prohibited by the Judiciall law. 3. Ambr. giveth this reason: Quia facit contra charitatem: Because he that smiteth or woundeth, though he kill not, doth against charity, as he also doth which killeth, though in an higher degree. So also Lippomanus further giveth this rule: Omnia quæ pertinent ad idem genus, reducuntur ad idem præceptum: All things that belong to the same kinde, is to be referred to the same Commandement: as all wounding, beating, tendeth to the hurt of our brother in his body, as killing likewise doth.

Quest. X. Why actuall murder is such an hainous sinne before God.

Now followeth the greatest transgression among the rest, which is the taking away of a mans life: 1. For if hatred, envy, railing, wounding, and the like, are counted murder before God, in respect of the the will and purpose, much more murder it selfe, which is the scope and end, whereat all the former wrong and injuries drive; for if those things are displeasing unto God, because they often bring forth murder, the effect it selfe must needs bee more hainous, Basting. 2. Another reason which amplifieth the sinne of murder, is, because the Lord by this meanes seeth Imaginem suam violari, that his image is violated, and is given as a reason of this precept, Gen.9.6. Calvin. 3. And againe, it is an unnaturall sinne, because man is as our owne flesh: as the Prophet saith, Isai. 58.7. Hide not thy selfe from thine owne flesh: but no man ever hated his owne flesh, as the Apostle saith, Calvin. Yea, the murderer herein is crudelior Lupo, more cruell than the Wolfe: for as Aristotle writeth, 4. Animalium: Give unto a Wolfe the flesh of another Wolfe, and he will not eat it: yet one man preyeth upon another, and devoureth another, Thomas. 4. minimum societas violatur, by this meanes the societie of man is violated: which, that it may be preserved the Lord forbiddeth all shedding of bloud, Galat. 5. Polluitur & fœdatur terra, yea the land it selfe is polluted and defiled with bloud, *Numb.*35.36. Galat. 6. Mans bodie is the temple of the holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 6.16. If any then destroy the temple of God, him will God destroy, 1 *Cor.*3.17. 7. The murtherer also sinneth against Christ, whose member his neighbour is, whose life hee hath sought. So reasoneth the Apostle, but in a divers case: that he which causeth the weake brother to perish, for whom Christ died, sinneth against Christ himselfe: 1 *Cor.*8.11.

Quest. XI. How diversly murder is committed.

THis kinde of externall and actuall murther is committed two wayes; either by a man himselfe, or by another: 1. The first is done two wayes, either by the cruell shedding of mans bloud, which is the most grievous sinne of all: or by neglecting the meanes, and not preserving our neighbours life either by helpe or counsell, when it is in our power: as the rich man suffered Lazarus for want of relieſe to perish at his gate, Luk. 16. So the Priest and Levite passed by the man that had beene wounded of the theeves and was left for halfe dead, and had no compassion of him, *Luk.*10. So the Wise-man saith in the Proverbs, *chap.*24.11. Deliver them that are drawne to death, and wilt thou not preserve them that are led to be slaine? Isidore saith: Qui incurrit in nudum & esurientem, &c. He that meeteth with a man readie to perish for hunger and cold, if he doe not give him meat and raiment, homicida tenebitur, shall be counted a murtherer. So Gloss. interlinear. A man committeth murther, manu, vel mente, vel subtrahendo auxilium, aut consilium, &c. with his hand, with his heart, and when he withdraweth his helpe and counsell.

2. A man killeth by another two wayes; consensu, by giving consent: as Saul did, when Stephen was put to death, keeping their garments that stoned him, *Act.*7.58. And the people crucified Christ, calling unto Pilate, Crucifie him: Mandato & voluntate, By willing and commanding ones death: as David did contrive Vrias death, and Iezabel Naboths, Bastingius.

Quest. XII. Of the divers kinds of murder.

THere are divers kinds of killing: 1. There is a lawfull killing or taking away of the life by the Magistrate; as either in putting malefactors to death, or in just warre where much bloud is shed. 2. There is another kinde altogether unlawfull, and inexcusable, which is called wilfull murther: when any of hatred smiteth a man, that he die, or of purpose lie in wait for him: *Numb.*35.20. So Ioab wilfully killed Abner and Amasa. 3. There is a third kinde of involuntarie murther, when a man lieth not in wait but God offereth him unto him, *Exod.*21.13. For though such things seeme to us to fall out by chance, yet all things are ordered and disposed by Gods providence, and with him nothing happeneth by chance. Of this kinde there are three sorts: 1. When two doe of a sudden, having no purpose before, fight together, and the one killeth the other: as striving upon the way, or falling out upon any other sudden and unthought of occasion: this is called manslaughter; as Abner killed Asahel, that met him, and pursued him in battell: this kinde is not so hainous as wilfull murther, yet it far exceedeth these other kinds that follow. 2. Sometime one is killed by chance, which is of two sorts, either a chance which falleth out by meere oversight and negligence: as if a Physitian, through carelesnesse mistake the medicine, and so kill his patient, which might by his care have beene prevented: or it falleth out by meere chance, which could not be helped; as when one heweth wood, and the axe-head flieth off, and killeth one that standeth by. 3. But that kinde which deserveth most favour, and may best be excused, is, when one is forced to kill another, se defendendo, by defending of himselfe: which was the womans case, that with a milstone pashed out the cruell Abimelechs braines, when he attempted to set fire upon the tower, and to burne the woman, and all the rest of the people there, *Iudg.*9.

Quest. XIII. Magistrates are not guiltie of murder in putting malefactors to death.

ALl kinde of killing is not then unlawfull: whereof there are three sorts: there is divina vindicta, heroica, ordinata: divine revenge, heroicall, ordinarie. 1. The divine is, which is directly and immediatly commanded by God: as Abraham at the Lords bidding would have sacrificed his sonne: Abraham non solum non est culpatus crudelitatis crimine, sed laudatus est pietatis nomine: Abraham was not only not blamed for his crueltie, but commended for his pietie therein. So Ioshua had commandement from the Lord to destroy the Canaanites.

2. The heroicall kinde of killing is, when any being inflamed with the zeale of Gods glorie, and extraordinarily stirred by his spirit, doe take revenge of the Lords enemies: as Sampson upon the Philistims in his death, Phineas in zeale killed the adulterer and adultresse, and Samuel hewed Agag the King of Amalek in peeces, Marbach.

3. The

3. The ordinarie killing is by the Magistrate, who by direction of the word of God, and according to wholesome lawes grounded upon the same, doth give sentence of death against malefactors, or wageth just warre: upon these occasions the Magistrate sinneth not in shedding of bloud. The reasons are these:

1. Hierome saith: Homicidas punire, non est sanguinis effusio, sed legis ministerium: To punish murderers, and other malefactors, it is no effusion of bloud, but the execution of the law: in Ieremiam, c.22. Glos. interlinear. Index non occidit reum, sed lex quæ jubet: The Judge killeth not the guiltie partie, but the law which commandeth.

2. Thomas saith, Id quod licitum est Deo, licitum est & ministro ipsius per mandatum ejus: That which is lawfull unto God the author of the law, is lawfull unto Gods Minister by his Commandement. But the Magistrate is Gods Minister, *Rom.*13.4.

2. Places of Doctrine upon the sixth Commandement.

1. Doct. Of the generall contents of this Commandement.

Thou shalt not kill. This Commandement consisteth, 1. Partly in prohibiting all kinde of hurt or wrong to our neighbour, either in leaving or forsaking him, or in doing him hurt, either outwardly, by murder, railing, reviling, or by any injurie whatsoever; or inwardly, by anger, hatred, desire of revenge. 2. Partly in commanding the preservation of our neighbours life, either in not hurting, whether provoked, or not provoked: or in helping, either by the depulsion of wrongs and injuries offred, or by the collation of benefits.

2. Doct. The particular vertues here commanded.

The vertues then prescribed in this Commandement, are of two sorts, either such as doe not hurt, or such as are beside helping also.

Of the first kinde are: 1. A particular justice and equitie, in all our acts and doings, not to hurt or wrong any, in word or deed, by violence, fraud, or negligence, or by any other meanes: such an one was Nathaniel, a true Israelite, in whom there was no guile, Ioh. 1.47. hee was a just, harmelesse and innocent man.

Contrarie hereunto are all kinde of hurting or harming others by violence, oppression, of purpose or negligence: of such speaketh the Wise-man, *They cannot sleepe, unlesse they doe evill, Prov.*4.

2. Another vertue is gentlenesse, mildnesse, not to bee apt to quarrell upon every occasion, but to bee patient in bearing of wrongs, and readie even to forgive our enemies; as David spared the life of Saul, and endured with patience the reviling of Shemei.

Contrarie hereunto are: 1. Stupiditie, not to be angrie, or moved at all, no not for manifest and notorious wrongs and injuries: as Saul saved Agag alive, whom Samuel through a just indignation for the great wrongs which that nation had done to the people of God, hewed in peeces. 2. Anger, rage, desire of revenge, wherein David offended in purposing to put Nabal and his house to the sword, in his furie and rage, 1 *Sam.*25.

3. A third vertue is, Peaceableneſſe, to bee carefull to avoid all offences and occasions of contention; and to end and compound strifes and contentions, being once risen: as Moses did betweene the two Hebrews, Exod. 2. and as Abraham moved to have a separation betweene him and Lot, their servants, and cattell, for avoiding of further contention, *Genes.*13.

Contrarie hereunto it is, to be turbulent and unquiet, to move sedition, discord, enmitie: such were the seditious in Israel, Core, Dathan and Abiram, *Numb.*16.

Vertues furthering and helping our neighbour, are: 1. Just severitie in punishing of offenders, which is the office of Magistrates, who are the Ministers of God in that behalfe: as David worthily put to death those two Captaines that had murthered Ishboseth, 2 *Sam.*4.

Contrarie hereunto are: 1. Injustice, rigour and crueltie, as Herod beheaded Iames, and laid hand on Peter also, Act. 12. 2. Connivence and remisnesse: as God was angrie with Ahab, because hee had let Benhadad escape, 1 *King.*20.41.

2. Zeale and indignation for the wrongs and injuries offered to men: as Abraham armed his household to rescue Lot, *Gen.*14.

Contrarie hereunto is, carelesnesse of others miserable and afflicted estate, as in Pharaohs Butler, that remembred not Iosephs afflictions.

3. Mercie and commiseration, to bee grieved for the miseries of others: as David and his company wept when the Amalekites had smitten Ziklag, 1 *Sam.*30.4.

Contrarie hereunto is hardnesse of heart: to have no feeling compassion, as the rich Glutton had not Lazarus, *Luk.*16. Ex Vrsin.

3. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the Stoikes, that denied any passion at all to be in a wise man.

Whereas it is shewed before, that even rash and unadvised anger is forbidden in this precept, according to the doctrine of our blessed Saviour, *Matth.*5.22. The Stoikes are confuted, whose opinion was that the passions of anger, and of other such like affections, were not incident unto wise men: but the opinion of the Peripatetikes was, that Ira cadit in sapientem, sed moderata, that anger is incident to a wise man, but moderate and temperate: which opinion commeth neerer the truth. Et primò patet authorita

And this first is evident by the authoritie of the Gospell, which sheweth anger to have beene in our blessed Saviour. Secundò, ratione: Againe, it is manifest by reason: for if all the passions of the minde were contrarie to vertue, there should be some powers of the soule in vaine: Imo essent homini in nocumentum, they should be to a mans hurt, as the facultie of anger, and desire: but God made nothing in vaine. Further, anger is taken three wayes; Primò prout est in solo judicio rationis absq; commotione animi: first, as it is in the judgement onely, without any commotion of the minde: and so the Lord in Scripture is said to be angrie. Secondly, it is taken for the passion of the minde, which sometime is ordered and ruled by reason, as when one is angrie, Quando debet, quantum debet, & pro quo debet: When he ought, as much as he ought, and for what he ought to be angrie: and then it is a note of zeale. Thirdly, there is a kinde of anger, Qui refugit judicium rationis, which refuseth and rejecteth the judgement and direction of reason, and this is alwayes sinne, Thomas in opuscul.

2. Confut. Against those that thinke no anger to be forbidden.

THere are some further, that doe hold, that anger is not at all forbidden in this precept: 1. Because it is naturall. 2. We read that God himselfe in Scripture is said to be angrie. 3. Christ himselfe was, and the holy Saints and Prophets, as Moses, and Paul. 4. The Apostle forbiddeth not to be angrie, but once to persevere and continue in it, *Ephes.*4.26.

Answ. 1. Naturall and moderate affections are the worke of God in the nature of man, and so they are not forbidden: but those affections which were perfect and good in the nature of man, before sinne entred, are now through the sinne of man perverted and corrupted, and refuse to be subject to reason, and so had need to bee reformed by grace: these violent and intemperate affections are forbidden, and so anger, not simplie: for to be angrie with that which is evill, is commendable. So our Saviour condemneth not all anger, but when a man is angrie with his brother unadvisedly, *Matth.*19. 22.

2. God is not said to be angrie as man is: it is no passion or perturbation in God, but the Scripture speaketh of God, according to our capacitie: for, Ira est appetitus ultionis, anger is a desire of revenge, and therefore because man cannot punish without anger, God is said to be angrie, quando punit scelera, when he punisheth sinne: ultio ejus ira dicitur, his revenge is called anger.

3. These naturall affections and passions of the minde, were otherwise in Christ than in us: in him they were temperate and moderate without sinne, as they were first created in man: and such kinde of anger we grant is not forbidden.

4. The last reason sheweth, that all anger is not forbidden, but that onely which exceedeth measure, as to be too much inflamed with anger, and to continue long therein: which we also grant, ex Simler.

3. Conf. Against the Anabaptists, that it is lawfull for Christians to beare armour, and to make warre.

WHereas out of this prohibition, Thou shalt not kill, is excepted the lawfull Magistrate, which either putteth to death, or maketh just warre; we are here to deale against the Anabaptists, who hold it unlawfull for Christians to beare armour or weapons, or to wage battell. Their reasons and arguments are these:

1. Our Saviour in the Gospell biddeth, that we should not resist evill, but whosoever will smite thee on the left cheeke, turne to him the right also, *Matth.*5.39.

Answ. 1. It is evident, that our blessed Saviour doth not here bring in a new law, but onely freeth the law from the corrupt glosses of the Scribes and Pharisies: he therefore giveth the true sense of the law given them by Moses, which allowed lawfull warre to be made: Therefore Christs meaning cannot be, that evill and injuries can no way be resisted. 2. It must be considered, that Christ here speaketh unto private men, not unto Magistrates, that they were not to seeke revenge, which belonged unto the rulers and governours. 3. Our blessed Saviours meaning is to restraine mens corrupt affections, and grudges, in seeking revenge, and to exhort them to patience: for according to the very letter, our Saviour himselfe did not per-forme this precept: for being smitten with a rod, he did not turne the other cheeke, but answered for himselfe, *Ioh.*18.23. So also did S. Paul, when the high Priest commanded him to be smitten on the face, Act.

2. S. Paul would not have Christians to goe to law one with another, 2 Cor. 6. much lesse it is lawfull to make warre.

Answ. S. Paul simply findeth not fault with their going to law, but because they one conventeth another before Heathen Judges, and for that they were impatient of wrongs, and would put up nothing at anothers hand.

3. Our Saviour biddeth Peter to put up his sword, adding further, that they which take the sword shall perish with the sword, *Matth.*26.52.

Answ. It is plaine, that our Saviour speaketh of the private use of the sword, not of the publike in law-full battell, when as the souldier doth not take the sword into his hand by his private authoritie, but is committed unto him by the commandement of the Magistrate.

4 The parable of the tares is objected, which our Saviour would have grow untill the time of harvest.

Answ. The end and scope of this parable must be considered: which is to shew the state and condition of Christs Church in this world, that therein the wicked and hypocrites are mixed among the faithfull, and so it shall bee till Christ shall come in the end of the world to purge his floore, and take away all the chaffe: for otherwise, if it were not lawfull to take away the evill, there should be no place, neither for Civill nor Ecclesiasticall discipline: and so Saint Paul should have beene contrarie to his master, who will ed the inceſtuous young man to bee excommunicate, 1 Cor. 5. and ſo the tares to bee weeded out of

3. The Apoſtle ſaith, The weapons of our warfare are not carnall, &c. 2 *Cor.*10.4. we muſt not then uſe all and outward weapons.

Anſw. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh there onely of ſuch weapons which wee are to uſe againſt ſpirituall s, which indeed are onely ſpirituall: not of thoſe which are uſed againſt men. 2. After the like manner Paul ſaith: Chriſt ſent me not to baptize, but to preach the Goſpell. 1 *Cor.*2.17. yet he baptized ſome: his meaning is, he was not ſent chiefly to baptize, but to preach: ſo the chiefeſt armour of Chriſtians are ſpiri-l: not they may uſe carnall and externall alſo, Simler.

But now on the contrarie ſide, that it is lawfull for Chriſtian Magiſtrates to wage battell, it may be thus proved by the authoritie of the word of God: 1. *Deut.*20. there are divers lawes preſcribed, whom they ſhall make choice of to go to warre, how they ſhould be exhorted by the Prieſts, and other orders are there preſcribed: which had beene ſuperfluous, if it were a thing ſimply unlawfull to enterpriſe warre. It is proved lawfull by the Word of God, for Chriſtians to wage battell.

2. In the new Teſtament, when the ſouldiers came to Iohn, to know of him what they ſhould doe, he biddeth them not to lay aſide their weapons, or to forſake their calling, but not to doe wrong, and to be content with their wages, Luk. 3. 14. Wee read in the Goſpell of a Centurion that beleeved in Chriſt, Matth. 8. and in the Acts of a Centurion converted by Saint Peter, *Act.*10. who retained that office and calling ſtill.

3. Further, ſeeing it is the office of the Magiſtrate, that beareth not the ſword for nought, to take vengeance on him that doth evill, *Rom.*13.4. And it may fall out, that not one or two, or a few, but a multitude may doe evill and commit ſome outrage, who cannot be reſiſted but by force of armes: the Magiſtrate then is herein to doe his dutie, to ſuppreſſe the evill, and to take vengeance on them.

4. But whereas it will be objected, that there are no precepts in the new Teſtament, concerning this matter, but onely in the old: wee anſwer, 1. That it is ſufficient that we finde it there: for whatſoever is prescribed in the old Teſtament, not repugnant to, nor reverſed in the new, Chriſtians are to receive and obey: it was the wicked opinion of the Marcionites, and Manichees, which rejected the old Teſtament. 2. And the reaſon why no mention is made in the new Teſtament of waging of battell, and making of warre, is, for that there was then no Chriſtian Magiſtrate, by whoſe authoritie warre muſt be taken in hand. And becauſe there was then no ſuch civill power in the Church, the Lord gave unto his Apoſtles an extraordinarie power in puniſhing the wicked, as S. Peter did ſtrike Ananias and Sapphira with ſudden death, *Act.*5. So they needed no ſchooles then, becauſe they were furniſhed with extraordinarie gifts of the Spirit: but now they are needfull, thoſe extraordinarie gifts being ceaſed: and ſo it is neceſſarie now that the Magiſtrate ſhould uſe the materiall ſword; that ſpirituall ſword of vengeance, which the Apoſtles uſed, being now no more exerciſed.

5. Briefly ſomewhat ſhall be added here, what conditions are required, and ought to concurre to make lawfull warre; which are theſe three: 1. By whoſe authoritie. 2. Upon what occaſion. 3. In what manner warre muſt be taken in hand. The conditions required in lawfull warre.

1. Warre muſt not be attempted without the authoritie of the Magiſtrate: for he beareth the ſword, Rom.13.4. If the examples of Sampſon and Abraham be objected: for the firſt we anſwer, that hee was moved by the Spirit: for the ſecond, that he was no private man, or ſubject to any other, but free, and at his owne command: beſide, he was not without the direction of Gods Spirit. And further, if a true man muſt defend himſelfe againſt a theefe by the ſword, or a Citie being ſuddenly beſieged, or invaded of the enemie, the Magiſtrate being abſent: in theſe caſes it is lawfull to uſe the ſword, becauſe though in particular they have not the expreſſe conſent of the Magiſtrate, yet in generall the lawes permit, that it ſhall be lawfull for every one in ſuch deſperat caſes to defend themſelves.

2. The cauſes of juſt warre are theſe three: 1. When as any battell is enterpriſed by the ſpeciall Commandement of God: as Saul was ſent againſt Amalek. 2. To reſcue and recover ſuch things as are unlawfully taken away: as David purſued the Amalekites that had burned Ziklag, and carried away their goods, their wives, and redeemed them againe, 1 *Sam.*30. 3. To deliver the oppreſſed, and to bridle the inſolencie and crueltie of the wicked: as Abraham followed after the foure Kings that had taken Lot priſoner, and delivered him out of their hands, *Gen.*14.

3. The manner alſo muſt bee conſidered, that although the cauſe of warre be juſt, yet that it be not raſhly fet upon, but all other meanes muſt firſt be tried: as Ezekiah, before he would by force reſiſt the King of Aſſyria, ſought to have pacified him by paying a certaine tribute, 2 *King.*18.14. So the children of Iſrael, before they aſſaulted their brethren the children of Benjamin by open warre, becauſe of the wickedneſſe of the Gibeonites committed againſt the Levites wife, firſt required of them that thoſe wicked men might be delivered into their hands: which when they wilfully refuſed, then they reſolved to ſet upon them, *Iudg.*20.13. Ex Simlero.

4. Confut. Againſt the Romaniſts, that make difference betweene counſels and precepts.

In the next place the Romaniſts are to bee dealt withall: and here commeth firſt to be examined that aſſertion: that whereas we affirme, that even in this Commandement, Thou ſhalt not kill, that dutie of charitie is preſcribed, even in loving our enemies: they affirme, that this is no precept, which we are bound unto, but a counſell of perfection, and a worke of ſupererogation: *Thom. Aquin.*2.2. *qu.*25. *art.*9.

Contra. 1. This derogateth from the authoritie of Chriſt, to ſay that he gave counſell to his Diſciples, and did not by his authoritie command them. 2. Seeing all the duties of charitie are required by the law

(for love is the fulfilling of the law) it followeth that even this dutie also in loving our enemies is exacted by the law, and not left free. 3. Our Saviour adding further as a reason hereof, that ye may bee children of your Father which is in heaven, sheweth that wee cannot otherwise bee the true children of our heavenly Father, unlesse we be like him herein, even in loving of our enemies: then it will follow, that it is not a counsell of conveniencie, but a precept of necessitie: Ex Bastingio. See more of this popish distinction of counsels and precepts, Synops. Centur.1.err.84.

5. Confut. Against the Popish distinction of mortall and veniall sinnes.

ANother assertion of the Romanists here to be taxed is, that anger, si sit talis motus, ut deducatur est peccatum mortale, &c. If it be such a motion, as that the reason is drawne to consent, it is a mortall sinne: Si usque ad consensum non pervertitur ratio, est peccatum veniale, &c. But if reason be not perverted to consent, then it is a veniall sinne: but if it bee not a mortall or deadly sinne in the nature or kinde thereof, as is murther, and adulterie, then although there be a consent, it is no mortall sinne. Thom. in opuscul.

This distinction of sinnes veniall, and not veniall, in their owne nature, in respect of the greatnesse or smalnesse of the sinne, is not to bee admitted for these reasons: 1. In the respect of the nature of sinne which of it selfe deserveth death: Rom. 6.23. The wages of sinne is death: and sinne is the transgression of the law, 1 Ioh. 3.4. and every transgression of the law is under the curse, Galath. 3.10. 2. In respect of the infinite Majestie of God, which to violate, can bee no veniall sinne of it selfe: considering also the perfect and absolute righteousnesse of God, which cannot abide the least blemish or imperfection: therefore in regard of the perfect righteousnesse and infinite Majestie of God, no sinne committed against God can in it selfe bee veniall. 3. And concerning this motion and passion of anger, even when it is suddenly, and unadvised, though there bee no further purpose or intendment to hurt, it is guiltie of judgement, Matth. 5.22. Where, by the way, it shall not bee amisse to note the difference here between Thomas Aquin. and Bellarmine: for Thomas holdeth this anger here spoken of to bee a deadly sinne, in that he saith, He that is angrie with his brother, shall be guiltie of judgement, it must be understood de motu tendente in nocumentum, &c. of a motion tending to hurt, where there is consent, and for that motion it is deadly sinne. Sic Thomas in opuscul. Ex Lippoman. But Bellarmine affirmeth that this is a veniall sinne, and so deserveth not everlasting damnation, because hell fire is onely due unto the last, to call one fole, Bellarm. lib. 1 de purgator. cap. 4.

Contra. 1. Every mortall sinne deserveth damnation: but in Thomas Aquins judgement, as is shewed before, this anger here spoken of is a mortall sinne. Ergo. 2. The naming of hell fire onely in the last place, sheweth not a divers kinde of punishment from the rest, but a divers degree of punishment: for otherwise, judgement in Scripture, is taken for damnation: as Psal. 143.2. Enter not into judgement with thy servant, for no flesh is righteous in thy sight. So *Rom.*2.1. In that thou judgest another, thou condemnest thy selfe. Here to judge and condemne are taken for all one: to be culpable then of judgement, is to be guiltie of damnation.

4. Yet we admit this distinction of veniall and mortall sinnes, if it be understood, not in respect of the nature of sinne, but of the qualitie of the persons: for unto those that beleeve, all sinnes are veniall, as pardonable through the mercie of God: *Rom.*8.1. There is no condemnation to those that are in Christ Iesus: but to the wicked and unbeleevers, all their sinnes are mortall: *Rom.*6.23. to them the stipend and wages of sinne is death. See more also hereof, Synops. Papist. Centur.4.err.6.

4. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Not to be hastie to anger.

THou shalt not kill. Our blessed Saviour expounding this Commandement, Matth. 5.22. sheweth that even hee which is angrie unadvisedly transgresseth this precept: which may bee a caveat unto furious, cholerike, and hastie men, that they should bridle their intemperate affections, and not give place to rage: for as Chrysostome saith, Si concedatur licentia irascendi, datur & causa homicidii faciendi: If libertie be granted unto anger, even cause many times will bee given of murther. But if any man shall say, when hee is angrie with a man for railing and reviling, that hee is angrie with his sinne; let him consider, that when he heareth the name of God blasphemed, he is not so much moved, which sheweth that he is angrie in respect of his owne name and person, which is called in question, and not simply for the sinne, Simler.

2. Observ. The challenging of one another into the field forbidden.

AND if it be simply unlawfull to kill, then let such looke unto it, that take it to be their honour and estimation to challenge one another into the field, whereupon often ensueth murther: for we have otherwise learned in the Scriptures, Omnem cupiditatem seipsum ulciscendi vetitam esse: That all desire for a man to revenge himselfe is unlawfull: Simler. For such doe usurpe the Lords office. The Wise-man saith, *Say not thou, I will recompence evill, but waite upon the Lord, and he shall save thee, Prov.*20.22.

3. Obs.

3. Obſerv. Surfetting by exceſſe forbidden.

Further, by this precept they are condemned, qui ſibi ſe occidunt, &c. which kill themſelves with ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe, riot and exceſſe: Baſting. whereupon often enſueth alſo quarrelling, and wounds, as the Wiſe-man ſheweth: To whom is woe, to whom is ſtrife, &c. to whom are wounds without cauſe, to whom is redneſſe of the eyes? to them that tarrie long at wine, Prov.23.29,30.

The ſeventh Commandement.

I. Queſtions diſcuſſed.

Quest. I. Of the order and negative propounding of this Commandement.

Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie. 1. This Commandement very fitly followeth after the other, Thou ſhalt not kill, Quia poſt injuriam, qua infertur perſona, nulla eſt major, quam illa qua infertur conjugi: next after the injurie done to the perſon, there is none greater, than that which is offred unto the wife perſon; for they two ſhall be one fleſh, Thom. in opuſcul. So alſo Lyranus. 2. This Commandement is compounded negatively, rather than affirmatively: becauſe the negative is more generall than the affirmative, tam quoad tempora, quàm perſonas, both in reſpect of the time and perſons: for at all times, and in all places it is unlawfull to kill, to commit adulterie, &c. but at all times, and in all places wee muſt not honour our parents: and for the perſons, wee muſt not offer violence or wrong unto any; but for the affirmative, it is impoſſible to doe good to all, *Thom. in Epiſt. ad Roman. cap.*13. See before *queſt.*1. upon the fifth Commandement.

Quest. II. Whether the uncleane deſire of the heart be forbidden in this precept.

IN this Commandement, not onely the impuritie of the bodie, but of the ſoule alſo is forbidden, and chaſtitie commanded in both: Gregories opinion is, that God Per hoc præceptum, non peccata cogitationis, ſed opera reſecuit, &c. Doth not by this precept cut off the ſinfull thoughts, but the ſinfull act: and that Chriſt afterward in the law, *Cogitationes hominum religavit, Did bind alſo the thoughts of men. In Ezech. homil.*2. Auguſtine alſo is of opinion, that in this precept, Ipſum opus notatum eſt, The worke of uncleannneſſe is ſpecified: but in the other, Thou ſhalt not covet, Ipſa concupiſcentia, the very concupiſcence: becauſe, which ſometimes it may fall out, that a man may commit adulterie, cùm non concupiſcat illam, when he doth not covet her, but upon ſome other cauſe doth companie with her: Aliquando eam concupiſcat, nec tamen propter pœnam timens: Sometime he may covet her, and not company with her fearing the puniſhment, *quæſt.*71. in Exod.

Contra. 1. Our Saviour Chriſt doth not adde any thing to the law of Moſes, or bringeth in any new interpretation, but doth free and cleare the law from the groſſe and corrupt gloſes of the Scribes and Phariſies, delivering the true ſenſe and meaning thereof, as it was firſt given unto the people: And therefore Chryſoſtome well ſaith: Ut per concordiam mandatorum ipſe inveniatur author legis fuiſſe & gratiæ: that by the agreement of the Commandements, in the old and new Teſtament, the ſame may be found to be the author of the law, and of grace, in Matth. hom. 11. And that even the inward concupiſcence of nature was forbidden in the old Teſtament, it is evident by Iobs practice, in whoſe heart the morall law was written, *I have made a covenant with mine eyes, why then ſhould I thinke on a maid? chap.*31.1.

2. Concerning Auguſtines opinion: the concupiſcence, which is joyned with a full purpoſe, onely wanting opportunitie, and being reſtrained by feare from the externall act, is a breach of this Commandement, and not of the laſt, as our bleſſed Saviour expoundeth, *Matth.*5.28. What kinde of concupiſcence is prohibited in the laſt precept, and how it differeth herein from this, ſhall bee ſhewed afterward, when we come to that place. 2. And that commixtion which hath no concupiſcence, nor conſent of will, being violent and forced, as in them which are raviſhed, it is no adulterie at all, which alwayes proceedeth out of the heart.

3. But that the inward ſanctimonie and puritie of the minde is here commanded, and the contrarie forbidden, it is thus proved: 1. By the definition of puritie, and chaſtitie, which is to be holy both in body and ſpirit, as S. Paul deſcribeth a true Virgin, 1 *Cor.*7.34. So the ſame Apoſtle, 1 *Theſſ.*5.23. That whole ſpirit, ſoule and bodie, may be kept blameleſſe unto the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. 2. Both the ſoules and bodies of the faithfull are the Temples of the Spirit, and therefore ought to be kept holy, 1 *Cor.*3.16. Know yee not that yee are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? if any defile the Temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy, Baſting. 3. Chryſoſtome urgeth theſe foure reaſons: firſt, from the interpretation of our bleſſed Saviour, who ſheweth that this Commandement is broken in the inward luſt and concupiſcence, *Matth.*5.28. 4. Secondly, from the analogie and correſpondencie, which it hath with other Commandements: that Iraſci proximis ſine cauſa, to be angrie with our neighbour without cauſe, is a breach of the precedent Commandement, Thou ſhalt not kill: So Concupiſcere feminam alienam, &c. to deſire a ſtrange woman, though the act of concupiſcence follow not, is againſt this precept. 5. Thirdly, in reſpect of God. Qui non tantum opus hominis aſpicit, quantum cor; Who doth not onely looke unto the worke of man, as to his heart. 6. Fourthly, becauſe concupiſcence is the cauſe of adultery: Omne adulterium ex concupiſcentia, All adulterie proceedeth from concupiſcence, as our bleſſed

Saviour

Saviour sheweth, Mark.7.21. Even from the heart of man proceed evill thoughts, adulteries, fornications, &c. Quomodo ergo tolletur adulterium, nisi præcisa fuerit concupiscentia, &c. How then shall adulterie be taken away, unlesse concupiscence be first cut off? Homil.12. in Matth. Seeing then that the effect, that is, adultery, and outward uncleannesse is forbidden in this precept, it followeth also, that the very cause thereof, which is concupiscence, should be restrained.

Quest. III. Other acts of uncleannesse beside adulterie here forbidden.

COncerning the externall act of uncleannesse, which is in the very letter of this precept prohibited, the Hebrewes are of opinion, that onely concubitus adulterinus, the adulterous act is here forbidden. But this opinion is easily convinced: 1. Tostatus urgeth this reason; Qui prohibet minus malum, à fortiori prohibet majus, &c. He that forbiddeth the lesse evill, doth much more prohibit the greater evill: for there are more unlawfull acts of uncleannesse, than adulterie, as those unnaturall sinnes, committed either with another kinde, as with brute beasts, which is monstrous, or with the same kinde, and with the same sex, as Sodomitrie, and abusing of the male, or with the same sex, but in degrees forbidden, such is incest, with those that are neerely joyned in affinitie and consanguinitie: and though none of these fall out, yet if by violence any be forced to uncleannesse, as in the ravishing and deflowring of wives or Virgins: all these are more odious than adulterie, and therefore they are likewise forbidden. 2. Vrsinus thus reasoneth; The end and scope of this precept is to be considered, which is to preserve chastitie, and to maintaine matrimonie: whatsoever then is contrarie hereunto, is forbidden; and therefore all acts of uncleannesse, as well adulterie as others, which are against chastitie, and matrimoniall sanctitie, are here restrained. Calvin addeth further, Lex est justè vivendi perfecta regula, The law is a perfect rule of righteous living: therefore not one kinde of uncleannesse, but all whatsoever are in this precept restrained, which are against righteous and upright living: as all unnaturall uncleannesse, incest, fornication, all pollutions, wherewith the bodie is defiled.

Quest. IV. Of the sinnes of unnaturall lust.

THe unnaturall sinnes of uncleannesse are of three sorts: 1. Those which are committed with another kinde, as with brute beasts, Levit.18.23. Thou shalt not lie with any beast to be defiled therewith: which enormous and monstrous sinne doth violate the law of nature, and bringeth a great infamie upon mankinde, in that any should bee found among them, of such beastly and vile inclination, Tostat.qu.23. And herein is discovered the wickednesse and corruption of mans nature, which without Gods grace is prone even unto the most vile, monstrous and ugly sinnes.

2. Another kinde of unnaturall lust, is that which is committed with that sex, which is not for that naturall use; which was the sinne of the Heathen, When man with man wrought filthinesse, Rom.1.27. Such were the Sodomites, which with one consent came from all quarters of the Citie, and beset Lots house and would have offred villanie unto the two young men (which were indeed two Angels) whom Lot had received into his house, Genes.19. These, whom the Apostle calleth ἀρσενοκοίτας, liers with men, with others there named, are without their great repentance, excluded the Kingdome of heaven, and inheritance of God, 1 Cor.6.9.

3. The Apostle in the same place nameth also the third unnaturall sinne of lust, of those whom the Apostle calleth μαλακοὶ, effeminate, wanton, and lascivious persons: molles, as the Latine Interpreter translateth, who doe commit uncleannesse with the same kinde, with the same sex, and with the same person, that is, with themselves, in the voluntarie emission of their nature, such as was in part the sinne of Er and Onan, the sonnes of Iudah, whom the Lord destroyed for their wickednesse, Gen.38. these are called molles, tender, delicate, effeminate, Quia nullam tristitiam tolerare possunt, because they can endure no griefe in resisting of carnall concupiscence, Tostat. quæst.22.

Quest. V. Why some kinde of uncleannesse is not forbidden by humane lawes.

BUt here the question will bee demanded, what the reason is, seeing this kinde of filthinesse is odious before God and man, and by the Word of God condemned, yet the lawes of men make no provision against it.

Hereof two reasons may be rendred: 1. Because this kinde is committed secretly, so that it cannot be proved by witnesse, and so by due proofe be censured: such sinnes the lawes of men specially provide for as may be by witnesse or other evidence manifested: now this uncleannesse can hardly be brought to light but by the parties themselves, who are not so impudent, as to act any such thing in open view: as the Picture of Priapus standing aloft upon the staires, used to shew his privie parts unto the people, to provoke them to beastly lust: So also other secret sinnes, as the adulterie and murther of the heart, mens lawes cannot meddle with, unlesse they be such as are against the state of the Prince and Commonwealth; for then, even first thoughts and purposes, though they take no effect, yet if they can be discovered, as by the confession of the parties, or by their fellow conspirators, are worthily punished, Tostat.quæst.22.

2. Another reason is, because Solos actus justitiæ mandat humana lex, humane lawes onely command the acts of justice: and forbid all such acts whereby one hurteth another, and so humane societie is hindered: hereof it is, that intemperance, prodigalitie, pride, cowardlinesse, and such like, are not censured by humane lawes, because they are no acts of injustice tending to the hurt of others. So other acts of uncleannesse, as of adulterie, incest, rape, are by law restrained, because the hurt and disgrace of others is thereby procured: but this mollicies, licèt sit actus intemperantiæ, non est tamen actus injustitiæ, &c. This effemi-feminate pollution of the body by it ſelfe, though it be an act of intemperancy, yet it is no act of injuſtice, becauſe none other is hurt thereby, which thing humane lawes eſpecially provide for, Toſtat. quæſt. 22.

QUEST. VI. Of the greatneſſe of the ſinne of adulterie.

Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie. Here by the very letter of the law, that grievous and hainous ſinne of adulterie is forbidden: the greatneſſe of which ſinne is thus amplified, and ſet forth. 1. Ambroſe thus deſcribeth the ſinne of adulterie: God made two in the beginning, and commanded that they two ſhould be one fleſh, Quod unum ſeparas corpus, &c. naturæ adulterium eſt: In that thou doeſt ſeparate one body, &c. thou doeſt adulterate nature, &c. Firſt therefore by adulterie, the holy inſtitution of God is violated, which maketh man and wife but one fleſh: Ambroſ. Hexemer. lib. 5. cap. 7. 2. Chryſoſtome multiplieth many reaſons together, Qui capta uxore poſt hoc carnis remedium alienæ injuriatur, nullam veniam meretur: hoc jam laſcivia eſt, &c. He that having taken a wife, wrongeth another woman, ſhall hardly get pardon: for this is a ſinne of wantonneſſe. 3. Si ſuam repudiare & alii vacare non licet, &c. If it be unlawfull for a man to put away his wife, and uſe another, (which is a kinde of adulterie) how much more is he to be blamed, qui ſuæ aliam addit, which joyneth another to his wife? 4. Againe, the greatneſſe of the ſinne of adulterie appeareth, by comparing it with other great ſinnes: it is ſo hainous before God, Ut qui ab Idolatra viro, ipſo nolente, diſcedat, puniatur; ſin ab adultero, minimè; That if the wife depart from her husband that is an Idolater, againſt his will, ſhee is puniſhed; if from an adulterer, ſhe is not: the firſt the Apoſtle ſheweth, that it is unlawfull for a woman to depart from an unbeleeving husband, being willing to dwell with her, 1 Cor. 7. 13. but for adulterie, the wife may be diſmiſſed, Matt. 5. 32. 5. Further, by comparing of the effects together, this ſinne appeareth what it is: Quæ cum infideli habitat, non eſt immunda, &c. ſhe which dwelleth with an infidell, is not polluted or uncleane: For the unbeleeving husband is ſanctified by the wife, 1 Cor. 7. 14. But the fornicator, and much more the adulterer, maketh the members of Chriſt, the members of an harlot, 1 Cor. 6. 14. 6. In hac vita ſecum innumera mala trahit; This ſinne of adultery and fornication, bringeth an innumerable company of evils with it in this life, beſide the puniſhment of the next: Cogitur vitam miſeram & infœlicem vivere, he liveth a miſerable and unhappy life: Alienum hoſtium trepidus ingreditur, omnia timet, liberos & ſervos: he entreth trembling into anothers houſe, he is afraid of every thing, of the ſervants, and the children, &c. Sic fere Chryſoſt. ſuper Ioan. hom. 62. Thom. Aquin. A woman committeth three great ſinnes in the ſinne of adultery: ſhe is firſt Sacrilega, ſhe committeth ſacrilege in going againſt Gods ordinance, in parting that aſunder, which God hath coupled: ſecondly, ſhe is Proditrix, ſhe ſinneth by betraying her husband, under whoſe government ſhe is, and giving her ſelfe over to another, for the woman hath no power over her owne bodie, but the man, and ſo likewiſe of the man, 1 Cor. 7. 4. Thirdly, ſhe is furatrix, ſhe committeth theft: Ex alieno viro ſibi conſtituit filios, ſhe getteth her children by another man, Thom. in opuſcul.

8. This ſinne of adulterie is one of thoſe which excludeth out of the Kingdome of heaven, 1 Cor. 6. 9. and whoremongers among the reſt ſhall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone, Apoc. 21. 8. And in this world, though adulterers and adultereſſes ſhould eſcape the cenſure of men, as often they doe, yet God will not ſuffer ſuch to goe unpuniſhed: hee will judge them himſelfe, Heb. 13. 4. Therefore the Wiſe-man ſetting forth the adulterous woman, ſaith, that ſhee forſaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God, Prov. 2. 17. God therefore will take revenge of ſuch, as tranſgreſſors of his covenant. This made Ioſeph that hee would not conſent to the unlawfull deſire of his miſtreſſe, ſaying, How can I doe this great wickedneſſe, and ſo ſinne againſt God? Gen. 39. 4.

QUEST. VII. Adultery as well forbidden in the husband as in the wife.

Further, it will here be enquired, whether this precept, Thou ſhalt not commit adulterie, doth not indifferently binde both the man and the woman, that as well the husband as the wife, if hee goe unto ſtrange fleſh, committeth adulterie. In Auguſtines time men tooke unto themſelves great libertie herein, and it was growne to be ſuch a generall cuſtome, ut jam & mulieribus fere perſuaſum ſit licere hoc quod non licere mulieribus; That women are almoſt now perſwaded, that it is lawfull for men, but not for women: for it is often heard, that the wives have beene brought to the market place to be publiſhed, quæ facto cum ſervis inventa ſunt, which have beene found with their ſervants: but it was never heard of, that a man was ſet in the market place, qui inventus eſt cum ancilla, which was found with his maid. Auguſtine by divers reaſons overthroweth this wicked cuſtome, ſhewing, that it was par peccatum, the ſinne both in the husband and wife: and in the like ſinne, that the man ſeemeth more innocent, facit non veritas, ſed humana perverſitas: not the divine veritie is the cauſe, but humane perverſitie. He uſeth theſe perſwaſions:

From the faith that is made mutually by both the husband and the wife unto Chriſt: Quod à me petis, redde mihi: fidem tibi debeo, fidem mihi debes: fidem Chriſto ambo debemus, &c. That which thou aſkeſt of me, render unto me: I have plight thee my faith, and thou haſt plight me thy troth: we both plight our faith unto Chriſt, &c.

He reaſoneth from the like: Nolite ire vos, quò eas ſequi non vultis: Yee men, goe not that way, whither you would not have your wives to follow: ſay not, I goe not to another mans wife, I goe unto a harlot: Vis ne dicat tibi, uxor tua, &c. Wouldeſt thou thy wife ſhould ſay unto thee; I goe not to another womans husband, I goe unto my man or ſervant?

From the preeminence and ſuperiority of man: Say not, we cannot: Quod poteſt fœmina, vir non poteſt? Can a woman forbeare, and cannot a man? For what, illa carnem non portat, &c. is not ſhee alſo of the ſame bloud? was not the woman firſt beguiled of the Serpent? But you will ſay, that the woman may eaſily easily avoid adulterie, because shee is held in by the watchfulnesse of her husband, and by the terror of humane lawes: Multa custodia faciunt fœminam castam, virum castum faciat ipsa virilitas: Many keepers make a woman chaste: and let manhood it selfe make the man chaste: nam ideo muliebri major custodia, quia major infirmitas: for therefore a woman had need of more strait keeping, because shee is the weaker: but husband and the terror of lawes watch over her, and God watcheth over thee. To this purpose Augustine.

4. Further, the very letter of the precept, which in the Hebrew is put in the Masculine, to the male, Thou, that is, the man, shall not commit adulterie. Augustine well inferreth: that although it be once expressly forbidden to the man, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbours wife: Ista lex non solum viris, sed fœminis data est: Yet this law is not onely given unto men, but unto women also: and so this precept well bindeth women, as men, as all the rest of the Commandements doe: Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steale, &c. Augustin. qu.71. in Exod.

5. Lastly, the Apostle sheweth, that as the woman hath no power of her owne bodie, but the husband: so neither hath the husband power over his owne bodie, but the wife, 1 *Cor.*7.4. and therefore as well the one as the other are restrained of all carnall libertie to goe unto strange flesh.

Quest. VIII. Whether adulterie be a more grievous sinne in the man or the woman.

But this being agreed upon, that adulterie is a sinne as well in the husband as in the wife, it will further be demanded, in which of them it is a greater sinne, or whether it be not equall in both.

1. Augustine thinketh, as is shewed before, that it is par peccatum, a like sinne whether in the husband or in the wife. And Thomas addeth further, that in the time of the law there was not an equalitie: for the man among the Jewes might have many wives, but not the wife many husbands: Ideo matrimonium nunquam statum perfectum habuit, nisi in lege Christi: Therefore matrimonie had never any perfect state but under the law of Christ. But to this it may be answered, that the institution of matrimonie being first made in Paradise, was the same both under the law of Moses, and the law of Christ: but that much was permitted and tolerated unto the Jewes onely for the hardnesse of their heart, as our blessed Saviour sheweth, *Matth.*19.

2. Some doe urge the lawes of men, and the greater punishments, which have beene laid upon women for adulterie, rather than upon men: and that therefore the sinne of the woman should bee the greater. But this sheweth not the greatnesse of the sinne before God, but the greater inconvenience that is brought upon the civill and politike state (which the lawes of men seeke chiefly to preserve) by the adulterie of the woman, rather than of the man.

3. Some thinke that it is a greater sinne in the man, because of his authoritie, quia vir caput mulieris, because the man is head of the woman: and the Apostle biddeth, that women, if they would learne any thing, should aske their husbands at home, 1 *Cor.*14.35. Est ergo vir doctor mulieris: The man then is the womans teacher: then as the Priest sinneth more than a lay man, because he is his teacher; so the man doth more grievously offend than the woman: Thomas in opusc. But this proveth not that the sinne of the man simply is greater than the sinne of the woman, but in a certaine respect.

4. Wherefore the best answer is, that the sinne of adulterie in some respects is equall in both sexes, and in some other greater, both in the one and the other.

1. In regard of the law of Matrimonie, whereby they have given their faith each to the other, the sinne seemeth to be equall: for the man hath no more power over himselfe in this behalfe, than the woman, as S. Paul teacheth, 1 *Cor.*7.4. and therefore by Moses law, as well the adulterer, as the adulteresse, was to be put to death.

2. But in respect of the qualitie and condition of the person, because the woman is the weaker vessell, and the man is the head of the woman, and of the more strength, this sinne is greater in the man, because hee therein giveth an evill example to the weaker partie, and teacheth her an evill lesson, as Siasticus 9.1.

3. But the inconveniences considered that follow hereupon, as the ignominie and shame of houses, confusion of inheritances, and the obtruding of false heires by the adulterie and false play of women; this sinne is thought to exceed: Simler. Which might be the reason also why among the Jewes, the men were permitted to have divers wives, but not the women to have divers husbands.

Quest. IX. Whether adulterie be now necessarily to be punished by death.

Somewhat here would bee inserted concerning the punishment of adulterie by the sentence of death, wherein there are these three opinions: 1. Some thinke that adulterie ought to be punished capitally according to the judiciall law of Moses, and not otherwise. Piscator giveth divers reasons hereof: but of these especially I will single out: 1. Delicta temporibus naturam suam non mutant: Sinnes doe not change their nature in time. 2. Deus naturam suam non mutat: Neither doth God change his nature, so that he hateth sinne no lesse now than in times past, neither will he have it lesse punished: Præfat. in Exod.

Contra. 1. The nature of sinne is the same, though the punishment bee altered; adulterie is as grievous before God now as it was under the law: but the circumstances as of place and person, so also time, may give occasion of aggravating or alleviating the punishment. Hee that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath was stoned to death, Numb. 30. because it was necessarie that the law at the beginning, before then newly given, should bee established by severitie. But yet our Saviour excuseth his Apostles for gathering and rubbing eares of corne upon the Sabbath, *Matth.*12. Saint Peter pronounced the sentence of death upon Ananias and Sapphira, for detaining part of that which they had given to the Church, the terror and example of others: yet now, such dissimulation is not held to be worthie of death. 2. Neither is God changed, by the changing or mitigating the rigour of the law: but he removing the same, applies the law according to the different respect of times and persons: for as well hee might bee said to be changed in the changing of other lawes, as of the ceremoniall, and judicials thereto annexed.

3. If all judicials annexed to the Morall law are now to be necessarily retained, then the violating of the rest of the Lords day, as then of the Sabbath, which was in that respect morall, should be punished with death; and blaspheming, and prophaning of the name of God by swearing, as Levit. 24. 16. which would seeme to be too rigorous.

4. And seeing the times of the Gospell are the times of mercie, and those under the Law were the times of rigour and severitie, to abate somewhat of the rigorous punishments of the Law, not leaving sinne unpunished, may seeme not unlawfull.

5. Another opinion is, that adulterie is not at all now to be punished by death: for our Saviour would not determine the woman taken in adulterie, Joh. 8.

Contra. 1. Upon that example of Christ, it cannot be gathered, that it is unlawfull to censure adultery with death: for it would follow as well, that adultery is not to be punished at all, because Christ inflicteth no punishment at all upon her: onely this may be inferred, that by Christs silence and forbearance it appeareth, that the punishment of adultery by death, is not necessary: for if his will had beene, that the rigour of the law should stand in force, our Saviour needed not to have feared their trap, lest they should have accused him of rigour and severitie, if he had judged her worthie of death: and if he had repealed the law, they would have accused him, as contrarie to Moses. 3. This then may bee collected by Christs wisedome and convenience, that it is not necessarie that adulterie should alwayes and in all places be sentenced with death, but rather, that it is left indifferent: that neither those Churches are to be condemned of too much lenitie, which follow the president of Moses judicials herein, nor yet they are to be accused of too much rigour, which judge adulterie otherwise than by death, as they see it best to fit their estate, so that the measure of the punishment be answerable to the quality of the sinne. By Moses law, they which committed adulterie were to die the death, that is, if it were duplex adulterium, that both the adulterer and adulteresse were married, or if the woman were anothers wife, Levit. 20. 10. otherwise it was not death for a married man beside his wife, to have a Concubine, or to one wife to take another, so shee were not another mans wife. What will they thinke now of such single adulterie, that would have it revenged by death? they have no president in Moses law, for the punishing of this kinde of adulterie by death: then it is evident, that all adulterie by the law of Moses was not adjudged to death.

The Romane lawes followed Moses president, in punishing of adulterers: so did some other nations besides. The king of Babel burnt Zedekiah and Ahab, two false Prophets, with fire, for committing adultery, Jer. 29. 22. Among the Egyptians, the man taken in adulterie was beaten with a thousand stripes, and the woman had her nose cut off: Diodor. Sicul. lib. 2. cap. 3. The Germanes used to set the adulteresse before her kindred, and cut off her haire, and then her husband drave her before him through the towne, beating her with cudgels: Cornel. Tacit. de morib. German. The Cumeans placed the adulteresse in a publike place upon a stone in open view, that shee might be derided and scorned of all, and then set upon an asse: and ever after shee was called ὀνοβάτις, an asse rider: and the stone they abhorred as an unlucky thing: Plutar. tom. 1. in quæstionib. Græcis. These or some other grievous punishment may be imposed upon the odious crime of adulterie, where it is not recompensed with losse of life: but to dallie with so great iniquitie, and either to winke at it, or to let it passe with a light and superficiall checke, is displeasing to God, and offensive to all good men. See more of this question, how farre Moses Judicials are to binde, 1 qu. generall in Exod.

QUEST. X. Whether it be lawfull for the husband to kill his wife taken in adulterie.

Whereas the ancient Romane lawes permitted the husband to kill his wife taken in adulterie, as appeareth in the declamations of Seneca, how a man having lost both his hands in warre, comming home and taking his wife with another in adulterie, commanded his sonne to kill them both, and for refusing did abdicate and renounce him for his sonne: Some would justifie this also as lawfull, pretending the example of Phinehes, that stroke the adulterer and adulteresse thorow at once.

Contra. 1. Though the ancient lawes did not punish the husband that killed his wife taken in adulterie, yet that act was not thereby made lawfull, but the law did therein beare with the just griefe of the husband. 2. And though the lawes of men should tolerate it, yet before God he committeth murther, because he doth it in his rage, and in his owne revenge. 3. But the latter Romane lawes gave no such liberty to the man to kill his wife, but onely the adulterer with whom shee is taken in her husbands house: for else, if men hated their wives, they might seeke occasion to be rid of them: and if he were a great personage, with whom the woman was found, it was not lawfull for the husband to kill him, but to keepe him foure and twentie houres prisoner at home, untill he brought the witnesses. 4. Phinehes case is altogether unlike, for beside that he was stirred by the extraordinarie motion of the Spirit: if his act should be followed, it might be lawfull for any man to kill the adulterer, and the adulteresse, not for the husband onely: for both of them, whom Phinehes killed, were strangers unto him: the one of another tribe, and the woman a Midianitesse, ex Simlero.

QUEST.

QUEST. XI. Simple fornication, whether a breach of this Commandement.

THou shalt not commit adulterie, &c. 1. Some are of opinion, that simplex fornicatio, single fornication which is soluti cum soluta, of a single man with a single woman, is not here forbidden, Oleaster granteth that fornication with a woman, quæ esset alteri, vel omnibus exposita, which was either defiled another, or common to many, was forbidden to the Israelites, as Deut. 22. 21. She that played the whore her fathers house should be put to death: but otherwise it was not; in this Commandement therefore thinketh adultery only to be forbidden, according to the native signification of the word naaph, which signifieth only to commit adultery.

Contra. 1. But I rather preferre the opinion of Aben Ezrah, a learned Rabbin, who thinketh concubitum, qui non est viri cum uxore sua hic esse prohibitum: That all companying with a woman besides the man with the wife, is here forbidden: for seeing single fornication is against the Law of nature, as before the Law was written, adjudged Thamar for her whoredome to the fire, Gen. 38. as Oleaster selfe confesseth, it must also of necessity be held to be a breach of the Morall law, which is grounded on the Law of nature. 2. And as for the use of the word, Augustine well sheweth, by the interpretation of our blessed Saviour, Matth. 5. 9. that even adultery is a kinde of fornication: He that dismisseth his wife except for fornication, causeth her to commit adulterie: the word is πορνεία, fornication, which is taken for μοιχεία, adulterie, Beza in hunc locum.

2. But that single fornication, even betweene parties both unmarried and unbetrothed, is forbidden in this Commandement, it shall bee manifested by these reasons. 1. Augustine thus argueth: If the kinde of fornication be not forbidden here, Ubi sit illa prohibita in decalogo, nimium invenire posse, Whether it can be found prohibited elsewhere in the decalogue, I am ignorant, &c. But it is certaine, it is either forbidden here, or no where in the morall law. 2. Againe, Si furti nomine bene intelligitur illicita usurpatio rei alienæ, &c. if under the name of theft is well understood all unlawfull usurping other mens goods, Profectò & nomine mœchiæ omnis illicitus concubitus, &c. by the same reason also the name of adulterie, all unlawfull companie with a woman is forbidden, August. quæst. 71. August. in lib. de 10. chord. cap. 9.

3. Further, Augustine in another place thus reasoneth: Say not, Uxorem non habeo, &c. I have no wife and therefore I sinne not against her: neither doe I covet another mans wife: ad meretricem eo, I goe unto an harlot; In Deum peccas, cujus imaginem per diffluentia libidinis in te violasti, &c. Thou sinnest against God, whose image thou hast violated in thy selfe by thy overflowing lust. 4. Againe, Deus qui scit tibi utile sit, uxorem concessit, hoc præcepit, hoc jussit; The Lord, who knoweth what is best for thee, hath granted thee a wife, that thou shouldest not wander in lust: this he commandeth thee and doest thou not containe thy selfe, &c. Therefore the fornicator, in giving himselfe to lust, and refusing the remedy which God hath appointed, therein offendeth against God.

2. Thom. Aquin. addeth these arguments: 1. A regno Dei non excluditur aliquis nisi per peccatum mortale, &c. one is not excluded the Kingdome of heaven, but by a mortall sinne: but fornication excludeth out of the Kingdome of God, 1 Cor. 6. 9. therefore it is a deadly sinne. 2. Licet non detur corpus uxoris datur tamen corpus Christi, &c. although he have not a wife given, against whose bodie he sinneth, yet the bodie of Christ was given him in Baptisme, and hee made a member thereof: if it be not lawfull to sinne against the bodie of his wife, much lesse against the bodie of Christ; whose members hee taketh, and fornication maketh them members of an harlot, as S. Paul sheweth, 1 Cor. 6. 15. So he concludeth, Ergo hæresis, dicere fornicationem, &c. it is heresie therefore to say, that single fornication is not deadly sinne, &c. and therefore in this precept, Thou shalt not commit adultery, not onely adultery, but all carnall copulation out of matrimonie is forbidden, Thomas in opusc.

3. Tostatus urgeth these reasons: 1. Whatsoever is evill, belonging unto carnall lust, must be here forbidden, either expressè, or tacitè, either by expresse words, or closely: for it cannot bee forbidden elsewhere: now simple fornication, even by the naturall light of reason, is judged to be evill: But it is necessarie to finde out a thing evill by nature, that all men should bee of the same judgement, but in those whose reason and understanding is aright: for like as some are deceived in the judgement of outward sense, as hee whose tongue is infected with bitter choler, thinketh hony to bee bitter: and whose eye is vitiate and corrupt, with a kinde of melancholy, will take the Æthiope and the Crow for whitish: So in some the judgement of naturall reason is corrupted, as in intemperate and incontinent men: it is therefore sufficient, that temperate and sober men by the light of reason, judge fornication to be evill. 2. Every naturall act, not used and employed to the right end, is evill: so then, as to eate and drinke, Non propter conservationem individui, &c. not to preserve the bodie, but of riot and excesse is evill: so to use carnall copulation of lust, and not Propter conservationem speciei per generationem, for the preserving of the kinde by generation, for the which it is appointed, must needs be evill, as is fornication, Tostat. quæst. 22.

4. M. Calvin thus proveth that fornication it a sinne before God, and a breach of this Commandement: Ex qua legimus Deum benedixisse conjugio, &c. where we read that God blessed marriage, it is to gather on the contrary, that all other companying of man and woman, not in marriage, is accursed: so the Apostle setteth the one as opposite to the other, Hebr. 13. 4. Marriage is honourable among all men, &c. but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. Seeing therefore the sanctitie and the honour of marriage is commanded in this precept, the contrarie is forbidden, all other acts of uncleannesse whatsoever, which are a violation of marriage. 2. Nec aliunde, quàm ex lege Oseas illam reprehensionem sumpsit. Neither did Hosea take that reprehension, but from the law, c. 4. 11. Whoredome & wine take away the

3. S.

S. Paul also sheweth, that the Israelites were punished for their fornication; and fell in one day 23 thousand, 1. Cor. 10. 8. 4. The Apostles also exhorting the brethren to abstaine from fornication, giue this reason thereof, because Moses was read in their Synagogues every Sabbath day, Act. 15. 19. If the action then had not been contrary to the law of Moses, and so generally taken, it had not been such a great offence. See Calvin. in hunc locum.

QUEST. XII. Spirituall fornication is not a breach of this precept.

Some doe make spirituall fornication a breach of this Commandement, Thou shalt not commit adultery: Necesse est spiritualiter observari: it must bee spiritually observed: and this abstinence from spirituall fornication, they make of three sorts, A ceremoniis Idolorum, & omni superstitione Gentilium, from the ceremonies of Idols, and all superstition of the Gentiles: there is another kind of fornication, quae Iudaismi superstitionibus continetur, which consisteth in the superstitions of Iudaisme; and the third adulterium haereticorum, the adulterie of heretickes, Lippom. ex collationibus patrum.

But spirituall fornication, because it concerneth the worship of God, cannot bee referred to this precept being of the second Table, which onely concerneth our dutie toward our neighbour: and beside, if this precept should bee so spiritually understood, then the rest of the second table in like manner, which were inconvenient: and spirituall fornication, which is committed by idolatrie and false worship, is a peculiar breach of the second Commandement, and therefore need not to bee referred hither.

QUEST. XIII. Of the lawfulnes and dignitie of mariage.

NOw because in this precept, Thou shalt not commit adulterie, as all inconveniencie and uncleannes is forbidden: so chastitie both in mariage and without, is commanded: Here it shall not bee amisse to examine questions concerning mariage: and first of the lawfulnes and dignitie thereof, which the Scripture calleth honourable, Heb. 13. 4. This honour of the maried estate is set forth, 1. By the author and beginner thereof, God himselfe when hee brought Eve unto Adam; and to signifie the neere conjunction that ought to bee betweene man and wife, hee made woman of one of the mans ribs, Gen. 2. 2. The time and place, when and where Matrimonie was instituted, doe set forth the commendation of it, because it was in Paradise, in the time of mans innocencie, before sinne yet was entred into the world. 3. The holy and wholesome ends, for the which Matrimonie was ordained, doe shew not only the lawfulnes but the excellencie of it: which shall afterward, quest. 17. more fully bee declared: whereof the most principall is, the procreation of children, ipsi Deo, Ecclesiae & reipublicae: unto God himselfe, his Church and Common-wealth, Bucan. 4. In holy Matrimonie it hath pleased God to represent unto us the mysticall conjunction betweene Christ and his Church, Ephe. 5. so that it cannot bee but holy, wherein is shadowed such an holy mysterie.

QUEST. XIV. Of the espousals and contract of mariage, with the difference, and divers kinds thereof.

NOw Matrimonie is of two sorts, either inchoatum, which is only initiate and begun by the espousals and contract onely; or it is perfect and consummate, when all the rites of mariage are accomplished and performed. Concerning the contract and espousals, which is the affiancing and betrothing of man and woman each to other, by their owne voluntarie and full consent, with the liking and approbation of their friends, there are two kinds of them: 1. Some contracts are conditionall, and de futuro, of the time to come, as they are called: as if the man make this promise, that hee will marrie a wife if her friends will consent, or if hee may have a competent dowrie with her: or if both the parties be vnder age, and not fit for mariage: for all these espousals are onely promises of mariage for the time to come: and they doe not binde the parties: they may shew their levitie in not performing the promise made, unlesse they can give probable and reasonable cause of the change of their minde; but they are not to bee forced by any such promise of mariage, to accomplish the same. 2. The other kinde of espousals, is de praesenti, pronounced of the time present: as if one say, Ego te mihi desponeo uxorem, I take thee to my wife: this contract is actuall and effectuall, and cannot bee dissolved, being lawfully made: for that which God hath coupled together, man cannot put asunder, Matth. 19. 7. and they which are thus contracted, are man and wife before God: as Iacob calleth Rachel, being onely betrothed, his wife: Give me my wife, Genes. 29. 21 and the Angell calleth Mary espoused to Ioseph, his wife, Matth. 1. 20. Hereof it was, that by Moses law, hee which defloured a maid espoused unto a husband was to bee stoned to death, Deut. 22. 23. 3. After these espousals, there came betweene them and the celebration of the mariage some convenient space of time: 1. For publike honestie sake, that they should not presently come together, as bruit beasts in the heat of their fleshly desire. 2. That by meanes their mindes might bee first knit together, before their bodies: their desire of each to other by this meanes being kindled and increased. 3. That this pause being made, if in the meane time should fall out any just cause of let, it might appeare, Bucanus.

QUEST. XV. Of mariage consummate, and the rites and orders therein to be observed.

Mariage is consummate by two solemne and publike actions, one is religious and Ecclesiasticall, the other is Civill. 1. The parties espoused are first brought into the face of the congregation, both to testifie their unfained consent each to other, and that they may publikely bee instructed by the Minister in the duties of mariage, and be commended unto God by the prayers of the congregation: which godly and the publike celebration of mariage before the congregation, howsoever some schismatickes too-liſhly and wilfully ſpurne againſt it; yet is grounded partly upon the example of God himſelfe, who brought man and woman together, and gave them a ſolemne bleſſing, ſaying, Increaſe and multiplie: partly upon that rule of the Apoſtle, 1.*Corinth.*14.40. that all things in the Church ſhould be done honeſtly and by order: for by this meanes, ſecret and clandeſtine mariages are prevented; and the parties free from all ſuſpition, who without this publike ſolemnitie might bee thought to live incontinently together: and ſeeing all things are conſecrate by the word of God and prayer, 1.*Tim.*4.5. it is requiſite that ſo a weightie buſineſſe as this ſhould bee ſanctified with prayer, and invocation of the name of God.

2. The other publike action is Civill, in the nuptiall feaſt, or feſtivitie: for it hath beene a commendable cuſtome in all ages, and in all nations almoſt, to ſolemnize mariage with the cheerefull meeting of friends: as Laban made a feaſt in the mariage of his daughters, *Geneſ.*29.22. our bleſſed Saviour was preſent at a mariage feaſt at Cana in Galile, *Ioh.*2. But the mariage feaſt ought to bee kept with this caveat, that there bee no exceſſe, riot, or diſorder, with other abuſes, that often fall out in ſuch meetings. As in that great feaſt which the great King of Perſia made unto his Nobles, ſuch good order was kept, that none was compelled to drinke more than hee would himſelfe, Eſther 1.8. This moderate and ſober kind of feaſting may ſafely bee retained among Chriſtians, according to S.Pauls rule, *Philip.*4.8,9. Whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, whatſoever things are juſt, &c. thoſe things doe, and the God of peace ſhall bee with you, Ex Bucano.

Quest. XVI. What conditions are required in lawfull mariage.

But in lawfull mariage divers conditions are required, and namely theſe: 1. That Matrimony be contracted betweene ſuch parties as are apt for mariage. The contracts then and eſpouſals made betweene children are void. 2. That there bee a voluntarie conſent of both parties, not forced or aſſented thereunto. 3. The conſent alſo of the parents, or of thoſe which are in the place and ſtead of parents, muſt not bee wanting. 4. There muſt bee no error in the perſons: as when they are eſpouſed as virgins, which prove afterward to bee otherwiſe: or ſuch like errors and miſtakings. 5. That honeſt condition be propounded in ſuch contracts, with decencie and comelines. 6. That Matrimonie bee contracted one betweene two parties: for though the Fathers were permitted to have many wives; yet we muſt live not according to examples, but by a certaine law and rule. 7. Mariage muſt bee contracted in the Lord, that is, onely betweene the faithfull and beleevers, and ſuch as conſent together in the true faith and religion. 8. That ſuch perſons contract not together, as are within the degrees prohibited either of affinitie and conſanguinitie, which are expreſſed *Levit.*18. which prohibition of degrees is grounded upon the law of nature, and therefore is morall and perpetuall: for God did caſt out the Canaanites, becauſe they were defiled herein, Levit. 18. 24. Who were not bound to the ceremoniall, but to the morall lawes: and the end of this prohibition of certaine degrees was for reverence of the neerenesſe of kindred and blood, as this reaſon is rendred: *None ſhall come neere to any of the kindred of his fleſh to uncover their ſhame, Levit.*18.6. and therefore this law is univerſall and perpetuall: Vrſin. Concerning the particular limitation of theſe degrees and right computation of them; ſee elſewhere this matter handled at large, *Synopſ.contr.*15.*of Matrimonie, qu.*3.

Quest. XVII. Of the ends of the inſtitution of matrimonie.

Now the ends wherefore Matrimonie was ordained are theſe: 1. In reſpect of the parties themſelves there are three ends: 1. That they ſhould be a mutuall helpe one unto another, both in divine and humane duties: as the Lord, when hee made woman, ſaid, *I will make an helpe meet for him, Gen.*2. which helpe is partly in humane affaires, as in domeſticall duties, in governing and ordering the family, in the bringing up and education of children: and in perſonall duties, one in helping and releeving another in ſickneſſe and in health: as alſo in divine, one in comforting another, in praying one for another, and ſuchlike. 2. Mariage is ordained to bee a remedie againſt incontinencie and vagrant luſt, 1.*Cor.*7.2. 3. procreation of children, which ſhould continue their parents name, and ſucceed in his inheritance: to this Lord ſaid unto them, *Gen.*1.28. Increaſe and multiplie.

2. In reſpect of the Church and Common-wealth, Matrimonie was appointed as a meane to increaſe them both with profitable members and inſtruments, and therefore parents are charged to bring up their children in the inſtruction and information of the Lord, *Epheſ.*6.4. that they may bee fit to bee employed in the Church and Common-wealth.

3. In reſpect of God, Matrimonie was inſtituted principally for the ſetting forth of his glorie: that the married parties ſhould together better learne to ſerve and worſhip God, and to bring up their children in his feare: and in their matrimonie, which is a ſweet and amiable fellowſhip, is ſet forth the myſticall conjunction which is betweene Chriſt and his Church, *Epheſ.*5.32. Ex Bucan. Vrſin.

Quest. XVIII. Of the mutuall marimoniall duties betweene man and wife.

The duties to bee performed in mariage are firſt, ſuch as are common betweene man and wife: 1. Mutuall love, that they ſhould one love another, to love as they are beloved. 2. Matrimoniall faith in keeping themſelves one to another, not ſeeking after ſtrange fleſh. 3. A communion of their goods: one ſupplying anothers wants: and a communion of affection, one having a lively fellow-feeling of the others griefes. 4. The education of their children, wherein both the parents are bound to ſhew their Chriſtian care. 5. And mutuall bearing and forbearing one another, tolerating their infirmities, with a great deſire to have them amended and healed, Vrſin.

2.

2. The duties required on the husbands part are: 1. To instruct and teach his wife, and bring her to the knowledge of God, 1 Cor. 14.35. 2. To be her head, to protect and defend her from injuries; to guide, rule and governe her in discretion, Ephes. 5.23. The husband is the woman's head, as Christ is the head of his Church. 3. To be amiable unto his wife, not bitter or cruell unto her, Coloss. 3.19. not to use her as his maid or servant; but as his yokefellow, and collaterall companion and coadjutrix in the government of the house. 4. To provide for her all things needfull in sickness and in health: for hee is worse than an Infidell who doth nor provide for those of his owne house, 1 Timoth. 5. 8. 5. To honour the wife as the weaker vessell, 1 Pet. 3.7. and in his Christian discretion to winne her with lenitie.

3. The speciall duties on the behalfe of the wife are: 1. To shew her care and diligence in preserving her husbands domesticall estate, and wisely disposing the houshold affaires: as that huswively Matron described, Prov. 31. 2. To give due reverence and honour to her husband, as unto her head, as Sara is commended, 1 Pet. 3.7. 3. And to bee subject and obedient unto him in all things in the Lord, Ephes. 5.22.

Quest. XIX. Whether marriage be left indifferent to all.

Matrimonie is neither denied unto any by the divine institution, nor yet commanded unto all: 1. It is lawfull and granted unto all to marrie, if they will: for the Apostle saith, that mariage is honourable among all men, Hebr. 13.4. because that blessing given unto mariage, Increase and multiplie, was geven in Adam and all his posteritie. 2. As mariage is not necessarily imposed upon all, so is it indifferent unto those which have the gift of continencie: for although they need not the remedie of mariage against fornication, having received that speciall gift; yet they may desire mariage for mutuall comfort, and to have issue: and for other ends, whereunto marriage was appointed. 3. But unto those which cannot containe, it is necessarie to use this remedie, and to them mariage is not indifferent. So the Apostle saith, It were good for a man not to touch a woman: nevertheless to avoid fornication, let every man have his wife, &c. 1 Cor. 7.2. and vers. 9. If they cannot abstaine, let them marrie: for it is better to marrie than to burne. 4. But though this libertie be given to use the remedie, yet there must bee a temperate sobrietie and moderation, both in the use of mariage, that they doe not give themselves over to fleshly delight, but sometime sequester themselves to fasting and prayer, 1 Cor. 7.5. And a comely decencie must bee observed both in first and second mariages, not hastily and greedily to fall into them: as among the Romans Numa made a law, that a woman should not marrie within ten moneths after her husbands death, Festus.

2. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the generall and particular contents of this precept.

In this Commandement under one speciall kinde of adulterie, all other acts of uncleanneſſe whatsoever are restrained: and whatsoever belongeth unto chastitie, is prescribed and commanded: as these three vertues principally: 1. Chastitie. 2. Shamefastnes. 3. Temperance. The contrarie unto which vertues likewise are forbidden.

1. Chastitie is commanded, which is a vertue keeping both the soule and bodie chaste, avoiding and detesting all uncleanneſſe and unlawfull lust, both in mariage, and in the single estate: as also all causes, occasions, opportunities, egging and provoking thereunto, as likewise the effects and inconveniences that follow thereon. So the Apostle teacheth: This is the will of God even your sanctification, that yee should abstaine from fornication, that every one of you should know how to possesse his vessell in holinesse and honour, not in the lust of concupiscence, &c. 1 Thess. 4.3.4.

Contrarie unto this vertue of chastitie are, 1. Such kinds of inordinate lust as are against even this nature corrupt, as it is corrupt: as first, the confusion of divers kindes, as when men are given over to vile affections to defile themselves with bruit beasts. Secondly, the abuse of the sex, as when men with men worke that filthinesse, which was one of the sinnes of the heathen, Rom. 1.28. Likewise may the feminine sex bee abused, Rom. 1.27. Thirdly, when as the lawfull sex is used, but in too neere a degree, as in incest: all these unnaturall lusts, and deserve of the Magistrate to bee extraordinarily punished.

2. Other kindes of lusts there are, which proceed from this our corrupt nature: 1. Fornication betweene parties not married, when as one with one committeth follie, or which is more odious, one with many, which is the vile practice of strumpets and whores. 2. Adulterie, either the one partie being married, and it is called adulterium simplex, simple adulterie: or both, which is adulterium duplex, double adulterie.

3. There are beside these, evill inclinations of the heart, and inward inflammations, which the godly must resist by prayer, and cut off the occasions of them: and the remedie against this kind of lust is mariage, according to S. Pauls rule: It is better to marrie then to burne, 1 Cor. 7.9.

4. Shamefastnesse is here required, which abhorreth all kind of turpitude and uncleanneſſe, being alwayes accompained with a certaine griefe and feare, lest any thing uncomely should bee committed: such was the shamefastnes of Ioseph, that being entised often by his shameleſſe Mistresse, would not afterward come into her companie.

Contrarie hereunto are, 1. Immodestie and unshamefastneſſe, such as was in Herodias daughter, that came in impudently and danced before Herod and the rest that were at the table. 2. Obscenitie and uncleanneſſe in word or in deed, as in Ioseph's Mistresse, that was not ashamed to move him with her wicked mouth to lie with her.

5. Temperance is also commanded, which is a moderate and sober use of such things as belong unto the bodie, as meat and drinke, agreeable to the time, place, and persons, as S. Paul saith, Be not filled with wine, wherein is excesse, Ephes.5.18.

Contrarie hereunto are, 1. Intemperance in meats and drinks, as in drunkennesse and gluttonie. Excesse and superfluitie of meats and drinkes, which breedeth intemperance: as also excesse and pride of apparell, reproved by the Prophet in the daughters of Sion, Isai.3. and other unseemely usages of the bodie, as in painting or colouring the face or haire, as wicked whorish Iezabel used to doe, 2 King.9.30. Contrarie unto this moderate temperance, is in another extreme superstitious and immoderate abstinence, such as was that of the Heremites and Anachorites, that with too rigorous abstinence and fasting did oppresse nature, Vrsin. 4. As intemperance in diet is forbidden, as the nourishing cause of lust, so also in all other kind of behaviour: as the wantonnes of the eye, which opened as it were a window unto that great sinne of adulterie, which David committed with Bathsheba, 2 Sam. 12. Likewise obscenitie and wantonnesse in speech: for evill words corrupt good manners, 1 *Cor.*15.33 Simler. But these two last rehearsed are rather opposite unto the second vertue of shamefastnesse before rehearsed.

3. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. Against the Anabaptists and Nicolaitans, which make their wives common.

THou shalt not commit adulterie, &c. First, seeing this precept commandeth chastitie in the married estate to be preserved, the Nicolaitans, and heretikes called Gnostici, are condemned, which as of other things, brought in a filthie communitie and mutual commixtion of their wives, Bucanus. Contrarie to the Apostles doctrine, To avoid fornication, let every one have his wife, 1 *Cor.*7.2. that is, the wife ought to be proper and peculiar to the husband, and the husband likewise to the wife: for the honour of mariage is stained when the mariage bed is defiled, and therefore the Apostle putteth them both together, *Heb.*13.4.

2. Confut. Against the Manichees and Marcionites that condemne mariage.

FUrther, this Commandement forbidding the violating of mariage by adulterie, and all other unclean and unlawfull lust, consequently alloweth the wholesome remedie of mariage, against the old heretikes the Maniches, Encratites, Marcionists, Chrysost.hom. 12. in 1 Timoth. Ambrose addeth to these the Patrician, in 1 *Tim.*4. that condemned mariage, as being instituted of Satan: whose wicked opinion is blasphemous against God, upon whose blessing, (Increase and multiplie) dependeth the procreation of children, which is the speciall fruit of mariage: And they contradict the holy Apostle, who saith, That mariage is honorable, &c. *Hebr.*13.4.

3. Confut. Against the Romanists that forbid Mariage.

THirdly, the Romanists are here confuted, that enjoyne single life unto their Priests, as more agreeable unto their orders, which they thinke are defiled and polluted by mariage: and they count that to bee the more holy state among them, and such to bee most religious, which are entred into a vow of single life: so that although they doe not in open blasphemie condemne marriage, as the other wicked heretikes, which made the devill the author thereof, yet they speake falshood through hypocrisie, and under pretence of greater holinesse, condemne the holy institution of marriage, so that they cannot escape the censure of the Apostle, which calleth it a doctrine of devils to forbid to marrie, 1 *Tim.*4.1.3. Neither can they shift it off by saying, that they doe not forbid mariage generally: no more did the Manichee, who allowed their hearers, such as were lay men, to marrie, but denied that libertie to their Clergie, whom they called their elect and chosen men, *August.haref.*46. And the Heretickes called Apostolici would not permit such to marrie, as had made a vow of single life, being not able to performe it, *August.haref.*61. The Romanists hold it unlawfull for their votaries to marrie, though they bee never so weake and unable to performe their vow. It is evident then, that whereas S. Paul giveth libertie to everie man for avoiding of fornication, to have his wife, 1 *Cor.*7.2. and againe he saith, that mariage is honorable among all men, *Hebr.*13.4. the practice of the Romanists not allowing their Clergie and Monkes to marrie, doth contradict the Apostolical doctrine. And beside, by this restraint of mariage, they give occasion of adulterie, fornication, and other uncleane lusts, seeing they restraine the remedie against these enormities, which is lawfull and honest marriage: and so they are apparent transgressors of this precept: Herein they are not unlike to those old Heretickes, called Origeniani turpes, the filthie Origenists, who, as Epiphanius writes of them, rejected marriage, and yet gave themselves to lust, and some of them went in the habit of Monks professing solitarie life, and yet were defiled with uncleannesse, *Epiphan. haref.*63. Such were the Monks in Poperie, given over to al filthinesse, as their hypocrisie was notably discovered in the suppression of their uncleane cages and cells here in England. See more hereof, *Synops.*pag.260,261, &c.

4. Confut. Against Aquinas, that saith in the matrimoniall copulation there may be mortall sinne.

HEre by the way some exception is to be taken unto certaine positions of Thomas Aquinas, who confuting those who affirmed, Commixtionem viri & uxoris non esse sine peccato, that the companying of the husband with the wife could not bee without sinne, setteth downe these conclusions: 1. That conjunctio aliquando non solum est sine peccato, sed etiam ad meritum vitæ æternæ: that such conjunction sometime not only without sinne, but meritorious also of eternall life. 2. Quando est cum intentione procreandæ prolis, vel reddendi debiti, &c. when in the matrimoniall act there is an intention of procreation, or rendring the mutuall debt of marriage, it is an act of justice, and so without sin at all. 3. Aliquando est peccato veniali, &c. sometime it hath a veniall or small sin, as when neither of the two former intentions concurre. 4. Quando autem excedit, ut si posset se extendere etiam in aliam, tunc est mortale, &c. but when this is not matrimoniall copulation exceedeth the bounds, that if it might bee, it would extend it selfe to another, then it is mortall, Thomas in opuscul.

Contra. 1. No act of righteousnesse in man, can be meritorious of eternall life; seeing our best workes are imperfect, and betweene the merrit and worke, there must be a proportion and kinde of equalitie: but there cannot bee betweene our imperfect workes, and such a perfect and infinite reward: The Apostle saith, That the afflictions of this present life, are not worthie of the glorie which shall be shewed unto us, Rom. 8. 18. If the suffrings of the Saints are not meritorious, much lesse their actions.

2. When matrimoniall conjunction is applied to the right end, it is without sinne, as S. Paul saith in the like case, Let him doe what hee will, he sinneth not, 1 Cor. 7. 36. that is, materially he sinneth not: the thing which hee doth is no sin, neither is it a sinfull act: but yet there may bee some blemish and imperfection in the manner: seeing our best actions are stained, as the Prophet saith, All our righteousnesse is as filthie clouts, Isai. 64. 4.

3. If veniall sin be taken for a small offence, wee denie not, but that such blemishes are found in matrimoniall duties, which are tolerated and covered in mariage, according to that excellent saying of Augustine, Libidinis voluptas, non propter nuptias cadit in culpam, sed propter nuptias accipit veniam: the sinne of lusts doth not take blame because of mariage, but for mariage sake doth receive pardon. Lib. 1. de concupis. cap. 15.

But mortall or deadly sin in mariage there is none, that is, in his sence, haynous and grievous: for if in meaning be, that the fleshly desire would extend it selfe to another, that is, coveteth strange flesh, this is not incident unto any act of mariage, but is a violating of mariage, by adulterous and unchaste thoughts: but if there could be any such mortall and deadly sin in the duties of mariage, what is become of that saying of the Apostle, concerning the giving in mariage, Hee sinneth not? 1 Cor. 7. 36. which also may bee understood of the duties of mariage. Augustine hath this worthie saying, Sicut bono uti male malum est, ita malo uti bene bonum est: bene utitur bono continentiam dedicans Deo, bono utitur male continentiam dedicando, malo utitur male concupiscentiam relaxans adulterio, bene utitur malo concupiscentiam restringendo: As it is evill to use a good thing evill; so it is good to use an evill thing well, as hee useth a good thing well that dedicateth his continencie unto God, hee useth a good thing evill that dedicateth his continencie to an Idoll: hee useth an evil thing evill, that doth loose the reines of his concupiscence to adulterie, he useth an evill thing evill, who restraineth his concupiscence to matrimonie, August. ad Pelag. 1. 19. If he doe an evill thing well, that limiteth and keepeth his concupiscence within the bounds of mariage, hee then cannot sinne mortally.

V. Cautel. Against Tostatus that would not have simple fornication punished by humane lawes.

Against Tostatus, here also worthily exception is taken, who justifieth this defect and imperfection in humane lawes, he meaneth such as are practised among the Romanists, which doe not punish simple fornication: these are his words, Injustissima civilis lex esset, quæ meretrices tolleret, That should be a most unjust Civill law, which should take away strumpets, and punish simple fornication, &c. Wee will see and examine his reasons.

1. Civill lawes are only to restraine such sins, whereby justice is violated, and injurie done unto another, but in fornication there is no act of injustice, Non est ibi aliqua persona cui inferatur injuria; There is no person there to whom any injurie can bee done.

Contra. There is a manifold wrong committed in single fornication: 1. They offer wrong and dishonour unto Christ, in making the members of Christ, the members of an harlot, 1 Cor. 6. 15. 2. They injurie themselves, in sinning against their owne bodies, in defiling and polluting them. ibid. vers. 18. 3. They doe wrong unto their posteritie, bringing upon them the shame of bastardie, making them illegitimate, and disabling them to inherit.

2. If humane lawes should punish fornication, it would give occasion unto adulterie, incest, Sodomie, seeing the most in a common-wealth are weake and imperfect; and if they were restrained from this their vice, they would fall into greater enormities.

Contra. 1. As though God hath not appointed a remedie against fornication, and all other uncleanesse, by lawfull matrimonie: shall men make themselves wiser than God, and seeke to cure one evill by another?

2. And thus the divine order is perverted among the Romanists: for they restraine mariage, and give way unto fornication, and therefore it is no marvell, if among them such unnaturall lusts doe reigne. Bernard well sheweth the reason thereof, Tolle de Ecclesia honorabile conjugium, &c. Take away from the Church honorable matrimonie, (he saith not, take away harlots, and brothel houses, as Tostatus doth) shal not replenish it with incestuous persons, with concubinaries, Sodomiticall vices? &c. Super Cant. serm. 66.

3. Humane lawes are not to forbid all sinnes, because Humana lex non potest dare gratiam præservans, &c. because man making a law, cannot give preserving grace to keepe it: and this was the cause, that Lex Mosis non prohibebat omnia vitia, Moses law did not forbid all vices, because therein was no grace given, or helpe ministred to avoid them: therefore some things were permitted among them, as to divorce of the Gentiles, to give a bill of divorcement, and such like. So Tostatus quæst. 23.

Contra. 1. By this reason humane lawes should forbid no sins, because Gods word, not mans law, giveth grace to abstaine from any sin. 2. Neither is there any sin forbidden in the new Testament against the morall law, which is not prohibited in the old: as it may appeare by our blessed Saviours interpretation of the 5. of Matt. wherein he giveth no new law, but only expoundeth the old. 3. Though Moses law gave no grace to keepe it, yet because it was a Schoolemaster to bring us unto Christ, Gal. 3. 19. it was fit it should be a perfect law, and containe a strict rule of all righteousnesse, that men the rather should bee driven unto Christ, seeing themselves to come so farre short. 4. The toleration of some things among the Israelites, for their their hardneſſe of heart ſheweth not a defect in the law, but an imperfection in them, that could not bee ſubject to the perfect rule of the law. 5. And concerning the puniſhment of fornication, it was not omitted in Moſes law: for although fornication with one were recompenced with marriage, and paying of the dowrie, Deut. 22.24. yet if a daughter in Iſrael did play the whore, ſhe was ſtoned to death, ibid. verſ. 21. And ſeeing the law ſaith, There ſhall not bee a whore of the daughters of Iſrael, Deut. 23.17. how dare any defend the tolerating and ſuffering of whores in a Chriſtian Common-wealth?

4. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſer. Againſt ſhameleſſe adulterers, that thruſt themſelves into the Congregation of the Lords people.

THou ſhalt not commit adulterie. This ſin being ſo haynous in the ſight of God, whereby both the ordinance of God is perverted, and matrimoniall faith mutually given violated, and the Temples of the holy Ghoſt defiled: hereby their impudencie, unſhamefaſtneſſe, and profaneneſſe is evident, that being guiltie of this ſin, dare preſume to come into the Lords houſe, to offer themſelves to heare the Word, to receive the Sacraments, or communicate in any other exerciſe of religion, againſt whom the Prophet thus envelgheth: Will you ſteale, murther, commit adulterie, &c. and come and ſtand before me in this houſe, whereupon my name is called, and ſay wee are delivered, though wee have done all theſe abominations? Ierem. 7. Chryſoſtome well ſayth to this purpoſe: Non eſt locus hic ſupanar, ſed Eccleſia; ſi membra meretricis habes, abeſto ab Eccleſia, ne præſentiâ tuâ ſordeſcat: This place is no brothelhouſe, but the Church; if thou haſt the members of an harlot, abſent thy ſelfe from the Church, leſt it be defiled by thy preſence, &c. homil. 2. ſuper Ioan.

2. Obſer. Againſt fornication.

AND let not onely adulterers take heed unto themſelves: even fornication, between thoſe that are not married, is a grievous offence before God, who will not onely judge adulterers, but whoremongers alſo, Hebr. 13.4. And that ſaying of the Apoſtle may bee applied againſt fornication, as well as adulterie: Know yee not, that yee are the Temple of God? &c. if any man deſtroy the Temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy. 1 Cor. 3.16. Whereupon Auguſtine thus writeth: Non vis corrumpi domum tuam, quare corrumpis domum Dei? Thou wouldeſt not have thine houſe corrupted, or defiled, why then doeſt thou corrupt the houſe of God? lib. de 10 chord. cap. 9. And theſe miſchiefes fornication bringeth with it: 1. Perdit animam, The fornicator deſtroyeth his owne ſoule, Prov. 9.18. Hee knoweth not, that the dead are there, and that her gueſts are in the depth of hell. 2. Conſumit ſubſtantiam, He conſumeth and waſteth his ſubſtance, Prov. 6.16. Becauſe of the whoriſh woman, a man is brought to a morſell of bread. 3. Vilificat prolem, It maketh their poſteritie vile and baſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Otherwiſe were your children uncleane, 1 Cor. 7.14. that is, without mariage. 4. Privat honore, &c. It depriveth of honour, and purchaſeth an everlaſting blot, Prov. 6.32. Hee ſhall find a wound, and diſhonour, and his reproach ſhall never bee put away, Thomas in opuſcul.

3. Obſer. Againſt diſguiſing of the bodie and uncomely apparell.

Auguſtine ſheweth, how this Commandement is otherwiſe tranſgreſſed, by light behaviour, diſordered apparell, diſguiſing of the bodie: Habitus impudicus corporis eſt nuntius adulterini cordis; The unſhamefaſt behaviour of the bodie is the meſſenger of an adulterate heart: Superflua & inordinata capillatura, veſtimentorum muliebrium affectata ſimilitudo, as, Superfluous and inordinate haire, and affectation of womens garments, &c. And in women, Fucata facies, capillorum nativi coloris adulteratio: A painted face, colouring of the haire, imitating the faſhion of mens garments, &c. Auguſt. ſerm. 347. The one S. Paul reproveth in men, 1 Cor. 11.14. Doth not nature it ſelfe teach you, that if a man have long haire it is a ſhame unto him? The other S Peter reprehendeth in women, As their broydred haire, and gold put about, and the putting on of apparell, 1 Pet. 3.3.

The eighth Commandement.

1 Queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. Whether the ſtealing of men only bee forbidden in this precept.

Verſ. 15. THou ſhalt not ſteale.] R. Salomon is of opinion, that only the ſtealing of men is prohibited here: becauſe that kinde of ſtealth onely was puniſhed by death, other kinds of theft by reſtitution either of double, or quadruple.

Contra. 1. It doth evidently appeare, that all kinde of theft, and not that of men onely is here forbidden by theſe two reaſons: firſt, becauſe the Morall law only, as grounded upon the law of nature, did bind both Iewes and Gentiles, the Judicials only concerned the Iſraelites: therefore if other thefts had been reſtrained only by the Judicials, and not by the Morall law, the Gentiles would not have condemned the ſtealing of goods, as well as of men, as they did. Secondly, the Judicials did only binde the people after they were delivered unto them, not before: but it was a ſinne to ſteale in Iſrael, even before they had received the Judicials. 2. The ground of his opinion is not ſound: that the breach of every Morall law was puniſhed by death: for the coveting of a mans ox or aſſe, though this coveting had proceeded to act, was not judged worthie of death, Toſtat. qu. 24.

Queſt.

Quest. II. Of the order and phraſe uſed in this precept.

Thou ſhalt not ſteale. 1. Next unto thoſe wrongs which either are done unto a mans ſingle perſon, as in offering violence to his life; or in perſona conjuncta, in his coupled and conjoyned perſon, namely his wife, in committing adulterie: next after follow thoſe injuries which concerne his ſubſtance, and ſuch things as appertaine unto him, Thomas in opuſcul. 2. And firſt of all, prohibentur nocumenta, quæ infertur facto, thoſe hinderances are forbidden, which are done in fact: then thoſe, quæ inferuntur verbo, which are done in word: as in 9. precept, Thou ſhalt not beare falſe witneſſe, Lyran. 3. But here this word theft more generally taken, quàm apud juriſconſultos, than among the Lawyers, Borrah. for it ſignifieth quamlibet alienæ rei uſurpationem, any kinde of uſurping of that which is another mans, Gloſſ. interlinear. 4. And the reaſon why all violence, fraud, circumvention is prohibited under the name of theft, is, Furandi verbum poſuit, quod ut probroſum omnibus naturaliter exhorrent: He uſeth the word ſtealing, which all men by nature doe abhorre as ignominious, that we might the better be perſwaded to abſtaine from all kinde of theft, Calvin. For men cunningly doe gloſe and colour their vicious and corrupt dealing with honeſt names: as fraud and deceit is called wit; and cunning getting of other mens goods, providence. The Lord therefore to meet with all ſuch daubing, doth call things as they are, and ſheweth how that before him all ſuch wrong-doers are held guiltie of theft.

Quest. III. Of the generall heads of the things here prohibited.

Three things in generall are forbidden in this Commandement: 1. The unjuſt getting of other mens goods, which is, 1. Either by rapine or violence, either of ſacred things, or of prophane and common. 2. Or elſe by theft and pilfring. 3. Or by deceit, circumvention, and fraud.

1. All dammages, diſcommoditie, or hinderance, which either is brought upon another, by hatred, ill will, enmitie: or elſe which is not turned aſide, and declined from our brother, it being in our power.

2. The abuſe of mens goods and ſubſtance is likewiſe here condemned, either in the evill beſtowing, or miſpending of them in vaine and unprofitable things: or in the unjuſt holding and poſſeſſing, and not imploying of them when neceſſitie requireth, Simler.

Quest. IV. Of Sacrilege.

The firſt generall tranſgreſſion then is in ſacrilege, which is the ſtealing either of any ſacred thing, appointed for holy and ſacred uſes, out of any place, ſacred or prophane; or of any prophane and common thing out of a ſacred place. And this ſacrilege is of two kinds: it is either of things ſpirituall, or of things externall and temporall: of this latter ſort are theſe: 1. The wilfull ſtealing and withdrawing of ſuch things as are ordained to holy and divine uſes: which kinde of ſacrilege is ſtrictly puniſhed by humane lawes. Such was the ſinne of Achan, in ſtealing the wedge of gold, and the Babyloniſh garment, which God had conſecrate to his treaſurie, Joſh. 6. 19. and for the ſame offence hee was ſtoned to death. 2. When the Church goods are imployed to another end, than for the which they were firſt given to the Church: which was to maintaine the miniſterie of the word of God and Sacraments, to relieve the poore, to maintaine the edifices of the Church. Let ſuch therefore looke unto it, as live of the rents and revenues of the Church, being lay men, not called to the office of teaching, inſtructing and ſpirituall feeding. 3. They abuſe the Church goods, which either give themſelues to idleneſſe, living of the tithes and offerings, but feed not the people: ſuch are idle, careleſſe, and negligent paſtors: or thoſe which miſpend them in riot and exceſſe, as in keeping haukes, hounds, in dice, cards; and ſuch like, as doe the Romane Cardinals and Prelates: all theſe are guiltie of Church robbing and ſacrilege, Simler.

Quest. V. Whether it be lawfull to convert things conſecrated to Idolatrie, to other uſes ſacred or prophane?

Here it will bee queſtioned, what is to be thought of the converting and turning of ſuch things to religious uſes, which were bequeathed to ſuperſtition, whether therein any ſacrilege may be committed or not. The anſwer is this: 1. That it is lawfull, from ſuperſtitious and no true religious uſes, to convert ſuch bequeſts to the true ſervice of God, and therein no violence is offered at all to the will of the dead: for their generall intendment is obſerved, the applying of them to ſacred uſes, though the particular uſe bee not kept, which they, led with the error of the time, intended, Simler. So the Lord commanded, that the ſilver and gold and braſſe in Iericho ſhould be conſecrate to the Lords treaſurie, Joſh. 6. 19. which had beene before abuſed to idolatrie. 2. Where exceſſive and ſuperfluous legacies have beene given to ſuch uſes, it is lawfull for the Civill Magiſtrate, reſerving a ſufficient maintenance for the ſervice of God, to diſpoſe of the overplus of ſuch gifts for other publike uſes, as to ſupport the neceſſitie of the Growne in State, to maintaine maimed ſouldiers, and ſuch like, and to applie them to other lawfull and profitable publike uſes: as Iehu converted the houſe of Baal from a ſuperſtitious and idolatrous, to a civill and publike uſe, 2 King. 10. 27. Joſias alſo defiled and polluted the high places, 2 King. 23. 8. that is, cleanſed them from thoſe ſuperſtitions there practiſed, and turned them to prophane and common uſes. Hereunto is agreeable that Imperiall law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 14. leg. 5. Omnia loca quæ ſacris veterum error deputavit, noſtræ ſervari, &c. Honor. Theodoſ. All thoſe places which have beene in the error of former time appointed to ſacred uſes, wee bid to bee joyned to our treaſurie, &c. Yet ſo, as it was provided by another Law, that ſufficient ſhould bee reſerved for the uſe and exerciſe of Religion: as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 2. leg. 9. Although the Emperour decreed that the poſſeſſions of Heretikes ſhould be confiſcate to the Prince, yet ſo, that the Oratories and places of prayer ſhould ſtill bee maintained. 3. But it will bee objected, that many miracles have beene ſhewed in ſuch places, and they extraordinarily puniſhed from heaven, that invaded them, and offered violence unto them. Hereunto wee anſwer: 1. That ſuch things alſo fell out even even among the Heathen, they which violated their Idoll Temples, were ſtrangely puniſhed, as Brennus when hee invaded the Temple at Delphos: the reaſon hereof was, becauſe they did it not of any hatred of ſuperſtition and Idolatrie, and zeale to the true worſhip of God, but of a prophane and irreligious minde, and ſo the Lord puniſhed their prophaneneſſe; and they which attempted ſuch things, might bee tyrants and otherwiſe wicked perſons, and therefore the Lord did take occaſion thereby to puniſh their crueltie and tyrannie. 2. The Apoſtle ſheweth that Antichriſt ſhall come with lying ſignes and wonders by the working of Satan, 2 *Theſſ.*2. and therefore, ſuch ſtrange things might bee wrought in ſuch places by Satan, for the further advancing of ſuperſtition, Simler.

QUEST. VI. Of the ſacriledge of ſpirituall things.

BUt mention was made before of ſpirituall ſacriledge: which is, when Eccleſiæ verbi Dei prædicatio ſacramentorum adminiſtratio auferitur, the preaching of the Word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments is taken away from the Church, Simler. 1. In theſe two things conſiſteth this ſpirituall theft and ſacriledge: Contraria veritati dogmata prædicant: They doe preach doctrines contrarie to the truth, and quotidie de Eccleſia gregibus rapere feſtinant, they doe daily ſnatch and take with greedineſſe from the flockes of the Church, *Hierom. in Abdiam, cap.*1. 2. Hierome alſo to this purpoſe alleageth theſe two places of Scripture, *Ierem.*23.30. I will come againſt the Prophets, ſaith the Lord, that ſteale my word every one from his neighbour: and *Ioh.*10.8. All that ever came before mee are theeves and robbers: they were the falſe Prophets, that beguiled and deceived the people, *Hierom. in epiſt. ad Epheſ. cap.*4.

QUEST. VII. Of Simonie.

VNto Sacriledge, Simonie is coſen germane, which alſo is committed about holy things, when they are abuſed by buying and ſelling unto private gaine. And this Simonie is of two ſorts: 1. Either direct and immediate Simonie, when things meerely ſpirituall are bought or ſold, Gehezi ſold ſpirituall things for money, exacting a reward of Naaman for the gift of healing: and for that his ſinne he was puniſhed with Leproſie, both hee and his poſteritie, 2 *King.*5. Simon Magus would have bought ſpirituall things, *Act.*8. Baſting. Of this kinde are they which ſell their prayers, or the Sacraments of the Church for money: as the Phariſies, that under colour of long prayer, devoured widowes houſes. Such are the Popes chapmen, the Pardoners that went up and downe with Popes pardons, to ſell remiſſion of ſinnes for money, and ſoule Prieſts, that would bee hired for money to ſing Maſſes: they alſo which ſhewed the reliques of Saints, and kept pilgrimage Idols, gathering thereby unto themſelves no ſmall advantage, as Alexander the Copper ſmith did at Epheſus, by making ſilver ſhrines for Diana.

2. Their is another kinde of Simonie, which is not of meere ſpirituall things, but of the Eccleſiaſticall places, functions, and revenewes, which are ordained for Eccleſiaſticall and religious uſe: ſuch is the buying and ſelling of Churches, and Benefices by Patrones, and their Clerkes, whom they preſent: for theſe by a conſequent doe alſo buy and ſell the myſteries and Sacraments of the Church, when as the places and functions are ſet to ſale, wherein, and whereby thoſe holy rites are diſpenſed. Thomas Aquinas doth very fitly apply that ſaying of Chriſt againſt all thoſe which thus enter corruptly into the Church, *Ioh.*10. Hee that entereth not in by the doore, but climeth up another way, is a theefe and a robber. Thom. in opuſcul. So much of the theft of ſacred things.

QUEST. VIII. Of common theft, with the divers kinds thereof.

THe other kinde of theft is of things that are prophane and civill, which are of two ſorts, either publike or private. 1. The publike theft is either direct: when as the publike treaſurie is robbed, which is much greater than the theft of private things, becauſe it redoundeth to the hurt and loſſe of many. Hereunto may be adjoyned the defrauding of ſuch gifts as are bequeathed to publike uſes: as Iuda was a theefe in robbing the almes of the poore. 2. Indirect publike theft is when they which are put in truſt with the common goods, doe waſte and miſpend them: as Demoſthenes ſaid, when a poore theefe was led to priſon by the officers: Parvum furem à majoribus duci: That a ſmall theefe was carried by the greater theeves.

Private theft is either by taking the things belonging to others, conſenting, or deteyning and withholding them: the firſt is diſtinguiſhed in reſpect of the matter, the things that are ſtollen and taken away, or the manner. The things are of foure ſorts: 1. Of men, which kinde of theft was puniſhed by death by the law of Moſes, Exod. 21.16. 2. Of cattell, as the ſtealing of Oxe or Sheepe, which theft was puniſhed by reſtitution, *Exod.*22.1. 3. Of goods, which are called moveables, whereof ſee the law, Exod. 20. 7. 4. In remooving of land markes, which kinde of theft concerned their lands and poſſeſſions, Deut. 19. 14. Now theft alſo differeth in the manner: for it is either committed by privie and ſecret ſtealth, which wee call pilfring and filching, of which kinde the Prophet Ieremie ſpeaketh, chap.2.26. As the theefe is ſhamed, when he is taken: or by breaking into houſes, Exo. 22.2. which is commonly called Burglarie: or open force and violence: ſuch is robbing by the high way: whereof mention is made in the parable of the Samaritane, of the man that fell among theeves, and was wounded, and left for halfe dead, *Luk.*10.

This kinde of private theft is alſo committed by conſenting, and being acceſſarie thereunto, Pſal. 18. When thou ſeeſt a theefe, thou runneſt with him: ſuch are thoſe alſo which give entertainment to theeves, and are their receivers, to keepe ſuch things as are ſtollen: which kinde of conſenting with theeves is puniſhed by humane lawes, Simler.

Further, they are guiltie alſo of theft, that detaine and withhold the goods of others, as they which finde things that are loſt, and doe not reſtore them. Likewiſe they which borrow things of their neighbour, and doe not make them good. See the law, *Exod.*22.14. They which are indebted to others, and have no care to pay their debts, but runne away with others goods: ſuch are fugitives, and voluntarie bro-

...All theſe are held guiltie of this ſin of theft before God, and obey not the Apoſtles rule, Give to all men ... day, *Rom.*13.7. And verſe 8. Owe nothing to any man, but love one another. Where the Apoſtle maketh ... kinde of debts: whereof the one may be ſo paid, as nothing remaine of the debt: the other is alwaies ... paying, and never paid, which is the debt of charitie, Marbachius.

Quest. IX. Of the divers kinds of tranſactions and contracts.

Here remaineth the third branch of the firſt generall kinde of theft, and that is by fraud and circumvention: which is of two ſorts, either in ſuch actions and contracts as are lawfull of themſelves, ... ſuch acts and devices as are altogether unlawfull. Now juſt and lawfull tranſactions and contracts are ... divers ſorts, and namely theſe ten, in buying and ſelling, giving, exchanging, pawning, truſting, farming, ... ownerſhip, tenure for ſervice, hiring, lending and borrowing: all which may bee brought to theſe two ... all theſe alienations are either both of the uſe and right and ownerſhip of a thing, or of the uſe only, ... of them either for ever, and in perpetuall, or for a time only. 1. Buying and ſelling is a bargaining ... an equivalent price, for any thing both in right and in uſe. 2. Giving is a franke donation of a thing ... any ſatisfaction or recompence. 3. Exchanging, when one thing is given for another of like value. ... tranſactions are perpetuall, both of the right of a thing, and the uſe. For the uſe only and not the ... are theſe that follow: 4. Morgaging, or laying to pawne, when houſe or land, or any other thing is con... over to another for a certaine time, til ſome condition required be performed. Contracts, which con... the uſe only, are theſe alſo: either for a time: 5. As committing a thing to ones truſt to keepe. 6. Let... out any thing to farme for a certaine rent. 7. Copartnerſhip; when one putteth in the ſtocke, another ... his paines, and are agreed to divide the profit. 8. And when one taketh any ground by tenure, and ... it for doing of ſome kinde of ſervice. 9. Hiring, when one for his money hath the uſe of a thing. ... the uſe of a thing is granted without paying any thing for a time. Vrſinus.

Quest. X. Of the divers kinds of fraud and deceit uſed in contracts.

Now in theſe lawfull kinds of contracts, the frauds which are uſually committed are theſe: 1. In the ... matter and ſubſtance, and qualitie of the thing tranſacted, and bargained for: as when ſophiſticate ... deceitful ware is uttered for that which is good and ſound: as wine mixed with water in ſtead of good ... and ſpices ungarbled, and refuſe, for good and merchandable ſpice: the like deceit may be in cloth, in ... and all other kind of Merchandize: as Amos 8.6. the rich covetous ſay, That wee may buy the poore ... ſilver, &c. and ſell the refuſe of Wheat. 2. There may be deceit in the quantitie, when as the ſeller uſeth ... weights and meaſures: therefore the law ſaith, Levit. 19.35. You ſhall not doe unjuſtly in judgement, in ..., in weight, or in meaſure. 3. When too great a price is exacted, and the buyer is not aſhamed to aske ... like the price of his ware, and ſometime take it alſo: as the Prophet crieth out againſt the covetous men, ... did ſell corne, and Made the Ephah ſmall, and the ſhekel great, Amos. 8.5. They made the meaſure leſſe, ... the price greater, Genevenſ. 4. Deceit alſo may be uſed in the coyne, as in clipping it, counterfetting, and ... it, Simler. And therefore it is ſaid, that Abraham weighed unto Ephron ſilver, 400. ſhekels of ... money among Merchants, *Gen.*23.16. it was both weight, and curran t money, not ſophiſticated. ... in bargaining by ſelling, ſo in other contracts the like deceit may bee practiſed: as in hiring; when ... the hireling doth not his ſervice faithfully or truly, but doth his buſineſſe with eye-ſervice, which ... doth reproveth, *Epheſ.*6.6. or when the maſter that hireth, detaineth the hirelings wages, or keepeth ... by fraud, Iames 5.4. as in paying leſſe than hee ſhould, or with bad money, or obtruding and ... upon them other baſe commodities in ſtead of their wages, Simler.

Quest. XI. Of unlawfull and coſening trades.

...other kind of fraud is, when meanes and devices are uſed altogether unlawful: as by uſurie, (whereof wee ſhall have occaſion to intreat more fully upon the 22. chapter) by dicing, carding, or uſing any ... unlawfull games: by monopolies, foreſtalling of commodities, and ingroſſing of them to enhaunce ... and whatſoever is gotten by any unlawfull calling, practice or exerciſe whatſoever, Simler. To ... lawfull vocation and calling three things are requiſite: 1 Perſona legitimè ordinata, the perſon muſt ... lawfully ordained, and called, no uſurper, nor intruder. 2 Officium legitimum, &c. The office it ſelfe muſt ... and opus executionis legitimum, the execution of the office muſt bee lawfull, as proceeding from ... referring all to Gods glorie, and from charitie, intending no hurt to our neighbour: in ſome dealings ... but certaine of theſe are wanting: as the firſt, when any not called to the office of teaching, yet ... the tithes of the Church appointed for the maintenance of Teachers: they faile in the next, who ... no lawfull office or calling, as Alexander the Copper-Smith, that grew rich by making ſilver ... for Diana, *Act.*19. They offend in the third, which having an office, yet abuſe it: as Zacheus, that ... was called, uſed forged cavillation in pilling and polling his brethren, Luke 19.8. But in theſe ... trades before ſpoken of, as in uſurie, carding, tabling, and ſuch like, all theſe are miſſing: for the ... ſelfe being unlawfull, none can be lawfully called unto it: neither can that which is unlawfull bee ... either with faith or charitie.

Quest. XII. How this precept is broken by procuring our neighbours hurt.

Now wee are come to the ſecond generall breach of this Commandement, as is obſerved before, ... 3. which is in the hinderance that by our meanes commeth to our brother: which is commit... waies, either in procuring the ſame to bee done, or in ſuffering it to bee done.

1. They

1. They which of evill will and envie seeke their neighbours hinderance in his goods or cattell, d offend against this precept: as the setting on fire of corne or houses. See the law against such, Exod. 22 in trespassing upon a mans ground, by feeding it with his cattell: ibid. vers. 5. in hurting, maymin spoyling that which is our neighbours, ibid. vers. 14.

2. They offend herealso, which doe not helpe their neighbour, when it is in their power, and re him, and that which belongeth unto him: therefore the law of Moses prescribeth, that if a man m his enemies Asse or Oxe going astray, hee should bring him home: and helpe up his Asse lying under burthen, Exod. 23. 5. If this service of love must bee performed to an enemie, much more to our ne bours and friends.

Quest. XIII. Of the abuse of mens goods and substance, another generall transgression of this precept.

The third generall transgression followeth, which is in the abuse of mens substance and goods, is of two sorts: 1. When as goods are evill employed, and unprofitably spent: as 1. In beho cost, and giving rewards to procure mischiefe to others: as wicked Haman promised to bring ten th sand talents of silver into the Kings treasurie, to have the Iewes destroyed, Ester 3.9. 2. In spendi vainely, as in play, and gaming, in riotous living, in whoring, and such like: as the prodigall c wasted his fathers patrimonie. 3. In consuming the substance in prodigall and superfluous expences in keeping of haukes and hounds, for men of meane estate, by which meanes they are made unable give unto the poore.

2. The other abuse is the miserable keeping and hoording up of wealth, and not using of it to releeving of others necessitie: as in comforting strangers, succouring of the poore, redeeming of captiv and such like. It was the rich mans condemnation, that suffered Lazarus to starve at his gate for want releefe. These before God are guilty of theft, in denying that to the needie brother, which his necessi requireth; and therefore the Wiseman saith, Withhold not the good from the owners thereof, though thou power in thine hand, Prov. 3. 27. and what owners hee meaneth, not only the possessors, but even th whose povertie requireth it, the next verse sheweth: Say not to thy neighbour, goe and come again, to morrow I will give thee, if now thou have it. Nay some are so miserable, that they defraud their ow soule, Eccles. 4.8. and are theeves to their owne bellie, Simler.

2. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the generall and particular contents of this precept.

Thou shalt not steale, &c. The scope and end of this precept, is to preserve the particular right a interest which God hath given to every one in the goods and possessions of the earth: and it forbi deth all theft, fraud, violence, whereby our neighbours outward and temporall state is empayred hindered; and it contrariwise commandeth to defend, as much as in us lieth, our neighbours state, to give unto him what is his due, Ursinus.

These then are the particular vertues here prescribed, with the contrarie vices: 1. Iustice and equ in contracts and bargaines is commanded; not to use fraud or deceit, or to practise unlawfully to other mens goods: but to give unto every man that which is due unto him, and to deale justly, pl and sincerely with all, as wee our selves would bee dealt with: which is grounded upon that prin of the law and nature, Whatsoever you would that men should doe unto you, doe unto them, Matth. 7.12

Contrarie hereunto is all injustice, and wrongfull usurping of other mens goods, or attempting same by violence, fraud, or theft: the divers kinds whereof are before in the severall question led at large. So the Wiseman saith: Intend no hurt against thy neighbour, seeing hee dwelleth feare by thee, Prov. 3.29.

2. Here is also commanded contentment of mind, that wee be contented with that portion God hath given unto us, not greedily desiring any thing of another mans. So the Apostle saith, linesse is great riches, if a man bee content with that hee hath, 1 Tim. 6.6. And againe, vers. 8. when wee have food and rayment, let us therewith bee content.

Contrarie hereunto is, 1. Covetousnesse and discontent in one extreme, namely, the defect, Preacher describeth the covetous man, There is no end of his travaile, neither can his eye be satisfied riches, Eccl. 4.8. 2. And in the other extreme of excesse, is niceneſse and morositie, not to take ceive those things which one may safely accept and use: as the begging Friers, which thought themselves defiled with taking of money, yet loved it well enough.

2. Faithfulnesse is another vertue, both in using diligence in our vocation, that wee may have to port our necessities, as the Apostle adviseth: let him that stole, steale no more, but let him labour with his hands, &c. Ephes. 4.28. as also in shewing an honest care in preserving and saving the goods of other, as Iacob carefully kept Labans sheepe, enduring both the frost of the night, and the heat the day, Genes. 31.40.

Contrarie hereunto are, 1. unfaithfulnesse in having no care to save the goods of another: such one is the unfaithfull Steward in the Parable, that was accused for wasting his masters goods, 16. 1. 2. Idlenesse and negligence: the idle and slothfull, S. Paul calleth inordinate walkers: giveth this rule concerning such, that hee which would not worke, should not eat, 2 Thess. 3.10.

ow is will bee here objected, that this vertue of Fidelitie belongeth unto the fifth Commandement, it is before rehearsed among the duties there prescribed, and therefore appertaineth not to this place. he answer is, that the same vertue, in respect of divers ends and offices, by the which vertues are inguished, may bee referred to sundrie Commandements: and so the grace and gift of faithfulnesse, as occurreth with obedience, and dutie to Superiours, belongeth to the fifth precept; but as it respect- the preserving of anothers goods and substance, it hath the proper place here.

3. Liberalitie is commanded, which is a franke and voluntarie collation or bestowing of ones sub- ce upon those which want, discerning discreetly, to whom, where, when, and how much to give: h an one was Iob, Who did not eat his morsels alone, &c. hee did not see any perish for want of cloath- , &c. Iob 31.17, 19.

Contrarie hereunto are, 1. Sparing niggardlinesse, such as was in Nabal, that would afford nothing David in his necessitie: 2. And vaine prodigalitie, such as was in the prodigall child, Luk. 16.

4. Hospitalitie is a kinde of liberalitie, which is especially extended to and exercised towards strang- and chiefly such as are exiled and banished out of their owne countrie for the Gospell and the Christ: for this vertue is Lot commended, Heb. 13. 2.

Contrarie hereunto is inhumanitie toward strangers: such was the crueltie of the Egyptians toward Israelites, that sojourned among them.

5. Frugalitie joyned with parsimonie, is a vertue also hitherto belonging, which is a thriftie saving of such things as God sendeth, and a provident employing of them to some profit: whereby one is made able to give, and to shew his liberalitie: for frugalitie and parsimonie are the two upholders and preservers of true liberalitie: for without frugalitie, liberalitie will degenerate into niggardlinesse: and turne parsimonie into prodigalitie. Of this frugalitie and parsimonie our blessed Saviour gave exam- ple when hee commanded, after hee had fed the multitudes in the wildernesse, that the broken meat should bee reserved and kept, Mark. 8.

Contrarie hereunto are, 1. Undiscreet wasting of the goods, and unnecessarie liberalitie, or rather wastfull prodigalitie: as in Herod, that promised, if it were to the one halfe of his kingdome, for a plea- sant and wanton dance, Mark. 6. and the diseased woman had spent all shee had upon Physitians, and was never the better, Mark. 5. 26. 2. And niggardly sparing, when there is necessarie cause of spending: hee that pincheth his owne bellie, and defraudeth his owne soule, Eccles. 4. 8. And such an one was that miserable man that Ambrose speaketh of: Cui si quando ovum appositum esset, conqueri solebat, quod pullus excisus esset: Who, if an egge were set before him, would complaine, that a chicken was killed, lib. de Naboth cap. 2. hee could not affoord himselfe an egge to eat.

3. Places of Controversie.

1. Controv. and Confut. Against the Anabaptisticall communitie.

Thou shalt not steale. This precept overthroweth that error which first among the Heathen was maintained by Plato, that all things among men ought to bee common: the same also was held by Heretickes called Apostolici, and in these daies by the Anabaptists: for if there were a communitie of goods, then no man should have a propertie in any thing, and so there could not bee any theft: this precept maintaineth every mans peculiar and severall right and interest in that which hee hath. First of all objections shall bee answered, that labour to have a communitie.

Obj. 1. The Apostles had all things common in Ierusalem, Act. 2. 44.

Ans. 1. That custome was then both easie, because they were few: and necessarie, for if they had sold their possessions, and so made the use common, they by violence should have been stripped of all: but now there is neither the like facilitie nor necessitie. 2. That communion was voluntarie, not im- posed upon any: for it was in their choise, whether they would sell their possessions or not: as Peter saith to Ananias, Act. 5. 4. After it was sold, was it not in thine owne power? Vrsin. 3. Neither were all things common among them: they had some things private and peculiar to themselves: as Mary had her proper house and dwelling in the citie, Act. 12. 12. Simler. 4. Beside, this was not the generall custome of the whole Church: for in Achaia and Macedonia, there was gathering made for the Saints at Ierusalem: it was particular for that place, and peculiar to that time; therefore a generall rule for all times and places must not bee taken from thence, Simler. 5. Neither were then things so indifferently common, as that every one might take what hee would: but the things in common were distributed according as every one had need, Act. 5. 35.

Obj. 2. Christ saith to the young man, Mark. 10. 21. Goe and sell all that thou hast, and give to the poore: Ergo, wee must doe the like.

Ans. 1. That was a personall precept and belonging to those times: So the Apostles did leave their nets, and their houses, but wee are not commanded now to doe the like, Simler. 2. Beside, our Savi- our said to shew how farre hee came short of the perfection of the law, and to humble him that thought so well of himselfe. 3. Further, our blessed Saviour saith not, make thy goods common, but, give to the poore: which are two divers things, Vrsin.

Obj. 3. The Apostle saith, All things are yours, 1. Cor. 3. 21. Ergo, all things ought to bee common.

Answ. 1. The Apostles meaning is, that all things were ordained for their good, whether life or death, death, things present, or things to come. 2. Hee speaketh not of a common possession of all things in right: but that they are common in use, they had jus ad rem, non jus in re, right to the thing, not in the thing, Ursin.

Now on the contrary, that it is lawfull for Christians to retaine a severall right and propertie in those things which they possesse, it may thus appeare: 1. The Scripture alloweth contracts, as buying and selling: as Abraham bought a buriall place of Ephron, *Gen.*23. David, the threshing floore of Araunah, 2.*Sam.*24. but there can be no such contracts, ubi non sunt distincta rerum dominia, where there are not distinct properties in things. And if they shall object, that these examples of the old Testament belong not unto us: wherein they shew their blasphemous error, seeing the Apostle saith, that whatsoever is written is written for our learning, *Rom.*15.4. wee have the like warrant in the new Testament, how the Disciples of our blessed Saviour bought such things as were necessarie, *Ioh.*4.8. and 6.5. chap.13.29.

2. The giving of almes is every where commanded in Scripture: but men are not to give almes, but of their owne. If there were no particular propertie in things, but one had as good right as another, neither should men have wherewith to give almes, neither should there need any almes at all.

3. Riches are the gift of God, *Prov.*10.22. The blessing of the Lord maketh rich: and chap.22.2. The rich and poore meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all: therefore the Lord alloweth distinct properties in things, without the which none should bee richer than another.

4. The Lord himselfe appointed, that the tribes with their severall lots and possessions should be distinguished: and therefore the fact of Naboth is defended and justified, because he would not part with the inheritance of his fathers.

5. Many examples may bee produced, not onely out of the old, but the new Testament also, of divers of the Saints, that had their proper possessions and goods, as Tabitha, *Act.*8. that made coates for the poore; of Lydia, *Act.*16. who was a seller of purple.

6. It is lawfull for a Christian to have proper servants, much more his proper goods: for the peculiar possession of servants seemeth more to bee against the freedome and libertie of nature, than of goods and lands: but the distinction betweene masters and servants is not taken away, but continued and maintained in the new Testament, *Ephes.*6. and in other places: much more distinct possession of things, Simler

4. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Take heede even of the smallest theft.

Thou shalt not steale. In that this precept is propounded in generall, no quantitie prescribed or limited of that which is stollen; it sheweth, that all kinde of theft is condemned, even in the least and smallest things. And so the Apostle saith in generall words, Let him that stole, steale no more, *Ephes.*4.28. And the reason is: Non id quod furto ablatum est, sed mens furantis attenditur: Not what a man stealeth, but the minde of him that stealeth is considered: Hierome. For in fornication and adulterie whosoever it is, rich or poore, faire or deformed, with whom the sinne is committed, una fornicatio & adulterium, it is one kinde of fornication and adulterie: so is it in theft; Quemcunque servum abstulerit, furti crimen incurrit: How little soever the servant stealeth from his master, he incurreth the crime of theft, *Hieron. in Epist. ad Tit. cap.*2. Hereby therefore al are to bee admonished that they take heed even of pilfring small things: for it is Satans subtiltie, from stealing of a pin or point to draw such on to pence, and pounds, and greater thefts: it is good therefore to take heed in the beginning.

2. Observ. All deceivers and extortioners are accounted before God as theeves.

FVrther, seeing in this precept all kinde of purloyning that which is anothers is forbidden, by deceit, guile, fraud, violence, oppression; it is evident, that all such fraudulent practices are accounted in the sight of God no better than theft: which Zachaeus considering, maketh the like restitution of fourefold for that which hee had gotten by forged cavillation, *Luk.*19.8. as if hee had directly stollen it. Because then the name of a theefe is odious and ignominious let al such circumventers of their brethren, couseners, deceivers, extortioners, leave such wicked trades, unlesse they will bee ranged in the ranke of theeves.

3. Observ. Of the greatnesse of the sinne of theft.

THis sinne of theft, of what kinde soever, though many make light account of it, is for many reasons to bee shunned and abhorred of all: 1. Prima sumitur ex gravitate: The first is taken from the greatnesse thereof: for theft in some cases is compared to murther, *Ecclesiastic.*34.22. The bread of the needy is the life of the poore, hee that defraudeth him thereof, is a murtherer. Secunda ex periculi qualitate: The second reason is from the qualitie and condition of the danger: for in other sinnes satisfaction is sooner made than in theft: where before effectuall repentance can bee wrought, restitution must bee made of the thing taken away, and of the losse that came thereby. Tertia ex talionis imitatione: The third is by unprofitablenes of such things as are wrongfully gotten: for they neither profit spiritually, *Prov.*10.2. The treasures of wickednes profit nothing: Almes given of evill gotten wealth availeth not: neither doe they profit temporally: for such unrighteous substance doth not prosper: as the Prophet saith unto cruell oppressors, Thou hast consulted shame unto thine owne house, by destroying many people. Thom. in opusc.

The ninth Commandement.

1. Questions discussed.

Quest. I. What it is to answer a false testimony.

Thou shalt not beare false witnesse, &c. The word here used is ghanah, or as Oleaster readeth, without any alteration at all, anah: which signifieth properly to answer: and accordingly it receiveth divers significations: 1. It seemeth specially to be understood of false testimony publikely, when one is asked before the Judge, and so answereth falsly. 2. It may be also thus expounded, that although hee be his enemy and have wrong to hate him, yet he should not be answerable therein, in shewing hatred againe, in being a false witnesse. But the other sense is more fit and agreeable here. 3. Sometime this word signifieth to hearken: as Psal. 143. 1. Heare my prayer, O Lord, &c. and answer mee: and in this sense this precept as well forbiddeth to heare and receive a false testimony, as to speake it, Oleaster. 4. Because the other word here used, ghed, signifieth a witnesse, as well as the thing witnessed, that is, the testimony it selfe; some of the Hebrewes read thus in the vocative case: Thou shalt not speake, or testifie, ô false witnesse! but then the sentence should bee imperfect: the better reading therefore is, the testimony of falsehood, or false testimony, or false witnesse, as Montanus, unlesse a word be supplied thus: Thou shalt not testifie (as) a false witnesse. Calvin.

Quest. II. Whether false testimony in judgement be here only forbidden.

Salomon thinketh that in this precept only such false testimony is forbidden as is committed publikely in judgement. But that cannot be, for these reasons: 1. Because backbiting and slandering also is a breach of the Morall law, and if it should not be restrained here, it cannot be referred unto any other precept, and so the Morall law should be defective: and that other kinde of false witnesse bearing, than publikely in judgement, is against the Morall law, and not onely against Moses Judicials, it is evident by this, because these offences were even odious among the Heathen, that were not bound to Moses Judicial lawes, Tostat. 2. Seeing God in the former precept shewed, sibi cura esse omnium fortunas, famam, quæ longe pretiosior, neglexisse, that he had care of all mens goods, it is not like hee would neglect their fame, which is more precious, Calvin. But the fame and good name of our neighbour is not onely hurt and hindred by false testimony in publike, but by private false reports also. 3. Coram Deo censentur falsi testes: They are held as false witnesses before God, who by what meanes soever doe defame their brethren, Calvin.

Quest. III. How divers wayes a false testimony is borne.

This false testimony or witnesse bearing, 1. is not only by word of mouth, but also by writing, libelling and such like: for hee that by any such meanes doth bring anothers name in question, speaketh by his penne and writing: yet the lively testimony by voice more hindreth a mans good name, and maketh him more infamous, than the discrediting by any libell: for he that slandereth by his owne mouth, is more beleeved than a libeller, who is not knowne, and in concealing his name, hee maketh the slander the more to be more suspicious, Tostat. qu. 25. 2. Yea this false testimony may be in the suspition of the minde: when men are too ready to thinke evill of their neighbours, and apt to beleeve false reports against them: for herein charity is violated; which is not suspitious, it thinketh no evill, it beleeveth all things, hopeth all things, 1. Cor. 13. 7. Calvin.

Quest. IV. Who is to be counted our neighbour.

And our neighbour, 1. is every man, whosoever: Secundùm naturam omnes propinqui sumus: By nature we are all neighbours, Tostat. and even strangers are our neighbours, as our Saviour expounded in the parable of the Samaritane; who was found to bee more neighbour unto the man that fell among theeves, than either the Priest or Levite, that were of his owne nation. 2. But there are degrees of neighbourhood: Magis tenemur bene agere vicinis, qui sunt proximi, &c. Wee are more bound to doe good to those neighbours, who dwell neere us; and among them, consanguineis, to those which are our kinsmen, than unto others, Tostat. So the neerer in kinred, or acquaintance our neighbour is, so much is the sinne the greater, and more unnaturall, in speaking evill of them: as Psal. 50. 20. Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother, and slanderest thy mothers sonne. 3. Yea if a man bee a false witnesse against himselfe, hee hath transgressed against this precept: quando regulam diligendi à seipso accipit, &c. seeing a man takes a rule from himselfe of loving his neighbour: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy selfe, August. de civitat. Dei, cap. 20.

Quest. V. What conditions must concurre to convince one of falshood.

Righteousnesse. As generally in this precept, we are commanded to speake the truth, as Psal. 15. 2. He that speaketh the truth in his heart, is one of those that shall dwell in the Lords Tabernacle: so all falshood and untruth is condemned, Proverb. 12. 22. Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord: and in the telling of a lye, or telling an untruth, there are three things to be considered: 1. In respect of the matter, that it bee falſe, which is teſtified or told, and ſo the ſignes agree not with the things, nor the words with the minde: 2. The minde muſt be conſidered: there muſt be Voluntas fallendi, a deſire to deceive, there fore S. Paul promiſing to goe into Spaine, though he went not, becauſe he was letted, being kept in priſon at Rome, deceived not, becauſe he had a purpoſe to goe, if he had not beene hindred. 3. There muſt be alſo cupiditas fallendi, a deſire to deceive, Simler. Therefore he which uttereth an untruth unwittingly thinking it was a truth, is not guilty of wilfull falſhood.

Quest. VI. Of the divers kindes of lies.

NOw there are uſually made three kindes of lies: 1. Pernicioſum, a pernicious lye, which tendeth to the hurt of another, in his life, name, or goods; this is the worſt kinde of lye: ſuch was that lye and diſſimulation of Simeon and Levi, who falſly promiſed marriage with their ſiſter unto Sichem, if they would be circumciſed. 2. There is mendacium jocoſum, a pleaſant lye made in merriment and ſport, which is not ſo grievous as the other, becauſe here is not cupiditas fallendi, a deſire to doe hurt, or deceive: as ſuch a lye the old Prophet made, to bring backe the man of God againe, 1. King. 13. which tended to his great hurt, though the other intended it not: but this kinde of offence is ſo much the greater, Cui quis ex aſſuetudine delectatur mentiendo, if one make a common practice and cuſtome thus to lye, Tolet. as jeſters and paraſites doe. 3. Mendacium officioſum, an officious lye, when one telleth a lye to doe ſome other good, as to deliver him from danger, as ſome thinke Rahab did, to rid the ſpies from that preſent perill: this kinde of lye of all the reſt is moſt excuſable; yet it cannot ſimply be juſtified, for every lye in it ſelfe is evill, and contrary to the truth, and ſo diſpleaſing unto God, Simler. Toſtat. But this kinde of lye hath no excuſe or defence at all, if a man lye for his owne profit and advantage, as Ananias and Sapphira did, Act. 5.

Quest. VII. Some caſes wherein the truth is not uttered, and yet no lye committed.

BUt there are ſome caſes, wherein the truth is not according to the literall meaning of the words uttered, and yet no lye or falſhood committed: 1. As when ſome part of the truth is concealed: as he which hath a thouſand crownes, lieth not, if he ſay he hath 600. So Ieremy lied not, when he was willed by the King to tell the Princes, that he intreated him, not to be ſent unto Ionathans priſon houſe, Ierem. 38.26. that was part of his ſpeech with the King, but not all. Therefore the Philoſopher is deceived, who maketh two extremes of the truth, the defect, and the exceſſe: for there may be a defect, not in telling all the truth, as I have ſhewed, and yet no lye. 2. Neither alwayes in the exceſſe is a lye committed: as in the Hyperbolicall ſpeeches in Scripture, which muſt be underſtood not after an Arithmeticall, but a Geometricall proportion, ſerving only to ſet forth the excellency of the thing ſo deſcribed: and ſo in other like figures and tropes, which are for elegancy of ſpeech, Simler.

Quest. VIII. How the truth may be uttered, and yet this Commandement broken.

SOmetime the truth may be uttered and teſtified againſt our neighbour, and yet this Commandement may be tranſgreſſed even in ſpeaking the truth: and that is, 1. When any one diſcovereth the faults of his neighbour of rancour and malice: for then, Siniſtra excuſabimus, non niſi vera crimina nos proferre. We uſe a vaine excuſe, that we ſpeake but the truth in ripping up his faults, Calvin. For wee have both charity in ſo doing: for the Wiſe-man ſaith, Hatred ſtirreth up contentions, but love covereth all ſinnes paſſes, Proverb. 6.12. 2. When the rule of the Goſpell is not obſerved, to tell our neighbour his faults privately firſt, before we make them publike: therein we alſo offend, and that two wayes: firſt, Quia tranſgreditur ordinem, quem Chriſtus poſuit in corrigendo: becauſe he tranſgreſſeth the order ſet by Chriſt in correcting of offenders, Matth. 18.11. And againe, Quia ex mala intentione agit, becauſe he doth it of a bad intention to hurt his brother, Toſtat. queſt. 25. 3. But two caſes are excepted, wherein this private admonition is to be omitted: firſt, Si judicialiter inquiratur: if the offence be judicially inquired of, then one is not to conceale the faults which he knoweth by another: for in this caſe he need not tell it to the Church, that is, to the Judges and Governours, becauſe it is knowne to them already. Another caſe is, where the offence, though not yet acted, but intended only, concerneth the whole State, wherein there is danger in concealing: in ſuch offences complaint may bee firſt made to authority: for of ſuch offences paſſes our bleſſed Saviour ſpeaketh not, but only of thoſe which are private and particular: If thy brother treſpaſſe againſt thee.

Quest. IX. Of the divers kindes of falſe teſtimonies.

BUt now let us proceed to examine the particular kindes of falſe teſtimonies, which are of two ſorts. 1. In doctrine, which either concerneth God and religion, or the knowledge of humane Arts & the affaires of the life: and that either publike in judgement and making of covenants; or private, which is either in teſtifying falſly againſt others, or giving a falſe teſtimony of our ſelves, Marbach. Simler. Of theſe now in their order.

Quest. X. Of a falſe teſtimony in matters of religion.

FIrſt, a falſe teſtimony is in doctrine: 1. In matters of religion: as, Cum in religione à vera fide diſceditur, when as in religion any depart from the analogy of faith, Marbach. As they which maintaine hereſie and falſe doctrine; or which for feare in time of perſecution, deny the truth; or ſuch as handle the word of God impurely, and mingle with it their owne traditions, and fables: all theſe are falſe wit-

…s against God and his truth. And therefore Augustine inferreth well, Si mendacium quod adversus …nem conjugum temporalem dicitur, detestabile est, &c. If a lye which is made against any ones temporall …, be detestable, much more, if it be against life eternall, as every lye is that is made in doctrine of reli… &c. And to this purpose Augustine produceth that saying of S. Paul, 1. Cor. 15. 15. We are found false …sses against God (namely, if the dead rise not againe) for we have testified of God, that he hath raised up …ist: August. de mendac. ad Consent. cap. 12. But because this kinde of lying in causes of religion is a …fession of our duty toward God, it more properly belongeth to the first Table, being a breach of the …d Commandement, Simler.

Quest. XI. Of falshood and errour in Arts.

Another kinde of falshood in doctrine, is, Cum in artibus vel disciplinis à vero aberratur, when men …err in arts and disciplines, Marbach. As when paradoxes, and false opinions are maintained in Phi… Physicke, or any other science and profession, as Anaxagoras held and defended, that the snow …lacke. Now these errours are dangerous in three respects: 1. Because of the matter, Error per se …rrour of it selfe is a beastly and filthy thing. 2. The cause thereof is arrogancy and pride: Sophi… …o shew their wit, will take upon them to defend errours, and strange opinions. 3. But the greatest …ger is in regard of the inconvenience that often ensueth, for by such errour in opinion, many times …re seduced also to erre in action, and which is worst of all, such Sophistry from humane arts creepeth …metimes into Theology and Divinity, Simler.

Quest. XII. How falshood is committed in judgement.

…lshood in judiciall acts, is diversly committed: 1. By the false and unjust accuser: therefore the Law …aith, Levit. 19. 16. Thou shalt not stand against the blood of thy neighbour: that is, accuse him wrong… …and bring his life in danger. 2. The Judge offendeth, in giving false judgement, Levit. 19. 15. Thou …not doe unjustly in judgement. 3. The actuaries also, and ministers of unjust Judges, are guilty of the …offence, Isay 10. 1. Woe unto them that decree wicked decrees, and write grievous things. 4. The Advo… …and patrons of causes, that defend false titles, and set a faire shew on bad causes: as Tertullus abused …eloquence in disgracing of Paul, Act. 24. 1. 5. False witnesses especially transgresse this Commande… …because upon their testimony resteth the whole proceeding in judgement.

Quest. XIII. Of the danger of bearing false witnesse in judgement.

Concerning false witnesses: 1. He is not only a false witnesse, that testifieth that which is false against …his brother, as such were the false witnesses against Naboth, but hee also which concealeth the truth, …of feare, favor, or malice, whereby the truth is overthrowne. 2. Yet there are divers degrees in bearing …of false witnesse: for a false testimony is more hainous in causes criminall, and in those which are capi… …all, and touching ones life, than in civill, and such as bring not the life in danger: and those which are …ought to effect are more odious, than where they faile of the effect, as when the Judge suspecteth such …dealing, and giveth no credit unto them, Simler. 3. But generally to be a false witnesse, is a grievous …sin, for he sinneth against God, whose name he taketh in vaine, he abuseth the Judge, oppresseth the in… …nocent, condemneth his owne soule, Simler. And three wayes doth a false witnesse commit great impie… …violationem justitiæ, because by his meanes justice is violated: ex perjurio, by being perjured: ex men… …dacio, by lying: so in every false testimony there is a treble sinne, Thom. Aquin. 22. qu. 70. art. 4. 4. The …judgement of a false witnesse by the Law of God is retaliation, Deut. 19. 19. Thou shalt doe unto him, as he …had thought to have done unto his brother: So Haman was hanged upon the same gibbet which he had made …for Mardochæo: and Daniels accusers were cast into the Lions den, whither he was condemned before. By …the Roman Lawes, which were contained in the 12. Tables, a false witnesse was condemned to be throwne …headlong from the mount Tarpeye.

Quest. XIV. Of the detorting and wresting of words to another sense: another kinde of false testimony.

Neither are they onely false witnesses, which doe bring in a false record against any of such things as …were neither said nor done: but he also is a false witnesse, Qui sibi eadem sensu detorquet intelligit, quàm …dicuntur, which understandeth ones sayings in another sense than they are spoken, as they are said in the …Gospel, to be false witnesses against our blessed Saviour, that detorted and depraved his words, as though …he had spoken of the destruction of the materiall Temple, whereas he spake only of the dissolution of the …temple of his body, which he would raise up in three dayes, Matth. 26. 61. The like false witnesse was …brought against Stephen, Act. 6. 14. We have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this …place. Beda. But Hierome observeth further, that they did not only pervert the sense and meaning …of the blessed Saviours words, but invert and change the words themselves: for Christ said, Solvite tem…plum, destroy ye this temple, Joh. 2. 19. but they alter the words thus, I can destroy this temple. But he …Destroy it you, not I: Non licuit eis ut nobis ipsi inferamus manus, it is not lawfull for us to lay hands …on our selves: they adde further, and build it againe in three dayes. But our Saviour, non addidit ut ædi…ficarent templum, &c. to shew that he meant a living and breathing temple, said, I will raise it up in …three dayes, Hierom. super Matth. 26.

Quest. XV. Of the violating of faith in leagues and covenants.

THere remaineth another kinde of publike false testimony, which is in the violating of leagues and covenants: 1. This S. Paul reckoneth among the sinnes of the Gentiles, Rom. 1. 30. that were truce-breakers: and for this speciall fault were the Carthagineans noted, with whom it was to falsifie their faith, so that it grew into a proverb, Punica fides, the Carthagineans faith. Of the kinde was that sacrilegious and impious breach of faith, in that great massacre in France, and bur slaughter practised by the Papists upon the Protestants, against their faith given, and covenants made betweene them. 2. This violating of faith, as it is a breach of an oath, and so manifest perjury, referred to the third precept: but in regard that promises are falsified to men, it appertaineth hither this Commandement, Simil. 3. Of this kind was that dissembled covenant, and agreement made be Simeon and Levi, and the Sichemites, and Sauls slaughter of the Gibeonites, contrary to the oath covenant that Iosua formerly had made with them, for the which the Lord was angry, and punished land with famine in Davids time, 2. Sam. 21. 1.

Quest. XVI. Whether are more grievous, publike or private false-witnesse-bearing.

NOw follow such false testimonies as are committed privately: in the which in generall, these diffe rences may be observed: 1. That false testimonies, which are publike in judgement, are more grie vous than those which are out of judgement, both because publike witnesses speake upon their oath, so are more credited; and greater infamy followeth upon such a publike testimony, than by a private slan der: but this must be understood only materialiter, materially, in respect of the matter and action it self, and cæteris paribus, other things being alike: for otherwise, intentionaliter, the private slanderer may in a more malicious intent to hurt, than he which falsly deposeth in judgement: and beside, the priuy slan derer, if his false report touch his neighbours life, is more injurious, than hee which publikely accuseth falsly, where the crime bringeth not the life in question. 2. There is difference also in publike false testi monies, in respect of the divers action: for there are three kindes of actions or causes: there is causa mere civilis, a meere civill cause, as in an action of debt, or such like; there is causa criminalis civiliter intentata, a criminall cause, but civilly intended, that is, when the crime only deserveth a civill punishment, as pecuniary mulct; and causa criminalis criminaliter intentata, a criminall cause, criminally intended, as the punishing of the body, or losse of limme or life. The false accusation in the second is more grievous than in the first, where no infamy lieth: and in the third more than in the second, where there is infamy only; but in the third, there is both infamy and punishment, Sic fere Tostat. quæst. 25.

Quest. XVII. Of the divers kindes of private false testimonies.

Of slandering. OF slandering. Now the particular kindes of false testimonies privately given, are these: 1. privy slandering, and obtrectation of them that are absent. This speciall vertue is required of tho that shall dwell in the Lords Tabernacle, He that slandreth not with his tongue, Psal. 11. 3. such as the Saba, that accused Mephiboseth. 2. Sam. 16. 1. and wicked Doeg, that by his malicious accusation procu the slaughter of 85. of the Lords Priests, 1. Sam. 22. 9. and Haman which incensed the King against t whole nation of the Iewes, Esther 3. 9. 10. Pelarg. 2. Neither they only, which devise the slander or be falsly, but they which willingly receive it, and believe it: and therefore it followeth in the Psalme, He that receiveth not a false report against his neighbour. Simonides the Musician, by the light of a could reprove one that told him, that many spake evill of him: Et quando tu desines mihi &c. &c. and when wilt thou leave to backbite me with thine eares? 3. They also which suffer be slandered in their hearing, and hold their peace, not defending the good name of their brother partakers in this sinne: such were the servants of Saul, that held their peace when Saul charg than and David to have conspired against him, 1. Sam. 22. 8. But Ionathan dealt faithfully with Da fending him in his absence, before Saul his father, 1. Sam. 19. 4.

Of railing. 2. Βλασφημία, evill speaking, and railing, which S. Paul biddeth to be put away, Ephes. 4. 31. which is divers sorts: 1. In manifest and open railing to the face, as Shemei cursed David, 2. Sam. 16. 2. I and scorning, as Michol laughed David to scorne, 2. Sam. 6. Simler. 3. Or in hasty and rash judgem Potiphar upon the complaint of his wife, without any further examination, condemned innocent Ioseph to prison, Bulling.

Of whispering and tale bearing. 3. Then there is ψιθυρισμὸς, whispering: they which use it are called ψιθυροὶ, whisperers, tatlers, rentiers qui quid ubique audiunt, who will tell whatsoever they heare, Thomas. Therefore the Law saith, Thou shalt not walke about as a tale bearer among the people, Levit. 19. 16. These are first busie bodies, that curiously inquire and aske questions of things that belong not unto them, They goe about from house to house, 1 Tim. 5. 13. then they are prattlers, that clacke in every corner what soever they know, and so are the sowers of dissention, and makers of strife, which is one of the six things which the Wise man hateth, Prov. 6. 19.

Of flattery. 4. Hitherto belongeth also κολακεία, flattery, who seeke altogether to please, and doe uphold upon whom they fawne, in their sinnes. 1. The scope and end of such flatterers is their owne advantage and therefore they attend upon rich men, and specially in Princes Courts: as such were in Sauls Court, of whom David complaineth, They flatter with their tongues, and speake with a double heart, Psal. 12. 2. 2. Of these there are two sorts: for there are some flatterers in the callings of religion, false Prophets, and flattering Preachers, that sooth up men in their sinnes: such were they whom Ezekiel describeth, chap. 13. that did sow pillowes under all arme-holes. There are other flatterers in civill things: such was Iehonadab, that applied himselfe to Ammons filthy humour, 2. Sam. 13. thinking thereby to insinuate himselfe unto him, being the Kings eldest sonne, Pelarg. 3. A double mischiefe commeth by these flatterers: for they both corrupt them whom they flatter, and nourish them in their evill, and feed their humorous disposition, as the people puffed up Herod in pride, by their flattering acclamations, that it was the voice of God, not of man, Act. 12. So Alexander and Nero were corrupted by flattery, and of good Princes became most cruell Tyrants, Simler. Therefore Diogenes said well, that it was better to fall into the mouthes of Crowes, than κόλακας, flatterers: for they did but devoure the body, these did devoure the soule. And beside this mischiefe, flatterers procure great hurt unto those whom in their flattery they accuse and traduce: as Doeg was the cause that 85. Priests were put to the sword, Simler.

4. Another kinde of false testimony is ψευδολογία, all kinde of lying, and false speaking: for lying lips are an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 12. 22. The beginning of lying was from the Devill, Ioh. 8. 44. When he speaketh a lye, he speaketh he of his owne: he is a lyer, and the father thereof; and the end of liers is to be cast into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, Basting. Pelarg. Of the divers kindes of lies see before quest. 6. Of lying.

Quest. XVIII. Of a false testimony, which a man giveth of himselfe.

NOw remaineth the last kinde of false testimonies, when one is a false witnesse of himselfe: and heerein there are two sorts: 1. Arrogancy and vaine ostentation, when any maketh his boast of vertue, and of that which is not at all in him: such the Prophet Esay meaneth, chap. 65. 5. which say, Stand apart, come not neere me, I am holier than thou. Such was the Pharisie, that vaunted himselfe before the Lord of his fasts and almes. 2. The other is coloured and cloaked hypocrisie: such was that of the Pharisies, that under pretence of long prayer devoured widowes houses, Matth. 23. 14. these made gaine and profit the end of their religion. Another sort of hypocrites make the praise of men the scope of their dissimulation: such were also the Pharisies, that caused a trumpet to be blowne before them, when they gave their almes, and loved to pray in the corners of the streets, that they might be seene of men, Matth. 6. Like unto these Antichristicall hypocrites were the Monkes in Popery, that through a pretence of religion, gathered infinite wealth and riches, possessions and lands, unto their Monasteries and Cels. All these are enemies to the truth, and maintainers of falshood, making a lye of themselves, Simler.

3. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The particular vertues commanded, with their contrary vices forbidden.

IN this Commandement generally is commanded the love, confession, and defence of the truth: and contrariwise is forbidden all lying, falshood, dissimulation: 1. The first vertue then here required, is the love of the truth, and the franke confession thereof with the mouth, and practice in the life: therefore the evill though he sometime speake the truth, yet because he loveth it not, hee is not of the truth, neither can he said to be true. The confession of the truth, as it concerneth the glory of God, belongeth to the first Commandement; but as it respecteth the good of our neighbour, it is referred to the ninth. Concerning this inward love, and outward profession of the truth, the Prophet David saith, describing a righteous man, Psal. 15. 2. And speaketh the truth in his heart. Confession of the truth.

Contrary hereunto are, 1. In the defect, all kinde of lying whatsoever, dissimulation, fraud, circumvention, flattering: such the Prophet noteth, Psal. 12. 2. They speake deceitfully every one with his neighbour, flattering with their lips, and speake with a double heart: the Lord cut off all flattering lips. 2. In the excesse, as 1. an intempestive and unseasonable confession of the truth: concerning the which, our blessed Saviour giveth this caveat: Not to give holy things unto dogs, nor to cast pearles before swine, Matth. 7. 6. not in all places, and before every one to utter every truth. 2. Curiosity, which is to enquire things unnecessary, and unsearchable: as the Apostles were inquisitive after the time of restoring the Kingdome to Israel: to which our Saviour maketh this answer, That it was not for them to know the times and seasons, which the father hath put in his owne power, Act. 1. 7.

Heere is required that vertue called Candor, which is a favourable interpreting of mens doings and sayings, taking all things in the better part, and hoping the best, where there is no evident cause to the contrary: which is an especiall fruit of charity, as the Apostle sheweth, 1 Cor. 13. 7. It beleeveth all things, hopeth all things. To interpret things in the best part.

Contrary hereunto are, 1. In the defect, first perverseneſſe, taking all things in the worst part, and wresting mens sayings and doings to another sense than they meant: as the false witnesses did those words of our blessed Saviour, Of the destroying the temple, and raising it in three dayes: which he meant of the temple of his body, they turned it to the materiall temple. Secondly, suspition: when men are ready to take every occasion to suspect their neighbour of evill, which is contrary to charity, which thinketh not evill, 1 Cor. 13. 5. it is not suspitious. Yet all suspition is not condemned in Scripture: for our blessed Saviour saith, Matth. 10. 16, 17. Beware of men, &c. And, Bee wise as Serpents, &c. There is then a good suspition, and an evill suspition, which are thus distinguished: 1. The evill suspition is raised without any cause at all, or the same not sufficient: the good ariseth of a probable and sufficient cause. 2. The evill, upon a bare suspition any thing is certainly concluded: the good leaveth the thing suspected in The difference of good and bad suspition.

suspense and doubt. 3. The evill is, when upon suspition followeth hatred, and an intention to [illegible] mischiefe: the good, when one useth his suspition to charitable and friendly admonition. 2. In the excesse here offendeth the credulous person, that is without all suspition, where there is just cause: such one was Gedaliah, that would suspect nothing of bloudy Ismael that was sent to kill him, *Ier.*40.16. Secondly, the flatterer erreth here, who upholdeth men in their sinnes, and will not tell them their faults: therefore Moses saith, Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, but thou shalt plainly rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer him to sinne.

3. Simplicity and plainenesse is commanded, which is a vertue, whereby one plainly and sincerely professeth that which is right and agreeable to the truth, without any colouring or cloaking: so in Nathanael commended for an Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile, *Ioh.*1.47.

Contrary hereunto is doubling and dissembling, either in words, or workes, sayings, or doings: so Jonadab, that gave that lewd counsell to Ammon, is noted for a crafty and subtile man, 2 *Sam.*13.3.

4. Constancie here required, is a vertue, which persevereth in the truth, being once knowne and apprehended, and not changing, without necessary or probable cause: as *Psalm.*15.4. That sweareth to his [illegible] hindrance and changeth not.

Contrary hereunto are, 1. In the defect, levity and inconstancy, without any just occasion to alter and change the opinion: as Saul in his phrantick fits hated David, and sought his life, having confessed his foolishnesse and error before, 1 *Sam.*26.21. 2. In the excesse, is pertinacie and obstinacie by no reason or perswasion to change an opinion or purpose once conceived: such was Herods perverseneſſe, in keeping his rash oath in beheading of Iohn Baptist.

5. Docilitie, or willingnesse, or aptnesse to heare and conceive the truth, is joyned with constancie hereof the Wise-man saith, *Prov.*21.28. A false witnesse shall perish, but he that heareth speaketh continually. He may soone be seduced to testifie falsly, that will receive no other information: but he that is willing to heare, and to be further instructed in the truth, cannot lightly erre, or be deceived.

Contrary hereunto are, 1. In the defect, easinesse to be led and carried away with every tale, to beleeve light of beleefe, as Potiphar was against Ioseph, without any further examination. 2. In the excesse, not to heare at all what others informe: such an one was Nabal, who was so wicked that a man might not speak to him, 1 *Sam.*25.17.

6. Taciturnitie, or discreet silence, is here requisite also: which is to conceale things secret, and not fit to be revealed in time and place. Herein Rachel and Leah, contrary to the weakneſſe of that sex, shewed a good example in keeping secret Iacobs purpose of departing from Laban, and consenting thereunto, *Gen.*31.14.

Contrary hereunto are, 1. In the defect: first, garrulitie, pratling and talking, to be full of words, without reason, and out of season. Such light women the Apostle noteth, 1 *Tim.*5.13. They are prattlers and busie bodies. Secondly, futilitie, in keeping nothing secret, but telling whatsoever they know: such a young man that discovered Ionathan and Ahimaaz, and told Absolom, 2 *Sam.*17.18. Thirdly, treachery, as the Ziphims betrayed David unto Saul, 1 *Sam.*23.19. 2. In the excesse, are contrary, moroſity, [illegible] borne and wilfull silence, not to speake at all, or confesse any thing: Such was Cain, that being asked where his brother Habel was, stubbornly made answer, Am I my brothers keeper, *Genes.*4.9. And concealing of the truth, when it ought to bee revealed: against such unwise uncharitable silence the Wise-man giveth this rule: Answer a foole according to his foolishnesse, lest hee be wise in his owne [illegible] *Proverb.*26.5.

3. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. Against the Origenists, that in some cases made it lawfull to lye.

FIrst here that erroneous assertion, which Hierome imputeth to Origen, commeth to be examined which is this, Homo cui incumbit necessitas mentiendi, &c. sic utatur interdum mendacio quemadmodum [illegible] medicamento, ut servet mensuram ejus, &c. He upon whom there lieth a necessity to lye, let him sometime so use a lye, as a sauce or medicine, that he keepe a measure, and exceed not the bounds, &c. Hierome reproveth this opinion, and counteth it as one of Origens errours, though Russinus therein find fault with Hierome. See Hierom. apolog. cont. Ruffin.

Contra. 1. But there is no necessity of lying at all: Moriendum est potius quàm peccandum; We ought to dye rather than sinne, and so consequently to tell a lye: S. Pauls rule must stand, We must not doe evill that good may come of it, *Rom.*3.8. 2. If a lye were tolerable in any case, then chiefly, when by telling a lye one may save his life: but even in such necessity, a lye is not justifiable. Augustine saith well, Mentire vt ne moriaris, & mentiris & moreris, &c. Thou wilt make a lye, lest thou shouldest dye, thou hast lied and diest too: for while thou wouldest shun one kinde of death, which thou mayest deferre, but cannot take away, thou fallest into two; first dying in thy soule, and then afterward in thy body, *August. Psal.*30. Hierome to this purpose writeth to Innocentium, of a woman suspected of adultery, that was tormented and racked to confesse the fault whereof she was not guilty: who in the middest of her torments uttered these words, Tu testis es Domine Iesu, non ideo me negare velle ne peream, sed ideo nolle, ne peccem: Thou art my witnesse Lord Jesus, that I doe not deny it lest I should perish, but therefore I will not lye, lest I should sinne: Sic Hierom. 3. Whereas Origen urgeth the example of Iahel that deceived Holofernes, and of Iacob, Qui patris benedictionem artificij impetravit mendacio: who obtained and his fathers blessing by an artificiall lye: it may be answered, that Iudiths example is out of an Apocryphall booke, and therefore is of no force: and Iacobs example is either extraordinary, and so not to be imitated, or that therein he sheweth some humane infirmity, which is not to be commended: though it pleased God to use it, and dispose of it, for the effecting of his purpose.

2. Confut. Against the Priscillianists.

SEcondly, the Heretickes called Priscillianists held that it was lawfull for them, Mendacio occultare haereses, & se Catholicos fingere: To hide their heresie by telling a lye, and to faine themselves Catholikes: such a trick also that unreasonable sect of the Family of Love have taken up, who use so to wind themselves with obscure and intricate termes, when they are examined, that their heretick by their confession can hardly be found out. The Priscillianists reasons were these: 1. That it was enough to have truth in the heart, though not in the mouth. 2. And a Christian is bound only to speake the truth to his neighbour: but they which are of another religion, are not our neighbours. 3 Iehu fained himselfe a worshipper of Baal. Answ. 1. But S. Paul requireth both to beleeve with the heart, and to confesse with the mouth, Rom. 10. 10. Peter denied Christ only with his mouth, not in his heart: Et tamen lacrymis hoc peccatum diluit: yet he was faine to wash away this sinne with teares. 2. Licet aliqua occultanda sint vera, &c. although some truths may be hid from him that is not yet initiate in the mysteries of religion; Non tamen falsa sunt, yet false things are not to be uttered. 3. Augustine answereth, that Iehu had not a right end before God, and therefore his example in every respect is not to be justified. So August. lib. cont. mendacium. But to this last answer, thus much may be added: that Iehu his example here is much unlike, for he did not seeke his owne gaine, or propounded his owne safety, but did this in a zeale to the glory of God: but the Priscillianists intended their owne safety only, and dishonoured God, in spreading their heresie by this meanes: neither for the matter, did Iehu speake untruly: for indeed he had a great sacrifice for Baal, when he sacrificed his Priests: and in the rest he lied not, but used a kinde of outward dissimulation, which in politike affaires, where the rule of charity is not broken, and Gods glory sought, is not unlawfull.

3. Confut. Against Tostatus that maketh lies in meriment tolerable.

IN the third place Tostatus is here to be dealt withall: whose opinion concerning some kinde of lies, as namely those which are called mendacia jocosa, lies in meriment, is this: that they are tolerable, tum ex necessitate, both for necessity sake, because they are made for delight and recreation, which is necessary: tum quia non nocent, they hurt no body. qu. 26.

Contra. 1. Though recreation and delight be necessary, which we grant: for as quies rest is necessary for the body, so recreation is for the minde: yet there are other delights and recreations, which may bee used: there is no such necessity, to jest and make sport with telling of lies. 2. And though none other be hurt, yet the lier hurteth his owne soule, because he speaketh not the truth: therefore this kinde of lye is not tolerable. 3. But here we refuse not Tostatus distinction of the diversity of recreations that are used among men, and of the divers kindes of men that affect such delights and recreations: whereof he maketh foure sorts: 1. Our blessed Saviour needed no such delight or recreation at all, who as he is read not to have wept, so is he never found to have laughed. For whereas recreations and delights are to temper the infirmity of our nature; Christ being God Poterat se à conditione mortalium defectuosa elevare, quoties volebat: could reare himselfe up from all such mortall defect, as he would himselfe, without any helpe or supportation. 2. There is another sort of perfect men, who are given to heavenly meditation: and their delight and recreation is not in jocosis mendaciis, in such jests and meriments, but in sanctis exhortationibus, & castis colloquiis, in holy exhortations, and chaste communications. 3. There is another sort in another extreme, who are altogether earthly minded, who, when they will recreate themselves, ad iniquitatis convertuntur, turne them to the sports of iniquity, as unto eating, drinking, wantonnesse, lasciviousnesse. 4. There are others, mediocrem vitam tenentes, &c. which are in the middest betweene these two: qui ad medias delectationes convertuntur, which turne them to delights of a middle nature, which are neither spirituall, nor altogether carnall, but honest and seemely recreations. Thus farre Tostatus goeth on well: but in that he placeth merry jests and lies among moderate and tolerable recreations, therein is his errour. For that no kinde of lies at all are tolerable, thus briefly I will shew out of Augustine, whose reasons (some of them) are these:

1. One reason is taken from the nature of a lye: Lex Dei veritas, & quod à vero discrepat, transgredi-tur, &c. The Law of God is truth, and whatsoever differeth from truth, doth transgresse the Law: therefore a lye being a swarving and declining from the truth, transgresseth the Law, and so consequently is sinne. Lib. contr. mendacium, cap. 18.

2. By way of comparison with other sinnes. Cur magis mendacium faciendum, quàm adulterium committendum, &c. Why should it be lawfull rather to lye, than to commit adultery? Lib. de mendac. cap. 8. If it were lawfull to doe the one upon any occasion whatsoever, then neither the other also: for by adultery the body chiefly is corrupted, but by making a lye principally the soule.

3. Divers speciall cases are propounded, wherein, if lying were upon any occasion tolerable, it should seeme to have the most just excuse: but being not allowed in these, it is lawfull in none.

1. It is not lawfull to tell a lye, and commit a lesse evill, Ut detetius malum evitetur, to avoid a greater: as if one had rather make a lye, and offer sacrifice to idols, than to have his body defiled; which was Origens case. For here the case is this, they which force a man to do any unjust thing, threatning that they will will doe a worse, doe in a manner say thus, Fac tu male, ne nos faciamus; Doe thou evill, to prevent us from doing evill: but here this rule ought to be held, Debemus propria peccata magis evitare, quam aliena; We must rather shun our owne sinnes than anothers, August. ibid. cap.9. Againe, it is not in sinnes, as in matters of profit in the world, we call not that a losse which is lost upon hope of greater gaine: but it is not so here, Ut non sit peccatum, quod admittitur, ne gravius admittatur: that it should be no sinne, which is admitted, lest a greater be committed, cap.19.

A lye in no case is to be admitted.

2. Neither is it lawfull to tell a lye to save another mans life, for he that lieth slayeth his soule: Nemo ergo quis tenetur occidere animam, ut alius vitam corporis servet? A man is not bound to slay his soule, to save anothers temporall life, nay a man is not bound to lose his temporall life, to save anothers temporall life: Ut consequatur æternam nostra temporalia relinquenda; We must leave our temporall life for another eternall life; but to hazard our eternall for anothers temporall, there is no reason.

3. Nay we are not to lye, though it be to preserve the chastity of the body. For, Magis servanda castitas animi, quàm corporis: The chastity of the soule must rather be preserved, than of the body: And againe, Magis cavenda in peccatis commissio facti tui, quam permissio facti alieni: In sinnes, we must more take heed of the commission of any fact of our owne, than the permission of anothers fact, ibid. cap.20.

4. Non mentiendum, æternæ hominis salutis causa: We are not to lye, no not for anothers everlasting salvation. As if one is in captivity, and not yet initiate by Baptisme, nor perfectly won unto the faith, who is not like to be brought to the faith, unlesse the keepers be deceived by some lye, and he delivered out of their hands: for a lye is no more in this case to be devised, than adultery to be committed: Si ergo non violanda castitas, nec violanda est veritas: If chastity be not to be violated, much lesse is verity. If then in these speciall cases a lye is not to be admitted, as to avoid a greater evill, to save another mans life, to preserve the chastity of the body, nay not to save anothers soule; then much lesse is it lawfull to make a lye in jest, to shew others sport, and to delight them.

5. Concerning the examples which are objected out of the old Testament, as of Iacobs dissimulation with his father, when he got the blessing: of the Midwives excuse, Exod.1. and Rahabs made for the spies received into her house; Augustines answer is this.

1. Aut figuratè prolata sunt, atq; ita non mendacia, &c. Either they are figuratively spoken, and so no lies: for we must consider, Non quid in facto dicitur, sed quid in sensu significatur: Not what is expressed in fact, but what is signified in sense: for as it is no lye in speech, when one word is put for another, as in metaphors and other tropes: so neither is it in matter, when one thing is signified by another.

2. Another answer is: they are not lies which are mentioned in Scripture, Si figuratè sunt dicta, If they be spoken figuratively; Si mendacia, non sunt imitanda: Or if they were lies, they are not to be imitated, August. lib. de mendac. cap.21.

3. Commendantur comparatione, &c. They are commended by way of comparison, not absolutely. 4. Concerning the excuse of the Midwives, and of Rahab, he saith, Non est remunerata fallacia, sed benevolus animus, benignitas mentis, non iniquitas mentientis; Their fallacie was not rewarded in them, but their mercy, the benignity of their mind, not the iniquity of their lying; Thus August. lib. cont. mendac. cap.17.

4. Confut. Against the Iesuits new trick of equivocating.

FOurthly, that late taken up trick of the Judasites, in equivocating, with their mentall reservations, is evidently contrary to this Commandement: they thinke it lawfull to dissemble with the Magistrate, and to delude him with their ambiguous and equivocating answers. As, if they be asked whether they were in such a place, as beyond the seas, in France or Spaine at such a time, when and where it is certaine they were, they will answer they were not, understanding to themselves secretly to such an end or purpose. The folly and falshood of which their deceitfull equivocations, doth diversly appeare; 1. This is the very evasion of the old Priscillianists before confuted, that if they held the truth inwardly in their heart, it was no matter if the truth were not alway in their mouth: but a right Christian is known by this, He speaketh the truth in his heart, Psal.15.3. he hath the truth both in his heart and mouth. 2. By this device of theirs, they invert the order and nature of things, they make falshood truth, and truth falshood, they turne affirmatives into negatives, and contrariwise; as it is all one, to say, I was not in such a place with a mentall reservation, as to say, I was: and so as Augustine saith, Veritatem facinus patronum mendacii: They make the truth the patron of a lye. 3. If every one should take this licentious liberty, there should be no truth among men, no certainty of any thing: all testimonies given in evidence, all promises and contracts might justly be suspected, lest some secret condition or reservation might be understood: for who can trust him at any time, that thinketh it is lawfull to lye and dissemble sometime? for as Augustine saith, Volens, cum mentitur, esse aptior, fit, cum verum dicit, inertus: For while he applieth himselfe, when he lieth, aptly to the time, he is held uncertaine, when he speaketh the truth. 4. And whereof comes this doubling and dissembling, but of feare, and a bad conscience? what needed the Martyrs by their plaine confession of the truth, to have adventured and lost their lives, if they had held such dissimulation and equivocating lawfull? So Augustine saith, Si simulare liceret, quare id non fecisse Martyres? If it were lawfull to dissemble, why did not the Martyrs so? lib. cont. mendac. cap.5. 5. But if they shall reply againe, that they doe thus equivocate, for the maintenance of their Pope Catholike faith, and for the discovering of heresie, as they call the profession of the Gospell: wee say againe with Augustine in a case not much unlike, Melius occultaretur hæresis, quàm præcipitaretur veritas: It were better that heresie lay hid still, than that the verity should be endangered, de mendac. cap.7.

6. But the example of our blessed Saviour is pretended, who used such kinde of dissimulation, and equivocation equivocation: as *Mark.*5.30. Christ made himselfe as ignorant who had touched his cloathes, whereas he knew it well enough, as well who touched them, as that they were touched. So Luk. 24. 28. Christ made as though he would have gone further, and yet did not. Likewise, *Ioh.*7.8. he saith to his brethren, Goe you up unto this feast: I will not yet goe up, &c. but immediatly after he went up, *vers.*10. Here Christ did equivocate with his brethren: he said he would not goe up, whereas he did indeed goe up, meaning, not with them.

Anſw. 1. To the two first instances Augustine answereth; that they are figures of other things: as in the Christ maketh himselfe ignorant who touched him, therein the Gentiles were prefigured, who were ignorant whom the Lord saith he knew not. In the next, he saith, Christus non mentitus est, &c. nam in consilium est: Christ said no untruth: for indeed he went further, namely to heaven, *August. ibid. c.*13. Neither are we not driven here to such a strait with Augustine to finde out a mystery: Our Saviour in neither of these places dissembleth: for dissimulation is an hiding and cloaking of the truth: but in both places Christ intendeth by this meanes to bring the truth to light: in the first to trie out the faith of him that touched him; in the other to make triall of the humanity and charity of his Disciples; as he did the like to *Philip, Ioh.*6.6. to prove him.

2. Concerning the other instance, it is altogether impertinent: our Saviour speaketh there as he meant: that he would not goe up yet, or now, because his time was not come, and though hee went up not after, yet his first saying did stand, for that (yet) was not then come. So *Ioh.*2.4. though hee would worke a miracle to turne water into wine, at his mothers bidding, saying, mine houre is not yet come: yet when the feast was finished, he did it: they may as well say also, that Christ did here equivocate with his mother. So then sufficiently it may appeare by this which hath beene said, what vaine shifts the Romanists are driven unto, and how in all their dealings they hate the light, and according to the saying of our blessed Saviour, they will not come to the light, lest their deeds should be reproved, *Ioh.*3.

4. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Against the evill custome of lying.

Thou shalt not beare false witnesse. By this strait charge and commandement of God, all men are warned to take heed of lying, and speaking untruth, under what pretence soever: and that for these causes: 1. Propter diaboli assimilationem: Because lying maketh men like unto the Devill. For as God is truth, and all that love the truth are the children of God; so they that use lying are the children of the Devill: *for he is a lyer, and the father thereof, Ioh.*8.44. He told the first lye that was ever made in the world, when he said to Eve: Yee shall not dye, Gen. 3. 2. Propter societatis dissolutionem: Humane society and commerce is by this meanes dissolved: for how can one man trust another, if lying and dissembling be used? This reason the Apostle urgeth, *Ephes.*4.25. Cast off lying, and speake every one truth unto his neighbour: for we are members one of another. 3. Propter famæ amissionem: The lier loseth his credit, so as it cannot be beleeved, no not when he telleth the truth: as *Ecclesiastic.*34.4. Who can be cleansed by an unclean? or what truth can bee spoken of a lier? 4. Propter animæ perditionem: Wee must take heed of lying, for it destroyeth the soule, Wisdom. 1. 11. The mouth that lieth, slayeth the soule, Sic Thom. in hunc locum.

2. Observ. Not to conceale the truth, whether publikely or privately.

Againe it is a kinde of false witnesse, as is shewed before, when the truth is concealed, either publikely or privately: as when one suffereth his neighbour to be overcome in judgement, when hee by speaking might deliver him. As to this purpose may be applied that saying of the Wise-man, Prov. 24. Deliver those that are drawne to death, and wilt thou not preserve them that are led to be slaine? And this kinde is that usuall negligence and oversight of men, that privately doe not one tell another of their faults: which duty is reproved by the law, Levit. 19. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, but shalt plainly rebuke thy neighbour, and suffer him not to sinne. He then which seeth his brother in wickednesse, prophanenesse, swearing, or howsoever else, and holdeth his peace, therein offendeth the rule of charity, and is found before God to be an hater of his brother. Augustine useth a similitude: Si hominem videres ambulare incautum in tenebris, ubi tu putares esse scires, & taceres, &c. If thou shouldest see a man walking in the darke without taking heed, where thou knowest it, and holdest thy peace, what manner of one wouldest thou shew thy selfe? Præcipitat se quis ipse. One casteth himselfe headlong into vice, and vaunteth himselfe in thy hearing of his evill deeds: thou doest praise him, and smilest to thy selfe *&c. August. in Psal.*49.

Upon the tenth and last Commandement.

1. The questions discussed.

QUEST. 1. The last precept, Thou shalt not covet, whether two or one.

Some thinke that this Commandement is to be divided into two: and that the first is the concupiscence and desire of another's wife: the other the coveting of such things things which doe belong unto him, which are either moveable or immoveable things: the moveable are of two sorts, either the things with life, and them either reasonable, as his man servant, his maid servant; or unreasonable, as his oxe or asse; or without life, as his goods: his immoveable are, his house, lands, possessions. Of this opinion is August. lib. de 10. chord. cap. 9. to whom consenteth Thomas Aquinas, and Tostatus, and it is the received opinion among the Romanists, and some other, as Pelargus, Osiander, Pellican. Their reasons shall first be examined. 1. Thomas useth this reason: Because there are but three Commandements in the first table, there must be seven in the second, to make up the number of ten. And that there are but three in the first table, he would prove by the subject or matter of the Commandements which concerne our duty to God; which is three-fold; Diligenti Deum tria necesse est facere: He that loveth God, must performe three things: 1. Quod non habeat alium Deum: He must have no other God. 2. He must honour him: therefore it is said, Thou shalt not take in vaine, &c. 3. Liberetur quiescat in se: He must rest and settle himselfe in God: therefore it is said, Remember thou keepe holy, &c.

Answ. 1. Thomas here omitteth one principall duty, which is the internall worship of God: for it is not enough to know who is to be worshipped, which is prescribed in the first precept, Thou shalt have no other Gods: but after what manner he will be worshipped, that is, by a spirituall and internall worship: as our blessed Saviour saith, Ioh. 4. 21. God is a spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and truth. This manner of Gods worship is prescribed in the second Commandement, Thou shalt make to thy selfe no graven image, &c. 2. Wherefore thus rather may the duties toward God be distinguished: his worship is either internall, or externall: the internall sheweth who is to be worshipped, in the first precept, and how, that is, spiritually in the second precept. The externall is either private in the confession of Gods name, in the third precept; or publike, in keeping of his Sabbaths, Ursin.

2. Lyranus thus reasoneth: Those things which are so divers, that one may be coveted, and not the other, belong not to one precept: Aliquis habens pronitatem ad unum non habet ad alterum: One may have a proneneſſe and aptneſſe to one, and not to another: as he may covet his neighbours wife, and not covet any of his beside: therefore these two kindes of coverings belong not to one precept.

Answ. 1. This reason may be retorted: for so one may be guilty of idolatry and false worship, who yet holdeth but one God: and therefore by this reason the two first precepts, which they confound to make but one, which divide the last, must be distinguished. 2. Though in particular he that coveteth a mans wife, doth not alwayes covet his oxe or asse, yet in generall he coveteth that which is another mans: for his wife is properly his, as any thing that belongeth unto him: therefore the proposition will be denied, that the coveting of that, which is not joyned with the coveting of another thing, belongeth not to the same precept: for one may covet a mans house, and ground, that coveteth not his oxe or asse, as Ahab did, that desired Naboths vineyard: and so by this rule, as many particular things there are which may be severally coveted, so many particular precepts there should be of coveting.

3. Tostatus thus argueth: Sicut se habet actus ad actum, &c. As one act is to another, the like reason hath one concupiscence to another: but the act of adultery and theft are divers, and belong to two divers precepts, therefore so should the divers concupiscence, tending to those divers acts, be divided to two precepts.

Answ. The argument followeth not, because the acts of adultery and theft are forbidden in two divers precepts, therefore the concupiscences tending thereunto should: for there is difference betwixt the conception of sinne, and the birth and perfection thereof: when sinne is brought forth, and perfected, then it appeareth of what kinde it is: but being yet in the body or in the seed, it cannot be so distinguished; as darnell and corne being but yet in the grasse, cannot bee so well discerned. Beside, another difference is, because the externall acts of theft and adultery differ in the quality of the sinne, and one more hainous than another, and deserveth a greater punishment, and therefore the precepts are distinguished: but the like difference of quality and punishment cannot be made in the originall motion concupiscence, where the will hath not yet assented.

4. Pelargus addeth this reason: Duo sunt principia concupiscentiæ, &c. There are two beginnings or occasions of concupiscence, one internall, the other externall: the Apostle calleth them, the concupiscence of the flesh, and the concupiscence of the eye, 1. Ioh. 2. 16. therefore they are distinctly to be prohibited. Lyranus also saith, that there is Alia ratio boni utilis, alia delectabilis: One reason of coveting is of profitable good, another of a delectable good: the coveting of the wife belongeth to one, and the coveting of the substance to the other.

Answ. 1. All this onely proveth a difference and distinction in the severall kindes of concupiscence, not a distinction of the severall precepts. 2. And thus much may bee inferred, that because they are distinct concupiscences, therefore they are distinctly to be expressed, and so they are: but it followeth not, that they are to bee distinguished in two precepts. 3. And yet these concupiscences are not distinguished, but that they may concurre at one and the same time in the inward desire and motion of one: one may have a carnall desire to his neighbours wife, and have a covetous eye also upon her substance. Wherefore this last precept, which forbiddeth all manner of coveting, is not to bee divided into two precepts: but is one whole and entire Commandement, consisting of divers particulars. The reasons are these:

Reasons shewing the last precept of coveting to be one, and not two.

1. Origen thus reasoneth: Quod si ita pro eur. non complebitur decem numerus præceptorum, &c. If the two first precepts should be made all one, there would not bee ten Commandements: ubi jam decalogi veritas? where then is the truth of the decalogue? Homil. 8. in Exod. The reason is this: seeing there must bee ten precepts, and there are foure in the first table, there can bee but six in the ſecond: but if the laſt be divided into two, there will bee more than ſix in the ſecond, and ſo more than ten in all: but if wee make but three in the firſt, there will be but nine in all: for Origen taketh this as granted, that it is all one precept that maketh mention of coveting.

2. Another reaſon is, becauſe that which is here put in the firſt place, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours houſe, thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours wife, is put in the ſecond place, Deut. 5. 21. Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours wife, neither ſhalt thou deſire thy neighbours houſe: which inverſion of the order ſhewes that they are all one precept: for otherwiſe Moſes ſhould have confounded the ninth and tenth precepts together, Urſin. So alſo Cajetane: Varia mixtura uxoris & domus, ex induſtria facta à Moſe, &c. by this mixture of the wife and houſe, Moſes maketh of purpoſe in theſe two places, becauſe they belong to one precept. This reaſon alſo is urged by Iunius upon this place.

3. This precept, Moſes periodis non diſtinxit, ſed uno verſiculo comprehendit, did not diſtinguiſh by periods as the other precepts, but comprehendeth it in one verſe, which ſheweth it to be one precept, not ten, Urſe.

4. Another argument is taken from the reaſon of this Commandement: which is added, Nor any thing which is his: we are forbidden therefore to covet the neighbours wife, houſe, or oxe, or aſſe, Quia omnia ſunt, becauſe they belong to another, Cajetan. Oleaſter. There being then one common reaſon ſerving the whole, it ſheweth that it is one Commandement, not divers.

5. Omnes hæ ſpecies ſub uno genere comprehenduntur: All theſe ſeverall kindes of coveting are comprehended under one generall head, Thou ſhalt not covet, therefore they are under one precept, Galaſ. Partitione in ſex vel ſeptem præcepta deduci poſſe videatur, &c. With as good reaſon may it be diſtributed into ſix or ſeven precepts, as into two, becauſe ſo many particular branches of coveting are rehearſed.

6. But one of the beſt reaſons, that the precept of not coveting is one, and not two, is taken from the place of Saint Paul, Cum de concupiſcentia tanquam de uno præcepto dicit, When he ſpeaketh of concupiſcence, as of one precept, Rom. 7. 7. I had not knowne luſt, except the Law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not luſt. Baſing.

Quæſt. II. What manner of concupiſcence is here forbidden, and how this precept differeth from the former.

Concerning the difference betweene this precept and the other, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not ſteale: there are divers opinions: 1. Auguſtine ſeemeth ſometime to bee of opinion, that in the Commandements, Ipſum opus notatum videtur, in extremo autem ipſa concupiſcentia; The worke only ſeemeth to be noted, but in the laſt the concupiſcence only, quæſt. 71. in Exod. But this is againſt our bleſſed Saviours expoſition, Matth. 5. 28. that a man may commit adultery in his heart, if hee hath but looked upon a woman to luſt after her: therefore in the other Commandements, not the externall act only is forbidden, but the inward purpoſe alſo and deſire.

2. Thomas Aquin thus diſtinguiſheth concupiſcence, that it may be taken one way, as it is actus voluntatis, an act of the will, another, ut eſt actus ſenſualitatis, a ſenſuall or carnall act: but here it is onely forbidden in the firſt ſenſe, as it is Conſenſus voluntatis, in opus vel delectationem; As it is a conſent of the will, either to the worke it ſelfe, or in taking delight: But when the will hath once aſſented, ſinne is brought forth, and ſo it is a breach of the other Commandements: as our bleſſed Saviour ſheweth, that if a man have luſted after a woman, with a will and deſire unto her in his heart, he hath committed adultery.

3. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that no concupiſcence reſting inwardly, though it have the conſent of the will, is here forbidden: but ſuch as commeth into ſome externall act, beſide the perfect act of any ſinne: as when one ſoliciteth another mans wife by gifts, ſpeeches, geſture, kiſſing, and dallying, though ſhee be not committed. But the very conſent and purpoſe of the heart, though there follow no outward act of ſinne, as ſhall afterward be more fully declared, as Levit. 19. 17. the very hatred of the heart is forbidden, though no miſchiefe outwardly be committed.

4. Some thinke that there is no more forbidden in this Commandement, than before: but that the Lord thought good to rehearſe and declare in plaine words his will, for reſtraining of the inward concupiſcence: for he knew, Aerius ſtimulandos & urgendos homines ne ſub umbra obſcurioris doctrinæ latebras quærant, Leſt men ſhould ſeeke ſome evaſion in the obſcurity of doctrine, that they were ſpecially to be put forward and urged, Calvin. But it is not like, that in ſo compendious an abridgement of the Law, the ſame things ſhould be twice repeated: and Calvin himſelfe onely propoundeth this reaſon, hee doth not much inſiſt upon it.

5. Therefore that we may apprehend the true difference betweene this precept and the other, wee muſt diſtinguiſh betweene theſe three, Pravas cogitationes, aſſenſum ſimplicem, & certam deliberationem: evill thoughts, a ſimple aſſent, and a ſetled and certaine deliberation. The firſt, evill thoughts, if as ſoone as they come a man reject them, he ſeemeth not to be guilty, though herein he muſt acknowledge his corrupt nature: but if he either give a ſimple aſſent, or be as it were tickled with a full deſire, or doe deliberately thinke of any evill thing, then he ſinneth. So then all thoſe ſinnes, wherein there is either a full aſſent, or deſire, are forbidden in the former precepts: the very firſt deſire and appetite is forbidden here. Theſe degrees then are to be made of ſinne, appetitus, aſſenſio, actio, the appetite or firſt deſire, the perfect conſent, and the action: the firſt, the evill appetite is reſtrained here, Galaſ. Quamvis non plane acquieſcamus, ſi tamen nos titillat, ſufficit ad reos peragendos; Although we doe not yeeld unto the deſire, if it doe but tickle us with delight, it is ſufficient to make us guilty, Calvin. Here then ſuch concupiſcence is is forbidden, as hath some inclination of the will, though no full consent: Concupiscentia enim ... est sine affectu, licet non plane succumbat voluntas: This concupiscence is not without some affection ... desire, though the will doe not plainely yeeld. So is Chrysostome to bee understood: Aliud est ... piscere, aliud velle; concupiscere passionis est, velle arbitrii; frequenter enim concupiscimus quod nolumus: ... is one thing to desire, another thing to will; to desire or covet is of passion, to will is of the disposition ... for we often covet that which we would not, &c. In Matth. homil. 52. He speaketh of a full assent ... purpose: for otherwise, with concupiscence here prohibited, there doth alwayes concurre some affection ... and desire. So then it is evident, that even those first motions of concupiscence, wherein any taketh ... light, though there be no full purpose, are sinne before God, and forbidden by this precept: for, even ... Heathen did condemne impiam voluntatem, the wicked will and purpose of any, as to kill, commit adultery, and such like: but the Law of God is more perfect and spirituall, than any humane Law. Againe, it ... not like that S. Paul was so ignorant, as to thinke at any time, that it was no sinne, velle occidere hominem, to have a purpose to kill a man, or to commit adultery: therefore by concupiscence, he understandeth some more inward and secret disease, which he tooke not to be sinne, before it was revealed unto him by the Law, Calvin.

Of the degrees to be conſidered in ſinne.

Difference betweene the full assent of the will, and an inclination only.

Quest. III. Whether involuntary concupiscence having no consent of the will, is here forbidden.

But here it will further be enquired, whether even those first evill thoughts which arise in the minde without any inclination of the will at all, are counted as sinne before God, and so forbidden in this precept. Here first, wee are to distinguish of concupiscence and desire, which is either a good concupiscence, or bad; the good is of two sorts, either perfectly good, such as was given unto man in his creation, when he should have coveted nothing, but that which was good; or imperfectly good, such as now is in men, mixed with many infirmities and imperfections, which is either naturall in man, as the coveting of meat and drinke, and other things necessary for the life of man, Basting. Or supernaturall, wrought in man by grace, as is the love and desire of vertue: or it is mixt, partly naturall, partly supernaturall, ... matrimoniall concupiscence for procreation, which both hath a naturall cause or beginning, and is likewise guided by grace unto the right end: none of these kindes of good and commendable concupiscence are forbidden by this precept.

The divers kindes of concupiscence.

The evill concupiscence, as Bernard doth well distinguish it, is of three sorts: 1. Sunt cogitationes vanae & ad rem non pertinentes, &c. There are idle, roving and impertinent thoughts, which the minde may easily reject: 2. Sunt aliae cogitationes violentae magis, & fortius adhaerentes; There are other violent cogitations, which sticke more nearely, as the immoderate cogitation of meat and drinke, and such things as belong to the necessity of nature. 3. Sunt cogitationes foetidae & immundae, quae ad luxuriam, invidiam provehunt, &c. There are filthy and uncleane cogitations, which concerne lasciviousnesse, envy, vaine glory, and such like: the first kinde is lutum simplex, as simple or thin clay, that cleaveth not: the second is lutum coctum, as a tough clay, that sticketh fast: the third is tanquam immundissimum caenum, as most uncleane ... thy, and stinking mire and mud, Bernard. serm. de tri. ge. cog. na. Seneca maketh this distinction of ... motions of the minde, not much unlike to the former: 1. Primus motus non voluntarius, &c. The ... motion is not voluntary, as a certaine preparation of the affections: 2. Alter cum voluntate non ... another kinde is with the will, but the same not obstinate: as when it commeth into ones minde to ... venge himselfe, when he is hurt: 3. Tertius motus est impotens, &c. The third kinde is so impotent, ... outragious, that it will not be ruled by reason, as when a man is carried to revenge himselfe out of ... sure: the first of these can be no more ruled by reason, than such things as happen to the body: as ... one yawneth, when he seeth another yawne, or suddenly winketh, when one putteth the fingers to ... the eyes. Thus Seneca lib. 2. de ira, cap. 4. Now the question is, whether these motions, which Au ... calleth idle and wandring, Seneca involuntary, are forbidden in this precept. Hereof there are ... opinions.

1. Some thinke that even these first infused motions, Etiam citra rationem ullius objecti, even with ... respect had to any certaine object, are forbidden here, Iun. But it seemeth by the words of the Law, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbours house, that the concupiscence here prohibited, aimeth at a certaine ... and is not without some inclination of the affection. 2. Others are of the contrary opinion: that ... man doe at the very first reject these evill cogitations, nullius culpae reus erit, he shall be guilty of no ... Galat. But seeing that Infants which have no such evill thoughts, yet are not cleane before God, ... conceived and borne in sinne; it cannot be, but that these evill wandring and idle thoughts should ... some guiltinesse in them. 3. Therefore the best solution is, that these cogitations which doe vanish ... tequam animos afficiant, before the minde bee affected, be not comprehended in this precept, as ... sinnes: for untill the will of man in some degree give assent, sinne is in the conception onely, not in ... birth: as S. Iames saith, chap. 1. When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sinne: but as the first ... originall sinne, together with that native corruption, they are contrary to this precept: wherein I ... also some difference of opinion. Iunius seemeth to thinke, that not originall sinne it selfe is here ... stood by concupiscence, which is as the habit, but only those involuntary motions, which are the first ... of this evill habit, Iun. in Analys. But I rather subscribe to Ursinus, that thinketh originall sinne ... a breach of this precept, as originall justice is therein prescribed, and commanded: because the ... law is grounded upon the Law of nature, which was perfect in man by creation before his fall, ... which perfection originall sinne is a declining defect. This then is the conclusion, that these involun- ... mo...

though they doe not venire in rationem coram Deo, come into reckoning before God, if they ſuddenly vaniſh, before the will and affection incline unto them; yet they doe ſhew the corruption of nature, that although they breake not out into a flame, yet they are ſparkles that flie upward, Iob 5.7. our corrupt nature is as the coale, and thoſe idle and wandering thoughts as the ſparks that flie up: but if the ſparks doe not kindle into a flame, they ſhall never burne us, nor be laid unto our judgement: and Chryſoſtom ſaith well, Si concupiſcentia non conſentit voluntas, ſola concupiſcentia non damnat; If the will conſent not to concupiſcence, concupiſcence alone ſhall not condemne us, *Homil.*52.in Matth. which is through Gods mercie, for otherwiſe even originall corruption is ſufficient to condemne us.

QUEST. IV. Why there is no precept to direct the inward paſſion of anger, as of coveting.

HOw why there is not the like precept given, to direct the inward act of the irefull power of the mind, as to forbid the firſt motion of anger and rage, as there is virtutis concupiſcibilis, of the coveting and deſiring facultie, theſe reaſons are alleaged: 1. The like is to be underſtood in other Commandements, of the very internall act, and firſt inclination of the heart unto evill is forbidden, but expreſſly the concupiſcence is named, becauſe it is more hard to reſiſt the concupiſcence, whoſe object is ſome apparent good, either delectable, or profitable: whereas the inward paſſion of anger, movet ad aliquid triſte, moveth or drawes to ſome heavie thing, not delightſome, or profitable. So Toſtatus. The ſame reaſon is yeelded by Thomas Aquin, Homicidium ſecundùm ſe non eſt concupiſcibile, ſed magis horribile, &c. Murther is not of it ſelfe a thing to be deſired, but to be abhorred: but adulterie, Habet rationem alicujus boni, ſcilicet delectabilis, furtum, boni ſcilicet utilis. Hath reſpect unto ſome thing that ſeemeth good, namely, delectable good, and theft to profitable good: therefore the concupiſcence of theſe required a ſpeciall precept rather than the other, &c. But this is no ſufficient reaſon, for both it is as hard to reſiſt anger, as any other paſſion, becauſe of all other it is moſt violent and ſudden: and beſide, the angrie man in purpoſing any miſchiefe, taketh delight therein, and thinketh it good for him ſo to doe: ſo that this paſſion alſo, hath an object of ſome thing ſeeming good, for otherwiſe the will of man naturally is not carried unto that which is taken to be evill.

2. In this precept even that concupiſcence is forbidden, which is involuntarie, and hath not the aſſent of the will: for as Chryſoſtom ſaith, Concupiſcimus frequenter etiam quod nolumus: We covet often that which wee will not. All other voluntarie inclinations of the minde, to adulterie, or theft, are prohibited by thoſe other precepts: but there is no anger, without a purpoſe of revenge, and ſo hath a conſent of the will, and ſo there need no ſpeciall precept for that, it properly belonging to that precept, Thou ſhalt not kill: as our bleſſed Saviour ſheweth, *Matth.*5.22. To this purpoſe Toſtatus ſaith well: Ira audit rationem ſuadentem, &c. Anger heareth reaſon diſputing, whether it be meet to take revenge; and before reaſon hath concluded, anger riſeth not: but anger hearing this firſt concluſion, that it is fit to take revenge, doth not to heare the ſecond, whom, and how wee are to revenge: but as a quicke meſſenger, runneth away before hee hath halfe his arrand, and as angrie dogges, that when they ſee one, doe not rightly imagine, that it is their part to barke, not conſidering who it is that they barke at, whether a theefe or no: ſo anger being an hot and haſtie paſſion, reſolving by reaſon of the thing, yet weigheth every circumſtance. Now concupiſcence, when any object is offered, heareth no reaſon at all, but preſſeth forth to coveting of it. *Ex Toſtat.qu.*27.

QUEST. V. Whether ſinne properly conſiſt in the internall or externall act.

Hence the opinion of the Hebrewes, that if a man onely deſire another mans wife in his heart and not further, he ſinneth not: and *Ioſephus lib.*12. Antiquit. reproveth Polybius the Hiſtoriographer, affirming that Antiochus died miſerably, becauſe he would have ſpoyled the Temple: adding further, Si cupiebat, non egit peccatum: That if he onely thought to doe ſo, he ſinned not: therefore he was not puniſhed for that, but for other evils which he had done in Jeruſalem. Ex Lyran.

2. But it may bee made manifeſt by divers reaſons, that ſinne conſiſteth rather in actu interiori, than exteriori; In the internall rather than externall act. 1. That maketh a good or evill act, which is in our power, but the externall act is not often in mans power, but the internall is, as the act of the underſtanding and will: as the Apoſtle ſaith, *Rom.*7.18. To will is preſent with me, but I finde no meanes to perform that which is good, &c.

Onely it is proper unto man, beyond beaſts, to doe a good or evill act: but the externall act bruit beaſts can doe as well as man: therefore it is the internall faculties, of the underſtanding and will, that make the act good or bad.

If in the externall act good and evill onely were found, then Angels ſhould doe neither good nor evill, which have no externall act, becauſe they have no externall faculties, powers, or inſtruments: the will alone and underſtanding, which onely are in Spirits, are the cauſes of good and bad actions.

The ſame externall acts may bee done as well by thoſe that ſleepe, by fooles and mad men, as by the wiſe, by wiſe and ſober men: but the externall act in thoſe is not ſinne, becauſe it proceedeth not from will and underſtanding.

Both divine and humane lawes make a difference betweene voluntarie and involuntarie acts: as in murther and caſuall murther; but the externall act in both is all one.

Therefore, Actus exterior ſecundùm ſe nec bonus nec malus eſt: The externall act of it ſelfe is neither good nor evill: but yet in men becauſe of the connexion which the externall act hath with the internall there is ſome goodneſſe or evilneſſe found, though not ſo properly as in the internall: for there are two acts of the will and understanding: the immediate act, as to understand, to will, which is called elicitus, the act which issueth out: and there is a mediate act, as to kill, to commit adultery, which is imperatus, the act commanded: therefore the externall worke being by this coherence and connexion ... act of the internall powers, hath some good or evill in it, though not so properly as the internall. Sa... Toſtat. quæſt.29.

QUEST. VI. The law of Moſes did not onely reſtraine the hand, but the minde.

BEside this opinion of the Hebrewes, some other doe hold that the law of Moſes did onely restrain the hand, and not the minde: and to this purpose they urge that place, *Matth.*5.27. where our Saviour saith; It was said unto you of old, Thou shalt not commit adulterie, &c. But I say, &c. So that of old it seemes the law onely restrained the outward act: but Christ doth forbid more, even the inward desire, &c.

Contra. 1. Our blessed Saviour, ſecundùm eorum opinionem loquebatur, speaketh according to their opinion, because they thought they were onely obliged and tied to the outward act, and therefore he doth deliver the law from their corrupt interpretations: he giveth not a new exposition: and this appeares *verſ.*43. Yee have heard, that it hath beene ſaid, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemie: in all the old Testament there is no such precept given by God, or libertie for any to hate their enemies: our Saviour then meaneth not such sayings as were found in the law, but such expositions as they made among themselves. Now that even the law of Moſes did binde not onely the hand and externall act, but the inward will and desire, it thus is proved:

1. None are said to repent but of that which is evill: but they under the law were to repent and shew themselves contrite, even for the internall acts of their minde: as *Pſal.*4.4. Tremble and ſinne not, examine your heart upon your bed, &c. Ergo, &c.

2. It is directly forbidden, *Levit.*19.17. Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: which was an internall act: and many other such like sinnes of the heart are reproved by the Prophets.

3. The law doth not justifie that which is naturally unjust, but forbiddeth it: now to covet another mans wife is naturally unjust. Ergo.

For the proposition, or first part of the argument, if the theft of the Israelites, the killing of Isaac intended by Abraham, the fornication of Oſe, *cap.*1. be objected: these were ſingulares caſus, which the lawgiver commanding, thereby declared, quod non includerentur ſub lege communi, that they were not included under the generall law: but if this whole law, Thou ſhalt not covet, had given a generall liberty for the Jewes to covet anothers wife, Non jam declaretur lex, ſed deſtrueretur: The law should not by this meanes be declared, but destroyed.

For the assumption, that it is against the law of nature to covet another mans wife, it is evident. 1. Because he faileth in the end, coveting her onely of lust, not for procreation. 2. Matrimonie eſt de jure naturali, is grounded even upon the law of nature: if then to breake and violate matrimonie bee against the law of nature; then to will, and purpose so to doe, is against nature also: yea the will and purpose rather sinne than the act it selfe: for it may fall out that the externall act is sometime without sinne, when a man ignorantly lieth with another woman, taking her to bee his wife, as Iakob tooke Leah for Rachel: but the will and desire is never without sinne, Toſtat.

*Burgenſ. addit.7. in cap.*20. would thus excuse this assertion, that Moſes law, prohibebat manum animum, did inhibit the hand, not the minde: not that their meaning is, that in no part of Moſes law there is any prohibition to be found of the minde: for hatred is directly forbidden, *Levit.*19.17. but that when any externall act is forbidden, Non intelligitur ex vi illius præcepti prohiberi actus interior: The externall act is not understood to bee forbidden by vertue of that precept: as in this precept, Thou shalt not kill, he is not judged to be guiltie, which purposeth to kill, and yet killeth not.

Contra. 1. But our Saviour saith, that even this precept is transgressed by the anger and hatred of the heart, *Matth.*5.22. therefore the law intendeth even by the externall act to forbid the internall also.

QUEST. VII. Whether any morall and naturall duties were to be reſtrained by poſitive law.

BUt it will further be objected, that the old law was not to give precepts of morall duties: 1. The morall precepts are grounded upon the law of nature, and such precepts are knowne unto all: but divine law prescribeth such things, as otherwise are not, neither can bee knowne. 2. The keeping of the morall law giveth life, *Galath.*3.12. but the old law was the ministration of death, 2 *Cor.*3.7. therefore the old law was not to containe morall precepts.

Contra. 1. The law of God was not onely to give rules of such things as men know by the law of nature, but to keepe and preserve them also from errour, in those things which they know. And therefore because men doe erre and swarve in such things as they know, their will and affection not giving way to reason, it was fit that a law should be given as well to rectifie their affection, as to direct their understanding. 2. Beside, although these morall duties are grounded upon the law of nature, yet seeing the naturall instinct is obscured by mans corruption, that dimme light of nature had need of a clearer light by the law to helpe it. If man had continued in the perfection of his creation, hee should not have needed any other law: but seeing mans naturall knowledge is much decaied, it was to be revived, and renewed by the divine law. 3. The rules of direction of mens actions, are of foure sorts: 1. Some are so well known by nature, as none can doubt thereof: as these, (that evill is to be shunned, and good to be desired, that unjust thing is to bee done) of such knowne principles it is not necessarie that any law should bee given. 2. Some things may so be searched out by the law of nature, as yet that many may erre therein: such the particular precepts, of not committing fornication, not coveting anothers wife: therefore because men may erre in these duties, it was requisite they should bee determined by the law of God. 3. Some things are so derived from the law of nature, as yet they are onely searched out by those which are wise: such are the positive and judiciall lawes of men, that wisely can applie the principles of the law of nature to particular circumstances: of this kinde are Moses Judicials. 4. Some things cannot at all be concluded by naturall reason, but altogether depend upon the will of the institutor and law-maker: of this kinde were Moses Ceremonials. So then for a full answer to the first objection, wee say, that if morall duties were so generally and perfitly knowne, as that none could doubt of them, as are the first rules of direction, there needed not be any law given of them: but they are of the second sort, so knowne by the law of nature, as that many doe doubt of them, and doe erre about them.

3 The old law was the ministration of death, not of it selfe, but occasionaliter, by occasion: because it commanded such things as were not in mans power to keepe: and so the morall precepts also did mortifie and kill: Quia importabant difficultatem ad conservandum ea: Because they did bring in a difficultie, or rather impossibilitie to keepe them: therefore in this respect there was no difficulty between the old law and the Morall law, Tostat. quæst. 32.

Quest. VIII. Of the perfection and sufficiencie of the morall law.

OBJECT. it will be thus objected against the sufficiencie of the morall law.

1. Because the law prescribeth onely duties concerning God, and our neighbour, it speaketh nothing of the sinnes of man toward himselfe.

2. It forbiddeth perjurie, whereas blasphemie and heresie were as needfull to be forbidden.

3. The precept of the Sabbath is expressed, whereas there were many other festivities, as of the Passeover, Pentecost and others, which the Israelites were bound to keepe.

4. The dutie toward parents is commanded, but not the love of parents againe to their children.

5. The inward act of murther is not forbidden, as the inward act of adulterie, namely concupiscence: therefore there is not a sufficient enumeration in the morall law, of all morall duties.

Contra. 1. That the Morall law is perfect and every way sufficient, it appeareth first by the generall heads thereof, in prescribing all kinde of duties both toward God and man. For first, as three things are to bee performed to terrene governours, namely fidelitie, reverence, and obedience; so likewise the same duties, but in an higher nature and degree, are required toward God: 1. Fidelitie, in acknowledging him our onely God, which is commanded in the first and second precept. 2. Reverence in the third, not to prophane his glorious name. 3. Obedience and service, which is performed in consecrating the seventh day wholly unto Gods worship. Toward our neighbour our duties are either speciall toward those to whom we are bound by any speciall kinde of benefit, as we are to our parents, and superiours, which is required in the fift precept: or generally toward all, in forbearing to doe them any hurt: first, either in deed, as in their single person concerning their life, or their coupled person, touching their wife, or in their goods, we must not steale: either in word, where false witnesse bearing is forbidden: either in heart, as in the tenth Commandement. There can be no dutie rehearsed appertaining to God or man, which is not comprehended under some of these: therefore the Decalogue containeth a perfect law.

2. Now for answer to the objections in particular: 1. It was not necessarie that any particular precept should bee given as touching the duties of man toward himselfe: both because nature is not so corrupted in such duties (but that a man still retaineth love to himselfe) as it is in our love toward God and our neighbour: as also for that the rule of our love toward another, is taken from a mans love toward himselfe: Thou shalt love his neighbour as himselfe: therefore this is presupposed as granted of all, and as a ground of truth, that a man loveth himselfe.

2. The law giveth instance of the more generall and notorious transgressions, such as at the first would be acknowledged of all: and therefore because perjurie is more generall, and more easily discerned, than blasphemie or heresie, under that the rest are understood.

3 The other festivals were memorials of particular benefits which concerned the Israelites onely, as the Passeover and feast of Tabernacles, of their deliverance out of Egypt: but the Sabbath is a memoriall of the generall benefit of the creation, which concerneth all nations: therefore this precept concerning the Sabbath onely, of all other festivals was onely to be inserted in the morall law.

4 The love of parents toward their children, though it be naturall, yet the dutie of children toward their parents is more agreeable to the law of nature, and the contrary, namely, their disobedience more generall, and therefore instance was to bee given in this rather than in the other: and beside, the names of father and sonne being Relatives, the duties of each toward other are reciprocall; and one may bee inferred upon the other.

5 The concupiscence is expressely forbidden, rather than the first motion of anger and revenge: because it is harder to resist the motion of concupiscence than of rage and revenge, and wee are more in danger by that than this. 2. Because the inward wrath and purpose of revenge, Nascitur ex conentu, beginneth with a desire, for there are two things in revenge, ipsa persequutio, id quod persequimur, which we pursue, and pursuit it selfe: that which we pursue, we judge to be evill, and so hate it; but in the act of pursuit, we thinke to be good, namely, to seeke revenge, and so we thinke it good, and desire it. Now then all kinde of covering and desire is forbidden, even that also is included, from the which anger and revenge taketh beginning: but in the other kinde of coveting, when wee propound unto our selves as object of some delectable or profitable good; both the thing which is pursued with desire, is judged good, and the action it selfe of pursuing it with desire. Sic fere Tostat.quæst.24. But the better answer is, why the first motion of anger is not expressely forbidden, as of concupiscence, because anger never riseth, but with the consent of the will, and therefore being a voluntarie motion, it belongeth to the other precept, Thou shalt not kill: but concupiscence, which is involuntarie, and hath not the full consent of the will, is forbidden in the tenth precept. See more of this difference before quæst.1.

Quest. IX. Of the abrogation of the law.

NExt unto this question of the perfection of the law, it followeth to consider of the perpetuitie and continuance of it: for in some places the Scripture testifieth, that Christ came to fulfill the law, not to destroy it, Matth.5.17. and some where againe it so speaketh, as though the law were abrogated, as Rom.6.14. Yee are not under the law, but under grace: Heb.7.12. If the priesthood be changed, there must of necessitie be a change of the law. For the solution hereof, thus much is to be added here, though this question partly be touched before.

Of the ceremoniall law.

1. First then, concerning the ceremoniall law, which was prescribed unto the Jewes, to be observed in the worship of God, it is wholly abrogated: 1. Because the bodie being come, the shadow must give place: but all those ceremonies, in their sacrifices, purifications, festivals, and the rest were shadowes, the bodie is Christ, Coloss. 2.17. Ergo. 2. Those ceremoniall observations were tied unto a certaine place, first, to the Tabernacle, then to the Temple of Salomon; but now the worship of God is not tied to any certaine place, as at Jerusalem, where the Temple was, Ioh.4.21. 3. Other Sacraments are instituted in place of the old, as Baptisme and the Eucharist; therefore the old are abrogated. 4. The ceremonies did bind the observers to the keeping of the whole law, and the rites thereof: he which was circumcised was bound to keepe the whole law, Galath.5.3. but we are not bound now to the whole law, from which bondage Christ hath freed us. Ergo. 5. The ceremonies were a wall of partition and distinction betweene the Jewes and Gentiles; bnt now that distinction is taken away, all being one in Christ: therefore the wall whereby they were parted and distinguished, is removed also, Simler.

Of the judiciall law.

2. As touching the politike and judiciall lawes of Moses, neither doe they absolutely bind now: 1. Many of these lawes were peculiar to the policie of that Common-wealth, as the lawes concerning their inheritances and possessions, which were not to passe from tribe to tribe: and they shewed the fashions and manners of that countrie, as in building their houses with flat roofes, as Deut.22.8. Of these positive constitutions, there is now no use among other nations. 2. The condition of all people is not alike: some are more stubborne and obstinate, some more civill and tractable, and therefore some have need of more strict and severe lawes than others: one kinde of politicke law then cannot serve for all nations. 3. The Gospell which is perpetuall, prescribeth not a certaine forme of government to all nations, neither overthroweth their severall policies; but in generall commandeth obedience to all higherpowers, Rom.13.1. Ergo, much lesse the law, which was to be changed, Simler. But the judiciall law is not abrogated, Quoad substantiam, finem, & universalem æquitatem, In respect of the substance, end, and universall equitie, which is in punishing of vice, and maintaining of peace, Bucanus. See more hereof, quæst. general.cap.1.

How the Morall law bindeth.

3. The Morall law is not now in force, quoad justificationem, in respect of justification, Rom.3. A man is justified by faith, without the works of the law; but it bindeth quoad obedientiam, In respect of obedience; we are bound to keepe all the precepts of the law: but yet quoad terrorem & rigidam severitatem, in respect of the terror of the law, and manner of obedience, which was to be obedient and subject unto it, for feare of punishment, wee are freed now from it: and therefore the Apostle saith, The law is not given to a righteous man, 1 Tim.1.9. because they of love rather than feare, do yeeld their obedience, and so are a law unto themselves, Simler. But this is a privilege onely of the regenerate: As for carnall and unregenerate men, they are still under the curse and terror of the law, according to that saying, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law, to do them, &c.

2. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the particular comands of this precept.

THou shalt not covet. First, the things commanded here are these: 1. Originall justice, which is an inclination and desire of the minde, to performe all duties unto our neighbour, Vrsin. 2. Diligence, care and circumspection, even to take heed of the smallest sinnes, and to watch over the very thoughts, Prov.3.23. Keepe thy heart with all diligence, for thereout commeth life, Basting.

Secondly, contrarie unto this precept: 1. Is originall corruption, which is the generall corruption and depravation of our nature, and that evill habit wherein wee are conceived and borne, as David confesseth, Behold I was borne in iniquitie, and in sinne hath my mother conceived me, Psal.51.5. 2. All evill inclinations of the heart, whereby it is sollicited to doe any thing against the law of God: this evill concupiscence is of two sorts: it either hath principium internum, the beginning within, as is fleshly and carnall desire, or externum, without, by some externall object, which are the concupiscence of the eye, and pride of life, as the Apostle calleth them, 1 Ioh.16. 3. And not onely these kinds of concupiscence, but all other phantasies, and cogitations of the minde, which are contrarie to the law of God, are here restrained, Basting.

2. Doct. Of the ſeverall properties of poſſeſſions and goods, and the diſtinction of callings.

Further, in that the Lord forbiddeth to covet our neighbours houſe, ſervant, &c. wee ſee the Lord eſtabliſheth and confirmeth hereby, both the ſeverall rights in poſſeſſions, lands, and other ſubſtance: which right and propertie the Lord will not have violated, ſo much as in the concupiſcence and inward deſire: As alſo here it is evident, that the difference of callings, and diſtinction of degrees, as betweene maſter and ſervant, ſtandeth with the will of God, as our bleſſed Saviour and his Apoſtles alſo every where teach, Simler.

3. Doct. The difference betweene divine and humane lawes.

Herein alſo is ſet forth an apparent difference betweene the law of God and the lawes of men: Lex humana judicat facta & dicta, divina judicat etiam cogitata; Mans law onely judgeth doings and ſayings, but Gods law judgeth the very thoughts: and the reaſon hereof is, becauſe man judgeth onely according to the outward appearance and evidence, but the Lord ſeeth the heart, Thomas. And the perfection of Divinitie is hereby declared beyond Philoſophie, which condemneth not the inward luſts and affections of the minde, neither holdeth a man for the ſame, whether they bee good or evill, to be worthie praiſe or diſpraiſe: But the law of God ſtriketh at the very root of evill actions, which is the inward concupiſcence and corruption of the heart.

4. Doct. Of the concupiſcence of the ſoule, and of the fleſh.

I ſhall not bee amiſſe, here to inſert Chryſoſtomes diſtinction of concupiſcence. As wee have two natures, one of the ſoule, the other of the fleſh: ſo wee have two wils, one of the ſoule, the other of the fleſh: habemus duas iras, & duas concupiſcentias, &c. we have alſo two kinds of anger, and two kinds of concupiſcence, one of the ſoule, the other of the fleſh; the nature of the fleſh cannot bee ſeparated from the fleſh: Neceſſe habet iraſci, concupiſcere, &c. It cannot chuſe, but to be angrie, to covet, becauſe it is ſubject under ſinne: but the ſoule being created according to the juſtice of God, poteſt non iraſci, &c. cannot but be angrie, nor covet; therefore when wee are angrie and covet, if wee diſpleaſe our ſelves, and repreſſe theſe paſſions, it is manifeſt, that our fleſh onely is angrie, and coveteth, and not the ſoule. Such kinde of affections then here are forbidden, wherein the ſoule conſenteth with the fleſh. To this purpoſe Chryſoſt. in 1. Hom. Matth.

3. Places of controverſie.

1. Conf. Againſt the Pelagians that denie concupiſcence to be ſinne.

And we are here to deale againſt the Pelagians, who did hold concupiſcentiam non eſſe peccatum, that concupiſcence is not ſinne: whoſe objections were theſe:

1. Object. Such things as are naturall, are not evill: but concupiſcence is naturall, therefore it is not evill, nor conſequently ſinne.

Anſ. This argument muſt be anſwered by a diſtinction: for by naturall here may be underſtood that which was made naturall in man by creation before his fall: and ſo the propoſition is true, but the aſſumption is falſe; for inordinate concupiſcence and appetite was not in man before his fall: or it is taken for that which is now incident to mans corrupt nature ſince his fall, and ſo the aſſumption is true, but the propoſition falſe.

2. Object. Even in our nature, as it now ſtandeth corrupt, the appetite or deſire to ſuch things as tend to the conſervation of nature, and to decline and ſhun the contrarie, are not evill: but ſuch is the concupiſcence to meat and drinke, and ſuch like, Ergo.

Anſ. 1. Such motions and appetites of themſelves are not evill, as they are naturall motions: but if they be inordinate motions, and exceed a juſt meaſure, they are evill: as to have an immoderate deſire to meat or drinke. For as it was naturall in Eve to deſire to eat of the fruit of the tree, yet to deſire it againſt the Commandement of God, was evill: ſo is it with theſe naturall motions, if they bee immoderate and inordinate, they are evill. 2. There are other concupiſcences beſide theſe, which are neither naturall, nor belonging to the conſervation of nature: as coveting another mans houſe, or wife, &c. which can have no colour, excuſe or pretence.

3. Object. That which is not in mans power to avoid, is no ſinne: but not to covet is not in mans power: Ergo, it is no ſinne.

Anſ. 1. The propoſition is falſe: for ſinne is not meaſured by the neceſſitie or libertie of nature, but by the diſagreement which it hath with the will of God. 2. When God firſt printed the law in mans nature before his fall, then were the precepts of God given unto man, in his power to keepe: though man by voluntarie corruption hath loſt his power and libertie, yet God forgoeth not his power and right of commanding. 4. But that concupiſcence is ſinne, it is both evident by this law, that would not forbid it, if it were ſinne: and by the Apoſtle, who uſeth the ſame argument: I had not knowne ſinne but by the law: for I had not knowne luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not luſt, Rom. 7. 7. Vrſin.

2. Confut. Against the Papists, that denie concupiscence to be sinne in the regenerate.

SEcondly, the Papists are herein Semipelagians; who generally affirme and hold, that concupiscence remaining after baptisme, is not properly sinne, nor forbidden by commandement: Rhemist. annot. Rom.6. sect.6. So was it decreed in the Tridentine Synode, that concupiscence, non est vere & proprie peccatum in renatis, is not verily and properly a sinne in the regenerate, but that it is so called, quia ex peccato est, & in peccatum inclinat, because it commeth of sinne, and inclineth to sinne: Session.1.cap.1. They object thus.

1. Object. Sinne maketh men guiltie before God of eternall death: but the regenerate are not guiltie of eternall death, therefore concupiscence in them is no sinne.

Answ. 1. By this reason there shall bee no sinne at all in the regenerate: for there is no condemnation at all to them that are in Christ Jesus. 2. Neither concupiscence, nor any sinne else shall condemne the regenerate: but that is not because concupiscence is no sinne, but that both it and all other sinnes are pardoned in Christ, and so not imputed.

2. Object. Originall sinne is taken away in Baptisme: therefore concupiscence in the regenerate is no sinne.

Answ. Originall sinne is not simply taken away in Baptisme, but onely quoad reatum, in respect of the guilt: and as the Schoolmen say, it is taken away formally in Baptisme, but not materially. There are two things to be considered in originall sinne: the disagreement or repugnancie which it hath with the law of God, and the guilt of the punishment. This latter way originall sinne is remitted and released in Baptisme, it shall never be laid unto the charge of the faithfull: as S. Paul saith, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen, Rom.8.33. But the other remaineth still in Gods children: as S. Paul confesseth of himselfe, Rom.7.23. I see another law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde; but yet though it remaine and have a being in the faithfull, it doth not reigne in them: as the same Apostle exhorteth, Rom.6.12. Let not sinne reigne in your mortall bodie.

3. But that concupiscence is sinne in the very regenerate, it is evident by this precept, Thou shalt not covet: which commandement is given generally to all both the regenerate and unregenerate. S. Paul also calleth the rebellion of his flesh, which he felt in himselfe being now regenerate, the law of sinne, Rom.7.23.25. And the Apostle speaketh to men regenerate, when he saith, Be renewed in the spirit of your minde, Ephes.4.23. which renovation needed not, if concupiscence in them were no sinne.

4. But that place of Augustine will bee objected: Quamvis insint, domo summus in corpore mortis hujus peccati desideria, &c. Although while we are in the bodie of this death, there be in us the desire of sinne, yet if we should give assent to none of them, non esset unde diceremus, &c. dimitte debita nostra, we should have no cause to say to our heavenly Father, Forgive us our debts, &c. August. epist.200.

Answ. 1. Augustine must be understood to speake of actuall sinnes: that if so men had grace never to consent to their concupiscence, they should not need to pray for remission of such sinnes. 2. And who is there that liveth, who sometime is not carried away with concupiscence, to give assent unto it? So that if Augustine should speake generally of all sinne, yet his speech being conditionall, if we should give assent to none of them, and that condition being kept of none, this proveth not concupiscence not to bee sinne. See more of this controversie, Synops. Centur.4.err.16.

3. Confut. That no concupiscence is a veniall sinne in it selfe.

THirdly, Thomas Aquin his assertion commeth here to be examined: Nota quòd cupiditas tunc est peccatum mortale, quando sine ratione, &c. Note that concupiscence is then mortall sinne, when as things of our neighbours are coveted without reason: but when they are reasonably desired, it is venial. Thomas in opuscul.

Contra. 1. This distinction of mortall and veniall sinnes, being understood in their sense, that sinnes in the condition and qualitie thereof are mortall, some veniall, is contrarie to the Scripture, which maketh death the wages of sinne, Rom.6.23. that is, of all: but to the faithfull, through Gods grace, sinnes are veniall, and shall never be laid unto their charge: and so no concupiscence is mortall. 2. There can be no reasonable coveting of another mans things: for reason is grounded upon the law of nature against the which such concupiscence is: therefore the coveting of our neighbours goods, being a transgression of this morall precept, is in it owne nature mortall: but through Gods mercie in Christ, both it and all other sinnes to the faithfull are veniall and pardonable, and not otherwise.

4. Confut. That Marie was not void of originall sinne and concupiscence.

FUrther, Thomas Aquin hath another position: Post peccatum propter corruptionem naturæ contractam cupiscentiam præter Christum & virgo gloriosa, &c. After sinne entred, because of corruption no man can escape concupiscence, beside Christ and the glorious Virgin: Thom. in opuscul. So the Rhemists: All men are borne in sinne, Christ onely excepted, and his mother for his honour, Annot. Rom.5.15.

Contra. 1. The Apostle saith, Rom.3.19. Whatsoever the law saith, it saith to them which are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world be culpable before God. But Mary was under the law, and culpable before God as others were: Ergo, the law also saith to her, Thou shalt not covet.

2. Againe, the same Apostle saith: The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be made righteous by faith, Galath.3.24. But Mary was made righteous by faith, for shee calleth Christ her Saviour in her song, Luk.1.47. Therefore the law also was a schoolmaster to her to bring her to Christ.

3. S.

3. S. Paul further saith, *Ephes.*2.3. We were by nature the children of wrath as well as others: He speaketh generally of all the faithfull: therefore even Mary was by nature the childe of wrath, and consequently borne in originall sinne.

4. Divers infirmities are discovered in Scripture in the Virgin Mary; as Luk. 2.48. her finding fault with Christ: *Matth.*12.46. her interrupting of Christ in his sermon: *Ioh.*2.2. her prescribing of the time to Christ to shew a miracle in turning the water into wine: when Christ rebuked her, saying: Woman, what have I to doe with thee? All these infirmities doe shew that Mary was not void of originall sinne. Wherefore upon these reasons and testimonies of Scripture we inferre, that Mary was conceived and borne in sinne as others are, and Christ onely is excepted: of whom onely the Apostle saith, *He was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sinne, Heb.*4.15. As Origen also well saith, Solus Christus sine macula: Only Christ was without spot: *Homil.*1 in Levit. See more also of this question, *Synopf. Centur.*2.*err.*79.

5. Confut. Against the Romanists, that it is impossible in this life to keepe the law of God.

NOw whereas the law restraineth the very inward concupiscence and corrupt desire: herein appeareth the perfection of the law, and how impossible it is for any in this life to keepe the law of God perfectly: as the Apostle saith, *Rom.*7.14. We know that the law is spirituall, but I am carnall sold under sinne. Here are two reasons, why it is not possible to keepe the law: both because it is spirituall, not restraining only the externall act, but the internall spirituall motions, and so is a most perfect rule of righteousnesse; also that we are on the other side imperfect, full of weaknesse and corruption, and carnall. Here then is discovered another error of the Romanists, *That the precepts and commandements of God unto a man justified and in the state of grace, are not impossible to be kept: Concil. Trident. sess.*6.*can.*18. First then the truth touching this point, shall briefly be opened: and then their objections answered.

First, here we are to consider a fourefold state and condition of man: 1. As he was created in a perfit estate before his fall, when it was possible for man to have kept the law, and to have conformed himselfe in perfit obedience to the will of his Creator. 2. But man considered in his corrupt nature, before he be regenerate and restored, can by no meanes keepe the law: as the Prophet saith, Can the blacke moore change his skinne, or the Leopard his spots? then may yee also doe good, that are accustomed to doe evill; *Iere.*13.23. So the Apostle, *Whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne, Rom.*14.23. And, *We are not able of our selves to thinke any thing, 2 Cor.*3.5.

3. In the restored estate of man by regeneration and new birth, the law is partly possible to bee kept, partly impossible. It is possible two wayes: first by the imputation of the righteousnesse of Christ, who hath fulfilled the law for us: for he needed not fulfill it for himselfe, as hee suffered not for himselfe: for he was perfit holy and just, even from his conception, communicatione justitiæ divinæ, by the communication of the divine justice: Marbach. So the Apostle saith, *Rom.*10.4. Christ is the end of the law (that is the fulfilling of the law) for righteousnesse to every one that believeth. How the law is possible to bee kept in the regenerate.

Secondly, the law is possible to be kept of the regenerate, Quoad inchoationem obedientiæ internæ & externæ, in respect of the inchoation or beginning of obedience internall and externall: as the Apostle saith, *This is the love of God, that we keepe his commandements, 1 Ioh.*5.3. For he which without this beginning of righteousnesse, that is, without regeneration, saith he knoweth and serveth God, is a liar, Vrsin. Now regeneration and inchoate obedience, being wrought in the faithfull by the Spirit of God, though it cannot wholly extirpate and root out sinne, yet it keepeth it so under, that it reigne not in them: and it so raigneth in them, that they labour to resist sinne, and to live according to the law of God: which obedience though it bee in it selfe imperfect, yet is it accepted of God by faith in Christ, in whose perfect righteousnesse whatsoever is imperfect in our obedience, is perfected, and our imperfections pardoned, Marbach.

Yea even in the regenerate the law is impossible to be kept, in respect of that perfection which God requireth: and therefore the Prophet David saith, *Psal.*143.3. Enter not into judgement with thy servant, for in thy sight shall none that liveth be justified. 1. The faithfull doe both imperfectly keepe the law, committing many things against it: 2. Even in those things wherein they keepe the law, they have some imperfection, as the Prophet Isay saith, 64.6. All our righteousnesse is as a stained clout, Vrsin. How it is impossible to be kept in the regenerate.

There is great difference betweene the regenerate and unregenerate, even when they sinne. 1. Gods purpose standeth to save the Elect, though they sometime slip; so is it not with the other. 2. Their repentance in the end is certaine; so is it not in the unregenerate. 3. Even in the sinnes of the regenerate there remaineth yet some seed of faith, which is not utterly extinguished, nor they wholly given over: but the wicked and unregenerate are wholly sold over unto sinne, and their very conscience is polluted, Vrsin. Differences betweene the sinnes of the regenerate and unregenerate.

4. In the glorious state of the Saints in the next life, the obedience of the Saints shall bee perfect, and they shall wholly be conformable to the will of God; and then we shall be just, not onely by the imputation of the justice of Christ, sed propria essentiali justitia, but by a proper essentiall justice, and then we shall fully be made like to the image of Christ, as the Apostle saith, *Rom.*8.29. Those which he knew before, he also ordained, to be made like the image of his Sonne, Marbach. Now the contrarie objections are these:

1. Obiect. The works of the Spirit are perfect: but good works in the regenerate are the works of the Spirit: therefore they are perfect.

Solut. This argument proceedeth from that which is simpliciter, simplie and absolutely said to bee of the Spirit, to that which secundum quid, after a sort is of the Spirit: the works of the faithfull are not simply the works of the Spirit: but they are so the works of the Spirit, as they be also our works: so they are pure, as they proceed of the Spirit, but impure and imperfect, as they are wrought by man.

2. Obiect.

2. Object. They which are conformable to the image of Christ, have perfect works; The faithfull are conformable in this life to the image of Christ: Ergo.

Answ. The proposition is true onely of those which are perfectly conformable: but so are not the faithfull in this life, but onely in part, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 13.12. Now I know in part: and as our knowledge is, so is our obedience, both imperfect.

3. Object. There is no condemnation to the faithfull, Rom. 8. 1. therefore their works are perfect.

Answ. The argument followeth not, for the privilege of the faithfull, and their exemption from condemnation, dependeth not upon the perfection of their works, but upon the perfection of Christs righteousnesse imputed to them by faith.

4. Object. Christ at his comming shall render unto every one according to his works: but it is not with Gods justice, to give a perfect reward unto imperfect works, therefore the works of the regenerate, because they shall be perfectly rewarded, are perfect.

Answ. 1. The obedience of the faithfull shall bee perfectly rewarded, not according to the law of works, but according to the law of faith, whereby the righteousnesse of Christ is imputed, and is rewarded in them, being theirs by faith, as fully as if it were their owne. 2. Yet Christ shall judge also according to their works, not as causes of the reward, but as testimonies, and lively arguments of their faith, Ursin.

5. Object. The Scripture ascribeth perfection to the works of the Saints, as it is said of Noah, Gen. 6. that he was a just and perfect man in his time: so Hezekiah saith, 2 King. 20.3. I have walked before thee with a perfect heart.

Answ. 1. These and the like sayings must be understood, de perfectione partium, non graduum, of the perfection of the parts of obedience, not of the degree of perfection: that is, the faithfull doe exercise their obedience in every part of the law, but not in a perfect degree or measure. 2. They are said to be perfect, in comparison onely of such as were weake and imperfect. 3. And further, their sincerity and perfection is understood, as being opposite unto dissimulation and hypocrisie, that their heart was perfect toward the Lord, that is, unfained, without any dissimulation: in which sense the Prophet David saith, Judge me according to mine innocencie, Psal. 7. 8.

6. Object. The Apostle saith, Whosoever is borne of God sinneth not, 1 Iohn 3. 9. the faithfull therefore being borne of God, sinne not.

Answ. The Apostle understandeth here, not the dwelling of sinne, but the reigning of sinne, for otherwise he should be contrarie to himselfe, who had said before, chap. 1. 8. If we say we have no sinne, we deceive our selves, and the truth is not in us: They which are borne of God sinne not, that is, sinne, though it remaine in them, it reigneth not in them, as S. Paul saith, Though we walke in the flesh, we doe not warre after the flesh, Ursin.

Of the true end and use of the law.

7. It is evident then, that the law was not given to justifie men thereby, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 3. 20. Therefore by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight, for by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne. This then is the end and use of the law: 1. It sheweth what God is, one that loveth justice, and hateth iniquitie: 2. It is as a glasse, wherein we may see that image, after the which man was at the first created, which now is defaced in him by sinne: 3. It is a rule and line, after the which wee should frame out our life and actions: 4. It sheweth the corruption of our nature, and so is as a schoolemaster to bring us to Christ, Marbach. So Augustine saith, Hac est utilitas legis, ut hominem de sua infirmitate convictum gratiæ medicinam, quæ in Christo est, implorare compellat. This is the profit of the law, to convince man of his infirmitie, and to drive him to seeke the medicine of grace in Christ, Epist. 200.

6. Confut. That the Morall law nor any precept thereof may be by humane authoritie dispensed with.

THere remaineth yet one point to be discussed, whether any of the precepts of the Morall law may by humane authoritie dispensed withall: wherein the Popes Canonists have heretofore given to their terrene god an infinite and unreasonable power: for these were their conclusions, that [a] Papa dispensare contra jus divinum; The Pope may dispense against the law of God: [z] contra jus naturæ, the law of nature: [a] contra novum Testamentum, against the new Testament: [a] contra Apostolum, the Apostle. Papa potest dispensare de omnibus præceptis veteris & novi Testamenti; The Pope may dispense with all the precepts of the old and new Testament, &c. But herein I preferre the judgement of Tostatus, a moderate writer of that side, who denieth unto the Pope any such authoritie, and answereth the contrarie objections.

[a] Gael. defens. Apolog. pag. 49.

1. Object. As among men, the Law-maker may dispense with his law, so God that gave the Morall law, is therefore above the law, and may dispense with it: and if God may dispense, then the Pastors of the Church consequently may dispense, because they are in Gods stead.

Answ. First to the proposition this may bee answered: 1. That in humane lawes which tend to the common good, the preservation of the publike state, the maintenance of peace, and of justice, the Law-giver himselfe cannot so dispense, as to overthrow the end of those lawes: as that it shall be lawfull to disturbe the publike state, or such like; for this were to evert the very scope and end of the law: but yet in particular cases he may dispense; as where an order is, that every one shall watch, which is intended for the good of the Citie: yet some may be dispensed withall, and exempted from watching, who may more necessarily bee employed for the common good: for here, although the letter of the law be not precisely kept, yet the intention of the Law-maker is observed, which is to seeke and procure the common good.

So likewiſe: 1. Univerſally the Lord himſelfe neither will nor can diſpenſe againſt his law: as to make lawfull to have other gods, to take Gods name in vaine, and ſuch like: for this were for God to denie ſelfe to be juſt, which were to denie himſelfe: but the Apoſtle ſaith, God is faithfull; and cannot denie ſelfe, 2 Tim 2.13. but to make it lawfull in generall, to violate the precepts of the firſt and ſecond table, were to denie his owne juſtice, and ſo conſequently to denie himſelfe: for God is moſt juſt, yea ſtice it ſelfe, and the law is a perfect rule of juſtice.

How God himſelfe neither can nor will diſpenſe with his owne law.

2. Yet in the particular determinations of the law, the Lord doth diſpenſe, as with Abrahams ſacri- ing of his ſonne, the Iſraelites robbing of the Egyptians, the fornication of Oſe the Prophet: for the ill of God which is moſt juſt, and the right which he hath in the lives, bodies, and goods of men, maketh ſe things lawfull, being done by the Commandement of God, which otherwiſe ſhould bee unlawfull: n a man may uſe his Oxe, or his Aſſe at his pleaſure, becauſe they are ordained to his uſe: ſo the d may doe with men, take away their lives at his pleaſure, and that by a double right; both becauſe ly his ſinne hath deſerved to die, and God as Creator may uſe the creature as it may beſt ſerve to his . And as a man may uſe his owne goods, and that which is lent unto a man, precariò, freely and ly during the pleaſure of the lender, he may when he will require againe: ſo the earth being the Lords the fulneſſe thereof, which he as it were lendeth unto man ſo long as it pleaſeth him: the Lord may by his pleaſure transferre things from one to another. So likewiſe in the third caſe of fornication: matrimony maketh carnall copulation lawfull, ſo the Lord may, tale vinculum inducere, by his ndement bring in and ſupplie the like bond, as matrimonie is, as when he commanded the Prophet ke him a wife of fornications, Hoſe 1.3. the commandement of God made that lawfull, which other- was unlawfull.

3. But as God can make that which ſeemeth unjuſt, to be lawfull and juſt: ſo yet can he not make a juſt good act to be evill and wicked; as that he which worſhippeth God aright, doth evill, or ſuch like; the reaſon is, becauſe God by this meanes ſhould bee contrarie to himſelfe, in commanding one ſo to ſhip him, and yet to count him, ſo worſhipping him, to doe evill. Againe, Impoſſibile eſt Deum facere non poſſit velle, It is impoſſible for God to doe that hee cannot will: now the Lord willeth none evill be done, therefore hee cannot make that which is good to be evill, becauſe he cannot denie himſelfe, is onely good.

4. Further a difference is to be made betweene the precepts of the firſt and ſecond Table: God doth ſe with the precepts of the ſecond, which are referred to the good of our neighbour, when he ſeeth more to make for his owne glorie, which is the chiefe end and ſcope of the duties of the firſt and ſecond ble; as when God commandeth to diſhonour parents, rather than to diſhonour him, and biddeth any ill, and ſo in the reſt: but with the precepts of the firſt Table God diſpenſeth not, becauſe they are im- diately referred to Gods glory, for that were to conſent to the diſhonouring of himſelfe. And thus uch for the anſwer to the firſt part of the argument.

It is not in mans power to diſpenſe with the Morall law, though God may diſpenſe.

Secondly, it followeth not, if God can diſpenſe, that therefore the Prelates of the Church may: becauſe the diſpenſation againſt a law muſt bee by as great authoritie as the law was firſt made by: the morall law grounded upon the law of nature, was founded by the Author and Creator of nature, therefore by him onely, and not by any elſe may it be diſpenſed with. 2. As in naturall effects, ordina- there muſt goe before a naturall cauſe; as a thing cannot be made hot, unleſſe fire or ſome other effi- nt cauſe of heat be put unto it: ſo that the Pope himſelfe cannot command a thing to bee hot, but by efficient cauſe of heat: yet the Lord without any ſuch mediate or ordinarie cauſe can make a thing by his infinite power ſupplying that cauſe himſelfe: ſo likewiſe in ſpirituall actions, the Lord may ſup- that which maketh the thing lawfull, which man cannot doe, unleſſe ſome externall cauſe or circum- doe concurre, which maketh the act lawfull: As to kill is an unlawfull act in it ſelfe, neither can Pope or any other make it lawfull to kill, unleſſe there be ſome cauſe, that maketh it lawfull to kill, as the partie commanded to be ſlaine hath deſerved to die. But God, to whom all men are debters, and the Lord of every mans life, may command to kill without any injuſtice: although there be no ſuch nt cauſe or circumſtance, which ſhould make that act lawfull.

Obj. Further it is objected thus, to reſtore that which is committed to a mans truſt, is a naturall ; yet this is diſpenſed with, when as a man refuſeth to reſtore to a mad man his ſword or weapon, he gave one to keepe: ſo the Magiſtrate ordinarily diſpenſeth with that precept, Thou ſhalt not kill, he commandeth malefactors to be ſlaine: ſo the Macchabees diſpenſed with the Sabbath, when they ed to fight with their enemies upon the Sabbath, 1 Macchab. chap. 2. as theſe precepts are diſpenſed by men, ſo alſo may the reſt.

Anſw. 1. For the firſt inſtance, there is in that particular caſe no diſpenſation againſt the law of na- , for then by ſuch diſpenſation it ſhould bee made lawfull not to reſtore that which is committed to , which cannot bee made lawfull by any diſpenſation, for this were to croſſe and overthrow the law ture: but not to reſtore a ſword to a furious man, is but a particular interpretation of that generall of nature, wherein the intent of that law is kept: for it is agreeable to the law of nature, to render whoever belongeth to another, and the reaſon thereof is, becauſe it is juſt: ſo it is lawfull by the ſame notwithſtanding, not to give unto a mad man his owne ſword, becauſe it is juſt alſo; the meaning reaſon of the law is kept, becauſe the furious man would doe ſome hurt with his weapon, and there- to miniſter occaſion and inſtruments unto his rage were unjuſt.

2. In the other two particulars there is no diſpenſation, but an interpretation rather, or declaration of law: in the firſt, that it is no murther, when one is juſtly ſlaine; and in the other, that it is no breach of the Sabbath, when neceſſitie compelleth to breake the reſt thereof. 1. This were a diſpenſation, to make it lawfull to kill, where one cannot juſtly be put to death; and to worke upon the Sabbath, where there is no neceſſitie. 2. And a diſpenſation maketh that lawfull afterward, which was not before ſuch diſpenſation: but it was alwayes lawfull both for the Magiſtrate to put to death, and upon like neceſſitie to intermit, or ſuſpend the reſt of the Sabbath. 3. Beſide, theſe interpretations and declarations of theſe laws are not deviſed by man, but warranted in Scripture by the Lord himſelfe, the maker and author of the law, and therefore they are not interpoſed by any humane authoritie, Toſtat. quæſt. 35.

the

4 Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Why covetouſneſſe is to be taken heed of.

Thou ſhalt not covet, &c. Men muſt not onely withdraw their hands from taking their neighbours goods, but reſtraine their inward coveting and deſire, and that for theſe reaſons: 1. Propter concupiſcentiæ infinitatem, becauſe concupiſcence is infinite, the deſire of the covetous is never ſatisfied, Iſay 5.8. They joyne houſe to houſe, &c. till there be no more place. 2. Aufert quietem, it taketh away quietneſſe, Eccleſ. 5.11. The ſatietie of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleepe. 3. Facit divitias inutiles, it maketh riches unprofitable: Hee that loveth riches, ſhall be without the fruit thereof, Eccleſ. 5.9. 4. Tollit juſtitiam aquitatem, it hindreth juſtice: For rewards doe blind the wiſe, and pervert the words of the juſt. Exod. 23. 5. Necat charitatem, it killeth charitie both of God and our neighbour: therefore the Prophet ſaith, Hide not thy ſelfe from thine owne fleſh, Iſay 58.7. The covetous deſpiſeth his brother, who is as his owne fleſh. 6. Producit omnem iniquitatem, it bringeth forth all iniquitie, as S. Paul ſaith, 1 Tim. 6.10. The deſire of money is the root of all evill, Thom. in opuſcul.

2. Obſerv. Of the remedies againſt concupiſcence.

The remedies againſt concupiſcence are theſe: Baſil aſſigneth theſe two: 1. Si cogitaveris, quid ſis, revertes in terram, ceſſabit inſana concupiſcentia, &c. If thou bethinke thy ſelfe, that thou ſhalt be diſſolved into earth, unſound concupiſcence will ceaſe. 2. Meliorum deſiderium minora contemnere. The deſire of better things will make thee contemne the leſſe: as the love to the Word of God, which is more to be deſired than gold, will withdraw our love from earthly things, Baſil. in regula. Thomas Aquinas addeth foure remedies beſide. 3. Occaſiones exteriores fugiendo, By ſhunning all externall occaſions, as Iob made a covenant with his eyes, chap. 31.1. 4. Cogitationibus aditum non præbendo, In giving no way to the thoughts, as by humbling and afflicting the bodie, as S. Paul did, 1 Corinth. 9.27. 5. Orationibus inſiſtendo. By applying prayer, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, that even devils may bee caſt out by faſting and prayer, Matth. 17.21. 6. Licitis occupationibus inſiſtendo, &c. By being alwayes well occupied, for idleneſſe brought the Sodomites to luſt, it was one of their ſinnes, Ezech. 16.49. Thom. in opuſcul.

3. Obſerv. How the Lord hath puniſhed the tranſgreſſors of his law.

Thou ſhalt not covet.] In the laſt place I will ſhew, how the Lord hath puniſhed and judged the tranſgreſſors of this precept, and likewiſe of the reſt. The puniſhment then which is due for the tranſgreſſion of the law is either divine or humane. The humane is that which is inflicted by the lawes of men, which are divers, according to divers uſages of countries and conditions of people, among whom one may reigne more than another, and ſo more ſeveritie is required. But this defect generally is found in humane cenſures; that the tranſgreſſions of the ſecond table are more ſeverely puniſhed than thoſe of the firſt: and thoſe in the ſecond, which doe concerne mans outward ſtate, as theft, are more ſtraightly puniſhed than adulterie, which Auguſtine found fault with in his time: and he giveth this reaſon of the partialitie: Quia id pejus credimus, quod huic vitæ nocet: Becauſe we thinke that the worſe or greater evill which hurteth this life: Lib. de Mendac. cap. 9.

The divine puniſhment is of two ſorts, it is either temporall in this life, or eternall in the next. And for the firſt, where humane lawes are ſilent or connivent, in cenſuring the ſinnes of men, yet the divine juſtice ſheweth it ſelfe: As now ſhall appeare in this particular enumeration of divers preſidents and examples of Gods ſeveritie, exerciſed and ſhewed upon the tranſgreſſors of his law.

1. Pharaoh is ſet forth as an example of an Atheiſt and prophane perſon, who would not acknowledge the God of Iſrael, but ſaid, I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael goe, Exod. 5.2. who manifeſtly tranſgreſſed the firſt precept: his end was to be drowned in the red Sea.

2. Senacherib, a moſt groſſe Idolater, as he was worſhipping his Idoll Niſroch in the temple, was ſlaine of his two ſonnes, 2 King. 19.37.

3. He which blaſphemed the name of the Lord in the hoſt of Iſrael, was by the Lords commandement ſtoned to death, Levit. 24.11.

4. The man alſo which gathered ſticks upon the Sabbath, becauſe he did it with an high hand, and contempt, was ſtoned by Gods appointment, Numb. 15.31.

5. Abſhalom, both a diſobedient childe to his father, and a rebell againſt his Prince, was hanged by the haire of the head, and ſtricken through with darts: and ſo is made a ſpectacle unto all ſtubborne children and rebellious ſubjects, that ſuch ſhould expect the like judgement at Gods hand.

6. Cain, for killing his innocent brother, was caſt out of Gods preſence, and made a runnagate upon the face of the earth. Cruell Abimeleth as he ſlew 70. of his brethren upon one ſtone, ſo his braines were dasht out with a ſtone, Judg. 9.

7. Ach-

7. Ammon an inceſtuous perſon, was ſlaine by the procurement of his owne brother Abſhalom, for the defouring of his ſiſter Thamar, 2 *Sam.*13. That whore and ſtrumpet Iezabel was eaten and devoured of doggs, 1 *King.*21.23. 2 *King.*9.22.35. And as adulterie is an abomination to the Lord, the puniſhment thereof God reſerveth to himſelfe, where the Magiſtrates hand is not extended: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb.13.4. Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge: So the ſinne of drunkenneſſe and glutronie ſhall not eſcape the ſtroke of Gods hand, as being the nurſerie and ſeminarie of filthineſſe and uncleane luſt. Drunken Nabal for that ſinne, and others joyned withall, was ſmitten of the Lord, and died, 1 Sam. 25.38. And that rich Glutton, who pampred himſelfe, but was mercileſſe toward poore Lazarus, was tormented in hell, *Luk.*16.

And here I cannot omit to make mention of a ſtrange judgement of God ſhewed of late upon three perſons for this ſinne of exceſſive drinking; which happened upon the 27. day of December laſt, being the Lords day, next after the Nativitie, in the towne of little Aſhen, or Eaſon in Eſſex, in the houſe of a worſhipfull Knight there dwelling. The manner of it was this: One Thomas Rugeby, a ſervant of the houſe, with another that was a Retainer, and a youth about the age of thirteene yeeres, did in the afternoone withdraw themſelves into a private chamber, taking with them ſtrong Beere, Aqua vitæ, Roſa ſolis, Tobacco; and ſhut the doore cloſe, that they might be privat, and take their fill of drinke without contrulment: who ſo exceſſively and immoderatly diſtempered themſelves with drinke, that they in moſt filthy manner vomited it up againe: two of them, the ſervant of the houſe and the youth, were in vomit ſtrangled, and were found dead in the morning; the firſt ſitting in his chaire, the other lying upon the bed: that which they caſt up, being by the cold of the night frozen to their mouths: the third, the Retainer, was taken up in the morning, wallowing up and downe in his vomit, and in a manner halfe dead, whom they had much adoe to recover. This example would not bee forgotten, but carefully bee kept up in remembrance, that other exceſſive takers of drinke, and wanton abuſers of plentie (which ſinnes do now every where overflow) might receive warning thereby, and judge themſelves by repentance, and leaving their ſinne in time, leſt they be ſuddenly overtaken by Gods judgements in like manner.

A ſtrange example of Gods judgement ſhewed upon three exceſſive drinkers, in little Eaſon in Eſſex the 27. of December laſt.

8. For ſtealing, Achan may bee an exauple, who for his theft and ſacrilege, was with throwing of ſtones put to death, and that by the Lords extraordinarie direction, in cauſing him to bee found by lot, Jos. 7.

9. For lying, the fearefull examples of Ananias and Sapphira, would be thought upon, who were for that ſinne ſtriken with ſudden death, *Act.*5.

10. For coveting of Sara Abrahams wife, both Pharaoh King of Egypt, and Abimelech King of Gerar were puniſhed of God, *Gen.*12. and 20. though they were prevented of God, and kept from committing adulterie.

Thus it pleaſeth God to exemplifie ſome, that others might take heed. But here concerning the temporall judgements in this life, theſe three obſervations are neceſſarie: 1. That they which are temporally puniſhed, are not alwayes to be deemed the worſt of all others, though it pleaſe the Lord to make them examples to others: as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith of the Galileans, whoſe bloud Pilate mingled with their ſacrifice, and of thoſe eighteene perſons, upon whom the tower of Siloam fell in Jeruſalem, that they were greater ſinners than the reſt, but except yee repent (ſaith he) yee ſhall all likewiſe periſh. 2. God neither puniſheth all ſuch offenders in this life, for then men would expect no judgement to come: neither doth he differ all to go unpuniſhed, leſt worldly men might be altogether ſecure; and denie in their hearts the divine providence: as the Prophet David ſaith, *Pſal.*10.13. Wherefore doth the wicked contemne God? he ſaith in his heart, thou wilt not regard. 3. That they which goe on ſtill in their ſinne without puniſhment, ſhall not flatter themſelves: for there remaineth a greater judgement behind: and there is more hope of them which are chaſtiſed in this world. So the Apoſtle ſaith: Thou after thine hardneſſe, and heart that cannot repent, heapeſt unto thy ſelfe wrath againſt the day of wrath, and the declaration of the juſt judgement of God, *Rom.*2.5.

The other kinde of judgement is in the next world: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1 *Cor.*6.9. Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor Idolaters, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggerers, nor theeves, nor drunkards, nor railers, nor extortioners ſhall inherit the kingdome of God: and ſuch were ſome of you, but yee are waſhed, but yee are ſanctified, &c. Adde hereunto the like ſentence and declaration of Gods judgement upon the wicked: *Reuel.*21.8. But the fearefull and unbeleeving, the abominable, and murtherers, whoremongers, and ſorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death. This ſo heavie a ſentence there is no way to eſcape, but in being waſhed from theſe ſins by repentance, ſanctified by newneſſe of life, and juſtified by faith in Chriſt. And thus much of this Preface of the law, which by Gods grace I have thus happily finiſhed.

3. Queſtions and doubts diſcuſſed out of the reſt of this 20. Chapter.

QUEST. I. In what ſenſe the people are ſaid to have ſeene the voyces, which are properly heard and not ſeene.

Vers.18. AND all the people ſaw the thunders, &c. 1. Some thinke that by ſight here is underſtood the hearing, becauſe it is uſuall with the Hebrewes to take one ſenſe for another, Vatabl. But ſight is no more taken for hearing, than to heare for the ſeeing. 2. Ambroſe referreth it to the understanding: Interioris mentis videtur obtutu: It was ſeene by the inward ſight of the minde: like as our Saviour

Saviour ſaith, Hee that hath ſeene me, hath ſeene my Father, Ioh.14.9. Ambroſ. proœm. in Luc. So alſo Hierome will have it like unto that ſaying of S. Iohn; 1. epiſt. chap.1.1. That which we have heard, which we have ſeene with our eyes, &c. of the word of life: Hierom. in Abdiam. But ſeeing Moſes ſpeaketh of outward objects of the externall ſenſe, as of thunder, lightning, he meaneth alſo the ſenſe, unto the which ſuch things are objected. 3. Ferus thinketh, that herein oſtenditur oſcitantia populi, the careleſneſſe of the people is ſhewed, who more regarded that which they ſaw, than the voyce which they heard: and therefore they are ſaid rather to ſee than heare. But it ſeemeth that the people well regarded the voyce of God, becauſe preſently after they deſire that Moſes might ſpeake unto them, and not the Lord any more. 4. Procopius thinketh, that it is ſaid they ſaw, becauſe of the evidence thereof, as if they had ſeene it with their eyes: as it is ſaid, Amos 1.1. The words of Amos, &c. which hee ſaw, &c. Deus Prophetarum oculis res ſubjicit tanta evidentia, ac ſi oculis cernerent, &c. God doth ſo evidently ſet things before the eyes of the Prophets (that is, their inward ſight) as though they ſaw them with their eyes. But this was not done in viſion, as the Lord ſpake to his Prophets, here was a ſenſible demonſtration. 5. Auguſtine therefore thinketh, Videre hic poni pro generali ſenſu, tum animi, quam corporis: That to ſee is here put for the generall ſenſe both of the minde and bodie: becauſe Moſes would ſpeake compendiouſly: ſo we uſe to ſay vide quid ſonet, ſee what ſoundeth: ſo alſo is it taken for other ſenſes: as Chriſt ſaith to Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeene me thou beleevest, whereas Thomas touched him, Tract.121. ſuper Ioann. The reaſon hereof is, Quia viſus primatum obtinet, in ſenſibus intermiſcetur omnibus: Becauſe the ſight is the chiefe among the ſenſes, it is as intermingled among them all: Interlinear. And, Senſus viſus plures rerum differentias nobis oſtendit, &c. Becauſe the ſenſe of the ſight doth more diſtinguiſh things, than any other ſenſe: for other ſenſes doe ſhew but the differences of their owne objects; as the hearing the diſtinction of ſounds: but the ſight ſheweth how one thing is diſcerned from another, whether by colour, quantitie, number, faſhion, and divers other wayes, Toſtat. Therefore the ſenſe of ſeeing is taken in generall for the reſt, but not in particular for any one ſenſe, but as ſenſus conjuncti ſunt in communi ſenſu, as the ſenſes are joyned together in the common ſenſe: Borrhaius. And ſo here to ſee is taken for percipere to perceive: Iun. The people ſaw theſe voyces, that is, perceived them. So alſo Cajetane: Videre pro cognoſcere accipitur ſenſum quocunque ſenſu ſæpe ponitur: To ſee is often put for that knowledge which commeth by any of the ſenſes. So alſo Simlerus. 6. The interlinearie Gloſſe hereupon giveth this note: Nos doctorum voces audientes oculum mentis dirigere debemus: We alſo when we heare the voyce of the learned, muſt alſo direct the eye of the minde: as here the people are ſaid to have ſeene theſe voyces.

Quest. II. What is meant here by voices, whether the thunder or other voices.

The thunder and the lightning. The word is koloth, voices: 1. which ſome doe take for thoſe voices and words which were uttered and framed by the Angels: and hereupon Toſtatus taketh occaſion at large to ſhew at large how the Angels are ſaid to ſpeake and expreſſe the voice as of man: which ſometime they doe by aſſuming humane ſhape, ſometime by framing other organes and inſtruments in the aire apt to make ſounds: but neither of theſe wayes doe the Angels expreſſe conceptiones ſuas modo naturali, ſed per modum artis, their conceits by any naturall meane, but as it were after the manner of art: as men doe by organes and inſtruments of muſicke: Toſtat. queſt.36. All this diſcourſe of Toſtatus here is ſuperfluous: for by voyces here are underſtood the thunders, as the word koloth is taken, chap.19.16. and becauſe of the other word which is adjoyned lamps or lightnings: and ſo read here and underſtand: Vatab. Montan. Cajetan. Lippoman. Simler.

2. Baſil underſtandeth this of the voice of God: Quæ non per aures verberato extrinſecus aere apprehenditur, &c. ſed arcano modo inſonante voluntate divina: Which is not apprehended by the outward beating of the aire on the eares, but by the ſecret ſounding and intimating of the will of God: in Pſal. But it is evident by the ſtorie, that this was a ſenſible ſound, which all the people heard, and were afraid at it: as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Hebr.12.19. which they that heard excuſed themſelves.

3. Moſes here ſetteth not downe all which the people ſaw: for there were foure terrible things beſide: fire, which burned up to the middeſt of heaven, darkneſſe, clouds, and miſt, Deut.4.11. The thicke clouds were above the mountaine, from whence might proceed the thunder and lightning: and upon the mountaine it ſelfe was ſeene the fire mixed with ſmoake and darkneſſe, thorow the which the lightning ſhined, Cajetan.

Quest. III. Whether there were a ſound of the trumpet beſide the voices.

And the ſound of a trumpet. 1. Toſtatus thinketh that the voices before ſpoken of, and the ſound of the trumpet, were not two diſtinct things, but one and the ſame: for otherwiſe the trumpet would have hindred the people from hearing the voices, if they had come together: they are therefore called voices and a ſound of a trumpet, becauſe the Angels by the ſound of a trumpet did expreſſe words and voices: Toſtat.qu.37. 2. But that there were words uttered beſide the ſound of a trumpet, it is evident c.19. where the ſound of a trumpet was heard, before the Lord began to deliver the law: and verſ.19. When the ſound of the trumpet blew long, &c. Moſes ſpake, and God anſwered him by voice. Likewiſe the Apoſtle maketh mention of them as of two diſtinct things, Heb.12.19. Ye are not come, &c. unto the ſound of the trumpet and the voice of words. And yet the voice was uttered in a loud ſound, as of a trumpet: as Iohn [illegible] hee heard a great voice, as if it had beene of a trumpet, Revel.1.10. There might bee then a double kinde of ſounding the trumpet: one without any expreſſing of voice, which ſounded before the Lord [illegible] ſpake, and ceaſed all the while the Law was uttered, and after began againe: the other ſound of the trumpet was that whereby the Lords voice was ſounded out, when he delivered the Law. It is like alſo that ſome of theſe ceaſed while the Lord was in ſpeaking, as the thunder, and the loud ſound of the trumpet: for otherwiſe it might have beene a let to the peoples hearing: and after the Lord had finiſhed and made an end, then the thunder began to be heard againe, with the ſound of the trumpet: like as it is the manner of Princes to have a trumpet blowne before their edicts are proclaimed, and afterwards to cauſe it to be ſounded againe, Simler.

QUEST. IV. Of the feare of the people, and their going backe.

Vers. 18. AND they fled, or moved themſelves, and ſtood afarre off. 1. The Latine readeth perterriti ſunt & timore percuſſi: they were terrified, and ſmitten with feare: the Septuagint καὶ ἐφοβήθησαν, they feared: Chal. they trembled: Vatab. vacillabant, they waved: whereupon Toſtatus maketh theſe degrees of feare: that firſt the minde doth timere, is ſaid to feare, when any evill is expected: then terreri, it beginneth to be terrified, cum conturbatur, when it is troubled with the expectation of any evill: but then we are ſaid tremere, to tremble, when totum corporis ſtatus vacillat, when the body it ſelfe and all the members doe ſhake for feare. But this diſtinction of feare is here out of his place: for though this giving backe of the people proceeded from feare: yet the word noagh here ſignifieth to move; they moved themſelves and fled from their place; and the next words doe confirme this ſenſe, They ſtood afarre off. 2. Here we ſee two operations of the Law, the one terrorem incutit, it ſtriketh feare becauſe of ſinne: then homines retrocedere cogit propter iram Iudicis, it maketh man to give backe becauſe of the wrath of the Iudge, Perus. 3. Some Hebrewes thinke, that the Iſraelites went backe certaine miles, Ex Simler. But the people goe backe, Non per modum fugæ, ſed per modum retrocеſſionis, Not by way of flight, but by way of recoiling: neither herein did they breake the commandement of God; for they were ſet certaine paces forward which they were not to paſſe, but backward they might goe, Toſtat. quæſt. 37. 4. Neither is it to be thought that the people went backe while the Lord was ſpeaking unto them; but after the promulgation of the Law, there being ſome pauſe made, then the people gave way, Cajetan. 5. All the people thus ſpake not to Moſes, but their Elders and the chiefe of them came in the name of the reſt, Deut. 5. 23. Iun.

QUEST. V. Why the people deſire that Moſes would ſpeake unto them.

Vers. 19. AND ſaid to Moſes, talke thou with us. 1. Some doe here lay fault and blame upon the Iſraelites, in refuſing to heare the voice of God, and chuſing rather that Moſes ſhould ſpeake unto them. But the Lord commendeth them for ſo doing, Deut. 5. 28. They have well ſaid, all that they have ſpoken. Therefore they thus ſpake not, as preferring Moſes voice before the Lords, but becauſe they were not able to heare the Lords voice, being ſo terrible, Toſtat. queſt. 37. 3. And the Lord terrified his people with his thundering voice, for theſe two cauſes: 1. That the people hereby ſhould learne and be taught to feare the Lord. 2. And that they might be driven of themſelves by this meanes to deſire the miniſtery of Moſes in ſpeaking unto them: for it was fit and requiſite, that as the Lord the Authour and founder of nature had by his owne mouth given ſuch Lawes as were grounded upon nature, ſuch as were moſt evident even by the light of nature, as that every one might at the firſt underſtand and acknowledge them: ſo that the reſt of the Lawes, which were not ſo evident, but needed explanation, ſhould be declared and rehearſed by Moſes, Sic Toſtat. 4. Beſide, herein Moſes was a type and figure of Chriſt, who is the Mediator betweene God and us, and by whom the will of God is revealed unto us, Marbach. Pelarg. 5. Moſes herein formam boni auditoris deſcribit, &c. deſcribeth the forme of a good auditour, who promiſeth to heare and fulfill the precepts of their maſter, Gloſſ. interlinear.

QUEST. VI. Why the people are afraid they ſhall dye.

Vers. 19. LET not God talke with us, leſt we dye. Wee ſhall finde in Scripture, that it was an uſuall thing for men to feare, that if they had ſeene God they ſhould dye, as Iacob counteth it a great benefit that he had ſeene God and yet lived, Geneſ. 32. So Gedeon and Manoah, when they had ſeene God, were afraid. 1. Toſtatus maketh this the cauſe of this feare, that if they heard Gods voice any more they ſhould dye: becauſe of the infirmity of the body, which could not endure the Lords terrible voice: for as the harmony of the body is diſſolved by any exceſſive quality, as with exceeding great heat or cold: Ita ſonus tolerabile vel terribile corrumpit potentiam tolerantem: So an exceeding terrible or tolerable ſound corrupteth and confoundeth the tolerating faculty, Toſtat. quæſt. 38. But the cauſe of this feare is not ſo much in the body: for Adam before his fall could endure the voice of God well enough. 2. Some underſtand this of everlaſting death, Gloſſ. interlinear. But it is evident, that they meane the outward and temporall death, which is contrary to this temporall life: for thus the people ſay, Deut. 5. 24. Wee have ſeene this day, that God doth talke with man, and he liveth. 3. Cajetanus doth gather theſe two reaſons of their feare: both that terrible fire which they were afraid to come neere, and the thundring voice of God which they could endure no longer to heare: and theſe two reaſons are expreſſed, Deut. 5. 25. Now therefore why ſhould we dye? for this great fire will conſume us: if wee heare the voice of the Lord our God any more, we ſhall dye. 4. But the greateſt cauſe of this their feare was their ſinne: Conſcius homo peccati, metuit iram Dei, &c. Man being guilty to himſelfe of ſinne, feareth the wrath of God, Simler. As one ſaid to our bleſſed Saviour, Luk. 5. 8. Lord goe from me, for I am a ſinfull man.

QUEST. VII. How the Lord is said to come unto them, and why.

Vers.20. God is come to prove you. 1. God is said to come unto them, not that he goeth from place to place, but he came unto them by certaine effects, his signes and wonders: and two other wayes beside the Lord commeth, by his word, and by afflictions and crosses, Simler. 2. There are three ends of the Lords coming unto them: 1. To trie them. 2. That his feare may alway be among them. 3. That they sinne not. All these three arise one from the other: probation and triall worketh feare, and feare causeth to flee from sinne. 3. So although Moses free them from one kinde of servile feare, which was the feare of death and destruction; yet he retaineth them still in that profitable kinde of feare, whereby they might be kept in awe and obedience still, Simler.

QUEST. VIII. How the Lord is said to tempt and prove his people.

Vers.20. God is come to prove you. 1. Deus metaphoricè non propriè tentat, &c. God is not said properly but metaphorically to tempt, as he is said to be angry: Quia facit effectum tentantis, &c. because he worketh the like effect, as he which tempteth, that is, to cause the feare and obedience of the people to appeare, Cajetan. 2. God tempteth, the Devill tempteth, and man is said to tempt. God is not said to prove or try for his owne knowledge and experience, Cum omnia Deus videat priusquam fiant, seeing God knoweth all things before they are done: Chrysost. hom. 41. in Ioann. But God trieth and proveth, Ut nos manifestemur aliis: that we should be manifest to others, as Abrahams obedience was made knowne to all, in that he refused not to sacrifice his sonne; vel nobis ipsis, or to our selves: as the Israelites were tempted in the wildernesse, that it might be knowne what was in their heart, Deut. 8. Tostat. Satan tempteth, quia evertere nititur, because he goeth about to supplant and overthrow us, as he tempted Iob. Homo aliquando tentat ut probet, aliquando ut rapiat: Man sometime tempteth to prove, sometime to catch: as the Scribes and Pharisies tempted Christ to entangle him, Ambrose in 2 Cor. 13.

QUEST. IX. Why the people stood afarre off, and where.

Vers.21. So the people stood afarre off. 1. Cajetanus thinketh that the people returned not to their tents, but stood a little from the mountaine: and continued in the place whither they fled before, vers.18. Tostat. 2. But it is evident, Deut. 5. 30. that they were bidden to goe unto their tents, &c. For as Moses went up neerer unto the presence of God, so the people went still further backward unto their tents, being so commanded of the Lord. 3. The mysticall signification hereof is, that our sinnes doe make us stand aloofe off from God, untill wee be reconciled by a Mediatour, whereof Moses was a type and figure here, Simler.

QUEST. X. How Moses is said to draw neere to the darknesse.

But Moses drew neere unto the darknesse, &c. 1. Moses was in the darknesse before, for all the hill was covered with smoake; but he was not in that darknesse wherein the Lord was: Ubi expressius apparebant quibus noscebatur Deus: Where more evident signes were expressed, by the which God was knowne: for otherwise how should the darknesse containe or receive him, whom the heavens cannot containe? Gloss. interlin. Hee went then up, ad cacumen montis, to the top of the hill, where the thicke cloud was, wherein the Lord did manifest his presence. 2. Some by the darknesse understand the spirituall and mysticall sense of Scripture, which the people cannot comprehend and therefore they stood afarre off. Quia verò spirituales allegoriarum nubem penetrant, &c. But because they which are spirituall, doe pierce into the cloud of allegories, therefore Moses went into the darknesse, Gregor. As Christ preached unto his Disciples in the mount, and unto the people in the plaine; so the mysteries and secret of Scripture are opened only unto those that are spirituall, for pearles must not be cast before swine, Lippom. So also Hieron. Dominus aut in lumine est, aut caligine; incipientibus simpliciter loquitur, iis qui perfecti sunt, mysticè loquitur: God is either in the light, or in darknesse; unto the beginners hee speaketh simply, unto those which are perfect, in mystery, Super Psal. 96. 3. But hereby rather is understood, that God who himselfe dwelleth in light that none can attaine unto, yet in caligine versatur respectu nostri, dwelleth in darknesse in respect of us, because we cannot search out the nature of God, nor comprehend what he is Simler. So Gregor. Nyss. interpreteth, that Moses went into the darknesse, that is, Tunc demum cognovisse illum esse divinam naturam, quæ cognitionem omnem excedit: He then perceived the divine nature to be such, which exceeded all knowledge. Likewise Procopius, Vera Dei notitia est agnoscere suam ignorantiam, &c. It is the true knowledge of God, for one to acknowledge his owne ignorance, that bringeth darknesse with it, Thom. Nulla intellectus creatus potest ad eum accedere: No created understanding can come neere unto God, 1 Tim. 6. Iust. 3. 4. Herein also Moses was a lively type of Christ: that as he having spoken unto the people, and declared the will of God, afterward went up into the darknesse: So our blessed Saviour having declared the heavenly doctrine of his Father to the world, and finished the worke of our redemption, Ascendit in caliginem nubium cœli, Ascended into the darknesse of the clouds of heaven, and was taken out of our sight, and received up into heaven, Simler.

QUEST. XI. Why the Lord saith he spake unto them from heaven.

Vers.22. Ye have seene that I have talked with you from heaven. This is premised as a reason of the precept following, vers.23. Ye shall make ye therefore, &c. no Gods of silver, &c. 1. Oleaster resolveth the reason thus: Considerate me vobis loco superiore, &c. Consider that I am higher than you in place and therefore am able to punish you, if you rebell. 2. Some thinke that hereby the Lord signified unto them, that these were not Mosis artes & figmenta, &c. the devices and fetches of Moses, but that God himselfe spake from heaven, and therefore the Decalogue or ten precepts came from God himselfe, and were pronounced by him, Cajetan. And so the Lord by this meanes would get authority unto his law, Rom. 3. God thus saith, Ut ostendat celsitudinem suam rebus omnibus superiorem; To shew his highnesse farre above all other things, and so incomprehensible, and that therefore they could make no image of him, Calv. 4. Or because the Lord spake out of heaven, not as one absent, but every where present, therefore no image should be made of him; for images are representations of them, in their absence. 5. But this is the best interpretation of this reason, because they only heard the Lord speake out of heaven, they saw no shape or similitude, but only heard a voice, therefore they should make no image of God: so is it explained, Deut. 4. 15. Take good heed to your selves, for you saw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you, &c. And so in effect he saith thus much, I spake unto you from heaven, that is, I the true God, not any materiall substance, as of gold, silver, &c. By heaven here he understandeth the higher part of the aire, as they are called The fowles of heaven, Tost. qu. 38.

Quest. XII. Why this precept is repeated of not making any graven image.

Ver. 23. Ye shall not make, &c. 1. Some thinke that this is an addition to the first Commandement: Thom. Aquin. who thus distinguisheth the Lawes of Moses: The Judicials and Ceremonials, institutionem vim habent, only take their force from their institution; otherwise it were indifferent, whether they were done one way rather than another. The Morals, ex ipso dictamine rationis naturalis robur habent, have their efficacy from the enditing of naturall reason: and these morall precepts are of three sorts: some are so manifest, quòd editione non indigent, that they need not to be set forth and published, as concerning the love of God and our neighbour. Some things are not so generall, but more particularly determined: which although they are acknowledged of all, yet because many erre therein, they need to be published, such are the ten Commandements: Quædam sunt, quorum ratio non est cuilibet manifesta, sed solùm sapientibus; Some things are such, the reason whereof is not manifest to every one, but only to the wise, and these be the precepts, superaddita Decalogo, which are added to the Decalogue: which kind this precept is here: Sic fere Thom. 1. 2. qu. cap. art. 1 1. in Cor. 2. But they are rather an explication of the first and second precept, than any addition, Iun. And this precept either differeth not at all from the other, Thou shalt make thee no graven image: or only herein is the difference, that the other precept dicit veritatem universaliter, doth declare the truth universally: Hoc autem determinantur modus particulares; And here certaine particular cases are determined, and two things are here forbidden, one directly, not to acknowledge or make any other God: the other, indirectly, not to make any imagines, representativas veri Dei, to represent the true God, Tostat. qu. 38. 3. Now this precept is iterated and repeated, because some things are majoris necessitatis & periculi, of greater necessity and danger, as idolatry was, which the Hebrewes had seene practised in Egypt, Tostatus. And this repetition is made, ut magis imprimatur hæc prohibitio cordibus eorum, &c. that this prohibition might be more deeply imprinted in their hearts, because he knew them to be prone to idolatry, Lyran. So also Cajetan.

Quest. XIII. Of the meaning of these words, Ye shall not make with me.

Ver. 23. Ye shall not make with me. 1. The Latine Interpreter omitteth this clause, with me, altogether: which both Cajetane and Lippoman confesse to be a defect in that translation. 2. The Chalde coram me, before me: but the word is itti, with me: the other phrase used before is ghal panai, before my face, vers. 3. 3. Retaining then the usuall reading, with me; some referre it to the spirituall idolatry of the minde, which is covetousnesse, that in the service of God their mindes should not be inclined to the love of silver and gold, Ferus. Some doe take this to be the sense, that although the Lord by his authority appointed certaine images to be made in the Tabernacle, as of the Cherubims: yet they should not imitate, nor arrogate unto themselves the like power. But the more proper meaning is, that they should not make any such images, to joyne them with God, to worship God and them together: as this superstition of the Jewes, to worship God and Baal together, Simler. And withall, these words, with me, doe put them in minde of the covenant which they had made with God, and not with images, Iun.

Quest. XIV. Why mention is made only of images of silver and gold.

Ver. 23. Gods of silver, nor Gods of gold, &c. 1. Mention is made only of silver and golden images for this reason, as Augustine saith: Because a man being ashamed of that which is most deare and precious unto him, facilius avertitur à veneratione viliorum, &c. is more easily turned from those things which are vile, in Psal. 113. So also Tostatus: Quia ista magis movent, &c. Because these metals of gold and silver doe more easily move to idolatry, than wood or stone, quæst. 39. 2. And because Idolaters, in Dei pulchritudine errare putant, doe thinke that Gods Majesty is adorned by these metals of silver and gold: & sibi magis obstrictum putant, and they thinke that God is more bound unto them, for offering unto him more precious things, Gallas. Therefore instance is specially given in these. 3. Another reason of mention is made of these metals, in quæ vos jus habetis, &c. because man hath right and power over such things being made for their use, Borrh. and therefore their errour is the greater in worshipping that which is made for their use and service.

Quest. XV. Why the Lord commanded an altar of earth to be made.

Vers.24. AN altar of earth, &c. 1. Here is an oppoſition made betweene the altars which the Gentiles made to their Idols, and the altar which God would have conſecrated to himſelfe: Gentiles idolis conſtruebam altaria ornata & ſublimia; The Gentiles did build ſumptuous and high altars to their Idols, as placing religion in them, Thom. 1.2. qu. 102. art. 4. addit. 7. So alſo Lyranus: Hoc præcepit in detestationem idololatriæ; Hee commanded this in the deteſtation of idolatry. 2. Some thinke that the Lord intended hereby to commend unto his people the internall worſhip: as if he ſhould have ſaid; Non curo ornamenta illa ornamenta parvi pendo, &c. I eſteeme not of thoſe outward ornaments, which might withdraw thy minde from my true worſhip, Lippom. 3. But the reaſon indeed of this precept was, ne diuturna forent, that the altars made of earth might not continue long, Simler. This then was only a temporary precept, that the Iſraelites, while they were in the way, ſhould uſe ſuch ſimple altars, which might ſoone be deſtroyed againe, leſt they might be occaſions of ſuperſtition afterward, untill ſuch time as the Tabernacle ſhould be erected: and the reaſon hereof was, that God would only have the altar, which ſhould be erected in the Tabernacle afterward to continue, leſt the having of many altars in divers places ſhould be an occaſion of ſuperſtition. This was the cauſe why the Iſraelites were ſo jealous of the Reubenites and Gadites for building an altar, which they made, Non cultum, ſed monumenti cauſa; Not for religion ſake, but to be a monument, Joſh. 22. Galaſ. 4. Some make this altar of earth a type of our Saviour Chriſt: Quia ſumpſit carnem, quæ terrena eſt, ſi materiam inſpicias; Who tooke our fleſh, which is earthly, if you reſpect the matter: Procopius, Rupert. Oſiander. 5. Some make this morall uſe of it, that we ſhould humiliter ſectari, follow humility, Perus, Lyranus.

Quest. XVI. What Altar of earth he meaneth.

BUt here a further doubt ariſeth, ſeeing afterward the Altar of burnt offering was commanded to be made of Sittim wood, how that agreeth with this precept, to make an altar of earth. 1. Perus to reconcile theſe places, would not have this precept taken literally, but that this ſhould bee the meaning: Quòd Deus magis pie, quàm ſplendidè vult coli, &c. That God would rather be worſhipped devoutly, than ſumptuouſly. But there is no neceſſity here to forſake the literall ſenſe: as ſhall now appeare. 2. Lyranus therefore underſtandeth this of the altar of burnt offering, not of the altar of incenſe, which was made of Sittim wood, chap. 30. So alſo was the other made of the ſame wood, chap. 27. therefore this is no ſufficient anſwer. 3. Hugo de S. Victor. referreth it to the altar of burnt offering: Quod terra implebatur, &c. which they uſed to fill with earth, being made hollow within, when they ſacrificed. So alſo Oſiander. 4. But it is evident by the precept following, of making an altar of rough and unhewen ſtones, that he meaneth ſuch altars as were ſet up of a ſudden in the fields, as was that commanded to bee made in the borders of Canaan, Deut. 27. and that which Elias reared up in Mount Carmel: ſuch as were ſet up repentino & tumultuario opere, of a ſudden and in haſte by the way, upon ſome ſpeciall occaſion, Galaſ. Toſtat. Iun.

Quest. XVII. Why the Altar was not to be made of hewen ſtone.

FOr the ſame reaſon they are forbidden, if they will make an altar of ſtone, to lift up a toole upon it. 1. Some apply it thus, that hereby is ſignified, that the articles of faith, tanquam lapides integri ſunt tenendi ſine ſciſſione hæretica: as whole ſtones are firmely to bee kept, without any hereticall dividing or mangling of them, Lyran. 2. Some gather hence, that God will not be worſhipped, humano arbitrio, according to the device and fancie of men. But this is as well forbidden in other precepts, it is not peculiar to this. 3. But the reaſon of this precept was quia lapides politi exprimebant certam figuram, quæ adorationi eſſet, &c. Becauſe carved and wrought ſtones did expreſſe a certaine ſimilitude and figure, which might be uſed for adoration, Toſtat. 4. Another reaſon is, quia ad durationem pertinet: becauſe that which is builded of hewen ſtones, was like to continue long: and therefore the Lord permitteth ſuch altars to be made for the time, ut poſt temporarium ejus uſum, aut laberetur per ſe, aut deſtrueretur, &c. that after the temporary uſe thereof it might either fall downe of it ſelfe, or eaſily bee deſtroyed, leſt by elegancie and curious building it might give offence, and occaſion of ſuperſtition to poſterity, Marbach.

Quest. XVIII. Why the lifting up of the toole is ſaid to pollute the Altar.

Vers.25. IF thou lift up thy toole upon it, thou haſt polluted it. 1. Ruperius doth thus moralize it: Ferrum ſeu cultrum arrogantiæ eſt, qua mens a Creatore præciditur, &c. This toole or iron is arrogancie, whereby the minde is cut off and ſeparated from the Creator: if thou lift up thy toole, that is, ſi tibi ipſi arrogaveris, if thou doe arrogate any thing to thine owne vertues, thou haſt polluted it. 2. Some make it a type of Chriſt, who was that ſtone cut out without hands, that is, without any ſinne, impurity, or pollution, Procop. 3. Some make this collection: Quòd Deus manibus hominum nil moveatur: That God would not be worſhipped by any worke of mans hands. But that is not ſo, for afterward he commanded the Temple to bee built, which was the worke of mens hands, and yet no hinderance to his worſhip, Galaſ. 4. The meaning then is this, not that the iron toole of it ſelfe defileth: ſed quia ſæpe contra mandatum Dei: but becauſe they ſhould ſo goe againſt the commandement of God, and ſo all their workes ſhould be as defiled and polluted.

Quæſt.

Quest. XIX. How Jeremy is made to dissent with Moses, who saith the Lord commanded not any thing concerning sacrifices.

THereon shalt thou offer. How can this stand with that saying of the Prophet Jeremie, cap. 7. 22. I spake not to your fathers, neither commanded them when I brought them out of the land of Egypt concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices? 1. Some doe reconcile these places thus: that the Prophet speaketh de præcepto & ceremoniis Domino propriis, of the commandements of God with his owne ceremonies: and so he spake only and commanded the ten Commandements: the rest he delivered by Moses. 2. Rupertus giveth this solue, because Moses non imperavit sed permittendo talia præcepit: commanded such things, not by my bidding, but by my permission &c. But it is evident, vers. 22. that he spake all these things at the Lords commandement. 3. The best solution then is this, that God commanded not sacrifices primo & principaliter, cum primum aliud fuerint instituta, &c. chiefly and principally they were instituted for another end. Lippom. So also Iun. Genevens. And to the Prophet himselfe, vers. 22. But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice. God specially requireth of them obedience: for what else did those sacrifices signifie, quam extinctionem carnalis vitæ the extinguishing of our carnall life? Lippom. In the like phrase it is said Gen. 32. 28. that Jakob should be no more called Jakob, that is only or principally but Israel. Iunius.

Quest. XX. Of the difference betweene burnt offerings and peace offerings.

burnt offering and thy peace offerings. 1. The burnt offerings were those which were wholly burnt upon the altar, to the honour of God, the rite whereof is expressed, Levit. 1. The peace offerings were those which were offered to God in signe of thankfulnesse for any benefit obtained, or to the end to obtain any thing at the hand of God: and so they are called peace offerings, because God is thereby pacified and our peace made, Tostat. So the Septuagint translate σωτήρια ὑμῶν, that is, your health: sacrifices are offered for their health and prosperity, Lippoman. The word shalom also signifieth perfection. Their peace offerings then were such as were offered for the welfare, perfection, and integrity of their state, Oleaster. 2. There was a third kinde of sacrifices for sinne, when they offered a Goat, or some other beast, to make attonement for some sinne which they had committed, as is plaine Levit. 4. The other two kinds of sacrifice are here only mentioned, quia sunt voluntaria, because they were free and voluntary: but those for sinne, were ex necessitate, of necessity, Tostat. 3. There were other things also necessary to be knowne, which belonged to the rite of sacrificing: as who were to offer sacrifice namely the Priests: what kinde of beasts they were to sacrifice, and in what place, and in what manner: all which things afterward are fully declared and explained by Moses in Levit. Tostat. quæst. 41.

Quest. XXI. Whether it was lawfull to sacrifice in no other place, than before the Arke or Tabernacle.

In all places, where I shall put the remembrance of my name. 1. The Hebrewes make this a perfect sentence of it selfe, that the Lord will come and blesse them in every place which hee chuse: but seeing it was not lawfull for them every where to offer sacrifice, but where the Tabernacle and Arke was, as is expressly declared, Levit. 17. it hath relation also to the former precept, that they should not make any such altar of earth or stone, where they would themselves: Sed Deus ipse designabit locum, &c. but God himselfe will assigne the place, where they shall make an altar, Gallas. Although the ordinarie place of sacrificing were the Tabernacle, where the name of God was solemnly called upon, yet they might sacrifice in other places, ex causa speciali & divina revelatione, upon speciall occasion and by divine revelation: as David did in mount Morish, by the direction of the Prophet, 2 Sam. 24. and Elias in mount Carmel, 1 King. 18. Lyran. So Samuel offered sacrifice in Ramah, 1 Sam. 7. and in another place when Saul came unto him, 1 Sam. chap. 9. and in Bethlehem, when he should anoint David King, 1 Sam. 16. And it seemeth that he by propheticall direction might offer where he would: as the Lord bid him make this answer, when he went to Bethlehem, I am come to offer sacrifice to the Lord, 1 Sam. 16. for all Israel knew that Samuel was the Lords faithfull Prophet. So also it is like that David being a Prophet, offered sacrifice in Hebron, while he there reigned, having neither presence of the Arke or Tabernacle: and that the people following Davids example, continued that custome still: as it appeareth by Absoloms excuse to his father, who asked leave to goe and sacrifice in Hebron, 2 Sam. 15. Tostat. 3. Neither did these offend in sacrificing in other places beside where the Tabernacle and Arke was: for in those speciall places the Lord for that time would have a memoriall of himselfe, as in mount Moriah, where David, and Carmel, where Elias sacrificed, Tostat. quæst. 40. 4. But may be added further, that beside that special direction which the Prophets had to offer sacrifice in peculiar places, there was more liberty used in their peace offerings, than in other sacrifices: and in the time of Samuel, Saul, and David, the Arke and Tabernacle were apart; so that it seemeth in this unsettled estate, that the Law in that behalfe concerning the place of sacrifice, was not strictly observed.

Reconcil.

Quest. XXII. Whether it was lawfull to sacrifice before the Arke, and at the Tabernacle while they were asunder.

NOw the place where the Lord did put the memoriall of his name, was in the Tabernacle and Arke 1. while they were placed together: and when they were in two divers places, it was lawfull to sacrifice before either of them. 1. That it was lawfull to sacrifice where the Arke was, is evident by the practice of the men of Bethshemesh, that offered sacrifice at the returne of the Arke from the land of the Philistims, 1 Sam.6. So David sacrificed before the Arke, when he brought it from the house of Obed Edom, 2 Sam.6. and the reason is, because the name of God was invocated or called upon, where the Arke was, 2 Sam.6.2. And from the mercie seat, which was upon the Arke of the Testimony, did the Lord use to speake, and give answers, Numb.7.89. 2. Likewise, that it was lawfull to sacrifice where the Tabernacle was while the Arke was away, is apparent; 1. Because there was the brasen Altar, whereon they offered their burnt offerings before the doore of the Tabernacle, Levit.17.6. which Altar followed alwayes the Tabernacle, and not the Arke: as Salomon found the Arke at Jerusalem, but the Tabernacle with the furniture thereof, he fetched from Gibeon, 2 Chron.1.3.4.5. 2. Where the Ministers of the Altar, the Priests and Levits were, there was it lawfull to offer sacrifice; for they gave their attendance to that end, but most of the Priests and Levits remained with the Tabernacle, as Abimelech, with 85. more were at Nob where Saul put them to death, while the Arke abode in the house of Abinadab, who consecrated his sonne Eleazar to keepe it, 1 Sam.7.1. who alone sufficed not, for all sacrifices and oblations of Israel: it seemeth therefore, that most of their sacrifices were brought then to the Tabernacle, though the Arke at that time were in another place. 3. Beside, after the captivity of Babylon, when the Arke was no more to be seene, as some thinke hid by Jeremy, 2 Maccheb.2. but as is most like, lost in the captivity, or burnt with the Temple: they used to offer sacrifices: for after the captivity, they restored and renewed such necessary parts and implements, as before were in Salomons Temple, and were burnt together with the Temple: they made like unto them afterward, as mention is made of Luk.1. how Zacharie burned incense before the Lord, which was upon the golden Altar: likewise Matth.27. the vaile was rent, (which divided the most holy place from the Sanctuary) when Christ gave up the ghost: and seeing they offered sacrifice for which cause, some sold doves in the Temple, whom Christ cast out, Matth.12. they had also the brasen Altar; only the Arke they had not, for seeing the Tables of stone, the pot of Manna, and Aarons rod were all missing, for the keeping whereof, the Arke was principally made, they had no cause to make a new Arke, there being no farther use or service for it, Testat. quæst.43.

Quest. XXIII. How long the Arke was severed from the Tabernacle.

NOw, because mention is made before of the parting and separation of the Arke and Tabernacle, it shall not be amisse to shew how long the Arke was absent from the Tabernacle, which time will be found to be not much under 100. yeeres, as may bee gathered thus: after the Arke returned from the country of the Philistims, it remained in the house of Abinadab 20. yeeres, 1 Sam.6. and all the time of Samuels government, and Sauls reigne, who made 40. yeeres betweene them, Act.13.21. whereof those 20. yeeres were part: then it was removed by David, about the 8. yeere of his reigne, to the house of Obed Edom, where it continued three moneths, and from thence to the house of David in Jerusalem, where it stayed 32. yeeres, and 11. yeeres more under Salomons reigne: for when hee had finished the Temple in the 11. yeere of his reigne, 1 King.6.38. he brought the Arke from Davids tent, which he had pitched for it, into the Temple, 2 Chron.1.4. So all these yeeres being put together, 40. yeeres of Samuel and Saulz government, 40. yeeres under David, and 11. yeeres of the reigne of Salomon, will make 91. yeeres: whereunto adde those seven moneths, during which time the Arke sojourned among the Philistims, 1 Sam.6.1. In which compasse and continuance of yeeres, the Arke had these sundry removes: first, it being carried from Shiloh, was seven moneths in the countrey of the Philistims, from thence was carried to Bethshemesh, where 50. thousand and 70. persons were slaine for looking into the Arke, 1 Sam.6. then it removed to Kiriathiearim, 1 Sam.7. from thence to the house of Obed Edom, and so to the house of David, 2 Sam.6. where it stayed till Salomons Temple was built: these were the severall places and mansions of the Arke, after it was severed from the Tabernacle, till they were joyned together againe: saving that sometime the Arke upon some speciall occasion was removed for a while, as when they went out to battell, as 1 Sam.14.18. and so was brought to the place againe, Sic fere Testat.

Quest. XXIV. Of the removing of the Tabernacle.

AS the Arke was thus removed up and downe, so also was Moses Tabernacle: for first it was carried from place to place, as long as the Israelites pitched their tents in the wildernesse: and after they were come into the land of Canaan, the Tabernacle remained a long time in Gilgal: for thither came the Gibeonites to Ioshuah in Gilgal, Iosh.10. after that it was set up in Shiloh, Iosh.18.1. where it continued all the time of the Judges, untill Samuel, who understanding by the Spirit of prophecie, that the Lord had rejected Shiloh, removed the Tabernacle to Nob, where Saul put 85. Priests to the sword: from thence it seemeth the Tabernacle was translated to Gibeon, where it continued untill Salomons Temple was finished, from thence Salomon brought it into the Temple, 2 Chron.1.3. Testat. quæst.42.

Quæ

Quest. XXV. Of the places where it was lawfull or unlawfull to sacrifice.

NOw concerning the places wherein it was lawfull to sacrifice, this diſtinction is to bee obſerved: 1. That the ordinary place was in the Tabernacle, when the Arke and it were together, and both at the Tabernacle, and before the Arke, when they were divided, as is before ſhewed. 2. Extraordinarily it was lawfull for the Prophets to ſacrifice elſewhere, as did Samuel, David, Elias, as is before declared, and 20. being thereunto directed by the Spirit of God. 3. But in the high places it was unlawfull to ſacrifice: and therefore thoſe Kings are commended which tooke away the high places, and thoſe reproved being otherwiſe good Kings, that ſuffred them to remaine. 4. Yet herein is further to be conſidered, that there were two ſorts of high places, for ſome were conſecrated to idolatry, as thoſe which Salomon had built about Jeruſalem for Aſtoreth, Chemoſh, and Malchom, which places Joſias defiled, 1 King. 23. 14. There were other high places, where the Prieſts of the Lord offered ſacrifice to the Lord, whom Joſias did put downe, not ſuffring them to come up to the Altar of the Lord, but onely to eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren, 1 King. 23. 9. who if they had beene Idolatrous Prieſts, could not have beene permitted to eat of the unleavened bread, Toſtat. quæſt. 44.

Of two kindes of high places.

Quest. XXVI. How God is ſaid to come and goe, and how he is ſaid to be in the world.

Vers. 24. I will come unto thee, &c. 1. God neither commeth nor goeth by moving from place to place: for that which is infinite, and in every place, cannot move or change the place, for where any moving is, there one place is left to goe unto another: but God being of an infinite eſſence, is in all places. 2. Yet though God be in every place, yet he occupieth no place: Nihil magis indiviſibile, & minus occupans quàm Deus: Nothing is more indiviſible, and leſſe occupying a place than God is: An Angell cannot enter into a mans ſoule: Deus tamen illabitur ei & totus intus manet, &c. Yet God doth enter into a mans ſoule, and wholly remaine within it. 3. There is ſome ſimilitude herein betweene God, who is an infinite Spirit, and the other finite ſpirits, as namely the ſoule of man, which is ſaid to be tota in toto corpore & in qualibet parte: whole and all in the whole body, and whole and all in every part, which is to be underſtood not after one and the ſame manner. There is a threefold union betweene the ſoule and the body. Unitur ei ut finis, it is united unto it, as the end, for the body is ordained to this end, to be perfected by the ſoule: ſecondly, it is united unto the body as the forme thereof, for by the joyning of the ſoule to the body, as the forme, a man is diſtinguiſhed in his kinde from all other creatures: and in this ſenſe the ſoule as the forme is whole in the whole body. Thirdly, the ſoule is united to the body, tanquam motor, as an agent and mover: ſo it giveth power to the eye to ſee, to the eare to heare, and ſo every other part a ſeverall faculty and power; and thus alſo the ſoule is ſaid to be whole and all in every part. Now then, as the ſoule is in the whole body, and yet in no one part more than in another: ſo is God in the world comprehending all, and himſelfe not being comprehended. 4. Further, thus it may be ſhewed, that God is not in any place, neither moveth from place to place: for other finite ſpirits, becauſe they are compoſiti ex actu & potentia, they conſiſt of an act, and a power, or poſſibility; they being in one place, have a power or poſſibility to be in another: therefore God, becauſe he is purus actus, a pure act, muſt of neceſſity be every where, for otherwiſe he ſhould not be altogether in act, if being in one place, hee had not a power or poſſibility to be in another, for then he ſhould not be actually there, but in power and poſſibility only. As a finite ſpirit is ſaid to be in that place, in quo applicat virtutem ſuam, where it doth exerciſe and apply the power; as the ſoule is in the body, becauſe it only exerciſeth the vertue and power in the body: God, becauſe hee exerciſeth his power in and over all the world, muſt needs bee in every place of the world. 6. God therefore is ſaid two wayes to be in the world, ſecundùm potentiam & virtutem, according to his power and vertue, and ſecundùm eſſentiam, according to his eſſence: And yet God is ſo in the world, as he is not included and limited in the world, and he is ſo without the world, as yet not excluded out of the world: as Auguſtine ſaith, Deus eſt in mundo non incluſus, extra mundum non excluſus, ſuprà mundum non elatus, infra mundum non depreſſus: God is in the world, but not included; without the world, but not excluded; above the world, yet not elevated or lifted up; and under the world, yet not depreſſed or put under; &c. which muſt be underſtood according to Gods eſſentiall preſence: for according to his power and working he is only in the world, becauſe he worketh in the world. 7. And although the power of God be infinite, ſo that if there were other worlds beſide this, thither Gods infinite power could extend it ſelfe, yet the action or exerciſing of that power in the world is finite: quia actio non poteſt eſſe major, quàm id quod fit, the action cannot be greater, than that which is wrought or made: therefore becauſe the world is finite, the action or exerciſing of the divine power in the world is finite and limitate likewiſe, yet the divine power in it ſelfe remaineth infinite. 8. Now then God is ſaid to goe from place to place, not in reſpect of his eſſence, but of his power and vertue: and of this power of God, there is a double action; one generall, whereby God governeth the world, and worketh in every place, and ſo God cannot be ſaid to goe from place to place, becauſe this generall power worketh in all places, and at all times; there is a ſpeciall action or operation of the divine power: as when he worketh miracles and wonders, and ſheweth manifeſt ſignes of his power and preſence, more in one place than in another. And according to this ſpeciall operation, the Lord is underſtood to goe and come thorowout the Scripture, Toſtat. qu. 46. 47. And ſo in this place he ſaith, I will come and bleſſe thee: Veniam occulta inſpiratione, benedicam corporali & ſpirituali benedictione; I will come by ſecret inſpiration, I will bleſſe thee with corporall and ſpirituall bleſſings, Gloſſ. interlinear.

Three kindes of wayes is the ſoule joyned to the body.

Quest.

Quest. XXVII. Whether it were not lawfull to goe up by steps to the Altar.

Vers. 26. Then shalt not goe up by steps vnto mine Altar. 1. All kinde of ascending vnto the Altar is not forbidden, for the Altar being three cubits high, chap. 27. the Priests could not minister without some ascent and rising up to the Altar: there was therefore Quidam vsus scalarum siue gradus, quibus Leuitæ ascendebant, A certaine ascent, or going up without steps, rising by little and little, as it. Salomon thinketh, Leuitæ ascensus erat continuus de terra: the going up was continued by the rising of the earth, Tostat. 2. Therefore all steppings up being forbidden, for the reason after alleaged, lest their nakednesse should be seene, per gradum vnum gradui scala ligneæ, the steps or scales of wood decked his are more fouldem, for by such climing up, their nakednesse might appeare, both before and beneath, Tostat. quæst. 3. Some for this text alone this precept, that simply it is not forbidden to goe up by steps, for afterward there were steps made to goe up to the Altar, which Salomon made: therefore they would have it to be a figurative speech, and the meaning to be this, minorem Patre non dicis incarnatum Filium, Thou shalt not say that the Sonne being incarnate, is lesse than the Father: this it is, not to goe up by steps unto the Altar, Rupert. Thom. So also Gloss. interlinear. Qui gradus in Trinitate facium, &c. They which make degrees in the Trinity, doe ascend by steps unto the Altar. But this is somewhat farre fetched, neither is there any necessity to leave the literall sense: for the reason why afterward steps were made unto the Altar, was, for that then the use of linnen breeches was common, which now was rare, and vnto the Priestly garments, the Leuites afterward were appointed to put on such linnen breeches, when they ministred, chap. 28. Vsus fortasse talium vendum fuit introductus: The use of breeches was not yet brought in, &c. but was afterward enjoyned to the Priests, Lyran. And although, as some write, this fashion of garments to cover the secret parts was first invented by Semiramis the wife of Ninus King of Babylon, before Abrahams time, yet that custome was not common among the Israelites, Tostat. qu. 49.

Quest. XXVIII. Why they were forbidden to use steps vnto the Altar.

Vers. 26. That thy filthinesse be not discovered. 1. This then was the reason why they should not goe up by steps: lest that in the going up, by the flying abroad of their garments, their secret parts might be discovered: for sanctitati & pietati decorum & honestum conjungi debet: vnto sanctity and piety must be joyned comelinesse and honesty, Gallas. for the Ministers of God, committing any thing uncomely in Gods service, doe therein offend two wayes: both shewing their owne evill inclination, and beside, contumeliam inferunt ordini clericali, they bring a contumely and reproach upon the whole order, Tostat. quæst. 49. Yea among the Gentiles there was a comelinesse and decencie observed in their publike assemblies: whereupon that Law was made, linteamen sive subligaculo prædicti nemo, Let none come into the stage without his close garments: how much more ought all things to bee done with comelinesse and honesty in the sacred assemblies? Gallas. 2. Another reason was: Arrogantia & ambitiosa pompæ & gradum, qualis apud idolatras tum in vsu erat, Deo non placuit, &c. An arrogant and ambitious pompe in prayers, such as was in use among the Idolaters, was not pleasing unto God, Lippoman. 3. Likewise this was commanded for the further detestation of idolatry, that they should not any wayes resemble or imitate the uncleane and filthy fashions used in the idolatrous service of Priapus: when the Priest ascending up aloft by certaine staires, used in most beastly manner, turning himselfe toward the people, to discover and shew unto them his secret parts, to stirre them the more unto uncleane and beastly lust, Lyran. Tostat.

Quest. XXIX. Of the abominable Idoll of the Gentiles, called Priapus, and the filthy usages thereto belonging.

NOw this filthy and abominable Idoll Priapus, which was worshipped among the Gentiles, was taken up upon this occasion: 1. This Priapus was a young man of Hellespontus, who insolita magnitudine membri genitalis excedebat omnes, exceeded all other in the greatnesse of his secret parts: and being expelled thence as a corrupter of his country, went into Grecia, and there by wanton and unchaste women was made much of, and afterward they made him one of their gods. 2. As was their god, such was his sacrifice: for they used to offer unto him an Asse: and they that came to that abominable sacrifice, both men and women used to enterminglethemselves in caves and woods, and each with other wrought filthinesse: and upon this occasion they used to plant woods and groves by their Idols, that they might have fitter opportunity to use their beastly lust. 3. This Idoll Priapus some thinke was the same which is called Belphegor: and to the abominable sacrifices of this Idoll did the Madianitish women entice the Israelites, Numb. 25. who afterward fell unto the like Idolatry: for Asa his mother Maacha (whom he put downe) consecrated a grove to this Idoll Priapus, as Hierome translateth the word Miphletzeth, which signifieth an horrible or abominable Idoll, 1 King. 15.12. and he put downe the Sodomites, and effeminate persons, who as it seemeth were the worshippers of that Idoll: for they which were most beastly in their lust, thought they were best accepted of their god. So they which adored Venus, the more they were given to venery, the better they thought they served Venus: so that the more common the harlots and strumpets were, the more they thought they pleased their Goddesse Venus. The Lord therefore forbiddeth his people all resemblance or appearance of uncleannesse, because he would have them detest and abhorre the abominable fashions of the Heathen, Tostat. qu. 50.

Quest

QUEST. XXX. Why the ſecret parts are counted uncomely.

Thy filthineſſe, or nakedneſſe, &c. 1. The ſecret parts of man are not in their naturall uſe more uncleane or unſeemly than other organicall parts of the body: for they have their neceſſary uſe, both for the voiding of the ſuperfluous excrements of the body, and to ſerve for generation, and procreation: and our firſt parents, before they tranſgreſſed, were naked, and yet not aſhamed of their nakedneſſe. 2. But after ſinne entred, then theſe parts grew to be uncomely, becauſe of that inordinate motion and ſtirring which is in thoſe parts more than in any other: for by experience it is found, that the eyes, hands, feet and other parts are more obedient unto reaſon, than thoſe unruly parts: and it is harder for one to bridle luſt, than anger, or any other paſſion. 3. And herein appeareth the wiſdome of the Creator, that hath ſet theſe unſeemly parts in the middeſt of the body, that they might more eaſily be covered: whereas if they were the extreame parts, as where the head, hands, or feet are, they could not be ſo well hid: and beſide, the wiſdome of God herein is manifeſt, that our other parts, our eyes, hands, feet ſhould not be ſo unruly or diſordered: for then they alſo ſhould have ſeemed as uncomely: and ſo penitus inutiles redderentur, wee ſhould have beene altogether unprofitable, and unapt to doe any ſervice in the world, if our neceſſary and uſefull parts ſhould have had the like opinion of uncomelineſſe cleaving unto them. 4. Now ſeeing theſe parts being comely by nature, yet are made uncomely by ſinne: their beaſtly errour is to be abhorred which thinke it no more diſhoneſt to uſe the ſecret parts of nature openly, as well as any other members: ſuch were the Cynicall Philoſophers, which in the market place, and in the ſtreets thought it no more to exerciſe the act of generation: whereupon they were called Cynikes, becauſe therein they were like unto dogs: and Diogenes, the firſt founder and beginner of this beaſtly errour, was thereupon alſo called Cynicus, Toſtat. qu. 49.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the difference of the Law and the Goſpell.

Verſ. 18. WHen the people ſaw it, they fled, and ſtood afarre off. Here is ſet forth the difference of the Law and the Goſpell: for the Law worketh theſe two effects: Terrorem incutit, &c. It ſtriketh terrour by the manifeſtation of our ſinne: as the prodigall childe confeſſed, I am not worthy to be called thy ſonne. And, retrocedere facit, it cauſeth to goe afarre off. Hereupon the Publicane ſtood afarre off, ſmiting upon his breaſt, as not worthy to come neere into the preſence of God. But the Goſpell hath two other contrary effects: Conſolatur & allicit; It comforteth and allureth: as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, Come unto me all that are weary and laden, and I will eaſe you, Mat. 11.28. They that finde not the Law and the Goſpell to worke theſe ſeverall contrary effects, doe ſhew, that they underſtand neither, but are like unto thoſe in the Goſpell, of whom it is ſaid, We have piped unto you, and yee have not danced; wee have mourned unto you, and ye have not wept: ſuch can neither be wonne by the comfortable promiſes of the Goſpell, nor terrified by the heavy threatnings of the Law, Ferus. B. Babington.

2. Doct. One truth, one religion.

Verſ. 24. AN altar of earth ſhalt thou make.] Quod unum atque eundem cultum inter omnes eſſe vellet, &c. Becauſe he would have one and the ſame worſhip among all, he commanded but one altar. Iuſtaſ. He would have but one altar, to note one truth, and one religion: B. Babington; as the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 4.5. There is one Lord, one faith, one baptiſme.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Againſt Toſtatus, that it is no more lawfull to make images in the new Teſtament than it was under the old.

Verſ. 23. GOds of ſilver, or Gods of gold, yee ſhall make yee none, &c. Toſtatus alleaging theſe two reaſons why images were not allowed in the old Teſtament, becauſe Idolatry was then commonly practiſed among the Gentiles, and therefore the Lord would take away all occaſion thereof among his people: and for that no image could be made to repreſent God being viſible; yet he ſaith that it is lawfull to have images in the new Teſtament, nec obſtat aliquis prædictarum cauſarum, neither doth any of theſe reaſons hinder it: becauſe now there is no danger of Idolatry in making an image to repreſent God: Quia non eſt nunc generalis conſuetudo Gentium nos ad hoc inducens; There is not now a generall cuſtome of the Gentiles leading that way: and though in the old Teſtament there was nothing which could be expreſſed by an image, God being inviſible; yet in the new Teſtament Chriſt truly tooke our nature, quæ forma est conveniat, quia cuilibet noſtrûm ſimilis eſt; So that an image may well agree unto him, becauſe he is like unto any of us. Sunt etiam aliqui ſancti viri, &c. There are alſo holy men, whom though we worſhip not as Gods, yet we have them as interceſſors with God, and doe make pictures of them, to be had in remembrance of them, Toſtat. qu. 39.

Contra. 1. If the forbidding to make any graven image to repreſent God by, be a morall precept, as it cannot be denied, then it bindeth Chriſtians as well in the new Teſtament, as it did the Iſraelites in the old.

2. And there is more danger of idolatry now, than there was then: for the groſſe idolatry of the Gentiles

Gentiles was not so dangerous to imitate, nor so like to be followed, as the coloured superstition, and refined idolatry of those which professe themselves Catholikes and Christians: the grosse Pagane idolatry is now turned into counterfeit Christian imagery. And if the nations, which have not yet received the Christian Faith, as the Turkes, Mahometanes, Jewes, have renounced idolatry, it is a shame for Christians in profession to retaine it still. 3. Concerning the other reason, first the Godhead and divine nature is no more circumscriptible and to be pictured now, than it was in the old Testament. And as Christ in the new did take upon him the shape and forme of man, so also in the old he appeared in humane shape to the Fathers: why might they not then have pictured him, according to that appearance, as well as now? therefore in this respect there is no difference. But can they also by any image resemble Christs divine nature? If they cannot, it is a lying image: for either they make a picture of Christ as God and Man, and so they with Eutyches will confound the natures of Christ, making the Godhead circumscriptible: or else with Nestorius they must divide his person, making two Christs, one as he is Man, whom they cannot picture another, as he is God, who cannot by any image bee resembled. And whereas Tostatus himselfe misliketh that any image should be made of the Trinity, upon this reason: Quia cum nihil tale, ut est, exprimere personis divinis valeat, solius erroris Arriani occasio est, ut tres Deos essentialiter distinctos, &c. suspicemur. Because no picture can expresse any thing in the divine persons, as it is, and so it would only give occasion of the Arrian errour, that wee should imagine three Gods essentially distinguished, &c. this reason may be returned againe upon him: that seeing nothing of Christs divine nature can be expressed by a picture, such delineation and portraiting of Christ would give occasion of the Nestorian heresie, to make two Christs, one, which may be pictured, as he is man, and the other, which cannot be pictured, as he is God.

Secondly, concerning the images of Saints: Were there not glorious and renowned Saints in the old Testament, as the Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaack, Iacob, with the Prophets, Moses and Elias, with the rest, as the Apostles and Evangelists, and holy Martyrs under the New? Why then was it not as lawfull to make images and visible representations of the Saints then, as now? Therefore herein there is no difference betweene those times, and these: and so, notwithstanding all these shifts and evasions, it is found to bee no more lawfull to have Images and pictures for religious uses now, than it was then.

2. Confut. Against the grossenesse of idolatrie.

But this place which forbiddeth any Gods of silver or gold to bee made, maketh strongly against all adoration of such Images, which by so doing they make their Gods. And whereas the Lord saith: Ye shall not make with me: Hac voce ostendit alios sibi deos adjungi, cum eriguntur simulacra: By this word he sheweth, that other Gods are joyned with him, when as Images are erected, &c. For when they doe bow before them, and make their prayers, and offer unto them, and give that unto dumbe Idols, which belongeth unto God, they doe in effect make Images of silver and gold, their Gods. Those reasons which Damascene urgeth against the Idols of the Pagans, may be also enforced against the superstitious Images of the Romanists. 1. Stulte, pretiosius est tuo idolo animal quod offertur ei: nam idolum homo fecit, animal Deus creavit, &c. Thou foole, that beast is more precious than thine Idoll which thou offerest unto it: for thou madest the Idoll, but God created the beast. 2. Deum quis emit, Deum quis vendit, &c. Who hath bought God, or who hath sold God? but thine Idols are sold, some for a greater price, some for lesse. 3. Quomodo Deus vocatur, qui non movetur? How is that called God, which is not moved? Doest thou not see, how if an Image fit, it never standeth, and standing it never sitteth? 4. Antiquior es tu deo tefacto, &c. Thou art more ancient than the god which thou makest: but God was before all. 5. Confidis teipsum, cum sis homo, Deum posse facere, &c. Thou perswadest thy selfe, that thou being a man, canst make God: but man was created and made by God, he then cannot be a maker of his God. 6. Nisi tibi custodes assiderent, deum tu perderes, &c. Unlesse thou shouldest set watchmen by, thou mightest lose thy God: but God is our keeper, God hath no need of our keeping. And so he concludeth, Amentiæ non pietatis sunt vestra opera, &c. Your workes then are workes of madnesse, rather than piety: Damascen in histor. Barlaam & Iosaphat.

3. Confut. Against those which say the Godhead may be comprehended.

Vers. 21. Moses drew neere unto the darknesse where God was, &c. This sheweth that in respect of God is in darknesse, because his divine nature and essence is of us incomprehensible: for himselfe he dwelleth in light inaccessible, which none can attaine unto, 1 Tim. 6.16. as also the Evangelist saith, No man hath seene God at any time, Ioh. 1.18. This then evidently convinceth the errour of the Romanists, that affirmed, They comprehended the very essence of God: which errour he strongly favoureth who is bold to say, That there is not any thing of God, which his Saints shall not see, that we shall comprehend Christ in all his glory; that Paul being rapt into the third heaven, saw the very essence of God; that we shall see the Godhead of Christ in plaine manner, and in perfect measure. Against these bold assertions, I will oppose the Theologicall conclusions of Thomas Aquin concerning this matter: Nullum intellectum creatum pervenire ad eum accedere, &c. No created understanding can come neere unto God: Now the understanding of two wayes come to the knowledge of the nature of another: Scilicet, ut attingat, & comprehendat, to attaine unto it, and to comprehend it: it is impossible that the intellectuall part should come to comprehend God; seeing he is infinitè cognoscibilis, infinitely to be knowne; Virtus autem intellectiva est finita; But the power of the understanding, or intelligence created is finite, &c. how then can that which is finite, comprehend that which is infinite? Ideo etiam intellectus Christi, non comprehendit Deum, &c. Yea even the understanding of Christ, that is, as hee is man, doth not comprehend God. The another way to know God, ſcilicet attingendo Deum, by attaining or comming neere unto him. And this way no created intelligence can attaine, per propria naturalia, by the naturall power, to know that which is God: and the reaſon is, Quia nulla potentia poteſt in aliquid altius ſuo objecto, &c. Becauſe no power can reach any thing in that which is higher than the object: now God is higher than the object of our underſtanding. Thomas proceedeth thus: A thing is ſaid to be inviſible two wayes, Uno modo propter defectum ipſius rei; alio modo propter excedentiam, ut ſol; One way becauſe of the defect in it ſelfe, as darke and ſhadowed places; another, becauſe of the excellencie thereof, as the Sunne is to our eye; and ſo God is inviſible. But how is God inacceſſible? If we underſtand the comprehenſion of God, ſo it is true even of the Angels (that is, that they comprehend him not) for ſo God only comprehendeth himſelfe: ſi de viſione attingitur, &c. if we underſtand the Apoſtle to ſpeake of the viſion attaining, not comprehending, ſo it is underſtood three wayes: 1. Nemo vidit oculo corporali, No man hath ſeene God with the bodily eye: 2. Secundum eſſentiam oculo mentis vivens in carne niſi Chriſtus, &c. And according to his eſſence, no man living in the fleſh, hath ſeene him with the eye of the minde, but Chriſt, as the Lord ſaith, Exod. 33. There ſhall no man ſee mee and live. 3. Nemo vidit, quid eſt Deus, per ſeipſum, No man hath ſeene what God is by himſelfe, that is, by his owne power, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith to Peter, Fleſh and blood hath not revealed this unto thee, &c. Matth. 16. Sic Thomas in 1. Timoth. cap. 6. lect. 3.

R. Parkes his strong positions of comprehending the Godhead: Apolog. pag. 204. 209.

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Not to contemne or deſpiſe the ordinary miniſtery.

v. 19. Talke thou with us, and we will heare. This both meeteth with their curioſity and ignorant folly, that ſay, O if I might heare God ſpeake himſelfe, I ſhould be much moved: little doe they conceive, that thus ſpeake, their owne weakneſſe, or the Majeſty of God: for this people was not able to endure to heare the mighty voice of God, B. Babington. Beſide, this ſheweth the unthankfulneſſe of man, in not acknowledging the Lords mercy, in appointing the miniſtery of man like unto our ſelves, for our inſtruction and comfort; and their prophaneneſſe which contemne ſo neceſſary a meane, without which they muſt either be left altogether without a guide, or be overwhelmed with the Majeſty of God. Gal.

2. Obſerv. How fearefull the day of judgement ſhall be.

Let not God talke with us, leſt wee dye. If the Law was ſo terrible when it was given, how fearefull is that day like to be, when God ſhall come to judge the breaches and tranſgreſſions of his Law? if the breaking of the precept did ſtrike ſuch feare, the rendring of judgement cannot bee without great horror. B. Babington. Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, Knowing the terrour of the Lord, wee perſwade men, &c. 2 Cor. 5. 11.

3. Obſerv. Againſt curioſitie.

v. 21. Moſes drew neere to the darkneſſe, &c. This ſheweth that God is incomprehenſible, therefore we muſt be ſober, and modeſt, and humble, in ſpeaking or writing of God. This Simonides did, who being asked of Hiero what God was, firſt asked three dayes, then ſix, then double againe, to think of it, and in the end gave over, as being not able to ſearch it out, B. Babing. So the Apoſtle exhorteth, That no man preſume to underſtand above that which is meet to underſtand, but that he underſtand according to ſobrietie, Rom. 12. 3.

CHAP. XXI.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN the former Chapter was propounded the Morall law chiefly, mixed with ceremoniall conſtitutions in the end of the Chapter: now follow the Judiciall lawes, unto the 10. verſe of the 23. Chapter: from thence unto the 20. verſe are propounded certaine ceremoniall orders in generall, as touching ſacrifices and their feaſts: the more ſpeciall and particular preſcriptions concerning ceremonies, are at large ſet forth in the booke of Leviticus.

This Chapter conſiſteth of three parts: The firſt is of the manumiſſion and ſetting at liberty Hebrew ſervants, both men and women, unto verſ. 12. Concerning the man ſervant, theſe Lawes are given: 1. How long he ſhall ſerve, verſ. 2. 2. When his wife is to goe out with him, when not, verſ. 3, 4. 3. What ſhall be done to the ſervant that will not be made free, verſ. 5. to verſ. 7. Concerning the maid ſervant: 1. In what condition ſhe may be ſold to her maſter, not to be ſold againe to a ſtranger, verſ. 7, 8. 2. What ſhall be done unto her, if ſhe be betrothed to his ſonne, verſ. 9. 3. What muſt be performed to her, if he take another wife, verſ. 10. 4. What muſt be done if he doe not performe theſe things, verſ. 11.

Secondly, there follow certaine mulcts and puniſhments for divers offences committed by man, as of murther, verſ. 12, 13, 14. ſmiting of parents, verſ. 15. ſtealing of men, verſ. 16. curſing of parents, verſ. 17.

leaving

hurting of a man, *verſ.*19.18. beating of ſervants to death, verſ. 18,19. hurting of women with childe *verſ.*22. blemiſhing of ſervants in their eye, tooth, &c. *verſ.*24. to 28.

Thirdly, of miſchiefe and dammages, that are occaſioned by other mens default: as by their ox that uſeth to puſh and goare man or woman, verſ. 28. to 33. or hurteth anothers oxe, verſ. 35,36. and of dammages which are cauſed by the digging of pits and wells, *verſ.*33,34.

2. The divers readings.

I. A. P. Verſ.3. If he came with his body. A.P. alone, with his body. I. If he came in ſingle. V. or, alone. B.G.C. The ſenſe is kept, not the word, better than, with what garment he entred, &c. L. but the word guph, ſignifieth a body, as gupha in the feminine is taken, *Exod.*21.3.

I.B.G. cum eater. Verſ.7. She ſhall not goe out as men ſervants. B.G.V.I. cum eater. not, as maids. S.L.

I.V.A. Verſ.8. Who hath not betrothed her. I.V.A.P. better than, betrothed her. B.G.C.L.S. for here the negative, לא, lo, is omitted.

I. Verſ.8. In dealing deceitfully, or perfidiouſly with her. I. or, treſpaſſing againſt her. A. better than, in deſpiſing her. B.G.C.L.S. for bagadh, ſignifieth properly to deceive, and breake covenant, as *Malach.*2.10. the meaning is, he hath broken appointment of marriage with her.

I.A. Verſ.10. Her rayment, and dwelling, or, habitation. I.A. converſation. S. better than, price of her chaſtity or, recompence of her virginity. G. or, duty of marriage. B.V. lying with her. C. her time. P. gheuah of gha ſignifieth an habitation or dwelling.

I.A. Verſ.16. And it be found in his hand. I.A.P.C.V.G. that is, the perſon which he hath ſtollen, better than if it be proved upon him. B. or, if he be found in it. S. if he be convicted of the fault. L.

I.B.V.G. Verſ.22. If no deſtruction follow. B.V.I. or, death. G. A. P.C. better than, if the child come forth without faſhion. S. or, but ſhe liveth. L. for it is as well underſtood of the infant, as of the mother, if neither of them dye, &c.

2. Queſtions diſcuſſed.

Quest. I. Of the neceſſity of the Indiciall lawes.

Verſ.1. These are the judgements, &c. 1. After the Morall law followeth the Judicials: for the Civil law iſſueth out of the Morall law, which is the fountaine and foundation of all other Lawes. And as the Morall law is principally grounded upon the Law of Nature: ſo in the next place, the Civil law alſo floweth from the ſame fountaine, as it may appeare by the generall uſe thereof: ſeeing no common-wealth can ſtand without Civill and Judiciall conſtitutions, Borrh. 2. And Moſes having propounded the Lawes which binde in conſcience, ſo now he ſetteth forth the Penall lawes, whereby the obſtinacie of men might be reſtrained: for if a man were left to himſelfe: Nemo eſt qui non ſuo arbitrio malit vivere, there is none that had not rather live as he liſt himſelfe, Galaſ. 3. Therefore becauſe it might fall out that all would not be obedient to the Morall precepts, neceſſarium fuit preſcribere, &c. it was neceſſary to preſcribe what puniſhment every tranſgreſſor of the Law ſhould be ſubject unto, Ruperus.

Quest. II. The difference of the Morall, Indiciall, and Ceremoniall lawes.

These judgements. 1. The Judiciall lawes, Ceremoniall and Morall, are thus diſtinguiſhed: ſome precepts have vim obligandi ex ipſo dictamine rationis, power to binde by the very inducement of naturall reaſon, though there were no other Law to enforce them, ſuch are the morall precepts: ſome Lawes are not abſolutely binde by the inſtinct and perſwaſion of naturall reaſon: ſed ex inſtitutione divina vel humana, but by a divine and humane inſtitution: which, if they concerne ſuch things as appertaine to God, are ceremonials: if they reſpect the ordering of men, and directing of humane affaires, they are Judiciall lawes: two things then are required in Judiciall lawes, that they concerne ordinationem hominum, the ordering and directing of men, and that they doe binde, non ex ſola ratione, ſed ex inſtitutione, not by reaſon onely, but by the inſtitution, *Thom.*1.2. *qu.*104. art. 1. in Cor. 2. Now there are foure ſorts of Judiciall lawes, one of the Prince toward the ſubjects, another of the Citizens among themſelves, the third of the Citizens toward ſtrangers, and the fourth concerning domeſticall duties, as of the fathers, maſters, husbands, toward their children, ſervants, wives, Thomas.

Quest. III. How the Ceremonials are aboliſhed.

Further, concerning the validity of the Ceremoniall law: 1. The Ceremonies were of two ſorts, either ſuch as were meerely figurative, ſignifying ſuch things as were to be performed in Chriſt, as Circumciſion, and the paſchall Lambe, which are in no reſpect to be obſerved: for this were in a manner to crucifie Chriſt to be come: if the figures ſhould ſtill remaine in uſe, then the body is yet to be expected. 2. There was another ſort of ceremonies, which doe not directly concerne the ſignification of Chriſt to come, but only ſhewed, munditiam populi illius & ſanitatem, the cleanlineſſe and health of that people, as to abſtaine from ſwines fleſh: which if one ſhould now obſerve, as it was commanded in the Law, he ſinneth: but if for ſome other end, as for his health, or ſuch like, he offendeth not, *Teſtatus quaſt.*1. 3. Some Ceremonies were partly figurative of things to come, and ſignificative of ſome ſpirituall thing: partly they had ſome other politick end and uſe, which not in reſpect of the figure and type, but in ſome other re-may upon a new inſtitution be obſerved under the Goſpell: as the ſhew-bread or face bread, as it was a figure of Chriſt, is now no more uſed: but yet bread by Chriſts inſtitution is ſtill retained in the Euchariſt as repreſentative of the body of Chriſt. So they under the Law uſed waſhing with water, to ſignifie the inward cleanſing: and now alſo in the new Teſtament, upon a new ordinance, it is uſed as the outward element in Baptiſme. So the obſervation of the Sabbath, the paying of tithes, Churches garments, Church-muſicke, and the like were partly ceremoniall, partly morall, belonging to the ſervice of God, to the maintenance of Miniſters, to externall decencie and comelineſſe: in which reſpect, though the ceremoniall uſe be ceaſed, they may be retained ſtill, all things being done without offence, and to edification, according to the Apoſtles rule. 4. But here I cannot let paſſe untouched an unſound aſſertion of Lyranus, whom conſenteth Lippoman: that thurificatio, quæ de cæremonialibus erat, in nova lege remanet: that burning and offering of incenſe, being one of the ceremonials of the old Law, yet remaineth in the new, becauſe it ſignified nothing to come, but only ſhewed the devotion of the people in the worſhip of God, which is greater in the new Teſtament than in the old. Contra. 1. The offering of incenſe was a neceſſarie appurtenance to the externall ſacrifices of the Law, it did continually wait and attend upon them: and the ſacrifices did prefigure the holy ſacrifice of attonement, and paſſion of our bleſſed Saviour upon the croſſe: ſo the incenſe did betoken the ſweet ſavour of that ſacrifice, and the acceptance thereof with God: as Saint Paul ſheweth, that Chriſt hath given himſelfe for us an offering and a ſacrifice, of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour unto God, Epheſ. 5. 2. Beſide, the oblation of incenſe did ſhadow forth the mediation of Chriſt in offering up the prayers of the Saints, as Revel. 8. 3. Much odors were given to the Angel that had a golden cenſer, to offer with the prayers of the Saints: and hereunto alludeth the Prophet David, when he ſaith, Let my prayer be directed in thy ſight, as incenſe, Pſal. 141. 2. It is evident then, that the incenſe of the old Law was figurative, and ſignificative of things to come. 2. And true it is, that the inward and ſpirituall devotion is more and greater in the new Teſtament, than it was in the old, but not the externall: for they had more outward ceremonies and rites preſcribed, as ſignes of their devotion, than are now required under the Goſpell: for now they that worſhip God, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and truth, Ioh. 4. 24.

Oblation of incenſe, a meere ceremony of the old Law, and therefore cannot be retained under the Goſpell.

QUEST. IV. How farre the Iudicials are now to be retained.

Further, concerning the Judicials of Moſes: 1. They doe much differ in reſpect of their obſervation from the Ceremonials: for theſe are ſo abrogated, as that now to obſerve the figures and types of the old Teſtament, were great impiety: for all ſuch things were obſerved then, vel expreſsè, vel tacitè ſub confeſſione Meſſiæ futuri, &c. either expreſly or cloſely under proteſtation of the Meſſiah to come: now therefore to obſerve them, were to proteſt, Chriſtum nondum veniſſe, that Chriſt were not yet come. But it is not ſo with the Judicials, for they being concluſions and rules of juſtice grounded upon the Law of nature, and firſt given for the conſervation of the peace, and politike ſtate of that Common-wealth, and not preſcribed for any ſignification, or prefiguring of things to come; they may now be ſo farre forth obſerved, as they are found fitting and agreeable unto the ſtate and condition of the people: Sic fere Toſtat. qu. 2. Two wayes is a precept ſaid to be figurale, figurative: one way, when it is principally inſtituted to figure ſomewhat, ſuch were the ceremoniall precepts: another, ex conſequenti, by a certaine conſequent; and ſo are the Judicials after a ſort figurative, becauſe they belonged unto that people, cujus ſtatus erat figuralis, whoſe ſtate was figurative: Sic Thom. Lippom. To bee figurative in this ſenſe, letteth not, but the Judicials may be retained now, ſeeing they were not appointed or ordained to prefigure any thing, as the Ceremonials were. 3. But here two ſtrange poſitions come to be examined: the one is of Lippoman: That to obſerve the Judicials, tanquam ex lege veteri obligatoria, eſſet mortiferum, as binding out of the old Law, were a deadly ſinne. Toſtatus alſo ſaith: We receive the judiciall precepts given tanquam dicta ſapientis viri, &c. as the ſayings of ſome wiſe man, not as of a lawgiver binding us to the obſervation thereof: like as the Romans borrowed their Lawes of the wiſe Grecians, Toſtat. qu. 1. 1. The old Law in the conſtituting of the Judicials was grounded upon the Law of equity: in this rule of equity it is no ſinne to follow now: therefore it is no ſinne to follow the rules of the old Law, they are grounded upon equity and juſtice: nay therein to depart from them, were rather tranſgreſſion. 2. S. Iames ſaith, chap. 4. 12. There is one Lawgiver, which is able to ſave and deſtroy: therefore unto him doth it rather belong to give direction, for what offences mans life is to be ſaved, and other puniſhment to be afflicted, and for what his life is to bee taken away, than unto that perfit and ſoveraigne Lawgiver, who is the author and giver of life, and at whoſe will and pleaſure only mans life is taken away? Say therefore that the Judicials appointed by God, are to be obſerved now only as the ſayings of a wiſe man, not as of a Lawgiver, is both to derogate from Gods authority, who is the only ſufficient Lawgiver, and from the ſufficiencie of his law (which is more perfect than any humane conſtitutions whatſoever) making theſe Judicials but equall unto the ſayings of other wiſe men. But this queſtion hath beene already handled at large before, in the generall queſtions in chap. 1. Exod.

Moſes Judicials rather to be imitated, than any other humane conſtitutions.

QUEST. V. Why theſe Lawes are called judgements.

Theſe are the judgements. 1. He ſaith not, Dei judicia, ſed abſolutè judicia, the judgements of God, but abſolutely judgements: for he which obſerved theſe, was not yet juſt before God, though hee were before men, Lippoman. 2. This word judgement in the ſingular ſignifieth not, as judgements in the plurall: for judgement in the ſingular for the moſt part ſignifieth condemnation: but in the plurall it ſignifieth rem vindictam, quàm innocentis defenſionem; as well the revenge and puniſhment of the guilty, as the defence of the innocent, Rupertus. 3. This word judgement is taken three wayes: firſt it ſignifieth fieth the act of the judgement and understanding, which determineth what is meet and convenient to be done: and so it is as the fountaine and beginning whence good Lawes proceed: Lex enim per judicium facta est; for the Law is made out of judgement. Secondly, it is taken pro ipsa exhibitione justitiæ, for the very exhibiting and administration of justice, which is the execution of the Lawes. Thirdly, it is taken pro lege, secundum quam judicandum est, for the Law it selfe, according to the which judgement is given: and in this signification is the word used here, Tostat. qu.3.

Quest. VI. How Moses propounded these Lawes, by speaking or by writing.

Vers.1. Which thou shalt set before them, or propound unto them. 1. Augustine saith: Notanda est locutio, &c. The manner of speech is here to be observed: this is said to Moses, Thou shalt propound, &c. but the rest that followeth, If thou shalt buy, &c. vers. 2. is spoken to the people, as unto Moses: Locut.91. in Exod. 2. These Lawes Ab. Ezra saith might be propounded two wayes unto the people, either by pronouncing them, or by writing of them. But it is evident, *chap.*24.3. that first Moses told all these Lawes by word of mouth, before he writ them: and he had first the peoples consent unto them: for they were no Lawes, till the people had received them, and submitted themselves unto them. And therefore as soone as Moses had propounded them, *the people answered with one voice, All the things which the Lord hath said, will we doe, chap.*24.3. Tostat. qu.3.

Quest. VII. Why the Israelites were called Hebrewes.

Vers.2. If thou buy an Hebrew servant, &c. This was a peculiar name to the Israelites to be called Hebrewes: 1. which name is not derived of Abraham, as some thinke: for the name Hebrew beginneth with the letter ע ain: the name of Abraham with א aleph: and beside, there were other nations that came of Abraham, as the Edomites, Ismaelites, Amalekites, Midianites, which should also for that reason have beene called Hebrewes. 2. Neither is this name derived of the signification thereof which signifieth to passe over: that therefore they should be so called, because sometime they dwelt beyond the river in Mesopotamia, and came over the river: for Lot came over as well as Abraham, and yet his posterity, the Moabites, and Ammonites, were not called Hebrewes. 3. Therefore they are so called of Heber, not only because they were of him descended: for other nations which came of Iokan the second sonne of Heber, descended of him, yet were not called Hebrewes: neither was this name given them, in respect of the holinesse and true worship of God, which Heber professed: for in that sense they might rather have beene called by Abrahams name, who is famous in Scripture for his faith and obedience: but the reason of this name is, because the Hebrew language, which was peculiar and proper to the Israelites, was preserved in the family of Heber, when the tongues were divided at the destruction of Babel: and so although many other nations did spring out of Hebers family, yet it was so disposed by Gods providence, that the true worship of God, together with the Hebrew tongue, should be preserved only among the righteous seed. It is no other like, but that in Abrahams house Ismael as well as Isaac, and in Isaacks house, Esau as well as Iacob spake Hebrew while they lived together: but afterward, when Ismael and Esau were departed from their fathers house, they spake the tongue and language of the nations, to whom they joyned themselves, Tostat. qu.4.

Quest. VIII. How the Hebrewes became servants.

An Hebrew servant. 1. The Israelites had two kindes of servants: some were of other nations; most of the servants which the Romans had were such: and these servants they might keep a longer time than for six yeeres: their servitude was perpetuall, and hereditary both of themselves and their children: the other kinde of servants was of their owne nation, for whose benefit this Law is made Tostat. Oleaster. 2. Some thinke that this Law is made concerning such servants being Hebrewes, which were bought of the Gentiles: but R. Salomon thinketh better, that it is a generall Law concerning servants that were Hebrewes, howsoever they came to be servants, Ex Lyrano. 3. The Hebrewes became servants by these wayes: 1. If any man did steale, and had not wherewithall to make satisfaction, he was to be sold by the Judges, and so the theft to be made good, *Exod.*22.3. 2. If any did sell himselfe through poverty, *Deut.*15.12. or a man sell his sonne or daughter, chap. 21.7. or when any were taken to be servants and bondmen for debt: as 2 *King.*4.2. Simler. 3. Or when any having a servant, and being deceived had no longer any use or service for him, he might sell him over unto another, Lyran. 4. There might be also a fourth occasion of servitude; namely, when in the civill warres, which were among the Israelites as when the kingdome was divided after Salomons dayes, they did take any Hebrewes captives, or prisoners, they afterwards became their servants, Simler.

Quest. IX. The difference betweene Hebrew servants and strangers.

NOw the condition of an Hebrew servant was more tolerable than of other servants, which were strange nations, in these two respects: 1. Their service was not so hard, nor so cruell, Levit. 25. Thou shalt not rule over him cruelly. And before, vers. 39. Thou shalt not compell him to serve as a bondservant, but as an hired servant, and as a sojourner he shall be with thee: that is, his service should bee easie and gentle, and their entertainment good, as when one is hired: yet herein the condition of such servants differed from an hireling: the servant was bound generally, during his service, to doe any worke which his master enjoyned him: but the hireling was onely to doe that worke, for the which he was hired: the hireling was free, and at his owne disposition, he could not be set over to another; but so might the be sold over during the time of his service, being not his owne man, but to be disposed of at the will of his master, Tostat. quæst. 5. 2. The Hebrew servants differed from others in the time of their service, which was not to exceed six yeeres: whereas the bondage and servitude of strangers was perpetuall, Ibidem. Such as they were commanded by the Law to have, Levit. 25. 44. Thy bond servant, and thy bondmaid which thou shalt have, shall be of the Heathen which are round about you: as were the Canaanites, upon whom was laid the curse of perpetuall bondage or servitude, Gen. 9. 25. Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be to his brethren.

QUEST. X. Of three kindes of liberty, and how servitude is agreeable to the Law of Nature.

In the next it will further be demanded, whether servitude be agreeable to the Law of nature, and how it commeth to passe, that the Lord suffred the Israelites being a free people, to be servants one unto others. For the deciding of this doubt, there is a threefold kinde of liberty to be considered, a naturall, civill, and spirituall. 1. The naturall liberty I call that, wherein Adam was created, being subdued to no bondage, neither spirituall of sinne, nor corporall in any outward subjection to any creature: but had a freedome of will, and was made Lord of his affections within, that he needed not to have sinned, if he would himselfe: so he had the dominion of the creatures given unto him. This originall liberty of nature considered, servitude and bondage was brought in as a punishment of sinne, and so is sinfull, and of it selfe agreeable to the Law of nature. 2. But now since Adams fall, there is another kinde of civill liberty, and civill servitude opposite unto it. Civill liberty is defined to be a naturall faculty for every man to doe as himselfe liketh: nisi si quid vis aut jure prohibetur. unlesse one be hindred by force or in right; for that is no true liberty for a man against right, to doe what him listeth: and the contrariwise denieth unto a man power, vivendi ut velit secundum naturam; to live as he would live unto nature. Now this servitude simply accordeth not with nature, as the Apostle saith, If yet thou mayest be free, use it rather, 1 Cor. 7. 21. shewing that every one by nature desireth liberty and freedome: but after a sort this servitude is agreeable to nature, not simply, or of it selfe, but as other punishments are said to be naturall, as tending to the maintenance of society among men, which is properly naturall. And if it be objected, why since all men are fallen in Adam, and so brought into subjection, why doe they not become not servants: the answer is, that two things must be considered in this our corrupt estate, the one is the Law of corruption, brought in by sinne, the other the goodnesse of God: that although all men are subject by sinne to the same bondage and corruption, yet the goodnesse of God qualifieth this slavish condition of nature, as that some doe enjoy an outward liberty and freedome: like as in the naturall faculties of the soule, the Lord giveth unto some more light of understanding, dexterity of wit, soundnesse of judgement, and other naturall gifts, than unto others. 3. The spirituall liberty is wrought in us by grace in Christ, which is from the subjection of sinne, and malediction of the Law; whereby our conscience is no more terrified with slavish feare, but we are at peace with God: and beside, by this spirituall liberty, the faithfull have restored unto them the dominion over all creatures; that though they have not actuall possession, yet in a spirituall right, all things are theirs, whether the world, life, death, things present or things to come, 1 Cor. 3. 22. and all things worke to the best, to those that love God, Rom. 8. Which may very well stand together, externall servitude, and spirituall freedome: it is possible for one to be a freeman to God, and yet a servant in the world, and another to be a bondman to sinne, and yet free in the world: for there are divers objects of these two kindes of liberty and bondage; the outward freedome respecteth this life and state, the free use of riches, and pleasures of this life: the spirituall and externall freedome hath set before it the salvation of the soule, the favour of God, and life eternall. Christian religion then overthroweth not the diversity of degrees among men: But as Christ, though he had his spirituall right, free from all taxes and impositions, yet lest he should offend, payed poll money, Matth. 17. so Christians, though they are made free by faith in the Sonne, yet for the maintenance of mutuall love, and avoiding of offence, in disturbing the temporall State, they are bound as well as others to be subject unto the powers of this world: Et potestatibus omnibus nos subjicit in re humana qui eleutheros quibus cum sumus, subditos esse: In respect of that man of ours which is subject to the elements of the world, consisteth, Bernh.

QUEST. XI. How these six yeeres are to be accounted.

HE shall serve thee six yeeres, in the seventh he shall, &c. Some doe expound this De publico & generali anno septimo, of the publike and generall seventh yeere, some of the private, as every man's service began, Lippoman. But that it is to be understood of the publike yeere of intermission, it may appeare by these reasons: 1. Because, whereas every seventh yeere was appointed a yeere of intermission, to forbeare tilling of the ground, or exacting of debts, Levit. 25. Deut. 15. if every man should keepe the yeere of remission of servants in his owne house, and not observe the generall and solemne yeere of remission, this would have brought in and bred a great confusion, Tostat. 2. This also appeareth by the ordinance of the great yeere of remission, which was in the fiftieth yeere: for there the buying of possessions or fields was not to be counted from the time of such buying, but from the yeere of Jubile, for the fruits or fields remained still to the Jubile, so was the price to be valued, Levit. 25. Tostatus, Iunius, and that beside, seeing in the seventh yeere, there was a releasing of debts, much more of service: for that might exact service of his servant, and not his debt of his debter, mens persons should bee held dearer than their substance, which is not to be admitted, Iun. in Deut. 15. versic. 12. 4. So then the meaning is not that every seventh of the Hebrews was necessarily to serve six yeeres; for it might so fall out, that that he should serve but one, if he were bought immediatly before the yeere of Jubile, but that he should not at any time serve above six yeeres, Tostat.

Quest. XII. The reason why they ought to set their servants free.

HE shall goe out free for nothing. 1. That is, he shall pay nothing for his liberty, because he is made free by the Law: nor yet for any thing else. As if the servant had lien sicke any time of the yeeres of his service, and his master had beene at cost in healing of him; his master in this case was to expect no recompence, because his servant was as his possession, even as the oxe or asse, purchased for his profit, and therefore his master was to stand to the losse of it, Tostat. qu. 6. 2. And the reasons why this favour was to be shewed unto the Hebrewes being servants, were these: 1. The Lord saith, For they are my servants which I brought out of the land of Egypt, Levit. 25. 42. that is, he doth not only put them in minde of the generall benefit, of their deliverance out of the bondage and servitude of Egypt, the remembrance whereof ought to make them kinde and mercifull to their servants the Hebrewes, which were partakers of the same common deliverance: But the Lord likewise pleadeth his right and interest in them, saying, They are my servants: so that although the Lord did somewhat depart from his owne right, in suffring of them to serve six yeeres, in regard of their necessity, yet if they should hold them in perpetuall servitude, they should usurpe upon the Lords right, seeing they were his servants.

2. Another reason is taken from the manner and condition of their service, Deut. 15. 18. He hath served six yeeres, which is the double worth of an hired servant: which is so said, either because the service of six yeeres is double to the time of hired servants, who used to covenant from three yeeres to three yeeres, Vatab. Or rather because their workes were more laborious than were the hired servants, Iun. For he was to doe his worke, for the which he was hired, and no more: but the other, when he had done in his businesse in the field, came home, and ministred to his master first, before hee did eat himselfe, Luk. 17. 8. And they only served not their master by day, but by night they kept their flockes in the field, as is evident in the example of Iacob, Gen. 31. 40. Simler. 3. A third reason is taken from a promise of blessing: The Lord thy God shall blesse thee in all that thou doest, Deut. 15. 18. Simler.

3. Though this Law concerning the freedome of servants, did specially concerne the policy of the Jewes, and so belongeth not unto us, for now servants are not bought and sold among Christians in the Romane Empire, but only hired, Osiander. Yet the equity of this Law doth binde us, that all they which have others in subjection under them, should use their authority moderately and in mercy, Gal. 4. The word here used, chophshi, interpreted free, signifieth also solitarie, because servants were not solitary, or alone by themselves in the house, but attended on their masters: they which were free, were solitary and by themselves, giving no attendance upon any, Oleaster.

Quest. XIII. Why the space of six yeeres is limited for their service.

BUt concerning the limiting of the space of six yeeres for service, and the appointing of the seventh for liberty, what might be the reason thereof, thus it is diversly scanned. 1. Some doe thus moralize it: by six yeeres, they understand the perfection of the active life, because in six dayes the Lord made the world; hee that will come unto contemplation, must first approve himselfe in action, Lyran. 1. Iohn maketh this application, in sex etatibus hujus seculi servietes, &c. when wee have served the six ages of this world, in the seventh, which is the eternall Sabbath, we shall be free. 3. But I preferre rather Rupertus conjecture, that this privilege of going out free in the seventh yeere, and serving six, was proper to the Hebrewes: Quia videlicet pater eorum Iacob sex annis pro gregibus Laban servivit, &c. Because Iacob their father served six yeeres for Labans flockes, and went out free in the seventh, chusing rather to sojourne with his fathers, Abraham and Isaack, than to serve among his kindred for more profit: therefore, hanc ingenuitatem patris illam posteris apud Dominum thesaurizavit: This ingenuous minde of their father to treasure up this privilege before the Lord, for his posterity, that none should be compelled to serve above six yeeres: Rupert. lib. 3. in Exod. cap. 35. 4. But the best reason of all is, because as the Lord had from the beginning given them a Sabbath of dayes, which was the seventh day of rest: so also he gave them a Sabbath of yeeres, that every seventh yeere the land should rest, and servants should rest from their labour, and debters from their creditors: and they had also a Sabbath of seven times seven yeeres precisely, that when they had counted seven times seven yeeres, then the fiftieth yeere should be the great yeere of remission, the yeere of Jubile, which was a lively figure of that acceptable time of generall remission, at the comming of the Messiah.

Quest. XIV. How the servant is said to come in with his body, and to goe out with his body.

Vers. 3. If he came himselfe alone. 1. Some read, If he came with his garment, he shall goe out with his garment: Hieron. Hieron. Lyran. But the word is gaph, which signifieth a body, not gaph a wing or a garment: the true reading therefore is, If he came with his body, that is, alone without either the body of his wife or children, Oleaster. And so read both the Chalde and Septuagint, If he entred alone, he shall goe out alone. 2. But this case is excepted, that if he in the time of service should marry a free woman, and a maid servant given him by his master, in this case the free woman should not lose her freedome, but should goe out with her husband, Tostat. qu. 7. 3. And beside, as if he brought a wife with him, he went out with his wife, so by the like reason, if he had children before, they should be free likewise, Iun. if he should get children during his service, by a wife married before his service, those children also should goe out with him, and not remaine with his master: partus sequitur ventrem, the childe follow-the condition of the mother, Toſtat. quæſt.6. 4. And of the former reading, If he come in with his body, rather than, with his garment, theſe two reaſons are given: 1. Becauſe it is not like that the ſame garment with the which he entred could continue ſix yeeres, Pelican. 2. And the ſervant was not to bee ſent out with his garment alone, but with a liberall reward of ſheepe, corne and wine, *Deut.*15.14. Simler. 3. Beſide, the next clauſe confirmeth this reading: but If he were married, &c. ſo to come in alone, is to come without a wife or children, Iun.

QUEST. XV. What manner of wife the maſter was to give to his ſervant.

Verſ. 4. IF his maſter have given him a wife. 1. Some indifferently underſtand any maid ſervant, whether a ſtranger, or an Hebreweſſe, and that ſuch wife and her children ſhall be her maſters, till the time of ſervitude come out, Genevenſ. But the maſter had no power to give an Hebreweſſe maid to his ſervant to wife, but he muſt either take her himſelfe, or give her to his ſonne, *verſ.*7,8. Piſcat. Toſtat. It is underſtood therefore of ſuch maid ſervants as were of other nations, Oſiand. 2. But it ſeemeth, that the maſter could not give a Cananitiſh woman to his ſervant to wife, for they are forbidden to contract marriages with them, *Deut.*7.4. *Toſtat. quæſt.*7. Neither had the maſter power to give any free woman to his ſervant: for the maſter was to give onely his owne, but a free woman was none of his poſſeſſion, Toſtat. 5. This muſt be underſtood, if the ſervant will take a wife, for otherwiſe, he was not to be compelled: for if there were not a free conſent, it is held to be no marriage, and the Maſter could no more compell the ſervant to lye with a maid againſt his will, to get children for his maſters profit, than to force his maid to play the whore for her maſters advantage. It muſt be therefore preſuppoſed, if the ſervant be willing to take a wife, as in ſome caſes he might, either to mend his poore eſtate, or becauſe he cannot live chaſtely all the time of his ſervice, *Toſtat. quæſt.*7.

QUEST. XVI. Whether ſuch ſeparation betweene the ſervant and his wife were lawfull.

Verſ. 4. THe wife and children ſhall be her maſters, &c. 1. Some thinke that this was another cauſe of divorce and ſeparation, ſine libello repudii, without a bill of divorcement: Cajetane: and doe inſiſt hereupon, that matrimonium in veteri lege non erat ratum, ſicut nunc; that matrimony was not ſo ſtrong then as it is now, when it is impoſſible, if it be lawfully made, to be diſſolved, Toſtat. Contra. 1. This cannot be ſaid to bee any kinde of divorce, becauſe the marriage is not held to bee lawfull with aliens. And marriage was then as firme by the firſt inſtitution, Gen. 2. as now, ſaving that much was permitted them by Moſes Law for the hardneſſe of their heart, Matth. 19. 3. And marriage now may be diſſolved for fornication, as our bleſſed Saviour ſheweth, *Matth.*19. therefore it is untrue, that it is impoſſible now for lawfull matrimony to be diſſolved. 2. Some excuſe this kinde of ſeparation: becauſe the word is not abſolutely given unto the ſervant, but only permitted for a time, while he is in ſervice: and that ſhee was given but upon condition, that the children which ſhould be borne ſhould be his maſters: Pelican. Lippoman. But it ſeemeth rather, by the words of the text, that the maſter in this caſe giveth his maid abſolutely, without condition, to be wife unto his ſervant. 3. Some make this to be the reaſon of this ſeparation: Ne injuria Domino inferretur: Leſt wrong might be done unto the maſter, if for ſhewing this favour to his ſervant, he ſhould loſe his maid, Gallaſ. But this doth not fully ſatisfie, that matrimony, if it were lawfull, ſhould be diſſolved for the maſters advantage. 4. Wherefore the beſt anſwer is, that ſuch marriages with ſtrange women was not pleaſing unto God, neither was it lawfull marriage: and therefore ſuch ſeparation was not unlawfull: and by this meanes God would have the Hebrewes terrified from matching with heathen women, Iunius: as in Ezra his time the Iſraelites did put away their ſtrange wives, having had, ſome of them, children by them, *Ezra.*10.44.

QUEST. XVII. Why the ſervant was brought before the Judges, and what doore he was ſet to.

Verſ. 6. THen his maſter ſhall bring him to the Judges, and ſet him to the doore, &c. 1. The ſervant refuſing his liberty, either for the love of his wife and children, or elſe loving his owne eaſe, becauſe he is well with his maſter, was to be brought before the Judges (called Gods, becauſe they are in this place) both, cavendæ fraudis cauſa, to prevent all fraud and deceit, that maſters at their owne will ſhould not prolong the time of their ſervice: Simler. and that this being done publikely, others might be afraid of the like ignominy: Gallaſ. and to the end that the ſervant ſhould make publike profeſſion, that he continued in his ſervice willingly, Piſcator. 2. By the doore is not here underſtood the doore of the Tabernacle, as Gregor. for the Tabernacle was not yet made, and the Judges did not uſe to ſit there: nor the gate of the City, as Borrh. Genevenſ. for, not deleth, but ſhaghar, ſignifieth the doore of the City: Caſar. But he was brought to the doore of his maſters houſe, *Deut.*15.17. where his eare was bored through by the appointment of the Judges, Iun. Cajetan.

Verſ. 6. His maſter ſhall bore his eare thorow. 1. Some thinke this was done to ſet his eare to the poſt of the doore to bore it thorow, in remembrance of the ſtriking of the doore poſts with bloud at the firſt inſtitution of the Paſſeover in Egypt: *ex Toſtat. qu.*8. But there is no ſenſe for this. 2. Some doe moralize, that by boring the eare is ſignified, that one ſhould not doe good workes for to heare the praiſe and commendation of men. But this is as farre fetcht as the other. 3. Toſtatus thinketh the reaſon was: ut puniri in aure malè audiente, &c. He was to be puniſhed in his ill hearing eare, that the muſcle may be proportionable to the faulr, becauſe he liſtned no better to his liberty, quæſt. 8. 4. But generally the boring of the eare was a note of ignominy, and conſpicuous: ut ſi non horrerent ſervitutem, horrerent ſaltem ignominiam publicam: that if they were not afraid of ſervitude, at the leaſt they ſhould be afraid of such reproach and ignominy, Cajetan. And therefore he is brought to the doore, ut multos habeat inspectores & testes, that he may have many witnesses and beholders: Rupertus. And in particular his eare is bored, not his face or forhead marked, as the Romanes used to brand their fugitive servants: because they were a free people, God would not have such ignominious markes set upon them: Marbach. 2. And, Per auris terebrationem perpetuam sub domino obedientiam, &c. By the boring of the eare he signifieth his perpetuall obedience under his master: and by applying him to the doore, is meant, that the servant should not goe out at the doore without his masters leave: Theodoret. 3. Fiebat perforatio tanquam detentio servi ad domum illam: This boring and fastning of the eare to the doore, signified the detention of the servant in that house, Cajetan. 4. And hereby is insinuated, perforan auris eorum, qui se Deo servos addicunt, the boring or opening of their eare, who doe addict themselves to Gods service, Borrh. as David saith, *Psal.*40.6. Mine eares hast thou opened, or prepared.

Quest. XVIII. Of the divers kindes of punishments used among the Israelites.

Vers.6. HE shall serve him. There were six kindes of punishments used among the Israelites: 1. The first and greatest was the taking away of the life, which was in great offences, as of murder, adultery, idolatry. 2. Then there was pœna talionis, the punishment of equality or retalion, as when eye went for eye, tooth for tooth, vers. 24. and of this kinde was the whipping of the body, *Deut.*25.2. 3. There was pœna damni, the punishment of losse and dammage, as in theft they were to make restitution out of their owne goods, Exod. 23. 1. 4. There was pœna ignominiæ, the punishment of ignominy and shame: as his shooe was drawen off, and his face spit upon, that would not take his brothers wife, to raise up seed to his brother, *Deut.*25. *Tostat. qu.*8. Thom. and in this case the servants eare was bored thorow. 5. Pœna servitutis, the punishment of servitude: which was inflicted in two cases, when as either a man not being able to make restitution, was sold for his theft, *chap.*22.3. or, when the servant refused his freedome. 6. Unto this may be added, exile and the restraint of liberty; which the Law did not inflict in generall, that any should be banished altogether out of the land, lest it might cause them to fall to idolatry as David complaineth, 1 *Sam.*26.19. They have cast me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, saying, Goe serve other gods. Yet there was aliquod particulare exilium, a particular kinde of exile as when he that had killed a man, and not wilfully or of hatred, was confined unto one of the Cities of refuge, *Thom.*2.2. *qu.*105. *art.*2, *ad.*10.

Quest. XIX. What is meant here by Ever.

FOr ever. 1. Hieronie observeth that this word עולם gholam with vau, signifieth eternity, but without vau, as it is here, it is taken for the fiftieth yeere which was the Jubile: Hieron in Galat. cap. But this observation doth not alwayes hold. Augustine saith, that is called here æternum, for ever, cujus temporis finis non est, of which time there is no end: *Locus.*91. Oleaster saith it signifieth tempus occultum, an hid time: for in that sense also the word is taken. Theodoret, that it signifieth tempus definitum, determinatum, a definite and determinate time: as the time of a mans life. But it is here rather taken for the yeere of Jubile, whether it were neerer or further off: for then all servants whatsoever were redeemed. Sic Lippom. Lyran. Tostat. as *Levit.*25.39. Iun.

Quest. XX. When the servant was to goe out free in the seventh yeere, when in the fiftieth yeere.

BUt there may seeme to be some repugnancie betweene this Law, Exod. 21.2. of the servants going out free in the 7. yeere, and that *Levit.*25.29. He shall serve thee unto the yeere of Iubile. 1. The place are thus reconciled, that here he speaketh of the freedome of such servants in the seventh yeere which accept of their freedome: but there of such, which refuse to be made free, who shall serve for ever, that is to the yeere of Jubile. 2. Other cases likewise are put, when servants goe not out free in the seventh yeere: as if either they be not Hebrewes, for then they have no benefit by this Law, which is made for the privilege of Hebrewes being servants. 3. Likewise if an Hebrew were sold not to an Hebrew, but to a stranger, he was not to be set free in the seventh yeere, but might be redeemed by any of his kinred, an estimation being made of the price, according to the neerenesse or farnesse of the yeere of Jubile, Levit. 25. Simler.

Quest. XXI. Certaine cases put when the yeere of Iubile came before the yeere of remission.

ALso other cases may be put: 1. What if a man sell himselfe to serve five yeeres before the yeere of Jubile, and in the meane time his master give him a wife, and he hath children by her, whether that he shall go out with his wife and children in the yeere of Jubile? The answer is, that he shall: for then in the yeere of remission he should goe out alone without wife and children: yet the Jubile being a generall remission of all kinde of bonds and contracts, then he, his wife, children, and all, shall be set free. 2. Likewise if the yeere of Jubile come before the yeere of remission, hee that refusing to goe out free, for love unto his wife and children, was to have his eare bored, shall not now have his eare bored: for that was but a signe of his perpetuall service till the yeere of Jubile: which yeere being now come, he is released of the bond of servitude, and so freed also from his boring, which was a signe thereof, *Tostat. quæst.*9.

Qui

QUEST. XXII. Whether it were lawfull among the Israelites for the parents to sell their children.

Vers. 7. IF a man sell his daughter, &c. 1. It is not like, that simply it was lawfull for the father to sell either sonne or daughter, as Gallasius thinketh, seeing that even the Heathen Emperours, Diocletian and Maximinian, provided by Law, that parents should not sell their children: therefore this was not properly a selling of them: Non datur pretium, ut serviat, sed principaliter ut ducatur: The price was not given that she should serve, but principally that shee might be married, Tostat. qu. 9. 2. And this must be understood of maids not yet come to yeeres, as R. Salomon thinketh, under twelve yeere old: both because afterward they were not in their fathers power, Borrh. as also, for that there was no danger to their double virginity, being sold before they were marriageable: but after there was, Tostat. quæst. 9. 3. There was difference betweene the selling of a maid by her father, for then shee was to be handled otherwise than common servants: and when she sold her selfe: for in this case she was not to be free till the seventh yeere, as it was with other servants, Deut. 15. 12. 4. Tostatus seemeth to be of opinion, that no women, whether virgins or widowes (for wives were under their husbands power) could sell themselves, because they put their chastity in hazard when they were so sold into service, Tostat. qu. 9. But this seemeth to be contrary to the letter of the Law, Deut. 15. 12. any Hebrewesse might sell her selfe, as well as an Hebrew.

QUEST. XXIII. In what sense it is said, Shee shall not goe out as other servants.

Vers. 7. SHE shall not goe out as other men servants, &c. 1. Historia scholastica maketh this the sense: that she shall be dismissed by a bill of divorcement and not goe out as other maids, but as other free women were dismissed if her master had espoused her to himselfe, or his sonne: if not, shee should goe forth as other maids, that is, sine mercede, without any reward. Contra. 1. But in case that her master had taken her to wife, now she was free, and no longer as a servant: this Law then should have beene impertinent, in speaking of her going out of service, but not as other servants. 2. And the latter part of this exposition doth contradict the text, inferring that she shall goe out as other servants, whereas the Law saith otherwise, She shall not, &c.

2. Tostatus giveth this interpretation: By other maid servants he understandeth such maids as were of other nations, which were two wayes set free, either being redeemed by money, or else if the master smote out the eye or tooth of his maid, she should be set free for her eye or tooth, Exod. 21. 26. But the case of Hebrew maids was divers, they should bee set free without money: and if their eye or tooth were smitten, their master should pay eye for eye, tooth for tooth, vers. 24. as if the hurt had beene done to other free men or free women. Contra. 1. But it is evident, that this Law meaneth not by other servants those only of other nations, but such as were spoken of before, namely Hebrew servants, Iun. 2. And beside, it is not fit to run for the exposition of this difference to other places: this Law it selfe sheweth afterward, wherein this privilege beyond other servants consisteth.

3. Augustine thus understandeth it: she shall not goe out as other maids, for remunerabit eam, he shall reward her: so also Vatablus, because other servants did goe out, nudi & sine mercede, naked and without reward. But Augustine here following the vulgar Latine, readeth ancillæ, maids, whereas it is in the originall, as other men servants. So also Rupertus: this is prescribed according to the president of their law, Qui non patitur eam illam, sicut ancillam, sine dote exire: Which would not suffer his wife as a bond servant to goe forth without a dowry. But this is not all.

4. Procopius referreth it to that which followeth, vers. 8. He shall not have power to sell her to a strange people. But it was not lawfull to sell any other Hebrew servant to a strange people: therefore this had more no such privilege.

5. The most thus understand it: Vult potestatem habere redimendi se ante sexennium; Hee would have power to have power to redeeme themselves before the six yeeres expired: which it was not lawfull for other servants to doe. So Lyran. Marbach. Osiand. Borrhaius with others: this was part of the privilege, but not all.

6. But this privilege is more generall, and containeth divers branches, as afterward followeth: for hee had either to espouse her to himselfe, or to his sonne, or suffer her to be redeemed of her friends: if none of these, he was to provide her of three things, food, rayment, and dwelling, or else to let her goe out free: all these respects it is said, She shall not goe out as other servants did, Iunius in Analys.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether it must be read betrothed or betrothed not.

Vers. 8. IF she please not her master, so that he betrotheth her not. There are divers interpretations made of this verse: 1. The Latine readeth, If she please not her master, cui tradita fuit, to whom shee was delivered, that is, upon hope of marriage: so also Tostat. Borrh. Lyran. But in the originall there is a negative particle לֹא, lo: and therefore it cannot be read affirmatively. 2. Some thinke that the negative לֹא, lo, not, is here taken for לוֹ, lo, to him: and that in fifteene places beside in the old Testament, the adverbe is taken for the pronoune, whereof this is one; and so they read thus: If she displease her master who hath betrothed her to himselfe: So read the Chalde and Septuag. so also Lippom. But beside that it is a forcing of the words, to take לֹא, for לוֹ, the adverbe for the pronoune: it is not like, that after she had espoused unto him a wife, another should have liberty to redeeme her. 3. Therefore the true meaning is: So that he doe not betroth her to himselfe: Vatabl. Iun. or, suffer her to be redeemed, that is, her friends: yet he shall have no power to sell her to a strange people.

QUEST.

Quest. XXV. How she was to be redeemed.

Vers. 8. Or cause her to be redeemed. 1. Tostatus giveth this sense, Det alteri qui eam emat: He shall give unto another money to redeeme her, and so take her to his wife, qu. 9. But this is not like, that having paid for her before to have her service, he should give money againe to be rid of her. 2. Vatablus thus expoundeth, remittet illi pecuniam servitutis, &c. he shall release unto her the money, or price of her service, as though shee had beene redeemed with money. So also Oleaster. But this were an improper speech, He shall cause her to be redeemed, that is, let her goe out free: the one seemeth to be contrary to the other: for they which went out free, needed not to bee redeemed. 3. Wherefore the meaning is, he shall suffer her to be redeemed either by her selfe, Oleaster; by her father, Ostand. or some of the next of kindred, Iun. or by him that intendeth to have her to his wife, Marbach. And she must be redeemed at a reasonable price, the yeeres of her service which she hath served being considered: as if shee were sold to serve six yeeres for six pound, three of those yeeres being past, shee was to be redeemed at any time, before she had served the whole six yeeres, for three pound, halfe the money, Lyra. Galat.

Quest. XXVI. Why it was not lawfull to sell their maids to strangers.

Vers. 8. He shall have no power to sell her to a strange people, &c. 1. Cajetane understandeth here, homines Hebraeo alterius populi, she should not be sold over to an Hebrew of another people or place: because the Hebrew maids were not to be carried from City to City. But Oleaster giveth a good reason against this sense: Populus alterius urbis non videtur alius populus ab Israels; The people of another City seemed not to be another people from Israel. 2. Therefore the meaning is, that she should not be sold over to any other strange people of the Gentiles, for these reasons: 1. Because injury was done unto God, when as those whom he had chosen for his peculiar people, and were properly his servants, should become slaves to Idolaters, and so the name of God among the Heathen should bee blasphemed. 2. There was wrong also offred unto the maid, which should be so sold: both because her bondage should be perpetuall, and not for a time, as it was among the Hebrewes: beside, her chastity was like to be endangered among the Gentiles; and her selfe in great hazard to be corrupted in religion, and seduced to Idolatry, Tostat. quaest. 10. 3. And as it was not lawfull to sell her unto any strange nation, so neither to any of the strange people which sojourned among the Israelites: because both such kinde of service was more hard, and beside it continued longer: for like as the strangers which were servants to the Hebrewes, were in harder case than the Hebrewes servants, Levit. 25. 46. for they were the Israelites possession and inheritance for ever, and were not set free, neither in the seventh yeere of remission, nor in the yeere of Jubile: So the Hebrew servants, which served strangers, were in worse condition than those which served Hebrewes: for an Hebrew serving an Hebrew, was set free in the seventh yeere; but if he served a stranger, he could not have his libertie till the yeere of Jubile, unlesse he were redeemed with money, Levit. 25. 55. Tostatus 4. The meaning then of the Law is this, that if the master did neither marry his maid himselfe, nor his sonne, he should suffer her to be redeemed; but in no wise was he to sell her to any strange people, Marbach. Which is therefore especially forbidden, because the Gentiles buying servants for a perpetuity would give more for them than the Hebrewes would, whom they were to serve but six yeeres: therefore it was needfull that the covetousnesse of the Israelites should herein be restrained, Tostat. qu. 9.

Quest. XXVII. What the meaning is of these words, He hath despised her.

Seeing he hath deceived her, or dealt perfidiously with her. 1. The Latine following the Septuagint reading, Because he hath despised her, that is, defloured her: so also Augustine expoundeth: humiliavit eam concumbendo cum ea, he hath humbled her in lying with her: quaest. 78. in Exod. and the Chalde in the same sense reads, cum dominatus fuerit ejus, having ruled over her: so also Lippoman. Galat. But this sense cannot be admitted: for to what purpose should the maid be redeemed by her friends, if her master had defloured her? it had beene wrong enough to rob her of her virginity: and in this case the master should rather have paid money, to recompence the losse of her virginity, than to take money to redeeme her: therefore Cajetane here well understandeth, that puella est incognita à Domino, the maid spoken of here is supposed not to have beene knowne of her master. 2. Oleaster findeth out a new signification of the word; bagad, he would have to signifie, to deale covertly, or to cover: whereof a garment is called beged, of covering the body, and so he expoundeth thus, quia operuit eam, id est, maritum egit, because he hath covered her, that is, played the part of an husband toward her: for the use was for men to spread their garment over them, whom they intended to marry, as Boaz did to Ruth, chap. 3. But beside this an unwonted and insolent signification of the word bagad, which betokeneth properly, to deceive, beguile, deale fraudulently: this sense cannot be received, for the reason before alleaged. 3. Ostander referreth this fraudulent dealing, to the not providing of things necessary for her, which afterward is prescribed, and so shifteth her off. Iunius understandeth it of his selling of her to strangers, wherein he transgresseth against the Law. But it is better expounded of the masters deceiving of the maids hope, accepit eam sub spe ut faceret eam uxorem, he tooke her with hope to make her his wife, which he not performing, therein deceiveth her, Tostat. quaest. 10. and Borrhaius, Piscator.

Quest

QUEST. XXVIII. What kinde of betrothing is here understood.

Vers. 9. IF he have betrothed her to his sonne, he shall deale with her, &c. 1. The first case was put, if a man bought a maid servant with intent to make her his owne wife: now, here it is shewed what is to be done, in case he take her for his sonne, Tostat. 2. Some understand this betrothing, of a promise only of marriage, not of any actuall contract: as if the father should say, I will this maid to be my sonnes wife: and so notwithstanding such espousals, he might cast her off, and afterward take another, though he had betrothed her, Tostat. So also Oleaster presling another sense of the word jaghad, which signifieth to appoint a time, will have it here to signifie, the appointing of a time of espousals. But it seemeth, that such espousals are here spoken of, whereby the maid became his wife, because he was to endow her, as other virgins being free, had their dowry given them, chap. 22.16. 2. Cajetanus picketh out another sense, that he shall give her her dowry, if she displease, and he purpose to send her away, because he hath taken away from her her virginity. But this is contrary to the text: for she is now espoused to his sonne, therefore she displeaseth not; neither is there here mention made of casting her out, but of endowing her, and making her the sonnes wife. 3. The meaning then is, ut virgenis puella nuptui detur, shee shall be given in marriage, as if shee were a free woman: her dowry being appointed her, and all other necessary things, Iun. And in this case he shall use her no otherwise, than if hee had bestowed in marriage his owne daughter, Osiander.

QUEST. XXIX. Whether it were lawfull to take another wife to the former.

Vers. 10. IF he take him another. 1. Some understand if he take him another wife beside this, quamvis alia uxor ei superinducatur, although another wife be brought in over and above, Gallas. Tostat. But this first were now become the sonnes wife, she should be free by her marriage, and therefore that clause following should be superfluous, vers. 11. she shall goe out free. And it is not like that the Law would allow the wife without any further solemnity to be dismissed: therefore all this is yet to be understood of her that was a servant, and not a wife. 2. Cajetane saith, Si acceperit aliam concubinam: If hee take him another concubine, and keepe this still. But the Law alloweth not any man to take a maid to be his concubine, as Lyranus noteth, though therein Tostatus finde fault with him: for Deut 23.17. It is said, There shall not be a whore of the daughters of Israel. Tostatus answereth, that this is to be understood of common harlots, not of concubines. But, if it had beene lawfull for one to keepe a concubine, and then to marry her, and so she become another's concubine, shee was by this meanes little better than common. Therefore the meaning is, if the father or the sonne (not the sonne only, as Vatab.) take another wife, and to this, he shall provide sufficiently for her, Iun. If he refuse to espouse this unto his sonne, but take another, then he shall doe as followeth: Osiander. 4. Some thinke further, that this is understood de ancilla, of a maid rejected and cast out, Lyran. Some, that he shall thus provide for her a certaine time after he is married to another: Osiand. But it is evident, that this maid, to whom these things are to be performed, is to cohabit still in the house: ne ut cum abjecta & exterâ uncilla agat: he shall not deale with her as with an abject or forraine maid, Iun.

QUEST. XXX. Of the true reading and meaning of the 10. verse.

SHE shall not diminish her food, her rayment and dwelling. Two of these words are diversly read: vers. 11. The first word sheerah, some read expensa, expenses, that is, necessaria ad vitam, necessary things for her life, that is, meat and drinke: Tostat. Lyran. Some read nuptias, shall provide a marrige for her, and so reads Augustine. But the word sheerah signifieth neither of these. Oleaster will have it here to signifie, the remainder or residue, because the second wife or concubine had the reliques or remainder of the principall wife. So shear is taken, 1 Sam. 16.11. There remaineth yet a little one: but there it is (shear) there it is sheerah: therefore it is better translated, meat, food, or flesh: Iun. Vatab. Lyranus, Cajetan, following the Chalde: so also read Montanus, Pagnine, Osiander. 2. The other word, ghonah, is more doubtfull. Some read, pretium pudicitiæ, hee shall not diminish the price of her chastity: Hebraicè ablata, that is, taken away from her: Gloss. interlinearis. Lyran. But the word ghonah, signifieth no such thing. Some read horam, her time or houre: which some interpret, tempus nubendi, time of marriage: some the time of her service, He shall not diminish her wages for her service: Ex Lippomano. Debitum conjugale, understand it of the marriage debt: jus conjugale, the right of marriage, Cajetan. Concubitum, his lying with her, Chalde: so also Augustine: Alium matrimonialem: The matrimoniall: he shall not defraud her of: for they which had many wives, did not give unto every one of them their time: as may appeare in the story of Rachel and Leah, who purchased of her sister to lodge with her husband, for her sonnes Mandrakes, Genes. 30. But beside, that this were apparently to allow the use of concubines, which no where the Law of Moses doth, the word ghonah is not found in any such sense. But it rather signifieth cohabitation, or dwelling: for the word maghon, which commeth of the same roote ghon, is taken for an habitation or dwelling: so read Iun. Oleast. Montanus. The meaning then is, he shall allow her her food, rayment, and cohabitation or dwelling, because he hath deceived her of hope and expectation of marriage. So the Septuagint read συνάξει, by the which word Augustine understandeth concubitum, lying with her: but it rather signifieth conversation: that is, he shall suffer her to cohabite and converse in the house, not as his wife, or concubine, but now as a free maid, and no more a servant.

QUEST.

Quest. XXXI. What these three things are mentioned in the text.

Vers. 11. If he doe not these three, &c. 1. Some expound these three things to be these, if the master that bought the maid, will not take her for his wife, nor give her to wife to his sonne, nor yet reteine her as his concubine: Ex Lyrano. But this cannot be, for these reasons: 1. Because it would follow, that it was by the Law allowed to take a maid to be ones concubine, which was apparently a sinne, and a transgression of the seventh Commandement, Thou shalt not commit adultery. 2. The sense and sentence should remaine imperfect, it being not determined what should be done, if hee refused to give her food, rayment, and dwelling: if this clause should be referred not to the three things spoken of immediatly before, but to those other there given in instance, Tostat. quæst. 12. 2. Augustine supposeth these to be the three, if he neither marry her himselfe, nor his sonne, neither have defloured her, then she shall goe out free, quæst. 78. in Exod. But there is no mention made at all before of deflouring her, but of espousing her; therefore this cannot be any of the three. 3. The most doe make these the three things: if he neither take her to wife for himselfe, nor for his sonne, nor yet suffer her to be redeemed. So Marbach. Borrh. Lyran. Genevens. But this exposition cannot stand: 1. Because these three things mentioned must be all performed, otherwise he must let her goe out free: but these three were divers cases, and are propounded disjunctively; either the father to marry her, or the sonne, or to suffer her to goe out free. 2. In this sense the text should imply a contradiction: for if these severall cases before propounded, be three things, whereof one is this, that if the father doe not marry her himselfe, he shall suffer her to be redeemed, that is, for money: but here it is said, she shall goe out free, paying nothing: so shee should goe out for money, and goe out without money.

4. Wherefore the fittest sense is, and most agreeable, to referre this clause to the three things going next before: he shall not diminish her food, apparell and dwelling: Sic Tostat. Iun. Cajetan.

Quest. XXXII. Whether maid servants were set free in the seventh yeere, and no sometime before, sometime after.

Vers. 11. She shall goe out free paying no money. 1. She should be set at liberty, not onely in the seventh yeere of remission, but before, si appareant in ea signa pubertatis, if the signes of her womanhood appeared, Lyran. And the reason is, that if shee stayed still in servitude, being apt for marriage, and neither her master, nor his sonne take her to wife, she might be in danger to be defloured, or else lose the time of her marriage, passing over her virginity in service, Tostat. So that such maids might be made free before the yeere of Iubeleume came. 2. But if the seventh yeere of redemption returned before the maid came to yeeres of marriage, which the Hebrewes doe appoint at twelve, then could not the maid yet shew his liking or disliking of her; and therefore such young maidens were not made free, no not in the seventh yeere: for all this Law is grounded upon this supposition, If shee please not her master, that is, if he purpose not to espouse her to himselfe, or to his sonne: but this pleasing or displeasing could not appeare untill the maid were ripe and fit for marriage: therefore in this case they expected rather the accomplishment of her ripe age, than the approching of the seventh yeere, Tostat. qu. 13.

Quest. XXXIII. The summary sense of this Law, concerning maid servants.

NOw concerning the meaning of this Law in generall: 1. Cajetane thus resolveth the whole Law: this maid servant, that is sold by her father unto her master, is either incognita à Domino, unknowne of her master, or knowne: if the first, then may he sell her, but not to any strange people: if she be knowne and afterward displease, either her master casteth her off, and then he must give her a dowry, as if she were his daughter: or he purposeth to reteine her still, as his concubine, then hee shall provide for her, meat, cloth, and dwelling.

Contra. 1. There is no liberty given to the master to sell his maid servant to whom he will: but he must suffer her to be redeemed, which was to be done by the next of the kin. 2. When he had espoused her to his sonne, it is not like that he would then cast her out of the house, and send her away with a dowry, and reteine her still. 3. And if it should be lawfull for him to keepe her still as his concubine, then should he allow the use of concubines, which is no where to be found.

2. Tostatus and Lippoman agree with Cajetane in the first case of suffering the maid to be redeemed, admitting, that her master had not knowne her: and in the two other, of giving her to his sonne, and taking another unto her: but herein they differ, that Cajetane in the second case of espousing her to his sonne, presupposeth an ejection and casting out of the maid espoused, and so endowing her, the rather thinke she is reteined still. Their errour then is, in supposing that this maid is knowne of her master, because she must so liberally be provided for. But the reason thereof is, because shee was sold upon hope of marriage: which hope because shee is frustrate of, this provision must be made by way of recompence. But this maid is not like to have beene abused: for then it had not beene enough to let her goe out free, but he should endow her also according to the Law, chap. 22. 16.

3. Obaster thus resolveth this text: This maid either her master had company with, or had not: if the first, either she displeased afterward, and then he was to redeeme her, that is, to set her free: or shee pleased, then the father either tooke her to wife, and so he was to use her as his wife; or his sonne, then he should use her as his daughter: or if he tooke another wife, he was to provide all necessary things for her. Now if her master had not knowne her, she was to serve him to the yeere of Jubile, unlesse shee before redeemed her selfe.

Contra. Oleaſter faileth here in theſe points: 1. Hee taketh redeeming for ſetting her free without money: whereas redemption of a ſervant was not without money. 2. If he had defiled her, he was not only to ſet her free, but to endow her, as before is ſhewed. 3. If the maid was to ſerve him to the yeere of Jubile, the maid ſervants ſhould have leſſe privilege than the Hebrew men ſervants, that were to ſerve but ſix yeeres, whereas this Law intendeth them greater favour.

This then is the ſumme of the Law: A man buyeth a maid ſervant an Hebreweſſe, he was either to offer her friends to redeeme her, or to marry her himſelfe, or give her to his ſonne: if none of theſe, he was either to keepe her ſtill, providing all things neceſſary for her: or to let her goe out free for nothing. Iun.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the end, ſcope and intent of this Law.

NOw concerning the end of this Law, it is to be conſidered: 1. That the father, which ſhould either of any unnaturall affection, or compelled by neceſſity ſell his daughter, might by this meanes be put back, by loſing all his right and intereſt in his daughter, who did now, being ſold out of her fathers family, in familiam Domini tranſire, paſſe and was as incorporate into her maſters family, Iun. And ſo the father ſhould be as it were bridled hereby from ſelling of his daughter. 2. Beſide, this Law impoſing ſuch hard conditions upon the maſter, in ſuch liberall ſort to provide for his ſervant ſo bought, thereby alſo reſtraineth, ut aut non emerentur ancillæ, that either maids ſhould not be bought at all, though their fathers were ſo hard hearted to ſell them, aut meliore conditione ſervirent, or they ſhould ſerve with better conditions otherwiſe than as common ſervants, Oſiand. Marbach. And ſo this Law taketh order, ut nunquam domus vacaret, that maids ſhould never be without an head, Iun. And ſo taketh care for them, as the weaker ſex. 3. Further, in that the maſter was permitted to take his maid to his wife, though he had another before, temporis licitum erat, that was lawfull by the ſufferance and toleration of thoſe times, Pelarg. 4. Againe, though it were ſimply unlawfull for the parents to ſell their children: ſed ne progrediatur ad intolerabilem iniquitatem, &c. but leſt ſuch impiety ſhould proceed to intolerable iniquity and injury, this Law provideth for ſuch as were oppreſſed, pro tanto, ſed non in totum, though not wholly and totally, yet to keepe them within ſome meaſure, Lippom. 5. But this Law was much more equall than the Law of the ancient Romans in the 12. Tables, which permitted fathers to ſell their ſonnes, not once, but againe, and the third time, only he was excepted, which had married a wife with his fathers conſent: which was afterward forbidden, C. de lib. & poſth. or then that Law of Conſtantine, that one might ſell his ſonne for extreme need and poverty, though the ſonne might afterward redeeme himſelfe: the condition of children ſo ſold was more tolerable among the Hebrewes, their ſervice being but for time, Simler. This Law alſo is more reaſonable than that conſtitution of Iuſtinian, tit. 6. de manumiſſion. that unleſſe the maid ſervant were married within ſix moneths, ab hero non dimittebatur, ſhee was not at all to be diſmiſſed from her maſter, Pelarg.

QUEST. XXXV. What kinde of ſmiting is here meant.

VERS. 12. HE that ſmiteth a man that hee dye. 1. Here percuſſio accipitur pro occiſione, ſmiting is taken for killing, Lyran. For if a man were ſmitten, and died not of it, there was another puniſhment than by death, verſ. 19. Toſtat. 2. Quamvis aliquo poſt tempore moriatur, &c. Although he dye not preſently, but ſome while after, that is ſo ſmitten, he ſhall ſuffer death for it, Galaſ. 3. The words are generall, He that ſmiteth a man, whether he were an Hebrew or no Hebrew, his enemy or friend, ex re percuſſi percutientis manifeſtatur, the iniquity of the ſmiter appeareth by the thing that is ſmitten, Iun. 4. The Latine reads, he that ſmiteth a man, volens occidere, having a purpoſe to kill him, ſhall dye. Two exceptions are taken to this reading: for if a man did ſmite one, non animo occidendi, ſed percutiendi, not with a minde to kill him, but to ſmite him only, he ſhould dye for it, Cajetane. And ſo, if a man intended to kill, and did not, he was not to dye for it: for although before God he be a murderer, that intendeth it in his heart: yet the Law of Moſes doth not puniſh the intent only of murther, but the effect, Simler.

QUEST. XXXVI. Why the murtherer was to dye the death.

Shall dye the death, &c. 1. That is, ſhall ſurely dye, for this doubling of the word, importat majorem certitudinem, importeth greater certainty, Toſtat. The Interlinearie gloſſe expoundeth, Morte ſpirituali, corporali, Death ſpirituall, or bodily: but I preferre the other ſenſe. 2. This Law is ſet downe in generall, that whoſoever ſmiteth, ſo that death follow, ſive intendat occidere ſive non, whether he purpoſed it or not, ſhould dye for it: but afterward follow certaine exceptions from this Law Oleaſter. This is a generall Law, that he which killeth ſhould be killed againe, Lippom. 3. And this Law is grounded upon the Law of nature: for like as it is agreeable to nature, Ut putridum membrum abſcindatur, reliqua conſerventur, that a rotten member ſhould be cut off, that the reſt be preſerved, ſo a murtherer is to be killed, ne plures occidantur, leſt more ſhould be killed, Lippom. This Law is given unto Noah, Gen. 9. when the world was reſtored, and here it is but repeated and renued, Pelarg. 4. The Lawes of all nations herein conſent with Moſes: the Athenians did ſeverely puniſh murther, expelling the murtherer from the Temples of the gods, and from all ſociety, and colloquy of men, till he had his judgement, and by the Law Cornelia among the Romans, he which had killed another with ſword, or poiſon, or falſe teſtimony, loſt his head, if he were of the better ſort; if of meaner condition, he was hanged on the croſſe, or caſt unto wild beaſts, Simler. 5. And the reaſon of this ſeverity was, becauſe murtherers deface deface the image of God in man, and they lay violent hands to take away his temporall life, for which Christ died, to give him eternall, Marbach. 6. But it must be understood, that the murtherer was to dye by the hand of the Magistrate, it was not lawfull for every one to kill him, Iun. For the murther was first to be tried out by witnesses, which could not be done, but before the Judge, Simler.

Quest. XXXVII. In what sense the Lord is said to offer a man into ones hand.

Vers. 13. IF a man hath not laid wait, but God hath offred, &c. Neither can a man take away the life of another, though he doe willingly attempt it, unlesse God deliver him into his hands: yet there is the difference; that where a man intendeth not to kill, and yet killeth, illic tantùm Deus fecit, there God only did it: Hîc autem Deus, & homo propter voluntatem facientis, sed non fecit Deus, ut homo; Here man and God doe it, because of the will of him that did it, though God otherwise doth it than man. So Augustine quæst. 79. in Exod. 2. So God is said to offer or (as the Hebrew phrase is) to cause him to run upon his hand, when it is done, nolente & imprudente homine: man not willing nor minding it, Iun. And this act seemeth to be casuall, or accidentall unto man; which are so called, non quia nullam causam habent, not because they have no cause, for that is impossible, that any thing should be done without a cause, but because, causarum confluentium ordo nobis est incognitus: the order of causes concurring, is unknown unto us, Tostat. 3. Although the cause appeare not to us, why the Lord suffred him, that is so offred into ones hand, to be slaine, yet we are not to doubt, but that it is most just: Ex causa occulta permisse Deum fieri, &c. God suffred him to be slaine upon some hid cause, Lyran. occulta æquitate, by an hid equitie, justo judicio paravit illum occidendum, he ordained him to be slaine in his just judgement, Cajetan. Vel propter scelera, vel ad emendationem & purgationem malorum quæ egerat; Either for his wickednesse, or for the amendment, or purging of the evils which he had done, Tostat. quæst. 15. 4. Rupertus here giveth instance how after this manner Saul was twice delivered into Davids hand, in the cave, and when he tooke the speare and water pot from him: and further saith, that permissu legis poterat illum occidere; by the sufferance of the Law he might have killed him, and gone afterward to some of the Cities of refuge. But there is great difference betweene this offring of a man into ones hand, here spoken of, and that oblation of Davids enemy unto his hand: for Moses speaketh here of such an unlooked for event, whereby one is slaine: that opportunity offred to David was to trie his patience, not to give him any warrant to kill: and if David had taken that opportunity to slay Saul, and had therein followed the carnall counsell of his servants, he had sinned in laying his hands upon the Lords anointed: for if Davids heart smote him for taking away a peece of Sauls garment, how would it have tormented him, if he had taken away his life? Neither were the Cities of refuge appointed for wilfull murthers, such as this should have been, seeing that there was enmity before betweene Saul and David.

Quest. XXXVIII. What places of refuge were appointed.

I Will appoint him a place to flie unto, &c. 1. This place during the sojourning of the Israelites in the desert, was the Tabernacle, as appeareth in the next verse, where mention is made of the Altar: but after they came into the land of Canaan, there were six Cities of refuge appointed, three beyond Jordan, and three of this side, Iun. 2. But yet it seemeth, that the Tabernacle afterward, and the Temple was still a place of refuge, as appeareth by Ioab, who fled into the Temple, and tooke hold of the homes of the Altar, which notwithstanding could not privilege him.

Quest. XXXIX. Why the Lord appointed places for such to flie unto.

NOw the reasons why the Lord appointed Cities of refuge, were these: 1. Lest that the innocent party might be slaine by the friends of him whom he had killed, before his cause was heard; therefore he was appointed to flie to one of the Cities, that the manner of the slaughter might be there considered of by the Judges, Simler. 2. And to this end it was so appointed, that he might stay there to the death of the high Priest, Iun. who was a type of our blessed Saviour, by whose precious death we are set free. 3. And this was done, ut mentem eorum hac ratione mederetur, &c. to heale and allay the mind and fury of those which otherwise would delight in murther, Theodoret. For by his absence, and in continuance of time, the rage of those that sought his life would be qualified: and therefore God provided that they should not be still provoked by the continuall sight of him. 4. And further, by this, that he which killeth one unwittingly, is appointed to flie, it is shewed quòd rem pœna efficitur, that yet he is guilty of some punishment, Theodoret. So that involuntary killing was punished with a kinde of banishment among the Israelites, Simler. So likewise among the Athenians such kinde of manslaughter was censured ἐνιαυτόφυγον, with one yeeres exile, Galat. And so among the Israelites, he that escaped unto one of the Cities of refuge, was not to goe out of the limits and bounds of the City: if he did, it was lawfull for the kinsmen of the man that was slaine, to kill him, Simler.

Quest. XL. What is to be counted wilfull murther.

Vers. 14. BVt if a man come presumptuously, &c. 1. The word זיד zadh, signifieth to deale arrogantly or insolently, to be lift up with swelling pride: as Psal. 124. 5. it is applied unto the swelling waves of the sea, Oleaster: and two things must concurre in wilfull murther; it must be done wittingly and willingly: Hic non solum intentio occidendi, sed mentis utraq; pars, intellectus & voluntas designatur; Here not only the intention of killing, but either part of the minde is understood, the understanding in doing it with guile, and the will in presuming, Cajetane. 2. Cajetane thinketh further that this law from the first generall prohibition of killing, verſ. 12. for here the law ſpeaketh of killing a brother, or companion, there of any man; there no word is expreſſed of the intention, as here. Contra. By neighbour, any man whoſoever is underſtood. 2. And expreſſe mention is made here of the will and intention, becauſe it is an explanation of the former law. Simler. 3. Junius thinketh, that not he onely which killeth, ſed qui conatus eſt occidere, but went about to kill, is comprehended in this law, as Deut. 19. Thou ſhalt doe unto him, as he had thought to doe unto his brother. Contra. 1. It ſeemeth by the generall law, verſ. 12. that this conſtitution is onely for murther committed, and not intended onely: for ſuch is the law ſpeaketh of, whereupon death followeth. 2. That law given in inſtance, Deut. 19. is of falſe witneſſes, whoſe falſe teſtimonie breaketh out into action, into falſe witneſſe bearing: ſo there is not an intention onely: for the falſe witneſſe by his falſe teſtimonie ſeeth as much as in him is to take away the life of his brother: that place therefore is impertinent to this purpoſe. I approve rather the judgement of Cajetane: Nec deſcribuntur hæc intra in animo, ſed prodeuntia extra in actum. Neither are theſe things deſcribed onely in the minde, but proceeding without into action.

QUEST. XLI. Of the difference betweene voluntarie, and involuntarie murther, and the divers kinds of death.

Here then there is a manifeſt diſtinction of involuntarie and voluntarie murther or killing grounded upon the law of Moſes: 1. Involuntarie killing is of two ſorts: there are συμπτώματα, chances, unlooked for, ſodden events: as when one ſhooteth an arrow, and killeth one unawares: as Pelew killed his brother being in hunting with him. There are beſide theſe ἁμαρτήματα, errors and overſights: as the father killeth his childe, purpoſing onely to chaſtiſe him, and hee dieth of that beating: a Phyſition miniſtreth ill to his patient, intending to cure him, and doe him good, and he dieth of it, Dorrh. 2. There are alſo two kinds of voluntarie, or wilfull murther: ex propoſito, of purpoſe, & ex impetu animi, in heat of rage. Theſe kinde of murthers are called ἀδικήματα, iniquities: one may be ſlaine ex propoſito, purpoſely, per inſidias, by lying in wait, when one watcheth for the life of a man, and taketh him at advantage, as he killed Abner, and afterward Amaſa, they ſuſpecting no ſuch thing: ſo Iſmael killed Gedaliah, Jer. 41. Or els per induſtriam, when one of ſet purpoſe picketh quarrels, and ſeeketh occaſions to provoke a man, that he may kill him: both theſe kinds are touched here, Toſtat. quæſt. 16. Then one may bee ſlaine in heat and rage, when there was no purpoſe before, as Alexander the Great killed Clitus, Pelarg. This kinde, though not ſo grievous as the other, yet is a kinde of voluntarie killing. So there is extant a rescript of Hadrian the Emperour againſt him, qui per laſciviam cauſam mortis præbuiſſet, which was the cauſe of his mothers death through wantonneſſe and riot, though there were no enmitie before, that ſuch an one ſhould be baniſhed five yeeres, Simler QUEST. XLII. Why the wilfull murtherer was to be taken from the Altar.

Verſ. 14. Thou ſhalt take him from mine Altar. 1. This may bee underſtood either of the Altar of incenſe, which was in the holy place, or of the Altar of burnt offring rather, which was without the Tabernacle in the Court, for thither every one might eaſily flee, that had committed any ſuch fact: but to the Arke no eſcape could be made, becauſe there was no entrance thither. 2. R. Salomon ſaith, that this is meant even of the Prieſt that ſacrificed at the Altar who after he had finiſhed his ſervice at the Altar, might be taken thence and judged by the law, as other malefactors and murtherers. Which opinion of his may be received, ſaving that it is not like they would ſuffer a murtherous Prieſt to miniſter at the Altar. 3. But that other conceit of R. Salomon, whom Lyranus followeth, hath no good ground: that he that had killed an Hebrew wilfully, might be taken from the Altar, as Ioab was: but if he had onely killed a Gentile, as a Moabite or Ammonite, though of ſet purpoſe, he was not to be taken thence, but was ſuffered by the Altar. But the contrarie appeareth, that this law forbiddeth all voluntarie and wilfull murther, whether of Hebrew or Gentile: for it was more to kill a Gentile being free, then a Gentile that was a ſervant or bondman: but the maſter was to die for it, if he beat his ſervant to death, ſo that he died under his hand, verſ. 20. which law muſt be underſtood of ſtrangers and aliens that were ſervants, not of Iſrael, for they were not to deale ſo cruelly with them, Levit. 25. 38. Jun. much more therefore were they to die, if they of purpoſe killed any free ſtranger, Toſtat. 4. If therefore the wilfull murther as well of Gentiles as Hebrewes be here forbidden, then both for the one murther, and for the other, might they be taken even from the Altar. 5. And the reaſon thereof was this, becauſe they which did flee to Gods Altar, confugiunt ad patronum & judicem innocentiæ ſuæ implorabant: did flie unto God, as the patron and protector of their innocency: & therefore they therein abuſing Gods name, were to be expelled thence, Gallus.

QUEST. XLIII. What manner of ſmiting of parents is forbidden.

Verſ. 15. HE that ſmiteth his father and mother, &c. 1. The very ſmiting of the father or mother deſerveth death, although they die not of ſuch ſmiting: Cajetan. Jun. as may appeare verſ. 12. where is directly expreſſed concerning the ſmiting of another, if hee die, then the ſmiter ſhall bee put to death. Piſcator. 2. R. Salomon underſtandeth, that this is not meant of every ſmiting: but when upon the ſmiting the effuſion of bloud followeth, or ſome ſcarre or wound is cauſed. But the very ſmiting of either of the parents ſheweth the malice and diſobedience of the childe, for the which he is worthie to die: Deut. 21. 18. the ſonne for his ſtubbornneſſe and diſobedience was to be ſtoned to death. Indeed for the blow or ſmiting the childe was not to die, if it were done unwittingly, or unawares: but if it were of purpoſe, he deſerved death. 3. And the reaſon is, becauſe of the authoritie of the parents, which is the next unto God. Simler. Deo & parentibus non possumus reddere aequalia, &c. We can never make amends unto God and our parents. Caietan. As also they seeme not to be worthie of life, which are injurious to those, by whom they received their life. Gallas.

Quest. XLIV. Of the grievous sinne of paricide.

THough there be no expresse mention here of those that kill their parents, yet it followeth not, that if it be a sinne worthie of death to smite them, much more to kill them. 1. This even among the Heathen was counted so hainous a sinne, that they thought none so wicked, that would commit paricide: and therefore Solon that wise law-maker among the Athenians, maketh no mention of paricide, nor the Romans had any law against such, until the 642. yeare from the building of the Citie, which was the 100. yeare before the nativitie of Christ, one Publicius Malleolus, with the helpe of his servants, killed his mother: against whom the Citie decreed this punishment, that he should be put into a sacke, together with a Cocke, an Ape, a Viper, and a Dogge, and so cast into the water: Tostat. quaest. 17. The Egyptians caused such first to be beaten with thornes, and then to be burnt with thornes. The Macedonians did slay them to death: Petrus Plaseb. 9. de legibus, would have such grievously punished unto death, and their bodies to be left unburied. 2. It is a like sinne to kill the father, as to doe it to the mother: yet the father is named before, as the more honourable person: and fewer examples are extant of those that have killed their fathers, than of the other. Oedipus is said unwittingly to have killed his father Laius King of Thebes, not knowing him for his enemie: But Orestes killed his mother Clitemnestra Agamemnons wife wittingly: so did Alcmeon his mother, being charged so to doe by his father Amphiaraus, being slaine in the Thebane warre, to the which his wife perswaded him to goe: and therefore being deadly wounded, he commanded his sonne to kill her. Ninias likewise the sonne of Ninus killed his mother Semiramis, after he had carnally knowne her. Such beastly examples of paricide Heathen histories afford, who not knowing God, were without naturall affection, and disobedient to parents, which were the sinnes of the Heathen, Rom. 1. Some write, that Judas killed his father, and married his mother: Tostat. qu. 17. But it is not like, that Judas had so apparently shewed his wickednesse before, that our blessed Saviour would have chosen him to be one of his Apostles.

Quest. XLV. The law of man-stealing expounded.

Verse 16. HE that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or it be found with him, &c. 1. Some understand, if he be found with the buyer, that is, the man that is stollen be found sold over and delivered to the buyer. Oleaster. But then there should be a repetition of the same thing: for as much was said before, and selleth him: there cannot be a seller without a buyer. 2. Some doe thus expound, if he be found, that is, proved by him that he hath stolen a man: So Lyran. Tostat. Vatab. Simler. and the Latine text expresseth the same sense, convictus erit, if he be convicted of the offence. But this clause had been superfluous: for this must be understood in all lawes, that the offence must be sufficiently proved before it be punished. Againe in this sense the law should be imperfect, not determining what should become of him that had stolen a man onely and not sold him: some say, restitution should be made by the like, he should give man for man, or give the price of two men. But this is no where to be found: restitution indeed was to be made in the theft of other things, Exod. 22. 1. but there was not the like reason for men. 3. Therefore the meaning is this, that if one steale a man, whether he have sold him and delivered him over, or if he be found with him, as yet unsold, in both cases he should suffer death, for his malice appeared evidently in the stealing onely, that he intended to sell him over: Iun. Gallas. Osiand. So also Lippom. he was to be put to death, if the theft were yet found with him, propter crudelissimum institutum, for his cruell enterprise: how much more, si desperata fuerit venditi redemptio, if being sold he were past redemption? 4. By the ancient Romane lawes, such men-stealers were condemned to the metal mines: by a latter law of Constantine, they were to be cast unto the wilde beasts. Simler.

Quest. XLVI. The reason why man-stealing was punished by death.

THe reasons why this kinde of theft in stealing of men was so severely punished with death, were these. 1. Because man was created according to Gods image, therefore in respect of the excellencie and eminence of the thing that was stolen, the punishment ought to be the greater. 2. Because in selling he that was sold lost his libertie, which is as precious as life it selfe: and to bring a man into servitude, quid aliud, quam saxeum cum mortibus objicere? what was it else, than to expose him to as many deaths? Gallas. 3. And beside, they could not steale men, and sell them to the Israelites, but it would be knowne, and therefore it is like, that after they had stolen them, they sold them over to the Gentiles: so they were in danger, that were so sold over, to be corrupted in religion, and seduced to idolatrie, so drawne away from the service of God, and by this meanes be brought into bondage both of soule and bodie: Simler. The Interlineare Glosse therefore thus expounded, diabolo obnoxium faceret, subject him, that is, brought him into the devils service. 4. Of this sinne were Iosephs brethren guiltie, who sold him over to the idolatrous Egyptians, who therein had a vaine perswasion, that they were free from the guilt of his blood, because they had not slaine his life: but in selling him over to bee a slave, and that to an idolatrous people, as much as in them lay, enim è medio sustulerunt, they tooke him away as out of the world. Gallasius.

QUEST. XLVII. What kinde of cursing of parents is here understood.

HE that curseth his father or mother, &c. 1. There are two kinds of cursing; one, assumpto Dei nomine, when Gods name is taken in vaine withall: another, is without, Borrhaius. thinketh, that this is understood of the first kinde. But seeing the blaspheming of the name of God deserved death of it selfe, Levit. 24. and this law doth properly punish the cursing and blaspheming of parents; it seemeth generally to be intended against all kinde of cursing, and wishing evill unto the parents. 2. And it seemeth to be understood of an use and custome of cursing, not of every railing word, as sometime should bee uttered by the childe in rage and heat: for every such word to inflict death upon the childe, would be thought too hard: sed ille, qui assuefactus est maledicere patri & matri, &c. but that is accustomed to curse his father and mother, and that for small matters, deserveth death: Tostat. the law against disobedient children, Deut. 21. 18. is made against those that are incorrigible, and are obstinate in their disobedience and stubbornnesse. So also Cajetane. As he that smiteth them, is worthie of death, so he that curseth: nisi imperfectio actus excuset, puta si non deliberate, aut leve verbum, &c. unless the imperfection of the act excuse, or he speake a light word of railing, &c. 3. And as cursing to the parents is judged worthie of death: so also publike backbiting and detracting: Publicè enim maledicere perinde est, ac si palam detraheret: For he that openly backbiteth his parents, is as if he did it to their face: but it is otherwise in private backbiting and speaking evill of them: for detractor reveretur & erubescit, &c. the privie detractor doth feare and reverence him, whom he speaketh evill of: but he that curseth to the face, is impudent and shameleſſe, &c.

QUEST. XLVIII. What manner of strife the law meaneth.

WHen men strive together. 1. As contentious is in words, so rixa, strife, properly is in deeds: cum ex rixa invicem se percutiunt, when striving they fall to blowes, Thom. The case is put of men: but if either a woman should strike a man, and wound him, or one woman hurt another, they are subject to the same law: Tostat. qu. 19. 3. And this law must be understood of such which strive and fight one with another, each offending the other, not when one defendeth himself: for one cannot offend another without mortall and grievous sinne, but one may defend himselfe without sinne: and yet notwithstanding he may sinne, sometime more, sometime lesse in defending himselfe: for if one seeke in his owne defence, to repell the wrong that is offered, it is no sinne: si cum animo vindicandi, &c. If with a minde of revenge and hatred he defend himselfe, he sinneth, either lesse, when he keepeth his anger kindled, and his patience violated; or more, when he bindeth himselfe wholly to bee revenged: Thom. 2. 2. qu. 41. art. 1. 4. By smiting with stone or fist, is understood all kinde of assault, either afarre off, with stone, arrow, dart, or such like; or neere hand, as with sword, staffe in the hand, or all kinde of hurting, either with weapon, or instrument, or without, Tostat. 5. And the law meaneth such hurting, where no member was perished: for in that case, they were to give eye for eye, member, foot for foot, vers. 24. Simler.

QUEST. XLIX. What punishment the smiter had, if he which were smitten died.

IF he rise againe; &c. then shall he that smote him goe quit. 1. That is, he shall be freed from the sentence of death, though he be not innocent before God, nor yet altogether free from all chastisment: for in this case he is to allow his charges for his resting, and to pay for his healing. 2. But the doubt is, what punishment he should have, that in striving so smote his brother, that he died of it. Thom. thinketh, that in this case he should flie unto one of the Cities of refuge: Quia non ex intentione, occasione rixæ percussio facta est: Because the blow or stroke was given not of purpose, but occasion of a sudden brawle, &c. But if it had beene so, as if death had followed upon such smiting, the smiter should goe free, so neither, death not following, but some other hurt, that he is constrained to keepe his house, should he have beene taxed so much as with the charges: if the taking away of the life in this case have not beene punishable, much lesse any lesse hurt being not mortall. 3. Therefore I preferre here the opinion of Tostatus, that if he which was thus smitten in a fray or brawle, died, he that smote him was punished, whether he were a Hebrew, that was so killed, or stranger, whether bond or free: for it was not lawfull for them to kill a Gentile or stranger sojourning among them: and if a free man killed a free man, or a free man, he was to die without all question: and if a free man killed anothers servant, hee was to pay for him: for if a master killed his owne servant outright, he was punished by death, vers. 20. much more if he killed anothers servant, Tostat. quæst. 19. And that in this case, they which in strife killed one, deserved to die, it is evident both by the generall law before vers. 12. He that smiteth a man that he die, &c. and by a necessarie consequence here, If he rise againe, that is, smitten and walke, he shall goe quit, that is, from the punishment of death: it followeth then, if he doe not rise, but die, that he shall not goe quit.

QUEST. L. What should become of the smiter, if the other died after he walked upon his staffe.

And walked without upon his staffe. But what if he die after he hath risen and walked upon his staffe? 1. Ps. Salomon thinketh that the smiter was to bee apprehended, and kept till he that was smitten were perfectly recovered: and if he did not, the other was to die: and by walking upon the staffe is meant, the perfect recovery of his health, as Ezech. 4. the staffe of bread is taken for the vertue and fulneſſe of bread, by a metaphor. But though ſuch metaphoricall ſpeeches are uſuall in the Prophets, yet in the ſetting downe of lawes, words muſt be taken in their literall ſenſe, Toſtat. 2. Therefore becauſe the law ſaith, If he walke without or abroad upon his ſtaffe, the other ſhall goe quit: the meaning is, though he lie downe upon his bed againe and afterward die, yet the other ſhall goe quit: and the reaſon is, becauſe after hee ſitteth up and walketh, and ſeemeth to be paſt the danger, and falleth downe againe, Magis probabile eſt, quod mortuus eſt ex negligentia, &c. It is more probable, that he died by his owne negligence and careleſneſſe in keeping of himſelfe, or by ſome other occaſion, than of the ſmiting, Lyran. 3. But if he did not riſe at all from his bed, and being riſen, walked but a little about the houſe upon his ſtaffe, and come not abroad, and afterward died, then the other ſhould not goe quit, Toſtat. qu. 20.

Quest. LI. Of the equitie of this law, in bearing of the charges.

Verſ. 19. He ſhall beare his charges for his reſting, and pay for his healing, &c. 1. That is, he ſhall pay all manner of charges, which he was put unto about his healing, as to the Phyſitians, and for the phyſicke and medicines which he uſed, and for his diet, which upon this occaſion was extraordinary, and ſo more chargeable, Toſtat. qu. 22. Likewiſe he was to beare the charges of the miniſters and keepers that attended upon him during the time of his lying, Simler. 2. The intendment of this law is, that full recompence and ſatisfaction ſhould be made for any dammage or loſſe which happened unto another: and yet ſo, as that ſuch recompence being made, the Lord would have one to forgive another, that charitie ſhould not be violated, nor any grudge or purpoſe of revenge remaine, Oleaſter. 3. This law was more equall & indifferent, than that law of the Romans contained in the 12. tables, that if any man did beat and batter another, he ſhould pay 25. aſſes, that is, ſo many three farthings: which mulct being too eaſie, one Lucius Neratius, in a bravery uſed of purpoſe to beat and buffet thoſe with his fiſts whom he met, and cauſed his man preſently to pay him the penaltie of the law: whereupon the Prætors of Rome deviſed to impoſe a greater mulct and puniſhment for ſuch aſſaults and batteries, Gell. lib. 20. ex Calvin. Mathal.

Quest. LII. Who ſhould beare the charges, if a ſervant had done the hurt.

He ſhall beare his charges. But what if one ſervant had beaten another, or a ſervant had ſmitten a free man, that hee kept his bed upon it? 1. In this caſe either the maſter of the ſervant was to beare the charges, or elſe he was to deliver his ſervant, and he was to ſerve or to be ſold to make it good, if hee had not of his owne to make ſatisfaction; as the like order was taken for theft, Exod. 21. 3. 2. But here is a further doubt; what if the ſervant that did the hurt were an Hebrew, who could not be ſold over for more than ſix yeares, and it might ſo fall out, that there remained but one yeare untill the ſeventh, being the yeare of remiſſion, came, and ſo his ſervice for ſo ſhort a time could not make ſufficient recompence? The anſwer is, that in this caſe the ſervant might be ſold to ſerve ſix yeares more after the yeare of remiſſion; as in the caſe of theft, if hee had not wherewithall of his owne to make ſatisfaction: but for longer than ſix yeares he could not be ſold, nor more than once. But if the ſervant were a Gentile, he might be abſolutely ſold over, to ſerve a longer time. 3. Now if the charge would not come to the value or worth of ſix yeares ſervice, in this caſe the ſervant was to ſerve no longer, than till his ſervice would make ſufficient amends: as if a mans ſervice for ſix yeares were eſteemed at ſix pounds, and the charges of healing ariſe to three, then the ſervant was to bee ſold over onely to ſerve three yeares, which would countervaile the charge, Toſtat. quæſt. 23.

Quest. LIII. What ſervants this law meaneth, and what kinde of chaſtiſement is forbidden.

Verſ. 20. If a man ſmite his ſervant with a rod, &c. 1. This law is concerning ſuch ſervants as were no Hebrewes, for them they were not to uſe ſo hardly and cruelly, Levit. 25. 38. neither could the Hebrew ſervant be ſaid to be their money: for hee was not abſolutely ſold, but onely for a time, Toſt. 2. This caſe is propounded, if the maſter ſmite with a rod, or any other thing which is not likely to kill: but if he ſmite him with a ſword, or caſting of a ſtone, or ſuch like, if the ſervant die, whether under the maſters hand, or afterward, the maſter ſhall be ſurely puniſhed, that is, ſhall die for it, becauſe in ſmiting his ſervant with a deadly weapon, it appeareth that he intended to kill him, Simler. Toſtat. quæſt. 23. 3. And in caſe it be evident, that the ſervant die of that beating within a day or two, the maſter was likewiſe to be puniſhed for it: but if, as the Hebrew phraſe is, hee ſtand a day or two after, that is, be whole and ſound, that he may goe about his buſineſſe: Simler. Nam ſtare tantundem valet, ac vigere omnibus integris membris; For to ſtand is all one, as to be perfect and ſound in all the parts and members; Calvin. then the maſter was free. So alſo expounded Procopius, Vbi ex vulnere vel verbere convaluerit ſervus, &c. Where the ſervant recovereth of the ſtripe or wound, though he afterward die, the maſter is held to be innocent: Likewiſe Thomas Aquin. Si dubium certa eſſet, lex pœnam adhibuit, &c. If the hurt be certaine and evident, the law appointeth a puniſhment for a maime, the loſſe of his ſervice, verſ. 26. for the death of the ſervant, the puniſhment of manſlaughter: but where the hurt is uncertaine, the law inflicteth no mulct: incertum enim erat, utrum ex percuſſione moriturus, &c. For it is uncertaine, whether he died of the beating. 4. This law for ſervants was more equall than that cruell cuſtome of the Romanes, that give unto maſters power over their ſervants lifes: in Auguſtus time, Vedius Pollio uſed to caſt his ſervants that offended into the fiſh ponds; but afterward this cruell cuſtome was mitigated: for Antoninus made a law, that hee which killed his ſervant without cauſe, ſhould die for it, as if he had ſlaine another ſervant, Galaſ. And Marianus the Emperour baniſhed one Umbra, a matron for five yeares, for handling her maids cruelly. Ex Simler. 5. But whereas this law giveth libertie to the maſter to beat his ſervants, though it were extremely,

...emely, ſo that death followed not, wee muſt conſider, that this law requireth not an abſolute per-...ction: Sed Deus ſe accommodavit ad ruditatem populi, &c. But God applieth himſelfe to the rudeneſſe of the people, tolerating many things among them for the hardneſſe of their hearts, Galaſ.

QUEST. LIV. The meaning of this clauſe, For he is his money.

For he is his money. 1. That is, bought with his money: hee ſeemeth to have puniſhed himſelfe ſuffi-...ciently in the loſſe of his ſervant, Iun. 2. But if this reaſon were ſufficient, then neither was the maſter to be puniſhed, though his ſervant died under his hand, for hee ſtill is his money. 3. For anſwer to this ...eſtion, a ſervant is to be conſidered two wayes, as he is a man, and as he is made apt and fit to labour; ...e ſervant oweth not to his maſter his life, but his labour: therefore if the maſter take away the life of ...e ſervant directly, as if he die with beating under his hand, the maſter is to be puniſhed for it, for as hee ...eth a ſervant, ſo the politike ſtate is deprived of a man, and herein hee doth wrong to the Common-...ealth. But if the maſter indirectly procure his ſervants death, as in overcharging him with labour, in de-...ying him competent food, in immoderate correcting him, now the maſter is not guiltie of his ſervants ...ath: for now puniebat eum tanquam poſſeſſionem ſuam, ut emendaret: he did puniſh him, as his poſſeſſion ...f ſervant, to amend and correct him, not as a man: therefore the reaſon holdeth in this indirect kinde ...f killing, He is his money, &c. and not in the other, Toſtat. quæſt. 23.

QUEST. LV. Whether this law meane the voluntarie or involuntarie hurt done to a woman with childe.

Verſ. 22. ALſo if men ſtrive, and hurt a woman with childe. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke that this caſe here ...put, is of involuntarie hurts and killing: as a man ſtriving againſt his will hurteth a woman ...ith childe, and ſhee dieth; for this the man was not to die, in their opinion, but to redeeme his life ...ith a peece of money. Contra. But where any ſlaughter is committed altogether againſt ones will; as ...f a man ſhoot an arrow, and kill a woman with child, or ſhee be behind him, and he knew it not, and hee ...eeteth her with his heele that ſhe die, in this caſe the man deſerved no puniſhment at all, no not ſo much ...s a pecuniary mulct to be inflicted, which yet is appointed by this law, where death followeth not: there-...re this law meaneth not any ſuch act, which is altogether involuntarie, Toſtat. quæſt. 24. 2. Neither is ...is law to be underſtood of murther altogether voluntarie: as if a man of purpoſe ſhould ſmite a woman ...ith child, and ſhee die: for this was provided for before, what puniſhment ſhould be laid upon him that ...committed wilfull murther. 3. This law therefore is made concerning ſuch violent acts as were of a ...ixt kinde, partly voluntarie, partly involuntarie: as if a man ſtriving with one, and ſeeing a woman with ...hild within the danger, cared not whether ſhee was hurt or no, Toſtat. Or if ſtriving with a man, he thruſt ...is arme a woman with child, Galaſ. Or a woman comming to reſcue her husband, receiveth hurt by the ...ther that ſtriveth, Lyran. In this caſe, if death followed in the woman with child, the man was to die for ...t. 4. And the reaſons are theſe: 1. Becauſe adfuit ledendi animus, he that ſo ſtriveth had a minde and in-...ent to hurt, Simler. Conſilii ratio habenda eſt, his counſell and intention muſt be conſidered, which was ...ot to take the life of another, and by this occaſion he killeth one whom he intended not to hurt, Iunius, ...yran. 2. Againe, Vxor una caro eſt cum viro, quem intendebat percutere; The wife is one fleſh with her ...husband, whom he intended to ſmite, Lyran. 3. And beſide, inſtance is given of a woman with child, who ...either could ſhift for her ſelfe, and a double danger is brought both upon her & her child which ſhe went ...with: therefore in this caſe the law provideth, that ſuch overſights ſhould be ſeverely puniſhed, Toſtat. q. 25.

QUEST. LVI. Whether the death of the infant be puniſhed, as well as of the mother.

Verſ. 22. AND death follow not, &c. 1. Some thinke that this is to be underſtood onely of the death of the woman, and not of the child, Oſiander. That if the child died, and not the woman, he ...ought only to pay a peece of money, not to loſe his life for it: and their reaſon is, becauſe he deſerved not ...ſuch a puniſhment, that killed an infant in the wombe, as he that did ſlay a perfect man, Oleaſter; who ...findeth fault with Cajetane, for underſtanding the law indifferently of the woman and her child. 2. But ...Cajetans opinion is to be preferred: for like as it is a more heinous thing to kill a man in his owne houſe, ...then in the way, ſo is it a prodigious thing to ſuffocate an infant in the mothers wombe, qui nondum eſt in ...lucem edita, which is not yet brought forth into the light of this world, Calvin. And againe; Fœtus quam-...vis in utero incluſus, homo eſt; The infant, though yet incloſed in the wombe, is a man, Simler. And the ...child in the wombe is yet a part of the perſon of the woman: ſo that if there be corruptio totius perſonæ, aut ...partis, a deſtruction of the whole perſon, or of a part, Iun. he that ſo hurteth a woman with child, in her ...owne perſon, or her childs, is ſubject to this law.

QUEST. LVII. Whether this law extendeth it ſelfe to infants which miſcarie, being not yet perfectly formed.

NOw it being agreed that this law as well comprehendeth the infant that periſheth, as the woman that beareth it: yet there remaineth a queſtion, whether if the childe in the wombe bee yet imperfect, and ſo not endued with ſenſe and life, that in this caſe, though the woman die not, but onely loſe her birth, ...those did the hurt is to ſuffer death. 1. Some hold the affirmative, that if any child whatſoever by this ...meanes miſcarrie, the offender is ſubject to this law: Formati fœtus potentia tam propinqua eſt effectui: The ...infant being now formed is ſo neere unto the effect, that is, the life, that who cauſeth the ſame to miſcar-...ry may be ſaid to have killed a man, Galaſ. And therefore by the Civill law, he that of purpoſe procured the birth to miſcarie, if he were a meane perſon, was condemned to the mettall mines; if a noble perſon to baniſhment. Cicero alſo in his oration pro Cluentio, reporteth of one Milesia a woman, who being hired of the heires in reverſion, to deſtroy the infant that ſhee went with, had a capitall puiſhment therefore inflicted upon her: Ex Simlero. But theſe lawes were made againſt ſuch as did of purpoſe ſeeke to deſtroy infants in the wombe, and cauſe abortion of them: here the cauſe is divers where the fruit of the wombe miſcarrieth by ſome chance. 2. Therefore this penaltie was onely by the law inflicted, when the infant periſhed, that was endued with life. So Auguſtine thinketh, uſing this reaſon: Nondum poteſt dici anima viva in eo corpore, quod ſenſu caret, &c. The living ſoule cannot be ſaid to be yet in that body which wanteth ſenſe: *qu.*80. in Exod. And thus the Septuagint interpret: If the infant came forth, μὴ ἐξεμορφωμένον, not yet formed, &c. which forming of the infant beginneth fortie dayes after the conception, as Procopius. Cajetane giveth this reaſon, why in ſuch a caſe, when the birth commeth forth imperfect, the ſentence of death is not inflicted: quia homo in potentia non eſt homo: becauſe a man onely in poſſibilitie is not a man: & quia tunc non occiditur homo, non eſt homicidium: and becauſe then a man is not killed, it is no manſlaughter, Toſtat. And the word jeladim, ſons, ſignifieth as much, that the infant meaneth formed and perfect infants: Simler. And it is put in the plurall, becauſe a woman may have more infants than one in her wombe at once: for otherwiſe why ſhould one give life for life, or ſoule for ſoule ſeeing ſuch imperfect births are not yet endued with life & ſoule? As Auguſtine ſaith: In Adam exemplum datum eſt, &c. An evident example is given in Adam, quia jam formatum corpus accipit animam: that the bodie when it is now faſhioned receiveth the ſoule, and not before: For after Adams bodie was made the Lord breathed into him the breath of life. So *Auguſt. lib. quæſt. vet. & nov. Teſtam. qu.*23. as he is alleaged, *Cauſ.*32. *qu.*2. *cap.*9.

Quest. LVIII. Why the action is given unto the husband.

Verſ.22. According as the womans husband ſhall appoint him, &c. 1. Becauſe the injurie is done unto the man, in that his iſſue is cut off, and becauſe hee is the head of the woman, the law referreth the proſecution of this wrong unto the husband, Toſtat. 2. But the taxation of the mulct is ſo referred to the man, as yet if he ſhould exceed a juſt proportion, the Judges in their diſcretion are to moderate it, Gallaſ. 3. Toſtatus thinketh that theſe were not the ordinarie Judges of the Hebrewes, ſed arbitri conſtituti ex voluntate partis utriuſq;, but arbitrators choſen by the will and conſent of both parties *queſt.*24. But that part of the law which followeth, Thou ſhalt render life for life, which is ſpoken to the Judge, to whom the ſword was committed, ſheweth, that this authoritie alſo of ſetting the pecuniarie puniſhment is referred to the civill Magiſtrate.

Quest. LIX. Whether the law of retalion be literally to be underſtood.

Verſ.24. Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, &c. 1. Some doe thinke that this law of retalion is not to be underſtood according to the letter, but an eſtimation was to be made by money: ſo R. Salomon, to whom conſenteth Toſtatus upon theſe reaſons: 1. Becauſe in ſome of theſe kinds, as if a foot ſhould be taken from him that periſhed his neighbours foot, it might ſo fall out, that together with the foot he ſhould loſe his life, and ſo there ſhould be more than a retalion. 2. And againe in the former law, *verſ.*18. where one upon anothers ſmiting lieth downe on his bed, but riſeth againe, the other was onely to beare his charges, there the law of repercuſſion and retalion tooke no place: and ſo is it to be underſtood here. 3. Favorinus thus reaſoned againſt this law of retalion, as Aulus Gellius bringeth him in, *lib.*20. cap. that it was impoſſible to be kept: for if the like ſhould be inflicted for the like, as one wound for another, they muſt take heed that the like wound in every reſpect ſhould be made, neither longer nor deeper if it were, then a new retalion ſhould bee offered unto the other that proſecuted the action, and ſo there ſhould be no end.

Contra. 1. The like may bee objected concerning the cutting off of other members, as of the eare and hands, which are inflicted by the lawes of divers countries: for divers times death followeth in the amputation of ſuch parts, and yet the law intendeth not death. He then may thanke himſelfe, that deſerved ſuch mangling of his members: neither is the ſeveritie of the law to give way becauſe of ſome inconvenience which is feared. And yet further thus much may bee added, that where in ſuch retalion, death was like to follow, where death was not intended, that in this caſe much was left to the diſcretion of the Judge, that compenſation might bee made in another kinde, as by pecuniarie ſatisfaction. 2. The other inſtance is not to the purpoſe: for the law ſpeaketh of ſuch hurting, when as there is no loſſe of a member: for in that caſe they are referred to this law: but when the body was otherwiſe hurt and bruiſed without any corruption of the parts and members, then the ſmiter in that caſe was to beare his charges that reſted and lay upon his bed by his meanes. 3. The other objection is frivolous: for it was not in the private mans hand that was wounded, to make what wound he thought good againe, but it was in the Judges power to order it.

2. Therefore the more probable opinion is, that this law is literally to be underſtood: that he which hath ſpoiled his neighbours eye, hand, foot, ſhould ſuffer the like himſelfe, as may appeare by theſe reaſons. 1. Becauſe the firſt clauſe here ſet downe, *verſ.*23. Then ſhalt pay life for life, is literally intended: not that he ſhould pay mony for his life, but he ſhould loſe his life indeed. 2. Our bleſſed Saviour ſo expounded this law, *Matth.*5. 38. Yee have heard it hath beene ſaid, an eye for an eye, &c. which libertie being given unto the Magiſtrate onely, every private man did arrogate to himſelfe, to ſeeke revenge as he thought good: and therefore our bleſſed Saviour correcteth that error: But I ſay unto you, reſiſt not evill, &c.

Now, if this retalion and recompence had beene made in money, and not in inflicting the like hurt, they had not resisted evill or sought revenge. 3. Other forren lawes also borrowed this law of retalion from Moses: as among the Romanes, in their twelve tables, this law is extant: Si membrum rupserit, nisi cum eo pacit, talio esto, &c. If he have broken a member, unlesse he agree with him, let there be a retalion.

4. Yet this law is so literally to be understood, as that it was lawfull notwithstanding to turne the like punishment into a pecuniarie mulct. Iosephus thinketh it was in his choice that was hurt, whether hee would be satisfied in money, or have the like punishment inflicted. So also Borrhaius. But it is not like, that it was left wholly to his choice, but that it rested in the Judges discretion: as before in another case the womans husband was to set the summe, but the Judges were to moderate it, vers. 22.

4. Therefore it is like that it was in the Judges power to award either the like penaltie, or a compensation in money: as afterward vers. 29. 30. If a mans oxe used to gore, chanced to kill any, the owner was to die, or pay a ransome of money. And the reasons of this commutation are these: The difficultie in the strict law of retalion, that it could hardly alwayes be observed according to the letter: as if hee were sickly and feckly, that was to lose a member, he was like to lose his life also with it: and if a poore man had lost an arme, it was more profitable for him to have amends made him in money, than to have anothers hand cut off: and if the Judge should upon every ones humorous desire have taken away from one an eye or a legge, this would have nourished revenge. It is like then upon these reasons, that the Judges as they saw cause, did make a change and commutation of this penaltie with money, as the Pretors did among the Romanes.

5. Yet although it were in the Judges power to make a commutation of the like punishment with a pecuniarie mulct, the law of retalion notwithstanding is set downe: 1. Both for more certaintie, because one rule could not serve for all pecuniarie taxations, which might be aggravated, or diminished in the discretion of the Judge, according to the divers circumstances. 2. As also, if a mulct of money had beene set, then the mutilation of the members being not warranted, by the letter of the law could not have been inflicted. 3. As also, this severitie in the amputation or cutting off the like part doth imprint a greater terror than if any summe of money, though never so great, had beene imposed, Simler.

Quest. LX. Whether the law of retalion were just and equall.

Dit against the law of retalion it will be thus objected. 1. That sometime there may be great inequalitie in the persons, and then such equall and like requitall is not just: as if a subject should smite a Magistrate and wound him, it is not sufficient for the other to be wounded againe. And in the law of retalion there is no respect whether one did the hurt voluntarily or involuntarily, but onely ut tantum reddatur quanto, that so much be rendred for so much: but it is not just, that if one did hurt another against his will, that the like hurt of purpose should be done to him againe, Tostat.

1. But these objections may easily bee removed. For first this law of retalion must be understood with two observations, that it is given de nocumentis personalibus, concerning hurt done unto mens persons: for it is otherwise in nocumentis rerum, in the damage of ones things or substance: for in that case, not like is to be rendred for like, but at the least double for one, sometime more, chap. 22. 4. The other exception is, that these personall wrongs are understood to be personarum non qualificatorum, of persons not qualified, but of common and ordinarie persons, as is evident by the former law, vers. 15. that he which did smite his father and mother, should not be smitten againe, but was to die for it: Cajetan. Secondly, this law of retalion must necessarily bee expounded of voluntarie and wilfull hurts: for if hee that killed man against his will, was not to bee killed againe, vers. 13. so neither was hee which haddone any hurt unwittingly to his neighbour in any of his parts or members, to receive the like againe.

3. This law then, whatsoever can be objected to the contrarie, was most equall, those times considered. Lex talionis permissa est duro populo, &c. This law of retalion was permitted unto that hard people: Sed charitas fidelium mitigatrix est hujus legis; The charitie of the faithfull and beleevers doth mitigate the severitie of this law, which teacheth them not to seeke revenge, Lippoman. 2. And Augustine further weeth the reason of this law, that it was made to moderate the unreasonable desire of men in seeking revenge: Nonne videmus homines leviter læsos moliri eadem, &c. for doe we not see men being but a little hurt, to goe about to kill, to thirst for bloud? &c. therefore this law, An eye for an eye, &c. non fomes, sed remedium est, &c. is not the kindler, but the limiter of rage and revenge, Lib. 12. contr. Faust. cap. 25.

4. But whereas our blessed Saviour, Matth. 5. 39. having repeated this law, addeth, But I say unto you, resist not evill, &c. he doth not abrogate this law, but onely reeth it from the corrupt interpretations of the Jewes, who hereby tooke unto themselves great libertie in following and fostering private revenge: that blessed Saviour therefore sheweth, that privat men should not seeke to revenge their owne wrongs, nor arrogate unto themselves that power which belongeth to the Magistrate: who if hee did not right their wrongs, they ought with patience rather to beare them, than to bee Judges and revengers in their owne case, Marbach.

Quest. LXI. Of the servants freedome for the losse of an eye or tooth.

Vers. 26. If a man smite his servant, &c. 1. This law is to bee understood of such servants as were not Hebrewes, as may appeare vers. 20. for they were not to use the Hebrew servants so cruelly, Levit. 25. 38. Tostatus thinketh, that if an Hebrew servant received a maime, hee was not onely to bee set at libertie for his maime, but also some other recompence was to be made beside, because hee was to goe out free simply in the seventh yeere. But I rather herein subscribe to Lyranus, that in this case the former law of retalion was to take place, if an Hebrew ſervant loſt either an eye or tooth at his maſters hand. So alſo Iunius.

law

2. If either one ſervant did maime another, or a free man anothers ſervant, Toſtatus thinketh that in this caſe the ſmiter was to buy out his ſervice that was maimed; and if he were not able, then hee was to ſerve in his place: and this generall rule hee giveth, that à quocunque ſervus percutiatur, debet effici liber, of whomſoever the ſervant was ſmitten, hee was to bee made free. His reaſon is, becauſe another had more privilege than the ſervants maſter: if then he was to bee ſet at libertie, if his maſter ſmote him, and maimed him, much more if another did it. Contra. This law onely containeth an exception concerning the maſter: in all other, the former law was to ſtand in force, an eye for an eye, &c. which was no privilege for the ſtranger, more than for the maſter, but a greater puniſhment: the maſter is privileged and exempted from the law of retalion: for if the maſter ſhould have loſt a limme or member for his ſervant, there would never have beene any agreement or accord betweene them afterward: Marbach. And therefore the law provideth that which was leſſe grievous to the maſter, and more beneficiall for the ſervant, that he ſhould have his freedome for his maime, Simler. Privandi enim ſunt dominatu tanquam indigni: For they were to bee deprived of their maſterſhip and government, as unworthy, that could uſe it no more moderatly, Gallaſ.

3. There are foure kinds of ſmiting: 1. When death followed, whereof the law is ſet downe before, verſ. 20. 2. If any limme were periſhed. 3. If a wound were made, and bloud followed. 4. When no skin was broken, but onely the blewneſſe of the ſtripe ſeene: for theſe two laſt there was no puniſhment appointed for the maſter, but onely for the two firſt, the one is provided for before, verſ. 20. the ſecond here, Toſtat.

4. By theſe two parts of the eye and tooth here expreſſed, all other parts which might be in like manner blemiſhed are ſignified, Simler. Lyranus out of R. Salomon nameth theſe parts, for the which, if they were periſhed, the ſervant was to goe out free: the ten fingers, the ten toes, the eares, eyes, noſe, and ſecret parts. And why not alſo the hands and armes, feet and legges, as before in part is ſet downe in the law of retalion? verſ. 24.

5. Procopius and Rabanus doe make this myſticall ſenſe of this law: by the eye they underſtand the minde, by the tooth, diſcretionem per quam ſubtiliter ſententias Scripturarum comminuit, the diſcerning whereby one divideth the ſentences of Scripture: if any doe corrupt the judgement of his ſervant in matters of religion, he muſt leave ſuch a maſter, and go where he may be better taught. But where the literall meaning is plaine, ſuch myſticall applications are ſuperfluous.

Quest. LXII. What manner of ſmiting and goaring of a beaſt is here underſtood.

Verſ. 28. If an oxe goare, &c. 1. One kinde is put for all: à parte totum intelligendum eſt: One kinde of beaſt is named for the reſt: what beaſt ſoever is hurtfull unto man, muſt thus bee ſerved: Auguſtin. qu. 8. in Exod. So alſo Lyranus. And this is agreeable to that law, Gen. 9. 5. At the hand of every beaſt will I require your bloud, Gallaſ. But the oxe is ſpecially mentioned, becauſe the Hebrewes were much given to keeping of cattell: their horſe were for the moſt part brought out of Egypt, Simler. 2. It is underſtood to be ſuch a goring and wounding, as that death followed upon it: for otherwiſe thought one were ſore wounded with the puſh of an oxe, if he died not, the oxe was not in this caſe to be ſtoned, Toſtat. 3. But that other conceit of Toſtatus in this place is not ſo good: ſecus eſt, ſi calce petierit &c. It is otherwiſe, if the oxe ſtrike with his heele, not with his horne: in this caſe the oxe is not to die, becauſe it was his fault that ſtood within the reach of the oxes heele, whereas he purſueth after men to gore them with his horne: for what ſaith he then to the horſe heele, if any were ſtricken to death therewith? was not the horſe to be killed by the equitie of this law? as Lippoman expoundeth it as well de equo calcitroſo, of ſtriking horſe, as of a puſhing oxe. If this law provideth for the ſtroke of the horſe heele, why not for the oxe heele alſo? And this is yet more evident, Gen. 9. 5. that the Lord will require mans bloud at the hand of every beaſt: the heele is as well the oxe hand as his horne. By what meanes ſoever then a beaſt killeth a man, this law was to take place.

Quest. LXIII. Why the oxe that goared was commanded to be ſtoned to death.

Verſ. 28. The oxe ſhall be ſtoned to death, &c. 1. Though a bruit beaſt cannot ſinne, and therefore the puniſhment is not inflicted for any ſinne committed by the beaſt, yet it is injoyned, ad horrorem facti, for the horror of the fact: Toſtat. 2. Quia eſſet horribile ad videndum, &c. Becauſe the ſight of ſuch a bloodie beaſt would be horrible and grievous to men, Lyran. 3. And it might be feared leſt ſuch a dangerous beaſt, if he ſhould live, ſhould kill others alſo, Simler. 4. This was alſo provided for the maſters advantage, who was bound to make good all loſſes which ſhould fall out afterward by his beaſt which uſed to puſh, Toſtat. 5. And by this law men are given to underſtand that if bruit beaſts are not ſpared, much leſſe ſhall they goe unpuniſhed, if they ſhed mans bloud, Gallaſ. 6. The equitie alſo of this law herein appeareth: that ſicut creati ſunt boves in hominum gratiam, &c. That as oxen were created for mans ſake, ſo they ſhould ſerve for the uſe of man, whether by their life or death, Calvin. 6. Agreeable to this law of Moſes (as grounded upon the law of nature) were the like conſtitutions among the Heathen: as Solon made a law in Athens, that if a dogge had bitten a man, hee ſhould be tied in an halter and delivered to him that was hurt. So among the Romanes in their 12. tables it was decreed, that if a beaſt had done any hurt, Dominus aut litis æſtimationem ſolvito, aut eam noxæ dedito: The owner ſhould either pay as was awarded, or deliver up his beaſt to puniſhment. Draco alſo was the author of this law in Athens that not onely men, but beasts, yea things without life, that had beene the meanes of any mans death, should be banished out of the countrie, and cast out: whereupon the image of Theogenes among the Thasians falling upon one and killing him, was adjudged to be cast into the Sea, Simler.

Quest. LXIV. Why the flesh of the oxe was not to be eaten.

His flesh shall not bee eaten. 1. It was neither lawfull for them to eat the flesh themselves, nor yet to sell it to the Gentiles, as they might doe other things, that died alone, Deut. 14. 21. Iun. But the should be cast away, as a cursed and abominable thing. 2. Not so much because being stoned to death, was a thing suffocated, and so they should have eaten it with the bloud, Simler. Oſiander. But tanquam maledictum, &c. as a thing accursed, they were to abhorre the flesh of such a bloudie beast; although the owner should slay this murtherous oxe before it were stoned, it was not lawfull to eat the flesh thereof, Toſtat. quæſt. 30. 3. And this was non propter horrorem facti, both for the horror of the fact: non quia per hoc dominus damnificabatur Dominus bovis, and by this meanes also the owner of the oxe was not damnified, the flesh thereof being unprofitable for any thing, that he might be more cautelous afterward, and take better heed to his cattell, Lyranus. 4. The Hebrewes adde further, that the very skin of the oxe was not to be used to any purpose, but the whole to be cast away as a thing abominable, Toſtat. quæſt. 28.

Quest. LXV. In what case the owner is to die, when his oxe goared any to death.

If the oxe were wont to push, &c. Another case is put, when the oxe chanceth to doe any hurt with the masters knowledge, where divers conditions are required: 1. That the oxe used to push before: the words are in the originall, yesterday, and yer yesterday: a definite time is put for an indefinite: it is not enough if he had once goared before, but he must have done it twice at the least; as R. Salomon, Lyranus. He must have beene knowne in former time to have beene used to push. 2. This also must have beene notified and signified also to the owner: for it may be, that the oxe had used formerly to push, but the owner knew it not, Simler. Or if he knew it, he might denie it, unlesse he had beene admonished by them to take care of his beast, Toſtat. quæſt. 28. 3. He or she must be free, and not a servant, whom the oxe was used to push, goareth to death: for concerning the goaring of servants, there followeth another law, vers. 32. If the oxe goared a man or woman, a sonne or daughter, that is, though they were children, it was all one, Lyran. Some thinke it is understood of the owners owne sonne and daughter, Oleaſter. But the next law as touching the goaring of servants, sheweth that it is rather meant of his neighbours sonne or daughter, Hugo de S. Victor. But it is rather understood in generall, de quoquo, of every free bodie, great or small, man or woman, Iun. 4. In this case the owner, being warned before of his oxe, is to die for it, because he did not keepe him in, knowing him to be a harmefull beast: Quia videtur illud, quaſi immittere aliorum cervicibus: because he seemed of purpose to let him goe to doe mischiefe, Simler.

Quest. LXVI. When the owner might redeeme his life with money.

There be set to him a summe of money. 1. R. Salomon thinketh, that in this case the next of kin to the partie slaine, were to take a peece of money of the owner of the oxe, and they could not but might be compelled to take it: and so he taketh here, ſ. if, for, quia, because. Contra. But the letter of the law is against this exposition: for it is expresly said, The oxe shall be stoned, and the owner also die. But if the owner might at his libertie redeeme his life with money, then he should never be put to death, and so that clause of the law should be superfluous, Toſtat. quæſt. 29. 2. Neither yet is Toſtatus opinion here to be received: Quandoq; poſuit in electione cognatorum, &c. That the law doth put it in the choice of the kinsmen of the slaine, when they would demand the owner to die, and when they thought good to set him a summe of money: and so hee maketh this a different case from that, vers. 22. where the Judges were to set the summe of money, because it was no capitall offence: but here he is to die, whatsoever is required by the adversarie part, without any moderation, or limitation of the Judges, because the offence being capitall, cannot be valued or esteemed by any certaine summe of money, Toſtat. quæſt. 28. Contra, But this is not like, that this was left to the choice of the adversaries: for either they might set such an unreasonable summe, which the owner was not able to pay: or else might use partialitie, which is very like case some owner should die, when another should escape with his life: and so the law should not be equall and indifferent to all. 3. Some thinke that it was in the Judges discretion, to change the punishment of death into a pecuniary mulct, concedimus quod poſſit Iudex decernere, &c. The law alloweth the Judge to determine, &c. Cajetan. Lippoman thinketh that the adversaries were to make the request, ſecundum non iniquum Iudicis moderationem, &c. yet by the moderation of an indifferent Judge. But if it were altogether arbitrarie in the Judge, when a man should die in this case, when to what end saith the law, The owner shall die also? In that case then there propounded he was certainly to die, which sentence by the Judge could not be dispensed with. 4. Therefore I thinke rather with Toſtatus in this mitigation of the former sentence of death, a divers case is put from the former: that the owner of the oxe, non facie ſcivit, did not sufficiently know it, vel non ſatis cavit, or did not take heed, thinking he had sufficiently provided for his beast: what in this case he might be excused: Si ſimplicitas ingenii hominem excuſaret, if the mans simplicitie or forgetfulnesse did excuse him, &c. so that once found to be wilfully negligent and carelesse, the Judge might set him at a summe of money.

QUEST. LXVII. What servants this law meaneth, Hebrewes or strangers.

Vers.32. IF the oxe goare a servant or maid. 1. Some thinke this is generally meant of all servants among the Hebrewes, where lesse respect is had unto servants than unto free men, Vt cura libertatis major vigeret in populo Dei, &c. That there should be more care had of libertie among the people of God, that they come not through their owne default into servitude and bondage, Lippoman. 2. But it is rather understood of such servants as were Gentiles and strangers, and not Hebrewes, as may appeare by the former lawes, vers. 20. 26. which are onely referred unto that kinde of servants, Iun. For in all kinde of percussions and wrongs offred to the bodie, or life, the Hebrew servants had the same privilege which free men had. Againe Tostatus addeth this reason, because if he were an Hebrew servant that was killed, the money should not be given to his master, but so much onely as his service remaining might be valued at, the rest was to goe rather to his children or kindred: as put the case that his service were esteemed at foure sicles yearly, and there remained but one yeare of his service, before the seventh yeare came, then his master was to have but foure sicles of the thirtie sicles: But because the Gentile servants were the masters perpetuall possession, the whole summe which the servant was valued at, that perished, belonged unto them, Tostat. quæst. 3.

QUEST. LXVIII. Why a certaine summe of money is set for all servants.

Vers.32. HE shall give unto their masters thirtie sicles. The common sicle weighed the fourth part of an ounce of silver: so that thirtie sicles made seven ounces and an halfe, that is, so many dollers or seven crownes starling and an halfe: Iun. which is about 37. l. 6. d. of our money. Now although there was great difference in the price of servants: for the men servants were more worth than the maids, and the young and strong than the old and weake; yet a certaine rate is set for these reasons: 1. Some thinke this proportion and summe is named, because out of Cham there issued thirtie generations, Genes. from whom servitude tooke beginning. But this is but a figurative reason, which rather belonged to the ceremoniall than to the politike lawes, Tostat, quæst. 29. 2. These reasons rather may bee yeelded: 1. That whereas the summe for the death of a free man is arbitrarie, vers. 30. but the certaine quantitie is named for a servant slaine by a beast: this was to shew a difference betweene servants and free men, Caietan. 2. Quia casus erat involuntarius, &c. Because this slaughter was involuntarie, and the owners negligence onely is punished, therefore one servant is not set at an higher rate than another, Simler. 3. And beside this moderate and indifferent price is taxed, that the owner of the oxe, and the master of the servant might as it were divide the losse betweene them: that seeing it was done of negligence, non multum gravaret eos in solvendo Dominum bovis: The owner of the oxe should not be burthened with over great payment, Tostat. quæst. 29.

QUEST. LXIX. What kinde of well this law meaneth, where, and by whom digged.

Vers.33. WHen a man shall open a well, or digge a pit, &c. 1. Here are two cases put, when either one uncovereth a well digged alreadie, or diggeth a new well, and leaveth it uncovered: then he is subject to this law: Lyran. For if one made a well, and left it covered, and another commeth and uncovereth it, though he made it not, now he is in fault, and not the other that made it, quia causa mali non tribuit malo, because hee is the immediate cause of the evill or mischiefe that is done, Tostat. quæst. 36. 2. Rab. Salomon thinketh, that if the master commanded another to make a well, and leave it uncovered, that in this case he is not to make good the losse, but he that made it. Contra. If he that made it were a servant, who could not gainsay his masters commandement, in this case the master was rather to be charged with the penaltie than the servant, because he was the cause: but if he were a mercenarie man, or an hireling, then he together with the master that set him a worke, are joyntly to beare the losse, because it was in his power to have refused, Tostat. So then not onely he that maketh such a pit and leaveth it uncovered, but he that also causeth it, are punishable by this law, Iun. 3. But in this other point R. Salomon his opinion is very probable: that this law must be understood of such pits as were made in such common and usuall places, where cattell used to goe: not of such as were digged in solitarie and unfrequented places as in the mountaines: for then it was a meere chance, if any such casualtie happened: Tostat. Lyran. Neither can this law take place now, when men have their severall and divided grounds, wherein they make their pits and wels: which divisions were not so usuall among the Israelites then, Gallas. 4. Though mention be made onely of the oxe and asse, that shall fall into the pit, yet there is the same reason of other cattell, as of sheepe and goats: Lyran. But there is a greater doubt what should bee done, if a woman should perish by such meanes. Cajetan seemeth to be of opinion, that the owner or maker of the pit should be punished in this case, as if hee had not kept his oxe that used to goare. But the life of man is of greater value, than to be taken away, where there is no direct law, but by a kinde of consequent. If indeed any man should of purpose leave open a well to intrap his brother, here he is guiltie of wilfull murther, because he lay in wait for his brother, and therefore was to die for it, according to the law, Exod. But if the pit bee left open of negligence, in this case the digger of the pit shall not make satisfaction for the life of a man, as for a beast slaine deceitfully: because a man in his reason and discretion could better prevent the danger of falling into the pit, than a brute beast.

What was to be done, if a man should fall into the pit.

5. Gregorie doth thus mystically apply this law: Quid est aperire cisternam, nisi sacra scripturæ secreta penetrare, &c. What is it to open a well, but to search into the Arke of the sacred Scripture? Sensum coram non capientibus silentio contege: Let him cover with silence the high and secret sense per-those which cannot conceive them: otherwise he shall be guiltie, si per verba ejus sensus in scandalum, &c. if by his words the simple minde of the hearer shall be scandalized, Gregor. 17. moral. cap. 13.

Thomas doth thus moralize: Then one giveth occasion of falling to another, which is to fall into sinne, quando factis aliquid, vel dictis minus rectum; when hee doth or saith any thing which is not right, whereby occasion is ministred to another of falling, Thom. quodlibet 4. art. 23. ad. 3.

QUEST. LXX. How the live and dead oxe are to be divided, where they were not of equall value.

Vers. 35. If a mans oxe hurt his neighbours oxe, &c. they shall divide, &c. 1. This is not meant of the oxe onely, but of other cattell also, as if one man unwitting kill another: à parte totum intelligendum is, by one part the whole is to be understood, August. quæst. 82. in Exod. 2. And this law is most equall, because it cannot be knowne which of them first assaulted the other, the one being not knowne to push more than the other, that both the live & dead should be equally divided, Simler. The like law the Romans had in the 12. tables, that if ones beast hurt another, the owner should make it good, or deliver the beast, Vide Gel. 20. But this division must bee understood, where the beasts are of equall value: otherwise there should be wrong done to one of them: As if the dead oxe were worth six pound, and the live oxe but foure pound, if both should be divided, then he that was owner of the live oxe should receive foure pound, which is so much as his oxe were worth, and the other should lose two pound in the price of his beast: the meaning then is, that an equall division should be made, where the oxen are equall in value, and the losse of the dead oxe to bee equally borne by them both: as if the live oxe bee worth six pound, and the dead oxe was worth as much being alive, but now is valued at foure pound, then either of them both, the oxen being sold, should have five pound a peece: and so each of them should beare 20 s. losse, Lyran. But where the value was unequall, first the price must bee made up in money, where the oddes was, and then the rest divided: as if the live oxe were worth 12. sicles, and the dead oxe worth but six alive, and foure now he being now both sold, make 16. sicles in all: of this summe, first six sicles must be given unto the owner of the live oxe, to make up the equall value of the dead oxe, which was worth but six; then the rest being ten sicles, should bee divided, to each of them five sicles, and so the losse should bee indifferently borne betweene them, Tostat. quæst. 32. 4. To know then how an equall division may bee made when the beasts are of unequall value, these rules must be observed: 1. Si non perdit uterq; æqualiter, if both do not lose alike, the owner of the live beast, and the owner of the dead, the division is not equall, Tostat. quæst. 33. Medietas damni debet poni super unum, &c. The halfe of the losse must bee laid upon one, and the other halfe upon the other, Lyran. As if the live oxe be worth 12. sicles, and the dead oxe was worth but six, being alive, and now is sold for foure, here are two sicles lost, which must bee equally borne betweene them: so that the owner must have five sicles, and so he loseth but one. 2. Another rule is, that if either of the owners receive more for the live or dead oxe, than it was worth being alive, the division is not good: as in the former example, if the owner of the live oxe should have above 12. sicles, or the owner of the dead above six. 3. If the owner of the dead oxe have lesse allowed him than his dead oxe is worth, as if hee should receive but three sicles, when the dead carcase is sold for foure. 4. If the owner of the dead oxe receive as much for the dead, as he was worth alive, as namely, six sicles, whereas he is worth but foure, the division is unjust; for now the whole losse of two sicles should lie altogether upon the owner of the live oxe, Tostat. quæst. 33.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of keeping the seventh day of rest holy unto God.

Vers. 2. The seventh yeare he shall goe out free. Consider here, Quali affectu Deus diem septimum prosequatur, &c. how the Lord is affected to the seventh day of rest, that in remembrance thereof, he privileged the seventh yeare for the freedome of servants, and the fiftieth yeare of Jubile, Oleaster. Whereby we are taught religiously to consecrate unto Gods honour the seventh day.

2. Doct. Of Gods providence, even in such things as seeme to fall out by chance.

Vers. 13. If God hath offred him into his hand. Discamus non casui aut fortunæ istos occursus attribuere, sed providentiæ Supremi Judicis, &c. Let us learne (saith Cajetane hereupon) to attribute such occurrents, not unto chance or fortune, but unto the providence of the highest Judge. Even these accidents which seeme to fall out by chance, are ruled and governed by the providence of God: as our blessed Saviour saith, that even our haires are numbred; and therefore nothing can happen unto us otherwise than as God disposeth.

3. Doct. The fact is to be measured by the minde of the doer.

Vers. 13. If a man have not laid wait. Videtur externa facta non esse judicanda juxta externum factum specificum, &c. You see that outward facts are not to bee judged according to the externall shew, but secundum facientis animum, but according to the inward minde and purpose of the doer, Lippom. So said to Abimelech, when he had taken Sara, Abrahams wife, I knew thou hast done even with a perfect heart: Genes. 21. 6.

4. Doct.

4. Doct. In all wrongs there muſt be ſatisfaction and reſtitution made.

Verſ. 19. HE ſhall beare his charges. The injurie muſt be freely forgiven him, yet there muſt be recompence and ſatisfaction made for the loſſe and hindrance: ſo likewiſe verſ. 34. The owner ſhall make it good, The law ſheweth that reſtitution muſt be made, for the hurt and damage made unto another, Oleaſter. Therefore a man cannot looke for remiſſion of his treſpaſſe from God, which he hath committed againſt his neighbour, where he refuſeth to make him amends, it being in his power: ſo did juſt Zacheus reſtore fourefold, whatſoever he had wrongfully gotten, Luk. 19. 8.

5. Places of confirmation.

1. Confut. Of the Anabaptiſts, that denie the uſe of the ſword unto the Civill Magiſtrate.

Verſ. 14. THou ſhalt take him from mine Altar, that he may die. This place doth authoriſe and warrant the lawfull power of the Civill Magiſtrate, in the uſe of the ſword, againſt the error of the Anabaptiſts, which would altogether deprive the Magiſtrate of it, urging that place in the Goſpell, Matth. 5. 39. I ſay unto you, reſiſt not evill. But here our bleſſed Saviour repealeth not the law of Moſes, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: but onely reverſeth the corrupt expoſition of the Phariſies, which by this text would give warrant unto privat men, to ſeeke their owne revenge, whereas the law giveth this power onely unto the Civill Magiſtrate. So the Apoſtle alſo ſaith, that the Magiſtrate beareth not the ſword for nought, for he is the miniſter of God, to take vengeance on him that doth evill, Rom. 13. 4.

2. Confut. Againſt the Papiſts, that would exempt Eccleſiaſticall perſons from the Civill pow.

Verſ. 14. THou ſhalt take him from mine Altar, Even the Prieſt miniſtring at the Altar, if he had committed wilfull murther, might be taken from thence, and put to death by the Magiſtrate, as R. Salomon noteth: wherein appeareth the ſoveraigne right and power, which then the Civill Magiſtrate had over the Prieſts of the law: which Toſtatus granteth: but he ſaith, that herein there was great difference betweene the Prieſts of thoſe times, and of ours, and thereupon he putteth this note in the margen, Nota differentiam inter Sacerdotes veteris Teſtamenti & novæ legis, note a difference betweene the Prieſts of the old Teſtament, and of the new law, Toſtat. quæſt. 16. Contra. 1. But herein is no difference at all, for the Miniſters of the Goſpell are no more exempted now from the Civill power, than the Prieſts were then: for the Apoſtle ſaith, Let every ſoule be ſubject to the higher power, Rom. 13. 1. In this generall ſpeech, none are excepted: yea our bleſſed Saviour, who might have pleaded a greater privilege in this behalfe then any, refuſed not to pay tribute for avoiding of offence, Matth. 17. 27. See more of this queſtion, Synopſ. Centur. 1. err. 98.

3. Confut. Againſt the great abuſe of Popiſh Sanctuaries.

FRom mine Altar. This ſheweth that the Temple and Altar, as alſo the Cities of refuge were priviledged places for ſome kinde of offenders, though not for wilfull murtherers. Here then ſomewhat would be inſerted concerning the great abuſe of Sanctuaries and privileged places in times paſt.

1. Concerning the beginning and firſt occaſion of them, it is grounded upon, and derived from the judiciall conſtitutions of Moſes, who by Gods appointment, aſſigned certaine Cities of refuge, for ſome offenders to flee unto, but not for all malefactors: from Moſes the Gentiles ſeemed to borrow the like cuſtome, in giving immunitie and privilege to ſome places: As in Athens, Hercules nephewes builded the Temple of Mercie, and obtained for the ſame this privilege, that they which fled thither for ſuccour, ſhould not by violence be taken thence. In Rome, Remus and Romulus betweene the tower and the Capitol, appointed a place of refuge (called inter nuncium) betweene the hilles: after that the Temples and Altars, and then the images of the Emperours were privileged to give protection to thoſe, which fled thither for ſuccour: And from this example came the like immunities, which were given afterward to the Churches of Chriſtians, which was afterward enlarged unto Church-yards, and Monaſteries: As this reaſon is alleaged in the Imperiall conſtitutions of Theodoſ. and Valentin. that becauſe the Gentiles gave ſuch honour to their Idoll temples, &c. Quantum oportet præſidii ad ſacratiſſimas aras confugientibus præſtare? How much reliefe ought we to yeeld to thoſe, which flie to the moſt holy Altars? The like reaſon is yeelded, Concil. Matiſcin. 2. can. 8. Si mundani Principes ſuis legibus conſuerunt, &c. If worldly Princes have decreed by their lawes, that whoſoever did flee unto their images, ſhould be without hurt, how much ſhould he remaine undemnified, qui ſub gremium matris Eccleſia perierit, &c. which goeth to the boſome of his mother the Church?

The originall and beginning of Sanctuaries.

2. Now for the convenient and neceſſarie uſe of ſuch Sanctuaries and privileged places, theſe reaſons are brought: 1. That they which were innocent, as in the caſe of involuntarie killing, might reſcue themſelves from the rage of the purſuers. 2. They which were oppreſſed by unequall Judges, might finde ſhelter here, till either the Judges wrath were appeaſed, or a more indifferent Judge found. 3. Such places ſerved for the reliefe of ſervants, that were cruelly handled of their maſters. 4. And for ſuch as were extreamely debted, and were purſued of their cruell creditours and exactours. 5. And in time of warre, ſuch places were of ſpeciall uſe, that they which fled thither, might be preſerved from the ſword: As Alaricus when Rome was taken gave commandement, that all they, which fled to the Churches of S. Paul, and S. Peter ſhould have their lives, Simler.

3. Ba

3. But on the contrary, thus it is objected against such Sanctuary places: 1. That by this meanes the course of Justice is hindred, when malefactors are sheltred and rescued from the Magistrate by the immunity and privilege of the place. 2. Servants are encouraged to be contemptuous, and disobedient to their masters, finding succour elsewhere. 3. And unthrifty and carelesse debtors by such devices will seeke to defraud their creditours. 4. And herein was a great abuse committed in former times of superstition, that these Sanctuary places were open to all kinde of malefactors: As thus it standeth decreed, Aurelianens. 1. Homicidas, adulteros, fures, sive quoscunq; reos, &c. Murtherers, adulterers, theeves, or any other trespassers: as the Ecclesiasticall Canons decree, and the Romane Law appointeth, it is not lawfull to draw out of the Church or the Bishops house, but upon oath first given, ut de omni pœnarum genere sint securi: that the parties so taken out, should be secure from all kinde of punishment.

4. Now then to moderate the excesse and abuse herein: neither is it fit that all such Sanctuaries should be stripped of their privileges, as Tiberius the Emperour did, as Suetonius and Tacitus doe write: But such places of Gods service are meet still to be had in reverence, according to that Law of Arcadius, Irruens templum, vel Ministros, capite punitur, &c. That hee which did assault the Church or the Ministers, should be capitally punished, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 10. Yet the privilege of such places would thus be moderated and limited: 1. That they should not bee open to all offenders, but onely to such as trespassed of ignorance, and sinned unwittingly, and such as were empoverished by casualty rather than their owne default. 2. That the number of such privileged places should be restrained, as it is already in the reformed Churches: seeing to all the 12. Tribes of Israel there were allowed but six Cities of refuge. 3. He which was received in the Cities of refuge, was but there a while till his cause was tried, and if he were found guilty, he was delivered up: so it is fit, that such as sought Sanctuary should notwithstanding answer to the Laws. As it was decreed by the Imperiall Lawes, as Cod. 1. l. 1. tit. 15. leg. 5. Iudæi confugientes ad Ecclesias non debent, &c. Jewes fleeing to the Churches, ought not to be received, unlesse first they pay their debts, Ibid. leg. 5. manceri possunt, vel citari in Ecclesia, &c. they may be summoned and cited in the Church, and being so cited, they are bound to make answer, &c.

How Sanctuaries should be moderated.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Of the love which parents ought to beare toward their children.

Vers. 5. I love my wife and my children, &c. Hence appeareth the great love which a man ought to beare toward his wife and children, that he should endure much wrong, yea and chuse rather to serve with them than to have his liberty and freedome without them: Oleaster: which condemneth the carelesse of such parents, which preferre their owne ease and pleasure before the safety of their children, and so deem than the bruit beasts, even than the savage and cruell Beare, which rageth being robbed of her whelpes, Prov. 17. 12.

2. Obser. Of the duty of children toward their parents.

Vers. 15. He that smiteth his father, or his mother, vers. 17. and he that curseth his father, &c. shall dye the death. He that abused his parents in word or in deed, that gave them but a tip or a reviling word, was to be put to death: which sheweth how much the Lord abhorreth stubbornesse and disobedience to parents: Little thought of by too many in our dayes, and the rather because that continually in the Church there is not a beating of these points of Catechisme into childrens heads and hearts by carefull Ministers. O that they would bee once drawne to doe this duty in their severall Churches! how should they find the fruit of it, and the greatnesse of their sinne in so long neglecting it, B. Babing.

3. Observ. Masters not to be cruell toward their servants.

Vers. 20. If a man smite his servant or his maid with a rod, and he dye, &c. Upon this text Rabanus thus noteth: Sicut disciplina opus est in eruditione subjectorum, &c. As discipline is needfull in the instruction of those that are in subjection, Ita & discretione opus est, in exhibitione correptionum, &c. So discretion is needfull in the exhibiting of correction, &c. neither parents should provoke their children by too much rigour, nor yet masters shew themselves cruell toward their servants, as here the Law condemneth the immoderate severity of masters: yea the Apostle would have masters put away threatning from their servants, Ephes. 6. 9.

4. Observ. A wrong in deed must be recompenced in deed.

Vers. 26. He shall let him goe free for his eye. Chrysostome hereupon thus inferreth: If thou hast chastised any beyond measure: Injuria peccatum beneficio est dissolvendum, &c. The sinne of wrong must be dissolved by a benefit: Alioquin, nisi quem factis lædisti, factis placaveris, sine causa oras ad Deum; Otherwise, whom thou hast wronged in deed, if thou doest not appease by thy deeds, in vaine doest thou pray unto God, &c. Hom. 11. in Matth. As then the wrong is done, so the amends or recompence must be made: he that hath offended in word, must by his words and confession acknowledge his fault; but he which hath offred wrong in deed, must also make some satisfaction for it in deed: as here the master for putting out his servants eye, was to give him his liberty and freedome for it.

5. Observ. Superiours are charged with the sinnes of inferiours committed by their negligence.

Vers.29. IF the oxe were wont to push in time past, &c. As by this Law the owner of the oxe was to make good the hurt which was done by his oxe through his negligence, because he kept him not: so God imputeth the sinnes of the children to their fathers, and of the subjects to the Magistrate, si eorum negligentia cessatum fuerit, &c. if through their negligence, that is, of the parents or governours, the children or subjects faile in their duty: as is set forth in the example of Heli, 1 *Sam.*2. who was punished for his remisnesse toward his children: by which meanes he was made accessary to their sinne, Lippoman.

CHAP. XXII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter other politicke and civill Lawes are delivered, which are of two sorts, either concerning every ones private duty, to *vers.*28. or the publike, *vers.*29. to the end of the Chapter.

The private duties are of two sorts, either touching prophane, or sacred actions. Of the first sort are these: 1. Concerning theft, either apparent, as either of simple theft consummate, when the thing stollen is killed, or sold, *vers.*1. or of theft with violence, *vers.*2 3. or of simple theft not consummate, when the thing stollen is yet found with the man, *v.*4. or secret theft, in feeding on other mens grounds, *vers.*5. 2. The Law of burning, *vers.*6. 3. The Law of committing any thing to anothers trust, *vers.*7, 8. 4. Of things taken away, *vers.*9. 5. Of things that are hired, what is to be done, if they decay in his hand that hired them, *vers.*10, 11. what if they be stollen. 6. The Law of borrowing and lending, *vers.*14, 15. 7. Of simple fornication, what is to be done if the father consent, *vers.*16. what if he refuse, *vers.*17.

The sacred Lawes follow. 1. Which are either grounded upon the Law of Nature, which are two, not to suffer a witch to live, *vers.*18. nor to lye with a beast, *vers.*19. 2. Or upon the institution of God, as not to offer unto any strange gods, *vers.*20. 3. Or which concerne the duties of humanity to be shewed 1. Toward strangers, *vers.*21. 2. The widowes and fatherlesse, *vers.*22. whereunto the reason is added containing a commination of punishment against those which oppresse and trouble them. 3. Toward the poore, neither in oppressing them with usury, *vers.*25. nor keeping backe their pledge, *vers.*26. with the reason, *vers.*27.

The publike Lawes are: 1. Concerning duties both toward Magistrates in generall, not to speake evil of the Rulers, *vers.*28. and in particular, toward Ecclesiasticall Ministers, in yeelding their tithes and first fruits, *vers.*29, 30. 2. And touching the generall duty of sanctimony in themselves, *vers.*31. testified by the outward ceremoniall signe, in not eating any uncleane thing.

2. The divers readings.

I. Vers.1. Foure small beasts of the flocke, for one small beast. I. better than, foure sheepe for a sheepe. R.G.S. for the first word is tzon, the other, sheh, and therefore cannot bee interpreted by the same word: than, foure sheepe for a lambe. C. A. for that had beene unequall: or foure sheepe for a small beast. P. V. it might be a goat as well as a sheepe which was stollen, and then foure goats were to be restored again: not foure sheepe: tzon is a noune collective, and signifieth the flocke, as well of goats as sheepe.

I.L.C. Vers.2. He shall not be guilty of blood. L.C. or, of slaughter. I.S. better than, there shall be no capitall crime against him. V. or, blood shall not be shed for him. B.G. or, he shall be subject to death. P. blood shall not be H. that is, the blood of the slaine shall not be imputed to him: it is better referred to the blood of the slaine, than of the killer.

I.C.S. Vers.5. If any man doe feed field, &c. I.C.S. or, cause to be fed. V.A.P. better than, hurt field. B.G.L. the word is bagbar, to feed: and two kindes of feeding are touched, when one willingly causeth his cattell to feed on others ground, or by negligence.

Vers.9. In all manner of trespasse. B. G. V. or, matter of trespasse. C. A. P. better than, in every by-sort of things carried away. I. pashagh, signifieth to trespasse, to rebell, or to depart from the will of the master Olcaster. It is meant of all kinde of trespasse, in withholding another mans goods.

I.V.A. Vers.10. Carried away by violence. I. V. A. or, taken captive. S.L.P. better than, taken of enemies. L. shabah, signifieth to take by force, or drive away.

V.I.A.P.B. Vers.13. He shall bring it for a witnesse. V.I.A.P. that is, that which is torne for a witnesse. C. or, witnesse the tearing. B. better than, he shall bring record. G. here somewhat is wanting: or, bring unto him that which is slaine. L. here somewhat is added: or, bring it to the doore. S. here somewhat is changed.

Vers.31. Torne of beasts. C.A.P. torne caten better than, rafted before of beasts. I.

3. Ques-

3. Questions discussed.

Quest. I. Of the divers kindes of theft.

Verse 1. If a man steale an oxe or an asse. 1. As in the former Chapter the Lawes for the most part tend to the ordring and directing facultatis irascibilis, of the facultie of the minde given to rage and revenge: so these for the most part contained in this Chapter serve to bridle the concupiscible or desiring faculty. Now the object of our desire is either necessarium, or desiderabile, a thing profitable, or pleasurable: First Lawes are given concerning the coveting of things profitable, either such as are not committed unto ones trust, which are stollen, to vers. 6. or such as are: whereunto are referred the Lawes which follow of hiring, borrowing, lending, to vers. 15. Then is adjoyned a Law as touching the other object of carnall pleasure in fornication, chap. 22.

2. In these Lawes of theft, certaine generall divisions of the divers kindes thereof may be gathered: 1. There is a theft that is manifest, when the thing stollen is found with the man, as vers. 4. and a theft not manifest, as when the thing stollen is killed, or sold, vers. 1. Simler. 2. There is a simple theft, when the thing is only pilfred and conveyed, and carried away, vers. 1. and a theft which is joyned with violence, as breaking up an house, vers. 2, 3. Junius. 3. There is a theft consummate, when the owner hath absolutely converted the thing stollen to his owne use, in killing or selling it, vers. 1. and not consummate, when it is found with him whole and entire, Marbach. 4. Cajetan noteth five particular cases of theft here mentioned: 1. De furto consummato, of theft consummate and perfited. 2. De furto nocturno, of the night theft. 3. De furto diurno, of the day theefe. 4. De furto curente, of the poore and needy theefe. 5. And of theefe with whom the thing that is stollen is found.

Quest. II. Why five oxen are restored for one, and for a stollen sheepe but foure.

He shall restore five oxen for an oxe. 1. R. Salomon thinketh, that the cause of this difference, why an oxe stealer restoreth five, a sheepe stealer but foure, is, because he that steaketh a sheepe taketh more paines in carrying it upon his shoulder, than he that driveth an oxe before him. Contra. This is a frivolous reason: 1. It is untrue which he supposeth: for it is more labour to drive unruly oxen, than simple and quiet sheepe. 2. And what if a theefe steale many sheepe? he cannot then carry them all upon his shoulder. 3. Seeing to steale (whether with labour or without) is a grievous sinne before God, nothing can be remitted for any labour that is bestowed in a sinfull act. 4. If the more labour in stealing doth mitigate the theft, then it should be a lesse theft to breake open an house, and steale treasure, than to take a thing out of the yard: but the Law following determineth otherwise, that a theefe breaking by night into an house might be killed. 2. The ordinary Glosse giveth this reason; because an oxe afforideth five commodities, it serveth for sacrifice, for tillage, for food, for milke, and the skin also is serviceable for divers uses: but the sheepe is profitable only for foure of these, for all but the second. Contra. 1. But sheepe also is not onely profitable for these five ends, but for twenty more, by this reason, twenty oxen should be paid for one. 2. Likewise other things, as gold and silver, are employed for divers uses, more than foure or five: so then in the theft of these things also, more than foure or five-fold should be restored. Quæst. 2. 3. The Interlinearie Glosse draweth it to a spirituall sense, by five, understanding the five wits, and by foure, the foure humours of the body, all which must be afflicted by penance. But it is not safe in Civill and positive Lawes to leave the literall sense, and follow a mysticall. 4. Lyranus taketh this double cause, (whom Thomas followeth) Quia bovis difficilius custodiuntur quam oves: For that oxen are more easily stollen than sheepe, because they are more hardly kept: and therefore the more easie theft is more severely punished. But this is not alwayes so: for sometime it is an easier matter to steale many more than one oxe, and more easily may they be conveyed away, and hid out of the way. 5. But Cajetan hath here a conceit by himselfe, urging the signification of the word sheh, which he saith properly signifieth a lambe: so as to pay foure sheepe for one lambe, he taketh to be a greater proportion and punishment than to pay five oxen for one: because they were more prone and ready to steale sheepe than oxen. Quæst. 1. But the word sheh, as Oleaster sheweth, signifieth not only a lambe, but in generall all the small cattell, as well sheepe and goats, as lambs and kids. 2. And beside the facility, easinesse and readinesse of other things are to be respected: as the worth and price of the thing stollen, and the boldnesse and audacity of the theefe.

Wherefore these reasons rather may be yeelded: 1. Quia frequentius furto subtrahebantur boves; because it was a more frequent and usuall thing to steale oxen among the Hebrewes than sheepe: therefore God would restraine the more usuall theft by the greater punishment, Tostat. 2. In hoc erat major fur, & audacia major: In this theft of oxen the losse was greater to the owner, (when his oxe was stollen) and the boldnesse of the theefe greater. Junius: Oportet hunc furem audacem & versutum esse: such a theefe as should steale oxen had need be bold and cunning, because such a theft cannot so easily be hid as of sheepe. 3. Ab. Ezra also giveth this reason: because when a sheepe is stollen, the owner loseth but his sheepe: but in the other theft, perdit bovem, & labores bovis, he loseth his oxe, and the labour of his oxe: this reason also is approved by Oleaster, Marbachius, Gallasius. But Tostatus taketh exception: that if the losse of the oxens labour be accounted here, in the restitution of five-fold, why should it not be respected as well, when the thing stollen is found with the theefe, in which case he was to pay but two-fold, qu. 2. The answer here is ready, because where the oxe is found, though there be an intermission of his labour, yet there is hope of restitution againe: so is there not here, the oxe being killed or sold.

7. Iosephus thinketh, that this Law extendeth it selfe also to other cattell in the fields, as to goats as well as sheepe, though they be not here named. But concerning the asse or horse, because they are not so easily stollen being kept in the house, Tostatus thinketh that the Law of two-fold restitution tooke place as in the stealing of houshold stuffe, and other moveable goods. But it is more like, according to the rule observed before in other Lawes, that by one kinde the rest are understood: and these two, the oxe and sheepe, are given in instance as the most usuall and common beasts: unto which all other great and small cattell should be reduced, as afterward vers. 4. direct mention is made of the asse.

Quest. III. Of the divers punishment of theft, and whether it may be capitall.

NOw concerning the punishment of theft: 1. The licentious liberty of the Lacedemonians is not to be misliked, who punished not theft at all, because they thought it was a meanes to traine and exercise their people in the practice of warre, Gellius. for it being a Morall law, Thou shalt not steale, and so grounded upon the Law of nature, it ought not by any contrary custome to be discontinued. 2. Neither is that Law of Solon, which the Romans also inserted into their twelve Tables, to be altogether approved, as being opposite to Moses Law: for they punished manifest theft with foure-fold, when the theefe was taken in the manner, whereas Moses setteth it but at two-fold: and theft not manifest, when the theefe is not found with the thing that was stollen, they censured with restitution of two-fold: whereas Moses chargeth such offence with foure-fold; because such an one, as hath sold or killed the stollen good, hath added sinne to sinne, having no purpose of restitution, nor there being any possibility thereof. Herein therefore the Law of Moses is more equall than the other. 3. The Law also of Draco is too severe which punished theft with death: the Scythians did so also, but they had some reason for it, because they had no houses or places of defence for their cattell, so that if theft among them had not beene most severely punished, nothing could have beene safe. 4. Nor yet am I of their opinion, that thinke that lex Mosis non pertinet ad politiam nostram, the Law of Moses doth not at all belong to the policie of Common-wealths now: Lippom. Non sumus alligati ad leges Iudaicas forenses: That we are not bound now to the Jewes Civill lawes (at all): Osiand. but that Magistrates may increase the externall punishment whether by death or otherwise, as the circumstance of time, quality and condition of the people require. Contra. 1. As we are not strictly tied in every point to Moses Judicials; so yet the equity thereof remaineth still, which chiefly consisteth in this, in the due measuring and weighing of the nature of sinnes, which are thought to be worthy of death. 2. Punishments externall may be increased, which concerned either pecuniary mulcts, or other bodily chastisement, not touching the life: as Moses punished theft with foure-fold, but afterward the sinne increasing, it was set at seven-fold: Prov. 7. 31. Polan. 3. But where as mans life is only at Gods disposition, this may be safely affirmed, that no humane Law can take away the life of man for any offence, without either generall or particular warrant and direction from God. Law, as is more at large before declared, p. 4. 5. 5. And yet I cannot consent to those that thinke no theft at all ought to be punished by death: for even by Moses Law, a violent theft, as in breaking up of an house was judged worthy of death, it was lawfull to kill such a theefe, vers. 2. Againe, sacrilegious theft was likewise punished in the same manner, as Iakob giveth sentence, that they should not live that had stolne Labans gods, Gen. 31. 32. So Achan was put to death for stealing the excommunicate thing, Ios. 7. The committed of wantonnesse, and without mercie, David adjudgeth unto death, 2 Sam. 12. vers. 6. Clystheme thinketh, that David legem est prætergressus, exceeded the Law, in that he commandeth, beside the restitution of foure-fold, the man to be slaine: and he calleth it superæffluentem Iustitiam, overabounding justice. But the Law of God did beare out David in it: for he which did sinne presumptuously, with an high hand, that is, of malice and obstinacie, was to dye for it, Numb. 15. 30. Such was the sinne of the rich man, whose case there is propounded, which having many sheepe himselfe, tooke away the poore mans sheepe by violence, and had no pity. Further, he that did steale a man, was to dye for it by the Law of Moses, vers. 16. So that it is evident, even by Moses Judiciall lawes, that some kinde of theft deserved death. By the Romane Lawes also, as is extant in their 12. Tables, servants convicted of manifest theft were first beaten, and then cast downe headlong from the rocke. By the Imperiall lawes, a theefe for his first offence was whipped, then if he offended againe, he lost his eares, and the third time he was hanged in Authent. ut nulli Iudici, &c. for now such a theefe sinneth of obstinacie and malice, and committeth against the Lawes and Magistrate: and may by the Law of God be worthily put to death: Similer. So likewise such thefts, whereby the publike peace and safety is violated, as in the Campe among souldiers, or robbing by the high way, where ones life is put in danger: All these kindes being more than simple thefts, may receive the sentence of death by Moses Law: and Magistrates herein may with a good conscience execute the rigour of the Law, upon such violent, outragious, impudent, wanton and incorrigible thefts. But they are wisely to consider every circumstance, and the occasion that draweth one to steale, whether he doe it of necessity to releeve his hungry soule, or of an evill custome and obstinate minde to maintaine his lewd and unthrifty life. In the first case it seemeth to be too sharpe to take away ones life, unlesse he be such an one as will take no warning, but continueth hardened in his sinne. And so for a simple and single theft only (except it be in stealing of men) unlesse it be aggravated by other circumstances concurring, as violence, rapine, obstinacie, custome in sinne, and such like, neither the Law of Moses prescribeth punishment of death, nor yet is it practised by our Lawes, which in such cases intend favour, allowing the privilege of the booke. See before, p. 6.

Qui

Quest. IV. Why the theefe breaking up might be killed.

Verſ. 6. If a theefe be found breaking up, &c. 1. R. Salomon thinketh, that this Law, which alloweth the theefe found breaking up an houſe to be ſlaine, is underſtood not only of theeves that breake in by night, but by day alſo: and that clauſe which followeth, When the Sunne riſeth upon him, they interpret metaphorically, that if it be evident and manifeſt as the light, that the theefe came not only to ſteale, but to kill, that whether by day or night he may be killed. So alſo the Chalde Interpreter ſeemeth to follow the ſame ſenſe: Si oculus teſtium vidit eum: If the eye of witneſſes ſaw him: that is, if it were evident that he came not only as a theefe, but to aſſault.

Contra. Though this be true, that a man might defend himſelfe even by day againſt him that aſſaulted his life; yet this is not the meaning here: the words of the Law are literally, not metaphorically to be underſtood. 2. The reaſon of this difference betweene a night theefe and a day theefe, is, becauſe in the night breaking in, it is not knowne, whether he came to ſteale only, or to murther: but in the day it may eaſily appeare by his armour and weapons, Toſtat. Simler. Beſide, in the day he may call for helpe againſt the theefe, which cannot be ſo well done in the night, when he is left without all other remedy, but his owne defence, Galaſ. Marbach. And in the day he may have witneſſes of his theft, and ſo convent him before the Magiſtrate, Lippom. 3. The Romane Lawes allow not onely to kill a night theefe, but a day theefe alſo, ſi ſe tolo defenderit, if he defend himſelfe by a weapon: Moſes Law much diſagreeth not: though he that commeth only as a theefe in the day time, is not to be killed, but to make reſtitution for, yet if he come with weapons, as having a murtherers intent, now he may be repelled by force, as a night theefe may, not now as a theefe, but as one which commeth to aſſault and murther, Iſidor.

Quest. V. How it is made lawfull for a private man to kill a theefe.

Verſ. 2. And be ſmitten that he dye, no blond ſhall be imputed. 1. Cajetanus here obſerveth, that this Law ſimply alloweth not to kill the theefe: but if a man ſmite him in his owne defence, not intending to kill him, that in this caſe he ſhall be free: Percuſſio fuit intenta, mors autem per accidens ſequuta, &c. He intended only to ſmite him, but death followed accidentally upon ſuch ſmiting: ſo alſo Iſidor. Non probat, ut animo occidendi feriatur. This Law alloweth not, that he ſhould be ſtricken with a purpoſe to kill him: ſed indulget affectui, &c. but it beareth with a mans ſudden paſſion, if in defence of his life it ſo fall out, that he be killed. 2. But this Law ſeemeth not only to permit one to ſmite a night theefe, but directly to kill him alſo, ſo it be not with a deſire to kill him, where he may otherwiſe eſcape: for to defend him and his from violence: which he cannot doe, unleſſe the theefe be killed, Borrh. 3. For ſeeing both the Law of nature and other Civill lawes doe allow a man to defend himſelfe; now, when the Lawes doe arme a man, they ſeeme publicam perſonam imponere, to impoſe upon him a publike perſon, ſo that now he ſmiteth not as a private man, but by authority of the Law, and in this caſe he is tanquam miniſter & vindex Dei, as the miniſter and revenger of God: ſo that he doe it not of a luſt and deſire to be revenged, but intending to uſe a lawfull defence in the ſafegard of his owne life, Gallaſ. the caſe is here all one, as if a man being ſet upon by the high way ſhould kill him that maketh the aſſault upon him, Marbach.

Quest. VI. After what manner the theefe was to be ſold.

Verſ. 3. He ſhould be ſold for his theft, &c. 1. So was alſo the Law among the Romans, that the debter ſhould be given up in bonds unto his creditor. Whereupon Cato was wont to ſay, Fures priſtinos in nervis & compedibus vivere, publicos in auro & purpura, &c. That private theeves lived in chaines and fetters, but the publike in gold and purple, &c. But this cuſtome, becauſe it ſeemed very hard, was mitigated by the Law of Arcadius and Honorius: Gallaſ. 2. But here it muſt be conſidered, whether the theefe were an Hebrew or a ſtranger: if an Hebrew, how great ſoever the debt were for his theft, he muſt be but ſold over for ſix yeeres, for all Hebrew ſervants were to goe out free the ſeventh. And as the theft was valued, ſo ſhould he ſerve more yeeres or fewer. But if he were a ſtranger, he might be ſold over to ſerve all his life, if the value of the theft were great: if it were but ſmall, he was but to be ſold to ſerve many yeeres as might ſuffice to recompence the theft, Toſtat.

Quest. VII. Why the theefe is only puniſhed double, with whom the thing ſtollen is found.

Verſ. 4. He ſhall reſtore double. 1. That is, one beſide that he ſtole, becauſe that is found in his hand which is ſtollen, and ſo reſtored, Inn. And ſo muſt the five oxen be taken which the theefe muſt make good, five with that which was ſtollen, Lippom. 2. Now the reaſons why when the thing ſtollen is found, only double muſt be reſtored, and five or foure-fold when it was killed or ſold, are theſe: 1. Becauſe he ſeemeth to be the more cunning theefe, when the thing ſtollen cannot be found: 2. Adhuc difficilius in inveſtigando, and it is harder to finde out the theft, and therefore he is worthy to be more puniſhed. Simler. 3. Poteſt haberi aliqua præſumptio, quòd vellet reſtituere; There is ſome preſumption that he would have reſtored it, having neither killed nor ſold it, Lyran. 4. Truculentior eſt, & majus damnum infert. He is more cruell, and bringeth greater loſſe to the owner that ſelleth or killeth it, than he that keepeth it.

Thom. further giveth theſe reaſons, why a more grievous puniſhment is inflicted for ſome faults than other: 1. Propter quantitatem peccati, For the greatneſſe of the ſinne. 2. Propter peccati conſuetudinem, Thom. 1. 2. q. 105. ar. 2. ad.

suetudinem &c. For the custome of sinning. 3. Propter multam delectationem, For the more delight in the sinne. 4. Propter facilitatem committendi, &c. For the more easie committing of sinne. All which doe concurre in this case: for both he sinneth more that stealeth, and selleth or killeth: and it seemeth he is more expert and accustomed, and taketh greater delight, and useth more facility in his busines.

Quest. VIII. How a man is to make recompence of the best of his ground.

Vers. 5. If a man hurt field or vineyard, &c. he shall recompence of the best, &c. 1. All kinde of hurting other mans ground is here forbidden, as either with trampling of his cattell as he passed by, or feeding, Lyran. And if this hurt be done unwittingly by the straying of the cattell without the owners privity, he is to make it good, how much more if he doe it of purpose, or in craft? Gallas. 2. Some think he is to make good the losse by giving ground and all, to make his neighbour amends. But that need not, seeing he trespassed only in hurting the fruits of his neighbours ground: it is sufficient to make satisfaction in that wherein the wrong was done. 3. Neither, if the hurt were done in grasse onely, must the trespasser make recompence with the principall of his fruits, as corne, and such like, as Oleaster: but in the same kinde it is sufficient to make restitution wherein the trespasse was done. 4. Neither is the meaning, that if a man did a little hurt in his neighbours ground, that all the best of his ground should pay for it, but so much for so much, Tostat. qu. 4. 5. There was a Law among the Romans, that the beast, quod damnum fecerat, which had done any dammage to another, dederetur noxæ, should be delivered over, to make good the hurt. But that must be understood, when the beast of it selfe without the masters fault did the hurt: but here it is either the masters wilfulnesse or negligence, that his cattell spoile his neighbours vineyard, Gallas. 6. And as the Law is here concerning vineyards and fields, so it holdeth in the rest, as orchards, gardens, pastures, and the like, Lyran.

Quest. IX. Of the breaking out of fire, and the dammages thereby.

Vers. 6. If fire breake out, &c. 1. This is meant of such kindling of fire, when præter intentionem accidentis, &c. when any hurt commeth of it beside the intention of him that kindled it, Lyran. For they which did of purpose set stackes of corne, or houses on fire, were worthy of greater punishment. By the Civill law, vel decapitatur, vel comburitur, vel bestiis subjicitur, he was behcaded, burned, cast to the beasts, can. pœnitent. 40. By the Canon law he was to be excommunicated, Caus. 23. qu. 5. cap. 32. or to want buriall, if restitution were not made, ibid. cap. 33. and he was enjoyned three yeers penance, can. pœnitent. 40. 2. Such breaking out of fire then is here understood, when any made a fire in the field, as husbandmen use to doe in August to burne up the stubble, to make their ground more fruitfull, and some casualty happened, the fire being carried of the winde, or lighting upon some hedge. Tostat. Though no mention be made of the neighbours house and barnes, yet under one kinde the rest are understood, Marbach. 3. If it catch thornes. This Cajetane thinketh to be one of the dammages which must be made good, if it catch the hedge or corne; but it rather sheweth the meanes whereby the fire increaseth, and is dispersed by taking hold first of the hedge, and so finding combustible matter, goeth further. Some understand this to be meant of such thornes, as husbandmen use to set about their corne, to keepe it from cattell, Oleaster. But it is better referred to the hedge wherewith the fields are fenced, Oleaster. 4. There are three things named which may receive hurt by the fire: either the corne reaped and gathered into shocks or stacks; or the standing corne not yet cut downe; or the corne that is mowed or reaped, but yet not gathered together, which is meant by the field: which three the Septuagint expresse by these three words, θημωνας, στάχυς, πεδίον: the corne floore, (where the corne is stacked as in barnes) the eares of corne (standing) and the field: under corne also understand, hay, and trees, and such like, Lippoman. 5. Here then a man is punished for his negligence, because he kept the fire no better: as if he kindle a fire in a windy day, or in a place open to the winde, or neere unto a wood or hedge where there is matter fit for the fire. Otherwise, if he used all diligence and foresight, and there fell out any chance by any other accident, and not by his default: as if any hairy beast comming by chance do catch fire, as a cat or dog; it seemeth that in this case he is not bound to make good the losse; for the fire did not breake out now from him, Lyran. Of this kinde was that hurt which was done to the Philistims corne when Sampson tied firebrands betweene the fox tailes, which running among their corne set it on fire, Tostat. 6. Now this difference may be observed betweene this Law, which enjoyneth full restitution to be made, and the former, where for the feeding of anothers grounds, or otherwise hurting of it by cattell only satisfaction is to be made out of the best of the others grounds, because where the fire stretcheth in, the whole is spoiled, but where beasts breake in, that onely is spoiled which they feed or trample upon, and therefore here amends is made only for part, there for the whole, Tostat.

Quest. X. Why the keeper of things in trust is not to make good that which is lost.

Vers. 7. If a man deliver his neighbour money or stuffe to keepe, &c. 1. The Law is this: that he who hath received another mans good of meere trust to keepe, if it be lost, not through his fault, as if it be pilfred or stollen away, the keeper in trust is not to make it good: and the reason is, because he receiveth no profit by keeping, but did it of good will, and therefore there is no reason that he should be punished for his kindnesse, Simler. Hereunto agreeable is the Law of Alexander: Periculum depositi sit accidens penes deponentem est: The danger of a thing committed to ones trust, happening by chance (as by robbery and stealing) resteth in the owner, not in the keeper. 2. If the theefe that stole them found, he in this caſe ſhall pay but double, becauſe the things ſtollen are not oxen or ſheepe, for then the former Law was to take place of reſtoring five-fold or foure-fold: but money or ſtuffe, which only were to be reſtored double: and this was to be payed to the owner, not to the keeper, becauſe he had no right in the thing, neither was to make it good being loſt. 3. But here other conſiderations are ſupplied by humane Lawes: as whether that thing be onely ſtollen which was committed to the keeper, and all the keepers things beſide were ſafe: for here ſome fraud or default of his may be imagined: or whether the keeper did not firſt offer himſelfe to keepe the things delivered to him, or received not ſomewhat for the keeping, or kept them longer than the time appointed and agreed upon: for in all theſe caſes the keeper is in fault, and was bound to make good the things committed unto him. But theſe circumſtances needed not be inſerted into the Law, becauſe the Lord thought not good to encumber his people with ſuch a multitude of Lawes: and the Lord endued the Judges in thoſe dayes with ſuch an underſtanding heart, that having but the generall principles and rules given them, they could apply and accommodate them to every particular action, Toſtat.

Cod. lib. 4. tit. 34. leg. 1.

Quest. XI. How the fraud in the keeper of truſt was to be found out and puniſhed.

Vers. 8. If the theefe be not found. Now the reſt of this Law ſheweth what courſe is to be taken, if the theft be not apparent: the keeper muſt be put to his oath: 1. In this caſe either the keeper himſelfe might be the theefe, and deteine the things left with him, and then he was to be put to his oath, whether he had not uſed any fraud: if he refuſed to take his oath, he confeſſed himſelfe guilty, and ſo was charged to reſtore the double, as followeth in the next verſe. But if the owner could prove a fraud in the keeper firſt by witneſſes, then he was not put to his oath: for this was to be done where other proofe failed, Toſtatus. 2. Now divers frauds might be committed by the keeper: 1. For he might either deny he had the thing, and ſo refuſe to reſtore it: and by the Imperiall lawes, he that did ſo was condemned as infamous. 2. Or he might alleage, that he had it, but the owner was indebted unto him in as much: but this would not ſerve his turne: for depoſitorius non debet objicere compenſationem: the keeper could not object compenſation of debt, and ſo be his owne carver, as Iuſtinian decreed. 3. The keeper might lend the thing committed unto him to another: ad ſolutionem nihilominus tenetur: yet by the Law he was bound to make it good. 4. He might alſo convert it to his owne uſe, and this was adjudged to be plaine theft: depoſitum convertens in uſus ſuos, furti tenetur: He that turneth the thing committed to him to his owne uſe, is guilty of theft. 3. Or the owner might be the theefe, in ſtealing away that which he had given another to keepe. As C. Marius beſieging the City Toloſſe in France, received of the Governour of the City an hundred thouſand pound weight of gold, which he ſent to Maſſilia to keepe; then he with ſome other diſguiſing their habit went and tooke it away. If the owner ſhould either be acceſſary to the theft himſelfe, or ſhould accuſe his neighbour falſly, he was to pay double unto him by the ſentence of the Judge. Or if he produced falſe witneſſes againſt the keeper in truſt, they were to be condemned in the like, becauſe the keeper ſhould have beene forced by their falſe teſtimony to pay double: and the Law was, that it ſhould be done to the falſe witneſſes, as they intended to have done to their neighbour, Deut. 19. 19. 4. This Law of Moſes of committing things to ones truſt, was more uſuall than that among the Piſidians, which Stobæus maketh mention of, ſerm. 42. by the which he which abuſed the truſt repoſed in him, was put to death: and then the contrary cuſtome among the Indians, where no action at all lay againſt the depoſitorie, that is, him to whoſe keeping things were committed in truſt, Pelarg.

Cod. lib. 4. tit. 34. c. 10. Dioclet. Cod. lib. 4. tit. 34. c. 11. Ibid. leg. 7. Cod. lib. 4. tit. 34. § 3.

Quest. XII. What is to be done with things that are found.

Vers. 9. In all manner of treſpaſſe, &c. 1. This is a generall Law here inſerted, not only of things put to ones keeping, but of other things alſo howſoever loſt, or come to anothers hand, Simler. Lipoman. and it differeth from the former Law in theſe two things; becauſe there mention is made only of goods, as of money or ſtuffe committed to ones charge: this Law alſo ſpeaketh of living creatures, as aſſes, ſheepe: that Law concerneth onely things given to keepe: this is beſide as touching any thing that is loſt, which another challengeth to be his. 2. But where he ſaith, whom the Iudges condemne, it is underſtood, whether depoſitorius convictus, the depoſitory or keeper be convicted, or accuſator temerarius, or the accuſer be found raſh and falſe: whether the one or the other, he was to pay double unto the party grieved, Iun. 3. And this muſt be interpreted according to the former Law, that in dead things they were to make recompence onely of two-fold: but in other living creatures of five-fold, or foure-fold, if the thing ſtollen were killed or ſold, otherwiſe but of two-fold, Toſtat. 4. By this Law it is evident, that not only things given in truſt to keepe, but alſo ſuch as are loſt and found by another, are to be reſtored: for this is a kinde of theft before God, not to reſtore unto the owner that which one finds: as Auguſtine well ſaith; Si quid inveniſti & non reddiſti, rapuiſti: quantum potuiſti, feciſti: quia non inveniſti, ideo non plus rapuiſti: If thou haſt found any thing, and not reſtored it, thou haſt robbed as much as thou couldeſt, thou diddeſt: becauſe thou foundeſt no more, thou tookeſt no more: non te interrogat, non manum, &c. God examineth thy heart, not thine hand, Hom. 50.

Quest. XIII. How this Law of committing things to truſt differeth from the former.

Vers. 10. If a man deliver unto his neighbour to keepe, &c. This Law is divers from the former: for there the keeper is not chargeable, if the thing given to keeping be ſtollen, but here he is to make it good, good, *verſ.*12. 1. Some make the reaſon of this difference to be this: Hoc de depoſito vivo intelligendum eſt: This muſt be underſtood of a living thing, as an oxe or ſheepe committed to one to keepe: the other Law ſpeaketh of dead things, as money or ſtuffe: for the chiefe ſubſtance of the Iſraelites conſiſted of cattell: which therefore the Law intendeth ſhould not be diminiſhed or empaired, but made good to the owner. But concerning other goods, no ſuch reſtitution was to be made, Gallaſ. Lippom. Contra. They are herein deceived, for the former generall Law maketh mention of oxen, aſſes, ſheepe, and generally of whatſoever is loſt, wherein any fraud may be committed. 2. Cajetane and Simlerus give this reaſon: becauſe the other Law ſpeaketh expreſly of things ſtollen out of the keepers or depoſitories houſe, which the owner made choice of for the ſure keeping of his goods: and therefore if they be ſtollen, it is upon his owne perill, becauſe he made no better choice of the place. Now living creatures are not committed to the ſafe keeping of the place, but to the keepers diligence and care, ſo that if they be ſtollen, it is through his default and negligence. To the ſame purpoſe alſo Calvine. But this reaſon giveth not ſatisfaction, becauſe in the other Law, *verſ.*9. mention is made alſo of oxen, aſſes, ſheepe, and other living creatures. 3. This then is the difference, that the former Law ſpeaketh of things committed freely to ones truſt, without any conſideration or reward, but here of ſuch things which a man is waged or hired to keepe: and therefore in this caſe he is to make good that which was ſtollen, and not in the other: Cujus ratio eſt, quia pro cuſtodia habet mercedem: The reaſon is, becauſe he had a reward for his keeping, Lyran. Toſtat. And this appeareth yet more evidently by Iakobs practice, Geneſ. 31. 39. Laban required it of his hand, whether it were ſtollen by night or by day; becauſe he waged with Iakob to keepe his ſheepe, Iun. Gallaſius objecteth againſt this example; that Iakob there had boaſted in vaine, quod ſolus iſta damna pertuliſſet, that he alone had borne theſe loſſes, if it had beene an ordinary thing ſo to doe. Contra. Iakob in that place to purge himſelfe of all ſuſpition of fraud or negligence, alleageth two things; one, that whatſoever was torne, he brought it not to Laban, as the manner was, but made it good himſelfe: and herein Iakob did more than he was bound to doe: the other is concerning Labans ſtrictneſſe, that required of him that which was ſtollen, wherein Laban did according to the common uſe; but yet his hard dealing appeared in exacting of his ſonne in Law, as of a ſtranger.

Quest. XIV. How the caſe of theft differeth from other caſualties in matters of truſt.

Verſ.10. IF it dye, or be hurt, or taken away by enemies, &c. 1. In theſe caſes the keeper was not to make reſtitution, as if it were ſtollen: the reaſon is, becauſe theſe caſualties could not by humane diligence or foreſight be prevented, as the other might, Simler. So Thomas: Depoſitivum poteſt perdi dupliciter, ex cauſa inevitabili, &c. The thing committed to ones truſt might be loſt two wayes, either by a cauſe inevitable, which could not be ſhunned or prevented: and the ſame either naturall, as by diſeaſe and death; or externall, as if it were taken of the enemy, or devoured of wild beaſts: or the cauſe might be evitabilis, ſuch as might be prevented, as in ſtealing. 2. But ſuch caſualty and death is here underſtood, as is not procured by the deceit and craft of the keeper: as if he defrauded the beaſt of his meat, or overwrought it, or if it became lame and broken by his ſmiting and abuſing of it: for in theſe caſes the keeper is to make good the loſſe: yea though he had nothing at all for the keeping, he was to make recompence, if any kinde of way he had put his hand to his neighbours good, *verſ.*8. much more now, ſeeing he was waged for the keeping: and ſo here he is to take his oath, that he hath not put his hand to his neighbours good, that is, that none of theſe caſualties did befall by his default. 3. And by theſe particular accidents, which cannot be prevented, other like unexpected and inevitable chances are underſtood. Caſus fortuitus non imputatur depoſitorio: A caſe falling out by chance bindeth not the depoſitorie, or keeper in truſt, though he have ſomewhat for the keeping: as if the houſe be burned, where he laid up anothers goods, or the ſhip ſuffer wracke wherein ſuch goods were embarked: unleſſe one of theſe three, culpa, pactum, mora intercideris; the keepers fault, ſome compact, or delay come between: for if the caſualty fall out by the keepers default or negligence, or he have covenanted to make good what loſſe ſoever, or keepe the goods longer in his hand than the owner agreed with him to keepe them; in all theſe caſes the keeper is bound to make ſatisfaction what chance ſoever happeneth, *Toſtat. quæſt.*7.

Thom.1.2.qu.105.art.2.ad.3.

The keeper in truſt is not to anſwer for caſualties.

Quest. XV. Whether it were reaſonable, that the matter ſhould be put upon the parties oath.

Verſ.11. AN oath of the Lord, &c. 1. This kinde of probation, to put a man to purge himſelfe by his oath, was uſed when no other witneſſes could be produced, as it is added in the former verſe, and no man ſaw it, that is, alius à cuſtode, none beſide the keeper, Oleaſter: ſo that where other proofe might be had, a man at the firſt ſhould not be put upon his owne purgation, Toſtat. 2. Neither need it ſeeme ſtrange, that the controverſie ſhould be decided by the keepers oath: for no man will commit any thing to another in truſt, unleſſe he were firſt well perſwaded of his honeſty: Suo ergo præjudicio teſtatur eſt, eum eſſe virum bonum: He therefore teſtified by his fore-judgement of him in truſting him, that he was a good man, Calvin: and therefore it is no wrong unto him, to have the matter tried by his oath, who he truſted. 3. Here wee ſee the lawfull uſe of an oath, to be an end of all controverſie and ſtrife, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, *Heb.*6. when no other proofe can be had, Toſtat. 4. And it is called the oath of Iehovah, becauſe they only are to ſweare by the name of God, Genevenſ.

Quæſt

Quest. XVI. What was to be done if the thing kept in trust were devoured of some wild beast.

Vers. 13. If it be torne in peeces, he shall bring it in record. 1. One way to testifie, that it was torne of wild beasts, was to bring a part of the prey, recovered out of the ravenous beasts mouth, as shepheards sometime used to doe, Amos 3. 11. Iun. This sense is expressed by the Chalde, He shall bring that which is torne for a testimony; and the Septuagint, He shall bring it to his gate, that is, shew it to the owner: And therefore Iacob herein approved his faithfull service to Laban, that used not this liberty, to bring that unto him which was torne, but made it good himselfe, Gen. 31. 29. Tostat. 2. Another way to prove it to have beene torne with beasts, was to bring proofe by witnesses, that saw the ravenous beast to carry away the prey: for this sentence hath relation to the former clause, vers. 10. If no man saw it: If then he can bring any that saw it done, though he could shew no part, it sufficed, Lyran. Tostat. 3. And a third way to prove it, where the other two faile, was by his owne oath, as may be gathered, vers. 11. If no man did see it, an oath of the Lord shall be betweene them, &c. Lyran.

Quest. XVII. Of the Law of borrowing and lending: when the thing lent is to be made good, when not.

Vers. 14. If a man borrow ought of his neighbour. 1. Here the third case is put of lending and borrowing: the two former cases were of committing any thing to one to keepe, either without a reward, vers. 8. or for some consideration, vers. 10, 11. Lyran. 2. In the Law of lending and borrowing, more is required than in the other: for then the borrower receiveth a benefit, and therefore tenetur de leviſſima culpa, he is tied to make it good upon the least fault, Tostat. But when any thing is committed to one, and the owner receiveth a benefit, and not the keeper. 3. This Law seemeth chiefly to be meant of such things as have life, which are lent, because it followeth, if it be hurt, or dye: and of such other dead things, as may be used without the corruption or consumption of them, as garments, houshold-stuffe, and such like: but all things which belong to meat and drinke, are corrupted and changed in the use, as wine, bread, flesh, and cannot be restored againe in the same substance: the lending of these things is called mutuum, the possession whereof is transferred to the borrower: the lending of the other is called commodatum, when not the possession, but the use only of the thing is granted to another, of which kinde this Law must be understood, Tostat. qu. 8. 4. Now this case is put, that if the lender be present when his oxe or asse, or other beast decayeth, the borrower shall not make it good: for both he is an eye witnesse, that his beast was not abused by the user, and therefore decayed not by his default, Tostat. As also, præsens rei suæ providere potuit, being present, he might have prevented the danger himselfe, if it were to be helped, Gallas. But if the owner be not by, the borrower shall make restitution; because careleſſe men commonly use more hardly such things as they borrow in the absence of the owner, and therefore this Law meeteth with their unhoneſt dealing herein. 5. Beside, other cases are supplied by humane Lawes, when the borrower is not bound to make good the thing borrowed, as the Civill law is, Commodatorius non tenetur de casu fortuito, niſi se adſtrinxerit, The borrower is not bound where a chance happeneth, unleſſe he have bound himselfe. Unto which may be added, or unleſſe it be by his owne default, or he keepe the thing borrowed longer than the time appointed, Tostat. quæſt. 8. For the Law is, that if a man borrow a certaine thing for a time, to use for some purpose, though the worke be not finished, for the which he borrowed it, at the time which is set, it must notwithstanding be restored: commodatum ad tempus, &c. a thing lent for time, as to make a woollen web for a yeere: Finito anno, licet non completo lanificio, reſtituitur: The yeere being ended, though the worke be not finished, it must be restored. And as the borrower is tied to his day, so is the lender: if he lend any thing for a certaine time, which the borrower useth for some businesse, the lender cannot require it before that time expired, because the borrower might thereby greatly be hindered in his businesse, Tostat.

Cod. lib. 4. tit. 23. leg. 1. Diocletian.

Cod. lib. 4. tit. 23. leg. 2.

Quest. XVIII. Why such a strait Law is made for the borrower.

NOw though it might seeme hard, that the borrower was bound to make good the thing borrowed, though not lost by his default, yet it pleased the Lord thus to ordaine, that they might be as carefull to keepe their neighbours things as their owne, that they might be the readier one to lend unto another for their necessity: this facility and readinesse to lend is by divers Lawes enjoyned. 1. That they should be willing to lend, though the seventh yeere of remission approched, Deut. 15. 9. 2. That they should take no pawne of their brother, for that which he borrowed, of such things as he lived by: the upper and nether milstone, Deut. 24. 6. And if they did, to restore it presently: As it followeth, vers. 26. if they tooke a mans rayment to pledge, they should restore it before the sunne set. They were commanded, not to be too greedy in exacting that which was borrowed: as they were not to goe into the house to fetch it, but to stand, and aske it at the doore, Deut. 24. 11, 12. 4. If the yeere of remission came before the borrower were able to repay that which he had borrowed, they were to remit it, Deut. 15. 2. Probabile enim erat, ut illi qui commodè reddere poſſent, ante ſeptimum annum reddederent. For it was probable, that they which could conveniently restore the thing borrowed, would doe it before the seventh yeere, and not of purpose defraud the creditor and lender. See Thomas. For cause therefore, that they might be more willing to lend one unto another, this Law requireth an exactnesse in the borrower, to preserve that which is lent, and to restore it: And so the Civill law also is:

2. 2. q. 105. art. 2. ad. 4.

Nemo

cod. lib. 4. tit. 23. d. 4. Nemo commodatum retineat sub pretextu debiti, &c. That no man should keepe backe the thing lent, pretending debt.

QUEST. XIX. Why the hirer is not to make good the thing hired, as when it is borrowed.

Vers. 15. If it be an hired thing, &c. 1. Some make this all one Law with the former, and take it to be a reason given, why the borrower is not to make good that which is lost in the presence of the owner, because it came, that is, was hired for his money: So Simler. Vatab. Lippom. Oleaster. 2. But I rather consent herein to Lyranus, Tostatus, Gallasius, Iunius, that make this a divers Law from the former: that speaketh of lending freely, this of hiring and letting out for money: and therefore he that hireth a thing for his money, minus tenetur de custodia animalis, is lesse bound than the borrower, to the safe keeping of the thing so hired, Lyran. And the reason is, because, locatio fit ad utilitatem locatoris, the letting out for money is for the profit of him that letteth, Tostat. So Cajetane expounderh well, Absq; differentia praesentia, vel absentiae Domini non tenebitur conductor ad solvendum animal casu confractum, &c. Here without any distinction of the presence or absence of the master, the hirer is not bound to make good the beast which is by chance hurt or dead, because it came for his hire. 3. Yet in this case also, tenebitur de dolo, vel lata culpa, the hirer shall be bound, if he used deceit or were in a manifest fault; otherwise not, as, si fecisset animal illud nimis laborare, if he caused the beast which was borrowed to be over laboured, Lyran. But in the case of borrowing he is bound not only to make restitution where any thing is lost by his fraud and wilfull default, sed tenetur de levissima culpa, but for every small fault, overslight or negligence, is he bound to make satisfaction, Tostat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XX. Whether the fornicator by this Law be sufficiently punished.

Vers. 16. If a man entise a maid not betrothed, &c. 1. This Law enjoyning only unto the fornicator marriage with the virgin corrupted, if her father consent, may seeme to be too easie and gentle: but here it must be considered, that in these civill Lawes the punishment is not alwayes answerable to the sin: for even the sinne of fornication is one of those which without Gods mercy excludeth out of the kingdome of heaven: but the intendment of this Law is, to bridle such inordinate lusts, and to restraine them, that they still increase not, Simler. 2. And beside, it must be considered, multa pro rudiente populi tolerari, that many things in that Common-wealth were tolerated, because of the rudenesse of the people, Gallas. 3. Although the offender by this meanes doe satisfie the politicke Law, in marrying the virgin by him corrupted, yet, coram Deo, &c. in the presence of God he is not cleared from this offence, in making amends by marriage, and giving her a dowry, Osiander. But repentance beside is necessary for the expiation of this sinne. 4. The speciall scope of this Law is to provide for the virgin thus abused, that shee being made by this meanes unapt for any marriage with another, should be taken to be his wife that had done her this wrong. 5. The like Law there was among the Athenians, that he which defiled a maid should take her to be his wife. But among the Romans, there was a more severe Law: that he which had committed fornication, if he were of good sort, should be punished in the losse of halfe his goods: if of base condition, he should be banished, Simler. 6. This Law is onely concerning virgins not betrothed: for to lye with them which were espoused to another, was death by Moses Law, Deut. 22. 23.

QUEST. XXI. Why the women committing fornication be not as well punished by the Law.

AGaine, this Law may seeme to be defective, as in laying so easie a punishment upon the man, so imposing none at all upon the woman. 1. But the reasons thereof may be these: the woman might be entised and deceived upon hope of marriage: and it was sufficient punishment unto her, the losse of her virginity: and beside, being under her fathers power, and so having nothing of her owne, shee could not be charged to pay any summe of money, as the man is, Simler. 2. Yet the high Priests daughter, if she played the whore in her fathers house, was to be burned, because shee had dishonoured her fathers house, Levit. 21. 9. therefore she is to be excepted out of this Law, Tostat. quest. 9. 3. The word patah, here used, signifieth to decline, or turne: so that whether he entise the maid, blanditiis, vel mendaciis, by faire promises, or by lying words: whether he promised her marriage or not, he is bound by this Law to take her to wife, Oleaster. 4. And as this Law is meant for the one party of virgins not betrothed, so is it intended on the other part, that he must be a single man that is by this Law enjoyned to marry her, Iun. If he were married, it seemeth he was rather to endow her, than marry her; because the father would not willingly consent to give his daughter to one that was married already. 5. The word shacab, signifieth to lie, sleepe: non est peccatum dormire cum puella, it is no sinne (saith Tostatus) only to sleepe with a maid, if no other thing be committed: though he follow the Latine text, reading, and sleepe with her: it is better therefore to read, lie with her, Iun. Vatab.

QUEST. XXII. What kinde of dowry this Law speaketh of.

HE shall endow her. There is difference betweene Dos, the dowry, and donatio propter nuptias, the marriage gift or joynture: this is not meant of the joynture which the man should make his wife, but of the dowry which the father used to give in marriage with his daughter, as may appeare by these reasons: 1. The endowing of the wife is inflicted here as a punishment: the man for his fault is enjoyned to doe that which otherwise he was not bound to doe: but the husband alwayes bestowed upon his wife a marriage gift: therefore this Law meaneth, he shall beare also her dowry, which his wife should bring bring with her, or her friends give with her. 2. If it were understood of the joynture or marriage gift, it had beene superfluous to say, he shall endow her, and take her to wife: for in taking her to wife, the husband was of ordinary course to bestow on her a marriage gift or joynture. 3. If he have her not to wife, her father not consenting, yet he was to pay her dowry, vers. 17. that is, not a joynture, or marriage gift, but that portion which her friends used to give with her, Tostat. qu. 9.

QUEST. XXIII. How this Law differeth from that, Deut.22.29.

SOme make this Law all one with that, Deut.22.29. where the man which defiled a maid, is enjoyned to pay 50. sicles to her father, which R. Salomon thinketh to be the certaine dowry of a virgin; and so they say, that there is duplex dos, una quæ datur uxori, alia quæ datur patri; a double dowry, one which is given unto the wife, the other unto her father, Lyran. Simler. Gallas. Lippom. But these two appeare to be divers Lawes: 1. This case is put when a man entiseth a maid, and she consenteth and is willing therewith: but there the Law speaketh of the violent taking of a maid, Iun. Tostat. 2. There the summe of 50. sicles is paid to the father for the wrong done unto his daughter, it is not given in the name of a dowry: for there could not be any certaine rate or summe of money appointed for every maids dowry: some might give 1000. sicles with their daughter, others not thirty: therefore that summe of 50. sicles is not prescribed here; but it is said in generall, He shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins, that is according to their state and condition, as dowries used to be given with virgins and maids of like parentage, calling and birth, for a poore maid had not so great a dowry as one of noble stocke and high degree. 3. The maid by violence first defiled, and then taken to wife, by that Law could never be put away, Deut.22.30. but no such thing is mentioned here: he that taketh a maid to wife, whom with her owne consent he before defiled, might according to the generall liberty then permitted, Deut.24.1. if there seemed unto him cause, after put her away: and the reason of this difference may be this: he that taketh a maid willingly, will not put her away without cause; but he that taketh her against his minde, never loved her, and so upon every occasion would be ready to send her away, whether there were cause or not, if he were not by Law restrained of his liberty, Tostat. qu. 10.

QUEST. XXIV. What was to be done if the fornicatour were not sufficient to pay the dowrie.

He shall endow her, &c. But what if the man, which had committed this wrong to a maid, were not able to endow her, the question is, what course was then to be taken: 1. If he were a free man, and an Hebrew, he was to be sold as in the case of theft, vers. 3. and to serve so many yeeres, as might raise this sticke or dowry for the maid: but longer than for six yeeres he could not be sold, for all Hebrewes were to be set free in the seventh. 2. If he were a free Gentile, he might be sold for his life, or for so many yeeres as sufficed to make up the dowry. 3. If he were an Hebrew servant, if his master refused to pay so much money as might serve for the dowry, then he was to deliver up his servant to be sold over for so many yeeres as might recompence the dowry, before the yeere of remission came: and if the yeeres which remained were not sufficient, he might be sold over againe. 4. If he were a stranger or Gentile being a servant, then he might be set over to serve his whole life, Tostat. quæst. 12.

QUEST. XXV. What if the fornicatour refused to take the maid to wife.

YEt further it will be enquired, what if the maids father would consent, and yet the party will neither take her, nor endow her? 1. By the Civill lawes, if he be a noble person, he should be banished that had defloured a virgin; if of base condition, he should be whipped: and if they ravished a maid against her will, in that case they were to suffer death. By the Canon lawes, if one refused to marry her whom he had defiled, he was to be throughly whipped, and excommunicate, and enjoyned penance till he had fully satisfied. 2. And though this be omitted in Moses Law, yet so much may be inferred and collected by the letter of the Law, that as he was necessarily to endow her (for the future of the Indicative mode, semper inducit dispositionem necessariam, doth alwayes imply a necessary disposition) so he was of duety to marry her: like as in another case of forcing a maid, he was to be compelled to take her to wife, and neverto put her away, Deut.22.30. Tostat. quæst. 11.

Instit. de public. judic. § secundo. Extra de adulter. in capit. pervenit.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether this Law were generall without any exception.

NOw although this Law be propounded generally, if a man entice a maid, he was to endow her and marry her; yet there were some exceptions to be made: 1. For whereas the Israelites were charged to take them wives out of their owne tribe, Numb.36. it is evident, that if the maid were of another tribe, then the man could not take her to wife: but because this case was very rare and unusuall, seeing the tribes, after they were setled in Canaan, when these Lawes were to take place, dwelt every one apart by themselves, and so there was no feare of such unlawfull entercourse and commixtion, betweene a man and a maid of divers tribes: the Law therefore is silent in this point: for ad ea quæ raro accidunt, jura non scribuntur, lawes are not applied to those cases which fall out seldome. 2. If he were a Gentile and a professour of another religion, which committed this sinne with a maid, neither could she in this case bee given him to wife; because they were forbidden to make marriages with such, Deut. 7.3. And the Israelitish women were to match in their owne tribe, and therefore not with strangers. 3. If an Hebrew had trespassed herein, neither could he have the maid to wife, whom he had abused: for he was not to endow her, which a servant could not doe: for either he had sold himselfe into servitude, because

cauſe he was poore, or was ſold by the Magiſtrate, to make ſatisfaction for ſome offence which he had committed, and therefore being poore he had not wherewithall to endow her, and ſo could not take her to wife. 4. Beſide, if it were the Prieſts daughter with whom he had wrought this folly, ſhe could not become his wife, for ſhe was in this caſe to be burned, Levit. 21. And the man likewiſe by equity of the ſame Law, being guilty of the ſame offence. 5. Yea if the high Prieſt himſelfe had defloured a maid, he could not take her to wife, becauſe he was forbidden by the Law to marry any polluted, or an harlot, Levit. 21. verſ. 14. 6. If alſo one had defiled a maid neere of his kin, being within the degrees of marriage forbidden, they were both to ſuffer death for it, Levit. 20. and therefore could not marry together. This Law therefore being generally propounded, muſt yet be interpreted and expounded according to other Lawes: for they muſt all be made to agree together, Toſtat. qu. 12.

Quest. XXVII. How farre this poſitive Law againſt fornication doth binde Chriſtians now.

And as this Law did not hold generally in the old Teſtament, ſo neither is it now neceſſary, that whoſoever hath committed fornication, ſhould be compelled to marry the maid ſo abuſed: 1. For though it were admitted, that this Judiciall and poſitive Law of Moſes were in force ſtill: yet ſome exceptions muſt needs be admitted: as if they are too neere of kin: for no ſuch marriage can be allowed within the limited degrees. As Saint Paul willed the young man, that had committed fornication with his fathers wife, to be excommunicate for that fact, 1 Cor. 5. he was not ſuffered to marry her. Againe, if a Chriſtian maid ſhould commit fornication with an Infidell, with a Turke, Jew, or Heretike, in this caſe the rule of the Goſpell will not allow marriage: for Chriſtians muſt marry only in the Lord, 1 Cor. 7. 39. therefore not with thoſe which are blaſphemers of God, and enemies to true religion: and the Apoſtle ſaith, Be not unequally yoked with Infidels, 2 Cor. 6. 14. 2. But Toſtatus bringeth in two other exceptions, as if the maid defiled be either a profeſſed Nunne, and ſo devoted to Monaſticall and ſingle life; or the man entred into orders, unto the which the vow of ſingle life is annexed: in neither of theſe caſes can (ſaith he) marriage be admitted after fornication committed, Toſtat. queſt. 12. Contra. But againſt both theſe exceptions I will oppoſe the holy judgement of the Apoſtle: and touching the firſt, I urge that Apoſtolicall ſaying: It is better to marrie, than to burne, 1 Cor. 7. 9. If then Nunnes are ſubject to this burning, as it appeareth they are by their ſecret fornications, the fruits of their burning luſt, then according to the Apoſtles rule, it were better for them to marry. Concerning the ſecond, I ſay with the Apoſtle, Marriage is honourable among all men, &c. Heb. 13. 4. therefore it is no diſhonour nor diſparagement to holy Orders. 3. But the beſt anſwer is, that this politike Law of Moſes doth not binde us now, otherwiſe than in reſpect of the generall equity thereof, that fornication being a breach of the Morall law, ſhould be ſeverely puniſhed: in every part and circumſtance of the Law, it is not neceſſary now to be kept. For as by Moſes Law, it was left in the power of the maids father, whether he thought it fit to give his daughter in marriage to the fornicatour: ſo the Magiſtrate being the common father of the Common-wealth, may in his diſcretion determine when it is fit for ſuch marriages to proceed, when otherwiſe, Simler.

Quest. XXVIII. Why the Law requireth the conſent of the father to ſuch marriages.

Verſ. 17. If her father refuſe, &c. 1. There is great reaſon that this power ſhould be given unto the father, to chuſe an husband for his daughter: for many times it may ſo fall out, that the fornicatour is ſuch a lewd and ill diſpoſed perſon, that his daughter were but caſt away, to be beſtowed upon ſuch an one. And if the fornicatour were neceſſarily to marry the maid ſo abuſed, many would make practice of it of purpoſe, by this meanes to get them rich wives, Gallaſ. 2. But becauſe ſometime, if it were wholly left unto the maids father, to give his daughter in marriage, or to take a portion of money for her dowry, ſome might aske unreaſonable ſummes, therefore the Law defineth, that upon the refuſall of the father the fornicator ſhall pay money according to the dowry of virgins, ſuch as parents of that ſame condition uſed to give with their daughters, Toſtat. 3. And beſide it muſt be underſtood, that the ſame refuſall muſt be reaſonable: Si officium piorum parentum præſtant, &c. If they performe the office of good and godly parents. For what if he refuſe to give his daughter, becauſe he would match her into a bad ſtocke, only reſpecting wealth, not religion and piety? in this caſe God is rather to be obeyed than man: and the duty to the firſt table to be preferred before the ſecond, Borrhaius. 4. Confirmatur hoc patria poteſtas in liberos, &c. The authority of the father is confirmed by this Law toward their children in reſpect of their marriages, that they ſhould not be contracted without their conſent, Marbach.

Quest. XXIX. Why next to the Law of fornication followeth the Law againſt witchcraft.

Verſ. 18. Thou ſhalt not ſuffer a witch to live, &c. 1. Some thinke that this precept is joyned to the former, Quia ſortilegia plerunq; fiunt in his, quæ pertinent ad actum carnis, &c. Becauſe ſorcery is often uſed in thoſe things which belong to the carnall act, Lyran. So alſo Cajetane: Ex ſuperiori lex iſta ſtupro virginis, &c. It may be this Law is joyned to the former of whoredome committed with a maid, to inſinuate that ſorcery is much uſed to ſet forward venery and uncleane luſt. 2. Tostatus maketh this the reaſon of this connexion, that as moſt of the Lawes in the former chapter concerne the ordring and directing, partis iraſcibilis, of the angry part of the minde: the Lawes hitherto in this chapter, partis concupiſcibilis, of the coveting part of the minde: now theſe following belong to the direction partis rationalis, of the reaſonable part of the minde, the judgement and underſtanding, that should not be corrupted with evill arts, *Teſtat. qu.*12. 3. But the reaſon rather is, that as fornication of the bodie, immediatly before touched, is odious before God and man, ſo much more is the ſpirituall fornication of the ſoule abominable, when any ſeduced by the devill into witchcraft, or any ſuch devillish trade, doe forſake God, and commit moſt groſſe idolatrie, Simler. And ſo hereunto agreeable is that law which followeth in the next verſe but one, verſ. 20. that hee ſhould be ſlaine, that offereth unto any god, but to the Lord.

QUEST. XXX. What kinde of witchcraft is here underſtood.

A Witch. 1. The word is mecaſhepheh, which ſignifieth, as Oleaſter out of R. Abraham, one that changeth any thing before the ſight: wee call them Juglers which deceive the ſight, and caſt a miſt before the eyes. The right Latine word is præſtigiatrix, Iun. Mont. and, one which by legerdemaine deluds the eyes. 2. But under this kinde, by a Synecdoche, all other ſorts of witchcraft, ſorcerie, inchauntment are forbidden: as Hydromanta, which uſe divination by water; Aeromanta, by the aire; Pyromanta, by the fire; Capnomanta, by ſmoake; Alectriomanta, by the crowing of Cockes; Pſychomanta, that conſult with the ſoules of the dead; Aſtromanta, which divine by the inſpection of flower; Icthuomanta, by fiſh; Libanomanta, by incenſe; Cheiromanta, by the hand; Necromanta, diviners by the dead; Gaſtromanta, which divine and give anſwers from within out of their bellies: and all other of the ſame devilliſh profeſſion, as hereof before. 3. Inſtance is given here of women, and the word is put alſo in the feminine, Quia illud genus maleficii crebrius reperitur in fœmina, Becauſe that kinde of ſorcerie is oftner found in women: Lippom. Quia procliviores ſunt in hoc ſcelus ex infirmitate mulieres, Becauſe women by the infirmitie of their ſex are more prone unto this miſchiefe: and women are named, that no compaſſion ſhould bee ſhewed, or mercie unto the weaker ſex, if they be thus ſeduced, Iun. Nec minus hoc damnantur mares, quam fœmina, Becauſe men witches are no leſſe condemned here, than women, Gallaſius. qu.8. in 7. p.92.

QUEST. XXXI. Whether love may bee procured by ſorcerie.

It becauſe it is the opinion of ſome, as is before ſhewed, *qu.*29. that this law of witchcraft is annexed to the former law againſt fornication, becauſe ſorcerie may be uſed to procure unlawfull luſt, it will not bee amiſſe ſomewhat to touch that point. 1. Virgil, a great practitioner in ſuch feats, ſhewes in his 8. Eclog. how Daphnis was compelled to come by certaine inchanted love verſes, where hee thus ſweareth this verſe, Ducite ab urbe domum mea carmina, ducite Daphnin, My verſes goe, from citie bring yee Daphnis home to mee. And Hierome in the life of Hilarion, as Teſtatus citeth him, reporteth how a young man enamoured with a virgin, by certaine words and enchaunted figures put under the threſhold where the maid was, drave her into ſuch fits of raging love, that ſhee tore her haire, and gnawed her teeth, and often uſed to call the young man by his name: this maid thus tormented, was at length brought to Hilarion, who by his prayers healed her. 2. Now then this inſtigation unto love, or luſt, and diabolicall ſubtiltie, may be procured three waies: One is the ordinarie meanes, whereby Satan by externall objects uſeth to tempt men, thereby ſtirring and provoking their natural luſt: as David was inflamed at the ſight of faire Bathſheba: but here needeth no other ſorcerie or inchantment than the corrupt inclination of a mans owne affection: the devill doth but offer the occaſion, and ſhew the bait, hee draweth not the affection: but the corruption of the heart of it ſelfe is ready to apprehend and lay hold of the object ſet before it. Another way there is, whereby the affection is ſtirred, as when the evill ſpirit entereth, and poſſeſſeth any with madneſſe and phrenſie for the time; not changing the underſtanding, or will, but troubling the vitall ſpirits, and inflaming the blood, and ſo incenſing unluſt. The third way is, when Satan entreth not to diſquiet the bodie, and trouble the ſpirits, but externally offereth violence, tranſporting and carrying (by Gods permiſſion) bodies from place to place: which is no hard thing for Satan to doe; and ſo hee may bring one to the place where their lover is, *qu.*13.3. But here two things are to be conſidered: 1. That Satan directly cannot worke upon the will of any in the immediate change or alteration of their affections, but hee doth it by meanes, either internall, in moving by objects, or by internall provocation and ſtirring of carnall luſt. 2. That he hath the like power over the ſervants of God, which he exerciſeth over carnal men which are his owne vaſſals: he raigneth in the children of diſobedience, as he liſteth: as the Apoſtle ſaith, They are taken of him at will, 2 *Tim.*2.26. But the faithfull doe reſiſt him by faith, 1 *Pet.*5.9. So that his tentations cannot prevaile upon them, to intangle them further than God ſhall ſee it good for the triall of their faith. This is moſt evident by that ſtorie of Iuſtina the Virgin whom Cyprian (then a diſſolute young man, and given to Magicke, but afterward a moſt holy and conſtant Martyr) loved exceedingly: and when he was not able to prevaile with her by any allurements, hee called for the Devils helpe to bring her unto him, who likewiſe chuſed the evill ſpirit away, *Ex Teſtat. qu.*13.

QUEST. XXXII. Whether witches can indeed effect any thing, and whether they are worthie to bee puniſhed by death.

NOw further by this ſentence of the law, which adjudgeth witches worthie of death, they are found by ſome to be in error, which thinke that witchcraft is nothing but nudum phantaſma, a verie phantaſie: that ſilly women imagine they doe things, which indeed they doe not, but in their owne conceit and imagination. Firſt, I will examine the objections which are made in the defence, or at the leaſt the excuſe of theſe wicked women, and in favour of them, for the mitigation of their puniſhment.

1. They ſay that this law is made de veneficiis, of ſuch as kill and deſtroy by ſecret poiſons, and noyſome drinks, it concerneth not witches.

Oo Anſw.

Answ. 1. Indeed the Septuagint reade, φαρμακους, and the Latine translateth, maleficos, workers of mischiefe: but they are both in error, for the Hebrew word, mecasshephah, is put in the feminine, whereas they both interpret it by the masculine: And the word, mecasshephim, is applied to those which worke by evill spirits, and have confederacie with them, as Exod. 7. 10. it is given to the Egyptian Sorcerers and Magicians. 2. The practice of poisoning belongeth to the sixth Commandement, Thou shalt not kill, whereas witchcraft here forbidden is a breach of the first Table, Simler.

2. These fillie women can effect nothing: they imagine they doe many things, but it is only in their owne conceit.

Answ. 1. True it is, that they cannot effect what they would, for the Lord restraineth the power of the devill, by whom they worke: as he did, when the Sorcerers attempted to bring forth lice, and could not, Exo. 8. 2. Yet it cannot bee denied, but that they effect many strange things by the operation of the devill: as the Magicians of Egypt could turne their rods into the similitude of Serpents, and water into the likenesse of blood: and the witch at Endor could cause the likenesse of Samuel to appeare, which was not indeed Samuel, but the devill taking upon him his shape. So it is no strange thing by the operation of Satan, when they take a mans garments, and beat them to cause the bodie of the man to feele the smart. Simler. 3. And if they did no hurt, and could effect nothing; why was this law ordained against them? God gave no superfluous or unnecessarie lawes to his people, nor without great reason. 4. Though they should effect nothing, yet their wicked desire and endevour thereunto is worthie to bee punished.

Objections made in the excuse of witches, answered.

3. Witches many times doe good, and heale men of their infirmities and diseases: therefore they deserve no such punishment.

Cod. lib. 9. tit. 18. leg. 4.

Answ. 1. Indeed in the Civill law such a decree is extant, made by Constantine, Qui per incantationes intemperiem aeris & grandinis evertit, puniendus non est, &c. Hee which by inchantment turneth away the intemperate season of the aire and weather, is not to bee punished. But it is no marvell that such things were tolerated then, when they came newly from Gentilisme, wherein such things were not only suffered, but honored and rewarded. 2. We have a more perfect rule out of the Scriptures, that no such unlawfull meanes are to bee used, no not to a good end, as to procure health, or such like: for this cause the Prophet reproved the King of Israel, having received hurt by a fall, because he sent to the god of Ekron for helpe. And to this purpose Augustine saith well, as he is cited in the Decrees, Si aliquando sanare videntur languidos, id Deo permittente fit, ut homines probentur, &c. If they seeme sometime to heale the diseased, it is done by Gods permission, that men might bee thereby proved, &c. And againe hee saith, Laquei sunt adversarii, mederi non possunt; They are the devises snares, they cannot heale.

2 King. 1.

Caus. 26. q. 5. c. 18.

Caus. 26. q. 7. c. 15.

4. Object. But the meanes which they use are wholesome, and medicinable, as herbs and oyntments, and therefore herein they are not to bee found fault with.

Answ. 1. For the most part they use such meanes, whereof no naturall or apparent reason can be given, as to burne the thatch of the house, to cut off some part of the beast bewitched, and burne it, and such like. Concerning such things, Augustine giveth a good rule, Remedia & ligatura quae medicorum disciplina condemnat, non adhibenda, &c. Such remedies and ligatures which the skill of Physicke condemneth are not to be used. 2. He saith further, Ex traditione malorum angelorum sunt; Such remedies had their beginning from the tradition of evill angels: therefore hee concludeth, that Phylacteria sunt animarum vincula; Such Phylacteries, things applied to, or hung about the necke or other parts, are but snares of the soule. 3. If they doe use herbs, and oyntments, and such other outward meanes, it is but to colour their devillish practice and inchantments, whereby they worke, and not by the vertue or operation of such herbs: therefore it was well decreed in the Mariscane Councell, as it is cited in the Decrees, Nec in collectionibus herbarum, quae medicinales sunt, observationes aliquas licet attendere, &c. In the collection of herbs, which are of themselves medicinall, it is not lawfull to use any other (superstitious) observations.

Caus. 26. q. 2. c. 6.

Ibid. c. 9.

Ibid. q. 5. c. 4.

Caus. 26. q. 5. c. 3.

Now on the contrarie it shall appeare, that witches and other of that sort are worthie of punishment by death, and that they are not by any meanes to bee tolerated in a Commonwealth.

Reasons shewing the equity of this law against witches.

1. They are manifest transgressors against the first Table, and every precept thereof: for they doe combine themselves with Satan, and forsake their faith, and so make them other gods, beside the Lord: they also invent superstitious rites and ceremonies, images, figures and pictures, which the devill hath taught them to worship him by: and beside, they prophane and abuse the holy name and titles of God in their superstitious invocations and inchantments. And they appoint certaine holy daies, solemnities, and assemblies among themselves, as the Lord hath appointed the Sabbath for his owne worship. And thus they apparently violate every precept of the first Table.

2. They are also enemies to the Commonwealth, full of mischiefe, practising their malice upon men and beasts: and therefore the Civill law, Propter magnitudinem scelerum maleficos appellat; Because of the greatnesse of their mischievous practices, calleth them, Evill or Wicked doers. They are manifest murtherers, assaulting the life of Christian people, where God permitteth, by all devillish meanes: and thus the second Table likewise is by them violated and perverted, Gallas.

3. They also are perverters of their children, and seducers of others, and so cause this mischiefe to spread further and to be transmitted over unto posteritie.

4. Further, if divine and humane lawes condemne all filthie societie and companie with beasts; much more horrible and abominable is al confederacie and league made with devils and uncleane spirits, &c.

4 D. 34. ad. 3. in Gor.

5. Thomas touching this error, that some should say, Quod maleficium nihil erat in mundo, &c. That witchcraft was nothing in the world, but in the opinion of men, addeth, Procedit hoc ex infidelitate infidelitatis; That this opinion proceedeth from the root of infidelitie, because they doe not beleeve that there are any devils, but only in the estimation of the people, &c. But we are taught by the Scriptures, that the Angels fell from heaven, and became devils, by whom witches and Sorcerers worke.

6. And this is sufficient to convince these men of error, because the law of Moses judgeth the sinne of witchcraft worthy of death: which they must needs accuse of injustice, if witchcraft were so small an offence, and consisted but in opinion only. And the Imperiall lawes herein doe concurre also with the Divine law, which calleth, Ars mathematica damnabilis; The Mathematicall (it meaneth Magicall) Science damnable: and it decreeth thus. Aruspices, Divinatores concremandi sunt, Soothsayers and Diviners are to be burned: Nec ars ista disci, nec doceri debet; This art must neither be learned nor taught: and by the Civill law, he which consulted with Soothsayers, gladio punietur, shall be punished by the sword. Cod. lib. 9. tit. 18. leg. 2. Ibid. leg. 3. Ibid. leg. 8.

Quest. XXXIII. Of the odious sinne of bestiall and unnaturall lust.

Vers. 19. WHosoever lieth with a beast. 1. Procopius and the Interlineare glosse, doe understand this of a beastly and brutish man, with whom it is dangerous to converse; and by death they understand here eternall death. But this were to extenuate these grosse and unnaturall crimes which here are condemned, and these civill politicke lawes are literally to be understood. 2. Therefore this law meeteth with that most unnaturall and monstrous sin of more than beastly lust: by the one kind also comprehending all other outragious lusts committed against nature, as Levit. 18. 22. and 20. 15. Ian. 3. And there are two sinnes specially against nature; either when, non servatur debita species, the due kind is not kept, as when the filthy company of beasts is desired; Nature only having ordained the generation of mankinde to be with man: the other is when, non servatur debitus sexus, the due sex is not kept, as when man with man worketh filthinesse, which was the sin of Sodome, Thomas. And these are the reasons why such wicked persons should be put to death without all mercy: 1. Vitandis tantis flagitiis societas illa, quæ cum Deo nobis esse debet, &c. By such hainous sins that societie is violated, which ought to be betweene us and God, seeing Nature it selfe, whereof God is the Author, is polluted with such perverse lusts, &c. 2. Such wicked and vile persons shew themselves worse than beasts, qua coitu naturali contenta sunt; which are content with naturall copulation, Calvin: and goe not out of their kind. 3. Serit semen ubi aut nihil nascitur, aut monstrum naturæ contrarium, &c. He that soweth seed, where either nothing at all is ingendred, or a monster contrarie to nature, Pelarg. 4. Not only the man or woman committing this filthinesse, but the beast also wherewith it is perpetrated, was to be put to death, Levit. 20. 15. both for the detestation of the fact, and lest any other by that evill example should attempt to doe the like with that beast, Lyran. 2.2. q. 154. art. 12. ad. 4. Lib. 3. confess. c. 8.

Quest. XXXIV. The reasons why men are given over to unnaturall lust.

1. THis bestiall sin may be committed two waies; either indirectly when one, not at the first intending any such filthy act, but being inflamed with lust, ad coitum simpliciter, simply unto carnall act, because it cannot be satisfied as he would, seeketh to have it satisfied howsoever: or else directly at the first there is a wicked inclination unto this bestialitie. 2. Tostatus giveth three reasons of why some men are caried into these unnaturall lusts: 1. Their vile corrupt nature, which is procured by the evill disposition of the country: as in Æthiopia and Lybia, and toward the poles in the remote climates, monstrous shapes and formes are found which are the fruits of such unnaturall lusts. 2. Some are bestiall by frensie and madnes, and other distemperatures of the braine. 3. Some by an evill use and custome, as it seemeth the Sodomites even from their childhood were exercised in those acts of filthines. These reasons may be yeelded, of the unnaturall appetite of men which feed of raw flesh, yea of the flesh of men as bruit beasts: so also of unnaturall lust, Tostat. qu. 14. 15. 3. But a better reason may be given than all these: for these unnaturall and beastly lusts are the fruits of Idolatry and false worship: for immediately it followeth, that they should not offer unto any other gods. And Saint Paul saith, that the Gentiles after they had corrupted the true worship of God, were given over unto their owne hearts desire, Rom. 1. as the Canaanites having not the true worship of God, defiled themselves with these abominations, for the which the Lord cast them out, Levit. 18. 24. Simler.

Quest. XXXV. What is meant by sacrificing to other gods.

Vers. 20. HE that sacrificeth unto any other gods, &c. 1. Not that indeed there are any gods beside the Lord, but because the blinde Idolaters in their foolish opinion take them to be gods: and the Scripture useth to speake according to the vulgar opinion, for their better understanding to whom the speech is directed, Tostat. qu. 15. 2. As hitherto Moses published such lawes as concerned the direction of the irefull and coveting faculties of the minde, so now follow such ordinances, belonging to the ordering of the rationall or understanding part: first as touching the duties of simple and private persons, in the residue of this chapter; then of Judges, chap. 23. and of the Priests, chap. 23. vers. 24. Ian. 3. Under the terme of sacrificing, all other externall worship is forbidden, as to build Altars, to erect Holy daies unto them, Simler. or to adore them, and bow the knee unto them. Tostat. Hoc, sibi alio, thurificatio; All oblation, offering of drinke offerings, censing of incense before them, and such like are forbidden. 4. And not onely a single person, man or woman, that committed Idolatry, was to be put to death, Deut. 17. 2. 3. But if an whole city departed from the true worship of God, to Idols, they were to destroy it, Deut. 13. 16. And by the same reason they were in like manner to deale with a whole tribe or two, if they did forsake the worship of the true God: as Iosh. 22. All Israel hearing that the two tribes and an halfe beyond Jordan, had erected them an Altar, they assembled themselves together against them, as jealous, lest they purposed to bring in a new worship of God, Jos. 22. 5. And not onely they which committed Idolatrie themselves, but they which perswaded others, were to be put to death, Deut. 13. 6, 7.

Quest. XXXVI. Whether Idolatrie now is to be punished by death.

Vers. 20. Shall be slaine. 1. The word is charam, that simply signifieth, not to cut off, but to destroy, as an anathema, thing accursed, and bequeathed to destruction, Jun. Pelarg. 2. The Interlinearie Glosse, expounded it of excommunication, and of eternall death: but both the practise of those times, and the like punishment here inflicted upon other capitall crimes, sheweth that it must be understood of the losse of the temporall life: though beside, without their great repentance, Idolaters deserve also everlasting death, Rev. 22. 8. 3. Some object, that now Idolatrie is not to be punished by death, but that such rather that are seduced, should be instructed in the true worship of God: and in the times of the Gospell, it is fit more clemencie and mercie should be shewed, than under the rigour of the Law. Answ. 1. Though Idolaters are to be instructed to reforme their error, for the salvation of their soules; yet this letteth not, but that for so great impietie, and for the example of others, they should worthily suffer the paines of death. 2. And now under the Gospel, seeing robberie against the common peace, and treason against the life and safetie of the Prince and State, are judged worthy of death: Qui majestatem Dei fœdissime violavit, tam leve facinus admisisse putabitur? shall he which violateth the Majestie of God most impiously, be thought to commit so small an offence? Gallas. 4. But although, as Osiander saith, the Magistrate, non gladio tu idololatriam vindicare teneatur, be not now bound to take revenge of Idolatrie by the sword: for some difference there is betweene Pagane idolatrie, and Popish superstitious Imagerie, the one being an absolute deniall of all Christianitie, the other a mixing therewith of superstitious vanitie; yet by the equitie of this Judiciall law, which serveth for the strengthening of a morall precept, the like sin of idolatrie may justly receive the like punishment. As Cyprian, repeating that law, Deut. 13. 12. Si audieris in una ex civitatibus, &c. If thou heares of any of the cities, &c. that are drawne away to serve other gods; that such a city should be destroyed; thus further inferreth; cujus præcepti memor Mattathias, which precept Mattathias remembring, killed him that approached to the idolatrous Altar to sacrifice, &c. Then he further addeth: Quod si ante adventum Christi, circa Deum colendum, et idola spernenda hæc præcepta servata sunt, &c. Now if these precepts concerning the worship of God, and despising of Idols were kept before the comming of Christ; quanto magis post adventum Christi servanda sunt? How much more ought they to be kept after the comming of Christ? seeing he hath not onely exhorted us in words but in deeds. Augustine likewise shewing a difference betweene the schisme of the Donatists, and Pagane idolatrie, thus concludeth; Quis vestrum non laudat leges, &c. Which of you doth not commend the lawes given by the Emperours, against the sacrifices of the Pagans? illum quem impietatis capitale supplicium est, &c. for the punishment of that impietie is capitall. 5. R. Salomon thinketh, that if a Jew did sweep an Idol Temple, velornare, vel alia similia faceret, quæ sunt præambula, &c. or adorne it one ly, and doe other things which are but preambles to Idolatrie, he was not to be punished by death, but some other wayes, Ex Lyrano. But if enticing in words to idolatrie, were judged worthy of death, Deut. 17. 5. much more to entice and draw by fact and example, as in adorning and beautifying the Temples of Idols.

Cyprian. lib. de exhortat. Martyr. c. 5. cited in the Decrees. Caus. 23. q. 5. c. 32.

Epistol. 40. ad Vincentium, cited, C. 23. q. 4. c. 42.

Quest. XXXVII. Why idolatrie is judged worthy of death.

NOw the reasons why idolatry was held by Moses law to be worthy of death, were these: 1. Quia cultus diabolo exhibetur qui idolorum author est; Because that idolatrous worship is given unto the devill, who is the author of Idols, Gallas. 2. Æquum est vita privari eos, &c. It is just that they should be deprived of life, which forsake God, the author and fountaine of life, Simler. To leave the worship of God who is the author of life, and to worship the devill, the author of death and destruction, mortibus &c. doth shew himselfe to be worthy of a thousand deaths, Gallas. 3. Though every transgression of the law be in some sort a breach of Gods covenant, yet idolatry more specially is said to be a transgression of the covenant of God, Deut. 17. 2. Because men apparently and professedly thereby forsake the profession solemnely made of their service and obedience vnto the Lord, Simler. 4. And this severe punishment the Lord appointeth for idolatrie: quia inter Ægyptios idololatriæ assueverant: because the Israelites had accustomed themselves unto idolatry among the Egyptians, in so much that they, Moses living, set up a golden calfe to worship, Simler. 5. Because of the ready inclination and propension of mans nature unto idolatry, it was fit that it should by some severe punishment be restrained, Calvin. 6. And two things there are which doe exaggerate the nature of a sinne, and aggravate the punishment thereof: Res in quibus committitur, & in quos committitur, &c. The things wherein they are committed, and they against whom they are committed, Borrh. Both which concurre here in the sinne of Idolatrie and idolatrie: For what matter can be of greater moment, than the service and worship of God? and what sin more grievous, than that which is committed against God?

Quest. XXXVIII. Of kindnesse, how to be shewed toward strangers, and why.

Vers. 21. Thou shalt not doe injury to a stranger. 1. There are two reasons, why men are apt to wrong unto strangers: both because they are not allied by affinity or consanguinitie, and therefore no naturall affection is commonly shewed toward them: & because they are destitute of and patrons, and therefore lye more open to wrong, Toſtatus. 2. The ſtranger muſt neither bee injured in word, nor wronged in deed, Simler. Neither ſecretly by fraud, nor openly by violence: neither muſt they be hindred by any private man, nor publikely prejudiced by lawes made againſt them, Toſtat. And it is not enough not to doe them wrong; but we muſt help them, and doe them what good we can, Galaſ. 3. And this reaſon is added, becauſe they were ſtrangers in Egypt, they did feele by experience what it was to uſe ſtrangers hardly, that by their own experience, they might learne to have compaſſion on others, Simler. For the law of nature teacheth not to doe that unto another, which we would not have offered to our ſelves, Cajetan. They in Egypt would not have had the Egyptians to deale ſo hardly with them, and God puniſhed the Egyptians for their ſakes: let them take heed then by thoſe judgements, which fell upon the Egyptians, leſt they bee puniſhed in like manner for afflicting ſtrangers, Simler. 4. Other reaſons beſide may bee added: as that ſtrangers, as well as they, were created according to Gods image, and they have the ſame common father: and let them remember the uncertaintie of mans condition, Quæ variis caſibus eſt expoſita, &c. which is expoſed to divers chances: they doe not know how ſoone they may bee driven to ſojourne in a ſtrange countrey, Marbach. 5. The evill entreating of ſtrangers, was odious even by the light of nature among the heathen: Plato affirmeth Plat. lib. 12. de legib. that God is a revenger of wrongs and injuries done unto ſtrangers: in ſo much, as thoſe cities were famous, which were kinde to ſtrangers, as the Athenians, the Lucani Egimitæ: which were called φιλόξενοι, lovers of ſtrangers. And they were noted of infamy, that uſed ſtrangers hardly, as the Lacedæmonians with others, Galaſ.

Quest. XXXIX. Why widowes and orphans are not to be oppreſſed.

Vers. 22. Ye ſhall not trouble any widow; 1. As the former law enjoyned pity and commiſeration to be ſhewed toward ſtrangers, that were in miſery: ſo this provideth for ſuch as are in miſery, being not ſtrangers, as Widowes and orphans, Toſtat. 2. And although none at all are to be wronged and afflicted, yet theſe eſpecially muſt not bee hurt, Quia defenſorem non habent; Becauſe they have none to defend them, Chryſoſt. Carendo patre, ſeu marito, &c. The one wanteth a father, the other an husband, Cajetan. 3. The Lord here threatneth that he will be revenged of ſuch as oppreſſe the widow and fatherleſſe: and three puniſhments are threatned, they ſhall be ſmitten with the ſword, and the other two are ſeverally of their wives ſhall become widows, and their children fatherleſſe, Toſtat. 4. Which puniſhments are procured by theſe degrees: the widowes and fatherleſſe being oppreſſed, doe cry unto God for prayer in time of affliction is moſt fervent: then though men regard not their teares, and prayers, yet God will, Pellican. And his anger will wax hot againſt them, becauſe they oppreſſe thoſe whom God favoureth and loveth: as wee uſe to bee angry with thoſe, which hurt either our ſelves, or our friends whom we love, Borrh.

Quest. XL. How and by what meanes prayers are made effectuall.

Vers. 23. If thou call, and cry unto mee, &c. Divers cauſes and occaſions there are ſet forth in Scripture, which doe procure the exaudition and hearing of our prayers: 1. When two conſent together and ſhut up their prayers with one accord, their voyce is heard, Matth. 18. 19. 2. Prayer made in faith is effectuall, as the Apoſtle ſaith, The Prayer of Faith ſhall ſave the ſicke. 3. Continuance and perſeverance in prayer is availeable, Luk. 11. 8. Becauſe of his importunity, he would ariſe, and give him as many loaves as he needed. 4. Prayer joyned with almes and deeds of charity is ſo much the more reſpected with God, Act. 10. 4. Thy prayers and thy almes, are come up in remembrance before God. 5. Faſting joyned with prayer maketh it more fervent, Matth. 17. 21. This kind cannot goe out, but by prayer and faſting. 6. And earneſtneſſe of affliction, Pſal. 118. 5. I called upon the Lord in trouble, and he heard mee. As in this place, God heareth the cry of the widowes and fatherleſſe, that call unto him, Lippom. ex collationibus Patrum. And here they cry, Non tantum ſono vocis, quantum intentione cordis, &c. Not ſo much by ſound of voice, as in the intention and elevation of their hearts, Thomas.

Quest. XLI. Why uſury is called biting.

Vers. 25. Thou ſhalt not oppreſſe him with uſury. The word naſhach, whence is derived neſheeh, uſury, ſignifieth to bite: uſury then is called a biting: 1. Becauſe as the biting of a Serpent, parum videtur in principio, &c. is but little felt in the beginning, but afterward the whole body is inflamed with that biting: So uſury is not felt in the beginning, but at the laſt, devorat totam hominis ſubſtantiam, it devoureth all a mans ſubſtance. So R. Salom. ex Lyran. 2. Or becauſe the uſurer, tanquam hirudo ſuccum & ſanguinem exugit, &c. as an horſe-leach ſucketh out all the juyce and bloud, Galaſ. Sicut ſerpens non ſinit dormire; The biting of a ſerpent will not ſuffer one to ſleep: neither will uſury let the man that is incumbred therewith, to be at reſt, Simler. 4. And it may be ſo called, in reſpect of the deſire of uſurers, which live upon the poore, and eat them up by uſury: tanquam canis famelicus, mordendo, ſuipſum paſcens, as an hungry dog, by biting and devouring others, feeding himſelfe, Cajetan. 5. Uſury is called a biting, Quia lædendo mordet eos, qui ea gravantur, becauſe it biteth and gripeth to death, which are oppreſſed with it.

Quest. XLII. What uſurie is.

Vers. 25. It is evident that uſury is unlawfull. But before the ſeverall points belonging to this queſtion be diſcuſſed, firſt we muſt ſee what uſury is. 1. Plumbæ unum verbum, quam mutuatum ſit, iniquum eſt,

To desire more by lending, than was lent, is wicked, Cajetan. He then counteth that usury, when any thing is received for loane, more than that which was lent. 2. Usura est lucrum quod accipitur, solius mutui nis causa; Usury is a gaine, which is taken only for lending, Ursinus. Quicquid lucri præter sortem datur. What gaine soever was given beside the principall: whereupon it is called in the Hebrew, nesheh, that is, increase of the multiplying, Calvin. 3. After the same manner was usury defined in former times as Carthag. 3. c. 16. Nullus clericorum amplius accipiat, quam cuiquam accomodavit, That none of the Clergy should receive more than he hath lent, Augustine thus describeth an usurer, Si plus quam dedisti, expectas accipere fœnerator es, If thou looke to receive more than thou hast given, thou art an usurer. So also, Concil. Lateranens. Usury is thus defined, Quando ex usurâ, quæ non germinat, nullo labore, nullo sumptu, nullo periculo lucrum conquiri studetur, &c. When by the use of a thing, which increaseth not, gaine is sought without any labour, cost, or hazard.

Augus. in Psal. 36. cited, C. 14. qu. 3. c. 1 sess. 10. sub Leon. 10.

Quest. XLIII. Of divers kinds of usuries.

[a] There were divers kinds of usury: 1. As that which was called Usura centesima, the usury of the hundreth part, quæ æquiparatur sorti in anno, which did rise to bee equall to the principall in one yeare. 2. [b] Then there was, Dimidia centesima, halfe of the hundreth part. 3. [c] Tertia centesima, the third part of the hundreth, was, when the interest in one yeare came to the third part of the principall: as 12. being the principall, if it gained foure. 4. [d] Bessis centesimæ, was, when the usury in the compasse of a yeare, was two parts of the principall: as 8. to 12. 4. [e] Usura semisses, were so called, when the interest was equall unto the stocke in two yeares. 5. [f] Then quarta centesima, the fourth of the hundreth part, was, when in foure yeares, the principall and the interest were even. 6. [g] Usura sescupla, was, when any did summam capitis, & dimidiam summæ percipere take the stocke or head againe, and the halfe of it. 7. All these were singular and extraordinary kinds of interest. There was beside a common interest, which was more tolerable and easie: and there was a third called, conventuale, an interest upon agreement.

[a] Cod. lib. 3. tit. 32. leg. 12. super verb. centesimæ.
[b] Lib. 7. tit. 54. leg. 2.
[c] Lib. 4. tit. 32. leg. 26. super verb. tertium.
[d] Ibid.
[e] Lib. 6. tit. 34. leg. 1. super hæredes.
[f] Cod. lib. 3. tit. 32. leg. 12. in verb. centesimæ.
[g] Concil. Laodicen. c. 5. Cod. lib. 7. tit. 47. leg. 1. super verb. cum pro eo, &c.

Quest. XLIV. That usury is simply unlawfull.

But that all these kinds of usury and interest with the like, were utterly unlawfull, and not to bee practised among Christians, it shall appeare by these reasons: 1. The Hebrewes were forbidden to take any usury at all of their brethren; of the Gentiles they might: but now, diruta est macerie, the wall of partition is taken away, there is neither Jew nor Gentile, but all are one in Christ, Calvin. 2. Usura suo genere nociva est, usury even of it selfe is hurtfull, because it is called, neshech, biting, Cajetan. And the law of nature teacheth: that wee should not doe that to another, which wee would not have offered to ourselves. 3. Usury was detestable among the Heathen, much more odious ought it to bee among Christians. As Cato being asked what it was to play the usurer, answered, Idem, quod occidere; All one, as to kill: and further he said, that in former time they used to punish a theefe but in two fold, an usurer in foure fold. Calvin. 4. Usury is against the first institution of money, pecunia inventa est, &c. money was invented and found out, that thereby things necessary for the maintenance of this life might bee provided: but now it is perverted and abused to covetousnesse, that money may increase money, Borrh. 5. The Scripture also surely condemneth usury, Psal. 15. 5. He that giveth not his money to usury, shall dwell in the Lords Tabernacle, and Ezech. 18. vers. 17. He that hath not received usury, nor increase, &c. the word neshuh, usury, increase: by which words, all increase by usury and unlawfull interest, seemeth to be forbidden. 6. Chrysostome saith, Usurarius super omnes mercatores maledictus; The usurer is accursed beyond all merchants and tradingmen. And he further useth this comparison, Like as when one sifteth wheat or any other grain in a sieve, all the graine by little and little slippeth thorow, and so, solum stercus remanet in cribro, only soyle and durt remaineth in the sieve: so of all the substance and ill gotten goods of usurers, nihil remanet præter peccatum, nothing remaineth beside sinne, &c. 7. If it be objected, that God permitted the Hebrewes to take usury of the Gentiles, therefore it was not simply unlawfull. To this it may be answered, that they were those seven nations of the Canaanites, of whom they might take usury, which nations they were commanded to destroy; and so by this meanes they might weaken their estate, and impoverish them. Also upon Ambrose inferreth, Ab hoc usuram exige, quem non sit crimen occidere, Exact usury of him, whom it is not unlawfull to kill. And so Augustine also concludeth, Non minus crudelis, qui pauperem unciis [illegible] quam qui eripit diviti, &c. He is no lesse cruell, that slayeth a poore man by usury, than hee which taketh from a rich man by violence.

Hom. 38. super Matth.
Chrysost. ibid cited, Decret. 88. c. 11.
Lib. de Tobia c. 15. cited, 8. 14. q. 3. c. 12.
Ad Macedonium epist. 54. cited, c. 14. q. 3. a. 11.

Quest. XLV. Certaine contracts found to be usury, not commonly so taken.

Now there are certaine contracts, which commonly are not taken for usury, where there is no addition or increase of any thing above the stocke and principall, and yet they are of the nature of usury, or worse. 1. As a poore man wanting money, is constrained to take an horse, or cow, or other commodity, at an unreasonable price, and selleth it againe with losse, it may bee for the [illegible] this is a biting usury, Simler. 2. Another case is this: one in time of harvest, buyeth corne at a price, as for two pound, and selleth it againe, for foure or six pound: the Canons decree this to be [illegible] crum, filthy and unhonest gaine. 3. Si dederis frumenti modium unum, & super aliquid exigeris, &c. If thou lendest a bushell of wheat, and exactest somewhat over againe: it is by the Canons judged an unlawfull kind of interest. 4. If any buy a commodity, as of cinamom, pepper, or such like, which is not worth above five pound at the time of the buying: Et promittunt per publicum instrumentum, &c. libras solidorum. And promise by some publike instrument, to pay for the same six pound, usura perceptum

Julii 1. Decret. 1.
Concil. Agathens. c. 69.
Concil. Lateranens. part. 16. c. 3.

ners, the sellers incurre the sinne of usury. 5. One having need of money, layeth his ground to pawne, and the lender taketh the profit of the ground for the use of his money: this is also usury: and therefore it was decreed thus in a certaine Councell, Fructus, qui capiuntur ex fundis, vel possessionibus quæ pignori dantur, in sortem sunt computandi. &c. The profits which are received out of grounds, and possessions morgaged, must be accounted as part of the principall. 6. Some usurers use this sleight; they cause their debtors to acknowledge that they owe so much money, which is untrue: Faciunt usuram fieri in sortem computandam, &c. They cause the interest to be counted as part of the principall. As if one lend ten pounds upon interest, and make the borrower acknowledge by his deed, that hee oweth unto him eleven pounds, counting the twenty shillings which commeth for the loane, part of the principall. 7. Another case is this, one selleth unto another, or bargaineth for a lease of his ground, and it being but worth forty shillings by the yeare, he covenanteth to pay three pound: this is counted usury: Si annuus census excedat valorem fructuum, iste modo palliatur usura, &c. If the yearely rent exceed the value or worth of the fruits and profits, it is but a colouring of usury. 8. Qui pecunias dant, &c. They which give a peece of money to receive at a certaine day twice so much in value of corne: Subtitulo venditionis exercent usuras, &c. Under the title of selling, they practise usury. 9. One buyeth a commodity of his poore neighbour that wanteth money, and giveth him but halfe the value, otherwise hee will let him have no money: afterward hee selleth it for double, Hujusmodi usurarios, nisi satisfactionem fecerint, &c. These men unlesse they make satisfaction, wee decree not worthy to bee admitted to Ecclesiasticall buriall. Hieronyme also giveth another instance: in the country usury is exacted of wine, corne, oyle: as in wintime one delivereth ten bushels, Vt in messe accipiat quindecim, to receive fifteene in harvest: for usury may as well be of wear, and other things, as of money, Deut. 23. 19. Hereupon in that great generall Councell all usury was condemned of what kind soever: Ex adinventione aliqua, vel quolibet modo negotium nefarium: Hee that by any slight or device, or by any meanes whatsoever, made any such transaction or bargaine, is condemned.

Decret. Martin.

Synod. Heldesheimens. c. 46.

Synod. Hildesheimens.

Comment. in Exech. lib. 6. c. 18.

Concil. Nicen. 6 17. cited, distinct. 47. c. 2.

Quest. XLVI. Whether all increase by the loane of money be unlawfull.

Whether, as these kinds of contracts are of the nature of usury, though commonly they are not so taken: so likewise there may grow some increase and advantage in the use of money, and yet no usury commeth. Here then it must be considered, whether it be unlawfull to receive any gaine at all by the use and occasion of money. Where I find there are three opinions: 1. The Civill and Imperiall lawes doe generally allow or tolerate all kinde of usury, as is before shewed, quæst. 43. But the unlawfulnesse of usury is likewise declared before, quæst. 44. 2. Contrariwise, the Canonists and Canon law doe condemne all gaine and interest whatsoever: Si quis affirmare præsumat exercere usuras non esse peccatum, &c. If any man shall affirme that it is no sinne to practise usury, wee decree him worthy to bee punished as an Heretike. Adhere in the Canons consent, Vt ipsum quod dedit sine ullo augmento accipiat, &c. That what one lendeth more or lesse, he should receive without any advantage or increase. Yea the Canons are so strict, that they allow not any advantage to be made of money by usury, to redeeme the Christians there with, that are in captivity among the Saracens. 3. But the meane betweene both may bee most safely held: for as there may be certaine contracts of usury, where there is no gaine, or any increase above the principall, as is manifested, qu. 45. 1. So, Non omne incrementum, quod accedit super sortem est usura, &c. Not every increase which bringeth some gaine above the stocke, is to be counted usury. As it may appeare in these particulars.

Concil. Viennens. Concil. Tarraconens. c. 3. Concil. Lateranens. part. 1 6. c. 1.

Concil. Lateranens. sub Leon. 10. sess. 10. This case was put, De montibus pietatis, &c. Of the bankes of pietie which were erected by Christian Magistrates, only for the benefit of the poore, that they might have money at their need; it was there decreed, that for the maintenance of the officers and Ministers of the bankes, which attended that businesse, aliquid moderatum supra sortem solvatur, &c. that some moderate gaine above the stocke might be paid by those which made profit of the money there borrowed, to be onely for the maintenance of the officers. And all the whole Sinode consented, excepting onely one, who alleaged, that he had learned by experience, præfatos montes plus damnosos esse quam utiles; that the foresaid bankes were more discommodious, than profitable. But notwithstanding his dissenting, the said decree was confirmed.

Certaine cases rehearsed, wherein a moderate gaine above the principall, is not unlawfull.

Certaine orphans have a stocke left them, which will soone be spent, if they should live onely of the same: may not their tutor or guardian put out their money to them which may make some profit by the same? Ad res necessarias pupillo subministrandas, to minister things necessary to the pupill and orphane. Similar. Idem est in civium & peregrinorum est, &c. There is the like reason of civils and strangers, which are permitted to use any trafique in forraine parts, where they sojourne, and so can have no maintenance but by the use of their stocks. Similar. If one borroweth money for a certaine time, hee maketh profit of the money, and payeth it not unto him at the time appointed, whereby he is much damnified: Nemo censetur usurarius, qui habet usuram tantum pro sorte, vel pro damno, vel jactura, &c. I thinke surely no man will deny, but that he should come unto the Creditor about his principall, to recompence his losse, by not having it in due time. Calvin. Hereunto the Civill lawes give consent: Vsura post mutuum non debetur nisi ex pacto; Vsura post depositi; no gaine can be paid for delaying matters committed to one of trust: Vsura debentur ex pactione non soluta; Gard inv. no pension not paid. Vsura debentur pro dato ad diem non præstito, &c. Vsury is due for a thing not paid at the day.

Cod. lib. 4. tit. 32. leg. 2.

5. Si

Ibid.tit.65.leg 27. Diocletian. Cod.lib.5. tit.12. leg.2. Gardian.

5. Si quis diviti mercatori pecuniolam suam utendam dedit, &c. If one put forth his money to use to a rich Merchant, may hee not receive part of the gaine, which the Merchant maketh by the use of his money? Gallasius.

6. A rich man is about a purchase, and borroweth a peece of money to goe thorow with his bargaine: he that lendeth the mony, An non poterit ex fundi reditu fructum aliquem percipere, &c. may he not receive some profit by the ground, untill his principall be restored? Calvin.

These and divers such cases may bee brought, wherein either the gaine and usury is not unjust, or because the name of usury and interest is odious, it is indeed no usury at all; because in these contracts, frater non laditur, &c. our brother is not hurt or hindered, and so they are not against charity, Simler. And in all such transactions, where that rule is observed, Quod tibi non vis fieri, &c. That which you would not to bee done to your selfe, doe not to another, there can be no oppression or injustice, Ursin. p.703. So that where a man in the loane of mony offereth no other measure to his neighbour, than he would be content he should mete by unto him againe, the rule of equality being observed, no great offence or inconvenience can ensue.

Certaine considerations, which make the receiving of some gaine by the loane of money, not unlawfull.

4. But that we may yet grow to a more certainty in this matter and question of the loane of money, there are foure circumstances to bee considered: 1. Who lendeth. 2. To whom. 3. For what. 4. In what manner.

1. He that lendeth his money upon usury, must not bee such an one as maketh it his trade to live by letting of money: but such an one, as whose necessity in some sort compelleth him to take some advantage by his money for his necessary maintenance: as strangers, exiles, and orphans, as in the second and third cases before propounded; who either cannot, or know not how to employ their stockes: but they which have other meanes to maintaine themselves by, as lands, rents, offices, have not the like warrant. And of all other trades, to be a professed Usurer, is most odious. And therefore the law here saith: Thou shalt not be an usurer, or exacter unto him: that is, as such an one which professeth himselfe to bee a banker and usurer.

2. They to whom money may be lent upon usury, must not be of the poorer sort: for to such is simply forbidden to lend upon usury, vers. 25. To lend then unto the rich for some profit, is not against this precept. But here three kindes of persons are to bee considered, to whom money is to bee lent; some are so poore, that they are not able to render againe that which they receive: some are rich and have no need, in regard of any necessity, to have any thing given, or lent: some are betweene both, who are able in time to repay that which they lend, but yet upon some urgent occasion are driven to borow: of these specially this law speaketh: that unto such as are constrained to take money for their necessity, as either to pay their rent, or to save the forfeiture of a bond, or to redeeme a morgage; to such wee are bound to lend freely, without any recompence. To the first we ought to give rather than lend: Deut. 15.11. Because there shall be ever some poore in the land, therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thy hand to thy brother, to thy needy, and to thy poore in the land. Vnto the third sort, namely the rich, wee are not bound to lend freely, as unto the poorer sort: neither is this against the rule of our blessed Saviour: Lend, looking for nothing againe, Luke 6.35. For of the poore we should not expect any thing, but lend freely: yea if their necessity be urgent, and our estate can beare it, the case may be such, as that wee ought to forgive them the principall and all, Marbach. So then, of the first we must neither looke for increase, nor principall, but give unto them of almes: of the second we may expect the principall, but not any interest: of the third we may receive both. And yet this properly is no usury, but rather a gratuity; that hee which hath gained by another mans mony, should, to shew his thankfull minde, make him, which was the occasion thereof, a reasonable partaker of his gaine: Gratitudo animi lege naturali mandatur; This gratitude and thankfulnesse of mind is commanded even by the law of nature, Barbatus.

3. The interest which is received must be moderate, not excessive: Yee shall not oppresse him with usury: the word is neshech, biting: it must not bee a biting, nipping, or devouring usury. The Imperiall lawes gave great liberty to take what usury soever was agreed upon, as before is shewed, quest. 43. yea they allowed bemiolam or sesquiplum, to take halfe so much as the principall: which are called sequialtera usura, usury of halfe part as for ten Bushels of corne to exact fifteene, as may appeare by the law of [a] Constantine. But this kind of usury is directly forbidden in the [b] Nicen Councell. So the lawes of this land doe moderate excessive usury: to take above two shillings in the pound, and ten in the hundreth, is a forfeiture both of principall and interest.

[a] Cod. Theodos. lib.2. tit. de usur. leg.1.
[b] C.17. cited Gratian. 47.c.2.

4. This consideration given for the loane of money, must not be expacta, it must not be agreed upon any certaine compact and covenant: as the words here are, lo tesimun, non imponetis ei: you shall not impose, or lay upon him usury. As it is not lawfull to covenant with a man certainly to pay so much, he shall lose by using the money, hee may bee in hazard also of the principall: so for the lender then to receive certaine gaine, where the borrower is a certaine loser, were not just. Such indifferency must bee used, that the borrower be conceived, as to be made partaker of the gaine, that commeth by his money, proportionably to bee a partaker of the losse. These former rules observed, and circumstances considered, I see not why all receiving of increase by the use of money should bee condemned. And herein I dissent not from Calvins conclusion: Vsuræ sequitur usuram, dedite mihi aliquid, ut ego quoque aliquid tibi dem: ita conjunctionis pugnum, ut hence it followeth, that usury now is not unlawfull, but as it impugneth the charitie and brotherly conjunction and societie of life: Quæro nunc ubi, quare unicuique id lucrum, sive usuram, sive aliquam exceptionem damnemus? Wherefore I see not wherefore we should condemne all profit or usury of mony without all exception. Simlerus to the same effect: Contra illud jus mutuatur per mutuum, charitati non repugnat; Such contract, where the brother is not hurt by lending, is not against charity.

Calvin. Commen. in hunc locum.

5. But it will be thus objected on the contrarie, against all kind of gaine and increase that commeth by money.

1. In taking money for the use of money, one selleth that which is not in his power: for the use of money consisteth in him that receiveth it.

2. It maintaineth idlenesse, when men are suffered to live of their money without the swear of their browes.

3. It is against nature, that money being not apt to increase, should beget money.

4. It was forbidden and prohibited to the Israelites to take usurie of their brethren, saving onely of the Gentiles. And Psal. 15. 5. Ezech. 18. 17. all kind of usurie and increase is condemned.

5. Our blessed Saviour biddeth to lend, looking for nothing againe, Luke 6.

Answ. 1. Though another man use the money which is lent, yet the lender is the occasion thereof: and in the meane time he wanteth the use of it himselfe: therefore it is not unjust that a thankfulnesse be acknowledged for the use thereof, which the other is the cause of.

2. Such as live only of letting of money, and make a trade of it, are not to be suffered: but such rather which by that meanes are relieved, and cannot otherwise be conveniently maintained, as orphanes, strangers, exiled persons: as before is shewed.

3. Money of it selfe begetteth not money, but being employed by mans industrie, it is a fit meanes to increase ones stocke: so neither is a field fruitfull of it selfe, unlesse it be tilled. Ambrose saith: Usura arte nequissima ex auro aurum nascitur, &c. By the wicked skill of usurie gold is begotten of gold, &c. He speaketh of unjust and insatiable usurie: when as the usurer will extort his interest compounded for, he careth not at whose hand rich or poore: whether he gaine by it or not: for so it followeth in the same place, nec finis unquam, nec satietas aderit cupiditati, &c. there will be no satietie and end of coueting, &c. Ambros ser. 32. distinct. 47. c. 1.

4. That was a politike law given unto the Israelites, as it may appeare by that they were permitted to take usurie of the Gentiles; that by this meanes they might grow rich, and the other poore. And the full intendment of the law is, that they should not oppresse any, especially the poore, by usurie: which is also now held to be unlawful. In those places objected, the word is neshech, which signifieth biting usurie, which is indeed against the rule of charitie.

5. To the poore we are bound to lend freely, yea to give them principall and all, where their extreme need requireth: and so is that place to be understood.

Thus much I thought necessarie to adde in this place concerning this great and weightie question of usurie: wherein if the rules before prescribed were duly observed, we should have fewer Usurers, and not so many, or none at all eaten up and devoured of usurie. And for a finall resolution herein, this conclude, That although all circumstances considered, some increase by money may be tolerated: yet were better that no such urgent occasion were giuen. And as S. Paul saith concerning rich men, that they should lay up in store a good foundation against the time to come, by being rich in good works: so were better for them which have money, that they looke for the increase thereof in the next world, at the hands of God, by using it here to the relieve and comfort of their poore brethren, than to seeke only gaine and transitory commodity by it: as Leo excellently saith: Fœnus hoc solum aspicere & exercere debemus, ut quod hic misericorditer tribuimus, à Domino, qui multipliciter & in perpetuum mansura retribuit, recipere valeamus; We must only looke unto and exercise this usurie, that what we here bestow mercifully we may receive of the Lord, who giveth abundantly, and such things as remaine for ever. 1 Tim. 6. 18. Leo 1. Epist. 1. Can. 4.

Quest. XLVIII. Whether it were lawfull for the Iewes to take usurie of the Gentiles.

NOw whereas here mention is made only of the poore brother, that they should not oppresse him with usurie, but it is not determined what they shall doe herein toward the Gentiles: therefore elsewhere it is directly expressed, that they may lend to a stranger upon usurie, Deut. 23, 20. 1. Where first the opinion of R. Salomon is confuted, who as Lyranus reporteth him, thinketh that it was unlawfull for the Hebrewes to take any usurie, yea of the Gentiles: for the words of the text are very direct, that of strangers they may take. 2. Some thinke also that this was permitted unto them for the hardnesse of their heart, to take usurie of the Gentiles, lest if they had beene restrained of that liberty, they might have oppressed their brethren with usurie, Genevens. But if this had beene permitted onely for the hardnesse of their heart, it had beene in it selfe unlawfull: as they were permitted to give their wives a bill of divorce, and so send them away: it shall then appeare, that it was not only permitted, but lawfull for them to take usurie of the Gentiles: as is evident by these reasons:

They are forbidden to lend unto their brethren upon usurie: now the Gentiles were not counted brethren, but the Hebrewes only.

Another like case the Hebrewes were privileged before the Gentiles: as the debts of the Hebrewes were remitted in the seventh yeare; so were not the strangers, though they were Proselytes, and converted to the Jewish faith, Deut. 15. 3. Of a stranger thou maist require it, but that which thou hast with thy brother, thine hand shall remit. Againe, the Hebrew servants were to goe out free if they would, in the seventh yeere, Exod. 21. 2. if they would not, yet in the 50. yeare of Jubile they were set at liberty, Levit. 25. 54 But the strangers which were servants, were as their possession and inheritance for ever they and their children, Levit. 25. 45. The like privilege was here concerning the Hebrewes, that although they might lawfully take usurie of strangers, yet of them they could not, Tostatus quæst. 16.

and

3. Neither of all strangers might they take usurie, but only of the Canaanites, which were ordained to destruction: those, and against whom, they had jus belli, right to wage battel, they might then as lawfully burne them under with usurie, as use against them the sword, Simler. Hereupon Ambrose saith, Cui jure inferuntur arma, huic legitimè judicantur usuræ, &c. Against whome rightfully wee may beare armour, unto him also lawfully may we set usurie, &c. ubi jus belli, ibi jus usuræ; where there was right of making warre, there was right of taking usurie.

4. But this is the blindnesse and error of the Jewes, who thinke that they are warranted by this ancient privilege to take interest of the Christians now: 1. For both the time of their privilege is expired, Christ having broken downe the wall of partition, and made of Jewes and Gentiles all one, Tostat. quæst. 2. As also wee are not of those Gentiles and nations, whom they had right to invade with warre, Simler.

Quest. XLIX. What garment must be restored before the Sunne set, which was taken to pledge, and why.

Verse 26. If thou take thy neighbours raiment to pledge, &c. 1. R. Salomon thus understandeth this text, that it is meant of the poore mans day garment, which must be restored untill the Sunne set, and then it might be fetcht againe until the morning, and so restored againe for the use of the day. But the text evidently sheweth, that this law speaketh of his night garment wherein he lieth or sleepeth. 2. Some doe understand it indifferently both of the day and night garment: that if it were used in the day, it should be restored in the morning, and taken againe at night: if it served for the night, it should be restored in the evening, and fetched againe in the morning, Lyran. Simler. And they presse the literall meaning of the words, ghalbo hashemesh, usque venire solem, till the Sunne come, which may be as well understood of the rising, as setting. But it is evident, that this phrase of the comming or entring of the Sunne, is used to signifie the setting or going downe of the Sunne, as Iudg. 19. 17. And in other places: and beside, the letter of the text only speaketh of the night garment wherein hee sleepeth. And if it were his day garment, it had bin a trouble to the Creditor to fetch his pledge every evening, and to carrie it againe in the morning: for the poore debtor having but that one garment, could not goe and carrie it being naked without it. It had beene also an inhumane thing for the debtor to be stripped and left naked in the sight of his Creditor. 3. I therefore here rather am of Tostatus judgement, that this place is only understood of the night garment: the day garment, if the poore man had but one, could not be taken to pledge at all, no more than the upper or nether mil-stone, Deut. 24. 6. or any other necessarie thing which the poore man lived by: but if the debtor had two or more garments, then one of them might bee laid to pledge, and it needed not to be restored till the debt was paid. 4. Cajetanus thinketh, that this night garment was delivered every night, and restored againe in the morning: the debtor was to carrie it againe to his creditor. And R. Salomon giveth this reason, why the pledge was restored every day: to set forth the mercie of God, which daily forgiveth our sinnes: Iosephus addeth also, that by this meanes the debtor might better bee put in minde of his debt. But I rather subscribe to Oleaster here, that this raiment which was to be restored before the Sunne set, was not delivered againe, because the poore debtor had continually necessarie use of it. 5. This is not only meant of the covering which he wrappeth himselfe in by night, but of any other part of his bedding, as his couch, pillow, or such like: because there is the same reason of them all: they helpe to defend him from the cold of the night, Gallas. 6. And this law is made for the benefit of the poore: Hic de paupere loquitur qui non habet nisi unam vestem, &c. He speaketh here of the very poore man which hath but one garment, and cannot live without it, Hugo de S. Victor. 7. Two reasons are annexed: the one taken from common humanitie; it is his only covering: the other from the judgement of God, which the Lord at their crie will exercise upon such hard hearted Creditors, Iam. A third reason is added, Deuteronomie 24. 13. That the poore man having received his covering may blesse him.

Quest. L. Who are understood here by gods, and why.

Verse 28. Thou shalt not raile upon the gods. 1. Augustine thinketh, that this place is to be understood according to that saying of S. Paul, Though there bee that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, as there be many gods, and many Lords, 1 Cor. 8. 5. addendo, sicut sunt, deos intelligi volui, qui & etiam dicuntur; in adding as there are, &c. he would have understood such gods, which are worthily called. And these gods which are worthily so called, he forbiddeth to be rayled on, non jussit sacrificare, &c. eos honorare, they are not bidden to honour them with sacrifices, &c. But the Apostle rather in this place understandeth the vaine idols of the Heathen, which in their blinde opinion were counted gods: or such to whom that name was worthily attributed: as Cyril saith, Unde divinus Paulus, quod multi qui dicuntur dii in cœlo et in terra non sunt, sed potius nominantur; Whereupon divine Paul saith, that there are many which are not indeed gods in heaven and in earth, but are so called. 2. Therefore by the name of gods, here is understood the Prince or Magistrate: as Cyrillus expounderh, Vt manifestum faceret dicti vim, subjungit statim: That he might make manifest the sense of the word, he addeth presently, Neither speake evill of the Ruler of the people. Likewise Gregorie interpreteth, Per deos, sublimes & sapientes viri intelliguntur, &c. By gods, high and wise men are understood, as the Lord saith, he had made Moses, Pharaoh

Qu. 8. in Exo.

Lib. 9. contr. Iulian.

Cyril. lib. 7. cont. Iulian.

Gregor. in 1 Reg. cap. 6.

to Constantine, when accusations were brought in against the Bishops, called them together, and burned before their face the libels of accusation, thus saying unto them: Yee are gods, non dignum est ut nos judicemus deos; It is not meet that wee should judge the gods. 3. So our blessed Saviour expounded that word of the 82. Psalme, I said, ye are gods, he calleth them gods, to whom the word of God was, Joh. 10. 34. Which is not to bee understood, (as Calvin well interpreteth it) of the generall doctrine which is directed to all the sonnes of God, sed de speciali dominandi mandato, of the speciall charge of government. 4. By gods here, and Rulers, are understood both Ecclesiasticall and Civill governours, as Saint Paul expoundeth it, Act. 23. Iun. Gregorie applieth it only to Ecclesiasticall Governours: but it comprehendeth also the Civill Rulers, as appeareth, Psal. 82. 1. 5. They are called gods, Tanquam imagines existentes ejus, because they are as the image of him which is both the Son and God, Cyril. Quod ad universorum Iudicium eorum judicia illis credita sunt; Because judgement is committed unto them, wherein they imitate the universall Judge of all, Theodoret. In iis relucet Majestas Dei, cujus vicem & nomen gerunt; The Majestie of God shineth in them, in whose stead they are, and whose name they beare, Gallas. And so the Apostle calleth them the Ministers of God, Rom. 13. And they are so called, Ne quid admittant quod indecorum sit, qui loco Dei sedent, &c. That they should commit no thing unbeseeming them, seeing they sit in Gods place, Lippoman. Dei personam sustinent, tanquam legati & vicarii; They sustaine the person of God, as his embassadors, and vicegerents, Calvin. In registro epist. 75.

Quest. LI. Why the Magistrate is not to be reviled, and with what limitation this law is to bee understood.

Thou shalt not raile. 1. The word, callal, here used, signifieth properly to set at nought, or esteeme light by, and consequently to revile, because men contemne and despise those whom they speake evill of, Oleaster. They are then forbidden, first, to contemne or despise the Magistrates, then to speake evill of them. 2. And two things they are here warned of, not in secret to detract from them, nor openly to raile on them, Testat. quæst. 16. Neither in absentia, vel coram, in their absence, or to their face, Cajetan. Specially this law intendeth to restraine their insolencie, that are readie to speake evil of Magistrates, if they judge not according to their humour: and especially, malefactors are given to raile upon the Judge, when they are punished justly, Lyran. 3. They being then in Gods place, are to bee reverenced, and had in honour: because injurie cannot be done unto them, Quin simul Deo inferatur; But it must likewise be done unto God, in whose place they are, Marbach. And hee that curseth them, in a manner curseth God: because the Magistrate is the head of the people, whereof he is a member, or part, Lyran. 4. But though Magistrates must bee honored, they are not to bee adored: Prohibiti sunt maledici, non jussi sunt adorari, &c. Though they are forbidden to be evill spoken of, they are not bidden to be honoured with sacrifices, or any such adoration, August. quæst. 86. in Exod. 5. And although they are not to bee reviled, yet neither are they to be flattered in their sin: we must not thinke, Honorem, quo præditi sunt, esse integumentum, That the honor which is yeelded unto them, is a veile or covering of their sin, Lib. 12. super Ioan. cap. 19. Dei nomen etiamsi falsò quibusdam imponatur, &c. The name of God, though it bee given falsely unto some Magistrates, yet is to bee honored, Cyril. 6. But so farre are Magistrates to bee honored, and as mens gods to bee admired, as they command nothing against the great God of heaven: Præpositis vice Dei, sed non contra Deum; We must obey them in Gods stead, but not against God, Lyr. 7. As Princes are not to bee reviled, so yet they may bee soberly and discreetly admonished: not taxed, or checked, or malepertly rebuked. Augustus was wont to say, In libera civitate liberas esse linguas oportere; That in a free city tongues ought to be free: But herein the lenitie of those Christian Emperours Theodosius, Honorius, Arcadius, was admirable, who would have them subject to no punishment if they spake evill of them: for (say they) Si ex levitate profectum est, contemnendum: si ex insania, miserandum: si ab injuria, remittendum; If it come of lightnesse, it was to be contemned; if of madnesse, to bee pitied; if of wrong, to bee remitted, Gallas. 8. There is here no punishment set for him that should raile on the Magistrate: but seeing he that railed on his father and mother was to die for it, Mat. 15. 4. much more worthie of death was he which should curse the Prince, the father of the countrey.

Quest. LII. Whether S. Paul transgressed this law, Act. 23. when hee called the high Priest painted wall: and whether in deed he did it of ignorance.

Ut here by the way somewhat would be added, concerning S. Pauls fact, in calling Ananias the high Priest, painted wall; and afterward being told that he reviled Gods high Priest, he excused himselfe by ignorance, alleaging this text, Act. 23. 4. 5. 1. Some here answer, that where he saith, God shall smite thee, thou white or painted wall, that it was no imprecation, but a prediction, that God would punish him, Genevens. And in saying, I knew not that he was the high Priest, his meaning is, Non se attendisse quis ipse sit, &c. That he was not to regard what he was, but what the Lord commanded him, &c. But if S. Paul had knowne him to bee the high Priest, and yet had spoken evill of him, he had broken a text against himselfe: neither can any extraordinarie motion or instinct of the spirit be pretended for stirring him up to doe an act against the law, for God is not contrarie to himselfe. 2. Some thinke that he speaketh ironicè, as it were in mockage, hee did see nothing in him worthie of the Priesthood, therefore did not acknowledge him to bee the high Priest, Calvine, Gallas. Or because the Priesthood was now determined, and abolished in Christ, that hee did usurpe upon an office that belonged not unto him. But this cannot stand neither: for if S. Paul had knowne him to bee the high Priest, though though hee were an usurper, or unworthie that place, yet occupying that roome and place, hee would have reverenced him for his place sake, for even evill Magistrates are not to bee deprived of that honour which belongeth to their office: as S. Paul said to Festus, who had objected, Too much learning maketh thee mad, I amaze mad, O noble Festus: he giveth him his title of honour, though he were a pagan Judge. And Cyprian to this purpose saith, Quamvis in falsis & spoliatis Sacerdotibus, umbram tamen ipsam Sacerdotalis nominis cogitans, dixit, &c. Although in false Priests now spoiled, (and robbed of their place) yet he considering the vaine shadow of the verie Priests name, said, I know not brethren, &c. Hee saith that Paul reverenced the very shadow and shew of the Priestly authoritie in them. 3. Some thinke, that Paul reverenced his place, knowing him to bee the high Priest, but taunted his person. But Paul could not have reverenced the place and Priesthood, but hee must needs also have given some honour to the man, and to praditus erat, which bare that place and office, Calvine. 3. Procopius his opinion is this, Paulus simpliciter reprehendit, & colligit, cum liberius invectus fuisset in summum Pontificem. Paul doth reprehend and reprove him simplie, having too freely inveighed against the high Priest. But S. Paul in this place railed not at all, for then he had offended against his owne doctrine, Ephes. 4. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouthes. Though S. Paul had not knowne him to be the high Priest: yet hee was not to revile nor speak evill of any. 5. Iunius opinion is, that Paul was utterly ignorant indeed that hee was the high Priest, because he was a stranger, and the high Priest was not discerned by his priestly apparell, but when he went into the Temple. Iunius further seemeth to thinke, that Paul did not know him so much as to be a Judge: for the Tribune, or Captaine of the souldiers, was the chiefe in that assemblie, and the rest stood by on their feet. 6. But it appeareth that Paul knew him to sit as Judge, as hee saith, Thou sittest to judge me according to the law, &c. But in the rest I subscribe unto his judgement, that Paul, non ironice locutus est, sed simpliciter, spake not ironically, but simplie and plainely, that he knew him not to be high Priest, yet hee confesseth no error, for hee railed not at all: Nam longe differt justa reprehensio a maledicto, a just reprehension farre differeth from rayling, Gallas. There are then two parts of Pauls answer: for as the accuser objected two things, that he railed, and that upon the high Priest; so he answereth to the latter part, excusing it by his ignorance, that hee knew him not to bee the high Priest: to the other hee also maketh answer out of his judgement and knowledge, denying that hee had railed: for hee knew well enough by the law, that no ruler of the people ought to bee railed upon: therefore S. Paul knowing himself to sit as a Judge, though hee was utterly ignorant that he was the high Priest, had sinned against his conscience knowledge, if hee had railed upon him. So indeed, as Cyprian saith, Nihil contumeliosè locutus est adversus Sacerdotem, Hee spake nothing contumeliously against the high Priest, &c.

Lib. 4. Epistol. Epist. 9.

Iunius in his Parallels.

Lib. 4. Epistol. Epist. 9.

QUEST. LIII. What is understood here by abundance and licour.

Vers. 29. Thine abundance, or plentie, and thy licour. The Hebrew word signifieth teares. 1. Some by the word melea, fulnesse, understand wine, because it floweth abundantly as the other word dimah, teares, oyle, because it is pressed forth by drops like unto teares, Vatablus. But in this sense the principall part of their fruits and increase should have beene omitted, namely their corne and other dry fruits. 2. Some by fulnesse understand the plentifull yeere; by teares the barren yeere: signifying that even then when they had the least increase, they should remember to pay their first fruits and oblations. Cajetane. But this seemeth too curious. 3. Calvine will have plenitudinem, fulnesse, taken pro genere, generall for all kinde of increase: and teares to be referred to one speciall kinde, namely the licour. 4. R. D. Kimbi his exposition is more currant, and R. Salomon agreeth with him, whom Lyranus and Iunius follow: that by fulnesse wee are to understand the ripe drie fruits, and by teares the licour and moist fruits. And so the sense is perfect, comprehending all kinde of fruit that reneweth and increaseth. 5. The vulgar Latine readeth, primitias & decimas, &c. Thy first fruits and thy tithes thou shalt not delay to pay. But the sense is rather given than the words: for in the originall there is no mention of tithes, or first fruits. The Chalde referreth it only to the first fruits of corne and wine, and the Septuagint likewise, so also Iunius. But it may generally be understood both of their first fruits and their tithes, because they were to offer both: and the words are generall, Thine abundance and thy licour thou shalt not keepe backe, Oleaster. 6. They must not deferre the offering of such things, Non differunt dare pars in alterum annum, The part which was due should not be put off till another yeere, Cajetan: they should give willingly, readily, and with a cheerefull minde.

Lib. 4. Epistol. Epist. 9.

QUEST. LIV. Of the difference of first fruits and tithes.

Thom. 2. 2. q. 86. art. 4. in cor. & 8.

FIrst fruits and tithes, which were offered by the people under the old law, divers waies differ. 1. In respect of the end and use: first fruits were offered, ex speciali causa, in recognitionem divini beneficii, of a speciall cause, for the recognition or acknowledging of the divine benefit: as confessing that they receive all from the hands of God. As the people are taught in what manner they should offer the first fruits, when they were come into the land of Canaan, Deut. 26. 10. And now lo I have brought the first fruits of the land which thou, O Lord, hast given mee. But the tithes were given to the Levites for their maintenance for their service in the Tabernacle, Numb. 18. 21. 2. The first fruits were a kinde of oblation, because they were offered unto God. Sacrifices and oblations were thus distinguished: Sacrifices were they, quando circa res Deo oblatas aliquid fit, when somewhat was done about those things which were offered unto God: as when the beasts sacrificed were killed: but that was said properly to be an oblation, when any thing was offered, etiamsi nihil circa ipsum fiat, although nothing be done about it, beside the bare oblation: as when they offered bread or wines. Now first fruits were in an oblation offered and offered unto God: but tithes were not properly oblations, quia non immediate Deo, sed mi- of the divine worship. 3. The first fruits were due onely to Aaron, and his sonnes the Priests, Numb. 18.14. the tithes belonged unto the Levites, ibid. vers. 21. 4. The quantitie of the tithes was set and ...ed, which were the just tenth part: Sed primitiva non erant speciali numero definita: The first fruits not defined of what special number they should be, but were left to the discretion of the offerer. Yet ...ebrewes have a certaine tradition, that they should not exceed the 40. part, nor be under the 60. as they doe gather thus: They were commanded in the offering of their first fruits to give unto the Priests the sixt part of an Epha or Bath which contained three bushels, for the Ephah was the tenth of the Chomer, which contained thirtie bushels: the sixt part of the Epha being about halfe a bushell, ...the 60. part of the Chomer, So Hierome. In 45. cap. Ezechiel.

Thom. ibid. qu. 87. art. 3. ad 3.

Quest. LV. Of the divers kinds of tithe.

...ow there were divers kinds of tithes, as they are thus observed by Hierome: 1. There was the tenth ...of all their increase, which was due unto the tribe of Levi from all the rest of the tribes, Numb. 18.21. ...the Levites out of their tenths offered a tenth as an heave offering unto God, which was given to Aa- ...and the rests of the Priests, Numb. 18.28. and this was called δευτερόδεκα, the second tenth. 3. There ...another tithe, which every one divided and set a part in his barne, to eat when they went up to Je- ...wherewith they made merrie both they and their household, and invited the Priests and Levits ...to: this tenth part, if the way were too long, they might turne into money, and bestow it as they ...good when they came to Jerusalem, Deut. 14. vers. 23, 24. 4. There was beside all these a fourth ...of tithe, quas pauperibus recondebant, &c. which they laid up for the poore: they were called ..., the poores tithe: these tithes were laid up every three yeares, and they were for the poore Le- ...the stranger, fatherlesse and widow, Deut. 14.26. Hierom. ibid.

Quest. LVI. Reasons why tithes ought to be payed.

...shalt not keepe backe, or deferre to give. 1. Si tardius dare peccatum est, quanto magis non dedisse? ...to be slacke in giving be a sinne, much more not to give at all, Augustin. 2. Tithes therefore are to ..., thereby to acknowledge God to be the giver and author of all good things which we receive: ...quia omnia Dei sunt, per qua vivit, sive terra, sive flumina, sive semina; Let man consider that ...God, whereby he liveth, whether it be the earth, the flouds, or seed, Augustin. ibid. So also Testa- Serm. 2. 19. ...by giving first fruits and tithes of all things, Protestamur Deum esse qui ista nutriverit, &c. We pro- ...that it is God who hath nourished the fruits of the earth, by giving raine in due season, quæst. 18. ...bus tributa egentium animarum: redde ergo tributa pauperibus, offer libamina Sacerdotibus, &c. ...the tributes of hungrie and penurious soules: render therefore the tribute to the poore, bring ...unto the Priests, Augustin. Tithes are given for the maintenance and sustentation of the Mi- ...of Gods service: which if they be withdrawne, the Ministers of God should be pinched with want, ...service of God be neglected. 4. Another reason is taken from the equitie, and easinesse of this ..., that whereas God, in regard that all commeth from him, might have required nine parts, and ...the owner the tenth, because all is his; the ground, the raine, the seed, the sume: yet hee hath ...liberally in contenting himselfe, onely to receive the tenth: Quid faceres, si novem partibus sibi ...tibi reliquisset? What wouldest thou have done, if he had taken nine parts to himselfe, ...only the tenth for thee? 5. Further, the paying of the tenth, as God hath appointed, is a ...to procure Gods blessing: as Exod. 30.12. Every one shall give a redemption of his life, &c. shall there ...among them, &c. Non solum abundantiam fructuum recipies, sed etiam sanitatem corporis conse- ...Thou shalt not onely receive abundance of increase, but health also of bodie, &c. Quære per avaritiæ ...ci tu benedictione fraudas? Wherefore thou by thy covetousnesse dost defraud thy selfe of a ...fit, August. ibid. 6. The withholding of tithes and duties commanded by God, is a meanes ...Gods curse upon the earth: as the Lord saith by his Prophet, I will send a curse upon you, and ...blessings, &c. Behold, I will corrupt your seed, and cast dung upon your faces, &c. and you shall ...I have sent this commandement unto you, that my covenant which I made with Levi might Malach. 2.2, 3, 4. ...&c. Upon which words Hierome thus writeth: Quia nihil nos reddidisti in decimis & primitiis, In Malach. ...& forte maledicti estis. Because ye have not rendred unto me tithes and first fruits, there- ...cursed with penurie and famine. Augustinus ait, Si tibi decimas non dabas, ut in ad deve- ...&c. This is just with God, that if thou pay not the tenth, thou shalt therefore be brought ...nuth, &c. Novem tibi partes retractæ sunt, quia decimam dare nolusti, &c. Nine parts are taken ..., because thou wouldest not pay the tenth? Dabis impio militi, quod non vis dare sacerdoti, &c. ...give to the wicked souldier, that which thou wilt not give to the devout Priest, &c. Thirdly, ...unseasonable weather, or by the invasion or spoile of the enemie, or by some meanes or other ...thy wanted increase.

Quest. LVII. Whether this law be understood of the redemption of the first borne, or of their consecration to Gods service.

The first borne of thy sonnes shalt thou give me. 1. Origenes, with some others, understandeth ...this of redeeming the first borne with money, as before, chap. 13.13. they are bid to buy out their first borne. But if this law intended the redemption of the first borne onely, then it had beene lawfull for them presently to redeeme their first borne: but so was it not, for then there should have beene no Ministers for the service of God: for the Levites came not into the place of the first borne until the second yeare, the first moneth of their departure out of Egypt: therefore untill that time the first borne were not to be redeemed: but after this law published, which was in the third moneth of the first yeare, not long after the Morall law was delivered, the first borne sacrificed still, *chap.*24. 5. and therefore were not as yet redeemed. 2. Therefore the law of redeeming the first borne is not here onely insinuated, but that they should be also consecrate unto the service of God: Non intelligitur lex de redemptione primogenitorum, sed de applicatione ad Deum: The law is not understood of the redemption of the first borne, but of their applying unto the service of God, untill the separation and division of the Leviticall tribe, and then to be redeemed with money. So by this law is confirmed that ancient custome which of a long time continued among the people of God, that the first borne should be the Priests and sacrificers. Though in the first age of the world this distinction was not brought in, but they indifferently sacrificed, as well the first borne as others, as we reade of Caine and Abel, *Tostat. quæst.*18. 3. This law of the first borne is more at large set forth, *chap.*13. but here repeated, ut hominum socordiam excuteret, &c. to shake off their drowsinesse and negligence, and to stirre them up to a diligent observation of the law, Galat. And now by a solemne law, that is enacted which was given onely in precept before, Simler. 4. Augustins distinction may here bee received, betweene primitiæ, the first borne, which are understood to have beene either of men or beasts primogenita, the first fruits of their grounds, and primitiæ, which were the first of the fruits, sed jam redactis de agro, but now brought out of the field: as of their dow, flowers and such like.

In quæstionibus super Numeros.

Quest. LVIII. Why the first borne of cattell were not to be offred before the eighth day.

Vers.30. Even dayes shall it be with his damme. 1. Whereas it is said before, Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, &c. R. Salomon thinketh that as the first borne of men were not to be redeemed till after 30. dayes, at the time of the purification: so the first borne of the oxen should be kept 30. dayes with the owner, and of sheepe 50. dayes, before they were offred unto God: And this terme of seven dayes is not limited (saith he) for the first borne, but for other sacrifices which the Priests should not offer before the eighth day. Contra. But this word likewise, onely signifieth that they should offer the first borne of their cattell, as before it is said of their sonnes: it cannot have any such reference to any such terme, because there was none mentioned before: and why was not the terme of eight dayes as well to hold in the oblation of the first borne as in other sacrifices? 2. Oleaster is of a contrarie opinion, that these eight dayes are limited as well for the first borne of men as of cattell. But it is unlike and without all probabilitie, that the first borne of children should be taken from their mothers upon the eighth day. 3. Therefore this precept concerneth onely the first borne of cattell, that because they were weake and of an imperfect substance, till the eighth day they should not offer that, cujus nullus usus inter homines, whereof there was no use among men, Gallas. 4. It was not necessarie that precisely upon the eighth day it should be offred unto God: but that not before the eighth day, at any time after the eighth day it might, Tostat. quæst. 5. As in the offring of the first fruits, the law provideth they should use no delay, nor bee slacke to pay them, because it might bee an advantage to the owner: so here order is taken that they should not make too great haste in offring the first borne of their cattell, to be rid of them the sooner, Simler.

Quest. LIX. Of the meaning of this law, whether it were mysticall, morall, or historicall.

1. Some thinke that the eighth day is prescribed for the oblation of their first borne, because that day was appointed also for circumcision, Calvin. 2. Some, to prefigure the institution of the Lords day, which should succeed the legall Sabbath upon the eighth day, Pelarg. 3. Rabanus maketh this mysticall application: that as the first borne was kept seven dayes with the damme, and presented the eighth: so oportet nos in præsenti tempore, &c. bonorum operum primogenita elaborare, &c. so we should in this present time of the world labour out the first borne of our good works, untill we shall bee presented at the resurrection, which is as it were the eighth day, before the tribunall of Christ. 4. Lippomanus doth thus morally applie it: Nihil Deo offerendum, nisi integrum & perfectum: Nothing must be offered unto God, but that which is entire and perfect. 5. But the end and use onely was historicall: that the first borne should not bee presented unto God before the eighth day, because they were yet unfit for any service. Menoch. Quia talia animalia erant quasi abortiva, pondum plene consistentia propter teneritudinem: because such young beasts were yet but as abortive fruit, not well consisting or put together because of their tendernesse, Thomas.

2. 2. q. 103. art. 3. addit. 7.

Quest. LX. Why they are forbidden to eat flesh torne of beasts.

Vers.31. Neither shall yee eat any flesh that is torne, &c. 1. As well that which was rent and torne of any beast, cleane or uncleane, as if it were goared of an oxe, was not to bee eaten, because the bloud was in it: as also that which was tasted before and eaten by any uncleane beast: as the Law readeth, prægustata, if it were tasted before, because an uncleane beast had touched it, and so made it uncleane, Simler, Tostatus. 2. Not onely that part of the flesh which was so torne, but all the whole carkasse was to be refused, Lyranus. Such were fowles and beasts taken in hawking or hunting, Tostatus. 3. Not not onely that which was torne, and thereof died, but if it after lived, and were killed by themselves, because it was torne of beasts, it was uncleane: unlesse the beast so torne lived to recover that hurt, so other flesh renewed in stead of that which was so rent and torne. 4. They were to cast it to the dogges, which are not here understood to be the Gentiles, as R. Salomon, whom the Hebrewes counted as dogges in respect of themselves: but the meaning was, that they should cast such uncleane flesh unto the uncleane beasts: but with this reservation, Si commodè non poteritis vendere Gentibus, If ye cannot conveniently sell them to the Gentiles, Cajetane: as may be gathered by the like law concerning such things as died alone: though they might not eat such themselves, yet they might give them or sell them to strangers, Deut. 14.21. 5. But some flesh there was which was not to be eaten at all, as the flesh of an oxe, that had killed a man: but in this case the oxe was to be stoned, chap. 21.28. and his flesh left to the fowles of the aire, and the beasts of the field, Tostat. 6. Though they might not eat the flesh of that which was torne of beasts, yet they might use the skinne, and other parts thereof for other necessarie uses: as may bee collected, chap. 21.35. where the dead oxe which another mans oxe had killed, was to bee divided betweene the owners: which had beene to small purpose, if the dead oxe had not beene profitable for some use, Tostat.

Quest. LXI. Of the use and signification of this law.

Concerning the scope, use, and intendment of this law: 1. The morall use thereof Theodoret maketh to be this; God commanded them to forbeare the eating of flesh torne of beasts, ut vitæ communi nihil immane præ se ferat, that their life should have no shew of crueltie, &c. Cajetane otherwise applieth it; it was to teach them, that they should be so farre off from theft, that they should not defile themselves in eating, animal quasi furto à fera occisum, a beast as it were by stealth slaine by some wilde beasts. 2. For the mysticall sense, Rabanus maketh it to be this: Carnem, hoc est, conversationem, quæ ab hæreticorum ore laniatur, &c. The flesh, that is, the conversation, which is poisoned and corrupted by Heretikes, it is not lawfull for a Christian to imitate, but to be given over unto the dogges: that is, such as are perverse and obstinate, and will not heare the Church, must bee accounted of us no better than as Heathen and Publicans, Matth. 18.17. 3. The historicall use was this: that by this abstinence and forbearing of some kinde of meats, Inter Gentes & populum Dei discrimen esset, &c. There might be a difference betweene the people of God and the Gentiles, Simler. 4. But this distinction of meats did not truly make them holy before God: their sanctitie consisted in that they were within the covenant of God, and thereby consecrated and devoted to his service: they had also the presence of God, by whom they were sanctified: and they had the Word and the Sacraments which prefigured Christ by faith, in whom we are truly sanctified. And though this ceremoniall observation of meats did not of it selfe sanctifie them, yet thereby they testified their holy obedience, resting in the Word and Commandement of God, as Daniel, that would not bee nourished by the Kings meats, and the Macchabees, which did chuse rather to die, than to eat swines flesh, Simler.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. That the punishment of offenders is grounded upon the will and word of God.

BY these politike and judiciall lawes of Moses, to the which divers penalties are annexed, we doe see that the punishment of morall and civill transgressions even in this life, proceedeth not altogether upon the will and minde of wise Law-givers among men, but is grounded upon the will and word of God: and two sorts of punishments are here set downe; one is commonitionis, νουθεσίας, of admonition, for the amendement & bettering of the offender, as for the most part such penalties are, which be not unto death; the animadversion, κολάσεως, which are for the example of others, that they for feare of punishment, may take heed of offending in the like: as the law saith, Deut. 19.20. The rest shall heare this, and feare, and henceforth shall commit no more any such wickednesse, Pelarg.

2. Doct. The Magistrate the keeper of both Tables.

Vers. 20. He that offereth to any other gods, &c. As the Magistrate is charged before in this Chapter, to see theft punished, and other wrongs and injuries done unto men; so he also is to see the publike kept concerning the duties toward God: which care wee finde to have beene in the good Kings of Juda, as Asa, Iehosaphat, Hesekiah, Iosia, who purged the land of idolatrie, and reformed religion much corrupted, Pelarg.

3. Doct. That there are witches and the same mischievous and hurtfull people.

Vers. 18. Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live. Which God would never have laid downe, if either there had beene no witches, or being, they can doe nothing, as some without ground doe hold: God maketh no law in vaine, B. Babington. And as here witchcraft is made a sinne worthie of temporall death; so S. Paul reckoneth it among those sinnes which are worthie of eternall death, and doe exclude from the Kingdome of God, Galath. 5.20.

4. Doct. That there is no Church wherein some wicked persons may not be found.

AND in generall thus much wee learne out of this Chapter, and the rest, where the Lord prescribeth lawes and penalties thereupon for divers kinds of offenders: that there is no Church nor nation so pure, wherein may not be found wicked and evill disposed people, against the opinion of the Catharists, and Anabaptists: for although the Lord had chosen Israel out of all the nations of the world, to bee an holy people to himselfe, yet he did foresee that many would depart from his law, and therefore appointeth divers kinds of punishment for the offenders, Pelarg.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Confut. Against the Anabaptisticall communitie.

Vers.1. IF any man steale an oxe, &c. he shall restore five oxen, &c. This law doth evidently convince the Anabaptists of error, who would bring in a communitie of goods: for if it were Gods will that all things should be common among men, then were it no sinne to steale, nay there could be no theft at all committed, seeing then no man could take any thing, wherein he had not as good an interest as another. Osiand. Neither was this onely Moses law, that they should not steale; but the doctrine of the Gospell also forbiddeth all kinde of theft and stealing, *Ephes.*4.28. Let him that stole, steale no more, but rather labour, &c.

2. Confut. A theefe by his deserved death, doth not satisfie for the punishment of his sinne.

Vers.2. IF hee bee smitten that he die. Lippoman speaking of the capitall punishment of theft: that although it doe not satisfie for sinne before God, yet, expiat eo supplicio pœnas temporales, quarmissa culpa, & reatu pœnæ æternæ, remanent exolvendæ, &c. It doth expiate or redeeme those temporall paines, which after the fault pardoned, and the guilt of eternall death, remaine in Gods justice to be paid, &c. Contra. This his assertion is grounded upon an error: for where God forgiveth sinne, he perfitly forgiveth both the sinne, and the punishment thereto belonging: As he saith by his Prophet, *I will forgive their iniquitie, and remember their sinnes no more, Ierem.*31.34. But if there remaine any temporall punishment still after forgivenesse, then are the sinnes yet remembred, because they are punished. Indeed after remission obtained some chastisements remaine: But as Chrysostom well saith, God doth it, Non de peccato sumens supplicium, sed ad futuranos corrigens, not taking punishment for our sinne, but correcting us for our amendment afterward, &c. The theefe then by his death doth not satisfie before God, either for his sinne, or the punishment thereof temporall or eternall: but onely satisfieth the politike law, and giveth satisfaction unto men, by his evill example offended. His sinne, together with the punishment, is not otherwise pardoned, than by faith in Christ.

Homil.de pœnitentia.

3. Confut. Against the Romanists, that abridge the power and libertie of the parents in marriage of their children.

Vers.17. IF her Father refuse to give her, &c. This law giveth absolute power unto the father, to ratifie his daughters marriage by consenting unto it, or by dissenting to breake it off: which sheweth what injurie is offred unto this libertie and right of parents, by the practice of the Romish Church, quæ conjugia sine ullo parentum consensu inita probet, which ratifieth marriages contracted, and begun without consent of parents, Gallas. And Oleaster a writer of their owne hereupon inferreth thus: Estque hic non parvum argumentum ad probandum, &c. Here is no small argument to prove, that libertie unto marriage doth not altogether by the law of nature agree unto the same, nor yet to enter into religion, &c. But it is an ordinarie thing with the Romanists both to marrie children without consent of their parents, and to thrust them into Monasteries. See more hereof elsewhere.

Synops.Centur.3. err.93.p.705.

4. Confut. Against Idolatrie.

Vers.20. HE that offreth unto any gods but unto the Lord onely, &c. This is an evident place to convince all Idolaters of great impietie: for they in bowing and kneeling unto Idols, ceasing before them, and making their prayers looking toward them, doe apparently offer unto others, than unto God onely. Tostatus one of their owne, thus writeth upon this text, Non solum si immolet eis, sed etiam si faciat alia pertinentia ad cultum divinum, ut si flectat genua coram eis, &c. Not onely he which sacrificeth unto Idols, but doth other things belonging to the divine worship, as if he bow the knee before them, &c. was to be slaine. Cyprian hereof thus excellently writeth, Quid ante inepta simulachra & figmenta terrena captivum corpus incurvas? rectum te Deus fecit, &c. Why dost thou bow thy captive bodie before foolish images and terrene fictions? God hath made thee upright, &c. looke up to heaven: Quid te in lapsum mortis cum Serpente, quem colis, sternis? What dost thou prostrate thy selfe with the Serpent, whom thou worshippest, into this deadly fall? &c. More hereof see elsewhere.

Qu.15.in 22. cap.Exod.

Lib.contra Demetrian.

Synops.centur.2. err.44.pag.401.

5. Confut. Against those which either hold tithes not to be due by the word of God, or challenge them by the ceremoniall law.

Vers.29. THine abundance and thy liquor, &c. This may be understood as well of the tithes as first fruits which arise of the fruits and increase of the earth, whether they be drie or moist. Concerning then the law of tithes, there was in the paiment thereof a treble right, Partim erat morale, it was partly morall and naturall, for that the people should allow necessarie maintenance unto those, qui divino cultui ad salutem populi ministrabant, which ministred for the salvation of the people in the divine worship, even naturall reason teacheth. As even among the Heathen the publike ministers were publikely maintained, as souldiers, and such like, whereupon the Apostle saith, Quis militat propriis stipendiis

What

Who goeth a warfare of his owne charge? Partim erat judiciale, quantum ad determinationem decimæ partis, &c. It was partly judiciall, in the determination of the tenth part: that whereas the tribe of Levi being the twelfth tribe, was consecrated to the service of the Tabernacle, who had no possessions, as the other tribes; it was thought reasonable that the other eleven tribes should give unto them the tenth part of their fruits and increase, that there might be some equalitie: that although the tribe of Levi were not the full tenth part of Israel, yet the tenth of the profits was granted unto them, ut honorabilius viverent, that they might be maintained more honourably: & quia aliqui per negligentiam transgressores futuri erant, and to make amends for them, which should transgresse herein of negligence. So Thomas. There was beside a ceremoniall respect in the paiment of tithes, because they were then due for the ceremoniall service, and externall sacrifice of the Tabernacle: and in respect of the necessitie of the law of tithes, that the Levites were to be maintained thereby, and by no other meanes or way. In both which respects the law of tithes touching the ceremonie, is not in force now, nor yet as it was a judiciall constitution: but in respect of the equitie thereof and morall part, it ought still to remaine. Here then we dissent first from them which thinke the law of tithes was altogether a ceremonie, and so bindeth not now: which seemeth to be the opinion of Gallasius: Non jubemur jam fruges, &c. pastoribus pro munere offerre: Wee are not commanded now to offer our fruits to the Pastors for a gift, &c. for this is contrarie to the Apostle, Gal. 6. Let him that is taught in the word make him that hath taught him partaker of all his goods. If of all goods, how is he not to yeeld unto him of his very fruits and increase? 2. 2. q. 87. art. 1. in Cor.

Secondly, the opinion of the Rhemists is likewise to be refused, which hold the paiment of the very tithes a naturall dutie, and so not to be altered: for if this were so, it were not lawfull by any other meanes equivalent to tithes, by contribution or otherwise to provide for the maintenance of the Ministers: for where a naturall dutie it ought not to bee changed. But in S. Pauls time the Pastors and Churches were provided for otherwise then by tithes, as by liberall benevolence and contribution, for the which he commendeth the Macedonians for their bountie that wayes, 2 Cor. 8. 2.

The Rhemists also have another assertion: that tithes are due to the Priesthood of the new Testament: because they are not now challenged in the right or respect of any externall sacrifice, or sacrificing Priesthood, which hath no institution in the new Testament, which acknowledgeth Christ onely a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech; but in regard of the word preached, and other ministeriall duties following of spirituall things, 1 Cor. 9. 11. Synopf. Centur. 1. err. 82.

Thirdly the opinion of the Canonists, that the tithes are precisely due, jure divino, by the divine law, confuted by Bellarmine: for then all those Churches should transgresse Gods ordinance, which have provided in any other ordinance (so it be equivalent to tithes) for the maintenance of the Ministers of the Gospell, otherwise then by tithes.

Fourthly, neither yet can I altogether subscribe unto the opinion of Thomas, that saith, Determinatio decimarum est solvenda authoritate Ecclesiæ: That the determinate tenth part is now in the time of the Gospell payable by the authoritie of the Church, &c. But it may safely be affirmed, that tithes are due jure divino, by the divine law, and by the word of God, and not onely commanded by the constitution of the Church: first, negativè, negatively tithes are so due simply and absolutely: that is, that none have right unto tithes but the Pastors and Ministers of the Gospell: but what is once consecrated truly to religious uses, ought so to continue. Secondly, affirmatively also this assertion is true: though primaria, now the just and precisely the tenth part is not now exacted by the law of the Gospell: yet secundaria, & c. ex æquo, secondarily and by good consequent, tithes are now due by the word of God, not onely in regard that Ministers should bee maintained, but in regard of that particular proportion of the tenth at first: for the liberall and sufficient maintenance of the spirituall Ministers, is grounded upon the law of God and nature: and who can be a better Judge of this sufficiencie than God himselfe? who first in his owne law did set this proportion of the tenth, as the fittest allowance for his Ministers: so that whosoever would innovate this order, as thinking some other course to be more convenient, should seeme thereby to make himselfe wiser than God. But for the further discussing of this matter, I likewise referre the reader to the former place. Synopf. Centur. 1. contr. 5. qu. 8.

6. Controv. Of the Lenten fast.

And because mention is here made of tenths, I will adde one word of that curious observation which some have out of the collections of the Fathers, concerning the Lenten fast, which they would have warranted by this law of tithes: because the whole yeare consisting of 365. dayes, the full tenth reacheth to 36. dayes, the time of the Lenten fast. So also Bellarmine maketh this one of the reasons of the Lenten fast. Lib. 2. de bonis operibus. 18.

Answ. 1. But this account agreeth not with the time of Lent, which continueth six weeks full, and so beginning at Ashwednesday, which is the first day of Lent, which in all make 46. dayes: if from these the Lords dayes for the six weeks, there yet remaine 40. dayes: if they will have the Saturdayes abated, there will bee then but 34. dayes left: so no wayes can they make these accounts to agree. They would shew themselves herein wiser than God, who did appoint his holy dayes by sevens, 2. reason. 3. The Lenton fast then is now observed, not as a spirituall tenth of time in respect of religious use, but as a politicall interdiction and time of restraint for the good of the Com-

7. Controv. Against free will in good works.

Vers.29. The first borne of thy sonnes, &c. Isidore hath here a good observation: Spiritualiter primogenita principia bonorum operum ostendunt, &c. Spiritually the first borne doe shew the beginning of good works: by this the Lord sheweth, bonam voluntatem, &c. ad ipsius gratiam pertinere, that good will which goeth before the worke belongeth unto his grace: against the Pelagians, who ascribe the beginning of good works to their owne free will.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. To be faithfull in the graces and gifts of the spirit committed to us.

Vers.7. If a man deliver to his neighbour money, or stuffe to keepe, &c. As God would have his people to be faithfull in keeping, and restoring such things as were committed to their trust, so much more should we shew our faithfulnesse in these things, quæ ipse apud nos deponit, which he committeth unto our trust and credence, as in using well to his glorie the gifts and graces which we have received, as S. Paul saith to Timothie, That worthie thing which was committed unto thee, keepe through the holy Ghost, 2 Tim. 1.14. Marbach. This also may be applied unto that care and faithfulnesse which Pastors ought to shew in diligent feeding of the Lords flocke committed unto them, Simler.

2. Observ. Experience of misery causeth us to pitie the miserable.

Vers.21. For ye were strangers. Optima pietatis magistra, experta indigentia, &c. Our owne experience of want and necessitie, is the best instructer and teacher of mercie, Oleaster. They then which have beene in miserie themselves, and know not how to pitie others in the like case, shew themselves to be of a vile nature, and of an hard and cruell disposition: the Scripture saith of Christ himselfe, In that he suffred, and was tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted, Heb.2.18.

3. Observ. Against cruell Creditors that keepe their debtors in prison.

Vers.27. For it is his covering onely. If the law judge it a cruell thing, to take a mans covering for a pledge which should keepe him from the cold of the night: how much doth their cruelty exceed, which cast their poore debtors into prison, there to lie in cold iron, naked and hungrie without comfort, Simler. Which hard dealing is reproved in the parable, in him that cast his fellow servant into prison for debt, not to come out thence till he had paid it, *Matth.*18.30.

Chap. XXIII.

1. The Method and Argument.

Here are two parts of this Chapter. 1. Certaine lawes are propounded: first, Civill to *vers.*10. then Ecclesiasticall, from thence to *vers.*19. 2. Then followeth a generall exhortation to obedience to Gods Commandements, thence to the end of the Chapter. The Civill lawes are of two sorts, either generall, concerning all sorts of men, to *vers.*6. or speciall, touching the office of Judges, *vers.*6. to 10. The generall likewise are either of particular politicke duties, namely these foure: 1. Not to receive a false rumour. 2. Not to be a false witnesse. 3. Not to follow a multitude to pervert the truth. 4. Not to be partiall in an unjust commiseration toward the poore in his cause, nor either of the generall duties of charitie, as what is to be done toward ones enemies oxe or asse, being found going astray, or lying under his burthen, *vers.*4,5.

The speciall lawes concerning a Judge, are these: 1. Not to overthrow a poore mans right, *vers.*6. 2. Not to heare a false matter. 3. Not to condemne the innocent, *vers.*7. 4. Not to receive rewards, *vers.*8. nor to oppresse strangers, *vers.*9.

The Ecclesiasticall lawes follow of two sorts. 1. Concerning the festivall times: 1. Of the yeare of rest, *vers.*10,11. 2. Of the day of rest, *vers.*12. 3. Of the three feasts of the yeare, to *vers.*17. 2. They follow certaine lawes belonging to the service of God: 1. Of their appearing before God: 2. Of leavened bread: 3. Of the fat of the sacrifices: 4. Of the first fruits: 5. Of not seething the kid in the dams milke, to *vers.*19.

The second part containeth an exhortation to obedience. 1. Concerning their state present, that they should be obedient to the Angell which conducted them, which was Christ Jesus, with two reasons of it: 1. From the feare of those judgements, and revenge which the Angell should otherwise take of them, *vers.*21. 2. From the benefits, which he should procure for them, if they did obey, *vers.*22.23. 2. Then he sheweth how they should walke in the service of God afterward, when they were come to the land of Canaan; and root out all Idolatrie, *vers.*24. which exhortation is strengthened with promises: 1. Of plentie: 2. Of health: 3. Of fruitfull increase. 4. Of the casting out of their enemies before them, with the meanes whereby, *vers.*28. and the manner how, by little and little, *vers.*29. 5. Of the dilating of their borders, *vers.*31. with removing two impediments thereof, the making covenant with the Canaanites, and suffering of them to dwell among them.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 1. Thou ſhalt not carrie a falſe report. I. A. better than, thou ſhalt not receive. L. S. V. C. P. G. naſha, ſignifieth the firſt rather here, becauſe in that ſenſe, as well the author as reporter of a falſe tale is here reproved: as, Thou ſhalt not have to doe with any falſe report. B. I. A. B.

Vers. 2. Thou ſhalt not follow the mightie. I. So Oleaſter: better than, the many or the multitude. B. G. cum rabbim, ſignifieth both the mightie, and many: the firſt rather, becauſe of the oppoſite part in the next verſe, dal, the poore, which is ſet againſt the mightie. I.

Vers. 5. Thou ſhalt put it downe with it. I. better than, wilt thou leave it with him? V. A. with an interrogation: for lawes uſe not to be ſet forth interrogatively: or thou ſhalt helpe him up with it. B. G. cum eum, the word ghazab, ſignifieth to leave, lay aſide, not to helpe: ſo alſo Oleaſter. See the queſtion following upon this verſe. I.

Vers. 8. Gifts blind the ſeeing. B. V. A. P. I. S. better than, the wiſe. L. C. G. the word is, pikeehim, the ſeeing, that is, the wiſe; that is the ſenſe, but not the interpretation. I. B. cum cæter.

Vers. 24. Thou ſhalt not bow thee downe to their gods. I. A. P. better than, bow downe to, &c. for the verbe is hithpael, or than, thou ſhalt not worſhip their gods, or idols. V. L. cum cæter. for ſhacah, ſignifieth to bow downe, and the preposition, ל. lamed, ſignifieth to. I. A. P.

3. Queſtions diſcuſſed.

Quest. I. Of raiſing or reporting falſe tales.

Vers. 1. Thou ſhalt not report a falſe tale. 1. Some doe read, Thou ſhalt not receive, becauſe the word naſha, doth as well ſignifie to beare and ſuſtaine, as raiſe and lift up. So read the Chalde, Arabique, Latine, with others: Oleaſter, Lyranus. Calvin alſo and Simlerus, doe preferre this ſenſe. But it is better tranſlated, Thou ſhalt not raiſe a falſe tale, Iun. As the like law is given, Levit. 19. 16. Thou ſhalt not walke about with tales: and this generally comprehendeth, as well the firſt author of a falſe report, as the bearer and carier: and ſo Lippoman alſo interpreteth well, Non ſis author falſi rumoris, aut fingas in corde, &c. Be not the author of a falſe report, or faine it in thine heart, &c. 2. Some doe referre it to the perſon of the Judge; that he ſhould not puniſh any, becauſe of an evill report ſpread of him, Oſiander. Or, Ut non audiatur una pars in abſentia alterius, &c. That one part ſhould not be heard in the abſence of another: for commonly then many tales are deviſed, Lyran. Or, that the Judge ſhould not give eare to the accuſer, before he have heard the partie accuſed alſo, Borrh. Or, this ſome make to be the meaning, Nunſuſcipias vocem teſtium, quos ſcis mentiri; Receive not the voice of witneſſes, whom thou knoweſt to lie, Toſtat. quæſt. 1. But it is better generally underſtood of all, as well private men as Judges: Vetat falſum rumorem de ullo homine, vel ſpargi, vel admitti; It forbiddeth any falſe rumour to be ſpread of any, or admitted, Gallaſ. Præcipue tamen lex hæc ad judicia pertinet, And yet principally this law belongeth to judgments, Simler. becauſe falſe reports may there doe moſt harme: yet becauſe it is alſo a fault in private men, to raiſe falſe reports, and to be too credulous to beleeve them, it is better here to retaine a generall ſenſe.

Quest. II. What it is to put to the hand to be a falſe witneſſe.

Vers. 1. Neither ſhalt put thy hand with the wicked to be a falſe witneſſe. 1. Calvine joyneth this to the former clauſe, and ſaith, they are here underſtood to be falſe witneſſes, qui proximos traducunt, which joyne hand with the wicked in traducing of their neighbours. So alſo Oleaſter. But the manner of the ſpeech here uſed, of putting to the hand, that is, of binding and combining themſelves, importeth a greater matter, than onely in carying or ſpreading of a falſe report. 2. Some referring this law unto publike teſtimonie in judgement, underſtand it of the perſon of the Judge, that he ſhould not be a meane to procure falſe witneſſes: as the Elders of the Citie, to whom Iezabel ſent, did againſt Naboth, R. Salomon, Marſilius. But the words, In being a falſe witneſſe, (which is more than procuring) will not beare that ſenſe. Some by putting to the hand, underſtand, thou ſhalt not ſweare, to be a falſe witneſſe, becauſe they uſed to lift up their hand, when they did ſweare, Lyran. Toſtat. But this doth make the ſenſe too particular: for what if he doe not ſweare, but onely promiſe or give his hand to be a falſe witneſſe? it is directly againſt the law: therefore, by putting the hand, is ſignified her ſhall not aid or aſſiſt him, he ſhall not conſociate himſelfe, vel conferre operam, or promiſe his helpe, or conſent unto evill, Iun. 4. And withall, here is forbidden that wicked confederacie and mutuall ayding one of another in bearing falſe witneſſe: as it is a common practice, Da mihi mutuum teſtimonium, Witneſſe for me, and I will beo witneſſe for thee, Gallaſ. And two things are forbidden: Non adjuvabis cauſam improbi falſo teſtimonio, &c. Thou ſhalt not helpe the cauſe of the wicked by a falſe teſtimonie, nor make a covenant with him, to doe it for him, Pererius.

Quest. III. How great a ſinne it is to be a falſe witneſſe.

Vers. 1. To be a falſe witneſſe. 1. Falſum teſtimonium habet triplicem deformitatem. A falſe teſtimonie hath a threefold deformitie: ex perjurio, firſt by perjurie, becauſe witneſſes are not admitted but upon their oath: alio modo ex violatione juſtitiæ, another way by violating of juſtice: tertio ex ipſa falſitate, thirdly by the falſeneſſe of his teſtimonie, Thomas. Thoſe three evils and miſchiefes then do accompanie 2. 2. q. 70. art. 4. in Cor.

panie a false witnesse, perjurie, injustice, falsenesse and lying. 2. And in three other respects, is this sinne of false witnesse bearing, odious and abominable: 1. In respect of the author thereof, who is the divell, for when he telleth a lie he speaketh of his owne. 2. The inconveniences are great which ensue, the perverting of justice, and the condemning of the innocent. 3. There is also, nominis divini contaminatio, the polluting and prophaning of the name of God, Borrh.

QUEST. IV. Whether in this law we are to understand, the mightie, or the many.

Vers.2. Thou shalt not follow the mightie. 1. The most doe reade, many, or, the multitude, as before is shewed in the divers readings: and they make two parts of this law, the first to concerne all in generall, that they shall not follow a multitude to doe evill: the second, Judges in particular, not to follow a multitude in judgement, Cajetan, Oleaster. Whether it be to respect the multitude of the parties friends, that sentence is to be given upon, Marbach. or the multitude of Judges, that consent in a wrong judgement, Simler. And then the meaning is, that in neither case a multitude is to be followed: si manifestè iniquum vel falsum, if it be manifestly false or unjust which the multitude holdeth: for if it be manifestè verum, either manifestly true, vel dubium, or doubtfull, which many doe affirme, one must not of singularitie depart from their judgement, Tostat. quæst.2.

2. Some in the former clause interpret, rabbim, many, Thou shalt not follow many to doe evill: but in the other branch of the law, they understand it not of the quantitie and number, but of the qualitie, neither decline after the mightie, &c. that is, where there are many Judges to give sentence, the inferiour should not be overruled by the opinion of the Superiour Judges and mightie: and therefore among the Jewes this wise course was used, in giving of sentence in the assemblie of Judges, that the punies and inferiour Judges should deliver their opinion first, lest if the greatest began, the other might bee swayed by them: this is also the use among the Divines in the Vniversitie of Paris, the Juniors and Inferiors begin first, Lyran. This also is the honourable use of the Star-chamber with us.

3. But seeing the same word, rabbim, is used in both sentences, it is taken in the same sense in both places, and is better interpreted, the mightie, than, the many, for these reasons: 1. Because of the opposition of the poore man, in the next verse: the mightie and the poore are better compared and set together, than the many and the poore. 2. So Levit.19.15. gadhol, the great, and dal, the poore, are set one against the other, that neither the one nor the other should be respected in judgement. 3. This interpretation of the mightie, comprehendeth also the other, whether they be mightie in number, or in power, &c.

4. And as respect is not to bee had of the multitude, so neither of the paucitie and fewnesse: as the Donatists in times past, and the Anabaptists in these dayes doe brag of their small number, as therefore the best, Gallas.

QUEST. V. How the poore is not to be esteemed in judgement.

Vers.3. Thou shalt not esteeme a poore man, &c. 1. The word hadar, signifieth honour, beautie, comelinesse. Prohibet blandis sermonibus ornari causam pauperis; He forbiddeth that the poore mans cause should be set forth with glosing words, and so be made better than it is, Cajetan, Oleaster. Therefore Aristotle giveth a good rule, that in matters of judgement, causa simplicibus sermonibus proponenda est, that the cause should be laid forth, and opened in simple and plaine speeches, not in eloquent, passionate or affected words. Lib.1.Rhetoric. 2. And as passions may be procured in Judges by speech, so also by the sight of the persons, as if when the poore suiter lamenteth and complaineth, and appeare to be very miserable, though he say nothing, Tostat.quæst.3. 3. The word dal signifieth not onely one which is poore in substance, but any other kinde of way: as they which are sicke and pined away, are called, dallim, as Ammon was the poore, and pined with love toward Thamar, 2 Sam.13. Oleaster. So not onely the poore, but all other miserable and forlorne persons are here understood, as the widow, fatherlesse, strangers and such like, Tostat. quæst.3. 4. Simplie it is not forbidden to respect a poore man, but in his cause: in matter of judgement, nothing must be done, either for rich or poore, præter merita causæ, beside the merit and desert of the cause, Tostat. Cum agitur paupertas, sublevanda est; When his povertie is pleaded, the poore is to be helped: Cum agitur jus publicum, deponenda est persona pauperis; When the publike right is in question, the poore person must be laid aside, Borrh. 5. And the reason is, because it is better præhonorare veritatem, to preferre and more honour the truth, Lyranus. 6. Although it be not often seene, that a poore man is preferred before a rich in his cause: yet sometime it falleth out, ut ambitio impellat Iudicem, &c. that the Judge through ambition, that he may be spoken of, will respect the poore: & major interdum est pauperum audacia, & temeritas, &c. and sometime the poore are more bold, rash, and readie to move suits than the rich, Calvin. And therefore this law provideth for such clamorous poore..

QUEST. VI. How persons are accepted in judgement, and how farre the poore may be respected.

In his cause, &c. 1. The person of the poore is not to be accepted in regard of his cause depending in judgement. Persons are accepted two wayes in judgement: 1. When as the Judge aliter distribuit quàm lex mandat, doth determine otherwise than the law commandeth: but where no certaine law is set prescribing the manner and forme which is to be followed, in that behalfe there can bee no acception of persons. And therefore though God in the beginning did elect some, and not others, quia non erat qualege, because he had no law to compell him, he therein accepted no mans person: as a man giving almes, having no rule set him how much he shall give, may distribute unto one more than unto another, yet be no accepter of persons. 2. Another way ones person is accepted in judgement, when more is given to one than to another, either of a benefit or punishment, otherwise than is due. As if a man sue for an hundred pound, whereas he can prove but 80. due of just debt, if the Judge shall give him 90. pound, he taketh ten from the one, and giveth it to the other more than is due, and so he is an accepter of the person of the one, more than of the other. And thus a poore man is not to be respected in judgement. 2. Two waies is mercie shewed unto the poore in his cause: when one facit illi bonum quod non habet, doth for him, or giveth him that good which he hath not; or, when the Judge so defendeth the poore, ut nemo tollat ei bonum quod habet, that no bodie take from him that good which he hath: the first way the Judge cannot have respect unto the poore, without partialitie, and perverting of justice, to give unto him that which of right doth not belong unto him: but the other way he may, to see that the poore be not oppressed in judgement, as it followeth afterward, vers. 6. Thou shalt not overthrow the right of the poore in his suit. Unto this kinde of commiseration it belongeth, that the Judge is willing to heare the cause of the poore man, and to receive his complaint: for how otherwise should he doe him right, and defend him from wrong, if he should stop his eares against the crie of the poore? Tostat. qu.4.

Quest. VII. Why mercie is to be shewed toward the enemies oxe and asse.

Vers. 4. If thou meet thine enemies oxe, &c. 1. Because civill suits and controversies for the most part proceed of evill will and enmitie: therefore unto the former lawes are annexed these two lawes, to cut off enmitie, and to maintaine love and friendship, Simler. 2. Though an instance be onely given of the enemies oxe or asse, yet it must be understood, de omni domestico animali, of every domestique beast in like manner, Lyran. And of whatsoever belongeth unto our neighbour, Lippoman. 3 Neither is this law made concerning oxen, or asses, as the Apostle saith in another case, Doth God take care for oxen? 1 Cor.9. But the speciall intendment of this law is, that there might be reconciliation among men. It was some pleasure to the beast, which might otherwise be devoured of some wilde beast, if it were brought home; and to the owner, which might also lose his beast, Tostatus. But the speciall scope of the law is: First, because the Jewes were cruell, to teach them to shew and exercise mercie toward bruit beasts, Ut eo facilius inducerentur, &c. That they might more easily bee induced to shew it toward men, Ambros. Et ut hac ratione odientis animum sibi conciliet, And that by this meanes hee might winne the love of his enemie, if he were not altogether implacable, Isidor. 4. There are two words here used, aiab, which signifieth to be an enemie, and shana, to hate: one may hate not being hated, but an enemie is said to be, where there is mutuall enmitie on both sides. It is an easier matter to doe good to one that hateth, where there is no hatred shewed againe, than to an enemie that is hated againe: therefore both words are added, that wee should shew kindnesse, as well where there is a mutuall and reciprocall hatred and enmitie, as where one is hated, and hateth not againe, Tostat. quæst.3. 5. God by this law doth not either command or permit, that men should bee enemies: but being imperfect of themselves, and subject to enmitie, he sheweth how they should become friends, as when it is said in the Psalme, Be angrie and sin not, we are not willed to be angrie, but if we chance to be angrie, we are taught how to moderate it, that we sinne not in our immoderate anger, Tostatus quæst.3. 6. By this law we learne that there are two kinds of injustice: one of them, qui inferunt injuriam, which offer wrong unto their neighbours; another of them, qui non propulsant injuriam, which doe not keepe wrong from them, when it is in their power, Borrh. 7. And further, this law sheweth the agreement betweene Christ and Moses, and betweene the new and old Testament, which both command us to love our enemies. Therefore Chrysostome is deceived who thinketh that those precepts, Thou shalt love thy friend, and hate thine enemie, In hom. sanctor. Joan. & Pauli. & carnali populo secundùm tempus data sunt, were given unto the earthly minded and carnall people according to the time: and that Christ gave another rule in the Gospell, to love our enemies: for it is plaine that this law commandeth us even to love our enemies. And the Wise-man more evidently in the Proverbs sheweth the same, chap.25.21. If thine enemie be hungrie, give him bread to eat, if he be thirstie, give him water to drinke, &c. Therefore we see that Christ in the Gospell, non ferat novam legem, sed tantum exponat, doth not make a new law, but onely expoundeth the old, Lippoman. That which was no precept of the law, but the Pharisies glosse, That they should love their friends, and hate their enemies.

Quest. VIII. Whether it is to be read, Thou shalt helpe him, or, lay it aside with him.

Thou shalt lay it aside with him. 1. The most doe here reade, Thou shalt helpe him up with it. This sense followeth Calvine, Cajetane, Osiander, Pagnine: as the like law is extant, Deut.22.4. Thou shalt lift them up with him. But the word ghazab is seldome found in that sense, but signifieth ordinarily and properly, to leave, or forsake. 2. Therefore it is best translated, Thou shalt leave, or lay aside the burthen, that the asse which cannot rise under his burthen, it being put aside, may the better stand up upon his legs. But this sense being retained, there are divers readings used, and interpretations given. Some reade it with an interrogation, Wilt thou indeed leave it with him? Vatablus, Oleaster: and so they find here a negative, to answer the interrogation, Nequaquam, No, thou shalt not. 2. Some reade the clause without an interrogation, and understand it of the leaving or laying aside of his hatred and enmitie. So the Chalde. 3. But the best reading is, to pronounce it without an interrogation, as before, and to referre it to the burthen of the beast, as is before shewed, omnino deponito cum eo, put it altogether with him, that is thine enemie, Junius. 4. And though mention be made onely of easing him under his burthen; yet all other the like kinde of helpe is understood: as if the beast be otherwise in danger, as like to bee strangled, or drowned, whether hee have a burthen or not: in these cases they they are required to ſet to their helping hands, Toſtat. Yea, though the enemie, of ſtomacke, deſire the other to doe it, he is to offer himſelfe: as the words doe import; wilt thou ceaſe and leave him? Vatablus readeth.

Quest. IX. How the poore mans cauſe is perverted in judgement.

Verſ. 6. Thou ſhalt not pervert the right of thy poore, &c. 1. As before partialitie is forbidden to the poore in matters of judgement in reſpect of their povertie, verſ. 3. ſo here the contrarie provided againſt, that a poore man be not oppreſſed or overborne in his ſuit, Simler. 2. The word is ebion which ſignifieth a very poore man, a begger, derived of abah, to will, deſire, becauſe ſuch an one omnibus careat, omnia concupiſcit, when he wanteth all things, deſireth all things, Oleaſt. 3. And there an emphaſis in the word, thy poore, that is, quem alere debes, whom thou oughteſt to nouriſh and maintaine, much leſſe to oppreſſe and hinder, Lippoman. 4. Many wayes there are whereby the poore oppreſſed in their ſuits and cauſes: 1. When as there is no acceſſe for them to the Judges. 2. When the Judge through favour to the rich, or for feare giveth wrong ſentence. 3. Or when through ignorance, partly becauſe hee heareth not the poore mans cauſe at large, his right is overthrowne, Simler, Pelarg. 5. And not onely Judges, but litigatores & cauſidici, the pleaders and lawyers are admonished here that they overthrow not the cauſe of the poore, by evill will, or deceit, or by any other meanes, Galaſ.

Quest. X. Againſt lying in judgement, and how it may be committed.

Verſ. 7. Thou ſhalt be farre from a lying word. 1. Although lying is to bee ſhunned and avoided of all yet moſt of all of Judges, whoſe office is to preſerve the truth, Lyran. And becauſe they repreſent God, Mendacia odio habentem, Which hateth lies, Borrh. 2. And whereas there are three kinds of lies, Iocoſum, quod dicitur ad delectandum, A lie in ſport, which is ſpoken to delight: officioſum, an officious lie, which is uttered to ſome good end, either ſpirituall or temporall: Perniciоſum, quod ſit in damnum alterius, A pernicious lie, which is made to anothers hurt, either ſpiritually or temporall which is worſt of all, Thomas. A lie made in judgement is of this kinde, becauſe it alwayes tendeth to anothers hurt, Toſtat. queſt. 4. 5. And this lie made in judgement may bee committed, either admittendo, vel pronuntiando, by the Judge admitting it in another, or pronouncing of it himſelfe, Ibi. Therefore the Judge muſt admit no falſe witneſſe, but both ſift them throughly, and ſet a great penaltie upon them, if hee finde them out, Toſtat. 6. The Judge alſo may diverſly commit falſehood in judgement either by giving a falſe teſtimonie, as it ſeemeth in thoſe dayes Judges might bee admitted to bee witneſſes, as the two Elders were againſt Suſanna, which is not permitted now: or elſe by falſe reporting of the proceſſe of the cauſe, for then they had not Actuaries and Notaries to ſet downe the proceedings as now is uſed to be done: or thirdly, by giving a falſe ſentence contrarie to that which is juſt and right and againſt his owne knowledge, Toſtat. qu. 4. 7. Some doe referre this to private men, that they ſhould not follow lies, or untruths: but that was ſpoken of before, verſ. 1. it is better referred to Judges and publike perſons, Simler.

Quest. XI. Who are meant here by the juſt and innocent.

Verſ. 7. Thou ſhalt not ſlay the innocent and the righteous. 1. This is to be underſtood of ſlaying by giving ſentence againſt ſuch judicially: for out of judgement neither is the guiltie and unrighteous perſon to be ſlaine, Cajetane. 2. R. Salomon by the innocent underſtandeth him, that is cleere in his owne conſcience, but yet condemned by falſe witneſſes: that the Judges in this caſe, when an innocent perſon goeth from them condemned, if any doe ſtand up to cleere them, as Daniel did for Suſanna, they ſhould be heard. By the juſt he would have underſtood him, that is indeed guiltie, but yet freed in publike judgment: that in this caſe if any doe appeare to prove him guiltie, hee ſhould not be admitted, &c. But the righteous and innnocent are here taken for all one, as it may appeare by the oppoſite part, I will not juſtifie a wicked man; the innocent and righteous is ſet againſt the wicked. And beſide, it is as acceptable to God to puniſh the wicked man, as to cleere and ſet free the innocent. 3. Cajetane and Toſtatus make this difference, Mundus eſt, qui non commiſit homicidium, &c. Hee is the cleane and innocent man, who hath not committed murther, adulterie, or any ſuch crime: he is the juſt and righteous man, which hath done ſome juſt thing, or ſome good worke. But this diſtinction is here too curious and unneceſſarie, for men uſe not to bee brought in queſtion for their good works, but for evill, whereof they are cited juſtly, or wrongfully accuſed: and ſo David taketh both theſe for the ſame, Pſal. 4. 8. Judge me O Lord according to my righteouſneſſe, and according to mine innocencie that is in me. 4. God therefore here forbiddeth Judges to condemne the innocent for guiltie: as Naboth was, Suſanna, and Ieremie, with the reſt of the Prophets, Galaſ. 5. Judges are not to condemne the innocent, Etiamſi à ſuperiori Iudice iubeantur. Though they ſhould be commanded by the ſuperiour Judge: as the Elders of Iſrael put Naboth to death at the commandement of Iezabel, Lippoman.

Quest. XII. In what ſenſe God is ſaid not to juſtifie the wicked.

For I will not juſtifie the wicked. 1. Some make this to be the meaning of this reaſon: that God will have Judges looke unto him, in whoſe place they are: that as God doth not juſtifie the wicked, ſo neither ſhould Judges, Marbach, Pelarg. 2. R. Salomon maketh this ſenſe, according to his former expoſition; taking the juſt, for him which is ſo in the triall of mans judgment, yet guiltie in his conſcience, and before God, that yet the Judge ſhould not put ſuch a to death: for though he be freed by the judgement of man, yet he cannot escape the hands of God: he will not justifie him. But this exposition is overthrowne before, that a just man is not here taken in that sense. 3. Therefore this rather is a menacing speech; that God will be avenged even of the unrighteous Judge, Iun. Quicunque impie facit sive suo sive alieno arbitrio, &c. Whosoever doth wickedly either of his owne minde, or following anothers direction, the Lord will punish it, Lippoman.

Quest. XIII. Whether a Judge ought alwayes to follow the evidence, when he himselfe knoweth the contrarie.

But here ariseth a great and weightie question, whether a Judge knowing in his owne conscience, that the man which is accused before him is innocent, and yet he is by the witnesses and other evidence found guiltie: whether he is bound to give sentence according to the evidence, against his owne knowledge, and whether in so doing he sinneth not.

1. The affirmative part is maintained by Thomas, Paulus Burgens. Tostatus, who putteth in these cautions: that the Judge knowing the partie to bee innocent as a private person, yet is to use all meanes to have the truth come to light: as by giving some secret intimation to the partie accused, how to defend himselfe; by sifting and examining the witnesses narrowly to see if he can make them to disagree, and so overthrow their testimonie: and if all this will not serve, to referre the matter to the superiour Judge: but if he have no superiour, then hee is bound to give sentence, secundum allegata, according to the evidence, & in hoc casu Index non peccat ferendo sententiam mortis, and in this case they resolve that the Judge sinneth not in giving sentence of death against the innocent party. Their reasons are these:

1. Index non interficit ipsum, sed illi qui accusant: The Judge that giveth sentence doth not slay him, but they which accuse him, Thomas. Like as a man holding a sword in his hand, another commeth and thrusteth his hand with the sword, and so killeth a man: Non est reus qui tenebat gladium: He is not guiltie which held the sword, Tostat. 2.2.q.64. art. 6. respons. ad 3. argum.

Obj. 1. Though the false accusers are the chiefe in this action, yet the Judge is accessarie, because he consenteth unto them: otherwise Pilate that washed his hands, and knew Christ to be innocent, should have sinned in condemning Christ. 2. That instance of one holding a sword is nothing like: for his hand is used against his will, and he himselfe acteth nothing: but the Judge is an agent. And the case is not like if one having a sword in his hand should be urged himselfe to kill one, whom he knew to be innocent, for then he should be guiltie of the murther.

2. Solius est Dei judicare secundum veritatem quam ipse cognoscit: It belongeth to God only to judge according to the truth which he knoweth in himselfe. But the Judge must not be informed according to that which he knoweth as a private person, but as it appeareth unto him publikely in judgement, Tostat.

Ans. It doth not follow, but the contrarie rather, that because the Lord judgeth according to the truth, the Magistrate being in Gods place should doe the like also, not to give sentence against the truth: Iehosaphat said unto his Officers and Judges: You execute not the judgements of man, but of the Lord, 2. Chron. 19.6.

3. Argum. He that judgeth against the law sinneth: but the Judge not following his evidence, judgeth against the law: therefore he herein should sinne, Tostat.

Ans. Hee that absolveth an innocent man condemned by false witnesses, goeth not against the judgement of the law, which would have no innocent man condemned, and all false witnesses to be punished.

4. Argum. If the Judge should cleere the innocent man, condemned by false witnesses, he should by consequence defame the witnesses, as false men, which hee is not able to prove: and this would breed a great scandall.

Ans. 1. Of two evils the lesse is to be taken: better were it for the witnesses to run into infamie, then an innocent man to lose his life. 2. Neither would any scandall arise at all: for the Judges knowledge alone may sway against the good name of the witnesses; who by other circumstances may also easily be confuted, as the Judge may handle the matter.

5. Argum. Involuntarie actions deserve neither praise nor dispraise altogether, whether they be committed through ignorance, or by violence: but they helpe to excuse. Therefore the Judge which followeth the false evidence, though he know the contrarie himselfe, is to be excused, because he is both simply bound by the law so to doe, and he is in part ignorant, quia nescit ut Index, because as a Judge he knoweth it not, though he know it as a private person, Tostat. qu. 6.

Ans. Ignorance cannot excuse the Judge at all in this case, because he was an eye witnesse to the contrarie: neither is there any such violence offred: for he might rather leave his place and office, than to bee compelled to give unjust sentence.

The question resolved, that a Judge must not give sentence against his private knowledge.

Now the contrarie part, namely the negative, that the Judge is not to give sentence against his owne knowledge, and that in so doing he should sinne, is maintained by Lyranus, and Matthias Farinacius, the first upon these reasons:

1. Lyranus urgeth this sentence of Augustine: Quomodo apud divinam providentiam a peccato liberi sunt? How can they be free from sinne before the divine providence, which for those things which they see contemned are polluted with mans bloud, &c. His meaning is, that a Judge rather than he should leave his place of honour and wealth, should not give a wrong sentence, to shed the bloud of the innocent: mans life ought to be more precious than any other worldly thing whatsoever, as it is said,

Iob 2.4.

Iob 2.4. All that a man hath will he give for his life: therefore in this caſe, if there be no ſuperiour to deliver the innocent partie, debet prius dignitatem dimittere, &c. he ſhould rather give over his dignitie, than give ſentence againſt the innocent.

Toſtatus anſwereth, that he ſhould doe well to give over his place, unleſſe ſome inconvenience ſhall enſue, as in this caſe there would: for, infamaret teſtes, he ſhould by this meanes defame the witneſſes.

Contra. 1. But a greater inconvenience would follow if he doe it not, both the innocent partie ſhall be condemned, and the Judge commit a great ſinne before God. 2. Neither is here any inconvenience to be feared at all: for by this meanes falſe witneſſes ſhould be detected, not defamed: for they are worthie of all diſgrace and infamie for their falſehood.

2. Argum. The Apoſtle ſaith, Whatſoever is not of faith is ſinne, Rom. 14.23. But a Judge giving ſentence againſt his knowledge and conſcience, cannot doe it of faith: therefore therein he ſinneth.

Burgenſ. anſwereth, that a Judge in thoſe things which concerne his private perſon, may informe his conſcience by his private knowledge; but in publicke matters, he is to take his information by publicke evidence.

Contra. True it is, if that publicke information be not againſt the truth which he knoweth in his conſcience; otherwiſe he ſinneth, becauſe his action is not then of faith: which rule of the Apoſtle ſerveth not onely for private, but for publike actions alſo.

3. Si privata perſona peccat, publica non eximitur, &c. If a mans private perſon ſinneth, his publike is not exempted, Thoring. This reſpect of private and publike is before man, but the judgement of ſinne belongeth unto God. A politike humane reſpect cannot diſpenſe then with a ſinne againſt God.

4. To theſe reaſons may bee added that ſaying of the Wiſe-man which is moſt evident, Deliver them that are drawne to death, and wilt thou not preſerve them, that are led tobe ſlaine? If thou ſay, Behold, we knew not of it: he that pondereth the hearts, doth not he underſtand it? Here all they are found guiltie before God which doe not deliver the innocent from death: if private men negligent herein are condemned, much more the publike Judge. And this place meeteth with that curious diſtinction, that as he is Judge he knew it not, though he knew it as a private man: for if he knew it in his conſcience and before God, it is enough to convince him before him that ſearcheth the heart. Prov. 24.12.

5. And if it were ſo, then a Judge condemning an innocent man, caſt by falſe witneſſes, even againſt his knowledge, ſhould be free; then Pilate who condemned Chriſt, being by falſe witneſſe, and the malice of the Jewes accuſed, whom he knew to be an innocent man, giving this teſtimonie of him, I find no fault in him at all, Ioh. 19.4. ſhould notwithſtanding herein have beene without fault.

Therefore upon theſe reaſons, the former concluſion of Lyranus ſtandeth ſound and good: that a Judge ſinneth in giving ſentence againſt the innocent, condemned and caſt by falſe evidence, if hee in his conſcience knew him to be innocent: And that he oughr rather in this caſe to give over his office and dignitie, if there be no other way to deliver the innocent, rather than to be guiltie of his bloud.

Quest. XIV. A Judge is not bound of his knowledge to condemne a man, not found guiltie in publike judgement.

But as the Judge is bound in conſcience to deliver the innocent, whom he knoweth ſo to be, that yet is found guiltie through malice and envie: notwithſtanding it doth not follow, that hee ſhould likewiſe condemne him, that is cleared in publike judgement, whom he knoweth in his private knowledge to be guiltie of the crime, as of murther, adulterie, whereof he was accuſed, but by favour and partialitie acquited: and the reaſons of this difference, are theſe:

1. The law is more readie to ſpare than to puniſh, to extend favour than to ſhew rigour: according to that rule in the law, Odia reſtringi decet, favores convenit ampliari, Hatred is fit to be reſtrained, and favour to be enlarged, Toſtat.

2. In condemning a man of his owne knowledge, he doth more than in diſmiſſing the innocent: for here he doth not abſolve him by any ſentence, but onely ſuſpendeth the ſentence of condemnation, and giveth over his place, rather than he will give ſentence againſt him; but here he giveth ſentence againſt the other.

3. If he ſhould condemne any upon his private knowledge onely, he ſhould doe it as a private man, for ſo he hath no power to condemne, Lyran.

4. Yet the Judge knowing the partie accuſed to be guiltie, may by ſome meanes ſo worke, and give ſuch direction, that his wickednetie may be found out, but of his owne knowledge, without further proceſſe or evidence in judgement, he cannot condemne him whom he knoweth to be guiltie.

Quest. XV. What a dangerous thing it is for a Iudge to take gifts.

Vers. 8. Thou ſhalt take no gift. 1. That is, the Judge, when any cauſe of his is in hand, who knoweth the gift upon him: otherwiſe for the Prince or Magiſtrate to take a preſent or gift of acknowledgement, which the ſubjects and inferiours doe offer, to ſhew their dutie and thankfulneſſe, it is not here forbidden: may thoſe wicked and unthankfull men, that brought Saul no preſents, are reproved 1 Sam. 10.27. Oſiander. 2. And a difference is to be made betweene Judges and Advocates, for theſe may lawfully take their fee, ſo they exact not more than is due unto them: becauſe both they have not their ſtipends as Judges have, and beſide, they are but pleaders, not givers of ſentence, and ſo the danger is leſſe: whereas Judges have their certaine ſolarie appointed them, and in their ſentence definitive the cauſe ſtandeth or falleth, Toſtat. 3. This alſo muſt bee underſtood of extraordinarie and unuſuall gifts

...rious Judges have by order, certaine fees allowed them in every cause, which they may safely take: ...e places they have publike allowance, maintenance and revenues, wherewith they ought to be con-... Nehemiah was allowed the bread of the Governour, though he tooke it not, chap 5. 15. 4. And ...only which receiveth silver and gold, sed etiam qui propter laudem judicat male, munus accipit, &c. ...also which for praise doth judge unjustly, receiveth a reward, August. And there are three kindes In Psalm. 25. ...ing of gifts; munus à corde est captata gratia à cogitatione, &c. there is a gift from the heart, when a ...ineth to winne favour; munus ab ore, a gift from the mouth, in praise and commendation; munus 9. Moral. c. 26. ..., a gift out of the hand, by receiving of a reward, Gregor.

QUEST. XVI. Whether all kinde of gifts are unlawfull.

...One thinke that all gifts are not unlawfull, which are given to Judges, and they make this diffe-...rence: some gifts are for gaine and lucre, as silver, gold, and such like: some are for meat and ...and these were by some Lawes allowed to be taken, especially after sentence given. And these cir-...cumstances further they would have considered in gifts: 1. Who giveth, if the rich to him that is poore, ...much the more suspicious: 2. The quantity of the gift, if it be but small it is not like to corrupt ...Judge: and therefore Tostatus saith, Ecclesia Romana non consuevit in his interpretari accipientem de-...super donantem, The Church of Rome useth not to interpret that the giver or taker offend in ...small gifts. But it is no marvell, that their Church which loveth gifts so well, according to the say-...ing Venalia Romæ, All things are saleable at Rome, doth give such a favourable interpretation of ... 3. The time of giving must be considered; if one give unto him in his necessity, it is not presu-...med he did it to corrupt his mind, as to releeve his want, Tostat. As though it be not so much more ...to corrupt the Judge, when he receiveth a gift in his great necessity.

...Therefore, this text seemeth to condemne all gifts, great or small, given to whomsoever, rich or ...poore, and whensoever, being given to obtaine favour in their cause: for a generall reason is given; be-...cause such gifts doe blind the eyes and judgement of the wise, which are here called the seeing: and ...the word phiver, in piel, signifieth, doe not only blind, but pull out their eyes: as in the same mood it is ...used Gen. 21. 11. That the King of Babel put or pulled out the eyes of Zedekiah, Oleaster. And in an-...other place the word ghur, signifieth, evigilare, to awake: so gifts cause the eyes of the prudent to awake, ...and upon the unrighteous cause, Oleaster. But the other sense is more fit here: they are said to ...have eyes, either that their judgement being corrupted, they see not what is just or right, as lovers ...are blind in that which they love: or though they see what is just, yet they are turned by gifts, to give ...judgement against their owne conscience, Simler. These gifts also pervert the words of the just: ...for that also is first perverted, but mention is made of words, because, principalis subversio, &c. est in ...verbis, the principall subversion and overthrow of the righteous cause, is in the words of the ...Judge. Tostat. qu. 8. They are called still righteous, though now corrupted, because they were so indeed ...sometime to be so still to themselves and others, Simler.

...Therefore if all gifts doe blind the eyes of Judges, and pervert their words; then it is not safe to ...take any gift in that kinde, which is given for the furtherance of ones cause. No, it is not lawfull for a ...Judge to take a gift, to give right judgement: Nam de venditione justi judicii venietur ad venditionem It is not law-...Lest from selling of just judgement, they should fall to sell unjust judgement, Tostat. And as it full, no not to ...is evill to sell justice, so it is also to buy: as S. Paul might have beene delivered for a reward, Act. buy or sell Ju-...25. he chose rather to answer at Rome. And in the ancient Church they were noted, which did stice in a good ...buy for their liberty, that they might not be compelled to be present at the Gentiles idolatrous cause. ...Simler.

...Then, howsoever the Canon law, and the practice of the Church of Rome doth tolerate small ...gifts, it is the safest way, not to accept of any at all. And herein the ancient Romane lawes are to be ...commended, which, as is extant in their 12. Tabulæ, capite puniendum Judicem, &c. did decree that Judge ...should be punished with death, which tooke money to give sentence in a cause. Diocletian also made a Law, ...that sentence pronounced by a corrupt Judge, ipso jure infirmam esse, by the Law should be void, and to ...be revoked by appeale: Lysias being asked why he received not gifts of the Messerians, answered, Quia ...nolo peccare, Hee should have offended against the Lawes of justice: Innocentius also hath a ...saying, speaking of corrupt Judges, Vos non attenditis merita causarum, sed personarum, non jura, ...sed non quod ratio dictet, sed quod voluntas affectet, non quod liceat, sed quod lubeat, &c. pau-...pere cum mora negligitis, divitum causam cum instantia promovetis, &c. You doe not consider the me-...rits of the cause, but of the persons, not right, but gifts, not what reason enditeth, but what will affecteth, not what ...is lawfull, but what you list, &c. the cause of the poore you neglect by delaying, the cause of the rich you are di-...ligent in promoting: therefore Tostatus here resolveth, and concludeth well, that howsoever the Canons ...permit the receiving of small gifts, yet it is better, Si volunt effugere conscientiæ scrupulum, ut nihil ...accipiant, If they will avoid the scruple of conscience, that they take nothing at all.

...A gift then is of great force, it prevaileth much: as the Wise-man saith in the Proverbs, chap. 17. 8. ...A gift is a stone pleasant in the eyes of them that have it, it prospereth whither soever it turneth. As a ...precious stone shineth every way, so a gift is available to any purpose. Gifts doe much hurt in private mat-...ters: Amphitruo his wife, being corrupted with a precious jewell, betrayed him: and Procris chastity ...became with a gift: but in publike affaires gifts doe much more hurt, as well in civill, as Philip ...of Macedonia, non tam armis, quam auro expugnavit libertatem Græciæ, did not so much by force ...of arms, as by gifts and treasure overthrow the liberty of Greece. As also in Ecclesiasticall matters, ...simonie doth as much hurt, as bribery in the Common-wealth: for they which by corrupt meanes attaine to the great preferments of the Church, must needs also corruptly administer the [s] the Prophet Ezechiel noteth the false Prophets, which for handfuls of barley, and peeces of bread prophesie false things, chap. 13. 18. Simler. Therefore seeing the Spirit of God hath set it downe, gifts and bribery doe corrupt and blinde, Nimia eorum est impudentia, &c. They are very impudent shameleſſe, that will make their boast notwithstanding, that though they receive gifts, they can give judgement, Gallas.

QUEST. XVII. Why strangers are not to be oppressed in judgement.

Vers. 9. Thou shalt not oppresse a stranger. 1. Some thinke that this is a repetition of the former chap. 22. 21. Thou shalt not doe injury to a stranger, that it may appeare, quanta cura sint peregrini, &c. how carefull God is of strangers, Lippom. And because the Israelites were given inhumane and hard toward strangers, as the Jewes are to this day, that contemne all people beside selves: the Lord saw it necessary often to inculcate this precept, Simler. But rather I thinke with tane and Gallasius, that this is a new Law: Illud communiter, hoc specialiter datur judicibus, testibus, factoribus: That was given in generall, this in particular to Judges, witnesses, accusers. 2. And to this God so provided in his wisdome, that the Israelites and their fathers should be strangers and sojourn in other countries, as in Canaan, and Egypt, ut captivitatis & peregrinationis miseriam discerent, to learn experience what the misery of captives and strangers was, that they might the better know how to pity on the like: Nemo libentius hospitem sine tecto suo introducit hospitio, &c. No man more will receiveth him into his house, that wanteth lodging, than he that was sometime without lodging selfe: no man sooner feedeth the hungry, and giveth the thirsty drinke, than he that felt hunger and himselfe, &c. August. 3. And whereas it is added, Yon know the heart of a stranger: the meaning is, how of care and griefe they are, that you need not afflict them more, Simler. that they are destitute of frie and had need to be so much the more pitied, Tostat. and seeing strangers are no inhabitants, but sic passe thorow the country, they should not be stayed nor hindred, ut iter suum posset exequi, that they finish their journey, Lyran. You know also by your selves their hearts, how ready they are to call God for helpe against their oppressors, as you did in Egypt, Simler.

De vita Christiana.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the divers festivals of the Hebrewes.

Vers. 10. Six yeeres thou shalt sow thy land, &c. The Hebrewes had divers kindes of festivall da which all tended to the honour of God. Now, impendimus honorem Deo, &c. wee doe honour unto God either for an eternall benefit, and so they had juge sacrificium, every dayes sacrifi or for some temporall, which is either generall, as of our creation, in remembrance whereof they kept seventh day holy: or of our preservation, ideo erat festum Neomenia, therefore they kept the feast of new Moone every moneth: or speciall, as of some speciall benefit and deliverance, in remembrance wh of they had their festivals of weekes, as Pentecost; of moneths, as the seventh moneth; of yeeres, as seventh yeere, and the seventh seventh yeere, which was the Jubile, Thomas.

In Epist. ad Colossens. cap. 2.

QUEST. XIX. Why the land was to rest the seventh yeere.

Vers. 11. But the seventh yeere thou shalt let it rest, &c. 1. The land is said to rest in two respects: F in a metaphoricall sense, as we are said to rest, when we cease from labour; so the eart said to rest, when wee forbeare labouring therein. Againe, because the earth when it is plowed to br forth fruit, sendeth out the strength and nourishment thereof, which is abated and weakened by co nuall bringing forth of fruit: for which cause wee see by experience, that Husbandmen doe let t grounds lye fallow, and rest to gather strength: therefore in this respect also it is said to rest, Tost. q
And although by this rest of the seventh yeere, both the earth waxed stronger for to beare fruit after w and the beasts also of the field were provided for: yet this was not the speciall end of this seventh ye of rest: but these were the reasons of the institution thereof: 1. That the poore might by this mea be liberally provided for, when they might freely without any let, reape the fruit of the ground, of vi yard, and olive trees, Tostat. 2. It was a benefit also to the servants, who this yeere were set at liber and as they had every weeke a day of rest, so now they have every seventh yeere a whole yeere of rest intermission. 3. Beside, the rich hereby were taught to moderate their greedy desire, in gathering laying up the fruits of the earth without any end, Gallas. And in this yeere the rich man tooke care well as the poore, What shall I eat? Therefore the Lord would teach them by experience what the of a poore man was. 4. This also was a type and figure of their spirituall rest in Christ, which should accomplished in the kingdome of God, as this seventh yeere of rest was made perfect and full in the ye of Jubile, Simler.

QUEST. XX. What the poore lived upon in the seventh yeere.

But here a further question ariseth, what the poore did eat this yeere, and that which they left, beasts of the field did eat. 1. Augustine is of opinion, that they did sow the seventh yeere, as did in the six yeeres, yet they did not reape or gather their fruit this yeere, but left it to the poo
But this is against the text here; for six yeeres they are bidden to sow, and gather their fruits, but seventh to let it rest: therefore there here being an apparent opposition betweene the six yeeres the seventh, in the seventh they were neither to sow, nor reape; but it is yet more evident, Levit. 25.
in this seventh yeere the Lord saith, Thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor cut thy vineyard. And so it is opinion of Iosephus, and generally of the Hebrewes: and with them consent Lyranus, Tostatus, Simler with others, that the land did rest upon the seventh yeere from all manner of labour and tillage:
it would have seemed an hard thing to the stiffenecked Hebrewes, if they should have sowed, oth

others reape. 2. Cajetane thinketh that the poore lived by ſelling of ſuch herbes as grew of their owne accord that yeere in the field: vendebant ea, & ex earum pretio vivebant, they ſold them, and lived of the price of them: but the text ſaith, The reſt of the land ſhall be meat for you, Levit. 25.6. they then did eat of that which grew in the field. 3. Wherefore they lived not only of the herbes which grew in the fields, but of the fruit of vines, and olives, and other fruitfull trees. Beſide, they had a kinde of harveſt, of the ſeed which was ſhed the former yeere: as in ſome countries yet, that are fruitfull, the ſeed which was left after harveſt doth bring forth abundance, Gallaſ. Simler. and therefore it is ſaid, Levit. 25.5. That which groweth of it owne accord of thy harveſt thou ſhalt not reape, &c. 4. And beſide this common proviſion which came of it ſelfe out of the ground, which as well the owner, as the poore, and ſtrangers gathered for their uſe, Levit. 25.6. the fruits of the ſixth yeere were by Gods promiſe in ſuch abundance, as that they ſerved for three yeeres, the ſixth, ſeventh and eighth, till the ninth yeere, Levit. 25. verſ. 21, 22.

QUEST. XXI. Whether the ſeventh yeere were generally neglected in Iſrael, 490. yeeres together, as Toſtatus thinketh.

NOw concerning the obſervation of this ſeventh yeere of reſt, Toſtatus hath here a ſingular opinion by himſelfe, that it was neglected generally of the Iſraelites for the ſpace of 490. yeeres, and kept only during the time of 380. yeeres, as he thus would gather: from the going up of the Iſraelites out of Egypt till the captivity of Babylon under Nabuzaradan, Nebuchadnezzars chiefe Captaine, he reckoneth yeeres 867. which are thus divided: from their departure out of Egypt, unto the building of Salomons Temple, were 480. yeeres, 1 King. 6. 1. from the which he would have abated 40. yeeres, the time of the Iſraelites being in the wilderneſſe, ſo there remaine 440. from the building of Salomons Temple untill the captivity, he counteth 427. yeeres more: ſo the whole maketh 867. of this time, 490. yeeres they neglected the ſeven Sabbath of yeeres: and therefore they were 70. yeeres in captivity: for accounting 70. Sabbaticall yeeres, which fell out juſt in 490. yeeres, as it is ſaid, 2 Chron. 36.21. To fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Ieremy, untill the land had her fill of Sabbaths: for all the dayes that ſhe lay deſolate ſhe kept Sabbath to fulfill ſeventy yeeres, Toſtat. queſt. 12.

Contra. 1. But it is not like, that this obſervation of the ſeventh yeere of reſt was ſo long time, or generally neglected: for part of this terme of 490. yeeres will reach Davids reigne: for all the yeeres of the reignes of the Kings after David, untill the captivity, make but 440. the other 50. yeeres will comprehend all Davids reigne, and ten yeeres before, ſome part whereof might extend to Samuels time: but it is not like that ſuch an evident Law under thoſe faithfull Prophets and Kings would have beene omitted altogether. 2. In the corrupt times under the idolatrous Kings, it is true that this yeere of remiſſion was neglected, as may appeare, Ierem. 36.8.14. when as the King and Princes proclaimed liberty to their ſervants according to the Law, and afterward revoked it againe: for the which the Prophet there ſharply reproveth them. Neither would the faithfull Prophets of God have ſpared to tell the Princes and people of this great negligence, if that the Sabbaticall yeere had altogether beene diſcontinued. 3. In Hezekiahs time, this yeere of reſt was not intermitted: for while the City was beſieged by Senacherib, two yeeres together, the land brought forth fruit without ſowing, 2 King. 19. 29. which bleſſing was miraculous in reſpect of their keeping of the ſeventh yeere of reſt, Levit. 25.6.21. They therefore enjoyed the promiſed bleſſing, did in all likelihood performe their due obedience. 4. Beſide, captivity is threatned for the neglect of their Sabbaths of all ſorts, Levit. 26.35. both the Sabbath of dayes, of weekes, of moneths, yeeres, and ſeven yeeres. It is as like that they neglected the Sabbath of dayes, which was the ſeventh: of weekes, which was Pentecoſt: of moneths, which was the ſeventh, as well as of yeeres: yea the Sabbath of ſeven yeeres, which was the Jubile, was alſo intermitted, if the ſeventh yeere, from which they accounted it, were not remembred. 5. Further, if they ſuffered not the land to reſt in the ſeventh yeere, they likewiſe abandoned other privileges incident to that yeere, as the remiſſion of debts, the ſetting free their ſervants: which apparent tranſgreſſions, nay rebellions, ſhould not have beene ſuffered to paſſe without ſome reprehenſion by the Prophets, and correction from God, eſpecially under the vertuous reigne of Judah.

QUEST. XXII. Why the Law of the Sabbath is ſo oft repeated.

Verſ. 12. Six dayes thou ſhalt labour. 1. Some thinke that this precept concerning the obſervation of the Sabbath is repeated by reaſon of the former Law concerning the ſeventh yeere of intermiſſion, leſt that the Hebrewes, becauſe that whole yeere was a time of reſt, might have taken unto themſelves greater liberty in the keeping of the Sabbath, Lyran. But this ſeemeth to be no ſufficient reaſon: becauſe although they reſted from the workes of husbandry all that yeere, yet they attended other buſineſſe and labour, Toſtatus. 2. Some thinke that the Sabbath is here mentioned in reſpect of the civill end thereof, the reſt and relaxation of the ſervants: whereas before it was urged as a part of Gods ſervice, Exod. 31.13. 3. But the beſt reaſon is, that the Law of the Sabbath is repeated, becauſe it chiefly concerned the worſhip of God: and therefore ſo often is this precept iterated; as chap. 20. Deut. 5. Exod. 31. 35. and in divers other places, Toſtat. queſt. 13. 4. And ſuch reſpect the Lord hath to the ſeventh day of reſt, that he himſelfe conſecrated by his owne example, that according to this rule he did proportion the other feſtivals, as the ſeventh weeke, the ſeventh moneth, the ſeventh yeere: yea in naturall experience the ſeventh day is obſerved: as the ſeventh, fouretenth, and twenty one are the criticall dayes for ſickneſſe, as Hippocrates and Galen have written, Hierome. 4. The benefit of this day the Lord would have extended to their ſervants, ſtrangers, yea to the labouring cattell. R. Salomon thinketh, that in the next words, Take heed to all things, &c. the implements and inſtruments which are uſed to any buſineſſe are underſtood, as the ſword, axe, cutting knife, and ſuch like: that all theſe things ſhould reſt in like manner. But this is too curious, and beſide it were ſuperfluous, ſeeing the men are forbid to labour, without whoſe hands theſe things cannot ſtirre or move: therefore this clauſe either is to be referred to the former duties which concerned the Sabbath, Lyran. or in generall to their obedience to the whole Law, and all the former precepts which were delivered have it, Simler.

In Amos cap. 5.

QUEST. XXIIII. What manner of mention of ſtrange gods is here forbidden.

Verſ. 14. AND ye ſhall make no mention of the name of ſtrange gods. 1. The Latine Tranſlator readeth, Thou ſhalt not ſweare: but the word zachar ſignifieth to remember: which is more than to ſweare, which is too ſtrictly taken: they muſt make no mention, non ſolum jurando, ſed laudando, probando, obteſtando: not only in ſwearing, but in praiſing of them, approving, proteſting by them, Lippoman. 2. The Jewes doe run into another extreme, making this precept too generall: they thinke it not lawfull at all once to pronounce the names of the Gentiles Idols: but the Prophets which inveighed againſt them, could not but pronounce their names with their mouth: the meaning then is, nullus loquatur honorabiliter, none ſhould make honourable mention of them, Cajetane. 3. This phraſe then is to be underſtood, as S. Paul would not have fornication once named among them, Epheſ. 5. 3. that is, that none ſhould be committed, none named with deſire or delight, Simler. therefore here only is forbidden honeſta mentio, &c. non inhoneſta & cum deteſtatione, &c. the comely and reverent mention of their gods, not the irreverent mention with deteſtation. 4. Cajetane thus diſtinguiſheth the ſentence: the firſt part biddeth, ut præteriti dii non memorentur, that the former ſtrange gods ſhould not be remembred, but be forgotten, as though they never had beene: the other part, neither ſhall it be heard out of thy mouth, ſheweth, ut de modernis diis nemo honorabiliter loquatur, and of the gods preſent none ſhould ſpeake honourably. But indeed the meaning is, that generally the memory of all falſe gods ſhould be extinguiſhed: as they are commanded to aboliſh the very names of them Deut. 12. 3. that neither in their oathes, nor in their familiar talke they ſhould revive the memory of them: ſee the practice thereof, Pſalm. 16. 4. Neither will I make mention of their names within my lips. So the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth, and they ſhall be no more remembred by their names, Hoſ. 2. 17. Ivn. 5. By the name of ſtrange gods are here underſtood, all which the Heathen worſhipped, whether by images or without, whether things in heaven, in the earth, or under the earth: which are called ſtrange gods; not becauſe they are gods at all, but ſo reputed in the opinion of their idolatrous worſhippers: and ſtrange they were, becauſe ſuch were worſhipped onely of ſtrange nations, and not of the people of God, Toſtat. queſt. 13.

QUEST. XXIV. Why it is forbidden to ſweare by the name of ſtrange gods.

Verſ. 13. YE ſhall make no mention of the name of other gods, &c. 1. If it be unlawfull to make any honourable mention at all of the names of ſtrange gods, no not in uſuall talke, much leſſe is it lawfull to ſweare by them, becauſe in taking of an oath, invocatur Deus tanquam teſtis veritatis, God is called upon as a witneſſe of the truth: ſo to ſweare by the name of God, is actus latreiæ, an act of divine worſhip, and therefore it cannot be given unto any other beſide God: and againe, the Idols, becauſe they are falſe gods, non poſſunt eſſe teſtes veritatis, cannot be witneſſes of the truth, Lyran. 2. Rabanus obſerveth here this difference betweene the Law and the Goſpell: there, per nomen Dei jurare non vetantur, they are not forbidden to ſweare by the name of God: Evangelica veritas non recipit juramentum; But the Evangelicall truth admitteth no oath, becauſe the ſpeech of a faithfull man ought to be in ſtead of an oath, &c. He thinketh that by this Law the Hebrewes had liberty given them to ſweare at their pleaſure, ſo they did ſweare only by the name of God. But I rather here approve Calvins annotation, Non incitat Deum populum ad jurandi licentiam, &c. God doth not hereby incite his people to ſwearing, or give them liberty to ſweare: ſed ubi opus fuerit, & vel neceſſitas & juſta ratio id poſtulabit, but where need is, and neceſſity, or juſt cauſe doe ſo require, &c. otherwiſe the Law doth forbid all unlawfull ſwearing, as well as the Goſpell. 3. And the reaſon why they ought not to ſweare by ſtrange gods, is, ne frequenti juramento inducatur ad cultum eorum, &c. leſt that by often ſwearing they be induced to worſhip them, Gloſ. interlin. 4. And as an Hebrew then, and ſo a Chriſtian now, was not himſelfe, ſo neither were they to compell a Gentile to ſweare by them: yet as Auguſtine determineth, it is lawfull for a Chriſtian, recipere ab eo juramentum in Deo ſuo, &c. to receive an oath of a Gentile by his god, to confirme ſome covenant or contract: ſi Gentilis obtulerit ſe factum, if the Gentile doe of himſelfe offer it, Lyran, Toſtat.

Auguſtin. ad Publicolam.

QUEST. XXV. Whether a Chriſtian may compell a Jew to ſweare by his Thorah, which containeth the five bookes of Moſes.

UPon this occaſion, how farre a Chriſtian may compell another of a contrary religion to ſweare, a Jew or Turke, Toſtatus bringeth in divers queſtions, which it ſhall not be amiſſe here briefly to touch: as firſt, whereas it is an uſuall thing with the Jewes at this day to ſweare upon their Thorah, which is nothing elſe but a volume containing the five bookes of Moſes, yet bound up in ſilke, and laid very curiouſly in their Synagogue, whereout they uſe to read the lectures of the Law: the queſtion whether it be lawfull for a Chriſtian Judge to urge a Jew to take his oath upon his Thorah; for upon the Goſpels, he will rather dye than take an oath. For the reſolution of this doubt, divers things are to be weighed and conſidered.

1. That there is great difference betweene the Idols, and falſe gods of the Heathen, and the Jewes Thorah: for this is a part of Gods word, and containeth nothing but the truth: and it is all one, as if the Jew did lay his hand upon the Pentateuch or five bookes of Moſes: as any Chriſtian may take his oath upon the Goſpels, or any other part of Gods word.

2. And like as a Chriſtian laying his hand upon the Goſpels, doth not ſweare by the booke, for the were unlawfull, in giving the honour due to the Creator unto a creature: but hath relation unto God, whose verity and truth is contained in that booke: So a Jew swearing upon his Thorah, yet sweareth by God the Author of the Law, and in so doing sinneth not.

3. Yet it may so fall out, that a Jew may sinne in swearing upon his Thorah, as having an opinion, that all the contents of that booke, as namely the ceremonials, are yet in force, which are abolished in Christ: and yet the Judge may not sinne in requiring the Jew to sweare upon his Thorah: for he doth not consider of those things, quæ sunt in voluntate agentis, sed de ipso actu, which are in the minde and intent of the doer, but of the act it selfe: therefore the act of it selfe being lawfull, a Jew may be required to doe it: Sic Tostat. qu. 14.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether a Iew may be urged to sweare in the name of Christ.

BUt as the Jew may be urged to sweare upon his Thorah, which they hold to be a booke of truth, as Christians doe, yet the case is not alike, if a Christian should compell a Jew to sweare in the name of Christ; for although Christ be indeed and in truth very God, yet the Jewes hold him to be worse than any Idoll: and therefore the Jew in taking such an oath should doe against his conscience, and consequently commit a great sinne: or if a Jew should require a Christian to sweare by the name of Christ, whom he holdeth to be no God, nor yet a good man, therein the Jew should also sinne against his conscience: for it skilleth not a thing to be so or so indeed, dum aliter concipiatur, as long as a man otherwise conceiveth and is perswaded in his minde, Tostat. qu. 15.

QUEST. XXVII. Whether a Saracene may be urged to sweare upon the Gospels or in the name of Christ.

NOw, although a Jew cannot be compelled without sinne to sweare in the name of Christ whom he holdeth worse than an Idoll, or upon the Gospels which they thinke containe nothing but fables; yet the reason standeth otherwise for a Saracene or Turke: he may be required to sweare in the name of Christ, or upon the Gospels. And the reason is, because the Saracens have a good opinion of Christ, and beleeve that he was sent of God, and that he was a great Prophet, and a good man: and for the most part they doe assent unto the Gospels, and beleeve that Christ spake the truth. And therefore they in taking such an oath doe not against their conscience, and therein sinne not. Now if it be objected, that the Saracens differ more from the Christians than the Jewes, and therefore can no more lawfully take an oath in the name of Christ than the Jewes: the answer is, that although the Jewes consent with the Christians touching the canonicall bookes of the old Testament, as the Saracens doe not: yet as touching Christ they doe totally dissent from the Christians, and so doe not the Saracens, Tostat. qu. 17.

QUEST. XXVIII. Whether a Christian may sweare upon the Iewes Thora.

BUt it hath beene before shewed, that a Jew may be without sinne urged to sweare upon his Thora, which is nothing but the Pentateuch, containing the five bookes of Moses: another question is moved, whether a Christian may safely take his oath upon the Jewes Thora. And that it is not lawfull so to doe, may be thus objected.

1. Iudaizare sinne, Iudaizare, to Iudaize, to doe as the Jewes doe: as to be circumcised, to observe the Jewish Sabbath, and such like: But to sweare upon the Thora, is to Iudaize, that is, to doe as the Jewes doe. Ergo, &c.

Solut. 1. To Iudaize is not simply to doe that which the Jewes doe, but that which they alone doe, and none other: as to beleeve that which they only beleeve; as that the ceremonies of the Law are still in force: or to doe that which they only doe, as to be circumcised, and to abstaine from certaine kinde of meats, as Saint Paul chargeth Saint Peter that he compelled the Gentiles Iudaizare, to Iudaize concerning their meats: for he did eat with the Gentiles before the Jewes came, and afterward he withdrew himselfe from them: otherwise to beleeve as the Jewes and others also beleeve, and to doe likewise; as that the world to have beene created, the Israelites to have beene delivered, and all other things in the Scriptures to be true, as they are there set downe: this is not to Iudaize. 2. So, because the Thora, which is the Pentateuch, is not only received of the Jewes, but of the beleeving Gentiles: and the truth of the same we subscribe unto as well as the Jewes: therefore simply to take an oath upon their Thora, is not to obey the Jew: but a Christian may as lawfully doe it, as to sweare upon the Gospels, or any other part of the divine Scriptures.

2. Dare favorem errori Iudæorum, &c. To give way, or shew favour unto the errour of Jewes is sinne: a Christian swearing upon the Thora should give way unto the Jewish errour, Ergo.

Solut. To sweare upon the Thora, where any scandall or offence may grow unto the weake, or any occasion of hardning to the Jew, it is unlawfull: yet this sheweth not, but that where no such danger is, it may so to take an oath is not unlawfull.

To make this a lawfull act then for a Christian to take an oath upon the Jewes Thora, these things are to be considered: 1. If he sweare upon it, not as upon any other booke of the same contents; that is, containing the five bookes of Moses: but as it is a monument of the Jewes, bound up in silke, and kept in their Synagogue, so is it not lawfull, because to be addicted to such superstitious observations as these.

2. Though there be no difference betweene their Thorah which is written in Hebrew, and our Pentateuch in Latine or English, in respect of the substance; but one indifferently may lay his hand upon the Booke the other, for there is no difference of languages before God: yet if a man make difference in his owne opinion, thinking the one not as lawfull as the other; herein he should offend, doing against his owne conscience.

3. Or if an Hebrew should require a Christian to sweare upon his Therah, rather than upon the Gospels, it were not lawfull: for hereby we should confirme him in his errour.

4. Or if one Christian should require another to sweare rather upon the Jewish Therah, than upon the Gospels, it were not safe so to doe: because such an one giveth occasion of suspition that he doth not firmely and stedfastly beleeve the contents of the Gospell.

5. But if a Christian of himselfe, whithout any such motion made by another, doe willingly take his oath upon the Therah, either of necessity, because there is no other booke of Scripture present: or because he maketh no difference betweene one booke of Scripture and another, he may doe it lawfully, so it be done without offence unto others, Sic Tostat. quæst. 16.

QUEST. XXIX. That it is not lawfull for a Christian to sweare upon the Turkes Alcaron, or Mahomets thigh, nor for a Turke himselfe.

BUt though a Christian may sweare upon the Jewes Thora, the former confiderations being observed: yet is it altogether unlawfull for him to sweare either upon Mahomets thigh, which is kept as an holy relique among the Saracens and Turkes, or upon their Alcaron.

1. The first is evident, because this being a morall precept to sweare by the name of God only, and not by the name of any strange gods, bindeth all beleeving people for ever: now to sweare by Mahomets thigh, is to sweare by a strange god, and therefore it is unlawfull as well for the Jew as the Christian to take such an oath, seeing they are both bound to keepe the morall precepts and Commandements, Tostat. quæst. 19.

2. The other also is unlawfull, as it may thus be shewed: for an oath is made three wayes, either by God alone without any other externall signe or symboll, which is a lawfull and sufficient oath: or by the creature alone, which is an unlawfull oath; for so the glory which is onely due unto God, should be given unto the creature: or by God and some creature together with reference unto God, as when in taking an oath the hand is laid upon a booke. But such a creature is used as an externall symboll in an oath: as in quo nihil est mendacii, wherein there is no lye: and it must immediatè nos ducere in cognitionem Dei, bring us immediatly to the knowledge of God: therefore we lay not our hand upon a stone, because it hath no instruction in it as a booke hath. But the Gospell hath both these properties: there is no falsehood or untruth in it: and it doth bring us immediatly and directly to the knowledge of God. The Turkes Alcaron hath neither: for both it containeth many falsehoods, fables, and untruths: and it can never bring us to the knowledge of the true God, having many errours in it. So then a Christian taking his oath upon the Alcaron, thereby should confesse all to be true which is there contained, and so blaspheme God, and beside give great offence unto Christians, and so secondly his brethren: therefore it were better for a Christian to chuse rather to dye, than to take such a blasphemous oath, Tostat. qu. 20. The like judgement is to be given of the Jewes Talmud, which containeth many fables, and blasphemies against Christ.

And for the same reasons before alleaged, even a Turke or Saracen sinneth in taking an oath upon Mahomets thigh, though he directly make it not God; because he useth such an unholy superstition and abominable thing, in taking of a sacred oath: likewise he offendeth in swearing upon his Alcaron which containeth abominable lies, and the same most pernicious, even concerning the end of all our happinesse in blessednesse in the next world, which their Alcaron placeth, and maketh to consist in the carnall pleasures of eating and drinking, and the use of women, Tostat. quæst. 21, 22.

QUEST. XXX. Why three feasts are only named, wherein they had more.

Vers. 14. THree times thou shalt keepe a feast unto mee in the yeere. 1. They had divers other festivall dayes beside these three which are here named, the Pasch, called the feast of unleavened bread; Pentecost, named the feast of first fruits; and the feast of Tabernacles, called here the feast of gathering fruits in the end of the yeere: which said three feasts are not named, because they were more strictly observed than the rest: for the Sabbath was more straitly kept, wherein it was not lawfull to kindle a fire, Exod. 35.3. nor consequently to doe any worke about preparing of their meat: neither in the feast of reconciliation was it lawfull to doe any worke at all, Levit. 23.28. whereas in other feasts only servile workes are forbidden: and in the feast of the Passeover, such workes as were about their meat and drinke were permitted, Exod. 12.16. But therefore are these three feasts named, because in them onely the people were bound to come up before the Lord. 2. And these three were speciall feasts above the rest for these causes: 1. Because in them onely the people were required to appeare before the Lord. 2. Speciall oblations were offered in these feasts. In the Passeover was offered a sheafe of the first fruits, Levit. 23. 10. in the feast of Pentecost they presented the first fruits of their wheat harvest, faire flower baken with leaven, Levit. 23. 17. And in the feast of Tabernacles they were commanded to make them boothes of boughes, ibid. vers. 40. 3. Those feasts excelled the other in respect of the multitude of sacrifices which were to be offered therein, as is prescribed, Numb. 28.29. 4. And in regard of their continuance: for two of them, the Pasch, and feast of Tabernacles continued each of them seven dayes: the Pasch held from the 15. day of the first moneth unto the 21. day: and the feast of Tabernacles likewise began the 15. day of the seventh moneth, and ended the 21. day. Pentecost onely hath one day allowed, which was the 50. day after the Passeover, Levit. 23. 16. Tostat. 5. These feasts also were observed in remembrance of three great benefits: the Passeover, of their deliverance out of Egypt: the Pentecost, of delivering the Law: and the feast of Tabernacles, of their preservation in the wildernesse, Lyranus.

QUES-

Quest. XXXI. Of the feast of the Passeover.

Vers.15. Thou shalt eat unleavened bread. 1. This was the feast of the Passeover, or of unleavened bread, which were not two feasts concurring together, as Cyril seemeth to thinke, Alia est solemnitas Paschæ, alia azymorum, licet conjuncta videantur, &c. There was one solemnity of the Pasch, another of unleavened bread, though they seeme to be joyned together. 2. Mention is not here made of the Paschal lambe, but only of unleavened bread, not as Cajetane thinketh, Quia non singulis annis omnes tenebantur ad immolandum agnum Paschalem, &c. Because all were not bound every yeere, to offer a Paschall lambe, but to eat unleavened bread seven dayes they were bound, &c. For the contrary appeareth, *Exod.*12.24. they were bound to keepe the Passeover, as an ordinance for ever; but the feast hath the denomination of the greater part: because they did eat the Passeover but one day, but unleavened bread they did eat seven dayes together. 3. In this feast, they offered a sheafe of the first ripe corne, which as Iosephus writeth, was done in this manner, Siccantes spicarum manipulum, & contundentes, &c. They dried an handfull of eares, and so rubbed or bruised them, and then offered them, *lib.*3. Antiquit.

Quest. XXXII. Why Pentecost is called the feast of the first fruits.

Vers.16. The feast of the harvest, of the first fruits of thy labours. This is called the feast of first fruits, and yet in the feast of the Passeover the first sheafe was offered. 1. Quod primi panes tunc offerebantur Deo, sicut in festo Paschæ prima spica, &c. Because the first bread or loaves of the new fruit was then offered, as in the end of the pasch the first eares, Cajetan. which were not then so ripe to make bread of. 2. Or because now they presented the first fruits of all their labours, that is, of all that they had sowen: but before, they brought the first fruits of some one kinde of graine onely, which was first ripe, Iohan. 3. Or then they offered only the first ripe eares: as if a man went into the field, and espied spicas aliquas appropinquantes ad maturitatem ante alias, some eares hastening to be ripe before the rest, them he gathered, and offered unto the Lord: but now in the feast of Pentecost, they brought the first fruits of all. Lyran. 4. This feast was celebrated, propter beneficium legis data, for the benefit of the giving of the Law, Lyran. Which was given the 50. day after their going out of Egypt, Tostat. And in remembrance ingressus in terram promissam, of their entrance into the Land of promise, when they did first eat of the fruit of the land, Theodoret. And it was a signe of the giving of the holy Ghost, which descended on the 50. day after the resurrection, Lyran.

Quest. XXXIII. How the feast of Tabernacles is said to be in the end of the yeere.

Vers.16. The feast of gathering in the end of the yeere. 1. Oleaster and Tostatus are of opinion, that the common account of the yeere began in the seventh moneth, when it was thought that the world was created: but that upon occasion of the deliverance of the Israelites in the first moneth of the yeere that was consecrated to be the first, as touching the keeping of their feasts: but the former order remained still for the account of civill matters. But it is before shewed, that the institution of Abib to be the first moneth, was rather then revived, than of new ordained; and that is the more probable opinion, that the world was created in the spring; and that in remembrance thereof, that was counted the first moneth. 2. Cajetane saith, It is called the end of the yeere, in regard of the fruits of the earth, which were then all gathered, as both grapes and olives; not in respect of the season of the yeere, for September is the first moneth of the next yeere: and so it should rather have beene said in the beginning of the yeere, than in the end. But seeing the same moneth was both the end of one yeere, and the beginning of another, it may be said to be in the end of the yeere, though in the first moneth of the civill yeere, quod quidem distet, inesse videtur, it might be said to be in it, though it were distant a little, Tostat. So also Ioan. Immediately after the end of the yeere. 3. And wee are here to understand the gathering of all fruits, not only corne which was before inned and in the barne, seeing it was ripe foure moneths before the feast of Pentecost; but all other fruits, as wine and olives, which were then gathered, as Deut. 16. Tostat. *Cap.*12.q.2.

Quest. XXXIV. Which were the three feasts, wherein they were to appeare before the Lord.

Vers.17. Three times in the yeere, &c. 1. The Israelites had divers festivall times in the yeere; as beside the continuall and daily sacrifice they had seven other feast dayes; every weeke upon the Sabbath, every moneth upon the first day thereof: the feast of the Pasch, and Pentecost: and in the seventh moneth they had three more, the feast of blowing of Trumpets upon the first day, the feast of Reconciliation upon the tenth, and of the Tabernacles upon the 15. which continued untill the 21. Thomas. 2. Though they are not bound to come together in all these feasts, but only at three of them. 2. Though it be expressed here, which three feasts they were to goe up in; yet it is evident in other places, the feast of the Passeover was one, *Deut.*16.2. they were to offer it in the place which the Lord should chuse: and the continuall practice sheweth the same, as is evident, *Luk.*2.41. the parents of our blessed Saviour went up every yeere to the Passeover. So in the feast of Pentecost, they were all to rejoyce before the Lord, they, their sonnes and daughters, servants and maids, *Deut.*16.11. 3. Onely the question is, concerning the third time of their appearing before the Lord, which some thinke was at the feast of the blowing of Trumpets, in the 1. day of the seventh moneth: and so they continued there during the two solemne feasts of the Reconciliation, in the 10. day; and of Tabernacles, which began in the 15. Osiander. Where I approve rather Calvins reason, Gravis fuisset tam diuturna mora. So long abode together at one place, had beene burthensome, for the space of three weekes together: from the first day of the seventh moneth, to the 21. when the feast of Tabernacles ended: therefore this third time of their going up was against the feast of the Tabernacles, as is evident, *Deut.*31.10. and that these were the three times 2.2.qu.101. art.4.ad.16.

in

in the yeere, is directly mentioned, Deut. 16. 16. These three times in the yeere shall all the males appeare, &c. Toſtat. queſt. 25.

QUEST. XXXV. Who were bound to appeare before the Lord, whether their ſervants.

Verſ. 17. Shall all thy men children appeare. 1. The women were not bound by this Law to appeare, becauſe it was neceſſary that they ſhould be left at home to attend the domeſticall affaires, and have a care of the young children: yet they might come up voluntarily, as Anna the mother of Samuel did, and Marie the mother of our bleſſed Saviour: eſpecially thoſe which dwelt neere to Jeruſalem. 2. Concerning the males, Toſtatus thinketh that all the males, after they were come to yeeres of diſcretion, aſcended: as Chriſt being but a child, according to the cuſtome of other children, went up with his parents: But it is more like that none went up under 20. yeere old, only thoſe males, qui tranſibant ſub cenſum, which paſſed under the account, Calvin. Some thinke alſo, none above 50. yeeres: but that is not like: the children might goe up with their parents alſo, but that was not of any neceſſity. And leſt it might have ſeemed a dangerous thing to the countrey, if all the males together ſhould have beene abſent, the Lord promiſeth, that their enemies ſhould not deſire their land in the meane time while they appeared before the Lord, Exod. 34. 24. 3. Neither were the males of their owne children only bound to goe up, but their ſervants alſo, as is expreſly mentioned, Deut. 16. 12. that their ſonne, daughter, ſervant and maid ſhould rejoyce with them before the Lord. Of their Hebrew ſervants there was no queſtion, becauſe they were of the ſame profeſſion, and they were but their ſervants for a time. And concerning other ſervants bought with their money, they were to circumciſe them, and then they were to eat of the Paſſeover, Exod. 12. 44. Now if they were circumciſed, they were thereby bound to keepe the whole Law, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Galath. 5. 3. And ſeeing they alſo were to eat the Paſſeover, which could not be offered but before the Lord, Deut. 16. 2. they were alſo neceſſarily to appeare before the Lord. 4. But if all their ſervants were bound to goe up with them thrice in the yeere, and that from the furtheſt parts of the land, this would ſeeme to have beene a great prejudice to their maſters, and an hinderance to their buſineſſe, to ſpare their ſervants ſo long. Lyranus and Toſtatus here anſwer, that they which dwelt farre off were diſpenſed withall, and it was ſufficient for them to come up only once in the yeere at the Paſſeover. But no ſuch diſpenſation is extant in the Law: I rather inſiſt upon that other anſwer of Toſtatus, that damna animæ plus vitanda ſunt quàm damna corporis: the detriment of the ſoule is more to be ſhunned than the detriment of the body. Therefore ſeeing their appearing before the Lord concerned the health of their ſoules, all worldly reſpects ought to give place unto it: and the Commandement of God was to be preferred before all, Toſtat. queſt. 26.

QUEST. XXXVI. To what end the people were commanded to meet together.

THis generall meeting of all Iſrael thrice in a yeere before the Lord was profitable for divers ends: 1. Ad concordiam religionis & doctrinæ conſervandam, &c. To keepe and preſerve concord and unity in doctrine and religion, Simler. for if they might have ſacrificed where they would, the people might ſoone have declined and fallen to ſtrange worſhip. 2. Ingenti multitudinis concurſu alii alios incitabant, &c. By this concurſe of the multitude one helped to ſtirre up and provoke another to the more cheerefull ſetting forth of the praiſe of God, Gallaſ. 3. It was effectuall alſo, Ad coalitionem animorum, &c. For the knitting together of their hearts and mindes, the maintaining of love and charity among them, Marbach. 4. Solemnia feſta auguſtiora fieri tanto conventu: The ſolemne feaſt dayes by this company of the people were thereby more adorned and ſet forth. 5. And this was a figure alſo of Chriſt: that as they had but one Sanctuary, one Altar, on high Prieſt: ſo Chriſtus eſt unicus ſervator: Chriſt is our onely Saviour and high Prieſt, Simler.

QUEST. XXXVII. Why the people were not to appeare empty before the Lord.

Verſ. 15. None ſhall appeare before me empty. 1. Though this precept be annexed here to the ſolemnity of the Paſſeover: yet it is to be referred not only to that feaſt, as Toſtatus ſeemeth to take it, but to all the reſt of the three, Cajetane, Gallaſ. 2. Some underſtand it thus, that none ſhould appeare empty, or in vaine before the Lord, but they ſhould receive ſome bleſſing at his hand: but it is plaine, Deut. 16. 17. that it is meant of ſuch gifts and oblations as they ſhould bring with them, to offer before the Lord, Simler. 3. Which offerings and oblations ſerved for the repairing of the Temple, and the maintaining of the Levites, and for other ſuch uſes belonging to the ſervice of God, Simler. 4. This preſenting of gifts unto the Lord, was to teſtifie their thankfull minde: Non enim ſatis erat verbis gratitudinem teſtificari: For it was not ſufficient in words only to teſtifie their thankfulneſſe, Gallaſ. And to this end they did it, ut perſonarum & rerum fiat Deo oblatio, qui dat & perſonas & res omnes: that they might offer unto God as well their ſubſtance as their perſons, who giveth all, both the perſons and all things beſide, Cajetane. 5. Though we are not bound unto this Law, ſeeing it is aboliſhed, verùm tamen ad nos pertinet, yet the truth thereof belongeth unto us, Gallaſ. that if wee have money, or any other ſubſtance, we ſhould firſt releeve the poore, tunc demum Deo preces fundamus, and then offer our prayers unto God: Saltem animam non à bonis operibus vacuam Deo offeramus, &c. At the leaſt we ſhould not preſent our ſoule unto God empty and void of good workes, Theodoret. To the ſame purpoſe Chryſoſtome, Ideò pauperes ante fores ſunt, ut nemo vacuus ingrediatur, &c. intras ut miſericordiam conſequaris, prior ipſe miſerere, &c. Therefore the poore ſtand at the Church doore, that none ſhould goe in empty: thou entreſt to obtaine mercy, firſt ſhew mercy thy ſelfe, &c. Gregorie applieth it to the appearing before the Judge at the latter day: he which ſpendeth his time here in heaping up of wealth, in gathering of riches, Quæ cuncta hæc quiſq; moriens deſerit, ante Dominum vacuus apparet; Becauſe every one leaveth theſe things when he dieth, he appeareth empty before the Lord.

In 2. Tim. cap. 1. com. 2.

Lib 7. Moral. cap. 17.

QUEST

QUEST. XXXVIII. In what place they appeared before the Lord, while the Arke and Tabernacle were asunder.

Vers. 15. Appeare before the Lord. While the Arke and Tabernacle remained together, there was no question at all, but that comming to the Tabernacle, they appeared there before the Lord: but afterward when the Tabernacle and Arke were asunder, as they continued at the least the space of 90. yeeres, all the time of Samuel and Saul, which was 40. yeeres, and all Davids reigne, till the eleventh yeere of Salomon, when the Temple was finished, 1 King. 6. 36. when the Arke and Tabernacle were joyned together againe, 2 Chron. 5. 5. The doubt is all this while of the separating and dividing of the Arke from the Tabernacle; which was the place where the people assembled to keepe their feasts. 1. Simlerus thinketh, that where the Arke was, they assembled before the Lord. So also Iunius, That thither the Tribes went up to keepe their solemnities. 2. But herein the opinion of Tostatus is more probable, that where the Sanctuary and Tabernacle was, there was the place of the solemne assemblies in their feasts: for these reasons: 1. The Arke was taken from the Tabernacle by the Philistims, and kept among them seven moneths, and returned in the beginning of the wheat harvest, which was about Pentecost. If now their festivities were solemnized only before the Arke, then at this time in the space of those seven moneths in the absence of the Arke, it would follow, that two of their great solemnities of the Pasch and Pentecost were omitted, which is not to be granted: 2. There the meeting of the people was, where the Altar of burnt offerings was, and the Priests gave their attendance: but that was not where the Arke was placed, but where the Tabernacle was pitched: as is evident, 1 Sam. 21. where Abimelech the high Priest, with other Priests, were at Nob attending at the Tabernacle: the Arke then remaining at Kiriathiarim, 1 Cor. 6. 1. 3. After the captivity, in the second Temple the Arke was not, being lost in the destruction of the Temple: and yet there their festivities were kept. 4. Now this concourse of the people to the Tabernacle, rather than to the Arke, was not because it was more worthy than the Arke: for the Arke was more worthy of reverence than the whole Tabernacle: but by reason of the other implements, which went with the Tabernacle, as the Altar, and table of shew bread, and the rest; and because the Priests gave their attendance there. But if the Tabernacle had beene destroyed, and the Arke onely had remained; then without all question the Priests and people would have flocked to that place, Tostat. quæst. 28.

Iun. Ann. in 1 Sam. 7. 14.

1 Sam. 6. 1.

3. But it will be objected, that the place where the Arke was, must needs be that place where they appeared before the Lord; because there the Lord manifested himselfe, and from thence delivered his oracles, not only while it remained with the Tabernacle, Numb. 7. 89. but when it was apart, 2 Sam. 6. 2. But to this it may be answered, that the Lord did not onely give answer from the Arke, but from the Tabernacle also, Exod. 29. 42. and there Abimelech asked counsell of God for David, though the Arke were not there, 1 Sam. 22. 10. yea the Priest with his Ephod consulted with God, though neither the Tabernacle nor Arke were present: as David asked counsell of God by the Priest Abiathar, that had the Ephod, 1 Sam. 23. 10. therefore that argument followeth not, Tostat. ibid.

4. But though I herein consent with Tostatus, that the solemne assemblies and sacrifices were in the place where the Tabernacle was, rather than where the Arke was: yet herein I dissent from him. He thinketh, that it was not permitted, sacrificia habere nisi uno in loco, to have sacrifices but in one place; because by this occasion the rude people might have thought there had beene many gods, if they should have sacrificed in many places: and for this cause the rest of Israel tooke exception to the two tribes and a halfe beyond Jordan, because they erected an Altar, supposing they had made it to sacrifice upon.

Contra. 1. But it is evident, while the Arke and Tabernacle were divided, that they offered sacrifices in both places; as 1 Sam. 6. 14. the men of Bethshemesh offered a burnt offering before the Arke, rejoycing at the returne thereof. And at Nob, where David had the shew bread given him, to what end should the Priests have given their attendance, but for the sacrifices? 2. Neither was there any feare of bringing in a plurality of gods by this meanes, seeing all Israel knew, that both the Arke and Tabernacle were made at the appointment of one and the same God of Israel by the hand of his servant Moses. 3. And the reason is not alike concerning that Altar which was made by the two tribes and halfe, which the other tribes had in jealousie; because that was erected by the direction and advice of men: but both the Arke and Tabernacle had their institution from God: and therefore there could be no such feare for sacrificing in either of those places.

QUEST. XXXIX. What sacrifice is commanded here not to be eaten with unleavened bread.

Vers. 18. Thou shalt not offer the bloud of my sacrifice with leavened bread. 1. Some doe understand this generally of all sacrifices, which were to be offered without leaven, Levit. 2. 11. Pellican. Iunius. And the other Law, Neither shall the fat of my sacrifice remaine till the morning. Some likewise understand of other sacrifices: for although the flesh of the sacrifices might remaine till the next day; tamen incendi debebat eodem die, yet the fat was to be burned the same day, Cajetan. As is prescribed, Levit. 7. 3. But it is better referred to the Paschall lambe, as the Chalde Interpreter expoundeth, that they should remove leaven out of their house, before they offered the Passeover, Tostat. Simler. Calvin. And by fat, as a principall, is understood whatsoever remained of the Paschall lambe; as is further declared, Exod. 34. 25. Iun. Where it appeareth, that both these precepts are specially given, concerning the Paschall lambe. 2. And the reasons thereof were these, Quod adeps facile corrumpitur, &c. Because the fat is easily corrupt and putrifie: which was an unseemely thing, that any part of the sacrifice should bee suffered to putrifie, Gallas. As also, lest the fat being reserved untill the next day, Sacerdotes comederent quod Dei erat, the Priests might eat that which was the Lords part, Oleaster.

QUEST.

QUEST. XL. When the Passeover was to be killed.

NOw concerning the place, where the Passeover was to be offered. 1. It must be considered, that they were not in the yeerely keeping of the Passeover, to doe as they did in the first institution in Egypt, every one killed it in his owne house: that was to be done then, because they were to strike the bloud upon the doore postes, that it might be a signe of their deliverance from the plague, while the Angell passed over to smite the Egyptians, *chap.*12.23. but afterward they were required to sacrifice the Passeover in the place which the Lord should chuse, *Deut.*16.2. 2. Neither was it enough to bring the Passeover up to that place where the Tabernacle was: but they were to present it at the doore of the Tabernacle, where the Passeover was to be killed, as other sacrifices, and the bloud to be powred by the Altar: 1. Because this was the generall Law for all sacrifices, *Levit.*17.3. but the Passeover was a sacrifice: as here the Lord calleth it, my sacrifice: and *Numb.*9.13. he that was negligent to keepe the Passeover, should be cut off from his people, and this reason is yeelded thereof, Because he brought not the offering of the Lord in due season. 2. And againe, it had beene to small purpose, to enjoyne the people to come to the place of the Sanctuary with their Passeover, to that end, that they should observe no other rites and ceremonies therein, than were appointed by the Law: if every one might have killed the Passeover in his owne house; for then they might have followed what rites they thought good, *Tostat. quæst.*27.

QUEST. XLI. Wherefore they were to eat only unleavened bread in the Passeover.

THou shalt not offer the bloud with leavened bread, &c. 1. The unleavened bread, which they were commanded to eat for seven dayes together, is called the bread of tribulation, *Deut.*16.3. that as it is an unpleasant and unsavoury bread of it selfe; so it should call to their remembrance the affliction which they endured in Egypt, and consequently their deliverance from the same, Simler. Calvin. 2. But to us it hath this signification: first, it forbiddeth, quicquam Ægyptiacæ doctrinæ divinis rebus admisceri, &c. that any Egyptiacall, or false doctrine should be mingled with divine things, Theodoret. As our blessed Saviour in this sense, chargeth his Apostles to take heed of the leaven of the Pharisies, Mark 8. Secondly, the leaven signifieth, malitiæ & nequitiæ amaritudinem, the bitternesse of malice and wickednesse, Rabanus. which we must seeke to purge forth, as S. Paul applieth it, 1 *Cor.*5.

QUEST. XLII. What first fruits are here mentioned in this Law.

Vers.19. THe first of the first fruits of thy land. 1. Some thinke that this Law is understood of the solemne oblation of the first fruits, which were of three sorts: novarum frugum, of their new corne in the feast of the Passeover; panum de novis frugibus pistorum, of bread baked of the new corne, at Pentecost; & novorum fructuum, and of the new fruit, as of wine and oile, in the feast of Tabernacles. But this solemne oblation of the first fruits, was before rehearsed in particular, *vers.*15,16. 2. It is rather therefore meant of those first fruits, which every man was bound to offer unto the Lord in particular: as the first fruits of their trees, *Levit.*19.25. Iun. The first fruit of their dowe, *Numb.*15.21. and of other things: which was to this end, to acknowledge their thankfulnesse unto God for the fruits of the land which he had given them, *Deut.*26.10. Simler. 3. Lyranus addeth further, that these first fruits are specially understood of the seventh yeere, when they did not sow any thing: that because mention is made before, onely of the first fruits of their labours, *vers.*16. this is added, that even they were to give the first fruits of that, which the earth brought forth of it selfe in the seventh yeere without their labour: that first in common they should offer the first fruits to the Priests, before any did gather of them to their owne use: which they were the rather to doe in the seventh yeere, because those fruits were given them without their labour, they were only of Gods sending: and for that in that yeere they could not pay any tithes unto the Levites: for the tenth part could not be set out from the nine parts; because they did not gather the fruits of the earth together, as in other yeeres, but as they needed them, and the remainder was for the beasts of the field; therefore they could not gesse at the tenth, and the tenth was due from the owner, where he tooke the nine parts to himselfe: but here the owner tooke no more than another; the fruits of the seventh yeere were common unto all, *Tostat. qu.*29.

QUEST. XLIII. What it is to seeth a kid in the mothers milke.

Vers.19. THou shalt not seeth a kid in his mothers milke. 1. Some thinke the meaning of this Law is, that they should not offer a sucking kid in sacrifice, while it was yet tender, and under the damme, Pellican. But this cannot be the sense: for after seven dayes, it was lawfull to take any thing from the damme, and sacrifice it, *Exod.*22.30. And we reade that Samuel offered in sacrifice a sucking lambe, 1 *Sam.*8. Beside, the flesh of kids, when they are weaned, are not so sweet and pleasant as before, Simler.

2. Some interpret this Law by that, *Levit.*22.28. that they should not kill the cow and ewe, and the young both in one day: and *Deut.*22.6. that they should not take the dam with the young, Theodoret, Vatab. But it is a divers thing to seeth the kid in the dammes milke, and to seeth or kill the kid with the damme together, Pelarg. Oleaster.

3. Some doe understand this Law according to the letter, that they should not indeed dresse and seeth a kid in the dammes milke: and they give this reason; because it seemeth to be a cruell thing, si lac matris quod datum ei est pro nutrimento, adhibeatur ad consumptionem, if the milke of the damme, which is given for nourishment, should be used to waste and consume it, Thomas, Lyranus. Others adde this reason: Prohibetur ritus Idololatrarum lixantium hædum in lacte matris: The rite and fashion of Idolaters is forbidden, which seeth the kid in the dammes milke, Cajetane. And the Hebrewes affirme, that the Ismaelites had such an use to seeth kids in the dammes milke for more delicacie sake, Simler. The Gentiles also used to sacrifice a kid sod in the mothers milke to the god of the fields, that they might have plenty Tostat.

Toſtat. And this is the ſpeciall reaſon which they inſiſt upon that follow this ſenſe, to take it κατὰ γράμμα, according to the words and letter, becauſe it is thrice repeated in the ſame phraſe, in this place, and Exod. 34.26. and Deut. 14.21. Pelarg. Simler. and Calvin ſeemeth to approve the ſame ſenſe.

Contra. But againſt this expoſition it may be thus objected: 1. The word baſhal here uſed ſignifieth as well to roſt, as ſeeth: as Deut. 16.7. Thou ſhalt roſt the paſchall Lambe, for it was not to be ſodden in water, Exod. 12.9. Piſcator, and ſo Toſtatus thinketh that in this place it may be taken indifferently, pro decoctione, vel aſſatione, for boiling or roſting: but the kid could not in this literall ſenſe be roſted in the mothers milke, though they might imagine it to be boiled therein.

2. Auguſtine objecteth thus: Quid ſi mortua matre ejus ab alia ove lactaretur? What if the owne dam being dead, another ewe gave it ſucke? it could not be then ſod in the mothers milke. Lyranus therefore underſtandeth it de omni lacte, of any milke whatſoever. But now they which preſſe the literall ſenſe, by this meanes are forced to depart from the letter. Queſt. 90. in Exod.

3. Againe, there is the ſame reaſon of other young things, as of fowles and of birds, as there is of the young of beaſts: but they cannot be ſod in the dammes milke, and yet they might be abuſed, as well as other young things: therefore theſe words doe reſtraine ſuch an abuſe about meats, as is incident to the fleſh of fowle, as of cattell. The conceit then of Andreas, reported by Lyranus, hath no ground: that it muſt be underſtood, de carnibus animalium, &c. non de carnibus avium, of the fleſh of cattell that are nouriſhed with milke, not of the fleſh of birds.

4. Concerning that ſuperſtitious rite of Idolaters, there is no certainty of it. Horace indeed maketh mention of offering milke unto Sylvanus the god of the fields, in this verſe: Tellurem porco, Sylvanum lacte piabant, They appeaſed the goddeſſe Tellus with a ſwine, and Sylvanus with milke. But whether they offered a kid ſod in milke it is not certaine, and ſo Toſtatus confeſſeth, quæſt. 37.

5. Neither is that any good reaſon, why it ſhould be taken preciſely according to the words, becauſe it is thrice rehearſed: for in all thoſe places it may well beare another ſenſe more fitting and agreeable, as ſhall be even now ſhewed.

6. This preſſing of the literall ſenſe hath given occaſion to the Jewes, receiving herein the expoſition of their Rabbins, of great ſuperſtition: for hereupon the Jewes to this day refraine to boile any fleſh at all in milke; or to dreſſe or prepare cheeſe and fleſh together, becauſe it is made of milke: nor to cut fleſh and cheeſe with the ſame knife, Gallaſius: neither will they eat cheeſe after fleſh, niſi bene perfricuerint dentes, unleſſe they have thorowly rubbed their teeth before.

7. Some therefore not finding how to give a fit ſenſe of the words, doe flee unto allegories. Auguſtine ſaith, Hæc quomodo obſervetur ad proprietatem, aut non eſt, aut non elucet, &c. How this ſhould be obſerved according to the propriety of the words, either it is not at all to be found, or elſe it appeareth not. Therefore he approveth that myſticall and figurative ſenſe, in referring it to Chriſt: Quod hac prophetia prædictum occidendus infans, &c. Who is foretold by this prophecie, that he ſhould not be killed in his infancie, when Herod ſought to ſlay him, &c. The ſame figurative application followeth Thomas. But Auguſtine addeth further, that it may be applied to the time of Chriſts paſſion, who ſuffered about that ſame time of the yeere, when his mother began to be conceived with him: and women are ſaid, ex quo cœperint lac colligere, from the time they conceive to gather milke, &c. But neither of theſe ſenſes can well agree unto Chriſt, who is called the lambe that was ſlaine, but not the goat. Some inſiſt upon a morall ſenſe: as Rabanus by the goat underſtandeth the ſinner, who muſt not be ſod in his mothers milke, Id eſt non purgandus mediocribus Eccleſiæ diſciplinis, ſed auſterioribus præceptis: That is, he muſt not be purged with the mild diſcipline of the Church, but with auſtere precepts. Procopius and Lippoman following him doe make a quite contrary application: Infantes in negotio Chriſti impoſſibile eſt ducere per ignem tribulationes, &c. They that are infants in the faith of Chriſt, cannot be lead thorow fire and tribulation, &c. tolerandi, non opprimendi ſunt, they muſt be tolerated, not urged. And this uncertainty there is in their collections, when every one followeth his owne ſenſe. Queſt. 90. in Exod.

8. Wherefore the meaning is no more but this: they ſhould not bring for the firſt fruits of any cattell, kid, or other beaſt, dum eſt adhuc lactea, while it is yet but milke, that is, before it be ſeven dayes old. And as they were not to offer ſuch unto God, ſo neither to uſe it for their private food, Deut. 14.21. Iun. Pisc. And this to be the meaning may appeare; becauſe here, and Exod. 34.26. this precept is annexed to the Law of firſt fruits: and yet more evidently it is explained, chap. 22.30. where having made mention of the offering of the firſt fruits of their oxen and ſheepe, this is added, ſeven dayes it ſhall be with the dam: which may ſerve to explicate this clauſe: that ſo long it is but as the dammes milke, till it be eight dayes old. And as they were not to offer any ſuch young thing to the Lord, ſo neither privately were they to uſe any ſuch delicacie in feeding of young and tender things, which were but yet as milke in the mouth: which precept is given them, not ſo much, ut curam haberent valetudinis, that they ſhould have care of their health, Marbach. Deus his legibus altius ſpectavit: For God in giving theſe Lawes reached to higher matters: therefore by this Law, cohibetur intemperantia, both their intemperancie is reſtrained, Gallaſ. & humanitas & clemencia commendatur, and humanity and clemencie even toward the brute beaſts is commended. For they which are cruell toward beaſts, are for the moſt part cruell alſo to men, Simler. therefore among the Athenians, boyes that pricked out the eyes of crowes, were puniſhed: and Domitian among the Romans, that flye-killer, proved a ſavage tyrant and killer of men, Pelarg.

QUEST

QUEST. XLIV. Who is understood here to be this Angell.

Vers.20. BEhold I send mine Angell before thee. 1. Cajetane understandeth this Angell to be Moses, but that cannot be, for he brought not the people into the land of Canaan, as this Angell should and did, *vers.*23. Simler. And this Angell should not spare their misdeeds, *vers.*23. but Moses often spared their iniquities, and prayed for them, *chap.*34. Oleaster. But Cajetane addeth further, that Moses should have brought them into the land of Canaan, but that, ipse peccando impedimentum præstitit, he procured the let himselfe by his sinne: and so this is to be understood conditionally. But Tostatus taketh away this answer: Prophetia cum impletur secundum divinam prædestinationem intelligitur, Where a prophecie is fulfilled, it must be understood not conditionally, but according to Gods certaine predestination. And therefore seeing here the Lord brought them by his Angell into the land of Canaan, and yet he did not bring them in by Moses: it followeth that Moses could not be that Angell.

2. Tostatus therefore thinketh, that this Angell must be understood to be Iosh̃ua, for he brought them into the land of Canaan: neither did he spare their iniquities, for he punished Achan, *Iosh.*7. And Gods name was in him, both because he was an Israelite, which is interpreted one prevailing with God, Rabanus: and he is called Iosh̃ua, which is the same with Iesus, a Saviour: and his name being before Osee, God tooke one of the letters of his owne name Iehovah, the first letter jod, and put it to his name, and so made it Iosh̃uah, which signifieth a Saviour, Tostat. So also Lyranus.

Contra. 1. But by name is here understood, not any title or appellation consisting of syllables, but power and authority, and the essence of God, which was not in Iosh̃ua, Genevens. 2. And the peculiar and proper name of God is Iehovah, which was never given unto any mortall man, Gallas. 3. Neither did Iosh̃uah punish all their transgressions, though he met with some publike and notorious offences, Simler. 4. And if Iosh̃uah should have beene this Angell, carnisses populus duttere Angelo, &c. the people should have wanted this Angell their guide, as long as they sojourned in the wildernesse, Calvin. 5. And further, the Lord saith to Moses, Mine Angell shall goe before thee, *Exod.*32.34. But Iosh̃ua went not before Moses; he came after and succeeded him, Calvin.

Berthaius here understandeth both Iosh̃uah as the type, and Christ the great Angell of God, secundum veritatem, in truth. But this cannot agree unto Iosh̃ua at all, no not as the type of Christ; for the reasons before alleaged.

4. Lyranus and Lippomanus doe interpret this place of a created Angell, the same which went before them in a pillar of fire: and in that he saith, My name is in him, the meaning is, Quicquid loquitur, suo nomine loquetur, &c. Whatsoever he speaketh, he shall speake in my name, Lippoman.

Contra. 1. That Angell which went before the people in a cloudy and fiery pillar, was no created Angell, but God himselfe: for he is called Iehovah, *chap.*13.21. Gallas. 2. Whereas the Lord said to Moses, that he would not goe himselfe with them, but send his Angell, *chap.*33.2. and yet afterward being intreated by Moses, granted that his presence should goe with them, chap. 33.14. hence it is evident, that this was not such an Angell as he said he would send, and not goe himselfe, but such an Angell wherein his presence should be, Simler.

5. Wherefore this Angell is none other but Christ, that great Angell of Gods counsell, whom God sent into the world: as appeareth evidently by these reasons: 1. The text saith, My name is in him: Propter naturalem divinitatem, eodem quo & ego, censetur nomine, In respect of his Deity, which he hath by nature, he is called by the same name that I am, Rupertus, Fernus. 2. Augustine taketh him to be the same Angell which wrestled with Iacob, and changed his name, Gen. 32. which was God himselfe, Christ in humane shape wrestling with Iacob: for Iacob is called Israel, because he had prevailed with God. 3. This is the same Angell which is called the Angell of Gods covenant, *Malach.*3.1. Fernus. But herein he is deceived, he thinketh this to be majorem Angelum, a greater Angell, than that Angell which went before them in a cloud: whereas he is the very same Angell. 4. This Angell is called Iehovah, *chap.*13.21. Iun. Pisaur. 5. They are bidden not to provoke this Angell: But it was Christ whom they tempted and provoked in the wildernesse, 1 *Cor.*10.9. and *Heb.*3.9. Simler. 6. Angelus iste judex statuitur, &c. This Angell is appointed their Judge, if they did offend, He will not spare your misdeeds, Calvin. 7. Againe, he saith, If thou hearken unto him, and doe all that I speake, &c. signifying, parem ab illis secum obedientiam flagitare, that he requireth of them the same obedience with God himselfe, as being of the same power, majesty, authority as our blessed Saviour saith in the Gospell, *Ioh.*10. I and my father are one, Marbach. 8. Judicium omnium eidem tribuitur, &c. Unto this Angell is given the judgement of secret things: he will not spare, &c. Simler. Pelarg. Etsi enim Magistratus non omnia delicta vidit & novit, &c. For although the Magistrate doe not see and punish all offences: yet God seeth, and in time will be avenged, Osiander. 9. This was the same Angell, which here performeth that which was promised to Abraham long before, I will curse them that curse thee, *Gen.*12.3. as here he saith, I will be an enemy to thine enemies: and that was Iehovah, *Gen.*12.1. Pelican.

Quæst. 91. in Exod.

QUEST. XLV. Why in this place the prohibition of idolatry is inserted.

Vers.24. THou shalt not bow downe to their gods, &c. 1. This Law is annexed to the former exhortation of obedience; because idolatry is the very root and foundation of all iniquity: and the whole Law and Commandements of God were neglected by Idolaters, so that nothing was more contrary to their obedience to the Law, than idolatry, Simlerus. 2. And seeing they were to cast out the inhabitants of Canaan, which worshipped Idols, they are charged also together with them, to cast out their superstition and idolatry, Tostat. quæst. 81. 3. Quia proclives sunt animi hominum ad superstitionem, &c. Because the mindes of men are prone unto superstition, therefore this precept is often here repeated that they should not serve other gods, nor doe after their workes, but abolish and destroy all monuments of superstition, Gallas. Ferus. 4. And three things are forbidden touching idolatry: First, they must not bow unto them, give them any externall signe of reverence: then, they must not serve them, by sacrificing unto them, erecting temples, altars, and such like, Oleaster. Thirdly, nor doe after their workes, that is, follow other their superstitious rites and ceremonies; and generally, tota eorum conversatio prohibita est, their whole conversation was naught, and therefore is forbidden, Iustat. quæst. 81. 5. And because it was not sufficient to decline from superstition, si religione careas, if thou want religion, therefore as they are forbidden the worship of false gods, so they are commanded to serve the Lord, vers. 25. Gallas.

QUEST. XLVI. What manner of promises are here made and why.

Vers. 25. AND he shall blesse thy bread, &c. 1. This must be here observed, that these promises here made are only temporall, because the people then were carnall, and only sought such things. In the new Testament, Christ doth not promise these terrene and temporall blessings to his Apostles: non illa hæc invidebat, &c. not because he did envy them these things, but because he had greater blessings for them: like as the father, when his sonne is come to age, doth no more entise him with apples, but bestoweth an inheritance upon him, Ferus. 2. Posset absq; præmii ullius promissione præcipere, &c. God might if it pleased him, command without promise of any reward; for he is debter unto none, and when we have done all which we can, wee doe no more than our duty: but God to stirre up our dulnesse proposeth ample and large promises, Marbach. 3. And these blessings of plenty, health, fruitfulnesse, long life are here mentioned, because they should acknowledge God the Author and giver of all these blessings, which the Idolators asked of their Idols, Gallas. 4. First, God promiseth to blesse their increase and use of their bread and water; both to give them abundance, and to blesse the use thereof unto them: for otherwise, without Gods blessing, abundance will soone come to nothing: and because plenty is nothing without health; Secondly, he saith he will take away all sicknesse: then, because all this would not availe, if they had no heires, it is added, that none should be barren: and beside, long life is promised: for to end these things but a short time, were no perfect blessing: and lastly, victory is promised over their enemies: for all these blessings had little helped, unlesse they might have had quiet and peaceable possession of the land, Ferus.

QUEST. XLVII. What is understood by the hornets.

Vers. 28. I will send Hornets, &c. 1. Some doe understand this literally, that as God sent frogs and lice upon the Egyptians; so against the Canaanites, he armed waspes and hornets to shew his power, vel parvula animantia suis auxiliatur, that he can helpe his by weake and small beasts, Theodoret. So Pagnine giving this note, Deum à cœlo de improviso suis missurum auxilium, That God of a sudden would send helpe unto his out of heaven. So also Cajetan. Simler. Calvin. Gallas. Pelarg. But Augustines reasons may here be urged against this sense: Non hoc legimus factum, &c. Wee doe not reade any such thing to have beene done, neither in Moses time, under Iosua, the Judges, or the Kings, that hornets were sent against the Canaanites; only the booke of Wisdome, hoc dicit impletum, saith this was fulfilled, chap. 12. Thou sendedst forerunners of thine host, the hornets to destroy them by little and little. But this may also be understood of that feare and terrour which God did smite the Canaanites with, before the comming of Israel. Quæst. 93. in Exod.

Rab. Abraham, and Aben Ezra, by hornets, understand a certaine disease which did consume the Canaanites, where they hid themselves in their caves. But the text saith, that these hornets drave them out; not that they wasted and consumed them.

Philo Iudæus maketh a metaphoricall sense: Ita attonitos eos reddam, ut etiam vespæ sint eis superiores; I will astonish them, that even flies and waspes shall be able to overcome them, &c. But Iosua found the contrary, when he was discomfited and fled before the men of Hai, that he had not to deale, as with flies and waspes.

Therefore I prefer Augustines sense, Vespæ istæ aculei timoris intelligendæ sunt, &c. These waspes or hornets, are to be understood to be those prickes of minde and terrours which made the Canaanites give backe before the Israelites. So also Lyranus saith, they were, Anxietates animi eos pungentes tanquam aculei, anxiety of minde which pricked them as sharpe pricks. And this to be the meaning, the former verse saith, I will send my feare before thee, vers. 27. the accomplishment whereof is declared, Iosh. 24. 12. I sent hornets before you, which cast them out before you, the two Kings of the Amorites, not with thy sword, nor with thy bow, but the feare which God sent upon them, not their sword, discomfited them, Iunius, Piscator. As Rahab confesseth, When we heard it, our heart did faint, and there remained no more courage in us, Iosh. 2. 11. Pagnine, Tarnouius.

Tostatus maketh this allegoricall sense, by the hornets, Quos scimus de equino stercore nasci, &c. which we know to be bred out of dung, are to be understood those base and contemptible meanes, whereby God overcame the power of Satan, &c. He meaneth the Apostles, who were counted as vile and contemptible, whereby the Gospell of the kingdome was published and propagated. But the former sense is to be rested upon, as the most fit, and consonant to the Scripture.

QUEST. XLVIII. Why God did not cast out the Canaanites all at once before the Israelites.

Vers. 29. I will not cast them out from thy face in one yeere. 1. No, nor yet in 400. yeeres were they all cast out, till the reigne of David and Salomon: which the Lord did for divers causes: one is here noted; lest the land should have growne to a wilderneſse, if it had beene dispeopled all at once, husbandry and tillage would have beene neglected, Gallas. And the wilde beasts in the solitary place would have increased, as Wolves, Lions, Beares, which would have beene a great annoyance to the people, Toſtat. qu. 84. 2. Another cauſe was, for their rebellion and murmuring, for the which they were puniſhed to wander up and downe in the wilderneſſe 40. yeeres, Simler. 3. Eorum culpæ imputandum eſt, &c. It is to be imputed to their owne fault, that the Canaanites were no ſooner caſt out, becauſe they were Ioſh. 23. 13. ſlothfull and negligent therein themſelves, as Ioſhua telleth them, If yee goe backe, and cleave to the reſt of theſe nations, &c. and ſhall make marriages with them, know for a certaine, that the Lord your God will caſt out no more of theſe nations from before you, &c. Calvin. 4. Neither would God caſt them out all at once, Vt eſſent, qui peccantes arguerent, & ut erudiret in eis Iſrael; That there might be ſome, which ſhould correct thoſe which ſinned, and that Iſrael might be nurtured by them, Rabanus. For God uſed thoſe nations, as whips and ſcourges for his people when they fell away from him; as he ſtirred up the King of Canaan againſt them, Iud. 4. 5. Another reaſon was, that the people might have ſome alwayes to exerciſe them, that they ſhould not be given over to ſloth and idleneſſe, but be trained up in warre: this cauſe is touched, Iudg. 3. 1. That he might prove Iſrael by them, as many as had not knowne the warres of Canaan, Marbach. Pellarg. But this reaſon is not mentioned here, Ne impatientia defeciſſent, &c. Leſt they might through their impatience have fainted, Lippom. 6. And further, God would not, Vt citra prælia dominium terræ acquirant, That they ſhould without battell get the dominion of the land: for thoſe things which are hardly gotten, we doe the more ſet by, Procopius. 7. Hoc etiam utile fuit ad cohibendum eorum præceps deſiderium; This was alſo profitable to ſtay their prepoſterous deſire; that they ſhould wait the Lords leiſure, and thinke not all at once to have their deſire. Like as now many wiſh, that the Goſpell might be quickly propagated over the world, which although it be much to be deſired, yet we muſt commit and commend the ſucceſſe thereof unto God, who ſeeth juſt cauſe, though it be not revealed to us, why it pleaſeth not him at once herein to ſatisfie our deſire, Gallas.

QUEST. XLIX. Of the bounds and limits of the land of promiſe.

Verſ. 31. I will make thy coaſts from the red ſea, &c. 1. This Sea called the red, or reedy Sea, in Hebrew Suph, cannot be the dead ſea, as Pellican thinketh, into the which Jordan did runne: for no where in the Scripture is the name of the ſea Suph, the reedy or red Sea, given unto it, but onely to that ſea which lieth upon Egypt, which was divided before the Iſraelites. 2. Here foure bounds are ſet of the Land of promiſe: the Eaſt bound, which is the red ſea, Mare rubrum, quod ab oriente intelige, &c. The red ſea, underſtand to be on the Eaſt, Gloſſ. interlinear. Not that it boundeth all the Eaſt ſide, Sed from orientalis terra Canaan tangit in aliquo mare rubrum, &c. But becauſe the Eaſt ſide of the land of Canaan confronteth in ſome part upon the red ſea. The ſea of the Philiſtims, which is the great Ocean, called the Mediterranean ſea, did bound it on the Weſt: the deſert toward Egypt, which was the wilderneſſe of Shur on the South: and the river Euphrates on the North. 3. But in other places of the Scripture, the land of Canaan is otherwiſe bounded, as Gen. 15. 18. two bounds only are deſcribed, one the South from the river of Egypt, which was a little river on the North end of Egypt, where it is joyned to the country of the Philiſtims: the other on the North, the great river Euphrates. So Deut. 11. verſ. 24. theſe limits are deſcribed, the deſert on the South, and Lebanon which is on the North; Euphrates on the Eaſt; and the uttermoſt ſea on the Weſt, Toſtat. So Ioſh. 1. 4. From the wilderneſſe and Lebanon, unto the great river Perah: here Euphrates, in Hebrew called Perah, is the bound on the Eaſt: and ſo it is: pertenditur tamen verſus Aquilonem; yet it extendeth toward the North, Oleaſter. And therefore in this place it is ſet downe as the bound Northward. But this divers deſcription, limiting and bounding of Canaan, is all one in effect. 4. Yet the Iſraelites enjoyed not all this countrey, till the time of David and Salomon, as 1 Kings 4. 21. it is ſaid, that Salomon reigned over all Kingdomes, from the river Euphrates, unto the land of the Philiſtims, &c. And the reaſon, why they obtained the whole land no ſooner, was becauſe of their ſinne, Simler. 5. Now this bounding and confining of the land of Canaan, was profitable for theſe two ends: firſt, that the Iſraelites might know againſt whom they might lawfully fight: for to thoſe countries which were not within the ſaid limits and bounds, they could pretend no right nor title: Secondly, it was neceſſary to know the compaſſe and circuit of the land, for the more equall diſtributing and dividing of it among the tribes, Toſtat. quæſt. 85.

QUEST. L. Whether it be lawfull to make a league with nations which are enemies to true religion.

Verſ. 32. Thou ſhalt make no covenant with them. Here this queſtion will be moved, whether is be altogether unlawfull to make any league or covenant with Infidels, or ſuch as are enemies unto true religion, as the Iſraelites were forbidden to have any ſociety with the Canaanites.

1. The affirmative part, that it is lawfull, may ſeeme to be confirmed by the examples of Abraham, who was in league with Aner, Eſhcol and Mamre, Geneſ. 14. of Iſaack, that made a covenant with Abimelech, Salomon with Hiram, the Macchabees with the Romans.

Anſw. 1. Particular examples cannot infringe a generall Law, Legibus vivendum eſt, non exemplis; We muſt live by Lawes, and not by examples. 2. Aner, Eſhcol and Mamre, were not Idolaters: there might be ſome true worſhippers of God among the Canaanites in thoſe dayes, as appeareth in Melchiſedech, that dwelt among them. 3. Abraham and Iſaack made no covenant of mutuall helpe, but only compounded peace concerning their limits and bounds, which was not unlawfull, for Paul willeth us, as much as in
Rom. 12. 18. lieth to have peace with all men. 4. Of the ſame kinde was the league which Salomon made with Hiram, which was a bond of peace and amity, not of mutuall helpe and ſociety. 5. The example of the Macchabees doth not move us much; for their facts cannot ſimply be approved, and they had no good ſucceſſe of that league, which they made with the Romans.

2. Wherefore the negative is more agreeable to the Scriptures, that no covenant is to be contracted or made with the wicked.

1. Ieho-

1. Iehoshaphat is reproved by Iehu the Prophet, for joyning in league and friendship with Ahab the idolatrous King of Israel, 2 *Chron.*19.

2. The Prophet Isay rebuketh the Jewes, because they sought unto the Egyptians for helpe: Woe to the rebellious children, &c. which walke forth to goe downe unto Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth, &c. chap. 30.2.

3. For the same cause the Prophet also reproveth the Israelites, They are gone up to Assur, &c. Ephraim hath hired lovers, Hosea 8.9.

4. Paul forbiddeth the Corinthians to flee for helpe unto the tribunals of Heathen Judges, but rather willeth them to suffer wrong among themselves, 1 *Cor.*6. And he biddeth, Not to be unequally yoked with Infidels, 2 *Cor.*6.14.

5. For all such leagues are unprofitable and in vaine; for how should they keepe faith with men, who are unfaithfull to God?

6. But yet all kinde of entercourse is not forbidden betweene Christians and Infidels, and such as are of another religion: For then (as the Apostle saith in the like case) we must goe out of the world: yet these conditions must be observed in such leagues:

1. We must not promise to aid and assist the wicked, or binde our selves unto mutuall helpe, for therefore was Iehoshaphat blamed: Wouldest thou helpe the wicked, and love them that hate the Lord? 2 *Chron.*19.2.

2. Neither must we sue unto Infidels for helpe; for that were to distrust the Lord: if they offer their helpe upon good conditions, it is lawfull to use it, as sent of God; but we must not seeke for it.

3. Ancient leagues which have beene made in former times with such, are not to be broken: for the Gospell condemneth truce-breakers.

4. A league for removing of hostilitie, for entercourse of merchandise, and continuance of peace may be made with nations of strange religion, Simler.

QUEST. LI. What it is to sinne against God.

V. 27. Lest they make thee sinne against me. Every sinne indeed is against God, because it is a breach of his Law, but idolatry in a more speciall regard is committed against God. 1. Like as an offence may be done toward the Magistrate and Lawgiver: either in generall, when his Law is neglected, though anothers person is touched, as in theft, murther: or in particular, when beside the breach of the Law, the person or state of the Magistrate is touched, as when treason is intended against him, his goods stolen. So likewise men trespasse against God: first in generall, when his Law is violated, our neighbour only be hurt, as in all the precepts of the second Table: secondly, more specially, when beside the transgression of the Law, actus immediate dirigitur in Deum, the act is immediately directed against God, as in the breach of the first Table, and principally in idolatry, *Tostat. qu.*86.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of divers actions of love, generall and particular.

V. 4. When thou meet thine enemies oxe, &c. As Gods actions are of two sorts, generall and particular: the one toward all men, in as much as he suffereth the Sunne to shine, and the raine to fall upon all: the other toward the elect, in sanctifying them by his Spirit: So must our actions be toward men. A generall love we must shew toward all men, Turkes, Jewes, Infidels, and toward our enemies: in procuring their good, in seeking to doe them no hurt, in preserving them and theirs: but of which generall found we must shew these curtesies, in bringing home his straying oxe, and helping up the overladen asse. Speciall friendship, familiarity, society, we must only have with the children of God. This difference the Apostle noteth where he saith, Let us doe good to all, but specially unto them which are of the houshold of faith, Gal.6.10. B. Babington.

2. Doct. Of Christs Deity.

V. 21. Because my name is in him. Hic Moses Divinitatem Christi palam confitetur & explicat: Here Moses doth openly confesse and expresse the Divinity of Christ, which the Jewes yet will not see nor acknowledge: for this Angell is Christ, in whom the name of God is: he is called the same names that God the Father is: as the Lord almighty, eternall, &c. Ferus: as the Prophet saith, He shall call his name, Wonderfull, Counseller, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, &c.

3. Doct. God disposeth and transposeth kingdomes.

V. 31. I will make thy coasts from the red Sea, &c. This sheweth that God setteth the limits and bounds of kingdomes, which they cannot passe, nor goe beyond: he setteth up kingdomes, transposeth and pulleth them downe: as Daniel saith, He changeth times and seasons: he taketh away Kings, but setteth up Kings, Dan.2.21. Marbach. Bertram.

5. Places of Controversie.

Contur. Universality and multitude no sure marke of the true Church and religion.

V. 2. Thou shalt not follow a multitude, &c. As in civill matters it is not safe to follow the custome of a multitude: so in religion it is dangerous to be led by numbers and multitude. In our blessed Saviours time the people followed the Scribes and Pharises: only a few, whom he had chosen out of the world, as the Apostles, with some others, embraced the doctrine of Christ. Therefore universality and multitude, which is so much urged by the Romanists, is no good rule to know the right Church and the truth by, Simler.

2. Confut. Against the secret Spanish Inquisition.

Vers. 1. Thou shalt not receive a false tale. Although this be a generall instruction to all, both publike and private persons, that they should not be carried away with false tales: yet it most of all concerneth Judges: which, as Lyranus noteth, saith that the Magistrate is forbidden by this Law to heare the one party in the absence of the other: because many false tales will be devised by the one, when the other is not present to make answer. But Burgensis confuteth Lyranus herein, whom I marvel in his replies maintaineth: who affirmeth truly, that this Law, videtur habere ortum a natura, seemeth to take beginning from nature, that when any suit is promoted at the instance of a party, the adverse party should be cited. Yet he maketh exception of some Courts, the processe whereof is secret without any such inquisition: as he giveth instance of that great Court in Westphalia, which is called Judicium secretum Westphalie; The secret judgement of Westphalia. Wherein, besides that he in pretending to defend Lyranus confuteth him, shewing that in all proceedings it is not necessary that publike inquisition be made; the instance that he giveth is insufficient: what that secret manner of judgement in Westphalia is, he declareth not: but if it be such as the Spanish Inquisition is, which is shuffled up in corners, and in darknesse: there being none present, but the Inquisitor, the Scribe, and tormentor disguised like a Devill and the poore innocent lambe that is tortured, and examined; it is most unjust, cruell, and tyrannicall. The Romane Governours were more equall toward Paul, who brought him forth in publike to answer for himselfe, and did not sift him in corners. And what is to be thought of such secret actions, our blessed Saviour sheweth, Every man that evill doth hateth the light, neither commeth to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.

Act. 24. 10. and 25. 6.

Iohn 3. 20.

3. Confut. Against the Manichees, who made the old Testament contrarie to the new.

Vers. 22. I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, &c. The Manichees, who rejected the old Testament, and would make it contrary to the new take exception to these and the like places, where the Lord professeth enmity against the Canaanites, and chargeth the Israelites to kill and destroy them: How (say they) is this consonant and agreeable to that precept of the Gospell, that we should love our enemies?

In Epistol. ad Galat. cap. 5.

Contra. 1. Hierome answereth, Non tam personarum, quam morum fuit ea dissensio; That this difference and enmity was not in respect of the persons, but of their manners. The Israelites were not so much enemies unto them, as they were enemies to the true religion of the Israelites in worshipping of God aright.

Contra Adimant. cap. 17.

2. Augustine saith, Illa inimicorum interfectio carnali adhuc populo congruebat, &c. That killing of the enemies did agree unto that carnall people, to whom the Law was given as a schoolemaster unto Christ.

3. The Apostle when he delivered over the incestuous young man unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh: Satis declaravit in aliquem inimicum vindictam cum charitate posse procedere, &c. Did sufficiently declare that revenge may be taken of some enemy in charity, &c. Potest ergo dilectio esse in vindicante: Therefore there may be love in him that taketh revenge; as we see in fathers that correct their children whom they love. And although fathers kill not their children in correcting them, yet God, who knoweth what is best for every one, cum dilectione corrigens, non solum infirmitatibus, sed etiam mortibus temporalibus, &c. can correct with love, not only with infirmity and sicknesse, but with temporall death: as is evident in the Corinthians, as S. Paul saith, For this cause many are weake, and sick among you, and many sleep, and that these corrections proceed of love, he presently after sheweth: But when wee are judged, wee are chastened of the Lord, because we should not be condemned with the world.

1 Cor. 11. 30. 32.

4. Nec hoc fecerunt justi homines sine auctoritate divina, &c. Neither did those just men doe this without the divine authoritie, which sometime is manifested in Scripture, sometime hid: lest any should think it was permitted unto him to kill whom he would at his pleasure.

5. De inimici dilectione, &c. in veteribus libris legitur, &c. And yet we reade in the old Testament of the loving of our enemy: whereof David is an example, who when Saul was offered unto his hand, ei ipse cupiebat parcere potius, quam occidere; chose rather to spare him, than kill him: ubi ergo nec difficultas fuit occidendi, nec timor, dilectio profecit inimico, &c. where then there was neither difficulty nor feare to kill his enemy, it was love that helped him, &c. Thus Augustine learnedly sheweth the old Testament not to be contrary to the new.

4. Controv. That every mans terme of life is certaine with God.

Vers. 26. The number of thy dayes will I fulfill, &c. Here are two errors to be taken heed of, which through the mistaking of this text have deceived some. The one was of Diodorus Tarsensis, whose opinion was, that because the dayes of the wicked are often time shortned, thought that the terme of every mans life is not prefixed, and set downe certaine with God. Ex Simlero. So also Procopius: ostendit singulis prafixum esse certum vita finem; He sheweth not here, that to every man is set a certaine end of his life; seeing God according to his pleasure, doth sometime shorten, and sometime prolong, &c. But this opinion seemeth evidently to contradict the Scripture, which thus evidently testifieth: Are not his dayes determined? the number of his moneths are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds, which he cannot passe. As God then hath set downe with himselfe the certaine time of every ones comming into the world; so also he hath appointed their time of departure and going out of the world: which of Gods prescience is neither prevented nor deferred. But so it seemeth to be, when the period of our mortall life by some violent and accidentall meanes seemeth to be cut off. Theodoret therefore here resolveth well: Unusquisque nostrum sic diu vivet, quoad Deus providerit. Every one of us shall live out those dayes which the Lord hath foreseene and foreknowne.

Iob 14. 5.

The other error is of those which thinke, Certum & quidem virendi terminum [illegible] for if it were so, frustra in hunc mundum [illegible] the longest not the righteous shorter life. The contrary error is also easily [illegible] ence: for wee see some infants to dye before they are a moneth old, and some men to live above

Ver. 11. Upon the chief, or choice, of the children of Israel. I.V.A.S. that is, Princes, Nobles. C.P. better than upon those which went [illegible] of the children of Israel. [illegible]

I.B. cum cæteris. I.V. I.V.A.S.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. The vertues of an upright Iudge.

Ver. 1. Thou shalt not receive a false tale, &c. In these three first verses are set forth three excellent vertues, that ought to be in every Iudge. The first is truth, which ought alwayes to be followed contrary whereunto are false reports and tales, which a Iudge is not to give eare unto. So Prov. 18. 17. He that is first iust in his owne cause, commeth, &c. he that by patient hearing, and wise examining of the matter, may speake without contradiction. The second vertue is constancie, not to be swayed by favour of the multitude, or by the power of the mighty, to swarve from justice. The third vertue is touched here in the third verse, neither to esteeme the person of the rich or poore in judgement.

2. Observ. Not to use the names of the Gentile gods in poems and verse.

Ver. 13. Ye shall make no mention of the name of other gods. By this we may gather, Vanitie & Christianis fieri abeis, &c. that it is no Christian or godly use in them, which in their verses and songs invocate the gods of the Gentiles, as Apollo, Iupiter, Minerua, Marbach. But the Apostle saith, Let all things be done to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. vers. 31.

3. Observ. God is to be praised both in the beginning and in the end.

Ver. 16. The feast of harvest of first fruits, &c. the feast of gathering fruits. God would have them both first and last to acknowledge a benefit: they must offer the first fruits, as a signe of their thankfulnesse, when the corne began to be ripe, and keepe a feast also, when they had gathered in all their fruits. Men alwayes thinke it enough to make a shew of thanksgiving, when they begin to taste of a benefit, or receive it afterward. But we must in the beginning and in the end celebrate the praise of God. Oecum. The Apostle saith: In all things give thanks, 1 Thess. 5. 18.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, there are two severall commandements given expresly by the Lord unto Moses, with their severall executions: the first to vers. 12. the second thence to the end of the Chapter.

The first commandement, 1. Is given, vers. 1, 2. both who shall come up unto God, vers. 1. and in what order, vers. 2. Moses should come neere unto the Lord, the rest should stand further off.

2. In the execution: first it is set downe, how Moses delivered the Lawes which he had before received, which are rehearsed in the former Chapters: which he first by word of mouth, and the people obediently received them, vers. 3. then in fact, where foure things are delivered which Moses did: 1. He wrote the Law, vers. 4. 2. Set up an Altar: 3. Sent young men to sacrifice: 4. Sprinkled of the bloud, part on the Altar, part on the people, so establishing and confirming the covenant, vers. 6, 7, 8.

3. The execution of the commandement given, vers. 1, 2. followeth in these three things: 1. Their manner in going up, vers. 9. 2. The effect that followed, they saw God, vers. 10. 3. The event, they did eat and drink, and no evill thing happened unto them.

4. The second commandement is propounded, vers. 12. with the end thereof, wherefore Moses is to come up, namely, to receive the Tables of stone containing the Commandements: then the execution is shewed in generall, vers. 13. how Moses and Iosua went up, and what charge Moses gave to the Elders before he went, vers. 14. Then in particular, the manner of his going up into the mountaine is described, where foure things are declared: 1. How the mount was covered with a cloud, vers. 15. 2. When he was called to Moses, on the seventh day: 3. In what forme the Lord appeared, like consuming fire, vers. 17. 4. How long Moses stayed in the mount, 40. dayes, and 40. nights, vers. 18.

2. The divers readings.

Ver. 1. Said to Moses. I.V.A.P. cum cæter. better than, were he kind said. C. as though this were what God had said before unto Moses, which is shewed to be otherwise, qu. 1. following. I.V.B. cum cæter.

Vers. 5. They offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings unto the Lord of bullocks. I.V.A.P. more truely better than, offered burnt offerings of bullocks, &c. G. for the word translated, bullocks, is the last in the verse: or they offered, &c. twelve calves. L. twelve, is not in the originall.

I.B. cum cæteris.

Vers. 8. Concerning all these words, or sayings. I.B. cum cæteris. all these things. B.G. but they were words or sayings, which were rehearsed out of the booke.

I.V.

Vers. 10. As it were a pavement worke. I. or stone worke of Saphir. V. better than, a worke of Saphir. B. G. for the word stone, is omitted, or bricke worke of Saphir. S. A. bricke, signifieth here stone, rather than bricke: a worke of the stone Saphir. P.L. or a worke of a precious stone. C. a worke of Saphir. H. that is, a stone such as they use in paving.

I.V.A.S.

Vers. 11. Upon the selected, or choice, of the children of Israel. I.V.A.S. that is, Princes or Rulers. C.P. better than, upon those which went backe of the children of Israel: electis, separated, selected.

2. Questions explained.

QUEST. I. Whether the Chapter be transposed in part, or in whole.

VERS. 1. NOw he had said to Moses. 1. The opinion of the Hebrewes is that this Chapter is transposed with the three Chapters before going: which all they thinke to have beene done, and Moses to have received the former Judiciall and Ceremoniall lawes, before the Morall law was delivered in mount Sinai. So that they thinke these things to have beene done in this order: that upon the sixth day of the third moneth the whole host came to the bottome of mount Sinai, and that Moses then went up and received the Judiciall and Ceremoniall lawes, as they are expressed in the 21, 22, 23. Chapters: and that he descended upon the fourth day, and confirmed the covenant, as is here in this Chapter declared, and so on the fifth day hee went up againe with Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and on the sixth day the trumpet sounded, and then the Law was delivered. Ex Lyrano.

Contra. But this transposing of the story cannot be admitted for these reasons: 1. It is not like that the people received the Judiciall and Ceremoniall lawes before they were washed and purged: for that Moses would sprinkle them with the blood of the sacrifice being uncleane. But if on the fourth day they received the Lawes, they were not yet cleansed: for three dayes before the Morall law was given, which was, as they say, on the sixth day, they were commanded by Moses to sanctifie themselves, and to wash their clothes, chap. 19. 2. The Ceremoniall and Judiciall lawes doe depend upon the Morall law, and are but particular determinations of the generall precepts of the Morall law: which precepts being grounded upon the Law of nature, are more evident than any other positive Lawes whatsoever: and the Morall law was to remaine and continue for ever, so were not the other positive Lawes, whether ceremoniall or judiciall: therefore it is most like that the Morall law was given first, and the other after, and not the judicials and ceremonials first, Tostat. 3. Againe, after the people had heard the Lords terrible voice thundering out the Law, they were afraid, and desired that Moses might speake unto them from God, chap. 20. therefore it is evident, that as yet before the Morall law was delivered, Moses had not received the other Lawes from God to give unto the people. But God spake unto them himselfe, Lyranus.

2. And as the opinion of the Hebrewes cannot stand, that hold all these Chapters to be transposed upon the former reasons: so neither can their assertion be received, that admit no transposition here at all: as Cajetane thinketh, that at this time Moses was with God, and yet not come downe out of the mount: but that the Lord in effect said thus much unto him: After thou art gone downe, and hast published these Lawes to the people, then come thou up againe, with Aaron, &c. So also Lyranus.

But it is more like that Moses received this commandement to goe up againe, after he had published the Lawes, and performed all those ceremonies which are rehearsed from verse 3. to verse 9. for Moses was now come downe, when the Lord bad him come up: Quomodo enim præcipitur ascendere, qui erat in monte? &c. How is he bid to ascend, who was already in the mount? Hugo de S. Victor. And againe seeing it is said, vers. 9. Then went up Moses and Aaron; it is like that then Moses received that commandement to goe up: neque enim accessisset Moses non vocatus; for Moses would not have gone up unto God, not being called: the two first verses then must needs be transposed.

3. R. Abraham thinketh that the Chapters before going are not transposed, but placed in their right order: as how Moses remained before the Lord after the Morall law was given, and receives the Judiciall and Ceremoniall lawes following, and afterward rehearsed them unto the people, and performed the other ceremonies here set downe from verse 3. to verse 9. But this commandement, that Moses should come up with Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, which is given to Moses, vers. 1, 2. and executed after, vers. 9. he thinketh to be transposed: and this to be done before the Morall law was delivered, chap. 20. So also Galasius.

Contra. But this cannot be admitted: 1. Because before the Morall law was pronounced by the Lord, chap. 20. Moses is bid to come, and Aaron only with him, chap. 19. 24. But here Nadab, and Abihu, and the 70. Elders he is charged to take with him, vers. 1, 2. 2. Immediatly after Moses had sacrificed and sprinkled the bloud, he went up with Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, vers. 9. This then was not done before the giving of the Law, Tostatus.

4. Wherefore the more probable opinion is, that neither the Chapters before going are transposed, nor yet this Chapter wholly: nor yet that there is no transposition at all. But the two first verses only which in order are to be joyned with the 9. verse, are set out of their place. And that first Moses came downe and published the Lawes to the people, as the Lord commanded him to doe, though hee for without Gods commandement hee would doe nothing; & ita fuit, and these things being done then he was bid to come up with Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, &c. Tostat. Iun. Oleast. Simler.

QUEST. II. What those 70. Elders were.

AND seventy of the Elders. 1. Some thinke that these were those seventy Elders which afterward tooke part of the charge and government with Moses, Num. 11. of which number were Eldad and Medad, Glos. interlinear. But this cannot be: for those seventy Elders were appointed after the people was removed from Sinai, and pitched in Kibroth Hattaavah, which was the next station here Sinai, Numb. 33. 16. But now the Israelites remained at mount Sinai.

2. Some are of opinion that these seventy Elders were appointed, when Iethro gave counsell to Moses: six out of every tribe, which make 72. but the even number is set downe, Simler. But those Captaines over the people, which were chosen according to Iethro his direction, were heads over thousands, hundreds, and fifties, chap. 18. 25. they were then more than seventy.

3. Neither were these seventy such as before time the people had chosen out for their Rulers, answering unto the number of soules that went downe with Iacob into Egypt, as Calvin seemeth to thinke: for it seemeth that before Iethro gave that advice to Moses, there were no such Governours and Rulers over the tribes; because Moses then needed not to have wearied himselfe, in hearing their causes himselfe alone.

Wherefore these were no spectiall Elders, that before were elected and chosen out: but such as Moses tooke out upon this occasion, out of the more honourable sort of the people: and therefore they are called Zekenim, separated, or selected. And Tostatus holdeth this as a reason; because the word Elders in the Hebrew hath no article set before it, as is usuall in that language when any speciall persons are named. But though his reason doe not always hold, yet his opinion seemeth of the rest most probable, Tostat. qu. 3.

QUEST. III. Why Moses went up into the mount alone.

AND Moses himselfe alone shall come neere to the Lord, &c. 1. Here are three degrees or orders appointed to be observed in their comming neere unto God; the people stand farre off, and come not neere at all: Aaron and his two sonnes, and the seventy Elders, ascend with Moses to some part of the mountaine: but Moses himselfe only goeth up unto God, vers. 12. Calvin. Lippoman. 2. Kabanus hath this morall application of it: that as the seventy Elders went not up with Moses, so, unusquisque discrete vires suas, ut ultra non præsumat; that every one doe discreetly examine his strength, and presume not beyond his knowledge. 3. For the mysticall sense, Procopius maketh Aaron here a type of Christ, who stood aloofe off, and contemned not our humane nature, sed descendens ad nos inter nos, but descending dwelt among us, &c. But this application can in no wise be fit, that Aaron should be a type of Christ, who went not up unto God, but Moses did: for who should have freer accesse unto God than our Mediatour and Intercessor? therefore Moses here rather signifieth the Law, which is holy and pure in it selfe: yet is not able to bring us to God, as these ascended not with Moses, but were behind, Simler.

QUEST. IV. Whether all the people in generall were assembled.

AND all the people answered, &c. 1. Sometime the whole congregation is understood to be the Elders only and principall men, that stand for the rest of the people: as chap. 12. 3. the Lord bids Moses to speake to all the congregation: and yet he onely spake unto the Elders, vers. 21. But we rather understand, that all the multitude was called together: for as we reade, that when the Law was confirmed and ratified, the whole assembly came together, not only the Elders and Officers, but even children and wives, yea the strangers unto the hewer of wood, and drawer of water, Deut. 29. 10. so it requisite, that at the first receiving of the Law, all the whole multitude should come together, and give their generall consent.

If it be objected, that it was not possible that so many hundred thousand, as there were in Israel, should assemble in such sort, to heare the voice of one man; we may either say, that God might give an extraordinary strength unto Moses voice, that it might be heard round about, Tostatus. Or, though all the people were not within hearing themselves at once, yet one might receive it from another, and so give their consent; or one company might succeed another to heare, Oleaster.

QUEST. V. Why the Lord requireth the peoples consent to his Lawes.

ALL that the Lord hath said will we doe. 1. Though God might by his soveraigne right imposse on us what Lawes he thought good, without the peoples consent, because they were bound to obey whatsoever the Lord commanded: yet the Lord thought good to require their consent, because thereby they might be lesse culpable, if they had not obeyed those Lawes which were thrust upon them against their will. 2. And although they had twice before, chap. 19. 8. and 20. 19. promised their obedience; that was but in generall, before the Lawes were published: and therefore it was necessarie that their consent should be had now unto the severall Lawes which were propounded. 3. God knew that they would consent, but that was not sufficient, unlesse they also expressed it themselves, that they might afterward be left without excuse, Tostat. 4. The people are to be commended for their readinesse, yet they knew not how impossible it was to keepe the Law, and therefore cannot be excused of rashnesse. Of this sudden promise of obedience, which the Israelites had soone forgot, Hieronme thus: Melius est non promittere, quam promissa non facere, &c. It had beene better for them not to promise at all, than not to performe their promise. And Gregorie herein compareth the Jewes unto 2d 5. cap. Ezech.

31. Moral. cap. 29.

unto Locusta, Subito salcus dentes & precipuus ad terram cadens, &c. Which does of a sudden give a spring and forthwith fall upon the ground againe.

Quest. VI. What Lawes they were which Moses wrote in a booke.

Vers. 4. And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord. 1. R. Salomon thinketh that Moses first rehearsed, and afterward wrote the whole booke of Genesis, and all Exodus unto this place. But this cannot be: 1. The Rabbin himselfe thinketh that Moses rose the next day, and built the Altar: how could he then write these two bookes without a great miracle in one day? which we are not without great necessity to bring in, to make of lawfull miracles where no cause is, were great presumption. Lyranus said he wrote all the words of God, and so consequently, only the words of God; but the history of Genesis and Exodus containe many things beside the words of God, therefore there was no cause for him to rehearse or write all the contents of these two bookes. Tostatus.

2. Cajetanus opinion is, (with whom consenteth Oleaster,) that Moses did write all the former Lawes contained in the 21, 22, 23. chapters, and the ten Commandements beside, with all those Lawes set forth in the 12. and 13. chapters: and his reason is, because it is called the booke of the covenant: but the covenant betweene God and his people, practice consistit in decem præceptis, chiefly consisteth in the ten Commandements.

Contra. The covenant here made with the people, was that speciall bond, wherewith the Israelites were obliged and tied unto God more than any people beside; and this was the bond of the Ceremoniall and Judiciall lawes, for the Morall law is grounded upon the Law of Nature, and all people are bound to obey it: so that if the Israelites, refuserunt præcepta cæremonialia & judicialia, nullum fœdus magis firmum esset, quam cum aliis gentibus, should have refused the ceremoniall and judiciall precepts, there had been no more covenant made with them, than with other nations. Tostat. Therefore it is not necessary to comprehend in this place under this covenant, the Morall law, but such peculiar precepts, as only concerned Israel.

3. Wherefore it is more probable, that those words of God, which Moses did write, were only the Judiciall and Ceremoniall lawes, rehearsed in the three former chapters, and not the ten Commandements of the Morall law, for these reasons:

1. Moses writeth the same Lawes which he had rehearsed, vers. 3. But he rehearsed only the Judiciall and Ceremonials which he had received of God, and were not yet published; he needed not rehearse the ten Commandements, which the Lord had pronounced with his owne mouth; therefore them he writ not, Marbath.

2. The ten Commandements were first written by the Lord himselfe in two tables of stone, as the Lord himselfe telleth Moses, vers. 12. therefore, seeing the Lord purposed to give the Morall law written with his owne hand, it is not like that he would command Moses to write it before: for Moses did not write this booke of his owne minde, but by the Lords direction. Lyranus, Pelicanus, Gloss. interlin. and Augustine quæst. 89.

Quest. VII. Whether Moses rose up the next morning.

Vers. 4. And he rose up early. 1. Cajetane thinketh, that this was not the next morning, because it is not said, the next morning; and that some time came betweene the publishing of the lawes, and this morning wherein Moses wrote the said Lawes. But Cajetanes reason is but weake, for Gen. 19. 27. it is said, Abraham rose up in the morning; which was the next morning, though it be not so expressed; and the like may be found in other places. And the Lawes which Moses did write, might be finished in one day, so that there is no necessity to imagine any longer time to come betweene.

2. Rupertus thinketh, that this morning was upon the 50. day, when the Law was delivered. But that is not like, for that morning there was thunder and lightning, and the sound of a trumpe, Exod. 19. 16. that all the people was afraid, it was then no time to build an Altar, or to doe those other things here described: they were all attent then, and prepared to heare the Lord. Beside, Rupertus must hold this chapter wholly to be transposed, to maintaine his opinion, which is shewed before, qu. 1. not to be so.

3. Therefore, this is like to have beene the very next morning, as thinketh R. Salomon, Lyranus, and Tostatus: and Gallasius useth this reason, Verisimile est Moses hanc sibi assumsisse laudem ut primus; It is more like, that Moses would not long deferre this thanksgiving, &c.

Quest. VIII. Whether there were 12. pillars beside the Altar.

Vers. 4. And set up an Altar, and twelve pillars, &c. 1. Some thinke that Moses erected twelve Altars. But beside that this is against the letter of the text, which speaketh but of an Altar, Lyranus. It had beene dangerous to have made so many Altars, to sacrifice upon, which might have beene occasion to draw the people to superstition, as though they were not to sacrifice all to the same God, Tostat.

2. Some thinke, that this Altar was set up upon twelve stones, which were taken according to the number of the twelve tribes, Cajetanus, Ferus. As Elias built an Altar of 12. stones, representing the 12. tribes, 1. King. 18. 20. Lyranus, Oleaster. And Iosua made an Altar of 12. stones, which were brought out of Jordan, Iosh. 4. And the signification hereof was this, that the sacrifice made upon that Altar, consisting of two stones, was for the benefit of the 12. tribes: and that as those 12. stones made but one Altar, so the 12. tribes belonged unto one God, Tostatus.

Contra. 1. The word used in those two places, given in instance, is abanim, which signifieth stones which were gathered together to make one Altar or heape: but here the word is matzebah, which is a pillar, so called a stando, because it standeth alone, and is erected and set up as a monument: neither is it said here, that Moses made an Altar of these pillars, as Elias did of those stones. 2. And again the ſignification is more full, to erect an Altar by it ſelfe, which was a type of Chriſt our true Altar, and the people themſelves; that ſo both the parties, Chriſt on the one part, and the people on the other here meeting and making a covenant, might be the better thereby preſigured. Iun.

3. Therefore, becauſe they are ſaid to be 12. pillars, not ſtones, it is like they were ſet up apart, as more conſpicuous monuments, repreſenting the 12. Tribes. And this is more conſonant unto the text, that ſaith, he built an Altar, and 12. pillars, which the ſenſe will give to be beſide the Altar, eſpecially, ſeeing the diſtinction atkah commeth betweene and divideth the ſentences. Iun. Drus.

And there were foure kindes of theſe pillars: 1. Some ſerved as memorials of the dead, inſtead of ſepulchers, as Iacob erected a pillar for Rachel. Geneſ. 35. 2. Some pillars ſerved for Altars, as Iacob made an one in Bethel, and powred drinke offerings upon it. Geneſ. 35. 14. 3. Some were ſuperſtitious pillars conſecrated to Idols; ſuch the Iſraelites were forbidden to make. Leuit. 26. 1. 4. Some pillars were uſed as monuments, and remembrances of ſome notable thing done in that place where they were erected; as was the pillar which Iacob erected. Geneſ. 28. 18. Toſtat. quæſt. 5. And of this ſort was QUEST. IX. Whether the names of the Tribes were written in theſe ſtones.

Twelve pillars. 1. Some thinke, that the names of the 12. Tribes were graven in theſe pillars, Berrh. And this opinion may be thought more probable, both becauſe a better remembrance have beene kept by this meanes in the writing of their names, than otherwiſe; and afterward the names of the 12. Tribes were graven both in the two onyx-ſtones, which the high Prieſt did beare in his ephod upon his ſhoulder, ſix in one ſtone, and ſix in another, and in the 12. pretious ſtones incloſed in the breaſt-plate.

Vers. 1. The memoriall of this ſolemne ſacrifice might very well be kept only by the ſight of the 12. pillars without any graving; as their paſſing over Iordan was kept in memory by that heape of ſtones. Ioſh. 4. 2. The names of the Tribes were afterward graven in the onyx-ſtones, and in the Prieſts breaſt-plate, becauſe Moſes had a commandement ſo to doe, here he had none, but rather the contrary, as is now ſhewed.

Wherefore theſe pillars were plaine ſtones without any carving or graving: for ſo the Lord had given Moſes a ſtrait charge, chap. 20. 25. that they ſhould not build an Altar of hewen ſtones; for if they did but touch upon it, they ſhould defile it. Toſtat. qu. 7.

QUEST. X. Whether the Tribe of Levi were here reckoned among the 12. Tribes.

According to the twelve Tribes. As yet Levi was counted for one of the 12. Tribes, as may appeare by theſe reaſons; 1. When the Tribes were reckoned without any relation to their inheritance, they had denomination from the perſons which were founders and fathers of thoſe Tribes: and therefore, in a place where under the 12. Tribes the faithfull are underſtood, which belong to Chriſt, which is the Church of God, where is no reſpect of any ſuch inheritance, Levi is there counted among the Tribes. 2. Ephraim and Manaſſes were made two diſtinct Tribes, Levi was not excluded: and that was not done till the Tribe of Levi was ſeparated from the reſt for the ſervice of the Tabernacle, which was before the beginning of the ſecond yeere of their departure out of Egypt: Then Ephraim and Manaſſes were counted for two Tribes, as we reade, Num. 1. 10. and 50. Untill that time then, of ſequeſtring and ſetting apart the Tribe of Levi, it was counted one of the 12. Tribes, Toſtat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XI. Who were theſe young men which ſacrificed.

HE ſent young men of the children of Iſrael. 1. Theſe were not the two ſonnes of Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, as Gloſſ. interlin. for as yet the Prieſthood was not aſſigned to Aaron, or his ſonnes; And although Moſes had knowne before, that they ſhould be appointed Prieſts: yet it would not have contented the people, that they two ſhould have offered for all the whole hoſt. Toſtat. Lyran. Yet it is not unlike, but that Nadab was one of the young men that was ſent, becauſe he was the eldeſt ſonne of Aaron, who was elder than Moſes; for yet it belonged to the firſt borne to ſacrifice, before the Tribes were ſeparated to that end. 2. Oſiander thinketh, that theſe young men were the Levites and that the one to prepare the ſacrifices, the other to offer them. But as yet the Levites were not appointed to this office. 3. Oleaſter thinketh that theſe young men were not only the firſt borne, nor yet ſent to ſacrifice, but only to miniſter, and attend upon Moſes in the ſacrifice. So alſo Pelargus ſeemeth to thinke; alii laboret promptiſ ſunt & adulti: The younger ſort are prompt and ready to labour, the elder to adviſe and counſell. But the text ſaith, that theſe young men offered burnt offerings: they did not only labour and miniſter, and give their attendance about the ſacrifices. 4. Wherefore theſe young men were none other, than 12. of the firſt borne of the chiefe of the Tribes: for unto them the right of ſacrificing belonged, before the inſtitution of the Prieſthood: for the firſt borne were holy unto God, as appeareth, chap. 13. Iun. So alſo Toſtatus, Lyranus, Gallatus.

QUEST. XII. Why they offered no ſinne offerings.

OFFERED burnt offerings, &c. and peace offerings, &c. 1. Here is mention made only of two kind of ſacrifices: burnt offerings, which were wholly conſumed, and peace offerings, whereof ſome was reſerved, that they afterward did eat of, verſ. 11. 2. There was a third kinde of ſacrifices, called ſinne offerings, which they did not ſacrifice here; both becauſe the people had not at this time committed any actuall ſinne, for the which they ſhould ſacrifice: and as yet the rites and ceremonies of this ſacrifice were not appointed: as that of the peace offerings, the offerer might eat part, but of ſinne offerings he was not to eat at all; but the Prieſt ſometime was allowed to eat thereof, ſometime not, as appeareth, Levit. chap. 4. 5. and chap. 6. 6. 8. 3. They therefore uſed their peace offerings inſtead of ſinne sinne offerings: for if they offered them to have their sinnes forgiven; then they were peace offerings, pro pace habenda, in respect of that peace which they desired to have with God: and if they had already obtained forgiveneſſe of their ſinne, then were they peace offerings, pro pace habita cum Deo, for the peace which they had with God, Toſtat. qu. 9. 10.

QUEST. XIII. In what ſenſe the Prophet Amos ſaith, They offered no ſacrifices.

BUt ſeeing here is evident mention made of ſacrifices, which theſe young men of the children of Iſrael offered unto God, how can this ſtand with that ſaying of Amos, who ſeemeth to affirme, that for the ſpace of 40. yeeres they offered not ſacrifices unto the Lord, Amos. 5. 25. Have ye offered unto me ſacrifices and offerings in the wilderneſſe 40. yeares, O houſe of Iſrael? but ye have borne Sicceth your King, &c. 1. Hieronyme firſt anſwereth, Omnes hoſtias, &c. non Deo obtuliſſe, ſed Moloch rapi, &c. That all the ſacrifices which the Iſraelites offered in the wildernes, they offered not to God, but to Moloch their King, &c. But the contrary is evident here, that they ſacrificed indeed unto God. 2. Therefore he hath another anſwer: they are ſaid not to ſacrifice, becauſe when they ſacrificed, Non voluntate, ſed panarum formidine; They did it not willingly, but for feare of puniſhment, &c. But the readineſſe and willingneſſe of the people is manifeſt here: for they all anſwered with one conſent, All that the Lord hath ſaid, will we do. 3. Therefore Caietans anſwer is more fit: the Prophet ſo ſaith, Quia fuerunt rara ſacrificia, &c. Becauſe ſacrifices were rare in the deſert: they had not their daily and ordinary ſacrifices, as afterward in the land of Canaan: to the ſame purpoſe alſo Gallus.

Reconciliat.

QUEST. XIV. Of the number of the ſacrifices here uſed.

Verſ. 5. Which offered burnt-offerings. 1. The Latine Tranſlator readeth, They offered burnt-offerings and ſacrificed peace-offerings unto the Lord, twelve bullockes: which reading Toſtatus followeth, ſaving that he thinketh that theſe twelve bullockes were rather for burnt-offerings, for every tribe one, than for peace-offerings: for ſeeing the people might eat of part of their peace-offerings, one bullocke had beene nothing for a whole tribe, wherein there could not be leſſe of men, women and children than 150. thouſand, Toſtat. qu. 11. But this labour he might have ſpared, whether theſe twelve bullockes were for burnt-offerings or peace-offerings: for in the originall there is no number expreſſed at all. The interlinearis Gloſſe alſo by theſe twelve bullockes underſtanding the twelve Apoſtles, qui orbem ſingulis prædicationis impleverunt; which filled the world with their preaching, as with flowing: but doth without a foundation, there being no ſuch thing in the text.

2. Lyranus thinketh that there were but two bullockes: becauſe the plurall number being put without any determination, for the moſt part ſignifieth two. But what uſe ſhould the Hebrewes have of the dualll number, if the plurall ſhould commonly and for the moſt part ſignifie but two? Beſide, if twelve bullockes were not ſufficient for peace-offerings, for every tribe to have part, as Toſtatus argueth before, two much leſſe would have ſufficed.

3. Therefore I incline rather to Lippomans opinion: Plures quam duodecim eſſe potuerunt, &c. There might be more than twelve: as in the ſacrifice of Salomon, and other ſuch great ſolemnities.

QUEST. XV. How this place agreeth with that, Heb. 9. 19.

Verſ. 8. Moſes tooke the blood and ſprinkled, &c. The Apoſtle rehearſing theſe ceremonies, Heb. ſeemeth ſomewhat to differ in his narration from the words of Moſes here. 1. The Apoſtle maketh mention of the ſprinkling of the booke, verſ. 19. which is omitted here. To this Iunius anſwereth, that when Moſes had made an end of reading in the booke, he laid it downe upon the Altar, and in ſprinkling the Altar, beſprinkled the booke alſo. So alſo Calvin: although no mention be made here of the booke, Apoſtolus tamen ſub altaris nomine; the Apoſtle doth comprehend it under the Altar. 2. The Apoſtle further ſpeaketh there of foure other things not mentioned here, the bloud of Calves, Water, Purple wooll, and Hyſſope. To this objection Thomas anſwereth, that this was the firſt conſecration, therefore, virtute continebatur in ipſo alia ſanctificationes futuræ, other ſolemne ſanctifications were to follow there contained, and eſpecially two: the one, Levit. 16. where the bloud of the goat is ſprinkled: the other, Numb. 19. of the red Cow, where the other three, Water, Purple wooll, and Hyſſope were uſed. But this anſwer ſatisfieth not: for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of things actually done, not potentially contained. Calvin thinketh that the Apoſtle in that place toucheth as well this ſacrifice, as that other, Numb. 19. where Eleazar was to ſprinkle the bloud, whereas the Apoſtle ſaith here that Moſes ſprinkled it. Wherefore there is a better ſolution, which Thomas alſo hath, and Iunius alſo followeth: That becauſe it was an uſuall thing in all their legall expiations to uſe hyſſope with wooll to ſprinkle with, Apoſtolus hoc ex conſuetudine ritus legalis; The Apoſtle received this from the uſuall cuſtome of the legall rites, being himſelfe trained and brought up under the Law.

Iun. in paralel. ſacr. Reconcil.

In epiſtol. ad Hebr. cap. 9.

QUEST. XVI. What is underſtood by the ſprinkling of the bloud.

Verſ. 6. Halfe of the bloud he ſprinkled on the Altar. 1. The generall ſignification of this ceremony of the ſprinkling of bloud, whereby the covenant is confirmed, was to prefigure the bloud of Chriſts bloud, whereby wee are beſprinkled by faith: and to let the people underſtand, that the tranſgreſſion of the Law could not be purged but by bloud, not of beaſts, but of the unſpotted lambe Chriſt Jeſus, Ferus.

In epiſtol. ad Hebr. cap. 9.

2. Athanaſius inferreth thus: Neceſſe eſt in Chriſti mortem intelligas, ubi teſtamenti fit mentio, &c. You muſt needs underſtand the death of Chriſt, where mention is made of a Teſtament, &c. for a Teſtament is not confirmed but by death, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Hebr. 9. Now unto a Teſtament belong ſix things: Teſtator, the maker of the Teſtament, which was God: hæredes, the heires, which were the Iſraelites: bona legata, the goods bequeathed, which were the Land of promiſe: conſcriptio, the ing of the Testament; and so here was the booke of the Law: testes, the witnesses, as Moses calleth heaven and earth to witnesse: confirmatio, the confirming the Testament, which was by the death of the Testator; and so here was the death of the bullock, which signified the death of Christ, whereby the new Testament is confirmed, which containeth the promise of the heavenly Canaan, Ferus. To the same purpose Rabanus: This is the bloud of the covenant, that is, morte Christi, quæ hoc sanguine significatur, &c. by the death of Christ, which is signified by this bloud, the Testament shall be confirmed.

3. By the sprinkling of the booke, Theophilatt understandeth our hearts sprinkled with Christs bloud: in eo pro cõdicillis insunt; which hearts of ours are in stead of our bookes: the purple wooll, colore sanguinem præfigurat; by the very colour also did prefigure the bloud of Christ, Athanasius: and hyssope, as Rupertus, humilis herba, humilem fidem Dominicæ passionis significat; doth signifie the lowly faith of the Lords passion, being a low herbe. Thomas, by hyssope which purgeth, understandeth faith which purgeth the heart. In 19. cap. epist. ad Hebr.

QUEST. XVII. What is meant by the dividing of the bloud into two parts.

Half of the bloud, &c. Halfe of the bloud was sprinkled on the Altar, and halfe upon the people. 1. Rupertus by this division of the bloud, understandeth the two Sacraments: Cœlestia duo simul de uno, derivata sunt sanguine Christi; Two celestiall things are derived out of one and the same bloud of Christ, &c. namely the Sacrament of Baptisme, and of the Eucharist. And as here Moses sprinkled water and bloud mixed together, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 9. so out of Christs side upon the crosse there flowed forth water and bloud. 2. Ambrose will have that part of the bloud put into basons to signify moralem disciplinam, morall discipline; the other sprinkled upon the Altar, mysticam, mysticall and saluing. But this seemeth somewhat too curious. 3. The true meaning then of this ceremonie is mysticall: part of it is sprinkled upon the Altar, which is Christ Jesus, who by the shedding and sealing of his bloud reconcileth us to God: part is sprinkled upon the people, to shew that wee are sealed with Christs bloud by faith, are purged from our sinnes, Simler. It is partly morall, Communio ejusdem sanguinis, &c. The communion of one and the same bloud, doth signifie the communion betweene God and his people, Cajetan. Gallas. But the historicall sense is here more fit: for in this ceremony of dividing the bloud into two parts, and so besprinkling the Altar with the one halfe, which represented God, and the people with the other, betweene whom the covenant was confirmed, the old use of dividing of covenants is observed: for the ancient custome was, that they which made a league or covenant divided some beast, and put the parts asunder, walking in the middest, signifying, that as the beast was divided, so they should be which brake the covenant. So when Saul went against the Ammonites, coming out of the field he hewed two oxen, and sent them into all coasts of Israel, expressing the like execution, that so should his oxen be served, that came not forth after Saul and Samuel. After the same manner, when God made a covenant with Abraham, and he had divided certaine beasts, as God had commanded him, and laid one part against another; a smoaking firebrand went betweene, representing and signifying, that so he should be divided which violated the covenant. So in this place, not much unlike the bloud is parted in twaine, shewing, that so should his bloud be shed which kept not the covenant, Epistol. 3. ad Simplicium. 1 Sam. 11. 7. Gen. 15. 11.

QUEST. XVIII. Whether all the people were besprinkled with the bloud.

Then Moses tooke the bloud, and sprinkled it on the people, &c. 1. Some thinke, that the people themselves were not sprinkled with the bloud, for that had beene both too great a labour for men to goe in and out among the people to sprinkle them, neither would the bloud have sufficed: therefore either the twelve pillars were sprinkled with bloud, which stood for the people, or else the Elders were besprinkled in the name of the whole people: as sometime they did represent the whole congregation, as Deut. 21. 6. Iun. Contra. 1. It is not like that the bloud was sprinkled upon the pillars: for of them saith, This is the bloud of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you: but with the pillars no such thing was made. 2. The Elders were for the whole congregation in such actions which the people could not performe in their multitudes: as when the Elders for the people laid their hands upon the sacrifice, Levit. 4. 15. which the people could not doe in their owne person, and so they lay their hands upon the goat, Deut. 21. 6. But here both the people might come together to be besprinkled, and it was such a thing as the establishing of a covenant, wherein the person and presence of the people was necessary. Rabanus therefore thinketh, that Moses did sprinkle the bloud upon the people themselves, and upon all of them; either going in and out among them, or they succeeding by companies one another, Ferus.

But as it is gathered out of the text, that the people were present in person, that as they for themselves promised obedience, saying, All that the Lord hath said, will wee doe; so they in their owne person were sprinkled of the bloud: and because the covenant was made with the people, therefore they also received the signe of the covenant: and the Apostle also saith, that Moses sprinkled both the booke and all the people, Heb. 9. 19. Yet it is not necessary to understand all the people in particular: for a whole day, nay many dayes had not sufficed to doe it: but all the people which were in circuitu, which were round about and could well assemble together.

QUEST. XIX. When Moses and Aaron with the rest went up.

Then went up Moses and Aaron, &c. 1. Some thinke that this was done when the Lord descended upon mount Sinai, chap. 19. Pellican. But as is shewed before, quæst. 1. when Moses was commanded to bring Aaron up with him, but here Nadab and Abihu, and 70. of the Elders also goe up: therefore this was done in the same order, as it is set downe; that after Moses had performed all those rites and ceremonies in confirming the covenant betweene God and his people, then they went up, Iun. Non cum historia transire putamus etiam rei gestæ ordinem, &c. We thinke the history to passe on in order as the things were done, Lippoman. 2. Cajetane thinketh that this was the execution of the commandement given before unto Moses, vers. 1. But I rather thinke with Hugo de S. Victor. that this charge was given to Moses, after he was come downe from the mount, and had performed all the rites of the covenant; and that this part of the chapter from the second verse to the ninth in order goeth before the giving of that charge, vers. 1. for how could Moses otherwise be bidden to come up, being in the mount taine already? See before, quæst. 1. 3. But herein Hugo is deceived, he thinketh this to be but the third time that Moses ascended up to God: the first was chap. 19. when he went up before the Law was delivered; the second, chap. 20. when he ascended to receive the ceremonials and judicials; and the third time is here: yet this was the fourth time: for twice he ascended before the Law was given, as is evident in the 19. chapter, vers. 3. and 20.

and

QUEST. XX. Wherefore those went up with Moses.

Vers. 9. AND seventy of the Elders. 1. Lyranus thinketh that these went up, ad confirmationem legis the confirming and further ratifying of the Law which they had received. Tostatus misliketh this opinion, and thus confuteth it: that if they went up to that end, oportebat ut cum Domino loqueretur, it was requisite that they should all have spoken with God; but so did they not: and Moses only drew neere unto God. They all ascended to their places: seniores remotius, alii propinquius, the Elders further off, others neerer, as Aaron and his sonnes, but only Moses talked with God, Lippoman. 2. Neither yet did they only goe up to accompany Moses, ad honorandum eum, to honour him: because he went now to receive the tables of the Law, Tostat. For when Moses went up thus accompanied, the Lord had not yet signified so much unto Moses, that he would deliver him the tables of the Law, for that followeth afterward, vers. 12. 3. Therefore the end of their going up was, that after they had seene the Majesty of God, and Moses talking with him, testes veritatis essent, they might be witnesses of the truth, Simler. Res idoneis testibus probata indubiam fidem acquireret, &c. And the matter being proved by fit and sufficient witnesses might be undoubtedly beleeved, Calvin. And so by this meanes, Moses ministery should be of the greater authority.

QUEST. XXI. How they are said to have seene God.

Vers. 10. THey saw the God of Israel, and under his feet, &c. R. Abraham thinketh, Istam visionem imaginariam, That this vision was imaginary: not to the externall, but to the inward sense. But this is not like, that this should be as a Propheticall vision, and revelation: for they were not all Prophets unto whom this vision was shewed: and as there was really objected to their sight in mount Sinai flaming fire, so this was a reall vision: like to that which Moses saw in the bush, Exod. 3. 2. Viderunt Deum Israel, sed non sicut est; They saw the God of Israel, but not as he is: for no man hath seene God, Rupertus. They neither saw God in his essence, nor in his infinite Majesty, Osiander. But they knew him to be present: Innotescente illis Domino in specie aliqua, vel forma, &c. The Lord shewing himselfe in some forme and shape, as it pleased him, and as their infirmity could beare, Lippoman. Pellican. 3. Neither yet did the Lord shew himselfe in any humane shape here, as Lyranus thinketh, to signifie, Quod assumpturus erat naturam humanam, &c. That he was to take upon him our humane nature. So also Osiander, Marbach. For if the Lord had appeared here in any humane forme, Moses reason had not beene sufficient, dehorting the people from idolatry, because they saw no Image in the day that the Lord spake unto them in Horeb Deut. 4. 15. For though the Lord had then appeared in any Image, yet if he had at this time so shewed himselfe, they might have taken occasion thereby to resemble God by some Image: therefore neither then nor now did the Lord so appeare, Tostat. quæst. 13. 4. Neither yet because it is said, Under his feet, &c. did they see as the feet of a man, as Cajetane thinketh, Sub specie Judicis quasi hominis visus est, &c. He was seene as a Judge sitting in judgement, and so they saw but his feet: but this is so said, quantum ad situm, in respect of the site and placing, because the pavement of Saphir was beneath, as under the feet: and they might imagine the more glorious part of Gods Majesty to be upward, Tostatus. 5. Neither yet is the meaning, Quod clarius cognoverint Deum, &c. That they only knew the Lord more clearely than the common people, Ferus. Or as the Septuagint translate, they saw only the place, εἶδον τὸν τόπον, where the Lord stood. 6. But the Lord by a bright shining cloud shewed his Majesty and presence: as the Chalde Interpreter readeth, Viderunt gloriam Dei Israel, They saw the glory of the God of Israel: and that much more now, than when hee appeared in mount Sinai, when notwithstanding the people said, The Lord hath shewed us his glory and greatnesse, Deut. 5. 24. Tostat. So also Calvin, Forma ipsius Dei nulla describitur, sed basis in qua stabat, &c. There is no forme described of God, but the bottome where he stood, is said to be like unto Saphir, &c.

QUEST. XXII. Wherein the place under Gods feet is said to be like to Saphir.

Vers. 10. AS a pavement or stone-worke of Saphir. 1. This place under Gods feet, for the colour is resembled unto the precious stone called the Saphir, and to the cleare heavens: Tostatus thinketh the Saphir to be of a bright reddish colour: and that two colours are hereby signified, a bright shining red, and a blew or azure, as in the skie. But the Saphir stone is knowne to be of a skie, blewish ayry colour, as Hierome observeth: and one of these similitudes is added to explaine the other. Barrhadi saith, that the fairest Saphirs are full of red golden spots. So also Oleaster. Which answereth to this description: that the pavement or bricke worke (for so libnath signifieth either bricke or stone) is said to be of Saphir. Tostatus further thinketh, that it is compared unto cælum stellatum, the starrie skie, for ſtring as Cajetane noteth, here is no mention made of ſtarres, it is likened to the cleere heavens without clouds. Oleaſter. which are of a bright blewiſh colour.

Chron. c. 4. 7.

2. For the ſignification, 1. The Hebrewes whom Lyranus and Lippoman follow, in that the pavement of bricke-worke was like Saphir, underſtand the happie change which was now made for Iſrael: their ſervice in making of bricke was turned into glorious libertie, as if a floore ſhould be paved with Saphir in ſtead of bricke. 2. And this bricke worke doth well expreſſe the condition of Chriſts Church, Ad ignem revocata, &c. As bricke burned or tried in the fire of the croſſe, Borrhaius. 3. And by this that it was of skie colour, they are admonished, Gloriam Dei ſuperiorem eſſe omnibus cœlis; That the glorie of God is higher than the highest heavens: that if under his feet were ſo great glorie, how exceeding will his excellent Majeſtie, Calvin. 4. To this purpoſe alſo Vatablus, that by this deſcription is ſignified, Quod non poteſt humanus ſermone explicari throno Dei, &c. That the Majeſtie of Gods throne cannot be expreſſed by humane ſpeech: as Ezech. 1. 26. the throne of God is likewiſe reſembled to Saphir. 5. By this alſo may be ſignified, that Chriſt is the foundation of his Church, which is made glorious Iſay. 54. 11. he is ſaid to lay the foundation thereof with Saphirs, Pelargus. 6. As alſo by this colour, is inſinuated, Altitudo & ſublimitas cœleſtium ſacramentorum; The height of the celeſtiall myſteries, Pelargus. 7. And hereby is ſhadowed forth, Regni illius ſplendor & puritas, &c. The pureneſſe and glorie of that Kingdome, wherein the Lord will ſhew himſelfe unto his Saints, Ferus. 8. But wee need not ſo farre to fetch the application of this viſion: the onely meaning hereof was, that God by this viſible ſight, Se rurſus habere fœdus cum populo ſuum; Did ratifie and confirme the covenant made with the people. Oſiander. Lyranus: Viderunt pulcherrimam Majeſtatis ſpeciem; They ſaw a moſt pleaſant ſight of the Divine Majeſtie, Symlerus.

QUEST. XXIII. In what ſenſe the Lord is ſaid, not to lay his hand, and upon whom.

Upon the Nobles, &c. he laid not his hand. The laying of the hand is taken in Scripture in a threefold ſenſe: 1. The hand of God was ſaid to be upon the Prophets, when the Spirit of God was upon them. And ſo Ab. Ezra underſtandeth this text, Non porrexit illis manum; He did not ſtretch out unto them; He gave them not the Spirit of Prophecie, as he did to Moſes: they did not ſee God openly as Moſes did. But the words are to be joyned together thus, Thus although they ſaw God, yet laid he not upon them; and then no ſuch ſenſe can be gathered, Calvin.

2. The laying on of the hand ſignifieth alſo to hide, as God is ſaid to have laid his hand upon Moſes as Exod. 33. And ſo they make the meaning to be this: that God did not hide himſelfe, to thoſe that were farre off, as the Latine text is: that is, hee ſhewed himſelfe alſo to the people in the campe, Oſiander. Toſtatus. But the word is atzal, which ſignifieth to ſeparate: the text then ſpeaketh of 70. Elders which Moſes had ſelected and ſeparated from the reſt, Ian. Lippom. Or atzal, is derived of etzel, which ſignifieth neere: as Gen. 41. 3. They ſtood neere, or, by the kine: and ſo in this phraſe betoken thoſe which were neere unto God: namely, the 70. Elders, who came neereſt unto him of the people, Oleaſter.

3. There is alſo a third ſignification of this phraſe: to lay the hand, is to ſmite or puniſh, contrarie to that phraſe, Take the hand from me, 1 Sam. 6. 5. that is, to leave ſmiting, or puniſhing. So then the ſenſe here is, Non miſit manum ſuper eos; Hee ſent not upon them his hurting hand, Cajetan. Or, Hee killed them not, Lippomanus. For it was a received opinion in thoſe dayes, that none could ſee God, and live, Oleaſter. Nihil inconſueti ſenſerunt; They felt no harme after this, Ferus.

QUEST. XXIV. Why they are ſaid to eat and drinke.

And did eat and drinke, &c. 1. Rab. Salomon ſaith, that this is added to ſhew their fault, that after they had ſeene God, as though they had not much cared for it, they turned to corporall pleaſures, in eating and drinking: And though God did forbeare them now, yet were they afterward punished: Nadab and Abihu died in the Tabernacle, by fire ſent of God, Levit. 10. and they were afterward at the graves of luſt, Numb. 11. Contra. 1. It ſeemeth that God was not offended in this place, becauſe he laid not his hand upon them: and therefore it is not like that they had any ſuch contempt. 2. Nadab and Abihu were afterward ſmitten, but it was not for any ſuch offence committed here, but for offering ſtrange fire, Toſtatus, qu. 15.

Some underſtand [or their rejoycing] as if they had eaten and drunke, ſo the Chalde. But here is no ſhew of ſimilitude Quaſi comederunt, &c. As though they did eat; But it is expreſſed plainly, that they did eat. It is then to bee taken rather hiſtorice, hiſtorically, than metaphorice, metaphorically, as Cajetan hath given this ſenſe: that although they had ſeene God, yet they were not ſo ravished with his glorie, that did neither eat nor drinke 40. dayes after, but they did eat and drinke afterward. Or we may hereby underſtand, the ſpirituall delight which they conceived, which is ſometime expreſſed by eating and drinking, as Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples in the Goſpell, That ye may eat and drinke at my Luk. 22. table in my Kingdome, Ferus.

Or we may referre it to their publike feaſts, which they made that day in token of their joy. They are commanded to celebrate feaſts, &c. In great mirth after ſuch a viſion, Lyran. So alſo Toſtat. The proper and true ſenſe is this, Salvi & incolumes manſerunt; They remained ſound, and in good health, Cajetan. Quaſi in medio ſuorum hoſtium, &c. As in perfect health, they did eat and drinke: they eſcaped not death, but all other kinde of puniſhment whatſoever, Cajetan. And thus their health is expressed by these actions of life: as Hagar argueth her life by another action of life, Gen. 16. 13. Have I seene after him that seeth, Iun. So also Gallas. Simler.

7. Before they were sprinkled with blood, Gods hand was in some sort upon them, in terrifying them: Whosoever touched the mountaine should die. But now after their sprinkling, they are cheared and refreshed, and are not forbidden the sight of God; which signifieth, that we onely have accesse unto God, by the blood of Christ, Rupertus, Ferus.

QUEST. XXV. Whether this were a new commandement, or the other mentioned, vers. 1, 2. repeated.

Vers. 12. AND the Lord said unto Moses, &c. 1. Some thinke, that this is the same commandement repeated, which was given unto Moses before, vers. 1, 2. Iun. Tostatus addeth further, that when the Lord said to Moses, vers. 2. Moses himselfe alone shall come neere to the Lord: that Moses then did know, that he should goe up to receive the Tables: for to what end should Moses have gone forth of the campe, accompanied with Aaron and the rest, if it had not beene to some end? Gen. 15. Caietan. Yet it was sufficient that God called Moses, and bade him come up into the mount, though he at the same time had not shewed the end of his comming, as chap. 19. 24. when God bade him come up, the cause is not shewed, why he was called: the Commandements of God are simplie to be obeyed, though it please not the Lord alwayes to shew a reason thereof.

2. Wherefore I thinke rather, that this was a divers commandement from the former, and given him at a divers time, Piscator, Osiander.

1. Caietans reason is, Mandat non solùm ascendere in montem, sed morari in eo: He biddeth him not onely to come up into the mountaine, but to abide there, &c. which was not said to him before.

2. Calvin addeth further, that after Moses with his companie were gone up, and had seene this vision, Alium exhibitur Moses, &c. ut cognosceremus, &c. Moses is carried up higher, that they should know, that Moses would have gone no further, but at Gods commandement, &c. It was requisite therefore that Moses should bee called againe, and sequestred from the rest, that he might not bee thought to have presumed without a warrant.

3. Severus maketh a mysterie of it, that Moses being gone up with Aaron and the rest, Iterum admonetur ascendere, come up: And by these two ascendings hee understandeth the two senses of the law, the literall, and spirituall.

4. Ferus maketh this application of it, Hic iam tertiò vocatur Moses in montem, &c. Moses is the third time called into the mount, to shew that he which is set over the people of God, ought often to ascend in prayer.

5. Rupertus also understandeth here two ascendings, using this reason; It is said before, vers. 9. that Moses and Aaron with the rest ascended; but not that they ascended unto the Lord, as here the Lord saith, Come up to me, &c. So also Hugo de S. Vict. Come up to me; which must be so understood, that De cella in qua erat, ad altiora montis procederet, &c. From the hill where he was, hee should proceed higher into the mountaine.

QUEST. XXVI. What is signified by Moses going up to the mountaine.

COme up to me into the mountaine. 1. Beda draweth this place unto a mysticall sense: Moses is called up to the mountaine, Ut ex altitudine loci colligat, quam excelsa sit lex: That by the height of the place, he should gather how high, and removed from humane capacitie, the law was, which he was to receive. As our blessed Saviour in the Gospell, called his Apostles into the mountaine, Matth. 5. and after his resurrection, he also appeared in the mountaine, when he gave commission to his Apostles, to goe and preach the Gospell to all the world: but here is the difference; because the law which Moses was to receive, was but given unto one people, therefore Moses onely was called up: but the Gospell being appointed to be preached to all the world, Christ called all his Apostles to him up into the mountaine. 2. Rupertus maketh this ascending up of Moses into the mount, a figure of Christs ascending up into Heaven: Non in montem terrenum, sed in ipsum coelum: Not into an earthly mountaine, but into heaven, to receive not the killing letter, but the quickening Spirit: as the Apostle saith, He ascended up on high, and gave gifts unto men, &c. Eph. 4. 8. 3. Ferus doth thus moralize it: that he which will behold God and give himselfe to contemplation, must terrena hæc & inferiora despicere, &c. despise these earthly and terrene things: as Moses leaving the campe below, ascended up into the mount.

QUEST. XXVII. Of the tables of stone, whereof they were made, and wherefore given.

Vers. 12. I will give thee tables of stone. 1. The fabulous Jewes imagine, that these tables of the law were made of the Saphire, a precious stone, Lyran. and that when Moses had broken them comming downe from the mountaine, he gathered up the fragments and broken peeces, and sold them, wherein he was greatly enriched. Thus these blinde Jewes are not ashamed to blemish their great Prophet Moses with the note of covetousnesse, from the which he was most free. Tostat. quæst. 16. 2. As frivolous is the other conceit, because they are said to be of stone, that the tables were but one stone, which sometimes seemed but one, sometime two: for in, that they are called tables, it sheweth they were more than one: of one stone they might bee both, that is, of one kinde of stone, and yet the tables were two. 3. These tables of stone were created of God for that speciall use: as Exod. 32. 16. they are said to be the worke of God: it is not improbable, that they were opera creata, created of God and so, as Tostatus saith, but it is not like that they were written by the Angell, which Tostatus thinketh to have spoken in Gods person in the mount: for as God prepared the tables themselves, so hee caused the writing: they were the worke of God for the matter, and the writing of God for the manner, Exod. 32. 16. 4. The tables which God gave his people, were not there written, but onely the morall precepts: the rest Moses Deuteronomy; the Commandements the finger of God did write, Kaplan. 5. And whereas it is added, for to teach them, the meaning is not, that by those tables the people should be taught, for they were kept up in the Arke, and were not used: but that according to the law there written the people should be instructed. And the speciall use of these tables was to be a testimoniall against the people, if they should depart from the covenant made with God, whereof these tables were a seale, Tostat.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why Iosuah went up with Moses.

Then Moses rose up and his Minister Iosuah. Here a doubt is moved, how it came to passe, that Iosuah being now any of the number named before, which were appointed by the Lord to go with Moses, verse 19. yet now he companieth him? 1. Augustine thinketh it was to this end, to be a figure of Christ: Subitò cum Mose apparet, & cum eo subitò deinde non videtur, vbi & Iesus accedit, &c. Suddenly he appeareth with Moses, &c. and suddenly the same Iosuah or Iesus, is hid, that is, not spoken of: (for the new Testament is hid in the law, Et aliquando apparet intelligentibus, Yet sometime it appeareth unto those that are of understanding. 2. Beda thus maketh Iosuah a type of Christ, Iosuah nomen Dominum salvatorem designat nostrum & ducem, Iosuah the minister of Moses doth set forth our Lord and Saviour both in name and in action: he may rightly be called the minister of Moses, because living in the flesh he tooke upon him the ceremonies of Moses law: Moysi in omnibus vestigia sequitur, he followeth Moses footsteps in all things: for in all things which Moses spake and writ, Christ is typically or manifestly described, Et quasi verus in dubiis, si bene quærimus, invenitur, &c. And is found as an infallible companion. Thus Beda, ex Lippoman. 3. Procopius in these two things here will have Iosuah to figure Christ, as Iosuah went up with Moses not called, as Moses was: Sic Christus non vocatur à Patre, &c. So Christ is not called of his Father, as others are. And as Moses went not up without Iosuah, so it is impossible that we should draw neere unto God, citra Christi mediatoris & arbitri, &c. without the helpe of Christ our Mediator. 4. Perus thus applieth it, that Iosuah herein is a figure of Christ, because these two ascended up to God to receive the Word, and the Law: Moses vetus testamentum, Christus novum, Moses the old Testament, and Christ the new.

But there is no end of these mysticall applications: every one according to his divers conceit may frame such types and figures: rather an historicall reason would be given of Iosuah his going up, being not called before. Tostatus thinketh, that Iosuah might bee one of the seventie Elders, and so ascended with them: but that is not like, for the Elders are all sent backe againe, whereas Iosuah still accompanied Moses.

But a better reason may be yeelded out of the text, because Iosuah is said to be Moses minister, that is, his domesticall servitour, as it might bee the great Chamberlaine of the Prince, Cajetan, and so hee usually attended upon Moses, and therefore it was not necessarie that hee should bee expressed by name.

QUEST. XXIX. What became of Iosuah after Moses left him.

Now if it be asked what became of Iosuah. 1. It seemeth that he did still attend upon Moses for the space of five dayes, till Moses was called up to goe higher into the mountaine, and no longer, Calvine. Afterward Iosuah staied below in the mountaine, there still waiting and expecting his masters returne, as a diligent and faithfull servant: and in the same place Moses findeth him, where he left him, when hee came downe from God with the tables of stone, chap. 32. 17. Iun. 3. He returned not to the campe, for he was ignorant of the peoples doings, when they set up the golden Calfe, as appeareth by his answer, chap. 32. 18. Tostat. Lyranus thinketh that he pitched his tent at the bottome of the mountaine, and there staied till Moses returned. 4. And during the time Moses abode in the mountaine, it is like he lived of the Manna which fell every morning, and drunke of the brooke which ranne downe the mountaine, Exod. 32. 20. for hee returned not to the campe to fetch any victuall from thence, vers. 20.

QUEST. XXX. Wherefore Moses left Aaron and Hur in his place.

And said to the Elders, tarrie ye here. 1. Thus Moses spake not onely to the 70. Elders, but also to Aaron also and his two sonnes, who are counted among the Elders, who were the greater, and so comprehend the lesse, Tostat. quæst. 17. 2. Gallasius thinketh that Moses having before commanded the Elders to stay there in that place, and that from thence notwithstanding they might commune with the people in their businesse: but if they had continued in that place, which was of some distance from the campe (for they had ascended into some part of the mountaine with Moses) they could not conveniently have taken charge of the people: and seeing Aaron and Hur are left in Moses place, it is to be doubted that they returned into the campe to attend the weightier causes: 2. It is therefore evident that the Elders returned to their tents: but Moses found none in the way, but Iosuah in his returne, when he came to the host: and when the golden Calfe was made by Aarons direction, it is plaine that hee was then among them, Tostat. quæst. 19. And Cajetanus doth gather as much upon those words, vers. 11. And they saw God, and did eat and drinke; Significatum est redeuntes in castra, &c. Hereby is signified their returne into the campe to eat and drinke: for it is not to be thought, that they did eat and drinke in that part of the mountaine where they saw God: they were therefore sent backe to their charge, which could not be, unlesse they had beene conversant with the people, Calvine. 3. But that old collection of Cajetanus is not to be liked, who thus understandeth these words, Sit mihi hic (or hic sit) vir qui sedeat in institutione, That they should rest and continue in the precepts of their duety, &c. whereas Moses onely pointed out the place where hee would have them stay: for although they were not in the campe, yet the campe was in view and in sight, that Moses might point it out as with the finger: as Iacob saith, I passed over this Iordan with my staffe, Gen. 32. yet Iordan was not at hand, but onely in sight. 4. Neither is the meaning of these words, sit, tarrie ye here, that they should tarrie there for any benefit or profit to Moses, as R. Salomon expounds it: those words afterward, chap. 34. Cut thee out two tables, saith the Lord to Moses, that is, for thy profit and commoditie: but the meaning onely is, tarrie for us here, Olaster. 5. And in saying, tarrie ye here, it appeareth that Ioshua went on still with Moses, till the Lord called him up higher, Iunius.

Quæst. 103. in Exod.

Vers. 14. WHosoever have any matters, &c. 1. The phrase in the Hebrew is, Qui Dominus sermonum, &c. He that is master of words: which Olaster restraineth to him, qui videtur esse superior ad rem, &c. which seemeth to be superiour to his adversarie. Vatablus and Lippoman expound it thus, Qui habuerit lites; He that hath any controversie. But the words are more generally to be taken: if any man have any businesse, as either needed counsell, or would have his controversie compounded, let him come to them, Iun. 2. Neither is this to be understood of all questions or controversies whatsoever, but onely of the greater and waighties matters, which Moses used to reserve for his owne hearing: there were inferiour Iudges to heare and determine the lesse. Therefore by this place it cannot be gathered, that Iethro had not yet given that counsell to Moses, chap. 18. as some thinke the historie is to be transposed: for though there were other inferiour officers, yet Aaron and Hur are left in Moses place to iudge the greater causes, Tostat. qu. 17.

Quest. XXXI. How the cloud covered the mountaine, and what is signified.

Vers. 16. ANd the cloud covered it six dayes, &c. 1. The cloud covered all the mountaine not alike in all places: for all the whole mountaine smoked, chap. 19. 18. so that Moses was now within some part of the cloud: but not within the thicknesse of the cloud, whither afterward the Lord called him, Tostat. quæst. 18. 2. And this thicke cloud, with flaming fire, is called the glorie of the Lord, because it was a representation of his glorious presence: Deus ubiq; est, sed non est ubiq; gloriosus; Though God be every where, yet he doth not manifest his glorie in every place: like as the King doth not alwayes shew himselfe in majestie and glorie of his Kingdome, Tostat. ibid. 3. It is said that the cloud covered the mount six dayes: not that it was removed the seventh, but to shew how long Moses staied below in the mountaine, till the Lord called him up, Lyran. 4. By this that God appeared in a cloud to Moses, Beda thus collecteth; that God, ab æstu temptationis nos protegit; doth protect us from the heat of temptation: and he shewed himselfe in darknesse, Quia potentia majestatis ejus à nullo penitus comprehendi; Because the power of his majestie cannot be fully comprehended of any, Ex Glos. interlinear. And whereas God, the first time hee appeared to Moses, shewed himselfe in light, in the fire in the bush, but now in darknesse, Gregor. Nyssen thus inferreth: Mens hominis, quanto magis ad speculationem Dei accedit, tanto magis perspicit, &c. Mans minde the nearer it approcheth to the beholding of God, the more it perceiveth that the nature of God is incomprehensible, Ex Lippoman. Rupertus also by this cloud and darknesse understandeth the great secret and depth of the divine nature: God dwelleth (as the Apostle saith) in light, that none can attaine unto, Osiander thus applieth it: Involvit se Deus in nube, &c. God doth wrappe up himselfe as it were in a cloud, to shew that mans capacitie is too weake to comprehend God. Feuus doth thus collect upon it: Moses in nube, Christus in gloria, &c. Moses was in a cloud, but Christ appeared in glorie: to shew a difference betweene the obscuritie of the Law, and the clearnesse of the Gospell.

Quest. XXXII. How the Lord appeared in fire, and of the meaning thereof.

Vers. 17. The sight of the glorie of God was like consuming fire. 1. The darke cloud covered the mountaine, but in the top appeared as it were a consuming fire: as it is said, Deut. 4. 11. The mountaine burnt with fire unto the middest of heaven, Tostat. qu. 20. 2. In that it is said, It was as a consuming fire, it doth insinuate, Quod non erat vera ignis, sed similitudo ignis ardentis, &c. That it was not true fire, but a similitude or likenesse of burning fire, Cajetan. 3. Unto the people in the campe below, God appeared as a consuming and devouring fire, but of the Elders he was seene in a bright cloud of a sapphire and cleare colour, Iun. Lippoman. To signifie two sorts of men; the one spirituall, that appeare before the Lord with comfort and delight, another carnall, to whom the presence of God is terrible, Pellican. But yet the Lord in this divers manner would be seene of all, that none should pretend ignorance, Calvin.

4. And this fire signifieth with Beda, both that God doth lighten our hearts with his Spirit, & ad dilectionem accendit; and doth kindle them with hope and love: with Simeon it sheweth the severitie and justice of God, Qua eorum impium consumit; Which consumeth the wicked: as the Apostle Heb. 12. 29. according to this place, saith, that Our God is a consuming fire: with Osiander, it declareth the condition and qualitie of the law, which worketh feare and terror, before wee have received the consolation of the Gospell.

Quest. XXXIII. Whether the six dayes before mentioned, were part of the fortie dayes.

Vers. 18. ANd Moses was in the mount forty dayes, and forty nights. We reade before, vers. 16. it is said that the cloud covered the mountaine six dayes, and the seventh day the Lord called unto Moses in the middest of the cloud: here a great question is made, whether these six dayes were part of those forties all which time it is said here that Moses was in the mount: 1. Rashi, Abraham, and Ab. Ezra, whom the Hebrewes generally follow, doe hold that these six dayes were none of the forties: but that these six dayes here mentioned are to bee counted from the first day of the moneth, when Moses first ascended up to God, and came downe and spake unto the people, and the went up againe and returned their answer unto God, and descended againe, and upon the third day of the moneth sanctified the people against the third day following, which was the sixt day of the moneth, when Moses received all the judiciall and ceremoniall lawes before rehearsed, and the same day did reade them to the people, and write them in a booke, and confirmed the covenant: and the next day, which was the seventh, he was called up into the mount, as is here expressed.

Contra. 1. These six dayes cannot bee so accounted from the first day of the moneth: for all these six dayes the cloud covered the mountaine: but the cloud onely began to cover the mountaine the same day when the Lord came downe upon the mount, and delivered the law, chap. 19. 16. as the Lord promised before to Moses, vers. 9. that hee would come unto him in a thicke cloud: therefore the cloud was not upon the mountaine from the first day of the moneth. 2. Whereas a little before, the seventie Elders saw under the Lords feet, as a Saphire stone, and like to the heaven when it was cleare; at that instant it is not like the cloud covered the mountaine: for that sight was like unto a cleare skie, that is not overcast with clouds. Tostat. 3. Neither is it like that all that businesse was dispatched in one day, the receiving of all those lawes, the reading, and writing of them, and the confirming of the covenant betweene the Lord and his people, with the going up of the seventie Elders.

4. Reporinus is of opinion that these six dayes were part of the fortie, and that Moses fasted these six dayes, eating nothing: Pro aviditate coelestium epularum sex diebus panem non comedit; For the greatdesire of heavenly food he six dayes did eat no bread: for he holdeth that Moses fasted but fortie dayes, and fortie nights in all: and if hee fasted these six, then these also must bee included in that number of fortie. Adam also inclineth to this opinion, that these six dayes were part of that number.

2. But the more probable opinion is, that Moses was fortie dayes in the mount, beside those six dayes before spoken of, as may thus be shewed: 1. Moses was alone with God those fortie dayes and fortie nights: as the Lord had said, vers. 2. Moses himselfe alone shall come neere unto the Lord: but all these six dayes Iosua was with Moses, as Calvin thinketh: and as Iunius doth gather out of the text, that on the seventh day the Lord called unto him, to come up alone: till then, Iosua was with him.

3. Beda saith, Septimo die vocatus ad colloquium Dei; The seventh day Moses was called up to speake with God: then till the six dayes were over, Moses was not admitted into the Lords presence: but hee saith himselfe, hee was fortie dayes with the Lord, chap. 34. 28. therefore these six dayes are none of those fortie.

4. The text sheweth that Moses was fortie dayes in the mount, after that he entred into the middest of the cloud: but it was the seventh day before he did so enter, because on the seventh day, and not before, the Lord called unto him out of the middest of the cloud, vers. 16.

Now on the contrarie it will be thus objected:

1. The words of the text are, that Moses was in the mount fortie dayes and fortie nights, he was there no more but all those six dayes he was in the mount; therefore they also are part of the fortie.

Ans. When it is said, he was in the mount, the meaning is, in that part of the mount where the thicke cloud was: he was before in the mount in those six dayes, but not yet ingressus medium nebulæ, entred into the middest of the cloud, as Beda saith: where he continued fortie dayes and fortie nights.

2. So long as Moses was absent from the campe, so long he was in the mount; but he was absent onely fortie dayes, as Iosephus thinketh, not 46. dayes; therefore he was onely fortie dayes in the mount. Lib. 3. Antiquit. cap. 4.

Ans. 1. Though Iosephus so write, it is not extant in the Scripture that Moses was absent but fortie dayes from the campe: but onely that he was fortie dayes and nights with the Lord in the mount. 2. Or if in saying hee was admitted, hee could not bee said altogether to bee absent in those six dayes, because he was yet with him: and he might bee all that while not quite out of the sight of the host, till hee entred into the cloud.

3. Moses fasted but fortie dayes and nights: that hee fasted these six dayes, for there was nothing for him to eate, therefore they are included in the fortie.

4. Moses extraordinarie and supernaturall fast continued but fortie dayes and nights, Deut. 9. 9. but the fast of six dayes might be naturall, as Reporinus saith, Forsitan hoc omnino humanæ possibilitati, &c. it might bee possible to humane nature, for our through a desire of heavenly food to eat nothing for six dayes: if the Lord had not called unto him on the seventh, Manus benedicentis, &c. Non prohibuit omnino aruisset, the hand of man eating in it selfe, would have become wholly dried up. 2. But I rather answer, not insisting upon this, that Moses these six dayes might eat no more than Ioshua did, who was with him: it is said that he did eat of the Manna, and drinke of the water that ranne downe from the mountaine, Ver. 19.

QUEST. XXXV. Wherefore Moses fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights.

Fortie dayes and fortie nights. 1. Some doe place a great mysterie in this number of fortie. Quadraginta dies, anni spatium unius progressi: How knowe we the mysticall number of fortie? Among the rainie fell in the flood: and so many yeares the Israelites were in the desert. Moses fasted fortie dayes to receive the law. Iterum jejunat, Dominus Dominicæ præsentiæ ingressum. With so many dayes fast, the Lord made his entrance into the Gospell, Matth. 4. 2. Beda saith this mysticall number: this number of fortie consisting of foure tens, either signifieth the Gospell, contained in the foure bookes, without the grace whereof no man keepes the law: or the Gentiles inhabiting the foure parts of the world, to whom the Gospell should bee preached, as now the law was given to one nation. Sapor Lucæ 6.

2. But this president of Moses fortie dayes fasting may more profitably and fruitfully be applied: It was typus & præludium Jesu, a type and foreshewing of that fast which our blessed Saviour sustained sustained in the dayes of his flesh, Pelarg. 2. This fast was kept by Moses, and the like by Helias, Vt scilicet humanitas Christi idoneum haberet testimonium; That the humanitie of Christ might have a sufficient testimonie: for unlesse Moses and Helias had fasted fortie dayes, some might have doubted of the humanitie of Christ, in holding out so miraculous a fast. So Rupertus and Ferus following him. 3. And these fasted to this end, ut tanto miraculo homines moveri, &c. that men being moved by so great a miracle, should not contemne their doctrine, Osiander, Marbach. 4. Cyprian also maketh this morall use, hereby to shew the utilitie of fasting, Quoties aliquid à Deo obtinere cupiunt sancti, jejuniis incumbere & lachrymis, &c. Holy men, when they would obtaine any thing of God, gave themselves to fasting. 5. Curiously to search out any other cause of this fortie dayes fast, were a vaine labour: as Cajetane well saith, Non est quærenda ratio numeri, quia divini miraculi opus fuit, &c. A reason must not bee sought of the number, it being a worke of a divine miracle, Cajetan.

Cyprian. de jejun. & tentation.

QUEST. XXV. What Moses did in the mount these 40. dayes and 40. nights.

NOw if it be asked what Moses did in the mountaine these 40. dayes, and 40. nights, it may be answered: 1. That the Lord did all this time instruct Moses concerning the Tabernacle, and the things thereto belonging, and touching the sacrifices and rites thereof, as they are set forth in Leviticus. And therefore Moses descending is not mentioned, till the description of the Tabernacle, and every part thereof is finished. And Levit. 27. 34. it is evidently expressed, that the Lord taught Moses all those ordinances in mount Sinai. 2. Now Moses fasted 40. dayes and nights the second time, but then he was wholly occupied in humbling himselfe by prayer, Deut. 9. 25. the first time of 40. dayes then was spent in Moses instruction rather than the other, Tostat. cap. 25. qu. 1. 3. God could have dispatched Moses in a moment, but this was to give authoritie to him and his law, R. Babingt.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the distinction of the persons of the Trinitie.

Vers. 1. HE said to Moses, come up to the Lord. Both he that speaketh, and he whereof he speaketh, is the Lord. Hence appeareth the distinction of the persons in the Trinitie: the like place wee reade, Psal. 110. 1. The Lord said unto my Lord, &c. Marbach.

2. Doct. The word and Sacraments must goe together.

Vers. 7. HE tooke the booke and read it, &c. Before Moses sprinkled the people with bloud, the signe of the covenant, he first readeth the booke of the covenant: whereby we are taught the right use of the Sacraments, that the doctrine ought to goe before the signe: Aliter lustrata vana sunt, &c. Otherwise the signes are but trifling and vaine, Calvin. The word must be joyned with the element. This course the Apostle taketh with the Corinthians, teaching them the right use of the Sacrament: that they might come together with profit, and not with hurt.

1 Cor. 11. 17. 23.

3. Doct. Nothing to be taught beside Gods word.

Vers. 12. I The law and commandements which I have written, for to teach them. This the writ. Nihil docendum præter oracula Dei; That nothing should be taught beside the word of God. Bern. Which Beda before him noted well: that no man must teach the people of God other precepts, quam quæ ipse Dominus docuit, than those which the Lord himselfe hath taught: as S. Paul saith, I have received of the Lord, that which I have delivered unto you, 1 Cor. 11. 23.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Controv. Against the Romanists, who the whole institution herewith to consecrate this Sacrament.

Vers. 7. HE read in the audience, &c. Moses first readeth the summe of the covenant, before he sprinkled the signe of the covenant with bloud: the sprinkling of bloud, by the which we learne, that the Sacraments are not consecrated, by a certaine forme of words to bee used over them: but by reading and rehearsing of the whole institution, such a cleare and distinct voice must be used, Quæ adhuc desideratur, & videri gigni de melle, Which is directed to men, and is available to beget faith, Calvin. Contrarie to the doctrine and practice of the Romanists, who denie the elements to be consecrated by the words of institution, but by a certaine forme of speech to be used over the Sacrament, as in the Eucharist, This is my bodie, this is my bloud, &c. whereas the whole action of rehearsing the institution, invocation, receiving, thanksgiving, do helpe to consecrate the Sacrament. See more hereof, Iunius Contr. 99. Thesaur. 454.

2. Controv. Against the reading of Scriptures in a strange tongue.

FUrther, Oleaster hereupon taketh occasion to confute the Romanists, who say, that a man may be a sufficient Christian, though he know not these things, whereunto he bindeth himselfe, by which annotation doth evidently convince the Romanists of great error, who doe not suffer the people to understand those things which they binde themselves to keepe, setting neither the Scriptures nor the Sacraments administred in a tongue as they doe understand: for the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 14. 6. unlesse I speak unto you, what shall I profit you? Of Scripture hereof also, Iunius Contr. 5. Thesaur. 454. Confute Against Gajetan, that the place is not mistranslated. Heb. 9. 19.

Vers. 8. B Behold the bloud of the covenant. Concerning among other exceptions which he taketh to the authoritie of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, probable, that the Author of that Epistle alluding unto this place, translateth this word διαθήκη, here used, which signifieth a covenant, by the word διαθήκη, now here used for a testament: there is great difference

Contr

Contra. The author In no other ſenſe uſeth that Greeke word, διαθήκη, than S. Paul elſewhere, who by the ſame word expreſſeth the Hebrew (berith) as Galath. 3.17. and 4.24. which word indifferently ſignifieth either covenant, or a teſtament. And Hierome teſtifieth, that the Septuagint for the moſt part, doe render the word berith, by that Greeke word: But in this place the Apoſtle appropriateth that word, to ſignifie a teſtament, ſhewing the true effect and ſubſtance of that ceremoniall covenant, confirmed by the ſprinkling of the bloud of beaſts, in this covenant and teſtament, made betweene God and us in Chriſt, and ratified in his bloud.

4. Controv. Whether the Divine ſubſtance of God can be ſeene.

Vers. 10. AND they ſaw the God of Iſrael, &c. Here we muſt take heed of two errors, one which Hierome imputeth to Origen, who did thinke the Godhead of the Father to bee ſo inviſible, as that it could not be comprehended of the Sonne: the other was of the Anomeans, whoſe hereſie was this, Naturam Dei eſſe inviſibilem: That the nature of God was not inviſible. In this place they ſaw God, not in his Divine eſſence and ſubſtance which is inviſible, and incomprehenſible, but they ſaw ſome evident ſignes of his glorious preſence and Majeſtie; as Gregorie ſaith, Videri per quaſdam imagines Deus poteſt, ſua per ſe natura ſua ſpeciem non poteſt; God may be ſeene by certaine repreſentations, but according to the nature of his nature he cannot, &c. The faithfull have both in this world a ſight of God, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God: and they ſhall ſee him more fully in the next: as the Apoſtle ſaith, We know when he ſhall appeare, we ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him as he is: But yet this muſt be underſtood with three conditions; the firſt is touched by Hierome, Non ſolum Divinitatem Patris, &c. poſſe oculos carnis aſpicere, ſed mentis; That not onely the Divinitie of the Father, but neither of the Sonne or holy Ghoſt, can the eyes of the bodie ſee, but of the minde, &c. So alſo Athanaſius, as he is cited by Auguſtine, Deum omnino eſſe inviſibilem, &c. niſi in quantum Spiritu & mente noſci poteſt; That God is altogether inviſible, but as he may be knowne in the Spirit and minde, &c. Theſe then at this time ſaw not with their bodily eyes the eſſence of God, but certaine viſible ſignes onely, and demonſtrations of his preſence. Secondly, we ſhall have a more full ſight of God in the next world, than in this: as Auguſtine ſaith, Nemo poteſt in hac vita videre ſicuti eſt; No man can ſee him in this life as he is: Ea promittuntur ſanctis in alia vita; To ſee God in his nature, as promiſed in the next life, &c. So alſo Gregorie, Quamdiu hic morta-liter vivitur, &c. As long as we live in this mortall life, God cannot be ſeene in his nature, &c. Thirdly, ſurely the Divine nature ſhall not be comprehended of the Saints, no not in the next life: as Auguſtine with purpoſe citeth Ambroſe, interpreting that place of the Apoſtle, Who onely hath immortalitie, &c. 1 Tim. 6. 16. whom never man ſaw, neither can ſee, &c. Si natura ipſius eſt inviſibilitas, ſicut incorruptibilitas, &c. If it appertaine to the nature of God to be inviſible, as well as to be incorruptible, that nature ſhall not be changed in the next world, of inviſible, to become viſible, becauſe he cannot of incorruptible become corruptible, &c. And againe, upon thoſe words of the ſame Apoſtle, To the King everlaſting, immortall, inviſible, &c. 1 Tim. 1. 18. hee writeth thus, Unde ego non audeo iſta diſtinguere, &c. Therefore I dare not divide or diſtinguiſh theſe things, (which the Apoſtle hath joyned together) to ſay, To him that is incorruptible for ever, in this world, and not inviſible, not in the next world, but onely in this. Contrarie then to this orthodoxall doctrine of the Fathers, agreeable to the Scriptures, are theſe ventrous and bold poſitions, That wee ſhall (in the next life) participate with Chriſts Godhead, and be made capable of his Divine ſubſtance, That there is not any thing of Gods which his Saints ſhall not ſee. In which aſſertion Auguſtine doth directly oppoſe himſelfe to all ſuch Dogmatiſts and Noveliſts, in theſe words, Non quia Dei plenitudinem quiſquam non ſolum corporis, ſed vel ipſa mente aliquando comprehendit; Not becauſe the fulneſſe of God, any can compre-hend at any time, not onely with the eyes of the bodie, but with the minde it ſelfe, &c. for it is one thing to ſee, another to comprehend the whole in ſeeing, &c. Totum comprehenditur videndo, quod ita videtur, ut nihil ejus lateat, &c. The whole is comprehended in ſeeing, which is ſo ſeene, that no part thereof is hid from him, &c. Here Auguſtine evidently teſtifieth, that God cannot wholly be ſeene, unleſſe nothing in the world ſhould be hid unto us, which here he manifeſtly denieth.

Hierom. ad Avitum. Auguſt. lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 8. 9.

18. Moralium cap. 36.

Matth. 5. 8. 1 Ioh. 3. 2.

In Eſa. cap. 7. Auguſtin. Fortunatian. Epiſc. de videndo Deo.

1 Tim. 6. 16.

1 Tim. 1. 18.

R. Par. Apolog. p. 202. 204. Auguſt. Paulina Epiſt. 112.

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Honour in this life no ſigne of Gods favour.

COme up, thou and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, &c. Theſe two which are bidden to come up with Moſes and Aaron, afterward were ſlaine with fire from heaven: which ſheweth that preferment in this life is not alwayes a ſigne of Gods favour; but that the wicked are often exalted and lifted up, that they may have the greater fall: as the Lord ſaith he had appointed Pharaoh, to ſhew his power in him. Exod. 9. 16.

2. Obſerv. We muſt wait upon the Lord with patience.

THe ſeventh day the Lord called unto Moſes: God would not at the firſt call unto Moſes, but maketh him to wait the diſcovery of ſpeciall favour ſuperadded: Leſt he ſhould wax proud by too much familiaritie. Obſerv. We muſt learne to waite upon God, and that we may learne to beare it patiently, therefore doe not anſwer to our deſire. Suppoſition. As S. Paul therefore beſought the Lord thrice, that the temptation of the flеſh whereby he was buffeted, might depart from him. 2 Cor. 12. 8.

3. Obſerv. Sufficient deputies to be left in the Magiſtrates and Miniſters neceſſarie abſence.

IN that Moſes leaveth Aaron and Hur in his place; he ſheweth that the like care in Miniſters of God would bee ſeene, to leave able deputies in their place, when they have juſt cauſe to be abſent; leſt otherwiſe finde he will severely punish. B. Babing.

4. Obſerv.

4. Observ. The efficacie of fasting and prayer.

Vers. 18. HE was in the mount forte dayes and forte nights. Moses being to receive the law, did prepare himselfe by fasting and prayer: by this we learne, that holy men, Non aliquod magnum
Lib. de jejun. & ieiunio. moliti sunt, nisi prius abstinentia praemissa, &c. Did not enterprise any great thing, unlesse abstinence were be- fore, Cyprian.

CHAP. XXV.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter Moses beginneth to set forth such generall ceremonies, as belonged to the Tabernacle, then instituted for the publike service of God: there are two parts thereof, the preparation, to vers. 10. the description, to vers. 40.

1. In the preparation, these things are expressed in the charge which God giveth to Moses: 1. Who shall offer the things required, namely, the people, vers. 2. 2. What they shall offer, vers. 3, 4, 5, 6. 3. To what end, vers. 8. 4. After what manner, vers. 9.

2. In the description: First, the Arke is appointed to be made, both the bodie thereof: 1. Of what matter, vers. 10. 2. Of what measure, vers. 10. 3. With what ornaments, it must be overlaid with gold, vers. 11. 4. What adjuncts and appendants, both of rings and barres, vers. 13, 14, 15. 5. And of the use thereof, vers. 16. As also the cover of the Arke: 1. The matter, vers. 18. 2. Measure, vers. 18. 3. The fashion with Cherubims, how to be made, vers. 19. and how to be placed, vers. 20. 4. The place of the cover, vers. 21. 5. The use, vers. 22.

Secondly, the Table is described: 1. The matter. 2. The measure and forme, vers. 23. 3. The parts thereof, the crowne, vers. 24. The border, vers. 25. The rings, vers. 26. 4. The appendants, the barres, vers. 5. The appertenants, the dishes, cups, goblets, vers. 29. 6. The use, to set the Shew-bread upon, vers. 30.

Thirdly, the Candlesticke is appointed to bee made: 1. The matter, and after what manner to bee wrought, of gold beaten with the hammer, vers. 31. 2. The parts, six branches, three on the one side, and three on the other, vers. 32. 3. The forme and fashion, with boules, almonds, knops and flowers, vers. 33. 4. The use thereof, vers. 37. 5. The appertenances, the snuffers and snuffe-dishes, vers. 37. 6. The quantitie, of a talent of gold, all this must be made, vers. 39.

2. The divers readings.

G. Vers. 4. Fine linnen. G. rather than, cotten, or bombasine. I. or, silke. ceter. shes. H.

I.B.G.&c. Vers. 5. Badgers skinnes. I. V. A. P. C. or, skinnes of Taxus. B. which word signifieth a Badger: better than, blew skinnes, L.S. the word techashim signifieth Badgers.

G. B. cum ceter. Vers. 5. Shittim wood. G.B.C.A.P.L. better than, choice cedar. I. for there is another word in the Hebrew to expresse that: or, wood that would not putrifie. S. it was such wood indeed: but the word is Shittim: what kinde of wood it was is to us unknowne.

B.G. cum ceter. Vers. 17. A mercie seate, or propitiatorie. B.G. cum ceter. Operterium, a cover. A. a propitiatorie cover. I. the word caphar signifieth, both to cover, and appease: but the first rather here: it served also for the cover of the Arke; but both senses cannot well be joyned together.

Vers. 18. Of gold beaten out, or, drawne out. G. L. C. A. P. or, whole worke. B. I. better than, soled worke, that is, which was not hollow. V. So Oleaster, or, burned gold. S. mikshah signifieth that which is drawne out, or beaten forth.

Vers. 22. I will meet with thee. I. V. A. P. or, appoint with thee. C. testifie unto thee. B. declare my selfe unto thee. G. be knowne of thee. S. but jaghad signifieth properly to meet with at a time appointed.

Vers. 29. For the best reading here, see the 38. question following.

I.G. Vers. 37. To give light to that which is before it. G. that is, of every part of it. I. better than, unto side of it. S. or, over against it. C. L. cum ceter. at the passage of the face thereof. H. that is, round about: for it gave not light onely over against it, but on each side of it.

3. The questions discussed and explained.

QUEST. I. Of the diversitie of ceremonies, and the reason of the institution thereof.

Vers. 1. THen the Lord spake to Moses. 1. Hitherto for the most part Moses hath set forth the generall ... judiciall and positive lawes: now follow the ceremoniall, which were of two sorts: either generall belonging unto all, such as are handled in this booke of Exodus, or particular concerning the office of the Levites, which follow in the booke of Leviticus. 2. And these ceremonies were in number many in the old Church of the Jewes, both because they had many things thereby to be represented, and shadowed forth unto them: and the lesse significant and more they were, the more they had need of: these two are the generall reasons of the number and multitude of their ceremonies. 3. And further, their ceremonies, whether common or generall, or speciall and particular, were of foure sorts: 1. Such as were given, ex parte Dei, on Gods behalfe, as such were the Sacraments. 2. Such as were instituted on the behalfe of the people, as the sacrifices and oblations, which they were all to offer. 3. Such as concerned the preparation, disposition and ordering of those which were to worship, whether the Priests or the people. 4. Whose ceremonies belonged unto the common instrument of the service of God, as of the Sacraments, Circumcision, and other rites and observations: the first are set forth, chap. 25. 26. the second, chap. 29. the third, chap. 27. 28. the fourth of the generall instruments of all those sacred things, chap. 29. as touching the anointing, oyle, and perfume, Exod. 30.

Quæst. II. What time Moses erected the Tabernacle, whether before he received the Tables of the law, or after.

Vers. 1. THen the Lord spake unto Moses, &c. Calvine here hath a singular opinion by himselfe concerning the time of erecting the Tabernacle, with the parts and members thereof, which I begin to be described: for he thinketh that the Tabernacle was built and set up, antequam Moses priores tabulas effregisset; before Moses had brought the first tables. And his reasons are these: 1. There is mention made of the Tabernacle, chap. 33. 7. immediatly after Moses was come downe with the tables in his hand, which he brake: and therefore the Tabernacle being presently after spoken of, it is like before. Ans. This was not the great Tabernacle which was afterward made for Gods service: for that Tabernacle was not set without the host, as this was, but in the middest, Lapide. Iun. But it was Moses Tabernacle, whither the people had accesse to consult with God, Iun. And this shall more fully be declared, when we come unto that place.

2. In this Chapter it is said, vers. 16. Then shalt put in the Arke the Testimonie which I shall give thee: therefore he received the Testament before he made the Arke wherein he was to put it. Ans. This followeth not that the Arke was therefore made first, but that the forme thereof was declared first how it should be made, which was in the mount: after which forme it was made after that he had received the Tables of the Testimonie.

3. Obj. When Moses commeth to exhort the people to build the Tabernacle, he maketh no mention at all of their apostasie and idolatrie: therefore it is evident, integrum adhuc fuisse populum, &c. that they were yet sound, they had not yet committed that sinne, seeing they doe so cheerefully consecrate their best things to the Lord. Ans. 1. The people had received correction already for their faults, and Moses in signe of Gods indignation against them had removed his tent from among them, chap. 33. 7. therefore it cannot be said, that mention is made of their falling away. 2. The people, such especially as were touched with remorse for their sinne, did so much the more shew themselves cheerfull in Gods service, as a signe of their unfeined repentance. 3. And Moses having interceded the Lord for his people, would not bee still harping upon the same string, in upbraiding them with their fault; lest he might altogether have discouraged them.

Therefore it is very cleere that the Tabernacle was not erected and set up before the receiving of the Tables, but after, for these reasons:

1. Because Moses is here bidden to make the Tabernacle according to all which the Lord should shew him in the mount: but the forme thereof was first shewed Moses in the mount, when he continued there forty dayes and nights, in the end whereof he received the Tables, Deut. 9. 10. Therefore the Tabernacle could not bee made before the fashion thereof was shewed Moses. Calvine here answereth, that all things before this, Moses was in the mount with God, when the fashion of the Tabernacle might bee shewed him. But it is evident, chap. 24. 18. that this was done in the fortie dayes and nights when Moses entered into the cloud, and there so long continued.

2. It is expresly said that the Tabernacle was reared up in the second yeare, and the first moneth, the first day, chap. 40. 17. It was not then dedicated and set in order onely, as Calvine answereth, but then first built: and in the second yeare, in the second moneth upon the 20. day, they removed from Sinai, which was about a moneth and an halfe after: but if the Tabernacle were built before Moses received the Tables, he after the finishing thereof was twice with the Lord, each time fortie dayes: which could not be done in about fortie or fiftie dayes after the Tabernacle was erected, the whole campe removed, &c.

Besides by this meanes a great part of Exodus shall be transposed; all that followeth from chap. 35. to the end, concerning the making and setting up of the Tabernacle, should be in order placed before the 32. and 34. Chapters: this being admitted, that the Tabernacle was first erected, before Moses had the tables shewed him. Therefore rather the order of the storie is this: first, there is the description of the Tabernacle, to the end of chap. 30. Then followeth the let and impediment of building it, the peoples transgression, chap. 32. Thirdly, the execution of Gods commandement, and framing of the Tabernacle, chap. 35. to the end. Lastly, the erection and setting of it up, chap. 40. Lyranus.

Quæst. III. Why these oblations are called terumah, an heave offering.

*RE*ceive an offering for me. 1. The Latine translator here readeth primitias, first fruits, whom Tostatus followeth: and he giveth this interpretation of it, that although the first fruits were primitiæ comestibilium, of things which might bee eaten: yet here their offerings of gold, silke, and other things are called the first fruites, Quia istud quod dabatur erat de optimo, &c. Because this that was given was of the best, as their first fruits used to be: for that which is called first, is taken two wayes, for that which is first in time, or which is first, that is, chiefe in goodnesse, excellencie. But this labour might bee well spared, seeing that the word in the originall terumah, signifieth not the first fruits, fruit, but rather an elevation. 2. Others thinke it is so called, terumah, an elevation, or separation, because it was as lifted up, and separated from other prophane things, and consecrated to God. Ob. also for the Chaldee. 3. Some doe make it a distinct kinde of offering here from the other called tenuphah, the shake offering; and this named terumah, because it was heaved and lifted up before the Lord, as the offering was shaken to and fro. Marchachim. But I rather thinke, that it is here taken for the oblation or offering, not as it is distinguished from the other kinde called tenuphah, the shake offering. Calvine. Iunius. For in these great oblations, as Badgers skinnes, Rammes skinnes, Shittim wood, that ceremonie could not be observed, of heaving or lifting them up.

Verse 2. Of me. Not that God standeth in need of any thing that they had, seeing all what soever is his, but to shew, that whatsoever is offered freely unto him, he accepteth of it, Tanquam manu dedissemus; As though we had given it into his hand, Gallasius. And although indeed all things are polluted which are not consecrated unto God, and referred to his glorie; yet, Deus sua munificentia suum donum in suum usum transmittit. He leaveth unto us the free use of all things, so that we in some acknowledgement confesse wee have received them from him, Calvin. 3. And these things are commanded to be gathered for the Lord, not as though he respected his owne profit; as the wicked Manichees objected, but all is for our profit and good, Pelarg. 4. And the Lord appointed them this kinde of externall worship, not that the Lord was so well pleased with such rites, but that hereby they might be reclaimed from their former superstitious worship, whereto they had beene addicted in Egypt, and be brought by this meanes to consecrate those things to the worship of the true God, which before they had served Idols with, Pellican.

August. cont. Adimant. cap. 10. tom. 6.

Quest. V. Whether this free offering was the same, which was imposed upon them after-ward. chap. 38. 26.

Verse 2. Whose heart giveth it freely. Tostatus here moveth this doubt, that seeing every one from twentie yeare old and above was charged, chap. 38. to offer halfe a sicle of gold and silver, and that all the worke of the Tabernacle was made of that summe of gold and silver so imposed, how they are said here to give it freely. To this divers solutions are made: 1. It will be answered, that this free offering is not to be understood of the silver and gold, but of the other things here named, as the blew silke, Badgers skinnes, Shittim wood, and the rest. But this cannot be so, because silver and gold are also reckoned among their free oblations, as well as the rest: and afterward, chap. 35. vers. 24. they are said to have offered oblations of silver, &c. 2. Againe it will be said, that although there were halfe sicle imposed upon every one, yet it was voluntarie notwithstanding, because they gave it with a good heart. But this cannot stand neither: for seeing every one as well the poore as the rich gave halfe a sicle, it is like the rich would have given for their free offering more than the poore. 3. If it be said, that the silver was offered by the men, that went under the account, and upon whom that summe was imposed, but the women brought the free offerings of silver and gold; the contrarie is evident, that both men and women afterward brought their free offerings of gold and silver, chap. 35. 22. 24. 4. Tostatus resolution is this, that there was a double offering; one which was first imposed, when Moses came downe from the mount, which was for every one halfe a sicle: the other was free and voluntarie: and though it be said, that the worke of the Tabernacle was made of the gold and silver that was so imposed, chap. 38. 24. yet seeing the people brought more than was sufficient, chap. 36. 5. it is like that the overplus was of that which they freely offered, which was converted to other uses of the Sanctuarie: like as we reade afterward, Num. 7. that at the dedication of the Tabernacle, the Princes offered cups of silver and gold containing many hundred sicles, which were not summed in the former account, Exod. chap. 38. This his solution will well be received, saving that one thing is mistaken by him, that he thinketh every one above twentie yeare old offered halfe a sicle of gold: whereas they were charged onely to offer halfe a sicle of silver, for it became too much for every one of the poorer sort to offer halfe a sicle of gold, which maketh a quarter of an ounce.

Quest. VI. Of the blew, purple, and skarlet colour.

Verse 4. Blew silke, purple, scarlet. 1. The first word is techelath, which the Latine translateth hyacinthum, which is a skie colour, Oleaster, or an azure, Gallas. There is a precious stone of the same name, which is like to the Saphire stone in colour, which is like to the cleere skie: there is a flower so called of blew colour, into the which the Poets imagine Ajax to have beene transformed, Ovid. This and the other colours following, Lyranus understandeth as well of wooll as silke: and not onely of matter it selfe unwrought, but spun into yarne: as it is said afterward, cap. 35. 25. that the cunning women did spinne with their hands, and brought the spunne worke, &c. Some thinke that this was a sea colour, because in India there grow hyacinth flowers, of a colour like unto gold, Oviand. Bertram. Josephus saith, that they offered also white wooll, beside the purple; but the usuall reading, to take it for the azure colour, is more probable, Katab. Because the Saphire is of a skie colour, which the hyacinth resembleth, Lyranus, as is before shewed.

2. The next word is argaman, which signifieth not the crimson colour, as R. David thinketh, nor R. Saadiah understandeth to be the next colour which followeth: and it seemeth that this word is derived of ragam, which the Hebrewes take to signifie a Prince; whereof the Latine word regius, a King, seeme to be derived: this then was such a colour, as was used by Princes and Nobles, which was the blew colour, Oleaster. As the rich man, Luk. 16. is described to be clothed in purple. This colour is made of a kinde of juyce or liquor which is found in a certaine shell fish, called Purpura, the Purple.

The third colour is tolaghath shani, which is the skarlet double died. Some doe thinke that both words betoken the same thing, namely, coccinum, the skarlet colour: so also translateth Montanus; and Clarke useth but one word, which signifieth skarlet: but the first word, tolaghath, is a worme, as Psal. I am a worme, and no man; And it properly betokeneth a worme of red colour, as Isai. 1. 18. though your sinnes were red, as tolagh, as the red worme: for that colour was made of a certaine worme. The word shani, is derived of shanah, which signifieth to iterate, to double, Oleaster. And it is taken for skarlet, which is a deepe red, double died. So the Septuagint, Latine, Vocab. Ius. And sometime it is taken without any other word, Isai. 1. 18. coccinum, as the double die, meaning crimson, or skarlet, twice died, because those colours use to be double died, or died in graine: R. Saadiah taketh this word shani for the crimson. So also Ofiand. But one of the words, shani, is rather taken for that colour, when used alone, as Isai. 1. 18 these two words together then betokena deepe red, double died.

QUEST. VII. What silke was which the maid did retaine silke.

The next word shesh, 1. Some take for silke, as Ofiander; and so our great English Bible readeth: where no colour is expressed, it seemeth it was such a thing, as would take no other die, but was of a white colour; which cannot be silke, that is most apt of all other to take colour: and therefore we call the best taken colour, a silke die. Bareb. 2. Iunius thinketh it was xylinum, a kinde of fine cotton, or bumbine, which groweth in Egypt, whereof Plinie maketh mention, lib. 18. cap. 1. 3. But rather it is like to be genus lini candidissimi, a kinde of fine linnen, made of most fine threeds, which was much used: and the chiefe men did weare garments made of sheth, of this fine linnen: as when Pharaoh exalted Ioseph, he caused him to put on such a robe, Gen. 41. Oleaster. The Septuagint render also κεκλωσμενον, which signifieth not onely that which we call fininm silke, but fine linnen: they use also another word, which signifieth twisted, which is not in the originall, which they adde by way of explanation: that they would have it readie twisted. These foure colours the Hebrewes say did expresse the foure elements: the red, the fire, the blew the ayre, the purple the water, because of the fish whence it is, the white linnen the earth, out of which it groweth: so by the Tabernacle, in a manner the whole world was represented, Pelican.

QUEST. VIII. Whether they used badgers skins.

Badgers skinnes. 1. Some thinke they were oxe skins, or bull hides, Tostat. But the word Tachash, hath no such signification. 2. Neither doth it signifie blew skins, as the Septuagint, ὑακινθινον χρωμα, colour, or color hyacinthinus, shine of a violet colour, as the Latine: for this were an unconvenient colour, not to set downe what kinde of skins they should be. 3. The Hebrewes in their Talmud say it was a beast that had a spotted or speckled skin: but what beast it was they know not. 4. The common opinion is, that they were Badgers skins: for so the word tachash may seeme to have some affinity with the word zaro, which signifieth a badger: and besides, badgers skins might serve well for the outward covering of the Tabernacle to defend it from the raine: they also used to make shoes thereof. Such a kinde of skin in Spaine they make their targets of, which they call in their tongue Adarga, Oleaster. These badgers skins were the utmost covering of the Tabernacle, next under the covering of red ram skins, and under that, the covering made of goats haire, and the innermost the curtaines, made of purple and blew silke, Tostat. quæst.

QUEST. IX. What kinde of wood the wood Shittim was.

Wood of Shittim. 1. The Septuagint render ξυλα ἀσηπτα, wood that corrupted not: so also Iosephus ξυλα, they brought materiam lignorum sectorum ex hortis firmam, a certaine kinde of timber to continue: but it seemeth here to bee a proper kinde of wood, though of that quality, to continue and endure. 2. Some take it for the box tree, some for the pine tree: the Rabbins confuse Iunius, Vatablus, thinke it to be a kinde of Cedar. But Oleaster objecteth that in many places where the word Shittim of the same originall that shittah is, signifieth in acut: whereupon he gathereth that this was not the acutum or pinus, which are unfit to make arke of, because they rotte in the water: he therefore taketh it to be a kinde of walnut, which is used in Noble armes heraldry, and is great store in Germanie. 3. Lindius subscribeth to Hieronymus opinion, who thinketh it was a kinde of wood, like unto the white thorne which grew in the desert: it was hard, a lasting wood, and durable: and the place where it grew soweth to be called thereof, Abel Shittim, where the people Numb. 33. 49. and there they abode a good while, Iosh. 2. 1. Iudges. but when the wood it was, is in part hard to define.

QUEST. X. Why they had their Shittim wood.

Why they had their Shittim wood. 1. It is not like that they had been further in the wilderness had this Shittim wood. 2. It is not like that they had gotten it from the Egyptians, for that it had been an unfit matter to have provided an arke of, since being to goe three daies, and no hand, that they needed not to be specially admonished of it, as they were, Exod. 3. 18. and 5. 3. that every one had not of this matter, whereof Lyranus followeth, and of the same opinion is R. Abraham, hath this conceit, that God by revelation, that his prophecie should excell a Tabernacle unto God, did of purpose cause the trees of this kinde of wood, and planted them in Egypt, and so out of Egypt the Hebrewes brought them. But this conceit did not so much take, so grossly to begin so great a matter, with the measure of trees, it is as like also this wood originally, and as it grew in Egypt, before it grew commonly and fruitfully in the dry hilly regions of Canaan: and it is without any ground, that it was provided so much so long before, that God would make his Tabernacle, and the like: but there being no reason in respect of any religion

2. Oleaster

Oholiab illustrating the former title, yet thinketh that they might bring of that wood out of Egypt, because, chap. 35. 24. by the phrase there used, Every one, with whom was found Shittim wood, &c. it seemeth that they had it then in a readinesse. But against this assertion it may be objected: 1. That the store of Shittim wood which went to the making of the Tabernacle, being in length ten cubits and a halfe and in breadth and thicknesse one cubit and a halfe, that is, halfe a yard, these boords being of such length and breadth could not conveniently be carried out of Egypt, being so combersome: for they had no other carriage, but upon their beasts and their shoulders: and being they came out in haste, it cannot be devised how they should bring out with them boords being of that length and breadth. 2. Againe, to what end should the Israelites have burdened themselves with such carriage? Moses yet had it not revealed unto him, that the Lord would have a Tabernacle made in the desert: and it is not like that they brought boords for their owne houses to make their tents of, as Oholiab thinketh: for they should have beene too much combred with such carriage.

3. Therefore the more probable opinion is, that there was some of this kinde of wood neere to Sinai, from whence the Israelites had it. Tostatus, which seemeth to be the opinion also of Hierome. Tostatus thinketh it not to be likely that they sent this wood from Abel Shittim, mentioned, Num. 33. 49. Whether it is not certaine, whether any such wood was there growing, and beside it was in the coasts of the Amalekites, who would not have suffered them to come into their land.

4. Masius. But these reasons conclude more: 1. It is like that the place being named of Shittim, had this wood growing there: as the valley of Baca was so called of the Oakes there growing, 2 Sam. 5. 23. Jericho is called the Citie of Palme trees, because of the Palmes there: Deut. 34. 3. Abel was rather in the plaine of Moab, whose countrie the Israelites were not to meddle with, than in the countrie of the Amorites, Numb. 33. 48. But because the Israelites were not yet come so farre as Moab, it is like that there was some of that wood neere, from whence they had it, though there might be the greatest store and abundance thereof.

QUEST. XI. Why no iron was used in the Tabernacle.

NOw whereas three kinde of mettals are here named among the things to be offered, gold, silver, and brasse: 1. It is to bee considered, that these three were chosen as the most precious and best sorts of mettall for the seruice of the Tabernacle. Gold and silver are here in all places to be the mettals of greatest price and value; and the brasse here named seemeth to be taken for common and ordinarie mettall, whereof is the best and easiest, but the other sort, which hath some drosse with it, whereas the purest mettall such as the Corinthian brasse was, which was tempered with fire, and purged from drosse. Or if, they like the Corinthian brasse better, it was a mixt mettall, made of gold, silver, and brasse, and therefore the more precious. 2. Whereas there were no other kinds of mettall named, not even iron, which was in use among the Egyptians, and not unfit for the seruice of the Tabernacle: it is like that iron, though it might be fit for the vse of the Tabernacle and fashioning thereof for the seruice, yet it is a base mettall, whereas God might be served with the best and purest, if he would have it: or else the pinnes which were fastned into the ground, and the cords, they would have gotten of brasse, and so should not have beene so conuenient.

QUEST. XII. What things were offered, and which were offered.

1. The things here prescribed, and their severall vse in the parts of the Tabernacle. 1. The gold for the Arke, the Table, and the Candlestick. 2. The silver for the sockets of the Tabernacle. 3. The brasse for the Altar. 2. The Arke was overlaid with gold within and without, round about the ring thereof, and the staues made of gold; the mercie seat was the table of Arke-boord overlaid with gold: the Cherubims, that is, the pictures of Cherubims were made of fine gold, and set at the ends of the mercie seat, and the wings of the Cherubims stretched out on high, couered the mercie seat: the Cherubims were of gold; for where the matter of the worke is not expressly set downe, the matter of the worke is expressed, as here, Of the silver of the numbred, &c. 3. The brasse was to make the bases of the pillars round about the Tabernacle, and the chapiters of the pillars, and the pinnes of the Tabernacle, &c. 4. The blew, purple, and scarlet, were to make the curtaines, hangings, and veiles of the Tabernacle, and the vestures of glorie and beautie, as it should seeme, chap. 28. 2. The goats haire was to make the curtaines for the Tabernacle, chap. 26. 7. The Badgers skinnes and rammes skinnes were to make the outward coverings, chap. 26. 14. The Shittim wood was employed for all the making of the Arke, the Table, and the Altar of sweet incense, and the boords of the Tabernacle, and the bolts, and the pillars, chap. 27. 1. The oile was for the lampes, chap. 27. 20. The spices were for the anointing oile, and the sweet incense, chap. 30. 23. The onyx stones and the stones of consecration were for the Ephod and the breastplate, chap. 28. 9. 17. 20. 21. 36. The linnen was for the linnen garments of the Priests, chap. 28. 39. 42. and for the linnen breeches, chap. 28. 42. and for the girdle of the Priests, chap. 28. 39. and for the mitre of the Priests, chap. 28. 39. and for the curtaines of the Tabernacle, chap. 26. 1. and for the hangings of the court, chap. 27. 9. and for the veile, chap. 26. 31. and for the hangings of the gate of the court, chap. 27. 16. and for the couering of the Arke, chap. 26. 31. and for the couering of the table of Shewbread, chap. 25. 30. and for the couering of the Altar of sweet incense, chap. 30. 1. and for the couering of the Altar of burnt offering, chap. 27. 1. and for the couering of the laver, chap. 30. 18. and for the pillars of the court, chap. 27. 9. and for the couering of the pillars, chap. 26. 32 be sacrificed, no part thereof was to be brought into the Tabernacle. And as for the cleane beasts which might be sacrificed, the fat thereof was to be burned upon the Altar, Toſtat. qu. 6.

3. These spices were of two sorts; some were to be tempered and incorporate together to make a soft and liquid ointment, and some to be beaten to powder, to make a sweet perfume: they were to bring them not mixed or compounded, but in their simple nature: for neither did they know how to compound them, but Moſes by Gods direction shewed after how they should be made: and beside, if they had had the ointment and perfume ready compounded there had beene danger, lest they should have prepared it for their private uses, which is straitly forbidden, chap. 30. Toſtat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XIV. Of the mysticall end and ymall application of these divers oblations.

Concerning the spirituall application and end of these divers oblations, 1. Beda doth mystically interpret them: by the gold, he understandeth a sincere faith, more precious than gold: by silver, the confession of faith: by the blew or silke colour, the lifting up of our hearts to heaven: by the purple, the sufferings and passions which are endured for the truth: by the double Scarlet, the two-fold love of God, and our neighbours: by the silke, the chastity of the flesh: by the goats heire, whereof they made sackcloth, penitence. 2. But Rupertus application is more fit, and lesse curious: by these divers oblations, he understandeth the divers gifts which God hath bestowed upon his Church. As some he gave to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists: Hæc grandia dona, aurum, argentum sunt, &c. These great gifts are as the gold, silver, and precious stones, whereby the spirituall Temple is built. 3. Likewise Procopius maketh this use: that as here the Lord accepteth not only the gold and silver, sed neq; lanam caprinam aſpernatur, so neither doth he despise even the goats haire, if it be offered with a franke mind, &c. So God regardeth the smallest and meanest gifts which are offered unto him in faith, as our blessed Saviour commended the devotion of the poore widow, that threw two mites into the treasury.

QUEST. XV. Of the signification of the Sanctuary, and wherefore it was ordained.

And let them make me a Sanctuarie. 1. Some Hebrew Rabbines as R. Abraham, Ab. Ezra, doe very curiously by the Tabernacle decipher the three worlds, the Intellectuall world, where is set God with his Angels: for so over the Arke was Gods mercy seat, and the Cherubims stretching their wings over it, represented the Angels and blessed Spirits. And the Materiall world: as they have the blew covering to signifie heaven: the vaile, the clouds: the seven lampes, the seven planets: the fire on the Altar, and the water in the laver, they understand the element of fire and water. So the third world, which is called the little world, which is within man, they would have represented by this Tabernacle: as in the Arke there were two tables, so there is in mans minde understanding, and reason: as there were divers instruments in the Tabernacle for divers purposes, so in man there are divers organicall parts for the naturall functions and operations. And in this curious manner the Rabbines goe on, and busie themselves in their owne fansies: whereas the Lord ordained not his Tabernacle for any such purpose, but onely that they might have a place, where to professe the worship of God, that he might dwell among them, and shew them comfortable signes of his presence in hearing their prayers, and granting their requests.

To these Rabbines to their curiosity adde impiety: for they thinke that God ordained the Tabernacle and the instruments of divers figures, and divers mettals, Vt diverſæ virtutes à cœleſtibus influxa reciperent, &c. That thereby divers vertues should have their influence from the celestiall bodies: and to this end they say, the Temple was afterward built at Jerusalem, because of some supernaturall influence in that place more than in others. In which Rabbinicall assertion Ab. Ezra bewrayeth, 1. Both impiety, in making God as an Inchanter or Sorcerer, working by figures and mettals, as Magicians in their inchantments observe such things; whereas the Lord by his Law condemneth all such superstitions: 2. As also absurdity, in tying the Lords supernaturall working to certaine places and instruments: Gods naturall operation indeed is exercised by such naturall subordinate meanes, as he hath appointed; but his supernaturall is not limited to places nor meanes. 3. Likewise, an impossibility followeth in making corporall and materiall things, the instruments to convey spirituall graces, whereas spirituall things are not derived, but by spirituall meanes, Toſtat. qu. 9.

The true ends wherefore the Sanctuary was ordained, where these: First, the Hiſtoricall, that seeing God had made the Israelites a peculiar people to himselfe, that they might have a peculiar kinde of worship from all other nations: therefore God appointeth a certaine place, with certaine persons and rites by whom certaine rites and ceremonies should be performed, whereby he would be worshipped with more reverence, sanctity, and purity, than the Gentiles worshipped their gods, Toſtat. qu. 9.

2. For the mysticall end: Beda saith, that this earthly Tabernacle representeth the heavenly, unto the similitude whereof we should conforme our selves in earth: Si ad Angelorum in cœlis conſortia tendimus, viam eorum in terris ſequi, &c. imitari; If we tend to enjoy the company of Angels in heaven, we must imitate their life in earth. The Tabernacle also signifieth Christ, by whom God is worshipped, and by whom God doth manifest himselfe unto us, Simler.

In every faithfull man is this Temple of God, as the Apostle applieth it: Ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell among them, and walke there. Whereupon Bernard maketh this motion, Et nos mundemus conſcientiam noſtram, &c. And let us purge our conscience, that when the Lord shall enter in, he may finde in us a mansion prepared.

2 Cor. 6. 16.

De interiori Dom. cap. 6.

QUEST. XVI. How the Lord is said to dwell in the Sanctuary.

That I may dwell among them. 1. God hath three kinde of temples, Habitat principaliter in ſeipſo. He dwelleth principally in himselfe, because he onely comprehendeth himselfe; as *Apocal.*21.22. The Lord God Almightie, and the Lamb, are the temple of the celestiall Ierusalem. Habet Deus in domo sacrata, &c. God also dwelleth in his sacred house, by that spirituall worship which is there exhibited unto him. Habitat Christus per fidem in cordibus, &c. And Christ dwelleth by faith in our hearts, Thomas. 2. But God is not said to dwell in the Sanctuary, as though he were there contained, whom neither heavens nor earth can containe: but because there he revealed himselfe by his word, and heard their prayers, Et gratiosa sua præsentia signa ostendit; And appointed there signes of his gracious presence, Marbach. And we must remember, Non tantum sum Dei essentiam, sed nomen & memoriam ibi habitasse: Not that the infinite essence of God, but his name and memoriall there dwelled. 3. And this he did in respect of the peoples infirmitie: Præsentiam gratiæ velatis visibilis symbolis testatur; He would testifie his presence by some visible signe, Calvin. And this he did for the peoples ease, that they should not need to come unto that mountaine to offer their sacrifices, Lyran. And because the people were not yet reclaimed from their superstitions, Necessarium erat aliquis cultus externus, ne difflorescerent, &c. An externall forme of worship was necessarie, lest they might have fallen to some other, Ferus. And God telleth them, he will dwell among them, Ut suspicione hilariter faciant, &c. That they more cheerefully might bestow upon this worke, Calvin. Et ut eum timeant præsentem semper; And that they might alwayes feare God, and stand in awe of him, as continually present among them, Pellican.

In Epist. 1. ad Corinth. cap. 3. lect. 3.

QUEST. XVII. Whether Moses saw a paterne of the Tabernacle in the mount.

Vers. 9. According to all that I shew thee. 1. Ferus thinketh, that God shewed unto Moses the Tabernacle in the mount, Non externa visione, sed interna & prophetica; Not by any externall vision but internall and prophetical. But if Moses had not seene the very fashion and proportion of the Tabernacle, he could not so exactly in every respect have caused it afterward to be made, according to this description. 2. Therefore Lyranus opinion is rather to be received: Ostendit visione imaginaria, &c. He shewed the Tabernacle unto Moses by an imaginary vision. So two wayes was the Tabernacle shewed Moses: for first, every thing was described and expressed in word: Deinde ad majorem evidentiam cognitionem; And afterward for more evident and full knowledge, they were shewed unto him in vision. Tostat. qu. 10. And Oleaster here urgeth the signification of the word tabnith, which signifieth not the similitude or paterne, but the edifice it selfe. So that the Lord shewed unto Moses the very forme and fashion of the Tabernacle: he saw it not in dreame, but it was represented to his sight, as is evident, vers. 40. 3. And as first that heavenly paterne which Moses saw, was shewed to make the terrene Tabernacle by: so also the externall Tabernacle served to be a type and exemplar of heavenly things, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 8.5. And so Rupertus reconcileth Moses and the Apostle: for because the celestiall paterne was first shewed unto Moses, whereby he should make the externall Tabernacle, therefore Ipsa cælestia illi exemplaria dicuntur; The celestiall are said to be a paterne or exemplar unto him: but because the Apostle would have the Hebrewes, that by these externall things, Extenderent se ad cognitionem cælestium; They should tend to the knowledge of heavenly things: Terrestria hæc dicta sunt exemplaria cælestium; These terrestiall things are said to be paterns of the heavenly.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the excellencie and dignity of the Arke, and why it was made.

Vers. 10. They shall make an Arke. First, those things are described which were within the Tabernacle, then the Tabernacle it selfe is appointed to be made, v. 27. And first he beginneth with the Arke, which was in the most holy place of all: and then those things are described in this Chapter which were without the vaile in the holy place, as the table of shew-bread, and the candlestick, Lyran. 2. The word here used, is aron, which signifieth a chest or coffin; as Iosephs body was put up in such an aron, Genes. 50.26. and Iehoiada the Priest made an arke or chest to put the money in that was gathered, Menoch. De fabric. 3. The Arke was the principall part of the Tabernacle; which was made for these three ends. 1. That it should be as a rest and stay of the mercie seat, from whence the Lord gave his answers: 2. That therein might be placed the tables of stone, Deut. 10.1, 2. Ferus and Tostatus thinke, that therein also was placed the pot of Manna, and Aarons rod: but it is evident, 1 King. 8.9. that the tables of stone only were in the Arke: the other were rather placed before it. 3. The Arke was made, that the Israelites might have some certainty where to offer their sacrifices: for whersoever the Arke was, there they might lawfully sacrifice, Ferus. 4. The Arke, God would have to be greatly reverenced of all: and to that end, the Lord did three wayes honour it: first, by his presence, in giving his answers and oracles from the mercie seat, Pellic. Secondly, in suffering none to looke upon it: for fifty thousand of the Bethshamites were slaine because they gazed upon the Arke, 1 Sam. 6. nay it was not lawfull for the Levites to looke into it, nor the Priests the sonnes of Aaron, only the high Priest, that went in once in the yeere to make reconciliation, did see it, Tostat. qu. 11. Thirdly, the Lord by divers miracles did countenance the Arke, as before the waters of Jordan were divided, the walles of Jericho fell downe, Dagon, the Idoll of the Philistims, before it lost both his head and hands, August.

Genes. 50.26. 2 King. 12. 10.

Hebrew.

Lib. 10. de civit. Dei cap. 17.

QUEST. XIX. Of the bignesse of the Arke, and how the cubite is to be taken here.

Vers. 10. Two cubites and an halfe long. 1. This could not be the great Geometricall cubite, which contained six common cubites, as Origene testifieth, hom. 2. in Genes. for then the Arke had been too wide and large to be carried upon mens shoulders, Tostat. quæst. 12. 2. Neither is this measure of cubite to be taken according to Moses cubite, as Tostatus thinketh; for hee speaketh of a cubite knowne and usuall measure: but if the measure should be taken according to the length of a mans arme from the cubite or elbow to the top of the fingers, it should be uncertaine. 3. Some would have it understood not of the common cubite, but of that which was called cubitus sacer, the sacred cubite, which contained seven hands breadth, whereas the common had but six, Pelarg. But Mercatus giveth hands breadth unto the common cubit, and but six to the other, which he calleth legalem sextarium, the iust or lawfull cubit. It seemeth rather, that the vsuall cubit contained six hands breadth, that is, six fingers and the other, 24 fingers, or seuen hands breadth, as Herodotus sheweth, lib. 1. And so it is written, Ezech. 40.5. that the great cubit, called regius cubitus, the Kings cubit, was but a common cubit, and an hand breadth which was foure fingers, or three thumbs more than the ordinary. But seeing this cubit was vsed among the Persians, called regius cubitus Persarum, the Kings cubit, or Persian cubit, which was not in vse among the Hebrewes before the captiuity, it is not like that this measure was obserued in the making of the Tabernacle. 4. Wherefore I thinke rather, that the vsuall and ordinary cubit is here to be taken, which contained two hands breadth of the greater sort, and six of the lesse: or the great hand breadth called palmus, contained twelue fingers, the space betweene the thumb and little finger stretched out: the lesse called Ambo, contained but foure fingers. So then wherein it is said, that the Arke was five palmes or hand breadths long, and three broad, he meaneth the huge and great hand breadth, called palmus, and so they make two cubits and halfe in length, and a cubit and halfe in breadth. Beda followeth this account of Iosephus, saying, Necessarium ne hominem fefellerit diuersis & secularibus distinctum hoc permisit Moyses &c. It is not like that a Iew being learned in diuine and secular writings, could be ignorant herein. And in this sense do Rambam, and Rabbi Salomon take the cubit here.

In append. de mensur. sacris.

Rib. de Templo lib. 1. cap. 9.

Quest. XX. whether the rings and barres were in the length or breadth of the Arke.

The rings shall be on the two side, &c. 1. Tostatus therein following the opinion of Rabbi Salomon, thinketh that these rings, thorow the which the barres were put to carry the Arke, were not in length, but the breadth of the Arke: for if the barres had beene put long wayes, then there had been a cubit and halfe, the breadth of the Arke betweene barre and barre, which space had been too narrow for two to carry behinde, and two before; one should haue hindred another. But this is a coniecture: for they which carried the Arke may be supposed to haue borne it vpon their neckes and so they might haue roome enough without hindring one another. Cajetane is of the same opinion that the Arke was carried secundum latitudinem, as the breadth, not long wayes; and his reason is for dignity sake, that it should not be carried as a thing of burden, long wayes. But there is no more dignity in carrying one way than another: it seemeth they rather respected in the carriage the easinesse and comelinesse, which was performed in carrying it in length more than in breadth. Iosephus opinion is more probable, that quinque cubitorum erant longitudo, latera vero, the rings were in the long sides. So also Philo Iudæus. And this is more agreeable to the text, that saith the staues were in the sides of the Arke, which were in the length: the other were the ends, not the sides.

Lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 6.

Lib de Templ. fabric: in appendi.

Quest. XXI. Whether any thing were in the Arke, beside the tables of stone.

How shalt put in the Arke the Testimonie, which I shall giue thee. 1. Rupertus here by this Testimony vnderstandeth not only the Tables of stone, but the pot of Manna also, and Aarons rod. But that cannot be, as Tostatus reasoneth, because this Testimony here spoken of was giuen by God himselfe, so were neither of the other. And although the other were in some sense testimonies vnto Israel, as the pot of Manna testified vnto them how God miraculously fed them in the wilderness and Aarons Rod testified that the tribe of Leui vsurped not that calling, but were therein appointed of God: yet the Tables of the Law were specially so called, quia ea tantum, because they were the testimonie betweene God and his people, that they had receiued these precepts of God, and promised obedience vnto them. 2. But though Tostatus herein differ from Rupertus in the exposition of these words, yet he agreeth with him that all these three were in the Arke, quoad nos, and that the booke of Deuteronomie, which was also by Moses commanded the Leuites to put in the side of the Arke, Deut. 31. was likewise also which Moses commanded the Leuites to put in the side of the Arke, Deut. 31. and they thinke rightly confirmed by the Apostles testimonie, Heb. 9. 3. after the second vaile was the Tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all, which had the golden censer, and the Arke of the Testament couered about on euery side with gold, wherein was the golden pot which had Manna, and Aarons rod that had budded, and the tables of the Testament. But in this place, as Iunius, Ribera, Pilatus haue well obserued, the relative which is not referred to the Testament, but to the Tabernacle before spoken of: for the antecedent shall for the relative to be referred to the former antecedent, as may be obserued in diuers places. Therefore the truth is, that there was nothing in the Arke beside the tables of the Law as it is recorded, 1 King. 8. 9. and 2 Chron. 5. 10. So Cathar must answer, that in Moses time all these were in the Arke, but not in Salomons: so Caietane answereth, that in Moses time they might haue taken away the other, when the Arke was in their iourney: but Iosephus vpholdeth this reason, that there was neuer any thing put within the Arke, but the tables of stone. But Iosephus vpholdeth this reason, that there was neuer any thing put within the tables of stone. Rabbi Salomon thinketh, that the tables of stone may be said to be there, because although they were not in the Arke when it was made specially so to keep them, yet afterward they were put there. But the text is plaine that there was nothing beside, but two dimensions prescribed of this couer long before it was made. Some thinke, that they were laid vp in the Arke, because they were neere to the Arke. But it is euident by the text, that they were laid vp in the Arke, because they were not in the Arke it selfe: therefore in the same sense may all Israel be in the Arke, because they were neere vnto it. Abulensis would Cajetane, that the tables of the Law were only in the time of King. 9. Salomon put in the side of the Arke. But this Ribera saith is vntrue, because the other were in a locke that no euill might come to them: but this is but imagined: for we reade not of any such thing made to keep them in the Arke.

Iunius in his Parallel. Rib. lib. 1. de templ. c. 2.

Lib. de Clavib. script. clav. 2. Annot. 1 King. 8. 9. Iosephus lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 8. & lib. 8. cap.

Therefore

There for the best solution is this, that the tables of the Law were only in the Arke: the other two, the pot, & the rod of Aaron were only placed before the Arke. As Exod. 16. 34. the pot of Manna is said to be laid up before the Testimony to be kept. So Num. 17. 10. the Lord said to Moses, Bring Aarons rod before the Testimony to be kept: but we reade not that it is any where said of the two tables, that they were laid up before the Lord. And concerning the booke of Deuteronomie which Moses wrote, it was not put into the Arke, but without, neere unto the Arke in the Tabernacle, because it was found afterwards in Iosias time in the place where the treasure was, 2 Chron. 34. 14. Ribera, Lib. 2. de templ. cap. 2.

CHAP. XXIII. Of the particular and mysticall signification of the Arke.

Concerning the typicall and mysticall application of the Arke and the ornaments thereof, although it referre Christs incarnation, that as the Arke was made of wood, which purified in water, within and without with gold: so Christ tooke a body without sinne, in whom were hid all the treasures of heavenly wisdome. 2. Ruperius thus collecteth, that as the Arke is described to be two cubits and halfe in length, equall to the stature of a man, so God hath appeared in earth, and shewed himselfe to the capacity of men. 3. By the Arke Gregorie understandeth the Church: by the foure rings the foure Gospels, by the staves, the Preachers and Pastors of the Church, which carry the Arke, and propagate the truth. 4. Likewise Cyrill by the Arke understandeth Christs body, which was incorruptible, because it was made of dureable and lasting wood: and as it was covered within and without with gold, Sapientia & regalis omnia de se fuit, So all things were precious and princely in him. 5. Lyranus by the three things in the Arke contained, would have described the three offices of Christ, by the Tables of the Law, regiam dignitatem, the kingly dignity, because it belongeth unto the King to make Lawes; the Rod of Aaron broke neere the Priesthood; the pot of Manna, liberam & fidelem, the feeding of the faithfull: wherein consisteth the prophetical office of Christ. 6. Marbachius more at large doth thus gather: 1. The gold of the Arke sheweth the divine nature of Christ, the wood his humanity. 2. The crowne of the Arke signifieth, that he was crowned with the graces and gifts of the Spirit. 3. By the rings of the Gospell the name of Christ is published to all the world, as the Arke was carried by them. 4. The Tables of the Law in the Arke shew that Christ was the end of the Law. 5. The pot of Manna signifieth that Christ is the true food of our soules. 6. Aarons rod that budded was a type of Christs resurrection, whose body revived, and as it were budded out of the grave. But as in generall the whole Arke was a type and figure of celestiall things, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 9. 24. and the chiefe of those ceremonies was to set forth the spirituall love of the Church under Christ, yea not doubting it is not necessary neither convenient to make such a typicall application in particular of every thing which belonged unto the Tabernacle: though the priest pall ceremonies of the Law served to shadow forth the body, which was Christ, yet they had many ceremonies which had no such signification, but were only as ornaments of that externall service. Herein therefore this assertion of Tostatus may be approved, Dicendum est simpliciter, &c. All that it was figurative of, was figurative of the whole, (because the whole state of the old Testament had the rudiments of the new) but not in every particular.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the covering of the Arke, what fashion it was of, whether it were of Shittim wood as the Arke was, &c.

Ver. 19. And shalt make a mercie seate of pure gold, &c. The word propitiatorium signifieth Tostatus a covering, propitiatory, being derived of propitio, which signifieth to be quiet, to hide and cover, because it was a couert which covered the Arke, and so did appease the wrath of God, which was conceived against the people: which word the vvorde also doth signifie, and is sometimes taken for the Arke it selfe, from whence they should receive answers from God, and make atonement with him. This cover was not made of Shittim wood as the Arke was, and overlaid with gold, but it was made all of pure gold, because it was as it were the Lords seate, who is said to dwell between the Cherubims; Quia super, &c. because the cover was not held up aloft in the hands of the Cherubims, as Oleaster, Cajetan, Pererius, and some other think, that it might be as the Couert of the Arke as Gods footestoole: which was made of Shittim wood, as the Arke was. Catechism. 2. It is the generall opinion of the Hebrewes, Tostatus, Lyranus, and others, as Tostatus saith, that this cover was of the same bignesse and proportion of length and breadth, which the Arke it selfe had, that it might be fit to cover it. 2. As also the Gherubims were to be made with wide hollow wings, that they might cover out of the sides of the same cover, which could not be done so conveniently, if they had been made of the sides of the Arke it selfe. 3. As also because there is no mention made of any side boord to this cover, as there was about the Arke, and it was not like to be left open for moysture, dust, or any other thing to annoy it, that could not close above upon the Arke, Lyranus. And for such like reasons Tostatus thinketh that this cover also had a brim thereof, to close up and hide the joynt, where the covering and the Arke did meet. Quest. in Exod. 205. Whether this cover did agree in forme and proportion to the Arke, Tostatus affirmeth, and that it was commanded so to be made, that it might fit the Arke with. 5. There are but two dimensions prescribed of this cover, how long and how broad it should be, but not how thicke: therefore Tostatus thinketh that it was as thicke as the depth or height of the Arke described: but Oleaster thinketh, that it should be made of such a thicknesse, as it might be stiffe enough, that it might not bend, but be stiffe enough to put off and on, Scipsum. 6. This covering was made with joynts, as others think, because it was to be carried often, but they were to curious in this matter: neither needed it to have any such hollow hoopes as the Arke had, because it was not in such a place, where none used to come, Tostatus. 7. Lastly we reade not of any such thing imagined, but for ought we reade it was made plaine.

Therefore

Quest. XXIV. Of the ſignification of this word Cherub.

Vers. 18. Thou ſhalt make thee two Cherubims of gold. 1. The Rabbines, as R. David witneſſeth, thinke that this word is compounded of caph, which is a note of ſimilitude, and rubb, a boy, and the ſenſe of the word to be this, As a boy, Vatablus. But the Cherubims were not alwayes in the forme and ſhape of men: as appeareth, Ezech. 1. where the Cherubims had the face of an Eagle, a Lion, a Bullock, Calvin. 2. Oleaſter thinketh it may rather be derived of rabbah, which ſignifieth to multiply: and ſo it may be taken for the Angels, becauſe of their multitude. 3. Hieron will have this word to ſignifie the multitude of knowledge; but how it ſhould have ſuch ſignification, it appeareth not. Pagnine will have it derived of nacar, which ſignifieth to know, and rabb, much. But this ſeemeth to be fetched ſomewhat far off. 4. Cajetan ſaith, Significat magnus, non quantitate molis ſed virtutis; It ſignifieth great, not in quantity, but in vertue and power. 5. Hieron maketh this obſervation, that Cherubim with vau, alwayes ſignifieth the creature, but without vau, the worke it ſelfe of Cherubims. But this obſervation doth not alwayes hold; for in this place, cherub, in the ſingular number is expreſſed with vau, though Cherubim in the plurall be written without it: and yet they both in this place doe ſignifie the worke of the Cherubims. 6. Therefore the beſt and moſt likely ſenſe of this word, is to ſignifie a beautifull picture, and is metaphorically tranſlated from externall and materiall things, to ſpirituall, becauſe the Angels are beautified and adorned with many excellent gifts, Ribera. In which ſenſe the King of Tyrus, in reſpect of his glorious ſtate, is called the annointed Cherub, Ezech. 28. 14.

In 10. Ezech. & epiſt. 103. ad Paul.

Hieron. ad Marcell.

Quest. XXV. What forme and faſhion theſe Cherubims were of.

Concerning the forme and faſhion of theſe Cherubims, there are divers opinions: 1. Joſephus thinketh they had the ſimilitude of certain birds, which are not knowne unto us, being found only in the remote parts of the world: and the reaſon of his opinion may be this, leſt if they had beene after the ſimilitude of any knowne thing, it might have miniſtred occaſion of idolatry. But Joſephus is convinced by that which is written, Gen. 3. that the Cherubims were ſet to keepe the way to Paradiſe: they were not eagles or other winged beaſts, but Angels which kept that way: neither was there here any feare of idolatry, becauſe theſe Cherubims were not in the open view and ſight of the people, but in the moſt holy place, whither none had acceſſe, but only the high Prieſt, and that once in the yeere.

Lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 6.

2. R. Abraham Ab. Ezra thinketh, that the Cherubims doe ſignifie any ſhape, either of bird, beaſt, or man: as Ezech. 1. the beaſts which appeared, having the face of an Eagle, a Lion, a Bullock, a Man, are alſo called Cherubims. Contra. The Prophet calleth them Cherubims, not in reſpect of that forme and ſhape, wherein they appeared, but becauſe he knew them to be Angels and bleſſed ſpirits that ſo appeared; therefore he giveth the ſame name to them all, and there their forme and ſhape is expreſſed: but when they are called Cherubims, without any determination of their forme, they are alwayes held to have appeared in humane ſhape, Toſtat. qu. 18.

3. Oleaſter leaveth not this matter indifferent, as Ab. Ezra, but thinketh that theſe Cherubims had rather formam animalium, the forme of beaſts, ſuch as Ezechiel deſcribeth, than of men; becauſe it is no where expreſſed, that the Cherubims had the ſhape of men, as there they are deſcribed to have the faces of beaſts: and beſide, if they had beene made like men with hands, that would have hindered the ſtretching out of their wings. Contra. 1. As though the Cherubims in Ezechiel are not as well ſaid to have had the face of a man, as of other creatures there expreſſed. 2. To take away the other doubt and difficulty, we need not imagine with Montanus, who ſetteth forth the Cherubs with wings only, without hands: for that were an imperfect forme, to give them the ſhape of a man without hands: and the Cherubs deſcribed, Ezech. 1. 8. had hands which came under their wings: but the Cherubs might very well be deſcribed with ſtretching out wings, notwithſtanding their hands, which they either touched the mercy ſeat with, as ſome thinke, or rather held them upright, as praying God, as R. Salomon.

4. Montanus ſaith, Erant maris & fœminæ ſpecie variis; That theſe Cherubs were divers, in the ſhape of male and female. But that is not like, ſeeing they were made to repreſent the Angels and bleſſed Spirits, where is no diverſity of ſex, of male or female.

De arca fabrica.

5. The opinion then of R. Salomon is the beſt, that the Cherubs were pictured and portraited in humane ſhape, in the forme of young men; becauſe ſo the Angels uſed to appeare in times paſt, as to Abraham and Lot, and they were made with wings, becauſe when the Angels were ſent from heaven, they uſed to flie, as birds uſe to doe, that light upon the ground, Toſtat. And what ſhape the Cherubims were of here, may be gathered by the deſcription of thoſe which Salomon made, which ſtood upright on their feet, 2 Chron. 3. 13. which cannot be underſtood of any other than the humane ſhape, Pelarg. Ribera. They were pictured with wings, and not naked, as Montanus deſcribeth them, but clothed and apparelled, becauſe it is forbidden, chap. 20. 26. that any ones nakednes ſhould be diſcovered at Gods Altar, &c.

Quest. XXVI. Why they are called Cherubim, not Seraphim.

But it will here further be queſtioned, why theſe are called Cherubim, rather then Seraphim, which is another name given unto Angels, Iſay 6. 2.

1. Some were of opinion, that they might indifferently be called either Cherubim, or Seraphim: but Epiſt. 143. ad Damaſum. Pſal. 80. 1. and 99. 1. Auguſtine confuteth them, writing thus: Illorum, pius licèt, attamen coarguendus eſt error, qui in orationibus ſuis dicunt, &c. Their errour, though devout, yet is to be reproved, that dare ſay in their prayers, Thou that ſitteſt upon the Cherubim, and Seraphim, &c. for this phraſe is no where uſed in Scripture, but only, Thou which ſitteſt betweene the Cherubim.

2. Others anſwer, that the Seraphims were ad gloriam, for Gods glorie, which ſhall be revealed in the next world, the Cherubims, ad ministerium, for the ministery and service of God: and therefore the Cherubims are here pictured, rather than the Seraphims. Contra. 1. But the most holy place, where these Cherubims were set, was made to represent Gods glory: therefore the Cherubim served here to set forth Gods glory. 2. The Seraphims also were ministring Spirits, as well as the Cherubims, as they are set forth Isay 6.

3. Neither is it a sufficient answer to say, that the Seraphims appeared with six wings a peece, Isay 6. and these had but two, they were therefore Cherubims, not Seraphims: for the Cherubs, that here were described but with two wings, Ezech. 1. 6. were said to have foure. So that if that were a good reason, these should neither be called Cherubims: Therefore they are not so called or distinguished, in respect of their more or fewer wings: for the Angels being Spirits, have neither wings, nor any other visible shape of themselves, but they are described and called diversly, according to those severall offices and imployments, wherein it pleaseth God to use them.

Lib. 2. de templ. cap. 6. 4. Ribera maketh this to be the reason, why God is said to sit upon the Cherubims, which word signifieth multitude of knowledge, to shew that God farre exceedeth the wisdome and knowledge even of those excellent Spirits: and therefore he is said to sit above the Cherubims. But beside that this signification of the word Cherub hath no ground, as is before shewed, God in this sense might as well be said to sit betweene the Seraphim, which signifieth burning as fire, for the Lord in brightnesse and in fiery justice exceedeth the Angels.

5. This reason then may rather be yeelded, Visiones ad rerum suarum argumenta accommodanda sunt; Visions must be applied unto the argument and scope of the things themselves, Iun. in Isai. 6. 2. Now because Seraphim is a name given to the Angels, in respect of their fiery and purging zeale, they are so called, when they are sent to purge and cleanse the world, in being ministers of Gods judgements: but Cherubim being a title of love and favour, being taken for a beautifull and lovely picture, this name was more fit to be used in this place, these Cherubs being to attend upon Gods mercy seat, from whence he shewed and extended his favour.

Quest. XXVII. On which side of the Arke the Cherubs were placed.

Vers. 18. Thou shalt make them at the two ends of the Mercie seat, &c. 1. Cajetane is of opinion, that these two Cherubs were set one against the other in the long sides of the Arke, and not at the ends: Extrema propitiatorii intellige extrema longitudinis; The ends of the Mercie seat understand to be the ends of the length. But this agreeth not with the description; for they are said to cover the Mercie seat with their wings: but if one Cherub were of one side, and the other against it in the length of two cubits and an halfe, if they stretched their wings out right, the two ends should be left uncovered; and so should they be, if they put their wings crosse one toward another.

2. Some thinke that both the Cherubs were of one side in the length, and the right wing of the one to touch the left of another. But this cannot stand neither, for their wings could not by this meanes cover the Arke; and beside, their faces must be one toward another, and toward the Mercie seat also: which could not be, if they stood both upon one side; for then turning their faces one toward another, they should turne them away from the Mercie seat.

3. Some admitting, that the Cherubs were placed at the two ends in the breadth; yet thinke that they stretched their wings on high, and not directly one toward another. And Cajetane is of the same opinion, alas non expansas ad latera, &c. that their wings were not stretched out on the sides, to the right hand or left, but upward. Now the text putteth both together, that they shall both stretch their wings on high and cover the Mercie seat: But if they should only stretch them upward upright, and their wings not one meet another, then the long sides of the Arke should be left uncovered.

4. Wherefore, it is most agreeable to the text, that these Cherubs were made, not in the length of the Mercie seat, but in the breadth; because they are prescribed to be made in the two ends; and then they stretched their wings in such sort one toward another over the Mercie seat, as that they covered it, Tostat. Montan. Lippoman.

Quest. XXVIII. Whether the Cherubims stood upon the ground, or upon the Mercie seat.

Vers. 19. Of the Mercie seat shall yee make the Cherubims, &c. 1. Some thinke that these Cherubims did stand upon the ground, and so held up the Mercie seat betweene them, in their hands Sic Thomas, Cajetan. For the Propitiatorie being the seat of God, it would seeme inconvenient, that the Cherubs should stand upon it. But this reason is nothing: for it was not the very seat and throne of God, but a figure and representation only; and yet we reade, Isay 6. 2. that the Seraphims indeed did stand upon the throne of God.

2. Oleaster seemeth to thinke that these Cherubs, sustentarent super capita propitiatorium, did hold the Mercie seat upon their head, as Ezech. 10. 1. The throne of God appeared above upon the head of the Cherubims. But that place serveth not to expresse the description of the Cherubims, made here by Moses, no more than the other parts of that vision, that every one of those Cherubs had foure faces, and foure wings. And if the Cherubs had held it upon their heads, it could not have beene put upon the Arke, as it is said, vers. 21.

3. Montanus in his description maketh the Cherubims naked standing upright, with their feet upon the Mercie seat. But seeing they were made with the hammer out of the Mercie seat, of the very same peece of gold, it is not like, that the whole proportion of a man at large, from the feet to the head, was beaten out with the hammer: and therefore Tostatus conjectureth well, Cherubim non ponebantur in compedibus; the Cherubims were not placed there with their feet.

4. Wherefore

Wherefore R. Salomon thinketh right, that ſtabant ſuper operculum, the Cherubs ſtood upon the cover: for Exod. 37. 7. they are ſaid to be made upon the two ends of the Mercie ſeat; and if they had ſtood upon the ground, the covering could not have bene put cloſe to the Arke to cover it: yet it is not to be imagined, that the Cherubs ſtood aloft with their feet and all; for ſuch a compleat and full picture, could hardly be made with the hammer out of the ſame peece: but it is like, that the upper part onely of the Cherubs was ſo beaten and drawne out; ſuch as were afterward wrought in the curtaines, chap. 26. 1. And thus the picture of the Cherubs ſtandeth drawne in ſome Geneva Bibles.

Quest. XXIX. The difference betweene the Cherubims which Moſes made, and thoſe which Salomon ſet up.

But here it ſhall not be amiſſe to obſerve the differences betweene theſe Cherubims which Moſes made, and thoſe which Salomon afterward ſet up in the inner houſe of the Temple: 1. They differed in the matter; theſe were all of gold, but thoſe were made of Olive-tree overlaid with gold, 1 King. 6. 21. 2. Thoſe were ten cubits high, and their wings each of them five cubits, from the end of one wing to another were ten cubits, ibid. verſ. 24. Cajetane; but theſe Cherubs wings could not be two cubits and an halfe long: for their wings meeting together did but cover the Mercie ſeat, which was but two cubits and an halfe long. 3. Their wings were ſpread all one way, and they ſtood together, with one wing they touched one another, and with the other they touched the wals of each ſide, 2 Chron. 3. 12. but theſe Cherubs ſtood at the two ends of the Mercie ſeat. 4. Salomons Cherubims looked both one way toward the Eaſt ward, but theſe looked one toward another, at the two ends of the Arke, North and South, Rabbins. 5. Thoſe ſtood upon their feet on the ground, ibid. but theſe were ſet upon the Mercie ſeat. 6. Thoſe ſerved to cover the Mercie ſeat which covered the Arke: but theſe were made over and beſide for an ornament to the houſe: for there were together both the Cherubs upon the Arke, which Moſes cauſed to be made, and thoſe other which Salomon ſet up, as Abulenſis thinketh. Quæſt. 18. in Exod. 25.

Quest. XXX. Of the places where the Lord uſed to ſpeake with Moſes.

Vers. 22. There I will appoint with thee, &c. 1. There were two uſes of the Mercie ſeat: one was externall, to ſerve for a covering of the Arke; the other was ſpirituall, it was as Gods oracle from whence the Lord revealed his will: as ſometime out of the fiery buſh, and afterward out of the cloud, ſo now he would ſpeake unto him from betweene the Cherubims, Lippoman. 2. God ſpeaketh after the manner of men, more principis ſtatuentis locum audientiæ, as a Prince that appointeth a place of audience: as if he ſaith thus much in effect, Thou ſhalt not need to come alwayes unto mount Sinai, to conſult with me, I will be ready to heare thee from this Mercie ſeat, Cajetane. 3. There were three places where the Lord gave audience to Moſes, and where he uſed to ſpeake unto him: one was at the doore of the Tabernacle, where the Altar of burnt offerings was, chap. 29. 42. the other was out of the cloudy pillar, Numb. 12. 5. but this for the moſt part did concurre with the other: for the pillar of the cloud did uſually ſtand in the doore of the Tabernacle, when the Lord from thence ſpake unto Moſes: but the chiefe and principall place from the which the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, was the Mercie ſeat, Numb. 7. 89. When Moſes went into the Tabernacle of the congregation to ſpeake with God, he heard the voice of one ſpeaking unto him from the Mercie ſeat, &c.

Quest. XXXI. Whether God himſelfe, or an Angell ſpake from the Mercie ſeat.

Vers. 22. From above the Mercie ſeat, &c. will I tell thee. Toſtatus thinketh, that it was not God himſelfe that framed this voice from the Mercie ſeat, but ſome Angell, and that by certaine inſtruments, as by the condenſation and thickning of the aire betweene the Cherubims over the Mercie ſeat: which was not ſeene by reaſon the high Prieſt when he entred into the moſt holy place filled it with the ſmoke of the incenſe, ſo that the Mercie ſeat was covered therewith, Levit. 16. 13. And he addeth further, That Deus non poterat creare illas voces, &c. God could not create thoſe voices, becauſe a voice is made by prolation ſucceſſively: Sed Deus non poteſt agere per ſucceſſionem; But God cannot doe any thing ſucceſſively, as we cannot doe any thing in an inſtant, &c. Thus Toſtat. qu. 22.

Contra. 1. It is not doubted of, but that Angels by their Angelicall power can frame voices and ſounds with meanes and inſtruments as they apply to that end: but if an Angell can bring forth a voice without meanes, much more God can doe it, that made the Angels, and that without meanes. 2. The cloud of the incenſe was not to that end to hide the congealed and thickened aire upon the Mercie ſeat, but rather to obſcure the ſight of the Mercie ſeat it ſelfe, that the high Prieſt ſhould not gaze too much upon it. 3. To ſay that God cannot create a voice, is to deny his power, to whom nothing is impoſſible. 4. And though God can doe whatſoever it pleaſeth him in a moment, yet he doth alſo ſometime worke ſucceſſively, to apply himſelfe to our capacity: as he thought good to be ſix dayes in making the world, which he could have diſpatched in a moment. So the Lord could have healed Naaman of his leproſie with once waſhing, but his fleſh was not healed till he had ſeven times waſhed. Our bleſſed Saviour could with once laying on of his hands have healed the blind man, but he thought good to reſtore his ſight by degrees: at the firſt he ſaw men walking like trees, and at the ſecond laying on of his hands he ſaw every man a farre off cleerely. 5. But that it was the Lord himſelfe, not an Angell, that uſed to ſpeake from the Mercie ſeat, it is evident, both becauſe they uſed to pray unto him that ſate betweene the Cherubims: and they give unto him the name of Iehovah God of Iſrael: as Hezekiah prayeth, O Iehovah the God of Iſrael, which dwelleſt betweene the Cherubims, thou art very God alone over all the kingdomes of the earth; thou haſt made the heaven and the earth. These titles and attributes, to be the

2 King. 5. 14.

Mark. 8. 25.

Iſay 37. 16.

Lord

Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, God alone, Creator of heaven and earth, doe agree only unto God, and cannot be given unto any Angell.

Quest. XXXII. Of the spirituall signification of the propitiatorie.

NOw to shew the signification of this Propitiatory and Mercie seat: 1. Augustine thus applieth it: The two Cherubs doe shadow the Propitiatory, that is, honorum volando, they doe honour it in veiling it, because great mysteries are there hid: Invicem se attendunt, quia consonant, &c. They doe looke one on another, because they agree: for the two Testaments are there figured: their faces are toward the Propitiatory, Quia misericordiam Dei, in qua una spes est, valde commendant; Because they commend the mercie of God, wherein their hope only is.

Quest. 105. in Exodum.

2. Gregorie to the same purpose: What is signified by the Propitiatory but the Redeemer of the world, as the Apostle saith, Whom God hath set forth to be a reconciliation, or propitiation through faith in his blood? What doe the two Cherubims betoken, one looking upon another, Nisi quod utrag, testamenta in mediatorem Dei & hominum conveniant? But that both the Testaments doe agree concerning one Mediatour of God and men: whom the one pointeth out, the other exhibiteth.

Super Ezech. homil. 6.
Rom. 3. 25.

3. Cyril also by the Propitiatory understandeth Christ, who is our propitiator and reconciler: as the Apostle saith, If any man sinne, we have an advocate with the Father Iesus Christ the righteous. And he addeth further, in that the Cherubs looke toward the Propitiatory, he would have it to signifie these two things: Nutui Dominico intenti sunt, &c. The Angels are intent upon Gods will ready to doe it: Et nunquam Dei satiantur aspectu; And they are never satisfied with beholding of God.

De incarnat. unigen. cap. 13.
1 Iohn 1. 2.

4. Rupertus consenting with the rest, that the Propitiatory shadoweth forth Christ; the pure gold, whereof it was made, his divine substance; the two Cherubs, the two Testaments, addeth this of his owne: The shadowing of the Arke with their wings, sheweth, quia humilitatem crucifixi Domini defendant, that the two Testaments doe defend the humility of our Lord, being crucified, from the blasphemies of the Jewes, who thought him as smitten of God for his owne sinnes, whereas he died for ours.

5. But Calvin leaving other curious observations, hath put all these together: 1. God in the Cherubs and Angels, by whom he exerciseth the government of the world, symbolum præsentiæ suæ profert, setteth forth a symbole, or signe of his presence. 2 Extensio alarum promptum obsequii, &c. The stretching out of their wings sheweth their ready service. 3. They looke toward the Mercy seat, intenti ad nutum Dei, as waiting upon God to know his pleasure. 4. And in that they are joyned to the Propitiatorie, it betokeneth, Christi descensu cœlos apertos; That by Christs descending the heavens were opened, and the Angels descended and ascended for the elects sake. 5. Mutuum intuitum consensum designat; Their mutuall beholding one another sheweth their joynt consent in executing Gods commandement. That former conceit of applying the two Cherubims to the two Testaments, Calvin refuseth as too curious. 6. Gelasius by the spreading of their wings understandeth the reverence of the Angels to the Majesty of God, shadowing their faces with their wings, as not being able to behold it. 7. Simlerus addeth further, that in looking toward the Propitiatory, which signified Christ, is insinuated, that they looke toward Christ, and are ready to serve and minister unto him: and by their looking they shew their admiration of the great mystery of our redemption; which, as S. Peter saith, they desire to behold. 8. Osiander noteth further, that as God promised his presence in the Mercy seat, and from thence declared his will; so God is present to every one that seeketh him in Christ, and in him the secrets of God are revealed, and manifested unto us.

Quest. XXXIII. Of the matter whereof the table was made.

Vers. 23. Thou shalt also make a table of Shittim wood. 1. Now such things are described as were to be placed in the outward Sanctuary next unto the most holy place: and first the table, Leyrus. 2. And foure things are declared touching this table, the matter whereof it should be made, of Shittim wood, the forme, the parts, the crowne, border, rings, and the vessels thereunto belonging, Pelargus. 3. The matter whereof it was made was Shittim wood, which was a most durable and lasting kinde of wood: for the Lord intended, that these ornaments and instruments of the Tabernacle should not be renewed, but continue during all the time of the old Testament, untill the comming of the Messiah: unlesse it should chance some of them to be lost, or taken away: as it is like, that in the captivity, both the Arke and golden Altar were lost: though that report have small probability, that Ieremie should hide them in a certine cave, which could not be found againe afterward. After the captivitie the Altar of incense was renewed, because there was necessary use thereof in offering of incense, as wee reade of Zacharie, that he burned incense in his course, Luk. 1. 9. but the Arke was not made againe, because there was not the use thereof, the Tables of stone being missing, which the Arke was specially made to containe and keepe, Tostat. 4. This table also was overlayed with gold: so that, corpus mensæ cedrinum fuit, sed aurea, &c. the body of the table was of Cedar wood, the barke or skin of gold. And it is like that it was covered with gold, both within and without, though it be not so expressed, as the Arke was before. Cajetane.

2 Maccab. cap. 2. 5.

Quest. XXXIV. Of the forme and fashion of the table.

Vers. 23. Of two cubits long, &c. 1. It is of the same height with the Arke, a cubit and halfe high, but neither of the same length nor breadth, it wanteth halfe a cubit of each: it was but two cubits high and one cubit broad: and the reason is, because the Arke was made hollow, like a chest, for somewhat to be put within it; but this table was of no use in the hollow and nether part of it, but only in the plaine part above, where the rowes of bread were set, Tostatus. 2. Iosephus agreeth with this description, saving that he saith it was three hand breadths high, which maketh a cubit and halfe, this

Quæst. 27. in Exod. 25.

Liber. de templi lib. 2. cap. 10.

some

some things had barres, which they were not carried by, as the boords of the Sanctuary had barres, which served not for carriage, but to fasten them together, Tostatus q. 27.

QUEST. XXXVII. Of the dishes and cups belonging to the table, & vses and names of them.

Vers. 29. Thou shalt also make dishes for it. 1. Some, whereas he meant not to set downe all kinde of vessels belonging to the table, doe leave it altogether uncertaine, for what speciall purpose served. Ab. Ezra saith, De his vasibus solum potest dicere magister ductus, &c. Of these vessels you may whet our Rabbins or maisters say; and addeth no further, as though there were small certainty in their opinions. So also Gorionides, Ingressus sum ut scirem vasa mensæ, usum eorum, &c. I ingendred to know the vessels, I know not, neither the fashions of these vessels, nor their offices. But it is not good to leave the matter thus altogether in suspence. 2. And yet Tostatus opinion is not probable, that these vessels here named, were not all for the use and service of the table: but that the vessels which served for the vse of the golden, and brasen Altar, were set upon this table; as the firmal, which is translated dishes, wherein he thinketh were used to powre wine into; and the fourth sort, which the Latine interpreter calleth cups, were vessels to powre in wine withall, like unto our flagons. But as Ribera well obserueth, If we consider the smalnesse of the table, which was only a cubit broad, and the greatnesse of the loaves, Panis huius vsibat hoc refugium non nosti; We shall finde there was small roome for those vessels, to be set upon that table. And beside, in Salomons Temple, there were other tables beside, ten in all, which were used to set the vessels upon. And whereas the Latine Translator readeth in the last place, Cups, in the Hebrew mesakkoth, rounds or cup like vessels, wherein drinke offerings should be offered, as also reade the Chalde and Septuagint, the word nasac signifieth not only to powre out, but to cover; and so reade here, Vasa tecta, quibus tegitur. They were such vessels as the table was covered with: for what use of powring out could there be, where was nothing set but bread?

Lib. 3. de templ. cap. 20.

1 Chron. 4. 8.

3. Touching the number of these vessels; Maimonides thinketh there were but two that were under the two rowes of bread, and two above. But it is most like, that every one of the loaves had his dish below, and a cover for the same above: for to what end else served the coverings, but to keepe the bread sweet and cleane? Iosephus thinketh further, that every one had his incense cup above, because the Priests offered 12. incense cups, Numb. 7. 84. and it may be gathered, Levit. 24. 7. that every bread or loafe had incense put to it, for a remembrance, to be an offering made by fire unto the Lord, in stead or place of the bread when it was remued, and removed every Sabbath, Iun. Polarg. But herein Iosephus is rather to be credited, who was an eye witnesse of those ceremonies, who saith, there were two incense cups upon the two rowes, which seemeth to be most agreeable to that text, Levit. 24. 7.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Of the seuerall kinds of vessels in particular, which served for the table.

Vers. 29. Thou shalt make dishes for it. 1. The word is kaarath, or kegbaiith, which signifieth a hollow dish or platter. Iunius thinketh, they served formandis panibus, to fashion the bread withall, that they should be all of one fashion. But it is not like, that these golden platters or dishes were used in the baking of the loaves; for these dishes were ade removed out of the Tabernacle: It is probable, that the Priests themselues did bake the loaves of such flowre as was offered them, for so they are commanded, Levit. 24. 5. Thou shalt take fine flowre and bake 12. cakes thereof. But it is not like, as Hieronymus teth out of the traditions of the Hebrewes, that the Priests themselues did serere, demetere, molere, both sow and reape, grinde and bake these loaves. Neither, as Iosephus writeth, Ex publica pecunia eon fermentum emere; Vnleavened bread they did buy out of the common: but rather flowre was offered to the Priests (not ready baken bread) and then the Priests did bake it themselues, Leuit. 24. 7. But in the kneading and baking, they used not these golden dishes: it is like they had other iron moulds and dishes which they baked the bread in, as Bonfrerius noteth out of the traditions of the Hebrewes; the golden vessels only served to place the loaves in, being baked, and so upon the table. The Latine Translator calleth them concauas, which properly signifieth foueres, or little dishes; but they were so small as to have contained loaves of that bignesse, every one having eight pound, as thinketh Ribera: the word also signifieth sawcers to put vinegar in, whereupon the Interlineare gloss, by these vinegar sawcers, would be signified, mordaces prædicatores, qui vitia carpendo, biting speech to nip sinne. But this is very improperly uttered; for as Tostatus noteth, in the Tabernacle, nullus erat vsus aceti, there was no use for vineger.

11. cap. 10. Malach. 3. Antiquit. c. 10.

2. The second kinde of vessell is, cophoth, which signifieth an hollow vessell, like vnto the palme of the hand, which served for the incense, Iunius, Vatablus, Pelargus. The vulgar Latine calleth them cups to examine the wine in, which was offered, Lyranus, Tostatus. So also Rupertus, who thinketh they were glasses; but that cannot be, seeing all these vessels were of gold, and here was no use for vessels that should receive wine in: all these served for the shew-bread table.

3. The third kinde are kesoth, which were pocula libationis, incense cups, as the Latine Interpreter, Ierom, and Tostatus follow, for they are spoken of before. R. Salomon thinketh, they were golden platters or receits, which were put hot vnder the bread, to conuey the heat unto the loaves, that they should not mould. So also Kimchius and Muscul. But they were rather covers for the other plates and dishes, to cover the bread, and keepe it cleane, and so they might better be preserued from putrifying or mouldring. Sanctius thinketh kesoth a most ancient Hebrew writer? and this is the more probable, because Nonius saith, they are called scutella argentea, plates or vessels with Iunius two handles.

4. The fourth sort of vessels are called Mezakkoth, which word commeth of nasak, to cleanse, and other called thuribula, scopulæ, Vatablus, Pelargus, cleansing things, Muscul. scopæ, brushes, emunctoria, instruments to keepe the table cleane withall. But seeing these instruments were all made of gold, they had beene very unfit to sweepe or cleanse the table. 5. Neither were they cyathi, pouring cups pots, as Tostat. Lyran. following the Latine text, which readeth, to offer drinke offrings: whereas the word nasac, signifieth rather here to cover, than to powre forth, as is before shewed. 3. Oleaster thinketh they were certaine mantils, that covered the bread and other vessels: but this could not be, because they were all of gold; and the face, or shew-bread was not covered or hid in the Tabernacle. 4. Therefore it is most like, that these were the covers to the incense cups, as they are joyned with them, Gen. 44. 1. & other before called kesoth, served to cover the bread-places, or dishes. So Vatabl. Lippom.

QUEST. XXXIX. Why it was called the shew-bread or face-bread.

And thou shalt set upon the table shew-bread, or face-bread. 1. R. Salom. imagineth they were called face-bread, because on two sides they were turned up like unto shewels. 2. Other of the Hebrewes thinke they were so named, because they were made foure square like unto a bricke, with foure plaine sides, which they call faces, Ex Oleast. 3. Others, because they were baked in certaine moulds, and so were of the same fashion above and below, otherwise than our common bread, which is flat on the nether part next the harth, and round above, Tostat. Lyran. 4. Cajetane conjectureth, that they were notati duodecim filiorum Israel, printed with markes of the twelve sonnes of Israel, and therefore so called. 5. But indeed they have that name given them, because they were alwayes in the face and sight of God: as the words following expound, Before my face continually. And in the same sense the Septuagint translate here ἄρτους ἐνωπίους, face-bread, or presence-bread: and sometime they call them ἄρτους προθέσεως, shew-bread, which terme the Apostle retaineth, Heb. 9. and the Latine translatour followeth, calling panes propositionis, shew-bread, in the same sense: because they were alwayes set forth and shewed as in the presence of God: but the sense is more full and evident to call them panem facierum, as Vatab. Pagnine, or in the singular, panem facei, face-bread, Iun. because the word panim in the Hebrew is with the singular, Ribera. And whether from the Hebrew word panim in this sense, the Latine word panis, bread, may not be derived, I leave it to the Readers consideration.

QUEST. XL. Of the order and quantity of these loaves.

Concerning the order and manner of setting these loaves: 1. Tostatus thinketh that they were set in duobus cumulis, in two heapes: and his reason is, because otherwise so many loaves, being of that quantity containing every one two tenth deales of an Epha, could not be placed in a table of so small breadth. 2. But it is more like, that these twelve loaves were placed in duobus ordinibus, in two rowes or ranks, one upon another: as may be gathered, Levit. 24. 6. Thou shalt set them in two rowes, or orders: six in each row: and the same reason alleaged for the heaps may be urged against Tostatus: for unlesse these loaves so many in number, and so great in quantity had beene placed in order, and not tumbled in heapes, they could not have beene all set in so small a roome. 3. And concerning the quantity of these loaves, they did each of them consist of two tenth deales of an Epha, that is, two Homers, Levit. 24. 5. Every Homer held about three pints, as is shewed before, qu. 24. in chap. 16. Iosephus saith that every loafe contained two of the measures called Assaran: and the Assaran held seven of the measures called Caph, which was about a pound weight: so that every one of those loaves did weigh about seven or eight pound, Ribera.

Lib. 3. Antiqu.

Lib. 2. de templ. cap. 10.

QUEST. XLI. Of the mysticall signification of the table of shew-bread.

NOw as touching the mysticall sense and application of the table of shew-bread, with the instruments thereof: 1. Beda by the table made of Shittim wood understandeth the Scriptures, consisting of the bookes and sayings of the Prophets and Patriarkes: By the foure rings the foure Evangelists, by whom the Gospell was carried and preached to all the world: By the foure feet, the foure sences of Scripture, historicall, allegoricall, tropologicall, anagogicall. Rabanus also followeth the same steps. 2. By the dishes, the goblets, the incense cups, the dishes, Gregorie understandeth the diversity of gifts in the Church, which all helpe to furnish the Lords spirituall table. 3. Iosephus by the table and twelve loaves, understandeth the yeere with the twelve moneths to be deciphered. 4. Gennadius thereby understandeth the world, and by the loaves the fruit thereof. 5. Some by the Altar of incense understand the contemplative life, which is spent altogether in the contemplation and praise of God: by the table of shew-bread, the active life of those which are given unto good workes: by the golden candlestick, such as both in words and workes, in contemplation and action doe shine as lights, Ribera.

But these mysticall diductions are somewhat curious. Yet thus farre these typicall ceremonies may safely be extended: the Arke signifieth the presence of God in Christ: the table of shew-bread the family of Christ, which is nourished and fed by him: by the golden candlestick, the manner of administration in the Church is represented, which the Lord doth illuminate by his Spirit, Iun. in Analys. Rupertus by the bread understandeth the true bread of life, which is Christ Jesus: so also Marbachius. Ferus by the frankincense upon the bread collecteth, that we must joyne prayer and thanksgiving with the preaching of the word: by the crowne is signified the hope of everlasting life, where wee shall sit downe at Christs everlasting table in heaven; Simler. By the twelve loaves, the whole Israel of God, which is fed by his word, Lorichius. And they were taught hereby, quod Deus panem largitur, that God giveth bread and food, Theod. qu. 28. and that their very meat is consecrate unto God, and therefore should feed soberly and reverently, as in his presence, Calvin. And by the vessels of gold, all Christians should learne, ut detur opera, ut fiat aurea, non fictilia; to doe their endevour, that they may be vessels of gold, vessels of grace and holinesse, not earthen vessels, and vessels of wrath, Osiander.

QUEST. XLII. Of the forme and fashion of the candlestick.

And thou shalt make a candlestick of pure gold, of worke beaten out with the hammer, &c. Iosephus is deceived in his description, who saith, that this candlestick was ex auro fusili, sed non non solide, of molten gold, and not solid: whereas it was of one solid worke beaten out with the hammer. In another place also he saith it was made of iron, covered with plates of gold. If it be answered for Iosephus, that he speaketh of some other candlesticke, which was afterward made of iron: it is not like, that any time the Israelites were so destitute of gold, but that they had sufficient to make one candlesticke, Tostat. quæst. 29. & 31. 2. By this description of the candlesticke it is evident, that the picture which is to be seene in Rome of the golden candlesticke, which Titus brought from Jerusalem, and caried in triumph, is not right, because it is not set forth with boules, knops and flowers, as this is, Ribera. 3. The fashion of the candlesticke was on this manner; the shaft went upright, and stood in the middest upon his feet: and from this shaft went out 6. branches, 3. on the one side, and 3. on the other, one above the other: which went out by couples, one on the one side, and over against it one on the other side: neither were they all of one length: for the nethermost branches were longest, and the uppermost shorter, so that they all were of one height above, Tostat. 4. The body or shaft had foure boules, like unto open almonds, and as many round knops, and as many flowers. And under the first knop, came out the first two branches, and so under the second, and third: and in the top, after the branches were gone forth, were the fourth boule, knop, and flower, Beda. So likewise in every one of the branches, there were three boules, as many knops and flowers. R. Salom. and Menasses, with whom agreeth the description in the Geneva Bibles, make in every branch three boules, but beside, but one knop and one flower, because vers. 33. it is said, three boules in the plurall, and but one knop and one flower in the singular number. But Lyranus, with whom consent Cajetan. Tostat. qu. 31. and Ribera, thinke better, that every boule had his knop and flower, to be answerable to the worke of the shaft; which had foure boules, and as many knops and flowers, vers. 34. So also Beda. 5. Beside, Menasses is of opinion, that the uppermost lilies or flowers served for the sockets or lampes, where the oile was put to feed the light: so also Rolarg. Genevens. But the flowers only were made for ornament, Calvin. And beside the boules, knops and flowers, there were seven lampes, as vers. 37. after the description of the shaft and branches, with their knops and flowers, it is said, Thou shalt make thee seven lampes thereof. So Tostatus quæst. 29. and Ribera: and 1 King. 7. 29. mention is made of lampes, beside the flowers; which lampes were also made out with the hammer, as the rest were: for the whole candlesticke, with every part thereof, was appointed so to be made. 6. But whereas it is added, To give light toward that which is before it, vers. 37. Cajetanes and Oleasters observation is somewhat curious, that because these lights shined directly to that part which was before it, that is, toward the table of shew-bread, right over against it, that every socket had rostrum in una parte, a certaine nosle hanging out, whereby it cast light forward: but indeed the meaning is, that is was to cast light toward that which was before it, that is, every way; as Iunius translateth.

Lib. 3. Antiqu. cap. 3.

Riber. lib. 2. de Templ. 12.

Quest. XLIV. Of the place where the candlesticke stood.

NOw further it is to be considered: 1. That there was but one candlesticke in the Tabernacle made by Moses, which was sufficient. Salomon indeed afterward made ten lampes, whereof five stood on the one side, and five on the other, 1 King. 7. 29. because the Temple was wider and larger. Iosephus saith, he made ten thousand candlesticks. But it is like the place is corrupted, and ten thousand put for ten. 2. The place where this candlesticke was placed, was not in the most holy place, for thither the Priest went but once in the yeere; but the lampes of the candlesticke were renued daily: neither did it stand in the outward court, which was open, for then it had beene subject to wind and weather, Ribera. And there was the Altar of burnt offering, whereon the fire burned continually, and never went out, Tostat. The place was therefore in the Sanctuary, next unto the most holy place; where, because it was continually covered over, there was necessary use of this light, for the daily service, and ministration of the Priests there, Tostat. quæst. 29.

Lib. 3. Antiqu. cap. 2.

Quest. XLV. Whether the candlesticke were made to Moses hand.

Vers. 37. And thou shalt make thee seven lampes, &c. 1. Here that slender conceit of the Jewes is confuted, that thinke this candlesticke was made to Moses hand, because it was so curious, and full of worke, that Moses could not tell how to make it: for it is here directly said unto Moses, Thou shalt make thee seven lampes: if then he caused to be made one part of it, it is certaine, that he did so in the rest of the parts: and afterward, chap. 31. 8. Bezaliel and Aholiab were appointed among other things to make the candlesticke: therefore the Jewes conceit hath but a slender ground, because it is said, vegasseh sier, the candlesticke shall be made: for before it is put in the active, vegasitho, And thou shalt make. 2. And in the same word, ועשית, vegasseh, they have another observation as slender & curious, because the letter jod, is superfluous, for ordinarily it should be, ועשיה, viggaseh with dagesh, without jod: they think jod, which signifieth ten, to be added, to signifie, that afterward Salomon should make ten candlesticks, as he did, 1 King. 7. But it is an usuall thing with the Hebrewes, for this letter sometime to be defective, sometime to be superfluous, without any mystery. Yet Tostatus is here deceived, that saith they ground this their conceit here, quia deficit litera jod, because the letter jod was wanting: for in the foresaid word, jod is not wanting, but superfluous.

Quest. XLVI. Of the instruments belonging to the candlesticke.

Vers. 38. The snuffers, and snuff-dishes. 1. There were two kind of instruments which belonged unto the golden candlesticke, the snuffers, wherewith the lampe was purged: the word melcoachaim, is taken also for tongs, wherewith coales are taken out of the fire, Isay 6. and because snuffers are as it were little tongs to the like purpose, they are called by the same name, Oleaster. The other instrument Iunius thinketh, served to cleanse the dropping of the lampes, Lyran. So also Tostatus thinketh they were certaine vessels containing water, to quench the snuffe in, that it should not smell. 3. There were also certaine certaine pipes to every lampe, wherein the oyle was put, to run into the nolle or boule of the candlesticke, where the lampe burned, as may appeare by Zacharies description, chap. 4. 2. where the Prophet alluding unto the fashion of the golden candlesticke in the Temple, (for otherwise if he had made any new description, the Jewes would not have given any credit unto him) maketh mention of seven lampes, and a boule, that is, to every one a boule to receive the oyle; and of seven golden pipes. Now all these are here in Moses comprehended under the name of lampes, which had both their severall pannes, and receptacles of the oyle, and certaine little pipes, and conveyances beside to powre in the oyle by, Tostat. qu. 30.

How Zacharies description and Moses agreeth together.

Quest. XLVII. How much a talent was.

Vers. 39. Of a talent of gold. 1. The scholasticall historie maketh mention of three kinde of talents: the Merchants talent, which was fiftie pound, the Citizens talent, which was 70. pound, and the talent of the Tabernacle, which was 120. pound, Tostat. qu. 33. 2. There was also the common talent, which contained 60. pound, and the great talent, which was 80. pound, Ribera. 3. Olcaster thinketh, that the word here used, cicar, signifieth not a talent, but portionem, frustum, a peece, or portion: which herein disenteth from all Interpreters in this place: and if no certaine quantitie of gold had beene named, it had beene a very imperfect description, to say, Of a peece of gold. 4. Iosephus esteemeth this talent at 100. pound. Epiphanius, at 125. pound; but the right valuation, as Rab. Salomon thinketh, was 130. pound, double to the common talent. So also Rupertus, Tostatus, Ribera, Lippoman. And every pound contained 60. common sicles, Ribera. As may be gathered by comparing these places together, 1 King. 10. 17. and 2 Chron. 9. 16. For in the first place it is said, Three pound of gold went to a shield: and in the latter, Three hundred shekels went to a shield. A talent of gold then by this account, weighed 7200. shekels, counting the talent at 120. pound, and every pound at 60. shekels. And a pound of gold in value is accounted at 100. crownes, and the talent at 12000. crownes, Iun. Mercerus then is deceived, which maketh the weight of a talent to be but a thousand and eight hundred sicles: therein following Cambius, and Lord Gerson, in 1 Sam. cap. 17. 5. Now the reasons why the summe of gold is named, whereof the candlesticke should be made, and so not in the rest, may be yeelded to bee these two; both because the candlesticke was all of gold, so were not the other, neither the Arke, nor the table: and for that their forme is set downe, both the length, and breadth, and so they might ghesse how much gold might goe to the making of them by the measure: but here, because there is no proportion set downe of the candlesticke, the gold is summed, that went to the making of it, Tostat. qu. 33.

Quest. XLVIII. Of the mysticall application of the candlesticke.

Concerning the application of this ceremoniall part of the Tabernacle. 1. Iosephus by the seven lampes understandeth the seven Planets, and the greatest in the middest sheweth the Sunne, the greatest and the middlemost of the Planets. 2. Tostatus by the candlesticke would have set forth the life of man, and by the seven branches the seven dayes of the weeke, which being multiplied doe measure out the time of mans life, q. 33. 3. So Rupertus by the six branches would have insinuated the six dayes of the creation, and by the shaft in the middest, which made the seventh, the seventh day, wherein God rested. Some, by the three branches one way, and three another, thinketh to be understood the Doctors of the Church, which in the old Testament did fidem sanctæ Trinitatis designare, &c. hold the faith of the holy Trinitie. But these applications are somewhat curious and against the Apostles rule, Which are shadowes of things to come, but the bodie is in Christ, Coloss. 2. 17. These types therefore and figures are shadowes of things to-come, not past, or then present, and they must be referred to Christ the bodie of them. 5. Wherefore, 1. this candlesticke some understand to be the Church of God, as Apocal. chap. 1. 2, 3. the Churches compared to candlesticks, Ribera, Piscator. But they are single candlesticks, not the candlesticke with seven lampes. 2. It better therefore signifieth Christ, who is the true light that inlightneth his Church: Venerio, Quis in candelabro, nisi redemptor humani generis designatur? Who is expressed in the candlestick, but the redeemer of mankinde? So also Beda: Hastile candelabri ipse qui est caput Ecclesiæ debet intelligi: By the shaft of the candlesticke must the head of the Church be understood. Ferus also to the same purpose: Candelabrum Christus, qui veri luminis est sustentaculum: Christ is the candlesticke, who is the upholder of the true light. 3. The six branches doe betoken the Apostles and Pastors of the Church, which are as branches which come from Christ, who is the vine, as these doe issue out of the shaft or bodie of the candlesticke, Marb. 4. The seven lampes doe signifie the manifold gifts of the Spirit, Pelargus. The knops and flowers, the divers graces and ornaments which the Lord endueth the faithfull with, Calvin. 6. As the candlesticke gave light unto the Tabernacle, so we are in darknesse, unlesse the Lord, qui Ecclesiam illuminet, from above doe lighten his Church, Calvine. 7. As the six branches doe make one bodie with the shaft, so, Ministri in Christo concordia studeant: Ministers in Christ must studie for concord, Osiand.

Lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 8.

In Ezechiel. homil. 6.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the divine nature of Christ.

Vers. 9. According to all that I shall shew thee, so shall they make the forme of the Tabernacle, &c. As God appointed the forme and fashion of the Tabernacle: but the matter thereof was offered by the Israelites: So Christ tooke his humanitie from among men: Divinitas, quæ mera forma est, à Deo patre ab æterno genita est: but his divine nature, which is as the forme, was begotten of God his Father from all eternitie, Simler. As touching his humanitie the Apostle saith: For as much as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he also himselfe tooke part with them. Of his divine and everlasting being the

Heb. 2. 14.

Evangelist speaketh: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and that Word was God, Ioh. 1. 1.

2. Doct. God will not be worshipped with will-worship.

FUrther it is hence gathered, Forma Tabernaculi non relicta est hominum arbitrio, &c. The forme of the Tabernacle is not left to the will of man, no not to the judgement of Moses: to teach us, that God will not be served with will-worship, according to the devices and inventions of men, but as he himselfe hath prescribed, Pelarg. Piscator. So our blessed Saviour alleageth in the Gospell out of the Prophet: They worship me in vaine, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men, Mark. 7. 7.

3. Doct. Of the ministerie of Angels.

Vers. 18. THou shalt make two Cherubims of gold. Which sheweth that God useth the ministerie of Angels in protecting of his Church, Piscator. As the Apostle saith, Are they not all ministring spirits, sent forth to minister for their sakes that shall be heires of salvation? Heb. 1. 14.

4. Doct. Our sinnes are covered in Christ.

Vers. 21. AND thou shalt put the Mercie seat upon the Arke. This Mercie seat signifieth Christ; that as it covered the Arke where the tables of the law were kept, so our sinnes which are discovered by the law, Tecta sunt operculo illo gratiæ & reconciliationis, are covered by that covering of grace and reconciliation: as it is in the Psalme, Blessed is he whose wickednesse is forgiven, and whose sinne is covered, Psal. 32. 1. Borrh.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. Against the sumptuous decking and adorning of Churches.

Vers. 3. THis is the offering which you shall take of them, gold and silver. This is no warrant now, because the Tabernacle in the old Testament was adorned with silver and gold, and other precious things, that now the Temples of Christians should be set forth with such ornaments: Ubi enim verbum, ubi mandatum? Where have they any word, or warrant for these things, as Moses had then? Galat. The houses of prayer are to bee reverently kept, and decently set forth: but superfluous and sumptuous ornaments doe not beseeme the house of God: he looketh not to faire and beautifull Churches, but unto the humble and contrite heart, as the Prophet saith, Isa. 66. 2.

2. Confut. Against the Manichees, who refused the old Testament.

Vers. 8. THat I may dwell among them. The Manichees who tooke exception to the old Testament, said that herein it was contrarie to the New; that God should dwell in houses made with hands: whereas our Saviour saith in the New Testament, that heaven is Gods seat, and the earth is his footstoole, Matth. 5. there can be then no house made for God to dwell in. This objection Augustine returneth upon them againe, shewing that this testimonie is first alleaged in the old Testament, Heaven is my throne, earth is my footstoole, where is that house that you will build for me? Isa. 66. 1. And therefore therein the old Testament and new concurre, that God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands: and yet both in the old and new Testament God is said to have his house: therefore he concludeth, Adaliquam significationem in utroq; testamento accipi, &c. that is so said and taken to signifie some other thing, &c. God then is said to dwell in the Tabernacle, not because any place can comprehend his Majestie, but because there he pleased him by some visible signes to manifest his presence.

August. contra Adiman. c. 10.

3. Confut. Against the superstitious opinion of the vertue of ceremonies.

Vers. 22. THere will I appoint with thee. Though the Arke were the place where the Lord revealed himselfe, and shewed evident signes of his presence: yet the Israelites were too superstitious, afterward addicted to the externall ceremonie: and thought themselves sufficiently protected, if the Arke were with them. As in Heli his time, when they brought the Arke into the campe, they thought themselves sure of the victorie against the Philistims: but the Lord causeth both them and the Arke to come into their enemies hand, to teach them to lay aside all carnall confidence, and to seeke unto the Lord. As the superstitious Israelites in this respect abused the Arke; so the Romanists put their confidence in their breaden god, consecrated host, going with it in procession, and carrying it about in the field. But this is to attribute too much unto signes, Simlerus.

1 Sam. 4.

4. Confut. That Moses Arke is not at Rome in S. Iohn Laterans Church.

THis Arke which Moses made, the author of the Scholasticall historie thinketh to bee in Rome in the Church of S. Iohn Lateran, under the Altar there; and by that supposed evidence, would prove that the Arke was not made according to the measure of the Geometricall cubit. But Tostatus sheweth that not to be so, because it is mentioned, 2 Maccab. 2. how Ieremie hid the Arke in a cave, which afterward could not be found. This authoritie presseth them, because they hold the first and second books of the Maccabees to be canonicall. And howsoever it standeth for the truth of this report, it is evident that the Arke was lost before or in the captivitie of Babylon, and that the second Temple built after the captivitie never had it. By this then it appeareth what small credit is to bee given unto those relikes, which are so much boasted of in the Papall Church.

Tostat. qu. 14. in 25. cap.

5. Confut. Against the erecting and setting up of Images.

Vers. 22. BEtweene the two Cherubims. The idolatrous Romanists have no warrant from hence for their Images, which they set up to be adored in their Churches: 1. Moses had Gods commandment to doe it, they have no such direction. 2. That was a time of figures and ceremonies, and typicall representations: but now in the cleere light of the Gospell all such types and figures are ceased. 3. Those Cherubim Cherubims were not ſet forth publikly in the peoples view, but kept in the moſt holy place, whither none had acceſſe but the high Prieſt: neither was it lawfull for any other Prieſt or Levite to gaze or looke upon it. Therefore this is no warrant for the ſetting up of Images in Churches in the open ſight and view of the people, who thereby are bewitched, and withdrawne from the true ſpirituall worſhip, Simler. Gallaſ.

6. Confut. Againſt the Iewes, that they are caſt off for crucifying of Chriſt.

Verſ.22. There will I appoint with thee, or, meet thee. Chryſoſtome from hence doth notably convince the Jewes, that God hath forſaken them, and caſt them off, becauſe now they have not the Arke nor Propitiatorie ſeat, from whence the Lord uſed to ſpeake. And if the Jewes ſhould, hominibus imputare rerum ſuarum vaſtationem, impute unto men the ruine and deſtruction of their ſtate; hee thus anſwereth: Firſt, that men could not have deſtroyed their Citie, Niſi Deus permiſiſſet, unleſſe the Lord had permitted it to be done. Secondly he ſaith: But be it granted that men pulled downe your walles, Num ignem ex alto devehi vetuit homo? Did man forbid fire to be brought from heaven? Num voces ex propitiatorio audiri ſolitam inhibuit homo? &c. Did man forbid that a voice ſhould be heard out of the Propitiatorie? Did man take away the declaration of Gods will by the precious ſtones in the Prieſts breaſt-plate, and the ſacred unction? &c. An non Deus hæc omnia ſubmovit? &c. Did not God take all theſe away? Thirdly, if the Jewes ſhall anſwer, Quoniam civitate caremus, caremus & iſtis, &c. Becauſe we are without a Citie, we want theſe things alſo, &c. He addeth further: yet after the Temple was deſtroyed, and the Altar broken downe, there were Prophets in the captivitie, Daniel and Ezechiel: ſay then, Quam ob cauſam nunc non habetis Prophetas? What is the cauſe that now ye have no Prophets? Is it not evident by this, Quod Deus vos repulerit, that God hath caſt you off? And why hath he caſt you off? Ob illum crucifixum, & impium illud facinus: becauſe of that impious fact in the crucifying of Chriſt. And whence doth this appeare? becauſe before, when ye lived wickedly, ye obtained many things, now, cum videamini modeſtius vivere, when yee ſeeme to live more ſoberly, yet ye ſuffer more grievous puniſhment, nec quicquam eorum contigit habere, qua prius habebatis, and ye enjoy none of thoſe things which before ye had, &c. To this purpoſe Chryſoſt. Orat. 3. contra Judæos.

7. Confut. Againſt the Romaniſts, concerning their nine orders of Angels.

NOw further, whereas theſe winged pictures, which were made upon the Mercie ſeat, are called Cherubim, which is a name indifferently given to the bleſſed Angels in generall; it is evident, that it is no ſpeciall order, as the Romaniſts have curiouſly ſorted the Angels into nine orders: whereof the Cherubim, Seraphim, and Thrones, are the three higheſt. And Toſtatus, one of their owne writers, confeſſeth, Quæſt. 19. in c. 25. Exod. that in this place, Æqualiter Cherubim ad omnes beatos ſpiritus referantur, That the Cherubim here equally may be referred to all the bleſſed Spirits, &c. And as in this place, ſo in other alſo, the Cherubim and Seraphim are names and titles given to the Angels in generall, as Iſai. 6. Ezech. 1. and 10. See more hereof elſewhere, Synopſ. Centur 2. err. 1.

8. Confut. Againſt the ſuperſtitious uſe of candles in Churches.

Verſ.37. Thou ſhalt make thee ſeven lamps thereof, &c. to give light, &c. The uſe then of this candleſticke and the lamps thereof, was to no other end than to give light in the Sanctuarie, which was covered. Toſtatus addeth further, Non ſolùm lumen candelarum eſt ad neceſſitatem tollendarum tenebrarum, ſed etiam ad honeſtatem & cultum, &c. The light of candles is not onely for neceſſitie to remove the darkneſſe, but for more comelineſſe, and it belongeth unto worſhip, &c. Which ſuperſtitious conceit is convinced in this place. Theſe lamps were ordained onely to give light: therefore at noone day when there is no uſe of candle light, to ſet up tapers and candles, is a ſuperfluous and a ſuperſtitious uſe. Quæſt. 30. in cap. 25.

6. Morall Obſervations.

1 Obſerv. God muſt be honoured with our riches.

Verſ.2. Receive an offering for me of every man, &c. Whereas God requireth an offering of the people out of their ſubſtance; it ſheweth that our goods are not ours, to waſte at our willes, but God looketh to be honoured with them, and to have them employed unto his glorie, B. Babing. As the Wiſe-man ſaith, Prov. 6. 8. Honour the Lord with thy riches, and with the firſt fruits of thine increaſe.

2. Obſerv. We muſt give unto God with a willing heart.

Whoſe heart giveth it freely. So alſo chap. 35. 5. Whoſoever is of a willing heart, let him bring this offering unto the Lord; which ſheweth, that what is beſtowed upon Gods ſervice, ſhould be given willingly and cheerefully: as it is ſaid in that great offering of David and the people toward the building of the Temple which Salomon made, The people offered willingly unto the Lord, with a perfit heart. 1 Chron. 29. 9. and David thus profeſſeth, verſ. 17. I have offered willingly in the uprightneſſe of mine heart all theſe things. So the Apoſtle ſaith, The Lord loveth a cheerefull giver, 2 Cor. 9. 7. B. Babing.

3. Obſerv. Of the diverſitie of gifts, which every man muſt employ accordingly, as he hath received.

Verſ.3. Take of them gold, ſilver, braſſe, &c. This ſheweth that in the Church there are diverſities of gifts: God hath endued ſome with gold and ſilver, ſome with braſſe: all have not the like gifts, as the Apoſtle ſaith, There are diverſities of gifts, but the ſame ſpirit, 1 Cor. 12. 5. No man therefore can excuſe himſelfe, that he hath nothing to offer: if he have neither gold, ſilver, nor braſſe, yet hee may bring goats haire, B. Babing. He that hath neither gold, ſilver, nor braſſe, Offerat vel pilas caprarum, & munere ſuo defunctus eſt; Let him but offer goats haire, and he hath done his dutie, Ferus.

Evangeliſt ſpeaketh: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and that Word was God, Ioh.1.1.

2. Doct. God will not be worſhipped with will-worſhip.

FUrther it is hence gathered, Forma Tabernaculi non relicta eſt hominum arbitrio, &c. The forme of the Tabernacle is not left to the will of man, no not to the judgement of Moſes: to teach us, that God will not be ſerved with will-worſhip, according to the devices and inventions of men, but as he himſelfe hath preſcribed, Pelarg. Piſcator. So our bleſſed Saviour alleageth in the Goſpell out of the Prophet: They worſhip me in vaine, teaching for doctrines the commandements of men, Mark.7.7.

3. Doct. Of the miniſterie of Angels.

Verſ.18. Thou ſhalt make two Cherubims of gold. Which ſheweth that God uſeth the miniſterie of Angels in protecting of his Church, Piſcator. As the Apoſtle ſaith, Are they not all miniſtring ſpirits, ſent forth to miniſter for their ſakes that ſhall be heires of ſalvation? Heb.1.14.

4. Doct. Our ſinnes are covered in Chriſt.

Verſ.21. And thou ſhalt put the Mercie ſeat upon the Arke. This Mercie ſeat ſignifieth Chriſt; that as it covered the Arke where the tables of the law were kept, ſo our ſinnes which are diſcovered by the law, Tecta ſunt operculo illo gratiæ & reconciliationis, are covered by that covering of grace and reconciliation: as it is in the Pſalme, Bleſſed is he whoſe wickedneſſe is forgiven, and whoſe ſinne is covered, Pſal.32.1. Borrh.

5. Places of Controverſie.

1. Confut. Againſt the ſumptuous decking and adorning of Churches.

Verſ.3. This is the offering which you ſhall take of them, gold and ſilver. This is no warrant now, becauſe the Tabernacle in the old Teſtament was adorned with ſilver and gold, and other precious things, that now the Temples of Chriſtians ſhould be ſet forth with ſuch ornaments: Ubi enim verbum, ubi mandatum? Where have they any word, or warrant for theſe things, as Moſes had then? Galat. The houſes of prayer are to bee reverently kept, and decently ſet forth: but ſuperfluous and ſumptuous ornaments doe not beſeeme the houſe of God: he looketh not to faire and beautifull Churches, but unto the humble and contrite heart, as the Prophet ſaith, Iſa.66.2.

2. Confut. Againſt the Manichees, who refuſed the old Teſtament.

Verſ.8. That I may dwell among them. The Manichees who tooke exception to the old Teſtament, ſaid that herein it was contrarie to the New; that God ſhould dwell in houſes made with hands whereas our Saviour ſaith in the New Teſtament, that heaven is Gods ſeat, and the earth is his footſtoole, Matth.5. there can be then no houſe made for God to dwell in. This objection Auguſtine returneth upon them againe, ſhewing that this teſtimonie is firſt alleaged in the old Teſtament, Heaven is my throne, earth is my footſtoole, where is that houſe that you will build for me? Iſa.66.1. And therefore therein the old Teſtament and new concurre, that God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands: and yet both in the old and new Teſtament God is ſaid to have his houſe: therefore he concludeth, Adaliquam ſignificationem in utroq; teſtamento accipi, &c. that is ſo ſaid and taken to ſignifie ſome other thing, &c. God then is ſaid to dwell in the Tabernacle, not becauſe any place can comprehend his Majeſtie, but becauſe there it pleaſed him by ſome viſible ſignes to manifeſt his preſence.

Auguſt. contra Adimant.c.10.

3. Confut. Againſt the ſuperſtitious opinion of the vertue of ceremonies.

Verſ.22. There will I appoint with thee. Though the Arke were the place where the Lord revealed himſelfe, and ſhewed evident ſignes of his preſence: yet the Iſraelites were too ſuperſtitious afterward addicted to the externall ceremonie: and thought themſelves ſufficiently protected, if the Arke were with them. As in Heli his time, when they brought the Arke into the campe, they thought themſelves ſure of the victorie againſt the Philiſtims: but the Lord cauſed both them and the Arke to come into their enemies hand, to teach them to lay aſide all carnall confidence, and to ſeeke unto the Lord. As the ſuperſtitious Iſraelites in this reſpect abuſed the Arke; ſo the Romaniſts put their confidence in their breaden god, conſecrated hoſt, going with it in proceſſion, and carrying it about in the field. But this is to attribute too much unto ſignes, Simlerus.

1 Sam.4.

4. Confut. That Moſes Arke is not at Rome in S. Iohn Laterans Church.

THis Arke which Moſes made, the author of the Scholaſticall hiſtorie thinketh to bee in Rome in the Church of S. Iohn Lateran, under the Altar there; and by that ſuppoſed evidence, would prove that the Arke was not made according to the meaſure of the Geometricall cubit. But Toſtatus ſheweth that not to be ſo, becauſe it is mentioned, 2 Maccab.2. how Ieremie hid the Arke in a cave, which afterward could not be found. This authoritie preſſeth them, becauſe they hold the firſt and ſecond books of the Maccabees to bee canonicall. And howſoever it ſtandeth for the truth of this report, it is evident that the Arke was loſt before or in the captivitie of Babylon, and that the ſecond Temple built after the captivitie never had it. By this then it appeareth what ſmall credit is to bee given unto thoſe relikes, which are ſo much boaſted of in the Papall Church.

Toſtat.qu.14. in 25.cap.

5. Confut. Againſt the erecting and ſetting up of Images.

Verſ.22. Betweene the two Cherubims. The idolatrous Romaniſts have no warrant from hence for their Images, which they ſet up to be adored in their Churches: 1. Moſes had Gods commandment to doe it, they have no ſuch direction. 2. That was a time of figures and ceremonies, and typicall representations: but now in the cleere light of the Goſpell all ſuch types and figures are ceaſed. 3. Tho

Cherubi

Cherubims were not set forth publikly in the peoples view, but kept in the most holy place, whither none had accesse but the high Priest: neither was it lawfull for any other Priest or Levite to gaze or looke upon it. Therefore this is no warrant for the setting up of Images in Churches in the open sight and view of the people, who thereby are bewitched, and withdrawne from the true spirituall worship, Simler. Gallas.

6. Confut. Against the Iewes, that they are cast off for crucifying of Christ.

Vers.22. There will I appoint with thee, or, meet thee. Chrysostome from hence doth notably convince the Jewes, that God hath forsaken them, and cast them off, because now they have not the Arke nor Propitiatorie seat, from whence the Lord used to speake. And if the Jewes should, hominibus imputare rerum suarum vastationem, impute unto men the ruine and destruction of their state; hee thus answereth: First, that men could not have destroyed their Citie, Nisi Deus permisisset, unlesse the Lord had permitted it to be done. Secondly he saith: But be it granted that men pulled downe your walles, Num ignem ex alto devehi vetuit homo? Did man forbid fire to be brought from heaven? Num vocem ex propitiatorio audiri solitam inhibuit homo? &c. Did man forbid that a voice should be heard out of the Propitiatorie? Did man take away the declaration of Gods will by the precious stones in the Priests breastplate, and the sacred unction? &c. An non Deus haec omnia submovit? &c. Did not God take all these away? Thirdly, if the Jewes shall answer, Quoniam civitate caremus, caremus & istis, &c. Because we are without a Citie, we want these things also, &c. He addeth further: yet after the Temple was destroyed, and the Altar broken downe, there were Prophets in the captivitie, Daniel and Ezechiel: say then, Quam ob causam nunc non habetis Prophetas? What is the cause that now ye have no Prophets? Is it not evident by this, Quòd Deus vos repulerit, that God hath cast you off? And why hath he cast you off? Ob illum crucifixum, & impium illud facinus: because of that impious fact in the crucifying of Christ. And whence doth this appeare? because before, when ye lived wickedly, ye obtained many things, now, cum videamini modestiùs vivere, when yee seeme to live more soberly, yet ye suffer more grievous punishment, nec eorum quemquam contigit habere, quæ prius habebatis, and ye enjoy none of those things which before ye had, &c. To this purpose Chrysost. Orat. 3. contr. Judæos.

7. Confut. Against the Romanists, concerning their nine orders of Angels.

NOw further, whereas these winged pictures, which were made upon the Mercie seat, are called Cherubim, which is a name indifferently given to the blessed Angels in generall; it is evident, that it is no speciall order, as the Romanists have curiously sorted the Angels into nine orders: whereof the Cherubim, Seraphim, and Thrones, are the three highest. And Tostatus, one of their owne writers, confesseth, that in this place, Æqualiter Cherubim ad omnes beatos spiritus referantur, That the Cherubim here equally may be referred to all the blessed Spirits, &c. And as in this place, so in other also, the Cherubim and Seraphim are names and titles given to the Angels in generall, as Isai.6. Ezech.1. and 10. See more hereof elsewhere, Synops. Centur 2. err.1. Quæst. 29. in c.25. Exod.

8. Confut. Against the superstitious use of candles in Churches.

Vers.37. Thou shalt make thee seven lamps thereof, &c. to give light, &c. The use then of this candlestick and the lamps thereof, was to no other end than to give light in the Sanctuarie, which was covered. Tostatus addeth further, Non solùm lumen candelarum est ad necessitatem tollendarum tenebrarum, sed etiam ad honestatem & cultum, &c. The light of candles is not onely for necessitie to remove the darknesse, but for more comelinesse, and it belongeth unto worship, &c. Which superstitious conceit is unproved in this place. These lamps were ordained onely to give light: therefore at noone day when there is no use of candle light, to set up tapers and candles, is a superfluous and a superstitious use. Quæst. 30. in cap.25.

6. Morall Observations.

1 Observ. God must be honoured with our riches.

Vers.2. Receive an offering for me of every man, &c. Whereas God requireth an offering of the people out of their substance; it sheweth that our goods are not ours, to waste at our willes, but God looketh to be honoured with them, and to have them employed unto his glorie, B. Babinge. As the Wise-man saith, Prov.6.8. Honour the Lord with thy riches, and with the first fruits of thine increase.

2. Observ. We must give unto God with a willing heart.

Whose heart giveth it freely. So also chap.35.5. Whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring this offering unto the Lord; which sheweth, that what is bestowed upon Gods service, should be given willingly and cheerefully: as it is said in that great offering of David and the people toward the building of the Temple which Salomon made, The people offered willingly unto the Lord, with a perfit heart, 1 Chron. 29.9. and David thus professeth, vers.17. I have offered willingly in the uprightnesse of mine heart all these things. So the Apostle saith, The Lord loveth a cheerefull giver, 2 Cor.9.7. B. Babing.

3. Observ. Of the diversitie of gifts, which every man must employ accordingly, as he hath received.

Vers.3. Take of them gold, silver, brasse, &c. This sheweth that in the Church there are diversities of gifts: God hath endued some with gold and silver, some with brasse: all have not the like gifts, as the Apostle saith, There are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 5. No man therefore can excuse himselfe, that he hath nothing to offer: if he have neither gold, silver, nor brasse, yet hee may bring goats haire, B. Babing. He that hath neither gold, silver, nor brasse, Offerat vel pilas caprarum, & munere suo defunctus est; Let him but offer goats haire, and he hath done his dutie, Forms.

4. Observ. What desire we should have to the Lords house.

Vers.8. That I may dwell among them. Seeing the house of God is the place of Gods habitation, and there is his presence, it sheweth with what delight and desire wee should come unto Gods house, and with what reverence wee should behave our selves there, as Iacob said, How reverend is this place! this is no other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven, Gen.28.17. So Chrysostome excellently saith, Non est ecclesia tonstrina, aut unguentaria taberna, &c. sed locus Angelorum, regia coeli, ædes ipsum, &c. The Church is no Barbers shop, or Apothecaries house, but a place of Angels, the palace of heaven, yea heaven it selfe.

Homil. 36. in 1. ad Corinth.

5. Observ. Gods law must be laid up in the heart.

Vers.16. Thou shalt put in the Arke the Testimonie. As the tables of the Law were laid up in the Arke, so the Law and Word of God must be kept in a faithfull heart: as the Prophet David saith, I desired to doe thy good will O my God, yea thy law is within my heart, Psal.40.8. Piscator.

6. Observ. We must readily obey Gods will, as the Angels.

Vers.20. The Cherubims shall stretch their wings on high. The Angels have their wings readie spread, to shew how serviceable they are at all appointments, alwayes in a readinesse to do the will of God; to teach us that we also should imitate this cheerfull and readie service of the Angels, in our willing and prompt obedience in the earth: as we are taught to pray in the Lords prayer, Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven, B Babing.

7. Observ. To use the creatures of God soberly.

Vers.30. Thou shalt set upon the table shew-bread. Seeing the daily bread which they did eat, was made of the same corne, whereof the shew-bread was, which was alwayes in the presence of God; it teacheth that we should soberly use the creatures of God, as alwayes being in his sight: as the Apostle saith, Whether yee eat or drinke, &c. doe all to the glorie of God, B. Babing.

8. Observ. That nothing can escape Gods sight, in whose house there is alwayes light.

Vers.37. Thou shalt make seven lamps, &c. to give light. There is light in Gods house: whatsoever is there done, is soone espied: nothing can escape Gods sight: Ne putes te in domo Dei male posse conversari & occultari, &c. Thinke not that thou canst live wickedly in Gods house and bee hid, Oleaster. Therefore Christs eyes are said to be as a flame of fire, which pearceth and searcheth all things, Revel.1.14.

CHAP. XXVI.

1. The Method and Argument.

AS in the former Chapter such things are described, as were to bee placed within the Tabernacle, so now followeth the description of the Tabernacle it selfe in this Chapter, whereof there are two parts: the first containeth a declaration, how the Tabernacle should be made, with every part thereof, to vers.31. the second, in what order every thing should be disposed in the Tabernacle, vers.31. to the end.

In the first: 1. The curtaines are appointed to be made: 1. Of what matter and how many, v.1. 2. Of what measure, forme and fashion, v.2,3. 3. The things thereunto belonging are described, the strings & taches with the use of them, v.5,6.

2. The coverings are described: first the curtaines of goates haire: 1. The number of them, vers.7. 2. The measure and scantling, vers.8. 3. The necessarie appertenances thereunto, the strings and taches, vers.10,11. 4. The use, vers.12,13. secondly, the covering of rammes skinnes: thirdly, the covering of badgers skinnes is appointed to be made, vers.14.

3. The boords are mentioned in the next place, which should serve to hold and beare up the Tabernacle: which are described, first in generall, their measure and fashion, with tenons, vers.16,17. secondly in particular: 1. Both for the number of boords, with their sockets on the South side, vers.18,19. then on the North side, vers.20.21. and on the West side, vers.22,26. 2. As also for the forme and fashion; they must have five bars of every side, vers.26,27,28. and both the bars and boords must be covered with gold, vers.29.

In the second part, which sheweth the disposition and order: first, the manner of disposing of the things belonging to the most holy place is described: 1. Concerning the partition, consisting of a vaile, vers.31. pillars, vers.32. and the sockets and hooks, vers.32,33. 2. As touching the things to bee placed there: the Arke, vers.33. with the Mercie-seat, vers.34.

Secondly, in the outward part of the Tabernacle, without the vaile. 1. The order is set downe, how the things there placed should be disposed, the table, and the candlesticke. 2. The vaile is described, with the pillars, their heads and sockets, vers.36,37.

2. The divers readings.

G. I. Vers.1. Of fine twined linen. G. or, è xylino, bombasine. I. Iosephus thinketh they were, contexta è lana woven of wooll, or cotton, better than, è bysso, of silke, cater. for seeing the curtaines of the outward court were made of the same, chap.27.9. it is like that it was not silke, Shos.

Vers.4.

Verſ.4. Thou ſhalt make ſtrings. G.I.or, *loops.*B.*laqueolos.*A.P.better than, anſulas, claſpes.L.S.cum ca-ter. they are deſcribed afterward, verſ.6.Inleoth. loops,ſtrings.H. C. B. I.

Verſ.5. In the edge of the firſt curtaine, on the outſide in the coupling. I.A.P.better than. *in the edge of the ou curtaine, in the ſelvedge of the coupling.*B.G.For it is not here expreſſed with ſelvedge; the word ſignifieth the extremitie, or extreme part, that is, the further edge of the firſt curtaine, where it was joyned to the ſecond; the other Interpreters, S.L.C. are further off from the ſenſe. I.A.P.

Verſ.5. The ſtrings ſhall hold one curtaine to another. I.not, the ſtrings ſhall be one right againſt another. I. cater. See in the end of the 7. qu. more of the beſt reading here.

Verſ.24. Shall be as twinnes. I. or, double, or, couples. V.A.P. better than, ſhall be joyned. B. G. L. *cum ceteris amin.*H.twinnes, as Gen.38.27. I.V.

Verſ.28. *The middle bar ſhall be in the middeſt of the boords going from end to end.*I.better than,the middle bar in the middeſt of the boords, ſhall goe from end to end. B. G. V. cum cater. The place of the bar is deſcribed, not the manner of going thorow, which was common to them all. I.

Verſ.37. Their hooks of gold, uncis. I.knops or buttons, *uncinis.*B.V.A.P.not heads. C.L.S.vanim, ſignifieth crooked hooks, like the letter vau. See *qu.*24.

3. The queſtions diſcuſſed and handled.

QUEST. I. Of the name of the Tabernacle, and which part of the Sanctuarie was properly ſo called.

Verſ.1. THou ſhalt make the Tabernacle. 1. This word tranſlated Tabernacle, in the Hebrew, miſcan, which properly ſignifieth, habitaculum, an habitation, is taken either generally, and ſo it was divided into two parts, in clauſam, & apertam, into that part which was covered, which was properly called the Tabernacle, or that which was open, where they offered their burnt offerings, which could not be made in the covered part, becauſe of the fire and ſmoake aſcending: or particularly, the Tabernacle was taken for the ſpeciall and principall part, which was, the curtaine made of blew and purple ſilke, Ariu Montan. 2. The reſt, beſide this, were either aperioria Tabernaculi, vel laterà, the coverings of the Tabernacle, which were three, of goates haire, rams skins, and badgers skins. By looking then exactly into the text, wee ſhall finde, that the Tabernacle conſiſted ſubſtantially of thoſe ten curtaines firſt deſcribed, Cajetan. 3. Toſtatus giveth this annotation of this word Tabernacle, which ſignifieth an houſe made ex tabulis; of boords. But howſoever the Latine word may be ſo derived, the Hebrew word miſcan, ſignifieth an habitation, of ſucan, to dwell, as the Lord himſelfe ſaith, chap. 25. 8. *They ſhall make me a Sanctuarie to dwell in.*The boords were not this Tabernacle; for it is ſaid, *verſ.*15. Thou ſhalt make boords for the Tabernacle; and the curtaines of goates haire was a covering for the Tabernacle, *verſ.*17. The curtaines then firſt deſcribed, are properly called the Tabernacle, miſcan: the other curtaines were called, ohe, himirinim, a Tent, Vatablus.

QUEST. II. Why the Lord appointed a Tabernacle to be erected, and that in the wilderneſſe.

THou ſhalt make a Tabernacle. 1. It was requiſite, that a ſpeciall place for Gods worſhip ſhould bee made, for more reverence ſake, as we ſee that Kings and Princes, pulchriores habitationes poſſident, have more coſtly and beautifull houſes, that they might be had in greater admiration. So that, although in reſpect of God himſelfe, who filleth heaven and earth, there was no neceſſitie of any place; yet in regard of men, it was neceſſarie in thoſe two reſpects, that having a peculiar place ordained for the worſhip of God, cum majori reverentia accederent; They ſhould approach with greater reverence, Et per diſpoſitionem talis Tabernaculi ſignificarentur, &c. And that by the diſpoſing of ſuch a Tabernacle, thoſe things might bee ſignified, which belonged unto Chriſt. Thomas. I. 2. qu. 102. art. 4. in Cor. & ad 1.

2. It pleaſed God, that this Tabernacle ſhould be firſt erected in the wilderneſſe, before they came into Canaan: 1. Not ſo much becauſe Moſes that great Propher, who was to end his dayes before they ſhould come into the promiſed land, was the meeteſt inſtrument, to ſet forward that worke. For God, who indued Moſes with thoſe gifts, could alſo have raiſed as great Prophets as Moſes. 2. But one reaſon was, that his people being to ſojourne in the deſert 40. yeares, might be kept from idleneſſe, and be exerciſed in the rites and ceremonies of the worſhip of God: leſt, if no forme of worſhip had beene preſcribed unto them, they might have ſwarved, and declined unto ſuperſtitious uſages. 3. Another reaſon was, that they might be afore inſtructed, in the manner of the true worſhip, leſt they ſhould have fallen preſently to the idolatry of the Canaanites, after they had obtained their land; if they had not beene ſetled before and well grounded in the right worſhip, Toſtatus qu. 2.

QUEST. III. Why the Lord would not yet have a Temple yet built.

YEt the Lord would not injoyne his people now, to make him a Temple in ſome certaine place, becauſe they were now continually to remove their tents and dwelling, all the time of their ſojourning in the wilderneſſe. And it was a long time after they had poſſeſſion of the land, before the Lord would have a Temple built: becauſe till ſuch time as the people had a King, to be able to defend them, and they had peace and quietneſſe from their enemies, a Temple could not conveniently be built: therefore, neither in the time of the Judges, was this worke taken in hand, becauſe none of them was of ſufficient power, and ability to doe it, the government ſtill ſhifting and changing from one to another: neither under Saul, and David, was it a fit time to begin that worke, becauſe they had much trouble and buſineſſe with their enemies. God therefore reſerved that worke for the peaceable reigne of *Salomon. Toſtat. qu.*3.

4. And this further may be alleaged as a reaſon, why firſt the Lord would have a Tabernacle built, and afterward a Temple: Quod Tabernaculum præſentis ædificium Eccleſia deſignat; Becauſe the Tabernacle doth doth deſigne and ſhew the ſtate of the Church now preſent, ſojourning in this world, and continually exerciſed: but Salomons Temple was a figure of the Church of God in heaven, where there ſhall be peace and tranquillitie; as in the building of Salomons Temple, the noiſe of a hammer was not heard, Bede.

De Tabernac. l. 2. c. 1. fol. 1.

QUEST. IV. Of what ſtuffe theſe curtaines were made.

Verſ. 1. THen curtaines of fine twined linen, &c. 1. To omit here, both Auguſtines note of ſome corrupt Interpreters, that in ſtead of the Greeke word αὐλαίας, in Latine aulæa, curtaines, did reade aulas, courts; as though there ſhould be ten courts in the Tabernacle: and to let paſſe alſo Rupertus notation of the word cortina, curtaine, which hee taketh to be derived of corium, leather; becauſe at the firſt curtaines were made of leather. 2. Theſe curtaines were not made of divers peeces of cloth, of contrarie colours ſewed together, but the matter and ſtuffe was fine twiſted ſilke and linen, Simler. The word ſhes, ſilke or linen may bee derived of ſhaſah, which ſignifieth to take the fixth part; becauſe it is like it was twined in ſix threeds together, Oleaſt. Like unto a fine cord or line, Iun. 3. Oſiander thinketh that theſe colours were ſo mingled together, as yet one among the reſt moſt appeared: and therefore ſome of them are called coverings of blew ſilke, ſome coverings of skarlet, Numb. 4. 7, 8. But thoſe there deſcribed, were not theſe great curtaines, but other ſmaller coverings, that ſerved to cover the things which were carried: It ſeemeth that theſe coverings were indifferently tempered of all theſe colours.

QUEST. V. Of the manner of worke uſed in theſe curtaines.

IN them thou ſhalt make Cherubims of broidered worke. 1. Some thinke that theſe curtaines were not onely pictured with Cherubims, Angels, but withall flowers and ſuch like, Cajetan. Ioſephus thinketh, that there were no pictures of men or beaſts at all, but onely of trees or flowers: but this is contrarie to the text, which maketh ſpeciall mention of Cherubims, Calvin. Simler. 2. Arias Montanus imagineth that they were the full and perfect pictures of Cherubs, like unto young men with wings: and he alſo conjectureth with what colours they were ſet forth: their fleſh with white and red, their wings with blew. But it is neither like that they were pictured in their full proportion: for then there ſhould have beene a great part of the curtaines left bare and naked without any pictures, unleſſe we imagine ſome other filling worke: but they were ſuch Cherubs, as were deſcribed before upon the Mercie ſeate: neither were they pictured naked, which was againſt that law, Exod. 20. 26. which provideth that the nakedneſſe of none ſhould be diſcovered. As for the colour of their face and wings, it was like to be ſuch, as beſt ſerved to reſemble them.

3. Concerning the manner of worke: it was not painted, and ſo ſet forth with colours; becauſe then they ſhould not have needed to have brought ſtuffe of divers colours to make the curtaines of, Toſtat. qu. 6. Cajetane thinketh that they were not made ſuendo, ſed texendo, by ſowing, but weaving. So the Septuag. Vatab. Some thinke it was altogether needle worke: as the Latine Interpreter, Toſtatus, Pagnine. But the word ſignifieth artificiall or curious worke, or worke deviſed, Oleaſter. There was both woven worke in it, as may be gathered, chap. 28. 32. and needle worke alſo, becauſe it was like on both ſides: as appeareth in that the vailes, and eſpecially that which divided the moſt holy place from the Sanctuarie, were wrought with Cherubims, verſ. 31. which were of both ſides all one, ſeeing they ſhewed both wayes, Iun. But ſuch curious worke could not be wrought but by the needle.

QUEST. VI. Whether every curtaine were coupled by ſtrings one to another, or five onely to five.

Verſ. 3. FIve curtaines ſhall be coupled. 1. Some thinke that theſe five curtaines were ſewed together, and ſo made one great curtaine: and five other more likewiſe ſewed together, and made another great curtaine: and theſe thus ſewed together ſeemed as two great curtaines, which were coupled together with ſtrings and taches. So Lyran. Montanus, Toſtatus, who laſt named ſheweth this to be the reaſon, why theſe two great curtaines were coupled together by taches or rings and ſtrings in the middeſt, in the very partition of the holy place from the moſt holy, that by them might hang the vaile, which divided the moſt holy place from the holy place without. 2. But I rather thinke with Iunius and Cajetanus, that the five curtaines were faſtned one to another by loops and taches: and ſo likewiſe the other five, and that theſe two great curtaines were not faſtned together at all, both becauſe they were fitter to be carried, being not put all ten together, but five in one great curtaine, and five in another: as alſo becauſe as the Tabernacle below was divided, the moſt holy place from the other, ſo it was fit their coverings ſhould bee ſeverall. And that every of the five curtaines was coupled to another with ſtrings and taches, it may be thus gathered: 1. The words of the text are plaine, verſ. 3. Five curtaines ſhall be coupled one to another, and five one to another; Which cannot be underſtood, that five ſhould be coupled to five, but that every one of both the fives ſhould be coupled one to another. 2. verſ. 4. there is mention made of the ſecond coupling; ſo that the coupling ſpoken of before is the firſt coupling: but if theſe two great curtaines ſhould onely be joyned together, there ſhould be but one coupling in all. The meaning then is that in the furtheſt edge of the firſt curtaine there ſhould bee fiftie ſtrings, in the firſt coupling, that is where it joyneth with the ſecond curtaine: for the firſt edge or ſide of the firſt curtaine had neither ſtrings nor tachessand in the furtheſt edge or ſelvedge were the ſtrings in the firſt coupling, and ſo likewiſe in the furtheſt ſide of the ſecond curtaine in the ſecond coupling, where it was joyned with the third curtaine: and ſo Auguſtine very well interpreteth: So thou ſhalt doe in the ſecond coupling, Vbi committitur aulæum aulæo, tertium, ſcilicet ſecundo, &c. Where one curtaine is joyned to another, the third to the ſecond which was coupled to the firſt. 3. Neither is Toſtatus reaſon ſufficient: for there needed not any ſuch rings in the partition betweene the holy and moſt holy place, to hang the vaile on, for there were pillars and hooks appointed to that end, to hang up the vaile, verſ. 32. 4. And whereas Toſtatus further giveth this reaſon, why theſe two great curtaines were coupled together with golden rings: Quia tota vis extenſi- ni curtinarum pendebat à medio, &c. Because all the force and weight in the stretching out of the curtaines did depend upon the middest: which would easily have parted, if it had not beene surely tied and coupled together, &c. It may be answered, that seeing the curtaines were large enough without any extension or stretching of them to cover the Tabernacle, there was no such feare of drawing the one from the other: and seeing no mention is made of the coupling of these two great curtaines together, but onely of joyning five single ones together, and five more together: wee may rather thinke there was some other fastning made to stay the curtaines, than to resolve of that which is not expressed.

Toſtat. quæſt. 6.

Quæſt. 173. in Exod.

QUEST. VII. Of the loops and strings, how they were set and placed in the curtaines.

Vers. 5. FIftie strings or loops shalt thou make in one curtaine, &c. 1. Some think that the curtaines were tied together by strings, and that one string of one curtaine was right against another in the other curtaine, Genevens. But this is not like, for then the taches or hooks afterward appointed to be made, vers. 6. had beene superfluous. If it be answered, that the taches were set by the strings, ad decorem (onely) for comelinesse, Lippom. the text is against it, vers. 6. the taches were made for necessarie use to couple the curtaines together.

2. Cajetane thinketh that these loops were not put to the curtaines, Sed in ipso corpore cortinæ erant consutæ quinquaginta, but there were fiftie holes cut in the bodie of the curtaines, which were fastned together with double hooks, that clapsed them on both sides together. But the text sheweth, that these loops rather than loope holes were made of blew silke: they were not then cut out of the curtaines, which were of blew silke, purple and skarlet.

3. Some are of opinion, that the curtaines on both sides of the coupling had loopes and strings, and that the rings; as the Latine translator, or buttons, as Vatablus, were in the middest, and so were fastned to the loops on both sides: so also Lyran. Montan. Oleaster; and so they understand these words, that the strings or loops should be one against another. But the text favoureth not this interpretation: for if there were strings or loops on both sides of the coupling of the curtaines; why is it said, that they shall be in the further edge of the first, and likewise of the second curtaine? why should the further edge of the curtaines be onely mentioned, if both sides and edges had strings?

4. Wherefore it is more agreeable to the text, that in every coupling, on the one side there were loops or strings, and on the other side taches or hooks: because in the description of the place where the strings should be, onely the furthest edge or selvedge of the curtaine is spoken of: which sheweth that in the neerest or first selvedge of every curtaine should be the hookes: excepting the first curtaine, which because it was not joyned to any, needed not those hooks: as the last curtaine in the further side had no loops or strings. And concerning these words, The strings shall be one right against another; They are thus in the originall, The taches shall receive or hold, (the women to her sister) that is, one to another; Which cannot be understood of the strings, or loops, that they should hold one another: but the same phrase is before used, vers. 3. of the curtaines, which should be joyned, the woman to her sister, one to another: the strings then did not hold one another, but they held together the curtaines, Sic Iun. Piscator.

QUEST. VIII. How these first curtaines were disposed in the Tabernacle, and how they hanged.

Vers. 6. THey shall be one Tabernacle. 1. Not that they should be coupled together by loops and taches, and so be as one entire covering, as Tostatus with others expound: but they were so to be put together, as no space should be left betweene, that they might seeme all as one covering, Iun. 2. These curtaines being 28. cubits in length, covered the breadth of the Tabernacle from the South to the North, and being ten in all, and foure cubits broad a peece, which maketh in their breadth 40. cubits, they in their breadth covered the length of the Tabernacle from the East end to the West. 3. But because the whole length of the Tabernacle was but 30. cubits in all, as may appeare by the measure and number of the boords, which were twentie, every one being a cubit and halfe broad, vers. 18. which maketh 30. cubits: the overplus of ten cubits in the curtaines, which were 40. cubits in breadth from East to West, was thus disposed of: Neither did two cubits of these ten hang downe before at the entrance of the Tabernacle, as Piscator thinketh: for the first great curtaine consisting of five great curtaines, the breadth whereof was twentie cubits, served to cover the holy place; and where that curtaine ended, the most holy place began, Iun. for to what end else was that dividing of five curtaines from the other five? Neither yet were these ten cubits, that is, two curtaines and an halfe, cast all behind on the backside Westward of the most holy place which side as the rest were ten cubits high, as Lyran. Cajetan. for then the covering should have come lower at the end even to the ground, than it did on the sides, where it touched not the ground by a cubit, as shall even now be shewed. But it is like to make the falling of the covering alike in the end to the sides, that it came a cubit short of the ground, and so nine cubits hung over at the end, and the other cubit might goe over the first great curtaine where they met together. 4. And concerning the length of twentie eight cubits, which covered the Tabernale in the breadth, not twelve of them covered the top and breath of the Tabernacle, which Iosephus thinketh was twelve cubits broad, and Piscator consenteth with him: for then there should be but eight cubits hanging downe of a side, which was ten cubits high, as is gathered by the length of the boords, vers. 16. then two cubits on a side of the boords should be left uncovered, whereas one cubit more in length covered all the side of the Tabernacle, as followeth vers. 13. Therefore thus it was, of these twentie eight cubits, ten covered the top or roofe, which was plaine according to the fashion of houses in those countries, Beda: and eighteen cubits hung downe on the sides, nine on the one side, and nine on the other: so that they came short of the ground by a cubit. Sic Lyranus, Tostatus qu. 7. Cajetanus, Lippoman. 5. Thomas here hath this singular conceit, concerning these curtaines, Tegebant solum latera Tabernaculi, that they covered onely the sides of the Tabernacle, and not the top, and, tegebantur interius tabulæ cortinis, that the boords were covered within with thoſe curtaines: whereas the text is contrarie directly in both theſe points: for the firſt it is ſaid, that theſe curtaines made one Tabernacle, v. 6. but if the curtaines had made the ſides onely and not the top, it could not be ſaid to bee a Tabernacle, wanting a covering above. For the ſecond point: the ſecond curtaines of haire were to cover the Tabernacle, which was made of the other curtaines, verſ. 13. but they could not cover thoſe firſt curtaines, unleſſe they had hanged without: for there the haire-coverings hanged. Arias Montanus therefore upon better ground, placeth the Cherubim curtaines on the ſides without, covering alſo the roofe and top above. So alſo Ioſephus: Superne obtegebant, & parietes à lateribus, & à tergo. They covered them above, and the walles on the ſides, and on the backe-part.

1. 2. qu. 102. art. 4. ad 3.

Of

Lib.3. Antiq. 6.5.

QUEST. IX. Of the difference and diverſitie betweene the firſt curtaines and the ſecond.

Verſ.8. THe length of a curtaine ſhall bee 30. cubits, &c. Theſe ſecond curtaines were far unlike unto the other: 1. In their number, theſe were eleven, the other but ten. 2. In the matter; the other were made of blew ſilke, purple, skarlet; theſe of goates haire, which yet was no vile cloth, but ſuch as our chamblets are, Montan. Oleaſter. Theſe had but taches of braſſe, the other of gold: and the ſtrings of the other curtaines were of blew ſilke; here it is not expreſſed of what theſe ſtrings ſhould be made. But ſeeing the curtaines themſelves were of haire, Quid niſi capillaceas eas credibilius accipimus, &c. What are the ſtrings more like to be made of than haire, Auguſtin. 3. In the length theſe were 30. cubits, the other but 28. 4. In the manner of placing them; the other were laid ſtraight, theſe were folded and doubled the breadth of two cubits before and behind. 5. The firſt curtaines were coupled, five and five together; theſe are cupled five together, and the other ſix together, Oleaſter.

QUEST. X. How the ſecond curtaines were diſpoſed, and of the doubling of the ſixth curtaine.

Verſ.9. THou ſhalt double the ſixth curtaine, upon the forefront of the covering, &c. 1. Whereas theſe curtaines being eleven in all, and each of them of foure cubits in breadth, made in all 44. cubits, which covered the Tabernacle in the length, which was but 30. cubits; Beda thinketh, that the other 14. cubits remaining, hung downe, ſeven cubits before, at the entrance Eaſtward, and foure cubits on the backſide Weſtward: and ſo theſe curtaines in his opinion, did hang downe lower by two cubits at each end, than the other, which he thinketh hung over at the ends five cubits. But this is not like, becauſe at the entrance before, there was a vaile hung, verſ. 31. ſo that there was no uſe of the hanging of any curtaines there. 2. Iunius thinketh, that this halfe of the ſixth curtaine being the firſt in the ſecond order of curtaines, did ſerve to cover halfe of the laſt of the five curtaines. But that cannot bee, for two cubits of this ſixth curtaine did hang beyond any part of the other curtaines, which were but 40. cubits broad, whereas theſe were 44. cubits. Neither is it like, that any of the firſt curtaines hung over, becauſe there was a vaile there of the ſame ſtuffe, of blew ſilke, purple, and skarlet. 3. Some thinke, that by the forefront, or forepart, here is underſtood the Weſt end, becauſe it was the more worthie place, the Arke being ſet there, and that this doubling was on the backſide, Lippoman. But verſ. 12. that end of the Tabernacle is called the backſide, the ſame place could not be called, both the forefront and the backſide in the ſame deſcription. 4. Therefore the meaning is this, that whereas theſe ſecond curtaines exceeded the other in their breadth, which covered the length of the Tabernacle foure cubits; two cubits of this ſixth curtaine, ſhould hang over before at the entrance, and be foulded or doubled, that it might ſerve as a pentice to defend the vaile, which did hang there: and the two other cubits, ſhould hang downe likewiſe on the backſide, and be there folded, ſo that it ſhould fall downe lower than the other curtaines, by a cubit doubled or folded. But this muſt not be underſtood, de eodem ſago numero, of the ſame curtaine in number, but of the like quantitie in the overplus of another curtaine, Lyran. Toſtat. qu. 9. For it muſt not be imagined, that the ſixth curtaine ſhould as it were be cut in two: and the one halfe thereof hang before, and the other behind: but that the curtaines ſhould be ſo placed, as that they might overhang two cubits at each end, before and behind, Rupert. Hugo de S. Victor. Cajetan.

QUEST. XI. The great curtaine of the ſecond ſort, conſiſting of ſix ſingle curtaines, what place of the Tabernacle it covered.

Verſ.9. THe ſixth curtaine. 1. The ſixth curtaine is ſaid to be doubled, becauſe Pars ejus replicatur, a part thereof is doubled. 2. And hereby it may bee gathered, which of theſe two great curtaines, that which had ſix coupled together, or that which had five, covered the fore-part of the Tabernacle, which the hinder part; for here the one halfe of the ſixth curtaine is doubled in the fore-front; ſo that the ſix curtaines covered the fore-part of the Tabernacle, and the other five the moſt holy place, and the back-part thereof. 3. And hereupon it followeth, that becauſe theſe ſix curtaines contained in breadth 24. cubits, whereof two cubits hung downe before, ſo that 22. remained, and yet the firſt part of the Tabernacle without the ſecond vaile, was but 20. cubits long, that theſe ſix curtaines went two cubits beyond the diviſion of the Tabernacle, which ſeparated the holy, and moſt holy place: and conſequently, that then theſe two great curtaines did not meet together, where the other two did of the firſt ſort, which conſiſted of five curtaines a peece; but that they reached two cubits beyond the joyning together of thoſe curtaines, toward the Weſt, Toſtat. qu. 9.

QUEST. XII. What was done with the cubit which was overplus on the two ſides.

Verſ.13. THat the cubit of the one ſide, and the cubit on the other ſide of that, which is left of the length of the curtaines, may remaine on either ſide of the Tabernacle to cover it, &c. 1. Some underſtand theſe cubits to be left, the one in the fore-part of the Tabernacle, the other on the back-part. But that cannot be, for theſe reaſons: 1. Becauſe the text ſpeaketh of that which remained of the length of the curtaines:

curtaines: but it was the breadth of the curtaines, not the length, that covered the length of the Tabernacle, from the East end to the West: 2. This overplus was to cover the Tabernacle on both sides; but the East end of the Tabernacle was left open, there onely hanged a vaile: 3. These are said to be the sides of the Tabernacle, which were North and South, the other were the ends, not the sides, Toſtat. qu. 9. 4. And beside, here there is but a cubit remaining on each side: but in the two ends, before, and behind, there was halfe a curtaine over, which was two cubits, verſ. 13.

2. Piſcator thus apportioneth out theſe 30. cubits; 12. above in the roofe, which was the wideneſſe of the Tabernacle, and 9. of each ſide. But if this were ſo, the ſides being ten foot in height, then ſhould not theſe curtaines reach downe to the ground by a cubit: whereas the Text ſaith, that they covered the Tabernacle on the ſides, verſ. 13. and it is not like, that the boords covered over with gold, were left naked.

3. The ſounder opinion then is, that theſe ſecond curtaines did hang downe to the ground; and ſo the length of 30. cubits was employed, ten cubits on each ſide, and ten cubits above, Saga ad terram pertinebant, &c. The curtaines came downe to the ground, Strabus. So alſo Lyranus in the ſame words: Cajetane likewiſe. So alſo Oleaſter, Ad terram deſcendebat omnia operiens; It went downe to the ground, covering all things. So Ioſephus alſo ſaith, that the curtaines ſpread unto the ground, Inſtar thalami, like the covering of a bed. Lib. 3. de Antiquit. cap. 5.

Quest. XIII. Of the two outward coverings, whether they went all over the Tabernacle.

Verſ. 14. Or the Tent, thou ſhalt make a covering of rammes skins. 1. So the Tabernacle had foure coverings: one for ornament, the firſt curtaines of divers colours; the other for neceſſitie, to keepe the fine curtaines from the weather, ſome leſſe, and ſome more, Pront quæque viliora, ita tempeſtatibus viciniora, &c. As the coverings were more baſe or courſe, ſo they were neerer to the weather: firſt the badgers skins, then the red rammes-skins, and after them the haire cloth; and the beſt and inmoſt, were the curtaines of blew and skarlet. And the Tabernacle being thus adorned with varietie of colours, Non diverſa videbatur, quàm ſiquis cœlum contueretur, &c. It ſhewed, as if one ſhould behold the heavens, Ioſephus ibidem.

2. Some are of opinion, that theſe two outward coverings, did not cover the ſides of the Tabernacle, but onely the top or roof, Tectum tantùm operiebant; they onely covered the top, Strabus, Cajetan. Lippom.

3. But Lyranus, whom Toſtatus followeth, thinks, that they covered the ſides alſo, which otherwiſe would ſeeme not ſufficiently defenſed from the weather: and ſeeing the length, and wideneſſe of theſe coverings of skins is not expreſſed, it ſeemeth they went all over the Tabernacle, both before, and behind, and above, and below downe to the ground.

4. But I rather ſubſcribe unto Iunius, who thinketh, that the badgers skins onely covered the roofe; not much unlike as an houſe is covered with tiles, Pelarg. And the lower parts were hung with the rams-skins. 1. For they falling downe right, might keepe off the wearher well enough, which did beat upon the ſides. 2. And this may be gathered out of the text, which ſaith, They ſhall be covered with badgers-skins above, verſ. 14. that is, in the roofe or top: and for the ſame reaſon, that the other two curtaines were ſorted five and ſix together, for more convenient carriage, ſo it is like that theſe were divided, and went not over all the Tabernacle, for then they had beene too comberſome to carrie. 3. The cauſe why the meaſure of theſe skins is not ſet downe, as of the other, was, for that they were made of skins, which were not all of one quantitie, ſome greater, and ſome leſſe: and it being knowne how many cubits in length and breadth would ſuffice to cover the Tabernacle, in the deſcription of the other curtaines, it was not neceſſarie to ſet it downe againe.

Quest. XIV. Of the myſticall application of the coverings.

COncerning the myſticall application of theſe curtaines and coverings: 1. Auguſtine by the ten firſt curtaines, underſtandeth the ten Commandements: and by the eleven, the tranſgreſſion of the law; becauſe that number exceedeth ten by one. 2. Beda referreth the firſt curtaines of divers colours, to the divers ſorts of the faithfull and elect, whereof the Church conſiſteth: by the length of them, the patience and longanimitie of the Saints: by the breadth, he underſtandeth charitie: by the ſtrings and loops the Commandements of God, as in remembrance thereof, they were charged to make fringes in their garments: by the number of fiftie, the great yeare of Jubile in the Kingdome of God, or the grace of the holy Spirit, which came downe upon the fiftieth day. The haire-covering, and rams skins, he taketh to ſignifie the Paſtors and guides of the Church, by whom it is defended, and protected from hereſie: by the red skins, the Martyrs; by the badgers-skins, he would have ſignified thoſe, which have mortified the fleſh with the luſts thereof. 3. Gregorie by the curtaines underſtandeth the faithfull: Qui per fidem in cordibus cœleſtia ſecreta velant; Which doe vaile by faith in their hearts the heavenly ſecrets, &c. By the badgers skins the carnall, which are ſometime preferred in the Church: By the inward curtaines, ſuch as are given to contemplation, and ſhine in vertue. 4. Rupertus by the rams and badgers-skins, inſinuateth the rich in the Church, Qui Sanctis neceſſaria vitæ ſubminiſtrant; Which miniſter neceſſarie things for life unto the Saints. Thus diverſly according to their ſeverall conceits, the Fathers doe allegorize the externall Tabernacle, with the parts thereof, with more curioſitie, than profit or edifying. Quæſt. 107. in Exod. Homil 38. 25. Moral. c. 12.

4. But thus farre, theſe typicall rites and ordinances may be myſtically applied, as we have Scripture to direct us. 1. The three parts of the Tabernacle doe ſignifie the outward court, the Church of the Jewes under the old Teſtament: the holy place, the militant Church in earth, the moſt holy, the triumphant Church in heaven, Ferus. As the Apoſtle ſheweth, that of this familie, there is one part in heaven, another in earth, Epheſ. 3. 13. 2. The Tabernacle in generall, is a type of the Church of Chriſt: for as that was habitaculum taculum ceremoniale, the ceremoniall habitation of God, ſo this is the ſpirituall, Leon.26.11. 2Cor.6.16. Piſcator. 3. The foure coverings ſhew the moſt ſure protection and defence of the Church by Chriſt, againſt all the aſſaults of Satan, as our bleſſed Saviour ſheweth, that his Church is built upon a rocke, that the gates of hell ſhall not prevaile againſt it, Matth.16. Marbach.

QUEST. XV. How thicke the boords of the Tabernacle were.

Verſ.15. ALſo thou ſhalt make boords, &c. 1. The length and breadth of theſe boords is expreſſed in the text: but ſo is not the thickneſſe: 1.R. Salomon thinketh they were a cubit thicke. So alſo Borrhaius. But that cannot be, for then from one outſide to another, it would be 12. cubits; it being ten cubits from one inſide to another, (for it was within ſix boords broad, which made nine cubits; and the two corner boords, being halfe a cubit a peece, made the tenth cubit.) Then it would follow, that the firſt curtaines covered not the ſides by two cubits. But it is ſhewed before, *queſt.*8. out of the 13. verſe, that they reached downe to the ground within one cubit: and that the ſecond coverings of haire did hang downe on the ſides to the bottome, for they are ſaid to cover the Tabernacle. But if the boords had beene a cubit thicke, and the Tabernacle from outſide to outſide were 12. cubits broad, and the two ſides made 20. cubits, each ſide being ten cubits high; then the curtaines of 30. foot in length, could not reach to the ground, by a cubit on each ſide, *Toſtat.qu.*11.

Lib.3.Antiq.c.5. 2. Therefore Ioſephus opinion is more probable, that the boords were foure fingers thicke, and no more: though Montanus therein diſſent from him, thinking that they were of a greater thickneſſe, which yet he doth not certainly define. With Ioſephus conſent Lyranus, Toſtatus, with others. And this may be a good conjecture thereof, becauſe that is the uſuall ſcantling for the thickneſſe of planke boord. Seeing therefore the thickneſſe is not ſpecially mentioned, it is like that therein Moſes is referred to the ordinarie uſe.

QUEST. XVI. Whether the tenons were in the ſides, or in the bottome of the boords.

Verſ 17. TWo tenons ſhall be in one boord, ſet in order, as the feet of a ladder. 1. The Latine Interpreter readeth, In lateribus tabulæ duæ incaſtraturæ erunt, &c. In the ſides of the boord ſhall be two regals, or inciſians, whereby they ſhall one be joyned to another: ſo alſo the Chalde, or, one run into another, Septuag. This reading Toſtatus followeth, who thinketh that theſe regals ſerved to ſhoot the boords together in the ſides, that one might run within another. 2. Oleaſter alſo urgeth the Hebrew phraſe, becauſe it is ſaid, The woman to her ſiſter, that is, one againſt another: He thinketh it more probable, Quòd una ingrediabatur alteram, That one went into another.

Contra. 1. If one boord ſhould have beene ſhot within another, there would have beene at the leaſt an inch abated in the breadth of every boord, in twentie boords; twentie inches, almoſt two foot, above one cubit: then the twentie boords, being a cubit and halfe broad, would not have made 29. cubits, the length of the Tabernacle, which was 30. cubits. 2. And whereas all the boords were to have theſe two inciſians, one on the one ſide, and the other on the other; Toſtatus is driven to confeſſe, that the two utmoſt boords of the North and South ſide, had but one inciſian, becauſe they were joyned but on the one ſide to other boords, *qu.*11. 3. The Hebrew phraſe inferreth no ſuch thing: but as Cajetane better expoundeth, Quia æquales erant in omnibus inciſiones, Becauſe the inciſians were all alike, the breadth, the depth, the ſpaces, it is ſaid, A woman to her ſiſter. 4. The word, in lateribus, in the ſides, is not in the originall.

2. Therefore the word jadoth, which ſignifieth hands, is rather taken for the tenons, In imo tabulæ, in the bottome of the boords: which ſome tranſlate denticulos, teeth, Vatab. Some the hinges, Chalde, Iun. which went into the ſockets, or foot-ſtals of ſilver, as is deſcribed, *verſ.*19. Two ſockets under one boord, for his two tenons: Which ſheweth that theſe tenons were not in the ſides of the boords, but under them, becauſe they went into the tenons, Cajetan. Lippoman. So alſo Ioſephus, Singulis tabulis inerant cardines bini immiſſi per duas baſes; Every boord had two hinges, which went into the two ſockets.

3. Theſe tenons are ſaid to be ſet in order, as the feet of a ladder: not becauſe they were made ſlope, broad above, and narrow below, as Cajetane: but for that as ladder ſtaves they were equally diſtant one from another, Iun.

4. There were not foure of them in every boord, as Oleaſter, two on the ſides, and two below: but two onely under the boords, to goe into the ſockets or foot-ſtals.

QUEST. XVII. Why three ſides onely were covered with boords.

Verſ.18. TWentie boords on the South ſide. 1. The word temanah, the South, ſignifieth on the right hand: ſo that the South ſide is counted at the right hand, and the North is counted the ſecond ſide, *v.*20. 2. Auguſtine here reading columnas, pillars, in ſtead of boords, moveth this doubt, why on the Eaſt ſide no pillars are deſcribed, as in the three other: and reſolveth, that either the curtaines muſt be there extended, ſine columnis, without pillars: or ſome other thing is ſignified. But Auguſtine is deceived, becauſe following the Septuagint, he readeth στῦλοι, pillars, for boords: which, beſide the inconvenience he falleth into, thinking that the curtaine on the Eaſt was ſtretched out from ſide to ſide without pillars, is contrarie to the text, *v.*37. where five pillars are appointed to be made to ſtand in the doore of the Tabernacle. 3. The truth then is this, that three ſides onely were compaſſed with boords, the Weſt, South and North: the Eaſt end had no boords, but there onely did hang a vaile upon five pillars, Toſtat. Mont.

Quæſt. 173.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the ſockets and foot-ſtalls their number, and whether they were faſtened in the ground.

Verſ.19. THou ſhalt make forty ſockets. 1. The word adne in the plurall, eden in the ſingular, which ſignifieth a ſocket, baſe or foot-ſtall, is derived of adon, which ſignifieth a Lord or maſter; becauſe as adonai, the Prince, is the ſtay of the Common-wealth; as a King is called in Greeke βασιλεὺς, becauſe he be in the ſtay and baſis of the people: ſo theſe footſtalls or ſockets did beare up the whole frame, Oleaſt. Lippoman. 2. The moſt are of opinion, that theſe ſockets were ſharpe at the nether end, and ſo were driven into the ground, Lyran. Toſtatus. 3. But they were more like to be plaine and flat, Montan. for otherwiſe, being made of ſilver, they might have beene worne by often putting into the ground; Simler. And that they might have beene ſet upon any floore, Super marmoreum ſtratum, though it were paved with marble, as occaſion might ſerve, Cajetan. 4. Theſe ſockets were in number 96. two to every boord, which were in all 48. twentie on each ſide, and on the end eight, Montan. 5. Beda doth inferre out of Ioſephus, that theſe footſtalls were foure fingers thicke, anſwerable to the thickneſſe of the boords, which were ſo fatre lifted from the ground.

QUEST. XIX. Of the two corner boords, what breadth they were of.

Verſ. 23. ALſo two boords ſhalt thou make in the corners, &c. 1. Cajetane thinketh that theſe two corner boords were of the ſame breadth which the reſt were; becauſe it is ſaid, that every boord ſhould be a cubit and halfe broad, and ſo hee thinketh that the Tabernacle was twelve foot wide within. Bonhaius alſo thinketh that all the boords were of the ſame breadth, and that theſe eight boords made twelve cubits, whereof two cubits covered the ſide walles, which they met with in the corners, which were a cubit thicke. But this is not like, as is before ſhewed, qu. 15. that the boords were a cubit, that is, two great hand breadths thicke, 24. fingers: for they had beene then too comberſome to carrie, neither could the hangings have covered the ſides to the ground.

2. Some thinke that theſe two corner boords were but halfe a cubit broad at each end, ſo making up with the ſix boords, ten cubits, Lippoman. Toſtatus, and Ioſephus ſaith, that a boord was cut to halfe a cubit in the middeſt. But the boords were a cubit and halfe broad: one being then cut in the middeſt, would make an halfe cubit, and a quarter of a cubit, that is, ſix fingers. And beſide, if they were but an halfe cubit broad, there ſhould bee no over meaſure to meet with the ſides, which were foure fingers thicke.

3. Oleaſter thinketh that theſe two corner boords were a cubit broad a peece; whereof one cubit made up the breadth, the other cubit halfe in one corner, and halfe in another covered the ſides. But it is not like that theſe boords were of a divers ſcantling from the reſt, they were all of one breadth, a cubit and a halfe.

4. Lyranus will have theſe two boords, halfe a cubit and foure fingers broad: which meaſure of foure fingers was to cover the ends of the ſides. But by this meanes a new ſcantling of the boords muſt bee brought in, which is not to be admitted.

5. Therefore it is moſt likely that theſe boords were made of one, cut into two, as Ioſephus conſtrueth; and every halfe ſhould be in breadth a cubit and ſix fingers, which ſerved to fill up the corners: for the overplus of two fingers would not make ſuch oddes: or elſe every one of theſe two boords cut into two, were put together, and the one ſerved as it were to line the other, for the ſtrengthening of the corners; as Cajetane thinketh, that there were fruſta adjuncta tabulis angularibus, certaine peeces joyned to the two corner boords: and therefore they are ſaid in the 24. verſe to be as twinnes, Oleaſter. And this may ſeeme the more probable, becauſe they are ſaid to be eight boords: but one boord cut in two for the two corners, was not two boords, but two halfe boords. And that the corner boords were thus doubled, it may ſeeme the more probable, by the like in the pillars that compaſſed the court, which ſtood double at the corners together, as is ſhewed in the 15. queſtion of the next Chapter: for there being twentie pillars on a ſide, and ten a peece in the ends, and each of them ſuppoſed to be of equall diſtance, five cubits one from another, there will not be found to be ſo many, unleſſe we allow two to every corner: Cajetan. Theſe corner-boords, though but halfe in breadth to the other, had each their two ſockets as the reſt, for the ſtrengthening of the corners: for theſe eight boords had their ſixteen ſockets: and one of them by likelihood was pitched in every corner.

QUEST. XX. How the corner-boords were joyned as twinnes.

Verſ. 24. AND they ſhall be joyned beneath as twinnes and above, &c. 1. This is not to be underſtood of all the boords, that they were faſtned below by their baſes, and above with rings, Lyran. Toſt. for the words following, Thus ſhall it be for them two, ſhew that the two corner-boords are onely ſpoken of. 2. Iunius thinketh they were called gemellipara, twinnes, becauſe both the ſides of the boords in the corner which went the length and breadth of the houſe, were joyned together in the corner, and ſo they ſent out of each ſide, as it were twinnes. But this ſhould ſeeme to be ſuperfluous, ſeeing it is ſaid before, verſ. 21. that theſe boords ſhould be in the corners: which ſheweth as much in effect, that the two ſides meeting together in the corner, ſhould come out as twinnes: and againe it is ſaid that theſe boords ſhould be as twinnes: but now theſe of themſelves were not twinnes, but joyned with the other ſide corner-boords. 3. Cajetane thinketh, that they had onely fruſta aſſuta, certaine peeces joyned to, below and above, where the boords were cloſed together as twinnes. 4. Oleaſter therefore among other, giveth this as the moſt probable ſenſe, that they ſhould be as twinnes, that is, tota duplicata, all double, ut anguli eſſent craſſiores & abſtruſiores, that the corners might be thicker and cloſer from looking in. So Vatablus tranſlates, Gemini erunt inferni; They ſhall be double below, and double above, that is, thorowout.

QUEST. XXI. Of the order and number of the bars.

Verſ. 26. THou ſhalt make five bars of ſhittim wood. 1. Some thinke that theſe five bars were all in one row, one following in the end of another. But this cannot be: 1. For one order or ranke of bars had not beene ſufficient to keepe the boords together in every part above and below, they being ten cubits high. 2. The five bars one running into another along the ſides, which were twentie cubits long, must be of the length of foure cubits: but the breadth being but ten could not receive so many barres being put one to another; and yet all these barres must be supposed to be of the same length and measure, because no difference is made, *Tostat.quæst.*12. 2. Rab. Salomon thinketh, that there were five barres on a side in three ranks, two above, and two below, one joyning at the end of another, and the middle barre went thorow from one end to another: and of this opinion seemeth Lyranus to be, Simler., Borrhaius. But there can be no reason yeelded, why there should be but one barre in one ranke, and two in another: neither is it like that any one barre was twentie cubits long; for then it had beene subject to breake in sunder, and it had beene unfit for the length to be reared and transported. 3. Marbachius thinketh there were fifteene barres, five in a side in as many ranks. But it is not like that any the barres were so long to reach from one end to another. 4. Therefore Tostatus opinion is more probable, who saith, that these quinque vectes, were quinque vectium ordines, five ranks of bars. So also Montanus; and Iosephus saith that these bars were five cubits long a peece: so that there were no fewer than foure bars in a ranke in the sides of twentie cubits long, which (there being five ranks) come to twentie bars on one side, and twentie of another; and in the end which was ten cubits, having but two bars in a ranke, there must bee ten in all: so the whole number of bars in the end and sides was fiftie.

cubits

QUEST. XXII. Whether the middle bar went thorow the boords within.

Vers.28. And the middle barre shall be in the middest of the boords, &c. 1. The Latine translator understandeth this of all the bars, Qui mittentur per medias tabulas; They shall goe thorow the middle of the boords. So Cajetane understandeth, that quilibet vectis iret medius, &c. every barre should goe in the middest, that is, thorow the breadth of the boords. But the text is against this sense, which speaketh but of one middle barre. 2. Lyranus, and Montanus, Borrhaius, Simlerus, Marbach, Pelarg. are all of opinion, that the middle barre went thorow the middest of the boords within, being hidde in the boords. But this is not like: 1. Because all these barres were to goe thorow the rings: but this middle barre needed no rings, if it pierced the boords running thorow them. 2. Neither was there any use of laying the barres over with gold, if they were hid. 3. Beside it would have beene a great weakening to the boords to be bored thorow, *chap.*13. Tostatus. 4. And the boords must be supposed to have beene of a very great thicknesse: whereas they were all drawne with eight oxen, and carried in foure charets, *Numb.*3.6. and 7. Iun. 3. The usuall reading is, The middle barre shall goe thorow the middest of the boords: as if they had gone thorow some other way than the other. But the true reading is, The middle barre shall be in middest of the boords, going thorow, &c. so that the place is onely described, when this middle barre shall be set just in the middest. 4. Wherefore this barre is said to be in the middest, not in respect of the thicknesse of the boords, but of their length: the foure other ranks of bars should bee two above, and two below, and this third in the middest of the length of the boords, *Tostat.qu.*13. Iun. 5. Osiander thinketh that this middle barre was the sixth, and that there were five beside. But the text speaketh but of five in all, *vers.*26. 6. Cajetane thinketh that these bars went on the inward side of the boords, because they were laid over with gold. But Lyranus and Montanus thinke more probably, that they were on the outside; and the plaine side of the boords which was the fairer to be within. So also Iunius. And though they were without, yet they were to be laid over with gold, as the boords were on both sides: and so the first five curtaines, though they hung over on the outside, were of the same worke which that part was, which covered the top, and was seene within.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the mysticall sense of the boords with their sockets and bars.

CONcerning the mysticall application of the boords, with their sockets and bars, I will omit the curious allegories of the Fathers. 1. Prosper by the boords understandeth the Apostles, which were as pillars of the Church. 2. Rupertus by the boords would have signified the Pastors of the Church: by the bars, Divitum & potentium subsidia, the helpes and supplies of the rich and mightie, whereby the other are upheld and maintained. 3. Beda by the boords deciphereth the Apostles: the bases or sockets are, Legis & Prophetarum, the bookes of the Law and the Prophets, Vectes quinque sunt libri Mosaicalegis, &c. the five bookes of Moses law, &c. 4. Gregorie, Quid per tabulas nisi Apostoli extensa in mundum prædicatione dilatati? What is understood by the boords but the Apostles, which were spread abroad by their preaching thorow the world? 5. But these things may thus better be applied: The boords which as pillars stand up are understood to be the faithfull and beleevers, which are as pillars in the Temple of God, *Apocal.*3.12. The bars are the Pastors and Ministers, given for the edifying of the Church, by whom the whole body is coupled together, *Ephes.*4.12. Christ hee is the foundation, upon whom all the building resteth: as the Apostle saith, Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Iesus Christ, 1 *Cor.*3.10. Marbach. Pelarg.

Lib.28.moral. cap.9.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the vaile which hanged before the most holy place.

Vers.31. Thou shalt make a vaile of blew silke, &c. 1. Though the quantitie of this vaile be not expressed either for length or breadth, as in the other curtaines; yet it may be easily conjectured that it hung all the breadth of the Tabernacle, which was ten cubits, and the height of ten cubits; because it was to separate the most holy place, and to keepe it secret, Simler. 2. The pillars were here but foure, but in the doore of the Tabernacle there were five, because that being in the entrance, was to be opened in more places than one, but this was seldome to be opened, Simler. 3. These pillars had sockets of silver, nor sharpe at the one end to goe into the ground, as Lyranus thinketh, but they were plaine, to be set upon the ground, as the sockets of the boords were: their heads, what they should bee made of, is not expressed: and therefore Cajetane thinketh they were of wood, as the bodie of the pillars were, but overlaid with gold, as the bodie or shanke of the pillars was: and so it is said in direct words, *chap.*36.38.

their Chapeirs. 4. The word עבי is the traviled hoods or Latines Chaldron about the chapters and knops of the pillars. Ainsworth thinketh that in this place it is taken for the hooke or ring in the next verse, which is evident, Chap. 38. 28. where both these words are used, vavim, and rashim, that is hooks. The first word signifieth the crooked like to the letter v, such turning hooks. Lippom. So also rashim, which were set in the pillar hooks, to hold up the vaile upon the which QUEST. XXV. Where was it or hooks the vaile hanged under.

Thou shalt hange the vaile under the taches. 1. Iunius readeth in head of In place of those taches: for the word tachath signifieth both under, and in stead: and his meaning is, that the vaile hung up in that place, where the second of the neerest great curtaine, mentioned v. 3. began, which had no taches: for the last of the first five had no loopes, and the first of the second five had no taches, and the holy place should begin, where the length of the holy place ended. But this reason is not certaine: for it is like that the second great curtaine began there, but lapped over the end of the other: The five curtaines containing twenty cubits in breadth, would have covered the most holy place ten cubits wide, and the backe side being ouhes ten in height, downe to the ground, whereas the table on the backside, as is evident vers. 32. and so the vaile should not have been observed in the hanging of the curtaines, though his covering durst not have had rings or hookes, and that this vaile did hang by taches. But this had been superfluous, seeing the pillars had hookes made of purpose for them: and these to be the same with the hookes mentioned in the former verse. Gomarus, and others were in the top of the chapiters or heads of the pillars, and upon these hookes might these bar rods be, whereon the vaile hanged. But seeing the word here used is tachath, which hath before interpreted taches, and the other word is bariah, two divers things are signified, neither her taches upon the top of the pillars for then it had been superfluously added. Thou shalt hang thy vaile by taches, non ita pendere possent, nisi taches haberent; for it could not hang otherwise than by taches, Cajetanus especially seeing it is said before, Thou shalt hang it upon the foure pillars: hereby it is insinuated, quod hæc in fixi erant in columnas & capitella; that those taches were between the pillar and the chapter, Cajetanus. Therefore the meaning is, that this vaile should hang by taches, as the other curtaines did. Cajetanus thinketh there were certaine golden chaines upon the which the vaile did hang, mediantibus uncinis aut catenis aureis: golden taches comming betweene. Lippomanus thinketh better, Inserebantur velum funiculi aurei circulis: The vaile was held up by cords going thorow golden rings, whereby it might easily be drawne to and fro. So Iosephus, Annexi funiculo pendens; It hung by rings upon which cord or line went thorow the hookes, which were fastned to the pillars, spoken of in the next verse: and upon this cord did hang the vaile by rings or taches. Lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 5.

QUEST. XXVI. To what part of the Tabernacle the vaile was hung up, and why.

Thou shalt hang the vaile upon the taches, &c. 1. Though the place be not expressed where this vaile did hang; yet it may easily be gathered, that whereas the whole Tabernacle was thirty cubits long, the most holy place tooke up the third part, ten cubits thereof: for where the first five curtaines joyned to one, ended, which were in breadth twenty cubits, there the most holy place began, Iunius to that end it seemeth the curtaines were divided into two parts, five being put together here, and five there. Beda and Cajetanus doe gather as much by the proportion of Salomons Temple, which was thirty cubits long, whereof the third part, twenty cubits, was for the most holy place: and so it is like that Moses, whom Salomon tooke his proportion, allowed for the place of the Arke the third part of the length of the Tabernacle, which was ten cubits. 2. Hence also it is evident, that the most holy place was a iust square, ten cubits long, ten cubits broad, and ten cubits high: 1. Because Salomon observeth the same proportion in the Temple: the place of the Oracle was twenty cubits broad, twenty cubits long, and twenty cubits high, 1 King. 6. 20. 2. This most holy place was a figure of the celestiall Jerusalem, which is foure square: the length, breadth and height were equall, Revel. 21. 16. 3. And this vaile was hung to separate the most holy place from the rest of the Tabernacle, for these reasons: 1. That the Arke might have a peculiar place, for greater reverence, from whence the Lord spake unto Moses. 2. That the Lord might hereby magnifie his people, when it should be knowne to other nations, that God had his habitation among them. 3. That the people might have the greater confidence in God, whom they had as a presence visibly present, Tostat. qu. 14.

QUEST. XXVII. Why the table was set on the North, the candlestick on the South.

How shalt set the Table without the vaile, and the candlestick over against the table on the South side, &c. 1. Tostatus. quæst. 16. giveth this reason, why the candlestick was set on the South side of the table on the North: Quia lux corporum cœlestium venit ab austro; Because the light of the heavenly bodies commeth from the South. Lyranus also hath the like conceit, Quia sol videtur plus moveri, because the motion of the planets, which is from East to West in our hemisphere, declineth from the equinoctiall row and the South: and the table with the bread is set on the North, because in the Scripture by the word, is the plenty of corne, and other fruits. But the Apostle saith, Heb. 8. 5. that they served unto the pattern and shadow of heavenly things: therefore they were not appointed to signifie those worldly and carnall things. 2. Rather that allusion of Iunius is received, who faith, that both these were placed without the vaile, Quia in hac solummodo vita, vel scripturis sanctis, vel caeteris redemptionis sacramentis opus habemus, &c. Because only in this life wee have need of the scripture, and the Sacraments of our redemption: in the next life, which is signified by the most holy place, we shall have use of none of these things. And he further giveth this reason of the situation of the Lucerna posita dicitur contra Austrum plebem significans, quia prior lucem divinae cognitionis accepit, &c. South side signifieth the ancient people of God, which first received the light of divine knowledge: therefore the candlestick is placed on that side: the North part signifieth the Church called from the Gentiles, which last received the light of truth: to this purpose Beda. 3. But the Apostle, who maketh mention of the candlestick and table, speaketh nothing of their situation or placing, Heb. 9. 2. for our curiosity, that we should not seeke to draw every particular circumstance of the Tabernacle to a figurative sense.

QUEST. XXVIII. Wherein the first vaile and the second differed.

Vers. 36. THou shalt make an hanging for the dore of the Tabernacle, of blew silke, &c. and fine twined linen wrought with the needle-worke. Cajetane noteth foure differences betweene this vaile, and the other described before, vers. 32. 1. That hung upon foure pillars, this upon five: 2. That had sockets, this of brasse: 3. That was of embroidered worke, this wrought with the needle: 4. That was set forth with Cherubim worke, this was not. 2. Iosephus thinketh that this vaile was in all things textura priori par, like unto the former in largenesse, colour, and workmanship. 3. The Latine Interpreter also in both places readeth, operis plumarii, &c. they should be of embroidered worke, making no difference at all betweene the worke of the one and of the other. 4. But I subscribe rather to Cajetans opinion, that the other vaile was wrought with Cherubs, this was not, but with other pictures of flowers, branches and such like: and in them both there was needle worke, and the same manner of fine and curious workmanship. The first phrase, maaseh choshev, is referred to the skill of the workman; it must be wrought curiously, artificially, Oleaster, Iunius. The second phrase, maaseh rocem, with embroidered worke, or of divers colours, is referred to the worke it selfe, which was nothing else but cloth embroidered with divers colours, which the Italians call rechamare, after the Hebrew word; the Spaniards bordar, so it is taken, Iud. 5. 30. rechabim rimmah, embroidered with colours: which kinde of working, because it was first found in Phrygia, was called opus Phrygionicum, Phrygian or embroidered worke, as Martinus Iunius translateth: such as they made their flags and streamers of, which they hung upon the ends of their ships, Ezech. 27. 7. byssus berimach, of silke or fine linen so embroidered, brought out of Egypt. Oleaster saith it is not like they used needle worke about their sailes. So then neither was this vaile altogether divers both in the fashion of the worke, and the manner of workmanship, as Cajetane, not altogether the same as Iosephus. But there was this difference, that the one was wrought with Cherubims, the other without: as by this it may be conjectured, that although they were both made of the same matter, yet not after the same manner of curious worke, because the pillars of this vaile had sockets of brasse, the pillars of the other of silver, and so in the rest, it is like that this vaile was not altogether so costly wrought as the former.

QUEST. XXIX. Why the first vaile had no Cherubims as the other.

THe reasons also, why the first vaile differed from the second, both in manner of worke without Cherubims, and in number of pillars, were these: 1. Because this outward vaile was open to the view and sight of the people: therefore God thought it not fit, it should be made with the picture of Cherubims, lest it might have beene an occasion unto that weake and inconstant people of idolatry: with whither the Priests only came, were the pictures of the Cherubims to be seene in the curtaines and vailes, because they were not so apt to be entised by the view of them, as the people. But the Cherubims which were made of gold, and not only expressed in colours, were kept in the most holy place, even from the sight of the Priests also, the high Priest only excepted: because they had the most lively representation and image of Angels in humane shape, and were so much the more dangerous, Tostat. quæst. 1. 2. This outward vaile had five pillars, whereas the other had but foure; not because it was wider than the other, for the Tabernacle was but of one breadth, ten cubits from side to side; but by reason, that the outward vaile lay open to the winde and weather, it had the more pillars to strengthen it, Tostat. As also because they might enter in more than in one place, the pillars were encreased, whereas the other vaile was not so often opened, but once in the yeere for the high Priest to enter, to make atonement for the people, Heb. 9. Beda also thinketh, that beside these five pillars, there was a great barre or beame, that went from side to side in the doore of the Tabernacle. But no such thing is expressed in the text.

QUEST. XXX. What vaile of the Temple it was which was rent in the passion of our blessed Saviour.

NOw, it is also a question, seeing here mention is made of two vailes, one which hanged before the holy place, the other before the most holy: whether of these two vailes was rent in sunder, in the passion of our blessed Saviour. 1. Thomas thinketh, that exterius velum scissum fuit, it was the outward vaile of the Temple which was rent: and his reason is this, because the outward vaile did signifie the hiding of those mysteries which belonged unto the Church, which were revealed by Christ: the other signified velationem posteriorum cælestium, quæ nobis revelabuntur, the vailing of the celestiall mysteries, which shall be revealed in the next life; and these remaine vailed still. But this reason grounded upon his owne conceit and collection, is of no great force. 2. Tostatus opinion herein is better, that the vaile, Quod ponitur ante sanctæ sanctorum, which was put before the most holy place, was that which is called, Matth. 27. the vaile of the Temple, and was rent in sunder: and hereby (saith he) was signified that those things, quæ erant in veteri lege occultata, which were hid in the old Law, are by Christ

...revealed, *ibid.*14. And that it was the second, not the first vaile, it thus appeareth: because in Salomons Temple there was but one vaile made, which was drawen before the most holy place, whereof ... is made, 2 *Chron.*3. and so Iosephus witnesseth, *lib.*8.*cap.*2. To this purpose Ribera. And the ... interpreter in that place of *Matth.*27.51. calleth the vaile, faciem portæ, the face of the gate: Quia ... frontis instar in oculos incurrerat; because it confronted those which came in by the gate, ... them as it were full in the face, Iansenius. So also reverend Beza upon the same place, Antemurale, quo dividebantur sancta sanctorum à sancto; Hee understandeth the curtaine, or vaile, whereby the holy place was divided from the holy place. And the Apostle otherwise interpreteth the second vaile, ... doth: applying it to the opening of the way to the holiest of all, that is, to the kingdome ... which was not opened, while the first Tabernacle was standing. This vaile was then rent by Christ, ... by him the way is opened unto everlasting life.

*Ribera lib.*1. *de Templ. cap.*19.

*Heb.*9.8.

QVEST. XXXI. Of the mysticall sense of these vailes.

The mysticall application followeth of these vailes: 1. By the inward vaile is set forth unto us the glorious heavens, whereunto Christ is entered to appeare in the sight of God for us, as the Apostle expoundeth, *Hebr.*9.24. As the Priest entred once in the yeare into the most holy place: The same sense Beda and Rupertus. So that these two parts of the Sanctuary, have a signification of the Church ... in heaven, and of the militant Church in earth, which is nourished by the word of God, and ... Sacraments, in the hope of everlasting life, as in the outward part of the Tabernacle was set the candlestick on the one side, and the table with the shew-bread on the other.

2. Augustine saith, the former vaile and Tabernacle was, Figura veteris Testamenti, a figure of the old ... ment: and the second vaile with the most holy place, was a figure of the new Testament; whereby ... ified, that Christ hath removed the vaile, which shadowed the most holy place, and opened by his ... the way unto everlasting life, which could not be opened by the sacrifices of the Law, as the Apo... saith, Hebr. 9.8.

Quæst. in Exod. 111.

3. The Apostle also by the vaile understandeth the flesh of Christ, which vailed and shadowed his Di... by the which vaile he hath made a new and living way, so that by his bloud we may be bold to ... into the holy place, *Heb.*10.19,20.

4. By the vaile may be understood that separation, which was betweene the Church of the Jewes and ... which division and wall of partition is now removed by Christ, who hath made of both one, ... 14. Marbach. Petarg.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The Church is knowne by the Word and Sacraments.

Thou shalt set the table without the vaile. Beda by the table of shew-bread, understandeth the table of Christ, and the Sacraments of the Church; by the candlestick, the light of Gods ... by the which two, the Church of God militant in earth, is discerned and knowne. So also Simler. ... same would have understood, mensam Domini, & lucem verbi Dei, the table of the Lord, and the ... of Gods word. And as the table was never empty, but alwayes had bread: so saith the prodigall ... my fathers house is bread enough, *Luk.*15. there is the spirituall food of our soules to be had.

2. Doct. That none intrude themselves into the office of teaching without calling.

And thou shalt make an hanging for the doore of the Tabernacle, &c. This vaile was to keepe off the people from entring into the holy place, whither the Priests had accesse for their ... and ministery: which sheweth, that none should take upon them that Priestly function, but ... thereunto called and appointed: Ne quis se temere ingerat ad docendum; that no man should ... thrust himselfe into the office of teaching, Osiander. As the Apostle saith, *No man taketh this ... himselfe, but he that is called of God, as Aaron, Hebr.*5.4.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the Iewes.

Thou shalt hang the vaile, &c. Chrysostome urgeth this place against the Jewes, Sicut gloria domus est, ubi velum pendet, &c. As it was the glory of the house, where the vaile hanged, and ... it hanged; so the renting of the vaile of the Temple in two, ignominia templi est, is the ignominy ... of the Temple, and sheweth that the Spirit of God is departed from them, &c. Like as while the ... stood, and the vaile was whole and sound, it shewed that they had the presence of God, and he ... yet forsaken his habitation among them: So the parting and dividing of the vaile testified, that ... had dissolved their state, and would no more dwell among them, as our blessed Saviour foretold ... *Behold your house is left unto you desolate, Luk.*13.35.

*Homil.*2. de cruce & latrone.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious usage of the Romanists in the division of their Churches.

... this hanging up of the two vailes, which made two parts of the Sanctuary, and the outward court ... the third, whither the people only were admitted, Bellarmine would warrant the distinction ... in their Churches or Temples, dividing it into the porch or entrence, the body of the Church ... queere, which they say resembleth the holy place, to the which none were suffered to enter of ... people, but onely their clerkes and queere-men. And to this purpose they used in time of Lent to draw a curtaine in the middest of the chancell, to represent this vaile, which was spred before the most

Lib. 3. de cultu Templi. cap. 3. holy place, B. Babington.

Contra. 1. To follow the paterne of Moses Tabernacle, or Salomons Temple, for comelinesse and decencie, and due proportion of building in Churches, is not unlawfull for Christians, but it is a thing indifferent: any thing for comelinesse sake may be imitated, and borrowed from the example of former times. 2. But two wayes the Romanists offend in this imitation: both because they make a superstitious distinction of places, thinking the queere or chancell to be a place of greater holinesse: and in making a difference of the people, as though some were more holy than others, and not fit to enter into the holy 1 Pet. 2. 5. place, whereas Christ hath made all his servants, an holy Priesthood toward God, though for order sake and better edifying of the Church, there ought to be a distinction betweene the Pastor, and people. As also in placing the people a great way off, that they only see and gaze, but heare little, they hinder their edifying
1 Cor. 14. 26. and instruction: contrary to the Apostles rule, Let all things be done unto edifying.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. God requireth diligent and cheerfull service.

Vers. 1. IN shem thou shalt make Cherubims, &c. God seemeth to be delighted with these similitudes of Cherubims, which were winged to shew their speed and agility: to shew that he is delighted with those, qui summa diligentia verbum ejus faciunt, which are diligent in performing his word, Oleaster. As the Prophet David saith, I will run the way of thy Commandements, when thou shalt enlarge my heart.
Psalm. 119. 32.

2. Observ. That we should be inwardly adorned, and not make a faire shew outwardly.

Vers. 37. THou shalt cast five sockets of brasse for them. Men use to set the fairest shew outward; so doe not God: without are sockets of brasse, but within sockets of silver: to teach us, that Christians should not make a faire shew outwardly, but seeke to adorne the inward man, Oleaster. As it is in 1 Pet. 3. 3. the Psalme 45. 13. The Kings daughter is all glorious within. So S. Peter teacheth women, that their apparelling should not be outward, with broidered haire, and gold put about, but that the hid man of the heart in uncorrupt, &c.

3. Observ. God revealeth himselfe more and more to his children.

FUrther, whereas one comming into the Tabernacle, at the first entrance saw brasse, but going in further, the light of the golden candlesticke directing him, he saw nothing but gold: So he more and more looketh into Gods secrets, being illuminated by the Spirit, he shall finde every thing still more glorious
Iob. 42. 5. and heavenly, Borrh. As Iob at the first had heard of God but by the eare; but having had comfortable experience of his mercie in his affliction, then he saw him with the eye.

CHAP. XXVII.

1. The Method and Argument.

HItherto, chap. 25, 26. such things have beene described, as belonged unto the Tabernacle, with a description of the Tabernacle it selfe. Now in this Chapter such things are set forth as were without the Tabernacle, with a particular precept concerning the preparing of oile for the lampes. So that this Chapter hath two parts, an explication of the instruments belonging to Gods service without the Tabernacle, to v. 10. and of the service required concerning the oile of the lampes.

In the first, there is expressed, how the Altar of burnt offering should be made, to vers. 9. then a description of the place where it should stand, in the outward court, to vers. 20.

1. Concerning the Altar, these things are declared in particular: 1. The Altar it selfe is described, the bignesse of it, vers. 1. the parts thereof, the hornes in the corners; the matter, of Shittim wood within and of brasse without, vers. 2. 2. The instruments that belong unto it, vers. 3. 3. The fashion of the Altar, it must be made with a grate in the middest, vers. 4, 5. with barres and rings, vers. 6, 7. and hollow vers. 8.

2. The court is described in particular, how each side shall be, South, North, East, West; what length and breadth; what curtaines and pillars, to vers. 16. Then the gate is set forth how it shall be made, v. 16. Then is it described in grosse, how the pillars of the whole court shall be made, vers. 17. and what shall be the length and breadth of the whole, vers. 18. and of what matter all the vessels and pins shall be made vers. 19.

In the second part is shewed, concerning the oile, by whom it shall be prepared, and to what end, v. 20. and how it shall be used by the Priests, vers. 21.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 3. Of the divers reading of this verse, and of the divers names of the instruments, see quæst. 6. following.

I. Vers. Vers. 4. According, or by the grate, thou shalt make foure rings upon the foure corners thereof: that is, the grate. V. that is about the fourth place of the Altar, where the grate is: better than, shall make to the grate. S. or, upon the grate. A. P. B. G. for the grate was within, and the rings were fastened in the Altar: the preposition ſhall may be as well tranſlated, ſecundum, by or neere, as above upon.

28. Thou ſhalt make the Altar hollow of boords. I. B. V. C. Et tabulis concaua facies altare. S. better than, hollow boords. I.B.V. boords. G. P. for he ſpake of no boords before: or, Thou ſhalt make it, not ſolid, but hollow. L. for the word which ſignifieth boords, is omitted.

Hangings full of eyes, or holes. A. like unto a ſling or caſting-net, Oleaſter: for ſo he calleth ſignificantes of grate with inciſions and indenting, 1 King. 6. 29. the reſt grate curtaines or hangings in the temple, any other addition. I. A.

The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. Why the Lord commanded an Altar to be made, and of the higneſſe thereof.

THou ſhalt make the an Altar. 1. Seeing the chiefe part of Gods exteriall worſhip then conſiſted in ſacrifices, it is neceſſary that an Altar ſhould be made, whereupon their ſacrifices ſhould be offered; and the ſame but one, and in one place, leſt it might have given them occaſion to doubt of the true ſacrifice, that they ſacrificed to many gods, Toſtat. queſt. 3. 2. This Altar was but ſmall high, of an indifferent height, that the Prieſts might with a little ſtep ſtand up, and ſo execute their miniſtery at the Altar, Toſtat. But the height of three cubits was more than any man could reach unto miniſtred, as Auguſtine thinketh, ſeeing foure cubits is juſt a mans height, Iuniꝰ: and therefore Queſt. 113. like, that although there were no ſteps made to the Altar, yet there might be ſome ſlope going up, that the Prieſt might aſcend as it were by degrees: for how elſe could they afterward have miniſtred upon Solomons Altar, which was ten cubits high? 2 Chron. 4. 1. Iun. in cap. 20. 26. 3. It is called foure ſquare, not in reſpect of the whole Altar, for it was not ſo high as it was broad and long: but it is ſo called becauſe of the length and breadth, as is ſhewed above, which was foure-ſquare, every way five cubits. There were two Altars, this of the burnt offerings, of braſſe, and the golden Altar of incenſe, chap. 30. 1.

QUEST. II. How fire was made upon the Altar, framed of wood.

Of Shittim wood. Here Auguſtine moveth a doubt, how this Altar could be made of wood, ſeeing Queſt. 113. in Exod. that the ſacrifices were burnt upon it, and the fire never went out. 1. Some anſwer, that præſervatis ſimilitudo quo & locus ſacrificiorum a muſcis; that both the wood and haſſle that covered it were ſo ſeaſoned, that they conſumed not with the fire, as the place of the ſacrifices was preſerved from flies, Lyranus ſo alſo Oleaſter. But we need not run unto miracles, where other probable reaſons may be yeelded. Beda anſwereth out of Hieroms, that Altaris ligna, quæ de lignis paradiſi ſunt, non exemimunt ignem. That the wood of the Altar, which are of the wood of Paradiſe, were not burned by the fire, which was neere it, &c. And Beda himſelfe telleth of a certaine kinde of wood, which quanto plus aſſeritur, tanto magis tenebroſum redditur, &c. the which the more it burneth, the more pure it is. But, as Hugh de S. Victore ſaith, if the Altar were made of a wood that could not be conſumed with fire, Quid opus fuerit lamina, &c. What needed it to be covered with braſen plates? And yet it muſt be confeſſed, that ſeeing the fire never went out upon the Altar, and ſo the braſſe without being continually hot, muſt needs burn the wood within, that there was ſome extraordinary thing in it, as the fire of the Altar burned neither was quenched with any raine, as Toſtatus obſerveth, qu. 9. 3. Lyranus thinketh, that as the wood of Shittim, were imputribile, ſic & inconſumptibile, was not apt to conſume, ſo not eaſie to be burned or conſumed. But it is againſt the nature of wood not to yeeld unto the fire. 4. Toſtatus with others ſay, that the Altar being hollow was filled up in the middeſt with earth, and upon the earth with the grate made, which came not neere the ſides, the Altar being five cubits broad, and as many long, qu. 4. But if the Altar had beene ſo ſtopt with earth, there ſhould have beene no place for the grate, which was put under it. Therefore Ioſephus opinion is better: Craticulam profaculo ſuppoſitam habuit. That it had a grate Lib. 3. Antiq. cap. 7. in ſtead of an earth: in illo erebro compoſita ligna ardebant, the wood was laid in order upon the grate, and ſo burned, which grate was all of braſſe. Adde hereunto, that the Altar was covered with plates of the braſſe, to defend the heat: And the wideneſſe and length of it was ſuch, as that the fire could not come neere the ſides. 6. Toſtatus thinketh, that it was not tectum totum æreum, all the Altar was not covered with braſſe, but only midway, ſo farre as the grate went. But Abrahams ſaith better, that it was totum æreo obductum; That it was all covered with plates of braſſe, both within and without: and this is more agreeable to the text, that ſaith, Thou ſhalt cover it with braſſe: which being ſet down without any limitation, ſheweth that all the Altar was ſo covered.

QUEST. III. Whether the Altar were made of boords.

WHereas it is appointed to be made of Shittim wood: 1. Cajetane thinketh that it was not made of boords of Shittim wood: why he ſaith, Nulla conuerebant tabulæ; There went no tables to the making of the Altar. And whereas it is ſaid, verſ 8. Thou ſhalt make it hollow of boords; Cajetanus interpreteth it, vacuum tabularum, void of boords, quite contrary: and Oleaſter miſliketh not that ſenſe, but the better reading is, cauum tabularum, hollow with boords: or, hollow of boords, as reade Chald. Vatab. Pagnin. and the Septuag. ἐκ σανίδων, a boorded hollow ſhalt thou make it: it was therefore, inſtar arcæ, hollow like a cheſt without bottome or cover, Oſiander: and becauſe the Altar was holy, and ſanctified whatſoever was offered upon it; as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, Ye fooles and blind, Matth. 23. 19. whether whether is greater, the offering, or the Altar which sanctifieth the offering? it is like it was made close, that it might be more secret, and so the more reverenced.

QUEST. IV. How this place agreeth with that, Exod. 20. 25. where the Altar is prescribed to be made of earth, or unwrought stone.

Vers. 1. Of Shittim wood. This should seeme to be contrary to that Law, Exode. 20. 25. which the Altar is commanded to be made of earth, or unhewen stones: how then could it be made of wood? 1. Some answer, that God which made that Law, might also abrogate it; Tostatus saith not like: that God would give unto Moses contrary Lawes almost at the same time? 2. Tostatus findeth other answer, that the end and scope of that Law is here kept: for they were commanded to make the Altar of earth, or of rough stone, ne fierent in altari aliqua imagines, that there should be no images made on the Altar, lest it might have beene an occasion of idolatry: the intent of the same Law is here kept, because this Altar was made plaine without any figure or portraiture. But where a Law is made, not only the scope and intent of the Law, but the letter is to be kept: and beside, the reason there given of the Law why they should use unwrought stones is this: If thou lift up thy toole upon them, thou hast polluted them, vers. 25. The same reason as well restraineth the lifting up of the toole upon wood, as well as stone. 3. Iosephus answereth, that in the other Law, altaris nomine totius templi area, by the name of the Altar is understood the body of the Altar, upon the which the fire was made. But here by the Altar is understood id quod cubit altare, that which compasseth the Altar, &c. and was but as the walles and sides of it: and within it was filled up with earth, whereupon the fire was laid, Tostat. But here the whole Altar is described, with the hearth and all, which was the grate, as afterward shall be shewed, and beside it was hollow, therefore not filled up. 4. Therefore Iunius his solution is best, and Gallasius hath the same: quibusdam esse visum, quia temporaria, &c. He speaketh there of Altars to be made upon the sudden, upon some extraordinary occasion, which were but for a time, and so were to be dissolved againe; such as Moses and Elias made: but this Altar was to remaine and continue.

QUEST. V. What the hornes of the Altar were, and to what use.

Vers. 2. How shalt make unto it hornes, &c. 1. Lippoman thinketh, that these were not made indeed after the similitude of the hornes of bullocks, or goats, but they were certaine shining ornaments, that came out in the foure corners, as Moses had not hornes, (where the same word is used) but his face shined: so he thinketh, that these commings out in the corners of the Altar were only for ornament. But it shall appeare afterward, that there was a necessary use of them: neither is there any reason why here to depart from the literall sense of the word. 2. Some thinke that these foure hornes were certaine little pillars that went up streight in the corners, they were not crooked like hornes, R. Salomon, Gersonides. But why then should they be called hornes, if they had not any such likenesse or resemblance? 3. Arias Montanus in his description, maketh them to be plaine corners comming out straight without any running upward or downeward. But the contrary appeareth, Ezech. 43. 16. where it is said, the hornes shall goe upward. 4. Therefore according to the signification of the word, erant figura cornua, they had the proportion (it is like) of an horne, Cajetane: which were not only for ornament, but for diverse uses: 1. Into these hornes they used to binde their sacrifices, Psalm. 118. 27. 2. The hornes of the Altar were a sanctuary to them which laid hold of them, as is evident in Ioabs practice, 1 King. 2. Palæphatus, 3. Oleaster also thinketh, that they served to hold up the grate, which hung within the Altar, upon the foure hornes by rings and chaines. 4. They also signified, that God was the strength of Israel, as David calleth him the horne of his salvation, 1 Sam. 22. 3. Gallas. 5. And upon these foure hornes or corners did they use to sprinkle the blood of the sacrifices, whereby was shadowed forth the blood of Christ, that should by faith be sprinkled into the foure corners of the world, Simler. 6. Tostatus imagineth another use of these hornes, to hang the brasen instruments and vessels upon, which were of foure sorts: it followeth in the next verse, quæst. 4. But he is deceived in following the vulgar Latine: there were not severall kindes of instruments, and not foure only.

QUEST. VI. Of the vessels and instruments belonging to the Altar.

Vers. 3. How shalt make his ashpans, &c. 1. The first word (sir) signifieth ollam, or lebetem, a great pot or caldron, a great vessell made to receive such things as were put into it, whether they were drie or liquid. They had pots and caldrons beside, to seeth the flesh of the sacrifices in; but these were not to that end, they served only to receive the ashes, as it is expressed in the text. Tostatus thinketh, that the vessels wherein the flesh of the peace offerings was sod, were not consecrated vessels, but such as the Priest provided, which brought the sacrifice, to whom it belonged to seeth the flesh, and then to give the Priest his due, as may be gathered, 1 Sam. 2. 13, 14. where the Priests boy came to him that boiled the flesh, and thrust in his flesh hooke, and tooke up that which came next to hand. And beside, Levit. 2. 28. it is prescribed, that the earthen pot wherein the flesh of the sinne offering was sodden, should be broken; if it were a brasen pot, it should be scoured: but if they had beene consecrate vessels, they were holy already, they needed not to be so purged. But herein Tostatus is deceived, he maketh all the offerings alike, whereas the Law in Leviticus is concerning the sinne offering, which was so holy, that even the Priest was to wash his ministring garments, if any of the sinne offering dropped upon it, even in the holy place: therefore the vessell though otherwise consecrate, after they had touched the sinne offering, were to be cleansed, as the Priests consecrate garments: therefore it is like, that there were other peculiar vessels appointed for the seething and dressing of the flesh of the sacrifices, in the court of the Tabernacle, though they here expressed served only for the Altar.

2. The next instrument is japhion, which some interpret scopas, besomes, as Vatab. Pagnin. Geneva. But all these were made of brasse, it is not like they were besomes: some take them for firetongs, La. Tost. But they were an instrument, quo cinores removebantur, wherewith the ashes were removed, Oleaster. They were then (pale) the fire-shovels, which tooke the ashes from the Altar, Iun. Montan. They are called jaghim, of jaghah, to remove or take away, as Isai. 28. 17. The haile shall sweepe away the vaine confidence.

The third sort is mizrokoth, which commeth of zarak, to sprinkle: they were not to sprinkle with, translateth them, aspersoria, the sprinkles, being made of brasse, neither to carry the ashes, for to that end were the two former instruments: but they were pelves sparsoria, the sprinkling basons, which held the blood, Vatab. Pelves ad fundendum sanguinem, basons to powre out the blood Hugo de S. Victor. So Iunius reades, crateras, bowles, goblets. This third kinde is omitted by the La. Translator.

The fourth kinde is mazleg, which some take to be a fire-forke, which served ligni componendis, to set the wood upon the fire, Osiander. The most take it for a fleshhooke, Sept. fuscinula, Iun. an instrument which served to pull the flesh out of the pot, as 1 Sam. 2. 12. Tostat. Oleaster. It is like they had hookes to that purpose; but this being appointed for the Altar, served to this end, Quibus carbones ardentes ultimum componebantur; wherewith the coales and parts of the sacrifices were laid in order, Hugo.

The last word is machta, which some translate forcipes, tongs, Iun. Montanus. But there is another word for tongs, Isa. 6. 6. melekachaim, of lakach, to take: some take them for censers, Chal. Genev. which word is sometime used, Numb. 16. 12. But the censers were no instruments belonging to the brasen Altar: they were therefore certaine fire-pans, which they kept the fire in, of chatah, to take or receive, Exod. 30. 14. There is not a sheard found, to take fire from the hearth: there the same word is used. The use of these fire-pans was ad portandas prunas, to carry the coales, Hugo de S. Victor. To transport them to the Altar of incense, Cajetan. Ad fovendum ignem, and to keepe fire in, when they covered the Altar, Osiander, Marbach.

QUEST. VII. Whether all the instruments were of brasse.

Thou shalt make all the instruments thereof of brasse. 1. Cajetane thinketh, that all the instruments fit for the service of the Altar, are not here named: and therefore this generall clause is added. But it is evident, chap. 38. 3. that those five sorts were all the instruments that belonged to the Altar. It may be objected that the tongs, which the Angell tooke a coale with from the Altar, are not here mentioned. It may be answered, that although they be not here expressed in that very word, yet the fire forkes here mentioned, which some call forcipes, firetongs, were to that use, and under that name they may be understanded, or under the last, as Iun.

Philo thinketh, that all these instruments were of gold. But therein he evidently doth contradict the text which saith, Thou shalt make all the instruments of brasse.

It is evident then, that nihil ex ferro admittitur, nothing is made of iron, Cajetan. It will be demanded wherefore, as well the iron, as brasse, which they tooke in the spoile of Jericho, Iosh. 6. 19. was consecrate to the Lord, and was to come into the Lords treasury. Tostatus answereth, that the iron might serve for divers purposes, though it were not used to make any of the vessels or instruments of the Tabernacle: as to make hammers of, for the Levites to take downe, and set up the Tabernacle; as also hatchets to cut the wood, and knives to slay and dresse the sacrifices, qu. 5.

QUEST. VIII. Whether the grate made to the Altar were set within or without.

Thou shalt make unto it a grate like networke. 1. Some thinke that this grate was put on the outside of the Arke, and compassed it round about, a cubit and halfe from the bottome: and that rather ad pulchritudinem, quàm necessitatem, for beauty and comelinesse of the worke, than for any use. And within they say the Altar was filled up with earth, whereon the sacrifices were burnt, Tostatus, following R. Salomon: So also Osiander, Pelarg. Marbach. And Cajetane defineth how large it was, 20. cubits square to compasse the Altar round about, and a cubit and halfe high from the ground. And that it was made like unto a sieve with networke, with small holes; that both the fire might passe thorow it, and yet it might keepe the winde from the flame.

1. The text sheweth, that this grate should be in the middest of the Altar; but if it compassed round a cubit and halfe high, it was not all in the middest, it was as well in the bottome, as in the middest. If this grate were without, it should seeme to bee of no great use, and as it were a superfluous thing: for it was unfit being full of holes, to keepe off the winde; and the Altar was compassed with fire round, that it needed no such defence. 3. And if this grate were not placed within, the chiefe and principall part of the Altar should be omitted, where the fire should be made, and the sacrifices burnt. Whereas they say it was filled up with earth in the middest; Ribera sheweth it was rather raised with stones, which he would prove by that place, 1 Macchab. 4. 44. where it is said, They destroyed the Altar of burnt offering which was defiled, and laid up the stones upon the mountaine, &c. till there should come a Prophet that should shew what should become of them. But it seemeth that Altar was made all of stone, and filled only with stones; for to what end should they be reserved, if they had beene rough and unhewen stones? and the rest of the Altar had beene as well defiled, as the stones, if it had not beene all of stone. Lib. 2. de Templ. cap. 20.

2. Some Hebrewes are of opinion, that the Altar was ten cubits high, and this grate served as a step for the Priests to stand upon, and minister upon the Altar, which was three cubits above the grate, which, which, they say, covered seuen cubits below; so that where the Altar is said here to be three cubits high, they say that part of the Altar is only meant, that was above the grate.

Contra. 1. But it had not beene possible to have carried an Altar of that height, vpon barres which were made to beare it, vers. 7. and seeing the grate came vp to the middest of the Altar, if it were but two cubits high, then there must be five cubits still remaining above the grate, which had beene too high for a man to reach vnto. This grate was not then made for any such vse, to stand vpon.

3. Some thinke that this grate was put within the Altar, and that it had an hearth beneath about the middest of the Altar, with a doore in the side to put in the coales, and rake out the ashes: and this grate was in the top almost equall with the brim of the Altar, whereon they laid the sacrifice, which was consumed by the flames which ascended thorow the grate. So Beda, whom Ribera followeth, and Oleaster.

Contra. 1. This opinion seemeth to be grounded vpon the errour of the Latine Translator, who interpreteth the word carcab, which signifieth the circuit or compasse, ambe, the hearth, thus reading, cap. 38. 4. he made a brasen gate of networke, and vnder it in the middest of the Altar, an hearth: whereas the true reading is this, vnder the compasse of it, beneath in the middest of it. 2. The grate was in the middest of the Altar, therefore not in fummitate, in the top, as Ribera. 3. If any such doore had beene made in the side, it is like it should not have beene omitted in the description of the Altar, it being so necessary a part. 4. And this opinion is contrary to the text, Levit. 1. 8. where it is shewed, that the sacrifice should be laid vpon the wood: they were not then put asunder. Tostatus vrgeth this place, which Ribera only answereth, denying that it concludeth any such thing, standing vpon the Latine text, which only hath ordinantes, laying in order aboue, which he vnderstandeth of the grate: whereas the words, according to the originall are, they shall lay the parts in order vpon the wood.

Lib. 3. de Antiquit. cap. 5. 4. I preferre then the opinion of Iosephus: Craterem pro facula superpositam habens; That the Altar had this grate in stead of an hearth, and that the ashes and imbers fell thorow it to the ground. So also Iunius Montanus: and the ashes so falling downe to the ground might be conveniently taken thence by the Leuites, Lippoman. This best agreeth to the description: for thus wee shall have an hearth for the Altar which otherwise should be omitted: the Altar shall be left hollow, vers. 8. and the grate is placed by this meanes just in the middest, being put within the Altar, and so resting in the middle. It was made like vnto net-worke with small holes, not very wide, for then not only the ashes but the fire, and some parts of the flesh might have fallen thorow. Iun. Cajetane also giveth this note, that it is resembled both to a sieve or grate, and to a net: vt aliquid cribri, & aliquid retii intelligeremus; that we should vnderstand it had part of a sieve, part of a net: it was in fashion like a net, but the holes were small, as in a sieve.

QUEST. IX. Of the rings of the Altar, whether they were put to the grate or to the Altar.

Vers. 4. ALso vpon, or at the grate shalt thou make foure brasen rings, &c. 1. The Latine interpreter and they which follow him, are driven here to a great streit: for in this place he readeth; Quæ pones subter arulam altaris; Which rings thou shalt put vnder the hearth of the Altar. Here he maketh the rings vnder the hearth, which was vnder the grate: but chap. 38. 5. he readeth, Fusis quatuor annulis per quatuor ejusdem reticuli extremitates; He cast foure rings by the foure ends of the net or grate. Then were the rings both above the hearth, for so the grate was, and vnder it. Tostatus is driven to this shift to say, that they were secundum vnum modum subter, in one respect vnder it, in another above it: in respect of the hearth of the Altar the rings were vnder it; but considering the rings were without, and the grate with the hearth within, they might be said to be above. Contra. 1. But so the rings are well said to be without, not above, seeing they were further from the brim of the Altar by this description, than the grate. 2. This inconvenience is better avoided, in having recourse to the originall, where the word is carcab, which signifieth the circuit or compasse, and is referred to the Altar, not an hearth with relation to the grate, as is before shewed. Quæst. 7.

2. Oleaster thinketh that these rings were made in the ends of the grate, and that it did hang vpon the hornes of the Altar by these rings. So also Ribera, who thinketh, that beside these foure rings belonging to the grate, there were foure more in the Altar to beare it by. Contra. The contrary appeareth, chap. 38. 5. He cast foure rings of brasse for the foure ends of the grate to put barres in, &c. There were but foure rings made in all: the same rings which were made for the grate, serued also to carry the Altar.

3. Montanus thinketh, so also Genevens. in their description, and Ribera, that the grate had foure feet whereupon it stood within the Altar, and was lift vp by the rings, to be taken in and out, as occasion serued. But seeing the rings of the grate are expressed, why should the feet be omitted? It is not safe without good warrant, to supply that which is not in the text expressed.

4. Some thinke that the grate was fastened with nailes vnto the Altar, as Oleaster reporteth their opinion: but it seemeth by the text the grate setled in his place, by the very putting of it into the Altar, without any other fastening, vers. 5.

5. Others, that place this grate without below in the compasse of the Altar, thinke that the rings were set into the Altar, at the foure corners of the grate. But this opinion is at large confuted before, [illegible]

6. This then remaineth, that these rings were not set to the grate, but they were put into the Altar, that place where the Arke rested within; so that the preposition ghal is not to be translated here, vpon, but rather secundùm reticulum, after, or according to the grate, Iun. or ad rete facies, thou shalt make them at the grate, Vatabl. So is the preposition ghal taken, vers. 21. the vaile, which was not vpon, but before or ouer the testimony. The rings then were fastened without, for the barres to goe thorow to beare the Arke, and within the ends or hookes of those rings were a rest for the grate, Iunius. Rete intrinsecus, [illegible] sustentans

...ferentem unctis & aruliis; The grate was within the Arke, &c. being held up with the hookes and rings in the corners of the Arke, Lippom. Thus this grate was as the hearth for the fire and wood to bee ...ed upon, being therefore made all of brasse, not of wood covered with brasse, as the rest of the Altar: and it being in the middest of the Altar a cubit and halfe deep from the top, the fire might play and burne cleere, being fenced in by the sides of the Altar from winde and weather.

QUEST. X. Of the mysticall interpretation of the Altar.

THis Altar is thus mystically applied: 1. Gregorie by the Altar understandeth the penitent heare: Ubi cor mentis compunctionis igne ardet, & caro consumitur; Where by the griefe of heart the fire of compunction is kindled, and the flesh is consumed, &c. and by the two Altars, the one of incense, the other of burnt offerings, he saith, are set forth two kindes of compunction; the one proceeding of love, the other of feare. 2. Beda by the Altar likewise would have signified, the hearts of the faithfull, by the five cubits in length and breadth, the mortifying of the five senses; by the foure hornes in the corners, the foure cardinall vertues; the divers vessels and instruments, signifie the divers actions of the faithfull, whereby they serve their Creator: by the grate is set forth the place, which the elect doe prepare for God in their hearts: by the foure rings, the foure Gospels; and by the barres, the Preachers which propagate the same. To the same purpose Ribera following Beda. But these mysticall applications are somewhat curious. This Altar rather signifieth Christ himselfe, who was sacrificed for us upon the Altar of the Crosse: of him the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 13. 10. We have an Altar, whereof they have no authority to eat, which serve in the Tabernacle. 2. By the hornes is noted the power of our Saviour, who both is the horne of our salvation, and with these hornes will push at the enemies of his Church. 3. By the hollownesse and emptinesse of the Altar is signified the humility of our blessed Saviour, qui se exinanivit, who abased and emptied himselfe, taking upon him the forme of a servant. 4. By the barres and other vessels, are described the Ministers of the Church, which carry the truth by preaching from place to place, purge the earth, and nourish the heate or fire of charity, Pelarg. Murbach. Borrh. Osiander.

QUEST. XI. Whether one court were made, or two, or more.

Thou shalt make the court of the Tabernacle. Here is but one court described; and yet David in the Psalmes maketh mention of courts in the plurall, as Psal. 84. 2. My soule longeth, &c. for the courts of the Lord: and Psal. 92. 13. and in other places. 1. Calvine thinketh, writing upon this place of Exodus, that there were two courts, unum sacerdotale, alterum commune totius populi; one of the Priests, the other common for all the people. But howsoever the courts might be increased afterwatd, it appeareth here by Moses description, that there was but one, in the middest whereof was the Tabernacle. Simler thinke, duo quadrata hoc spatium continet, that this large court was divided into two squares; one wherein the Tabernacle was, the other where the Altar of burnt offering stood, and each of them was fifty cubits square, Simler. But howsoever the Tabernacle was situate, there was no division of the court: for then should have beene separated with pillars and curtaines, as the rest of the sides; but there is no mention made of any such. 3. I rather thinke therefore with Iunius: Hoc institutum fuisse temporarium, dum Ecclesia fuit Israelitarum respublica, &c. That this was but appointed for a time, while the Israelites had as it were a walking and removing common-wealth: but afterward the courts were inlarged and distinguished, as there was one of the Levites apart, another of the men apart, and of the women apart, for the better expedition both of the Ministers, and of those which came to worship. Neither herein did they depart from the first institution, of retaining the substance; they did alter some fashion and circumstances of the place, as might seeme most fit for the furthering of the service of the Tabernacle. Iun. in Analys.

QUEST. XII. Why the court was made, and of what largenesse.

NOw this court was thus appointed to be made: 1. Because it was fit and requisite, both in respect of the brasen Altar, which could not stand within the Tabernacle, because the fire and smoke would have annoyed it, and spoiled the hangings: and the Altar being consecrated to holy uses, was not to stand in any prophane and common place: as also the majesty of the Tabernacle, and the sanctity and reverence of the place so required, that it should be fenced about, and none be suffered to come neere it, Tostat. qu. 7. and it was fit to be made of a large capacitie, one hundred cubits long, and fifty broad; both for the spreading out of the cords, which being fastened unto brasen pins in the ground, did beare up the Tabernacle: as also for the divers services of the Levites, which were performed in the outward court; and because of the number of the officers, who were admitted to come in, there to eat and drinke of their peace offerings before the Lord, Deut. 12. and 16. Tostat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XIII. How the Tabernacle was situate in the middest of the court.

NOw the Tabernacle was situated in this court, it is also questioned: 1. Tostatus reporteth the opinion of some, that thinke the Tabernacle was set wholly without the court; and that this court was a square place compassed in with pillars and curtaines by it selfe, yet not farre from the Tabernacle. 1. Then this court should have beene superfluous, if the Tabernacle had not beene within it, not only the Altar, which was at the doore of the Tabernacle, chap. 29. 42. for to what use should it have served, if there had beene no holy ministration there? 2. It is contrary also to the text, chap. 40. 33. which saith, he reared up the court round about the Tabernacle: then it must needs follow, that the Tabernacle was within it. Lippomanus and Lippomanus thinke that the Tabernacle was equally distant both from the sides, that is, fifty cubits from the North side, and as many from the South, the Tabernacle being ten cubits broad, and so wee have the breadth of fifty cubits: and likewise he thinketh, that the Tabernacle containing containing in length thirty cubits, the rest of the length, which is seventy cubits, was equally divided: the Tabernacle was pitched in the length 35. cubits from the East, and 35. cubits from the West. But this is not like, as Tostatus well noteth, that there was no more space left before the Tabernacle, than behinde, seeing all the services of the Levites, and the offerings of the people were before the Tabernacle; and that part behinde seemed to be a void place. Iosephus indeed saith, Tabernaculum statuit in medio; He set the Tabernacle in the middest, &c. But we need not understand precisely in the very middest: it was set within, and the court did compasse it round about.

Lib. 3. de Antiquit. cap. 5.

3. Montanus in his description of the Tabernacle, though he set not downe a certaine proportion of distance betweene the ends of the Tabernacle, and the ends of the court, East and West, yet seemeth to joyne the Tabernacle, by the sight of his plat, as it were ten cubits from the West-end: and he allowed a greater space in length, from the East-gate of the court unto the East-end of the Tabernacle, than from thence to the West-end of the court. But then the standing of the Tabernacle should not observe an uniforme proportion, it being further from the sides, namely, twenty cubits, than from the West-end.

4. Therefore I preferre their conjecture, which thinke that the length of the Tabernacle, with the space betweene the most holy place, and the West-end of the court, contained fifty cubits, halfe the length of the court: that is, the length of the Tabernacle thirty cubits, and twenty cubits the space betweene the West-end of the Tabernacle and the court: and the other fifty cubits remaining in the length were extended from the doore of the Tabernacle to the doore or entrance of the court, Bertram. Rodigas.: for thus the Tabernacle of every side, saving before, shall observe a due proportion of distance, being twenty cubits on the three sides, removed from the walles of the outward court.

Quest. XIV. Of the hangings which compassed the court, the fashion and bignesse of them.

Vers. 9. The court shall have curtaines of fine twined linen, of an hundred cubits long for one side. These curtaines or hangings were not so costly as the other which covered the Tabernacle, for these only were made of fine linen, not of blew silke, purple, and skarlet, as the other; neither were they wrought with Cherubims as the other: the reason whereof may be this, lest the sight of images and pictures might have beene an occasion of idolatrie unto the people, Tostatus quæst. 8. 2. R. Salomon thinketh, that they were made with eyes and holes like net-worke, that the people might see thorow. So also Lyran. Iun. Oleaster. For the word is kelagh, which signifieth a sling or casting net: some thinke it was wrought with the pictures of a sling; but that is not like; the curtaines rather were full of network, for the reason before alleaged. 3. For the length of these curtaines, they were neither all one curtaine, as Calvin thinketh, on one side, an hundred cubits long, for they had beene too cumbersome to carry: nor yet were they so narrow, as a cubit, as Simlerus would gather, vers. 15. There shall be on the other side fifteene hangings, for cubits must be supplied, as in the former verse, There shall be hangings of fifteene cubits. But Lyranus conjecture is more probable, that they were five cubits broad, from pillar to pillar, which stood five cubits asunder, and so were joyned and coupled together. 4. These hangings were an hundred cubits long on one side, and an hundred on the other, and 50. on each end, so that they made in all 300. cubits.

Quest. XV. Of the situation and placing of these pillars.

Vers. 10. It shall have twenty pillars, with their twenty sockets of brasse, &c. 1. These pillars being twenty on each side, and ten in each end, doe make in all sixty pillars: whereof two must be imagined to stand in each corner, for otherwise there would fall out 22. on a side, or twelve at an end, if they stood in like distance one from another, or if ten bee counted at the ends with the corner pillars, there will be beside them but eight at an end, and so there should want foure pillars of the number: therefore Cajetanes conjecture is more probable, that there were two pillars in each corner, to make up the full summe of sixty pillars, than Montanus description, wherein the corner pillars are counted both of the number of the ten in the ends, and of the twenty pillars in the sides. And further, these pillars were set on the inside of the hangings, as Gregorie saith, Intus columnæ immobiles stant, foris paxilli funes continent; The pillars stood immoveable within, and the pins held the ropes without, super Ezech. hom. 5. Iosephus also saith, it was so hanged about, Ut nihil à pariete differre videretur; that it seemed little to differ from a wall, Lib. 3. de Antiquit. cap. 5.

Of the height.

2. Concerning the heigth of these pillars, both Montanus is deceived, who thinketh they were nine or ten cubits high: and Procopius who followeth the Septuagint, who reade in the 15. verse, Quinque cubitorum velorum altitudo; The heighth of the curtaines of 15. cubits: which Augustine would thus helpe, Quæ jacentium latitudo, erectorum altitudo est; That which is the breadth of the curtaines lying, is the heigth standing, &c. as though they should call that the heighth, which is the breadth: but there is no such word in the originall, that signifieth heighth. They were then but five cubits high, as Iosephus saith, and it is evident in the text, v. 18. The heighth shall be five cubits, which was but halfe the heighth of the Tabernacle, so that it might well be seene and discerned; and yet it was higher, than that one might looke over, Tostat. quæst. 8.

Quæst. ultim. in Exod.

Of the distance.

3. The distance also of these pillars was five cubits off each from the other, as may be thus gathered: there were twenty pillars on a side, which was an hundred cubits long; and ten pillars were in the ends of fifty cubits broad: so there were ten pillars in fifty cubits, and twenty in the length of an hundred cubits, and sixty pillars in the compasse of three hundred cubits.

Whether the pillars were of brasse.

4. For the matter, whereof these pillars were made, there is also some question. Lyranus thinketh they were were all of brasse: So before him Iosephus, whom Ribera followeth: Simlerus is of the same opinion. Lyranus would prove it by the Latine text, chap. 38. 10. Columnæ æreæ viginti; The brasen pillars twenty: whereas the true reading is, their pillars were twenty, and their brasen sockets twenty. Montanus therefore thinketh more probably, that these pillars were of the same wood, which the former were of: the foure pillars in the entrance of the most holy place, and the five pillars in the dobre of the Tabernacle, chap. 26. vers. 32. 37. Ribera lib. 1. de Templ. cap. 34.

Iosephus also thinketh, that the heads of the pillars were of silver, so also Simlerus. Tostatus thinketh they were not the heads of the pillars, but of certaine rods, two of each side, which stood up above the pillars: but no such rods are mentioned in the text: neither doth the word vavim signifie the heads of the pillars, but rather the hookes, as is shewed before, chap. 26 quæst. 24. they were clavi capitibus curvatis instar literæ ו vau, certaine nailes with crooked heads like the letter vau, Iun. But heads of the pillars are not there spoken of, but their hookes and fillets, which were of silver, and their sockets of brasse. It is like also, that the heads of the pillars were overlaid with silver, as may be supplied out of chap. 38. 28. He overlaid their chapters, and made fillets about them: so also thinketh Montanus. What the heads of the pillars were made of.

4. These pillars also had certaine fillets or circles of silver, which compassed them round: which Lyranus thinketh were only upon the heads of the pillars: but they were overlayed with silver, as is before shewed, and therefore they needed no such fillets. Tostatus thinketh they were all over the pillars, which may seeme to be more probable, because as the other pillars were overlayed with gold, chap. 26. 32. 37. so it is like, these were done about with silver: and because it is said, chap. 38. 28. that the fillets were made about the pillars. And this also may further appeare, by the use of these fillets, which was, as Iosephus thinketh, to binde the curtaines and fasten them to the pillars. Concerning the fashion of these fillets, Tostatus following the Latine Translator, thinketh they were celatura, certaine knots and flowers, graven or carved about the pillars. But the word casuk, signifieth a circle. Oviedo imagineth them to have beene like unto hoopes about a barrell: Cajetane thinketh they compassed the pillars from top to bottome going still about, like unto a wilde worme: which kinde of wreathing of the fillets was more easie to see unto. What the fillets were which compassed the pillars,

5. Another thing to be considered in these pillars, is, their sockets, or foot-stalles, which Lyranus following Iosephus, thinketh to have beene made sharpe, and so driven into the ground, as the other foot-stalles set under the boords. Tostatus maketh a difference betweene these sockets, and the other in the Tabernacle, he taketh that these were plaine, and lay flat under the pillars, as now pillars are made to stand upon their square-bases, or bot-homes. But of the two, it is more like that these sockets were set into the ground, than the other, because these were of brasse, the other of silver, which were more precious, and to be still in the ground; for then a courser mettall would have served as well as silver. But yet because no mention is made of the tenons to goe into those sockets, as before in the description of the boords: it seemeth that the pillars were wrought into these bases, not to be severed from them, as the boords were from their sockets. Of the sockets of the pillars, whether they were fastened unto the ground.

6. There remaineth only one doubt, how these pillars were fastened. Iosephus, as he is before alleaged, thinketh that the sockets of the pillars were made piked and sharpe below, like unto a speare-head, which were driven into the ground. So also Lyranus, Ribera. But Tostatus thinketh otherwise. And Iosephus addeth, that the upper end of the postes or pillars, were fastened by rings, with cords and brasen pins, or nailes of a cubit long into the ground, to keepe them steady against the winde and weather. And this may be gathered out of the 19. verse, where it is said that all the pins of the court were brasse, which were driven into the ground. Cajetane further thinketh, that there were catenæ aduncæ, ligantes columnas inter se, certaine chaines with crookes, that fastened the pillars one to another. And so it is more probable, that the postes were fastened by cords and pins, than driven into the ground, for the more speedy remoouing of the Tabernacle.

Quest XVI. Of the gate of the Tabernacle.

14. Also hangings of fifteene cubits. Now followeth the description of the gate or entrance of the court, in these three verses following: 1. The East side of fifty cubits is thus divided: the middest was the space of the entrance of twenty cubits long, consisting of foure postes and pillars, and of each side remained fifteene cubits, and three pillars, to make up the number of ten pillars, and fifteene cubits at the end. 2. Augustine is here deceived, who thinketh that these 15. cubits were the sides of the court North and South, and the twenty cubits were the East end: so he saith, Erat hoc atrium latius quam longius, this court was broader than longer, for he maketh the forefront in the breadth twenty cubits, and the sides but fifteene cubits: and he saith further, Latera fuisse obliqua, that the sides went slope. Oleaster also is deceived, who thinketh, that as twenty cubits and foure postes, are allowed for the East gate or entrance, so fifteene cubits and three postes are allotted of each side, for the North and South gate, or entrance: whereas mention is made but of one gate of the court, vers. 16. and beside, all that is from vers. 14. belongeth to the description of the East end; the other three sides, the South, North, and West, are made an end of before. 3. Now this gate was unlike the other, both for the breadth, that was twenty cubits broad, the gate of the Tabernacle was but ten; so that the whole Tabernacle might be seene and discerned of one standing in the gate of the court. It was also unlike, for the hangings: for this was neither so plaine all of one colour, as the hangings of the court, it differed from them both in matter and forme; they were only made of fine twined linen, this of blew silke purple, and scarlet beside, Cajetan. Neither yet was it so curious as the curtaines of the Tabernacle, which were wrought with Cherubims, so was not this, Tostat. qu. 27. It was set forth with divers kindes of pictures Quæst. ultim. in Exod.

of

of flowers, trees, knots, exceptis duntaxat formis, the formes and shapes of living creatures only excepted, Iosephus.

Lib. 3. de antiq. cap. 3.

Quest. XVII. Whether any of the Lay people were admitted into the outward court.

THe outward court being thus described, somewhat must be added concerning the use thereof. Some thinke that the Levites only were admitted to come into this court, as the Priests of the second sort only went into the holy place, and the high Priest only into the most holy place: thus thinketh Abarbinel, who would seeme to prove it by that place, Exod. 40. 8. because Moses is bid to hang up the hanging or vaile at the court gate: which was made twenty cubits wide, that the people might see the whole Tabernacle, and not desire to come neere it. But this place proveth no such thing: it followeth not, because a vaile was hung before the gate, that therefore none of the people might come in: the doore or entrance was made so wide, that the people might not onely see the Tabernacle, but it was so large, because many were to enter that way: and as Cajetane conjecureth, it being twenty cubits wide, it had quinq; aditus ingressu, five passages in the entrance, one betweene every two posts.

2. Lippoman seemeth to be of the same opinion, that none but of the tribe of Levi were suffered to enter: Quo habeamus eam Tabernaculum, quibus Sacerdotes cum Levitis in majori reverentia; That they might have the Tabernacle, and the Priests with the Levites in greater reverence. But here in consisted rather the reverence to be shewed toward the Levites and Priests, that they onely were appointed to minister before the Lord, and to present the peoples offerings unto God: and the like reverent estimation also they had of the Tabernacle; that although they might see it, and come neere it, yet they might not enter into it.

3. I rather thinke then with Tostatus, that the people which came to offer, were admitted into the court, which was made so large, Ut ipsi offerentes haberent locum, in quo starent tempore sacrificiorum, that the offerers might have a place to stand in, in the time of their sacrifice, quæst. 8. And that the people might come into this outward court, it may thus further be proved. 1 Deut. 12. 18. it is said, Thou shalt eate it before the Lord thy God in the place which the Lord thy God shall chuse, thou thy sonne, and thy daughters, &c. This eating and standing before the Lord, was coram Altari, before the Altar, as Tostatus well interpreteth. 2. The people are commanded to bring their offerings, and present them at the doore of the Tabernacle of the Congregation to the Priest, Levit. 17. 5. but they could not come to the doore of the Tabernacle, but first they must enter into the court. 3. This also appeareth by the practise of the people afterward, 1 Sam. 1. 9. Anna is said to have prayed before the Lord, and Eli was not farre off, sitting upon a stoole by one of the posts of the Temple, which is like to have beene one of the posts or pillars of the outward court. David also alludeth to this use and practice: saying, One day in thy courts is better than a thousand elsewhere, Psalm. 84. 10. Neither was David only privileged to enter into Gods courts; but hee speaketh in generall of all the faithfull and true worshippers: Blessed is he whom thou choosest, and causest to come to thee, he shall dwell in thy courts: which as Lippoman himselfe expounded, is, Membrum erit Ecclesiæ tuæ, he shall be a member of thy Church. 4. Beda also having reference unto this entrance and ingresse of the people into the court; thus applieth it, Atrium Tabernaculi exterius, incipientium rudimenta demonstrat, &c. The outward court of the Tabernacle doth shew the condition of those which are beginners, and newly entred into Gods Church. Therefore Iunius judgement is here to be approved, who thinketh, that although afterward the courts were divided, of the Levites apart, and of the people apart, and of the women by themselves: yet in this Ambulatoria republica, unum fuit atrium commune, walking common-wealth (as it were) of the Israelites, there was one common court for all. So also Simlerus, Populus in hoc ingrediebatur; Into this outward court the people came, &c.

Quest. XVIII. Whether all the instruments of the Tabernacle were of brasse.

Vers. 19. ALL the vessels of the Tabernacle, &c. and all the pins thereof shall bee of brasse. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that some vessels belonging to the service of the outward court, as for the ministry of the Altar, were of gold, as the bowles and goblets, which were set upon the table of shew-bread, which they used in the drinke-offerings. And hee further is of opinion, that some vessels of brasse served for the use of the inward Tabernacle, as the fire pans, which they carried fire in unto the Altar of incense. But it is not like, seeing such a curious distinction is made betweene the vessels of the Tabernacle, and the vessels of the outward court, that the one should be of gold, the other of brasse; and that the Ministers of both places were distinct, for the Levites came not into the Tabernacle, but ministred in the outward court. It is like also, that the vessels were appointed to their severall places and services; that neither the brasen vessels were carried into the Tabernacle, nor the gold vessels used abroad in the outward court.

2. Some other thinke that all the vessels and instruments whatsoever belonging to the setting up, or taking downe of the Tabernacle, as the hammers, mattockes, spades, were of brasse, Lyran. Ius. but to what end then served the iron which afterward was consecrated to the use of the Tabernacle? Ios. 6. 19. And they may as well say, that the hatchets, to hew wood, and cutting-knives, and cleavers, and such like, wherewith they did slay, flea, and divide the beasts for sacrifice were of brasse, which was no fit mettall for such uses.

3. Therefore seeing there were three kinde of instruments belonging to the service of the Tabernacle, some that directly concerned some act of religion, as the vessels belonging to the Altar; others which were necessary parts of the Tabernacle, though not imployed specially to any religious use, as the pins, and nailes: and some againe, that were no parts of the Tabernacle, but were used only to set up the Tabernacle, and take it downe, as hammers, spades, mattockes, and to prepare things necessary for the use of the Tabernacle, as hatchets, knives and such like; the two first kinds must be of brasse: it was not necessarie the third should; for they were not properly vessels or instruments belonging either to the constitution, or daily service of the Tabernacle. These then might be made of iron and steele, as fittest to make them of; Tostat. qu. 5.

the

By all the vessels of the Tabernacle Cajetane understandeth such vessels and instruments, which were not before expressed, and appointed to be made of gold, yet served for the Tabernacle: as he saith, the brasen nailes served to joyne together the double boords in the corners. But for that use there were rings appointed, chap. 26.24. which were of gold, vers. 29. neither is it like that any brasse was used within the Tabernacle, but either gold or silver. Osiander by all these vessels of the Tabernacle understandeth the vessels belonging to the brasen Altar. But they were at large described before, vers. 3. Thou shalt make all the instruments thereof of brasse, so that this repetition needed not. Iunius seemeth by the Tabernacle to understand the outward court onely. But the words following, as well the pins thereof, as the pins of the court, shew that the court is distinguished from the Tabernacle. Therefore I thinke rather, that this is but an explanation of the former part of the verse, All the instruments of the Tabernacle, namely the pins, not before spoken of, which were fastned in the ground, together with the pins of the court. So Pellicanus understandeth this verse, Etiam clavi & paxilli non negliguntur; The very nailes and pins are not neglected. And this may further appeare, chap. 38.20. where after the description of the outward court, which was made according to the direction given unto Moses in this place, it is added, as this verse is here: But all the pins of the Tabernacle, and of the court round about were of brasse; no other Instruments are mentioned but the pins.

Quest. XIX. Of the mysticall application of the court.

Concerning the mysticall application of this part of the Tabernacle, namely the outward court: I will omit that curious allegorizing of Beda; who, by the fine linen hangings, the matter whereof groweth out of the earth, and by much knocking, beating, whiting, washing, is brought to that perfection, understandeth the mortifying and subduing of the flesh: by the pillars, the Doctors of the Church, who in respect of the sound of preaching are resembled to brasse, and for the puritie of doctrine to silver; by the 100 cubits in length, the great Jubile of eternitie: by the three posts in the sides, the three theologicall vertues, faith, hope, and charitie. And in this manner Beda goeth on in a large discourse, allegorizing every part of the court. 2. Rupertus by this court understandeth the Prophets and Patriarks, who were as the bottom pins, without the which the court nor Tabernacle could stand: so without their faith the Church of God was not builded. The length of 100 cubits, longanimem significat Patriarcharum spem, doth signifie the patient hope and expectation of the Patriarks. So also Gregor. 3. Procopius by the pillars would have the Apostles: and by the brasen sockets, the beautifull feet of those which preach the Gospell.

But thus better may this part of the Tabernacle bee applied: 1. The great capacitie of the court signifieth the amplitude and largenesse of the Church, In qua tam periti, quam imperiti habitantes, &c. wherein both the skilfull and unskilfull dwelling are pronounced blessed: as Psal. 64.5. Blessed is he whom thou choosest, he shall dwell in thy courts, Borth. It signifieth also the length of it from East to West, and breadth from North to South, the dispersing and propagating of the Church into all the world, Marbach. 2. The vaile set up at the entrance, that all must not bee admitted into Gods presence, but such as are prepared with humilitie and repentance, Pelarg. 3. The sockets and pins wherewith the court was fixed, doe shew, Ecclesiam ita esse firmatam, &c. the Church to be so confirmed and setled, that the gates of hell cannot prevaile against it, Osiander. 4. And the ornaments of the pillars, de donis Spiritus sancti nos admonefaciunt, doe put us in minde of the divers gifts of the Spirit, which the Lord hath bestowed upon his Church, to every one in measure, for the edifying thereof, Marbach.

Quest. XX. What manner of oyle they are willed to bring.

Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee pure oyle, olive beaten, &c. 1. This charge and commandement is so to bee understood, that it was not imposed as an absolute and perfect precept under some penaltie, if they did it not; but they onely hereby were advised, and admonished of the Lords will; and so charged to doe it, as yet notwithstanding they brought it with a willing mind, as they are required to doe, chap. 25.2. 2. They are willed to bring of the purest oyle, beaten, not pressed out. There were three kinds of oyle: first, that which flowed forth from the olive berries of it self, without any forcing and strayning, which was the best of all: the second sort was that, which was pressed out of the olives with some beating instrument: the third kinde was that, which was made by grinding and crushing them all to peeces. As there are three sorts of wine: one which commeth of the grape in the wine presse, without any pressing: the second is forced with treading: the third is drawne forth, by great weights and stones laid upon the grapes. The first of these, as well of the oyle as wine, is the best; the second next, the third is the worst. R. Salomon thinketh, that the first of these was for the lamps, the second for their drinke-offerings, the third for the use of the people. But the text is against this opinion, which appointeth it should be beaten oyle.

Tostatus thinketh that the meaning is, not that they should onely bring oyle beaten out, which was the second sort, but it should at the least be of that sort; they might bring of the first and best sort, if they would, quæst. 19. But it is like that God would have them bring of the best, and fittest oyle, and did limit them the very kinde.

Iunius thinketh, that although the first liquor of the olive be very commendable, yet Primam undam superat ea quæ tudiculis solum extunditur, that which is beaten out with pestles, doth excell the first liquor of the presse.

4. But I rather incline to Pellicans opinion, who thinketh the purer and thinner oyle to have beene uſed for the holy anointing: and the ſecond ſort, as the fitteſt, though not the pureſt, becauſe it was a more fat and thicker oyle, to be for the lamps. There was beſide theſe religious uſes, a prophane uſe of this oyle, as either for meat, Oſiander: or medicine. This oyle is therefore preſcribed to be beaten onely: because tundendo ſola caro frangitur, in beating the fleſh onely as it were of the olive is bruſed: but it being ground, the ſtones alſo are bruiſed together with the reſt, and ſo the oyle hath an impure mixture of the dregs, Cajetan.

Verſ.20. That the lamps may alwayes burne. 1. Some upon theſe words have thought, that the light in the lamps never went out, but burnt continually both day and night: their reaſons are theſe:

1. Cajetane would prove it by theſe words, That it may alwayes burne: Hinc apparet, quod indefectum erat lumen candelabri, tam die, quam nocte; Hence it appeareth, that the light of the candleſtick failed not, neither by day nor night.

Toſtatus anſwereth, that here the word jugiter, alwayes, non ſignificat temporis continuitatem, doth not ſignifie a continuance of time, but a perpetuall ordinance, though interrupted. So alſo Piſcator expoundeth, continually, that is, ſtatis temporibus, at ſet times continually; as the daily ſacrifice was called, Juge ſacrificium, a continuall ſacrifice, and yet it was offered but twice every day, at morning and even.

2. Simlerus thinketh that the lamps gave light by day, becauſe, quia Sanctum feneſtris caret, the holy place wanted windowes, and therefore for a ſupplie of them, the lamps did burne upon the candleſticke. So alſo Pelarg.

Quest. XXI. Whether the lamps burned in the Tabernacle both day and night.

But Pellican anſwereth, Solis clariſſimum jubar, &c. that the moſt cleare Sunne beames, which ſhined by day, needed not have any helpe of candle light: for ſeeing all the Eaſt end was open, onely a vaile drawen before it, there might come in light enough, the Tabernacle opening toward the moſt light ſome part of the heavens, the riſing of the Sunne, to illuminate every part of the Tabernacle.

Lib.2.de Temp. cap.12.

3 Ribera would prove as much by that place, Levit.24.3. Aaron ſhall dreſſe them both evening and morning before the Lord alwayes. They were dreſſed to that end evening and morning, ut ſemper arderent, that they might alwaies burne.

But as Cajetane noteth, concerning the ſenſe of that place; though he concurre in the ſame opinion, Non tempus lucendi, ſed diſponendi lucernas decernitur; Not the time of giving light, but of diſpoſing the lights is there decreed: So alſo Gallaſ. expoundeth theſe words, chap.30.7. that Aaron every morning dreſſed the lamps; Notatur tempus ordinandi lucernas, The time of ſetting in order the lamps is noted. And the lamps were dreſſed in the morning, that is, cleanſed from the ſoile which it had gathered in the night: the Prieſt in the morning, quicquid immunditiarum noctu contraxerit, &c. did purge and deanſe whatſoever uncleanneſſe was gathered in the night, Vatablus in cap.30.7.

2. Therefore it is the better opinion, that the lights burned onely in the night, and were extinguiſhed and put out in the morning.

1. Toſtatus and Oleaſter doe prove it by the words following in this place, in the next verſe, Thou ſhalt dreſſe them from evening to morning: They therefore burned onely till the morning: which the Latine Interpreter thus expoundeth, Ut uſque mane luceat, That it may give light till the morning: and the Septuagint reade, καίσει αὐτὸ, ſhall kindle it, or ſet it on fire from the evening till the morning.

2. Piſcator alleageth that place, chap.30.8. where the Prieſt is ſaid to kindle the lamps, or ſet them on fire in the evening: the word is behaghaleth, in cauſing them to aſcend: that is, ſetteth them on fire. Pagnine, becauſe the fire aſcendeth, or goeth up: but in the morning he is ſaid onely behetibo, to make good the lamps, that is, to cleanſe them and dreſſe them.

3. Vatablus and Iunius inferre as much upon that place, 1 Sam.3.3. Ere the light of God went out; that the lamps burned all night, and were put out in the morning.

4. Pelican uſeth this reaſon, Interdiu ſole lucente, & omnia illuſtrante; The Sunne ſhined by day, and gave light to every place, ſo that there was then no uſe of the candle light: they burned not in the day. Quia id divino operi non honorificum eſſet; Becauſe that had beene to the diſhonour of that divine work of God, in creating the light of the Sunne, if any ſhould have thought it needed the helpe of humane and artificiall light.

5. Beda upon this, that the lamps burned onely in the night, and were put out in the morning, maketh this alluſion, Cùm nocte tranſacta ſeculi hujus mane futuri ſeculi inclaruerit, &c. When the night of this world being paſt, the morning of the next world ſhineth cleere, we ſhall then no more need lucerna librorum, the light of books, the true light of the world ſhining upon us.

6. Lyranus alſo thus expoundeth: Semper, id eſt, qualibet nocte; Alwaies, that is, every night. Iſaphus thinketh, that all the ſeven lamps burned by night, and three of them onely by day. But upon the former reaſons it is evident, that the lampe burned not at all by day: the reaſon why the ſeven lamps were all ſet on fire was this, that though one or more by ſome negligence might goe out in the night, yet not all, that ſome might hold light out ſtill, and ſo there ſhould bee alwaies light in the Tabernacle. Pellican.

Quest. XXII. What is meant by the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and whether it be ſo rightly called.

Verſ.21. IN the Tabernacle or Tent of the congregation. 1. Some doe read, In Tabernaculo teſtimonii, In the Tabernacle of the teſtimonie. So the Latine and Septuag. But there is another word which afterward followeth, gheduth, which ſignifieth the teſtimonie: the word here uſed is moghed. So *Numb.*17.4. both theſe words are uſed together, in the Tent, maghedh, of the appointed meeting, before the Arke gheduth of the Teſtimonie. And here the Latine Interpreter, to avoid the concurrence and repetition of the ſame word, is forced to read, Tabernaculum fœderis, the Tabernacle of covenant. Neither was the candleſticke ſet in the place where the Arke of the teſtimonie was, but in the holy place without the vaile: therefore for diſtinction ſake of the places, it cannot be here called the Tabernacle of the teſtimonie, Simlerus: as Toſtatus taketh it, following the Latine text. So alſo Oleaſter.

2. The Chalde Interpreter calleth it, Tabernaculum fœderis, the Tabernacle of the covenant. But there is another word uſed for a covenant, aron berith, the Arke of the covenant, 1 *Sam.*4.3.

3. The moſt uſuall reading is, The Tabernacle of the congregation: for ſo the word maghed is taken for the aſſemblie or congregation, Numb. 16.2. So Pagnine, Simlerus, Oſiander, with others. But Oleaſter uſeth a good reaſon againſt this interpretation; becauſe the aſſemblies of the people came not into the Tabernacle, but onely to the outward court: as the people themſelves confeſſe, *Numb.*17.13. Whoſoever approcheth to the Tabernacle of God ſhall die.

4. Therefore the word maghed, comming of jaghad, or jaad, (as Oleaſter readeth) which ſignifieth to come, or meet with at a certaine or appointed time; it is better interpreted, Tabernaculum conventus, the Tabernacle of meeting, Iunius: or, the Tabernacle of appointment, Vatablus: as the Lord himſelfe giveth the ſenſe of the word, *chap.*25.22. Where I will meet with thee, or appoint with thee. So alſo Numb. 17.4. It may therefore moſt fitly be called the Tabernacle of appointment, or of the appointed meeting, where the Lord appointed to meet with Moſes, and to talke with him.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether it belonged to Aaron onely to dreſſe the lamps.

Vers.21. SHall Aaron and his ſonnes dreſſe them. 1. Cajetane well noteth, Non erat Levitarum hoc officium, ſed ſacerdotum; This was not the office of the Levits, but of the Prieſts, the ſonnes of Aaron, to dreſſe the lamps. 2. And it muſt not bee read with a conjunction copulative, Aaron and his ſonnes, as Lat. Vatab. Montanus, as though all the whole companie of them ſhould goe in together: but disjunctively, Aaron, or his ſonnes, Toſtat. Iun. 3. Hilarie ſeemeth to be of opinion, that it belonged onely unto Aaron to dreſſe the lamps; making this alluſion, Summus ſacerdos lucernas fovens, &c. imago Chriſti eſt, qui ſolus miniſtrat & donat Spiritum ſanctum; The high Prieſt nouriſhing the lamps, is a repreſentation of Chriſt, who onely giveth the holy Ghoſt. But this text ſheweth, that not onely Aaron, but his ſonnes alſo are charged with this dutie. 4. Therefore Beda well applieth this text, underſtanding by the ſonnes of Aaron, the Miniſters and Paſtors of the Church, Qui filii ſunt veri ſacerdotis noſtri; qui lucem verbi miniſtrant; Which are the children of our true high Prieſt; which miniſter the light of Gods word. And whereas *Levit.*24.3. it is ſaid, Aaron ſhall dreſſe them, it muſt be underſtood of Aaron, and of his ſonnes the Prieſts, ex ipſius mandato, by his commandement, or appointment, Iunius. And therefore Aaron is only named, becauſe all was done by his direction. In Pſal.103.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the myſticall application of the lamps and oyle thereof.

THe myſticall application of this oyle, which muſt be offered to maintaine the lamps, is this: 1. In that the candleſticke was placed not in the moſt holy place, which was a figure of celeſtiall Jeruſalem, it teacheth that in the Church now preſent wee have need of the direction of the word of God, yet in the kingdome of heaven there ſhall be no ſuch need: *For the Lambe ſhall be the light thereof, Apocal.*21.23. Iunius. 2. By the light we underſtand the word of God, which the Prophet David ſaith, *is a lanterne to my feet, Pſal.*119.105. Pelargus. 3. Oleum gratiam Spiritus ſancti oſtendit; The oyle ſignifieth the grace of Gods Spirit, Iſidor. Of this holy oyle or ointment the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, *Ye have an ointment from him that is holy, 1 Ioh.*2.20. 4. As the oyle is preſſed forth of the Olive, ſo Oleum Spiritus ſancti è cruce Chriſti expreſſum, The oyle of the holy Spirit is preſſed out of the Wine-preſſe of the croſſe of Chriſt, Ibid. 5. In that they are commanded to bring pure oyle without mixture or dregs, the puritie of doctrine is ſignified: Hæretici adulterinum excogitant oleum; Heretikes doe deviſe adulterate oyle, that is, corrupt doctrine, Procopius. 6. Laſtly, Auguſtine thus applieth all together: by the Tabernacle he underſtandeth the world: Lucerna accenſio verbi eſt incarnatio; candelabrum crucis lignum; lucerna in candelabro lucens Chriſtus in cruce pendens; The lighting of the lampe is the incarnation of Chriſt; the candleſticke is the croſſe; the lampe giving light in the candleſticke is Chriſt hanging upon the croſſe, &c. *Auguſt. ſuper verba Chriſti Matth.*5.ſerm.6.

QUEST. XXV. Of the deſcription and ſituation of the whole Tabernacle.

THis then was the forme and faſhion of the whole Tabernacle: 1. The outward court was firſt ſet up, which was an hundred cubits long of each ſide, and fiftie cubits broad at each end; and round about were fiftie pillars, twentie of a ſide, and ten at each end: and this court was hung round about with curtaines of five cubits high: on the Eaſt end was the gate in the middeſt of the ſide of twentie cubits, hanging with a vaile of foure colours, white, blew, ſcarlet, purple. 2. Then was ſet up the Tabernacle, which was thirtie cubits long, and twentie cubits broad; the which was compaſſed on each ſide, ſaving before toward the Eaſt, with boords laid over with gold, twentie on each ſide, and at the Weſt end eight. Then it was hanging over with the fine curtaines wrought with Cherubims, which hung on each ſide of the Tabernacle, and went over the roofe: upon them were laid the haire curtaines: then round about below were covered the red Ramme skins, and above them the covering of Badgers skins. Thus the Tabernacle was finiſhed without. 3. After this it was divided into the moſt holy place, which contained ten cubits ſquare, and there, upon foure pillars, was hanged a vaile wrought with Cherubims: then followed the holy place, which contained twentie cubits in length, the reſt of theſe thirtie cubits: on the Eaſt ſide whereof, was hanging up a vaile upon five pillars, which was made of fine twined linen, blew ſilke, purple, ſcarlet, as the other, other, but not wrought with Cherubims. 4. The Tabernacle being thus set up and divided, then the holy instruments were placed therein: in the most holy place was the Arke, with the tables of the Law onely within it: and before it Aarons rod, and the pot of Manna: in the most holy place without the vaile, was set on the South side the candlesticke; over against that on the North side the table with the shew-bread: and before the vaile of the most holy place the Altar of incense. In the outward court, before the doore of the Tabernacle, toward the North was the brasen Altar for sacrifice, and betweene that and the Tabernacle, the brasen Laver, wherein the Priests did wash their hands and feet, *chap.*30.19. Mm.

Ribera lib. 1. de Templ. c.34.

5. Now it appeareth by this description, that Augustine is in great error: 1. He saith, Introibat in Tabernaculum ab occidente: They entred into the Tabernacle on the West. Whereas it is most evident, *chap.*26.22. that the West end of the Tabernacle was closed up with boords, that there was no entrance in that way. 2. He saith, that the outward court had obliqua latera, uneven sides: which he saith was twentie cubits wide at the entrance, and but fifteen cubits long on the sides, and thirtie cubits wide at the doore of the Tabernacle, whither he extendeth it, and no further: whereas this outward court by Moses description, is one hundred cubits long, and fiftie cubits broad at each end. 3. He addeth further, Duo aurium exteriorii latera aequalem habent longitudinem, &c. That the two sides of the outward court were of equall length with the sides of the inward Tabernacle, each of them consisting of twentie pillars on a side: whereas it is evident, that the sides of the inward Tabernacle were but thirtie cubits long, but the sides of the court one hundred long: neither had the inward Tabernacle pillars, but boords. 4. He thinketh that the first ten curtaines, and the second sort of haire, which were eleven, did compasse the Tabernacle and court round about, and did not cover it over from side to side: and he putteth them together one at the end of another; as the first ten, which were 28. cubits long, make 280. cubits in length, Quibus concludebatur interius Tabernaculum, wherewith the inward Tabernacle was inclosed: the other eleven, five of them made 150. cubits, being each of them 30. cubits long, and the other six made 180. cubits: and by the compasse of these curtaines, eingebatur atrium Tabernaculi, the court of the Tabernacle was invironed: whereas it is evident, *chap.*26.13. that the Tabernacle was covered with these curtaines, and not compassed onely. 5. He further divideth these curtaines; and hangeth the outward court round about with the curtaines of haire, and the Tabernacle within with the other: whereas the text sheweth that the haire curtaines were made to cover the other, *c.*26.9. And many other things Augustine mistaketh in the description of the Tabernacle, and falleth into that inconvenience, which he himselfe feared, saying: Quod sequitur ita est ad intelligendum difficile, ut veream ne id exponendo fiet obscurius; That which followeth is so hard to be understood, that I feare it will be made more obscure in the opening of it.

Augustine greatly deceived in the description of the Tabernacle.

*Quest.*173. in Exod.

Quest. XXVI. Whether every part of the Tabernacle had a spirituall signification.

NOw for the mysticall application of the whole fabricke and frame of the Tabernacle: 1. Some there are, that thinke, that every part thereof had some speciall signification, and accordingly doe give a mysticall and typicall sense of every ceremonie and circumstance belonging unto it. Thus Beda, Augustine, Rupertus, with other, draw every thing in the old Testament to bee a type and figure. 2. Others are of opinion, that every part had a speciall signification, Sed non omnia possumus investigare; But wee cannot finde out every thing, Simlerus. But I rather approve Calvins judgement, that we must not be so scrupulous in exacting every part, as to thinke, Quod nihil sit in signo externo cui non respondeat veritas, That there is nothing in the outward signe and shadow, to the which some veritie is not answerable. Tostatus also therein concurreth, whose opinion is, that although, totus status fuit figuralis, the whole state in generall of that people was figurative, yet it was not in particular: for they had many ceremonies, which were made to attend as handmaids, upon the externall service of the Tabernacle, which were not ordained for any speciall signification. And therefore, as Simlerus well saith, Satis est si corpus in umbris suis [illegible]. It is sufficient if we have the bodie and substance shadowed forth, though we cannot finde out every particular. So also Iunius, Singula non sunt rapienda, &c. Every thing must not be forced to a typicall signification: Nugas agit quisquis hoc nititur, He doth but trifle, that goeth about this, in Analys.

Quest. XXVII. The spirituall use of the whole Tabernacle, and the parts thereof.

THus then the Tabernacle may be spiritually applied; first in generall, then in particular. In the generall application: 1. We understand by the three parts and divisions thereof, the orders and degrees of the Church: first, the whole companie of the faithfull and beleevers; as the people were admitted into the outwart court: secondly, the calling of the Ministers of the Gospell, of the Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors, Doctors; as there entred none into the holy place, but the Priests: thirdly, as none had accesse into the most holy place, but the high Priest; so in him is represented our high Priest Christ Jesus, who onely made a way for us by the vaile of his flesh into heaven. 2. Hereby are shadowed forth three degrees of the Church. By the court, where the Altar of burnt offering was, the Church under the old Testament is signified, which had the sacrifices of beasts. By the holy place, where the candlesticke was set, and the table of shew-bread, is set forth the Church of Christ militant here in earth, which is nourished by the word of God, and the Sacraments. By the most holy place, is shadowed forth the Kingdome of heaven, where we shall enjoy the sight and presence of the Angels. 3. Here appeareth the difference betweene the old and new Testament: for as there was a vaile hung before the most holy place; so while the Tabernacle stood, the way was not manifested unto the Kingdome of God: but this vaile was rent asunder in the passion of Christ, and so our Saviour hath broken downe the partition wall, both betweene God and us, and betweene the Jewes and the Gentiles. 4. By these three divers places in the Tabernacle, one still exceeding and surpassing the other; wee learne, that there are divers degrees of knowledge in Christ

Christian profession. First, wee must bee initiate in the faith of Jesus, as the Altar stood in the outward court, whither they first entred: then, as in the Sanctuarie, they had the candlestick and table of shew-bread; so they which profit and goe forward in Christian knowledge, receive greater illumination and spirituall nourishment, till we be admitted unto the full fruition of everlasting life, which is insinuated by the most holy place, Borrhaius, 5. And generally, as the vessels of the Tabernacle were made of pure gold, so we are taught, that our hearts should be pure and cleane, when we come before God, Simler.

Now in particular, this use may be made of the parts of the Tabernacle. 1. The foure coverings of the Tabernacle, doe shew the divers gifts and graces which God bestoweth upon his Church: beside, the covering of rams and badgers skins, doe signifie the sure defence and protection of the Church under Christ Jesus: the coupling of them together by loops and taches, expresse the spirituall conjunction of the Church by love.

2. The boords of the Tabernacle doe shadow forth the Apostles, which are as pillars of the Church; but Christ God and man is the foundation, as there were two sockets under every boord: by the bars are vnderstood the Ministers and teachers of the Gospell, by whose preaching the frame of the Church is held together.

3. The two vailes did both keepe the people from curious gazing, and bold accesse: which admonisheth us, that we must not draw neere unto God, without great reverence.

4. The large outward court, did represent and prefigure the vocation of the Gentiles, which should be called in great multitudes, whereas the Church of the Jewes was straitned and pent up in a small corner, Simler.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. There is no salvation but in Christ.

Vers. 1. Thou shalt make the Altar. The Israelites had but one onely Altar appointed, upon the which they were to offer all their sacrifices: and therefore both Ieroboam sinned, that afterward set vp two other Altars, one in Dan, the other in Beersheba; and Urias the high Priest, who to please the idolatrous King Ahaz, caused a new Altar to be set up, after the patterne of the Altar of Damascus. This 2 King. 16. new Altar was a type of our blessed Saviour, who onely satisfieth for our sinnes, neither are we to use any other helpes in our owne works, or in the merits or mediation of Saints beside Christ; for this were nothing else, Quam aliud novum Altare præter Christum instituere, Then to appoint another new Altar beside Christ, who onely is ordained of God to bee the Saviour of the world, Marbach. As S. Peter saith, Neither is there salvation in any other, for among men there is given no other name under heaven, whereby we must be saved, Act. 2. 12.

2. Doct. That all things should be done orderly in the Church.

Vers. 9. Thou shalt make the court of the Tabernacle. We learne by this, that, Nihil in Ecclesia confusum esse debet; Nothing in the Church must be confused, but all disposed in order: as in the Tabernacle, the outward court was appointed for the Levits, and vulgar sort; the holy place for the Priests; the most holy place none could enter into but the high Priest. So now in the Church of God, all things should be done in comelinesse and order. Our assemblies should be orderly and reverently set and disposed. Distinction of degrees and persons to be observed; not all confusedly shuffled together, as now in many Churches, men and women, one with another are mingled together, Oleaster. This is S. Pauls rule, that all things be done honestly, and by order, 1 Cor. 14. 40.

3. Doct. The mysteries of Christian religion are manifested to all.

Vers. 16. In the gate of the court shall bee a vaile of twentie cubits. Although the court were compassed about with curtaines, yet, Ostium satis amplum habuit, It had a doore wide enough, thorow which they might see all the breadth of the Tabernacle: and the Hebrewes thinke, that the curtaines were made with holes, Quibus ea, quæ in atrio agebantur, conspici potuerint; Whereby such things as were done in the court, might be seene. By the which is signified, that the holy mysteries of the Church are not hid, as the ceremonies of Ceres of Eleusis, which were not imparted to strangers, or of Iuno of Coos, into the which servants were not admitted: but the secrets of the Gospell are revealed to all the world, Pelargus, Lippoman. As the Apostle saith, If our Gospell bee hid, it is hid to them that are lost; 2 Cor. 4. 3.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. Against free will in good things.

Vers. 4. Thou shalt make unto it a grate like networke, &c. Beda thinketh that the fire was made under this grate, and that thorow the holes thereof, the flame ascended, and consumed the sacrifice: vpon he giveth this note, Nequaquam obduremus corda nostra, more Pelagianorum, &c. sed theare, &c. Let us not harden our hearts, and locke them up as the Pelagians against the grace of God: so open them, that as thorow many doores, in all things that we begin well, the grace of God illuminate us, &c. And he sheweth what the error of the Pelagians was, Sine gratia Dei, se aliquid bonum posse præsumant; They presume they can without the grace of God, doe some good thing. They doe not set a grate before their hearts, for the sacred fire of Gods Spirit to enter: Sed quasi solidum inter se & ignem Spiritus sancti interponunt, But doe put a thicke wall betweene them, and the fire of the holy Spirit, leſt they ſhould be heated thereby, and warmed with love. With the Pelagians herein conſent the Romaniſts, whoſe aſſertion is this, That a man naturally without faith, doth with ſpeciall aſſiſtance from God, and without it, can performe ſome morall good worke, if no temptation let, Bellarmin. But againſt both theſe, may be oppoſed that ſaying of our bleſſed Saviour, Without me can ye doe nothing, *Ioh.*15.5. See more hereof, Synopſ.Centur.4.err.43.

Lib.5.de gratia cap.9.

2. Confut. Againſt Altars in Popiſh Churches.

Verſ.7. The bars ſhall be in the two ſides of the Altar, &c. This Altar was a type and figure of Chriſt; and it was to continue till Chriſt the true Sacrificer ſhould offer himſelfe upon the Altar of the croſſe. But now the Church of God knoweth no ſuch materiall Altars, as Rupertus well obſerveth, this Altar was holy, Antequam Chriſtus, qui per hoc promittebatur, veniret, &c. before Chriſt came, who was promiſed by it: but after that he is entred into the moſt holy place, Nunc reprobatum & abjectum eſt. Now it is repelled and rejected. The Romaniſts therefore doe Judaize, in retaining ſtill Altars in their Churches. Antiquitie knew no ſuch Altars of ſtone; as Celſus, as Origen ſaith, objected it as a fault among the Chriſtians, Quod nec imagines, nec Templa, nec aras haberent, That they had neither images, Temples, nor Altars. Auguſtine calleth it, Menſam Domini, The table of the Lord; Chryſoſtome ἱερὰν τράπεζαν, The holy boord: Athanaſius, Menſam ligneam, The table of wood, B. Babing. Neither have they any colour for their Altars out of that place, *Heb.*13. We have an Altar, whereof they have no authoritie to eat, which ſerve in the Tabernacle, &c. For the Apoſtle there ſpeaketh of no materiall Altar, but of the death and paſſion of Chriſt, as it followeth, *verſ.*12. And Bellarmin forbeareth to urge this place, becauſe divers of their owne writers apply it to Chriſts croſſe, *lib.*5.*de miſſ.cap.*9.

3. Confut. Againſt the ſetting up of candles in the day in popiſh Churches.

Verſ. 1. Shall dreſſe them from evening to morning. The lamps burned in the Tabernacle onely in the night, and were put out in the day, as is before ſhewed, *queſt.*21. which ſheweth that the Romaniſts are herein more ſuperſtitious than the Jewes, in ſetting up candles and tapers by day in their Churches. Hierom ſaith, Ceras non clara luce accendimus, &c. We doe not light candles at noone day, but to qualifie the darkneſſe of the night. Lactantius alſo ſaith, Num mentis compos putandus, &c. Is he to bee thought well in his wits, who offereth the light of candles for a gift, to the author and giver of light? B. Babingt.

Cont.Vigilant. lib.6.cap.2.

6. Morall Obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Our hearts muſt be purged of worldly thoughts in our prayers.

Verſ.4. Thou ſhalt make unto it a grate. As the ſpeciall uſe of this grate was to avoid the aſhes and imbers from the hearth, where the fire burned: ſo in the Altar of our hearts, there muſt be cratricula, a grate, qua cineribus excretis ignem ſplendentem foveat, &c. which may cheriſh the bright fire by ſeparating the aſhes, &c. Borrhaius. Wee muſt purge our hearts of all earthly thoughts, when wee offer up the ſpirituall ſacrifice of prayer, upon the Altar of our hearts: which is the meaning of the Wiſe-man when he biddeth us take heed unto our feet, when we enter into the houſe of God, *Eccleſ.*4.

2. Obſerv. We muſt humble our ſelves before God.

Verſ.6. Thou ſhalt make bars unto the Altar. They were to carrie it on their ſhoulders, and not to refuſe any the meaneſt ſervice in Gods worſhip; that men of never ſo high degree in the world ſhould thinke themſelves of no reputation before God: as David humbled and abaſed himſelfe, when he danced before the Arke, 2 *Sam.*6. Oleaſter.

3. Obſerv. The ſpirituall lights of the Temple are to be cheriſhed.

Verſ.20. Command the people to bring oyle, &c. Hereupon Origen giveth this note, Niſi dederit oleum populus, extinguitur lucerna in Templo; Unleſſe the people give oyle, the lampe will goe out in the Temple, &c. They then which by their light of doctrine doe lighten the Church, ought to be maintained: For ſuch as labour in the Word, are worthie double honour; of reverence and releefe.

Hom.13. Levit. 2 Timoth.5.17.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1. The Method and Argument.

AFter the deſcription of the Tabernacle finiſhed, followeth the inſtitution of the Miniſters of the Tabernacle, the Prieſts, whoſe apparell is deſcribed in this Chapter, and their conſecration, with the execution of their office in the next.

In this Chapter, which ſheweth what Prieſtly garments ſhould bee made for Aaron and his ſonnes, and how: firſt, it is ſhewed in generall, to *verſ.*6. then in particular, to *verſ.*43.

In the generall ſumme, theſe things are declared: 1. For whom theſe garments ſhould bee made, *verſ.*1. 2. To what end, *verſ.*2. 3. By whom, *verſ.*3. 4. How many, *verſ.*4. 5. And of what matter, *verſ.*5.

In the ſpeciall and particular explication; firſt, the garments peculiar to the high Prieſt are deſcribed to *verſ.*40. then ſuch as belonged to other inferiour Prieſts, *verſ.*40. to the end.

The high Priests garments were these: 1. The Ephod, both the matter thereof, vers. 6. the forme and fashion, vers. 7,8. the ornaments, the two precious stones, with their graving, vers. 10,11. their placing with their use, vers. 12. the instruments of the Ephod to fasten it, vers. 13,14.

2. The breast-plate is described: 1. The matter, vers. 15. 2. The forme and fashion, vers. 16. 3. The ornaments of precious stones to be set in foure rowes, to vers. 21. 4. The instruments, chaines and rings to fasten it, vers. 22. to 28. 5. The use thereof is expressed, vers. 29,30.

3. The robe is set forth. 1. The matter thereof, vers. 31. 2. The forme of it, vers. 32. the ornaments with bels and pomgranats, vers. 33,34. 4. The use, vers. 35.

4. The golden plate is described. with the matter, forme, instruments, and use, vers. 36. to 39.

5. Then three other parts of the Priestly rayment are handled together, the embroidered coat, the mitre, and girdle, vers. 39.

Secondly, the speciall attire for Aarons sonnes, whereof some were common both to Aaron and them, to wit, namely, these foure: their coats, girdles and bonnets, vers. 40. with the use of them, vers. 41. and their linen breeches, with the place where they shall weare them, vers. 42. and their use, vers. 43.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 4. A breast-plate, or pectorall B.G.I.V. cum cæter. better than, a rationall, that is, a vesture shewing reason, or judgement. L. C. the word is ephoth, a pectorall. B.G.I.

Vers. 4. A broidered coat, as woven with eyes or checker worke. B.G.I.A.P. better than, a strait coat. L.S.C.V. the word shabats, is better taken in the first sense, to embroider, or make with eyes, as vers. 14. B. G. I.

Vers. 9. Two sardonix stones. I. So also Iosephus, and so they are called, Apoc. 21. 29. better than, Onyx stones. B.G.I.C.P.A. or, smaragdes. S. Sapheirum. H.V. I.

Vers. 14. Of a certaine length. B. or, equall. I. better than, at the ends. G. V. the word is, migebulath, B. I. ex aduerso, ending together. A.P. this word is omitted by the rest. L.S.G.

Vers. 17. A rubie, or, sardie, &c. see the severall names, and divers readings of these precious stones afterward at large, quæst. 21.

Vers. 24. See also the divers readings of this verse, quæst. 24.

Vers. 30. Thou shalt put in the breast-plate, &c. Urim, and Thummim. B. G. I. V. A. P. C. better than, doctrine and veritie. L. or, manifestation and veritie. S. the words of themselves are better retained: which signifie illumination and perfection. B.G.I. cum cæter.

Vers. 36. Holinesse to the Lord. G.A.P.C.L.I. better than, the holinesse of the Lord. B. S. V. the meaning is, that all holinesse is to be ascribed unto God: and it is better translated, holinesse, I.B.G. cum cæter. than, holy. V.C. the word is kodesh, which signifieth holinesse, kadosh, is, holy. G.A.I.

Vers. 38. To make them acceptable. B.G. cum cæter. not, that he may be acceptable I. the word is lahem, B. G. cum to them. cæter.

Vers. 41. Thou shalt fill their hands. B.G. cum cæter. consecrate their hand. L. P. offer their sacrifice. C. B.G.I. consecrate their ministerie. I. the first translateth the words, the rest give the sense.

3. The questions discussed.

Quest. I. Wherefore the Lord instituted a Priesthood.

Vers. 1. Cause thy brother Aaron to come unto thee, &c. 1. Ordo præposterus, here the order is inverted: for first the garments were made, and afterward Aaron came and his sonnes, to bee invested with them, and consecrated, Cajetan. 2. And here they are bidden to come unto Moses, to bee ordained and consecrated: but first they were appointed, and ordained of God: so there was a double application, or drawing neere of Aaron and his sonnes: first, they were applied, sequestred, and ordained by the Lord for his service: then they were applied unto Moses, to receive their consecration from him, Heb. 3. 3. This applying of Aaron unto Moses, signifieth, Nihil in Sacerdotibus plebeium requiri, nihil vulgare, &c. That nothing in the Priests is required, like unto the common people, Ambros. But that as they were called to a more excellent and eminent place, so their gifts and conversation should exceed the vulgar and common sort. 4. Thus, as God first made the creatures, and last of all man, whom he created for his glorie: So after that God had appointed the Tabernacle to be made, and every thing thereto belonging, he in the last place setteth downe the office and ministration of the Priests, who served to set forth Gods glory in the Tabernacle, as man was created to that end in the world, Borrh. 5. And to this end God ordained the ministerie of man in his service, to succour and releeve the imbecillitie of the people, who were not able themselves to endure the Lords voice, Simlerus. Lib. 1. epistol. epist. 6.

Quest. II. Why Aaron was chosen to be the high Priest.

Vers. 1. His brother Aaron. 1. The Lord maketh speciall choice of Aaron, Moses brother, for the Priesthood: Propter principatum, & frequentia cum Deo colloquia. Because of his preeminence, and the often conference they had with God, and the great works which were done in Egypt by the hands of Moses and Aaron. And therefore because in these respects they were more noble and famous than the rest of the people, the Lord doth single out Aaron for this high office, Simler. 2. And the Tribe of Levi was taken from the rest of the Tribes, Ad honorem Moisi & Aaron ducum populi, &c. For the honour of Moses and Aaron, the captaines of the people, Ferus. 3. And Aaron was appointed to be the high and chiefe Priest, to be a figure and type of Christ, Simlerus. The divers glorious vestures made for this Priest, doe shadow forth the most heavenly graces of the Spirit, wherewith Christ was adorned, Ferus. And he is therefore called Moses brother, Quis enim amplius alteri est frater no fœdere nexus, quam Christus Mosi, legi gratia, novum Testamentum veteri? For who can be neerer allied unto another by a brotherly league, than Christ to Moses grace to the law, the new Testament to the old? Beda.

and

QUEST. III. Wherein the Priesthood of Christ, and of Aaron agree, and disagree.

NOw Aaron in some things most fitly resembled Christ, and in some things betweene them, there is great difference.

First, Aaron herein prefigured Christ, both in his peculiar function, in entring into the holy place, to make attonement for the people. So Christ is now entred into the heavens to appeare in the sight of God for us, *Hebr.*9.23. As also in those functions, which were common to Aaron with the rest: which were these three, docendo, precando, offerendo, in teaching, praying, offering, or sacrificing: So Christ hath taught and lightned the world, with the revelation of his Fathers will, and by the preaching of the Gospell. Christ also prayeth and maketh intercession for his people, *Heb.*9.25. And he also offered up himselfe in sacrifice for our redemption, Tit. 2. 19. Hee gave himselfe for us, that hee might redeeme us from all iniquitie.

But yet there is great difference betweene the Priesthood of Aaron, which was the type and figure, and the everlasting Priesthood of Christ. 1. In the dignitie of their persons: Aaron was a meere man, Christ was both God and man. 2. In their condition, the Priests of the Law were men compassed with many infirmities, and subject to sinne: but Christ was holy, harmelesse, undefiled, separate from sinners, *Heb.*9.26. 3. In the excellencie of the sacrifice: they offered the sacrifices of beasts: but Christ offered up his owne bodie, as the Apostle saith, *Heb.*9.12. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his owne blood entred he once into the holy place. 4. In the effect they differ: the Priests of the law did not perfectly reconcile, but onely shadowed forth by that typicall reconciliation, the true remission of sinnes by the bloud of Christ, who hath obtained eternall redemption for us, and hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, *Galath.*3.13. 5. In the continuance, the Priesthood of Aaron, was not to continue for ever, but as the Apostle saith, *This man, because he endureth for ever, hath an everlasting Priesthood, Heb.*7.24. 6. In the manner of confirmation: *They were made Priests without an oath: But this is made with an oath by him, that said unto him, The Lord hath sworne, and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck, Heb.*5.21. Marbach.

QUEST. IV. Why Christ is called a Priest after the order of Melchisedeck and not of Aaron.

AND although Aaron were a type and figure of Christ, yet he is called a Priest after the order of Melchisedeck, and not after Aaron; not because there was no resemblance betweene Christ and Aaron, but for that Melchisedeck and his Priesthood did in three things more lively set forth Christs Priesthood, than did Aarons: 1. In the eternitie thereof: 2. Office and function: 3. And name.

1. As Melchisedeck is set forth without father and mother, without beginning of his dayes, or end of his life: not that he was so indeed, but they are concealed in storie, to make him a more lively type and figure of Christ, who was in respect of his Divinitie ἀμήτωρ, without mother: in regard of his humanitie, ἀπάτωρ, without father.

2 As Melchisedek was both a King and a Priest: so Christ was a Priest in the expiation of our sinnes by the sacrifice of himselfe upon the crosse; and a King, both in gathering his Church together by the sceptre of his word, and governing them by his Spirit; as also in that all power over all creatures, and over the universall world is committed unto him.

3. The name of Melchisedek fitly agreeth unto Christ, which signifieth the King of righteousnesse: and the place, whereof he was King, which was Salem, that betokeneth peace, did also set forth the peaceable Kingdome of Christ; both making peace betweene God and us, and taking away the wall of partition, that was betweene the Jewes and Gentiles, making of both one: as the Apostle sheweth, *Ephes.*2.13. Now in Christ Iesus, yee which were once farre off, are made neere by the blood of Christ, for he is our peace which hath made of both one, Marbach.

QUEST. V. Why these Priestly garments are commanded to be made.

Vers. 2. HOly garments, &c. glorious, and beautifull. 1. These garments were called holy in two respects; both because in respect of the end, they were consecrated and ordained onely to holy uses: and therefore the Priests onely were to put them on, and none other beside: and they were not at all times to use them, but onely when they went into the Tabernacle; when they went out, they put them off: as also in respect of the manner of consecration, they were anointed with the holy oyle, *Exod.*30. and so set apart for holy uses, Tostatus quæst. 2. This apparelling of Aaron, with such glorious apparell, was commanded both in respect of themselves, that they by these ceremonies might bee assured that their calling was of God, Ferus. 3. And in regard of the people, hereby the Lord would have their ministerie the more reverenced, and had in reputation, Marbach. As Iosephus writeth, how Alexander the Great, when the high Priest met him adorned with his Priestly attire, reverenced him, and adored the great God of heaven in him, whose Priest he was. 4. Beside the comelinesse and outward glorie of the Priestly attire, there was another cause of their institution, peculiaris usus ipsorum vestium, the speciall action and use of those garments; for some of them were for some speciall ministration and service: as the breast plate, which was set with twelve precious stones, in remembrance of the twelve tribes of Israel, Tostatus. 4. Ornatus exterior vere & spiritualis defectus notavit: The outward adorning noted the defect of true spirituall ornaments, &c. Calvin. And hereby was signified the insufficiencie of Aarons Priesthood.

5. Ad

5. And God by this glittering shew of the Priestly garments, voluit ploy quam Angelicum virtutum omnium splendorem ostendere, would set forth the more than Angelicall brightnesse of all vertues, which should shine in Christ. 6. And as those vertues served ad vitia tegenda, to cover the faults of the bodie: so wee are thereby taught, that we must come before God not cloathed with our owne righteousnesse, but appareled with Christs robes, which shall make us to appeare comely in the sight of God, Simler.

QUEST. VI. Of the cunning men that wrought in the Tabernacle.

Vers. 3. Thou shalt speake to all cunning men, whom I have filled. 1. Although there might be men of ordinarie skill in the host, yet that had not beene sufficient for this extraordinarie worke: Communis peritia non satisfecisset huic operi; Common skill had not beene answerable to this worke, Gallus. and therefore the Lord infused into them a speciall gift of understanding and dexteritie to worke in all kinde of curious worke. 2. And it is probable that these principall and chiefe workmen had not onely their skill and knowledge increased, which they were indued with before, but that the Lord did wholly and absolutely infuse into them the knowledge of these Arts: as the text is, that God had filled them with the Spirit of wisdome, Oleaster. Like as the twelve Apostles were men altogether unlearned, whom God used in the spirituall building up of the Church, as these were employed in the materiall Tabernacle. 3. These were not onely endued with an understanding heart, to invent curious works, and give direction to others: but their hands, and other parts of their bodie, were fitted accordingly for the execution and practice and finishing of these works. And chap 31.4. it is said, they were filled with wisdome, &c. to finde out curious works, to worke in gold and silver, &c. They did not onely invent and finde them out, but did also helpe to worke themselves, Tostat. qu. 4. 4. It may be that such like works, quotidie nunc fiunt, &c. are now made in many places: but then in that simple age and rude time, such things having not beene done before, these curious works seemed strange and admirable, Tostat. qu. 2.

QUEST. VII. Whether this gift of cunning and wisdome remained in the workmen after the Tabernacle was finished.

Tostatus here putteth forth a question, whether, after that the Tabernacle and the worke thereof was finished, these cunning men still retained this gift of understanding in Sciences and Arts. 1. The negative part may bee thus proved, that their knowledge and skill then ceased, because there was no more use thereof, after they had finished that worke for the which it was given them As also, like as the gift of prophecie alwaies continued not with the Prophets, but during that time onely wherein they prophesied. But Tostatus here answereth, that though the worke were ended, for the which the cunning men were indued with such wisdome, yet it was not necessarie that the gift should be taken from them, though the use were discontinued: and againe, there is difference betweene an habit of the minde, and an act onely of the minde. The Prophets had not a Propheticall habit infused, but onely an actuall illumination was set upon them while they prophesied, and that illumination being intermitted, they left prophesying: and therefore he concludeth, Deum non abstulisse habitus infusos, That God did not take away from them the habits of these Arts and Sciences infused, after the Tabernacle was finished, quæst. 3. 3. But the more probable opinion is, that this gift was neither altogether lost, which they had received, neither yet did it wholly remaine: for these workmen were indued with a double faculties; one was in the illumination of their minde, to invent how to fashion the worke according to Moses direction, and that platforme which was shewed in the mount: the other was a dexteritie and agilitie in their hand to worke that which they had devised and invented. The first of these, being a propheticall gift, and proceeding of a speciall instinct, serveth and find out worke answerable to the patterne, ceased and was intermitted in them, after the Tabernacle was finished: for it was an act rather of the minde, than an habit: neither was there any cause why that inward instinct should continue, the end being atchieved wherefore it was first infused. But the other faculties in their handiworke, which was increased by their practice and experience, and was confirmed by use and custome, could not be so soone forgotten and laid aside: it is not unlike but that the same remained still, which they might have put in practice in other works and buildings, if there had been occasion offered.

QUEST. VIII. Of the number of the Priestly garments and ornaments.

Vers. 4. Now these shall be the garments. 1. Beda is of opinion, that there were but eight kinde of garments in all which the high Priest was apparelled with, namely these: 1. The breast-plate, or rationall for the breast. 2. The Ephod for the shoulders. 3. The robe. 4 And coat for the whole bodie. 5. The Miter for the head. 6. And the girdle for the waste. 7. The linen breeches to cover the secret parts. 8. And the plate of gold for the Miter: whereof three, the linen breeches, the linen coat, and the girdle were common to the inferiour Priests. But Beda is greatly deceived: and in these three points: The coat here named called cetoneth taschebets, the embroidered coat, was not common unto the inferiour Priests, but peculiar to the high Priest, vers. 39. Moses is bid to make Aarons sonnes coats also, et aaseh, though they were not embroidered, vers. 40. 2. The high Priest also had a kinde of girdle proper to himselfe, which was made of needle worke, vers. 39. and the inferiour Priests also had other girdles beside, vers. 40. 3. The other Priests also had bonnets, which were of a divers fashion from the Miter, which was made for the high Priest, vers. 40.

Salomon maketh but nine parcels of the Priestly attire; and Rabbi likewise: namely foure, which were common to all the Priests: the linen breeches, the linen coat, girdle and bonnet: and five peculiar to the high Priest: his Ephod, breast-plate, robe, girdle, and miter. But herein they are deceived, because they omit that garment which is called cetoneth taschebets, the embroidered coat, which was a speciall garment appertaining to the high Priest: and so the high Priest, beside his Ephod and robe, which Lib. 3. de Temp.

which had pomegranats and bels hanging at it, had also another embroidered coat, Mont. Vatab. whereof mention is made, *vers.*39.

3. Lyranus and *Tostatus, qu.*2. following Iosephus, doe number ten severall Priestly ornaments: foure common to all the Priests: 1. The linen breeches. 2. The linen coat. 3. The girdle. 4. And bonnet. Six other were peculiar to the high Priest: 1. The Ephod. 2. The pectorall or breast-plate. 3. The robe with the bels and pomegranats. 4. The girdle. 5. The miter. 6. The golden plate set upon the miter. But they commit the same error with the other before, in omitting the Priests embroidered coat: which maketh up the number of ten: the golden plate being not reckoned apart by it selfe, but counted with the miter.

4. This then is the best numbring of these Priestly garments: to appoint six as peculiar to the high Priest, as they are set downe in the text, *vers.*4. where the golden plate must be comprehended under the miter, because it was but a part of it: and foure other were common to all the Priests; the linen coats, girdles, bonnets, and breeches: as they are described, *vers.*40. to the end; so they were ten in all: and if the golden plate bee counted by it selfe, there will bee in all eleven severall kinde of raiment and ornaments; some for Aaron, some for his sonnes. And so Cajetane accounteth them: and Thomas maketh seven garments of the high Priest, and foure of the rest.

Thom.1.2.qu.
103.ar.5.ad.9.

QUEST. IX. What garments were peculiar to the high Priests, what common.

Vers.4. These holy garments shall they make for Aaron thy brother, and for his sonnes. 1. These garments then being appointed onely for Aaron, and his sonnes the Priests, were not also common to the Levits: and so Ribera collecteth out of Iosephus, because the Levits sacrificed not.

2. Some are of opinion, that all the garments which the inferiour Priests used, the high Priest put on: as Iosephus saith, Pontifex etiam utitur hoc, nihil eorum quæ enumeravimus omittens, &c. The high Priest also useth these, omitting nothing of those which we have rehearsed. So also *Tostat. qu.*2. and Ribera. But this is not like: for to what end should the high Priest weare two girdles, one of the common sort, which the inferiour Priests used, the other the embroidered girdle? and likewise it had beene superfluous for him to put on two bonnets, as Iosephus thinketh: one of linen, as other Priests, the other of blew silke.

Lib.3. de Temp. cap.5.
Lib.3. de Antiq. cap.8.
Lib.3. de Temp. cap.5.

3. Therefore the garments are better thus distinguished: that some of them were peculiar to the high Priests, as the six in this verse set downe: some were peculiar to the inferiour Priests to be usually and ordinarily worne, as their linen coats, girdles, bonnets, *vers.*40. which sometime the high Priest did weare also, as in the day of expiation; but not ordinarily. See *quest.*41. Some common to them both, as the linen breeches, which are said to be for Aaron and his sonnes: but the other three, mentioned *vers.*40. are said to be made for Aarons sonnes, Iun. in Analys. Montan. The high Priest had like garments unto those three, a coat, a girdle, a miter, but they differed in manner of workmanship. So then the high Priest had three garments unlike to the rest both in matter and forme, the Robe, the Ephod, the Pectorall: and three other, though like in fashion, his coat, miter, girdle, yet differed in costly stuffe and curious workmanship.

QUEST. X. Which garments were put on first, which last.

BUt further it is here to be considered, that the garments are otherwise and in another order rehearsed in this verse, and afterward appointed to be made, than they were put on: for, as Rupertus observeth, Feminalia linea, &c. postremò posita sunt: The linen breeches are set last in this description, &c. and yet they were put on first. In this manner then and order did the high Priest apparell himselfe: 1. He put on the linen breeches, which came no higher than his waste. 2. Next to that was the long broidered coat, which was made with eyes, or like checker worke, which reached downe to the feet. 3. Upon that was put the Robe, which had bells and pomegranats in the skirts. 4. After that the breast-plate before. 5. Then the Ephod upon the shoulders behind. 6. The girdle. 7. The Miter with the golden plate.

QUEST. XI. Whether the Priestly garments might at any time be carried and used out of the Tabernacle.

Vers.4. That he may serve me in the Priests office. 1. In that it is added, That he may serve me, the use of these Priestly garments is restrained for such service as was done before the Lord in the Tabernacle: the Priest then was neither to use these garments ordinarily, for he had other wearing apparell beside: nor yet in such Priestly offices as were to be done abroad, as when he went to view a leprous person, or leprous house, which belonged to the Priest, *Levit.*13. for such places and persons infected with the leprosie were uncleane by the law, and therefore in such offices it was not fit to use the holy garments. 2. Whereas then the Priest is commanded to wash his cloaths, after he had seene performed all the ceremonies concerning the red Cow which was slaine without the host, *Numb.*19.7. they must be understood to be his owne ordinarie, and not the Priestly garments: which were not to be polluted or defiled, and so consequently were not to be washed and cleansed as other prophane and common vestures. 3. Thirdly appeareth, *Levit.*16.23. where the high Priest is commanded to put off his Priestly garments, with the which hee entred into the holy place, and then to wash his flesh with water, and put on his owne cloaths: he is not willed to wash the Priestly raiment with water. But if it be objected, that the washing of his flesh sheweth he was uncleane, and so by that meanes the holy garments were uncleane also: it may be answered, that the Priest in this case having prayed for his and the peoples sinnes, did wash his flesh not as a signe of any legall uncleanesse, for then he should not have entred into the holy place, but to signifie that hee was purified from his sinnes. And this may further be observed, that whereas there were two kinds of pollutions, one by morall offences, which indeed defiled the soule, the other by legall transgressions, which touched not the soule, but the externall observation of the ceremonies onely: in the first they onely washed the flesh, in the second sometime their garments onely, sometime their flesh and garments together, if it were a great pollution: but never their flesh alone, *Tostat. qu.*7. & 8.

Quest

QUEST. XII. Whether the high Priest did well in meeting Alexander in his Priestly attire.

But if it were not lawfull to carrie the Priestly garments out of the Tabernacle: it will be objected, that Iaddua the high Priest, being apparelled in his Priestly robes, met Alexander the Great without the gates of Jerusalem, and by the sight of him Alexanders wrath was appeased, and the Citie delivered from the danger which was feared. 1. Here it may be answered, that as wee receive this part of Iosephus narration, how Alexander meeting the high Priest, reverenced him, and adored that God, whose name hee carried written in his forehead: so if we give credit to the rest, how that, after publike supplication made before unto God, and solemne sacrifice for their deliverance, the Lord appeared in a dreame the next night unto the high Priest, appointing him to go forth to meet Alexander in his Priestly attire; this being admitted for truth, this question is at an end: for by Gods extraordinarie direction, the Priest might do that, which ordinarily was not lawfull: as, though they had a strait charge to offer their sacrifices at the doore of the Tabernacle, yet the Prophets, as Samuel, David, Elias, built Altars in other places, and there offered their sacrifices, Tostat. quæst. 17. 2. But though there had beene no such vision shewed to the high Priest, which it is not necessarie to beleeve, seeing Iosephus is found to be very forward in setting downe such things as might tend to the credit of his nation: yet this act of the high Priest might be justified, in respect of that necessitie whereunto they were then brought: for the ceremoniall lawes were to give way in such cases; as David to satisfie his hunger, might lawfully eat of the shew-bread, which otherwise none were to eat of, but the Priests. So likewise, they might upon the Sabbath lead their oxe or asse to water, or helpe them out, being fallen into a ditch, and yet not transgresse against the rest of the Sabbath. If these ceremonies were dispensed with for the safegard and preservation of one man, or of a few cattell, much more for the deliverance of the whole Citie, which was then in danger, might the high Priest, without any extraordinarie direction, have put on his Priestly apparell, to meet that victorious King. Lib. 11. de Antiq. Iudæorum c. 8. Luk. 13. 15.

QUEST. XIII. Of the matter whereof the holy garment should be made.

Vers. 5. They shall take gold and blew silke. 1. By gold is here understood, Aurum in massa, & aurum in filis; Gold in the lumpe or masse, and golden thread, for the garments were made of golden thread: the precious stones were set into gold, and thereof was made the golden plate in the high Priests attire, Tostat. qu. 8. 2. And under the name of gold are comprehended also the precious stones, because they were inclosed, and set into the gold, Simler. 3. And these five are named, gold, blew silke, purple, skarlet, fine linen, not that all these concurred to the making of every garment, Sed quia nullum ornamentum erat, quod non ex istorum aliquo, &c. But because there was not any of the ornaments, which was not made of some of them, Cajetan. 4. The blew colour was like unto the skie, or violet: the purple was like to the skarlet colour, which was made of the liquor or bloud of a certaine shell-fish called the purple: the skarlet was died with certaine graines growing in a tree, whereof Plinie writeth: and to make the colour deeper, it was twice died, in the wooll, and afterward, when it was spun: the fine linen was made of a most fine and white kinde of flax or linen, Ribera. 5. These foure colours represented the foure elements; two of them in colour, the skarlet the fire; the blew the skie or ayre; the other in their originall; the purple the sea, the linen the earth, out of the which they came: and hereby as Iosephus noteth, was signified, Sacerdotem illum esse summi rerum omnium conditoris: That he was the Priest of the high Creator of all things, because the colours of his garments did represent the whole world. 6. Beda also thus collecteth, that because all things were prescribed to be made of gold, and precious colours: Nihil vile, vel sordidum in Sacerdotis ore, vel opere debet apparere; There should no vile thing appeare either in the Priests words or workes, &c. Ribera. Lib. 9. cap. 41. Lib. 6. de bell. Iudaic. cap. 6. Lib. 3. de sacr. vestib. cap. 5.

QUEST. XIV. Of the name of the Ephod, and the divers kinds thereof.

Vers. 6. And they shall make the Ephod. 1. The Latine Interpreter calleth it superhumerale, following the Septuagint, which interpret it ἐπωμίδα, the shoulder garment: Iunius translateth it amictum, a short cloake: but the Hebrew word is better retained, Ephod, because it was a peculiar garment belonging to the high Priest, so called of the word aphad, which signifieth to close or compasse, or gird on; as chap. 39. 5. Thou shalt close them to him with embroidered gard of the Ephod, Oleaster. 2. There were two kinds of the Ephod; one was common (made of linen onely) both to the inferiour Priests, as also put to the sword 85. Priests, that did weare a linen Ephod: as also to the Levits, as Samuel ministred before the Lord girded with a linen Ephod, 1 Sam. 2. 18. Some thinke that this kinde was also permitted unto all men in generall, Ribera. Some, that the Kings had a privilege to weare it, because David danced before the Arke in a linen Ephod, 2 Sam. 6. But R. Salomon thinketh more probably, that none were girded with the Ephod, but colentes Deum, aut servientes ei, They which worshipped God, or were specially addicted to his service. Other then beside the Priests might weare the linen Ephod, but onely in sacred actions: as David at that time danced before the Arke, Gallas. Oleaster. The other kinde of Ephod was peculiar to the high Priest, which was made of gold, and of the foure colours before named, Hierome ad Fabiolam. And this Ephod it was not lawfull for any other to imitate: which was the cause of the fall of Gedeon, because he made an Ephod like unto that used in the Tabernacle, Gallas.

QUEST. XV. How Gedeon offended in making an Ephod.

Iudg. 8. whereas Gedeon made that Ephod of 1700. sicles of gold, Iudg. 8. 26. 1. Augustine moveth a question, how so much gold could be put into one Ephod; and thinketh that by the Ephod are understood, as the whole by the part, Omnia quæ constituit Gedeon in civitate ad colendum Deum; All the things which Gedeon made in his City to worship God by, as in the Tabernacle. And he thinketh further, that all Israel is said to go a whoring after it: although Gedeon made no image, Quia extra Tabernaculum simile fas non erat, Because it was not lawful to make any like thing out of the Tabernacle. Quæst. super Iudicum q. 41.

2. But

2. But it need not seeme strange that so much gold was put into one vesture: for the whole summe, counting sixtie sicles to a pound, amounteth but to eighteen pound weight, or thereabout: and seeing the text maketh mention of no other ornaments, which Gedeon made, but the Ephod, we cannot conjecture that he made any beside that. And though it were unlawfull to make an Ephod elsewhere like that which the high Priest used in the Tabernacle; yet that was not onely Gedeons fault, but for that also by this occasion the people fell to idolatrie, and abused that Ephod in the idolatrous service of Baal Berith, as it followeth in the same place, Judg.9.33. Iun.

QUEST. XVI. Of the fashion of the Ephod.

Vers.7. THe two shoulders thereof, &c. 1. R. Ab. Ezra thinketh, that this Ephod onely covered the back-parts of the Priest, and that the breastplate or pectorall served for the other part before: but if it had beene so, then how could the shoulders thereof be joyned together one to another? therefore the Ephod had two parts, one before, and another behind, Cajetan.

2. Beda thinketh that the Ephod was made double, and so halfe of it was in sight without, and halfe within, and so it was joyned together. But Hierom calleth it, pallíolum mira pulchritudinis, a cloake of exceeding beautie: it was not therefore onely put double upon the back-parts; it was fastened in the shoulders, one part to another, Montan.

3. Iosephus thinketh it had sleeves; so also Ribera. But the contrarie is received, that it was sine manicis, without sleeves, Lippoman.

Ribet. lib. 3. de sacr. vestib. c. 10. Tostat. qu. 2.

4. Iosephus also thinketh, that it was but a cubit long, and so came but to the waste. So also Ribera and Tostatus thinke, that pertingebat usq; ad zonam, it came but downe to the girdlestead, or waste: Procopius extendeth it, usq; ad præcordia, unto the parts about the heart. But it rather reached à lumbis usq; ad humeros, from the loynes to the shoulders, as Iunius, and Montanus in his description, usq; ad umbilicum, downe to the navell, Cajetane: for if it did not hang downe beyond the waste, the broidered gard of the Ephod could not handsomely serve to close in the other garments, and gird them in the waste together with the Ephod: as is prescribed, chap.39.5.

5. Thus then was the Ephod made; it had foure laps or wings: whereof two were joyned together on each shoulder, and two were coupled beneath under the arme holes, Tostat. quæst.2. which are called the broidered gard, or girdle, as Iun. Oleaster, which was not made of the same stuffe onely which the Ephod was made of, but out of the same peece, to make a difference betweene the girdle of the Ephod, and the other embroidered girdle, which was put aloft upon the garments: so that the nether lappes of the Ephod served as a girdle to fasten it below, Iun. Oleaster.

6. It was made of broidered worke, not pictured either with beasts, or flowers, or any such, but devise worke, as the word signifieth: such as Turkie and Arabian worke is, Montan.

7. On the forepart of the Ephod, was left a certaine hole or void place, for the pectorall to be placed in. Iosephus. Contra pectus nihil contextum erat, &c. Against the breast there was nothing wrought, that place might be left for the pectorall or breast-plate, Hierom.

8. Beside, the Ephod had two golden chaines, not to hold up the breast-plate or pectorall, as Tostatus seemeth to thinke, for these chaines are described afterward, vers.22. but they served rather, Ut ligarent partes superhumerales, &c. To fasten together the parts of the Ephod in the shoulder on both sides, Cajetan. Oleaster. For they were fastned on both sides to the bosses of gold upon the shoulders, where were set the two precious stones, vers.14. which now come in the next place to be handled.

QUEST. XVII. Of the two Onyx or Sardonyx stones, why they are called stones of remembrance.

Vers.9. THou shalt take two Onyx stones. 1. The Hebrew word is shoham, which the Chalde, whom Montanus followeth, takes for Beryll, of a sea colour: the Septuag. for the smaragd, which is of greene colour: Procopius for the Saphire, of skie colour: but Iosephus calleth it the Sardonyx, Iunius: and commonly it is called the Onyx stone, rather the Sardonyx, because it is so called, Apoc. 21. 20. which is of the colour of the naile shewing upon the flesh, wherein there is a red mixed with white; so the Sardonyx hath a mixt colour of red, as the Sardius stone, and of white as the Onyx, which is of the colour of the naile, Tostat. qu.10. Oleaster, Ribera.

Plinie lib 37. cap.6.

2. In these two stones were graven the names of the 12. Tribes, according to their eldership: in the stone on the right shoulder, six of the eldest, and in the other, the six younger, Iosephus. The six eldest were, Ruben, Simeon, Iudah, Dan, Nepthali, Gad: the six younger, Aser, Issachar Zebulon, Ephraim, Manasses, Benjamin; for Levi was left out, that Tribe being now to bee sequestred for the service of the Tabernacle, and for Ioseph were written his two sonnes, Ephraim and Manasser.

3. These are called stones of remembrance, not that the Lord need be put in remembrance; but that hereby the Israelites might be assured, that they were alwayes had in remembrance with God, Mont. And Beda assigneth three other reasons, why they are so called: Vt ipse fidem Patriarcharum memoriter imitari; That he should remember to imitate the faith of the Patriarks, whose names he did beare: that the Priest should remember the Tribes in his prayers unto God: and to admonish the people in generall not to decline from the steps of their fathers, Beda.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the mysticall application of the Ephod, and the two precious stones.

NOw this first priestly garment is diversly applied: 1. Iosephus by the two precious stones understandeth the Sunne and Moone. 2. Philo, the two Hemispheres of the world. 3. Hierome by the twelve names written in the precious stones, would have signified the twelve Apostles, which first preached the Gospell. 4. Beda: The Priest is admonished hereby to follow the life, and embrace the faith of the Patriarks and Prophets. 5. But most fitly rather is hereby signified, that Christ doth beare his Church stant upon his shoulders, even as the Eagle beareth her young ones upon her wings, Deut. 32. 11. Marbach, Gland, Simler. Rupertus also hereby understandeth the bearing of our iniquities, which were laid upon Christs shoulders: Prosper, the government which is laid upon Christ. Procopius by the names graven in the stones, their names who are written in the booke of life, whom Christ carrieth as it were upon his shoulders into heaven.

QUEST. XIX. Why it was called the breast-plate of judgement.

Vers. 15. Thou shalt make the breast-plate of judgement, &c. 1. The Septuagint call it λόγιον, and the Latine Interpreter following them, rationale, that is, the rationall or reasonable ornament: so named (as Tostatus thinketh) of the effect, because by that, Ratio reddebatur de his quæ inquirebantur; a reason was given of those things which were inquired. So also Ribera: because it was fatidicum, it propheſied of things to come. Procopius, because rationalis animi pars, &c. the reasonable part of the minde is placed in the heart, which the breast-plate covered. Vatablus giveth this reason, Quia exacta ratione considerandæ erant, &c. Because the things therein, as the Urim and Thummim, were exactly and with deepe reason to be considered of the high Priest. But this descanting upon the word is here superfluous, seeing the Hebrew word coshen signifieth a pectorall or breast-plate, and not as the Septuag. and Latine translate.

2. It is then called the breast-plate of judgement: not as the Hebrewes, because the high Priest found therein what the judgement of God was in that matter, which was inquired upon: for it shall afterward be shewed, that the Urim and Thummim were not given to that end: nor yet because the high Priest in all weighty matters of judgement did put on the Ephod with the breast-plate, Marbach. for by that reason it might as well be called the Ephod of judgement: neither, because Aaron should in judgement have the people in remembrance, when he went into the holy place, Oleaster. But it was therefore so called, because the high Priest did put it on, when he consulted with the Lord about the causes of the people, to give right judgement: as Numb. 27. 21. He shall aske counsell for him by the judgement of Urim before the Lord, &c.

QUEST. XX. Of the fashion of the breast-plate.

Vers. 16. Foure-square shall it be. The breast-plate is thus described: 1. For the manner of workmanship, it must be of broidered worke like the Ephod. 2. For the matter, five things are required to the making thereof, as before in the Ephod: gold, blew silke, purple, skarlet, fine twined linen. For the forme and fashion, it must be foure-square, every side of even length, as appeareth by the foure rowes of the stones: and double it must be, that it might be of more strength to hold and receive the stones, ut firmius subsisteret auro, that it might be the stiffer for the gold and precious stones, Pellican. For the quantity, it was an handbreadth, which was halfe a cubit, that is, twelve fingers: for if it had been but the small handbreadth, that is, foure fingers, it had not beene sufficient to cover the breast before. Iunius, Ribera, Pelargus. 5. The ornaments also of the pectorall are set forth, which were twelve precious stones, set in foure rankes or rowes.

QUEST. XXI. Of the twelve precious stones, their names, colours, qualities, and congruitie with the twelve Tribes.

Vers. 17. A Rubie, Topaze, and a Carbuncle is the first row. In the severall application of these stones, these foure things shall be observed: 1. The name. 2. The colour. 3. The vertues and qualities. 4. The congruity with the tribes of Israel.

Rubie. The first stone is called odem of adam, which signifieth to wax red. Iosephus calleth it the Sardine: in the Septuagint the Sardie: it is most like to be the Rubie, Montan. Genevens. 2. The colour of it is red, Oleaster, as the signification of the word is, rather than yellow, of the colour of fire, as Iunius calleth it for Pyropus the Carbuncle, a precious stone like fire. 3. They say it repelleth feare, and cheareth the maketh bold, Tostat. sharpeneth the wit, and stancheth bloud at the nose, Magirus. 4. This stone, they say stood for Ruben: Montanus maketh an allusion betweene Ruben and the Rubie: but Ribera giveth the reason: that as the Sardie is red and somewhat of a fiery colour: so he went into his fathers concubine, & igne libidinis incensus fuit, and so was set on fire with concupiscence. 1. The Rubie or Sardius.

Topaze. 1. The Hebrew word is pitdah, in which there are three radicall or principall letters, p, t, d, which being transposed, t, p, d, make topad, or topaz, not much differing in sound, Montan. It is so called of the place where it was found, Topazos in Æthiopia, Marbach. Or the Isle Topazon gave the name to it, Plinie lib. 37. cap. 8. so called of τοπάζω, to seeke, because it was much sought for, Gloss. interlin. would have it called Topazium, as if we should say, topadium, that is, of all colour; but there is no reason of that etymology. 2. Some take it to be of greene colour, Montan. And so some of the Hebrewes thinke it to be Smaragd. Ribera out of Plinie lib. 37. cap. 8. alleageth, that in greenenesse of colour it exceedeth all other precious stones. But it is rather of yellowish colour, mixt betweene gold and skie colour, Isidor. Hispalen. lib. 16. Tostat. Gloss. interlin. There are two sorts of it: one of the colour of gold, which is more precious: the other like unto saffron, which is of the second sort, Marbach. And it seemeth to be of yellow colour, because Iob 28. 19. the Topaze of Æthiopia, and the fine gold are named together. 3. It is profitable against phrensie, and lunacie, and melancholy, as Dioscorides. 4. Simeon is resembled to this stone, not so much ob animum præsentem, for his present and resolute minde, which Ribera would have signified by the greene colour: as because he was inflamed with ire and rage, when he slue the Sichemites. 2. The Topaze.

Carbuncle. 1. Iosephus, with the Septuagint, call it the Smaragd, so also Iunius, Vatablus: the Chalde and Latine Interpreter: but that stone is of greene colour, it seemeth rather to be the Chrysolite, Montan. 3. The Carbuncle, or Chrysolite.

Montan. or the Carbuncle, Geneuenſ. The word is bareketh, derived of barak, which ſignifieth to lighten. 2. It was then a precious ſtone that ſparkled and gliſtred as the lightening, which could not be of greene colour: though the Smaragd be commended for the exceeding gliſtering brightneſſe; in ſo much that a Romane Emperour is ſaid to have ſeene in his Smaragd the ſword players, as they did fight. But becauſe barak ſignifieth lightening, as *Ezech.*1.13. Out of the fire went (barak) lightning; this ſtone being named thereof, may better be taken for the Carbuncle, or Chryſolite. 3. The Carbuncle is of ſuch exceeding brightneſſe, that it giveth light, and ſhineth in the darke. 4. Hereunto ſome reſemble Levi, Montan. Toſtat. But it is more like that Levi was omitted, becauſe the high Prieſt of Levi, who was to weare this glorious breaſt-plate, might ſtand for the whole Tribe: then Iudah was rather named in the third place, Ribera, Pelarg. whoſe royall power, ſtreaming glory, and princely dignity, is more lively ſet forth in the ſhining Carbuncle, or gliſtering Chryſolite, Pelarg. than in the greene ſmaragd: as Marbach. And whereas the Carbuncle is ſo called of the ſimilitude of fire, licèt ignes non ſentiant, although theſe ſtones feele no fire themſelves, Plin. 37.7. by this property Meſſiah the Prince of Juda is ſhadowed forth, who in that reſpect may be called apyrotus, not to be vanquiſhed or overcome with the fire of affliction: Of his government (as the Prophet ſaith) there ſhall be no end, Iſai. 9.10.

4. The Emraud, or Smaragd.

Verſ. 18. In the ſecond row, an Emerand, or Smaragd, a Saphir, a Diamond. An Emeraud, or Smaragd: 1. The word is naphech, which is of an obſcure ſignification. Montanus deriveth it of haphach, which ſignifieth to turne, or change: ſome take it to be an obſcure ſtone. But it is like that the Lord made choice of the moſt ſpeciall and principall precious ſtones to adorne the prieſtly pectorall. Moſt take it for the Carbuncle, Septuag. Lat. Vatab. Marbach. Pelarg. Ribera. Sanctes Pagnine following R. David, taketh it to be a ſtone of a blacke colour. But it is moſt like to be the Smaragd, as the Chalde Paraphraſt calleth it Semeragdin. So alſo Thargum Hieroſol. Montanus, Oleaſter therein alſo conſent. Iunius tranſlateth it the Chryſopraſe, which is of a bright greene colour, as it were betweene the colour of gold, and greene: for ſo the word is compounded of χρυσος, gold, and πρασον, leekes: but the Smaragd and Chryſopraſe are two divers kinde of precious ſtones: the one is the fourth, the other the tenth in that order, ſet downe, *Apoc.*21.19. 2. The colour of the Smaragd is exceeding greene, that other greene things being compared unto it, ſeeme not to be greene. 3. It is comfortable to the ſight, it is gliſtering, & receiveth the images of things, and maketh a ſhew and repreſentation of them, Plin. lib. 37. *cap.*5. *Iſidor. Etymol.*16. it is good for the memory, Montan. reſiſteth poiſon, and is an enemy to venery, inſomuch that it ſometime breaketh in ſuch uncleane acts, Borrh. 4. Ribera, Pelargus ſay that Dan was reſembled hereby: who as fire conſumed the City Lais: and Sampſon of Dan, as fire devoured the Philiſtims: rather the Smaragd, which is of a greene colour, like the greene ſerpents, ſetteth forth Dan, whom Iacob reſembleth to a ſerpent, Geneſ. 49.17. And Sampſon of Dan, was as comfortable to Iſrael, as the Smaragd is to the eyes, and a preſervative againſt the Philiſtims, as the other is againſt poiſon.

5. The Saphir.

The Saphir. 1. So it is called alſo in the Hebrew, and therefore without all queſtion it can be no other ſtone. Oleaſter thinketh it to be the Iaſper ſtone: but the ſame word in the originall, is a ſufficient direction to led us to finde out the kinde. 2. There are divers ſorts of Saphirs: ſome are white, and ſo hard, that they will abide the ſtroke of the hammer upon the anvill; which therefore are taken to be a kinde of Adamant, Montan. But the uſuall colour is blewiſh, like unto the cleare heavens, *Exod.*24.10. and it ſhineth with golden ſpeckes in it, as *Plin. lib.*37. *cap.*9. whereupon the Nazarites were compared for their ruddy colour, to poliſhed Saphir, *Lament.*4.7. Riber. 3. It ſtayeth the flux of bloud, is good againſt poiſon, comforteth the heart, Toſtat. It is good for the ſight, and being beaten into powder, and ſo drunke, it healeth melancholy, and cureth the ſtinging of ſcorpions. 4. Montanus giveth this ſtone to Iſachar; Toſtatus to Dan: but the next in order of birth, which is here obſerved, was Nepthali, Levi being omitted, who is reſembled to the Saphir, becauſe of the heavenly colour; for that ſome of the Apoſtles are held to have beene of this Tribe, who delivered the heavenly doctrine of the Goſpell. And ſo as Nepthali is compared to an Hind let goe, giving goodly words, *Geneſ.*49.21. the Apoſtles were as Hinds let goe, and ſent out by our Saviour, uttering heavenly and comfortable words, Ribera. And the Hind to the which Nepthali is compared, for ſpots and colour, is not much unlike the Saphir.

6. The Diamond.

The Diamond. 1. The word is jahalam, which is derived of halam, to ſmite, which ſheweth it to be a ſtone, that is not broken with ſmiting or beating: ſo Onkelus calleth it, cabehalam, of the ſame ſignification: it appeareth then to be the Adamant, or Diamond, which is of ſuch hardneſſe, that neq; igne, neq; ferro molleſcit, it is neither mollified with fire, nor iron: the Arabians call it Almas for Adamas, the Adamant: R. Saadias, and R. Abraham, whom Montanus, Oleaſter, Iunius, Pelargus follow, take it for the Diamond: the Septuagint, Joſephus, whom Ribera, Marbach, Borrhaius follow, take it for the Jaſper, which is of greeniſh colour, with certaine bloudy ſpeckes; but the Jaſper is the laſt which is named, called Iaſpheh in Hebrew, Iaſpheh. 2. The Diamond is in colour like unto Chryſtall, ſomewhat yellower, but more ſhining and tranſparent. 3. It is of invincible hardneſſe, yet may be mollified with goats bloud, Marbach. 4. This ſtone, Toſtatus would have to reſemble Nepthali, becauſe he counteth Levi one; Montanus, Zebulon: but the next in order, Levi being not reckoned, is Gad, who for his courage and valour, is compared to a Lion, *Deut.*33.20. and in that reſpect his invincible courage may be ſignified, by the hardneſſe of the Diamond, Pelarg.

Verſ. 19. In the third row, a Turkeis, an Achate, an Amethyſt, &c.

7. The Turkeis.

A Turkeis. 1. The Hebrew word is leſem: Hierome following the Septuagint, and ſo alſo Ioſephus before him, call it Lygurium, the Lygurian ſtone. Some thinke it ſhould be read the Lyncurian: which men thinke to be a ſtone engendred of the urine of the Lynx, which he covereth in the ſand, Vatabl. Oleaſ. Marbach.

Marbach. Pelarg. and ſo the Chalde Paraphraſt uſeth the word kauchyri, which commeth neere the word lakuri, Montanus. But Plinie denieth the Lyncurie to be a precious ſtone, but rather a kinde of Amber, lib.37.cap.3. Ribera thinketh it ſhould be rather called the Ligurian, than Lyncurian; and thinketh Eraſmus to be deceived, that in Hierom, for Lygurian, would have read, Lyncurian; and he taketh it for a kinde of Carbuncle, which was thought to be bred in Liguria, though Plinie deny it, lib. 37. cap.7. But it is more like to be the Turkeis, Genevenſ. which Iunius taketh for the ſtone called Cyanus, which is of a blew colour. Gloſſ. interlin. ſaith it is a ſtone of blew colour, which is found in renibus bovis, in the kidneyes of an oxe. But no ſuch ſtone of price is like to be there ingendred, or of the Lynx urine, as to be thought meet to be put into the peſtorall. Riber.lib.3.c.11.

2. Ribera taketh this ſtone to be of a yellow and fiery colour, as the Carbuncle; but Hierome judgeth it rather to be the Hyacinth, which is a blew precious ſtone, as the Turkeis is. Toſtatus ſaith, it hath colorem inter aureum & argenteum medium, a middle colour betweene gold and ſilver. This third order of ſtones rather imitated the purple colour, which was one of the foure uſed in the Tabernacle: as the firſt row did reſemble the skarlet, the ſecond the white colour, the fourth the blew or hyacinth, which were the foure colours of the Tabernacle.

3. The vertues of it are theſe: It taketh up ſtrawes, as the Load ſtone draweth iron: it diſcovereth poiſon: is good for thoſe that want colour, Toſtat. They ſay it is comfortable to the ſtomacke, and ſtayeth the flix, Marbach.

4. Here, as Toſtatus thinketh, was Gads name written: Montanus, the name of Dan. But Aſher is the next in birth to Gad: whom Ribera and Pelargus would have reſembled by this ſtone, in regard of the plenty of bleſſings, wherewith he was endowed, Deut.33.24,25. as of favour, multitude of children, abundance of oile, braſſe, and iron: the Turcais is of a bleiſh metalline colour: and thereby might be ſignified the abundance of metals and minerals in Aſhers countrey.

8. The Achate.

An Achate. 1. The Hebrew word is ſhebo: the Chalde tranſlateth it tarkaia, which Montanus taketh to be the Turcais before ſpoken of: the Septuag. Ioſephus, Hierome with the reſt, call it the Achate: which as Plinie writeth, is ſo called, becauſe it was found in Sicilia neere unto a river of the ſame name, lib.37.cap.10. 2. Iſidor ſaith, it is of blackiſh colour, lib.16. Etym. cap.10. R. David, of blew or skie colour: but is indeed of divers colours, white, red, greene, blew, azure, Borrh. of ſuch variety, that ſometime therein are repreſented, woods, mountaines, beaſts, rivers, Marbach. Pirrhus is ſaid to have had ſuch an Achate, that the nine Muſes, and Apollo playing upon his Harp, might be deſcried therein, not by any artificiall workmanſhip, but the naturall mixture of divers colours, Borrh. 3. It is thought to reſiſt thunder, to allay tempeſts, to procure dreames, to prevaile againſt poiſon, Toſtatus. 4. Therein was not written Aser, as Toſtatus; nor Nepthali, as Montanus; but Iſſachar rather, who followeth next in order: who is reſembled to this ſtone of divers colours, becauſe of his variety of vertues: and for his piety, for calling the people to the mountaine and ſervice of God, Deut.33.19. Pelarg. Ribera: but rather (ſaving that all theſe are meere conjectures) the variety of the colours repreſenting mountaines, woods, cattell, ſheweth Iſſachars deſire to husbandry and tillage, to the which he ſhould be addicted, Gen.49.15.

9. The Amethyſt.

The Amethyſt. 1. The Hebrew name is achlamah, derived of chalam, which ſignifieth to dreame. The Hebrewes hold that it cauſeth dreames, which ſeemeth rather to be one of their dreames, Oleaſter: rather, valet adverſus inſomnia, it availeth againſt dreames, Montan. It is uſually called the Amethyſt, Ioſeph. Hierome, Vatab. Iun. with others. Some take it for the Hematite, Genevenſ. but that is another ſtone of the colour of bloud. 2. It is ſome what of violet colour, Plin. lib.37.cap.10. or neere to purple, Marbach. 3. It hath a ſingular force againſt drunkenneſſe, Dioſcorides. 4. In this ſtone was written, Iudah, as Toſtatus; Gad, as Montan. rather Zabulun, who followeth in order: whereby is ſignified his ſtudy and heavenly vertues: wherein he is joyned with Iſſachar, Deut.33.19. Pelarg. Ribera: rather the violet and purple colour of the Amethyſt betokened their ſhipping, ſailes and ſtreames, which were of blew and purple, Ezech.27.7. And ſo Zabulun is celebrated for their navigation, voyages and goings out to ſea, Deut.33.18.

Verſ.20. And in the fourth row, Beryll, Onyx, and Iaſper.

10. The Beryll.

Beryll. 1. In Hebrew the word is tarſhiſh, which is taken for the Sea; it was then a pretious ſtone of the colour of the Sea, Chald. Montanus: ſo is Beryll, as Iunius tranſlateth; not the Chryſolite, Sept. Latine, Genevenſ. or Pelargus: for that is of yellow gliſtring colour like gold: much leſſe can it be the Carbuncle, as ſome interpret, Tarſhiſh, Ezech. 10. Some take it for the Turkais. B. but that was the ſeventh ſtone Iudah, for the Hyacinth. 2. For the colour thereof, it was like unto the ſea, from whence it hath the name. David Chimhi ſaith, it was cærulei coloris, of a blewiſh colour: Sanctes and Vatab. of the colour of Hyacinth, which was of a deepe blew: the Beryll rather is of a greene ſea colour. 3. Beryll is good for weary eyes, and it cheriſheth matrimoniall love, Dioſcorides: the naturall qualities thereof we allow, ſupernaturall are but after mens fanſies, and therefore not to be inſiſted upon. 4. Here was written in this ſtone Zabulun, as Toſtatus; and as Montanus following the Chalde, Aſher: but Ephraim following next in order, whom this ſea colour reſembleth, becauſe he ſhould mightily increaſe, as the Sea, Pelarg. rather, for his multiplicity of vertues, becauſe Ephraim in Ioſeph is bleſſed with ſweet dewes, and pleaſant fountaines and depths below, Deut.33.13.

11. The Onyx or Sardonyx.

The Onyx. 1. The Hebrew word is ſoham, which the Sept. Ioſephus, Lat. Vatab. Pagnine, take for the Sardonyx ſtone: ſo alſo Ribera, Pelarg. Iunius here taketh it for the Sardio: but before verſ.9. the ſame word he interpreteth the Sardonyx: Montanus will have it to be Beryll, becauſe the Chalde uſeth the word burla, and Tharg. Hieroſ. bedulha: yet he thinketh the Beryll to be a kinde of Onyx ſtone: whereof whereof he saith, he had seene ten severall sorts, and one Iacobus Trezzius of Millaine promised to shew him eighteene sorts of the Onyx stone. But the Beryll is more like to be the stone of Tarsus, the Sea colour, next before described. 2. Tostatus saith, it is of a fiery colour, with white veines in it: but it rather resembleth the colour of the naile upon the flesh, whereof it is so called: ὄνυξ signifieth a naile, Plin. lib. 37. cap. 6. 3. It casteth the shape and images downeward, as we see in hollow glasses. It hath evill effects, procureth sorrow, kindleth strife, Tostat. but it rather being hung about the necke serveth to strengthen the body, and restraineth venery, Berrhains ex Albert. Mag. 4. Here was written Ioseph, Tostat. Manasses: rather Manasses, who otherwise should be excluded: by the reddish whitenesse of this stone they understand candorem virtutum, the pleasant vertues in Ioseph, and in Manasses his sonne, his courtesie, and humanity, Pelarg. Ribera: the flesh colour of this stone may well signifie, the humane and fleshie and tender affection.

12. The Iasper. The Iasper. 1. The Hebrew word is answerable, which is Iospheh: Olsasi. and in the Arabian tongue it is called jasp, Montan. Onkelos calleth it pazpheren, it may be because the Iasper is spotted like the Panther: the Septuagint, and Iosephus, whom Hieronyme followeth, translate here Beryll: but the originall word sheweth that it must be the Iasper. 2. It is of a greenish colour and transparent, Plin. lib. 37. cap. 8. But the Jaspers which are brought from the East, have spots and specks like bloud, Berrh. 3. It hath a speciall astringent quality, and stancheth bloud, Berrh. 4. This stone, which as Plinie saith, tot habet virtutes, quot venas, hath as many vertues as veines, resembleth the perfection of vertues in Benjamine: in whose tribe it pleased the Lord to dwell, and there to build his Temple, Deut. 33. 12. Ribera, Pelargus.

Quest. XXII. That it is not now certainly knowne, what these precious stones were, their qualities and signification.

But now in the description of these precious stones, these things generally must be observed: 1. That neither their names, colours, nor properties are certainly knowne either to the Hebrewes, or Greekes, as appeareth by the variety and difference of opinion, and translation. 2. But as for the supernaturall properties, which Dioscorides attributeth unto them: as that the Smaragd chaseth away Devils, the Sardius preventeth witchcraft, the Saphir giveth victory: the Achates causeth one to dreame, and allayeth tempests: the Onyx raiseth strife, causeth feare: the Chrysolite worne in gold, prevaileth against evill spirits: of these strange operations there can be no reason given, and they are beyond the reach and compasse of naturall things: and such observations tend rather to superstition, than any profitable instruction. 3. Likewise it is uncertaine which of these precious stones were assigned to each of the tribes. Mouanus setteth downe the tribes in this order: Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Iuda, Issachar, Zebulun, Dan, Nepthali, Gad, Asher, Ioseph, Benjamin, therein following the Chalde Paraphrast: In which order he setteth downe all the sonnes of Leah, before the sonnes of the handmaids. But this is against the text, vers. 10. which directeth their names to be set in order, according to their generation and age. Tostatus observeth the order of nature as they were borne: Ruben, Silleon, Levi, Iudah, Dan, Nepthali, Gad, Asher, Issachar, Zebulun, Ioseph, Benjamin: Ribera, Pelargus follow the same order, saving that they leave out Levi, and for Ioseph put in Ephraim and Manasseh, which is the more probable: because the high Priest of Levi was to beare this pectorall, who stood for that tribe, that there needed no stone of remembrance. And seeing this breast-plate was to continue a long time, it is like the tribes were rehearsed, as they were afterward appointed: Ephraim and Manasseh being counted for two tribes. 4. Yet there is more certainty what stones stood for every tribe, because the order of their birth is knowne, than which of the twelve precious stones should be assigned to the Apostles, Apocal. 21. 19. whose certaine order is no where set downe in the Gospell: but they are rehearsed diversly, Mat. 10. Mark. 3. Luk. 6. Act. 1. 5. There is some difference betweene the rehearsall of these twelve precious stones, which stand for the Patriarkes, and those twelve Apocal. 21. 19. which signifie the twelve Apostles: 1. The order is not the same, for the last here, which is the Iasper, is the first there, neither are the rest set downe after the same manner. 2. There are some names, which are not here, as the Chalcidon, the Hyacinth, the Chrysolite, and Chrysoprase: though the three last are named here by some, the former by Vatablus in the tenth place, the first of the fourth row which the Septuagint call the Chrysolite: but it is before shewed to be Beryll: and the Chrysoprase Iunius taketh for the first of the second row, which is rather the Smaragd. 3. Yet I take it that these twelve precious stones, and the other are the same in kinde though differing in names: the Iasper, the Saphir, the Smaragd, the Sardonix, the Sardius, Beryll, the Topaze, the Amethyst, are here also expressed by their names: all the question is about these foure: the Chalcedon the third, the Chrysolite the seventh, the Chrysoprase the tenth, the Hyacinth the eleventh: which may be reduced to these kindes: the Chalcedon and Arethas saith, is similis coloris cum carbunculo, of like colour to the Garbuncle: so also Isidor. lib. Etym. 16. cap. 13. and therefore it may be referred to the precious stone, which is here in the third place, Barkath, the Carbuncle, as the Chalcedon is the third there, so called, because it was found in the Chalcedon Sea: or rather the Diamond may be the Chalcedon stone: for as Beda saith, Quasi ignis lucerna pallore suo cingitur: It shineth with a pale and wan colour, as the light of a lantorne: and the Diamond, is fere candenti similis, like unto iron red hot: then the Chrysolite may be the Garbuncle, the Chrysoprase the Achate, which is of divers colours, and so is the Chrysoprase, mixed of a yellow and greene colour: the Hyacinth may be the Turkais, which Hierome taketh for the Hyacinth: which is the seventh stone in order here: and he thus further saith, Iidem in fundamentis ejus ponuntur lapides, &c. The same precious stones are there laid in the foundation of the celestiall Jerusalem, which are named here.

The twelve stones in the high Priests pectorall, compared with the twelve stones, Apocal. 21. 19.

Quest.

QUEST. XXIII. How many rings the breast-plate had, and how placed.

Vers. 22. Thou shalt make two chaines, &c. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that the breast-plate had foure rings in the foure corners thereof, and that there were foure rings answerable thereunto in the Ephod, to which the breast-plate was fastened by certaine laces of blew silke: and beside, in the upper side of the breast-plate, he thinketh there were two rings more, which were fastened with two golden chaines, to the golden bosses upon the shoulders by certaine golden hookes, quæst. 2. But it cannot be gathered out of the text, that the breast-plate had any more than foure rings: so also thinketh Montanus; two of those rings were made above, which should be fastned to the embossements of gold, upon the shoulders by two golden chaines, vers. 24, 25. and the other two rings were on the neather side of the breast-plate below, toward the embroidered girdle of the Ephod, vers. 26. 2. Hierome also thinketh, that the foure rings in the breast-plate, Habentes alios quatuor contra se in superhumeralı, had foure other rings against them in the Ephod. But there is mention made onely of two rings beneath in the Ephod, by the which the breast-plate was fastened with a blew silke lace, to the two rings of the Ephod, vers. 27. for the upper side was fastened with chaines by the two rings, unto the embossements of gold upon the shoulders.

QUEST. XXIV. What is meant by the forepart thereof.

Vers. 25. Thou shalt put them on the shoulders of the Ephod, on the fore-side of it. 1. Cajetane understandeth this of the backer part of the Ephod, because the words are, contra faciem ejus, against the face of it. But what else is against the face of the chaines ascending up, than the back-part, where they were to be fastened? But the text speaketh of the face or forepart of the breast-plate, on the face of it, not of them, that is, the chaines in the plurall. 2. Iunius thus interpreteth, Versus anteriorem partem ejus; Toward his forepart, that is, the high Priests. But it is evident, vers. 27. that it is to be referred rather to the Ephod; for no mention is made before of the Priest in this place. 3. Therefore the meaning is, hee should fasten the chaines to the shoulders of the Ephod, in anteriore parte ejus, in the forepart thereof, Lippomanus. As the Latine Interpreter also giveth the sense: in that part, quod rationali respicit, which looketh toward the rationall, or pectorall.

QUEST. XXV. Whether the breast-plate were ever or never untied, and loosed from the Ephod.

Vers. 28. That the breast-plate be not loosed from the Ephod. 1. Beda is here of opinion, that the breast-plate was fastened by chaines to the Ephod, tempore induendi, in the time onely of the putting on. 2. But it is more probable, that they were not parted or separated the one from the other, no not when they were put off: for to what end should they have beene so surely fastened together, if the breast-plate were continually to be put to, and taken off againe? And this may further appeare, that they went together; because when David bad Abiathar to bring the Ephod, 1 Sam. 23. 9. the pectorall also with the Urim and Thummim were joyned to it, whereby he consulted with God for David. 3. Yet were they, as is said, as Cajetane thinketh, Ut nonnullum ab altero separari posset; That one could not be separated from another: for then they should have beene made all one garment, not two: but they were so fastened together, that they could not be separated, nisi quis ea separaverit, unlesse one upon some occasion did sever them, Tostat. quæst. 12.

QUEST. XXVI. Whether the high Priest went into the most holy place in his glorious apparell.

Vers. 29. So Aaron shall beare the names of the children of Israel, &c. when he goeth into the holy place for a remembrance before the Lord continually. 1. In that mention is made here of the holy place, it seemeth that the high Priest did not put on all these garments, when he went once a yeere into the holy place: and it is so expressed, Levit. 16. 4. that he should then put on the linen coat, the linen breeches, a linen girdle, and a linen miter: the other precious priestly garments are not mentioned. 2. Iunius thinketh, that here by a Synecdoche, the rest of the priestly attire is understood; these are named for all, and so by certaine parts, all are to be conceived: so also Barrhadius: so also Ostiander and Marlorat, make the high Priest here a type of Christ, that as hee put off his costly robes, and went forth and appeared in his owne attire: so Christ was stripped of his purple rayment, and put on other clothes, when he went to be crucified. 3. But I preferre rather herein the opinion of Lyranus, following R. Salomon, Tostatus quæst. 11, and Pellican. That the high Priest at this time was only clad in linen: their reasons are these: 1. Because when the high Priest went in to pray for the people, and to make reconciliation for them, that was to be performed with all humility, and therefore the high Priest was to shew his meeknesse in his outward apparell; but afterward when hee went out to sacrifice, that was a solemne deed, it was fit hee should there administer in his priestly robes, Lyranus. 2. The most holy place was the habitation, and there all was of gold: therefore it was not fit that the high Priest should come in there with his garments adorned with gold, R. Salomon. 3. But Pellican better explaineth this reason, although the high Priest in his costly apparell seemed glorious in the eyes of the people, yet omnia ornamenta a coram Deo faces erant, all those ornaments were but as drosse before the Lord: and therefore in his sight, he was not to appeare in them. 4. But an invincible argument may be taken from that Levit. 16. 23. where the Priest is bid to put off the linen clothes, and leave them in the holy place, and then to put on his owne rayment, and so come out, and make his burnt offering: then were not those ordinary wearing clothes, for it is not to be imagined, that the Priest when hee sacrificed, did not minister in his priestly raiment: therefore by his owne clothes are meant, the raymente peculiar to the high Priest: whereas the other linen garments, which he had put on before, were common to the other Priests, Lyranus. 5. By this it is evident, that the high Priest did come into the outward court in his priestly attire, to offer sacrifice at the brasen Altar; though he entred not into the most holy place with with them: both becauſe it was fit he ſhould be ſeene and beheld of the people in his glorious apparell, for greater reverence. And ſeeing he was not to enter into the holy place, but in that apparell, it is like hee put them on at the doore of the Tabernacle, as hee did when hee was firſt conſecrated, chap. 29. 5. 6. But it will be objected, that the high Prieſt was to beare the names of the children of Iſrael continually before the Lord, when he went in, and therefore it is not like, but that he went into the moſt holy place in his glorious apparell, wherein the ſtones of remembrance were: the anſwer is, that this being but once in the yeere, when the high Prieſt went into the moſt holy place, and yet after he came out, hee put on his prieſtly robes, he might be ſaid notwithſtanding, continually to beare their names before the Lord.

Quæſt. XXVII. What the Urim and Thummim were.

Verſ. 30. Alſo thou ſhalt put in the breaſt-plate of judgement the Urim and Thummim. There are divers opinions concerning this Urim and Thummim what they ſhould be: 1. Some are of opinion, that it is not certainly knowne, neither can be defined what they were. R. David ſaith, Non eſt manifeſtum apud nos, quid hæc ſignificent; It is not manifeſt among us what theſe things ſignifie, &c. Cajetan alſo ſaith, what is ſignified by theſe names, Urim and Thummim, Nullus (quantum novimus) hactenus explicavit; None (that we know) hath hitherto explained. 2. Hierome following the Septuagint, retaineth not the Hebrew words, Urim and Thummim, but giveth their interpretation, doctrinam & veritatem, doctrine and verity; ſo the Septuagint, δήλωσιν καὶ τὴν ἀλήθειαν, manifeſtation and truth: and they ſeeme to thinke that hereby was meant only, that the Prieſt ſhould be endued with ſincerity and truth, as Eſd. 2. 63. where the text is Till a Prieſt roſe up with Urim and Thummim: Hierom tranſlateth, Donec ſurgeret Sacerdos doctus & eruditus; Untill a learned and skilfull Prieſt ſhould riſe up. But it is cleare, that the Urim and Thummim was ſome reall thing in the pectorall, as Levit. 8. 8. Hee put in the breaſt-plate Urim and Thummim: and beſide, they give not the right ſenſe of the words, which ſignifie lights, or illuminations, and perfections, not doctrine and verity.

3. Toſtatus alſo referreth theſe words unto the cleare anſwers, which the Prieſt conſulting with God, uſed to give: that they were not ambiguous and doubtfull, as the oracles of Apollo, Sed illa manifeſtatio dubiorum, &c. erat clariſſima ut lux, but that manifeſtation of doubts, which was made by applying the pectorall, was as cleare as the light, queſt. 13. But there was ſome materiall and reall thing, which was called Urim and Thummim, and not in ſignification only, as is before ſhewed.

4. R. Abraham Ab. Ezra thinketh they were certaine plates put within the breaſt-plate, in the folding thereof, the one of ſilver, the other of gold: from the ſimilitude whereof the Aſtrologians afterward tooke the faſhion of their Aſtrolabes, by the which they underſtood ſecret things. But this is a ſuperſtitious conceit: 1. Theſe plates, which he imagineth, being put within the fold of the breaſt-plate, how ſhould they come to be ſeene of others, to make their Aſtrologicall inſtruments by? 2. The Aſtrolabe ſerveth onely to ſearch out the ſecrets of nature: but by the Urim and Thummim, the Prieſt gave anſwer of ſupernaturall things: 3. Neither did the Prieſt when hee conſulted with God, looke upon any ſuch figures, as he imagineth to have beene in theſe plates; but received anſwer from God, Sic Joſhaphat. quæſt. 12.

5. R. Salomon thinketh, that the Urim and Thummim was nothing elſe, but the name of Jehovah, which was written in letters, and put within the breaſt-plate: which name ſome ancient Hebrewes, even before Chriſt, did take to ſignifie the Trinity: In this word יהוה, Jehovah, the firſt letter jod, they would have taken for the Father; he, for the Sonne, which letter is doubled to ſignifie his two natures, the humane and Divine: and vau, which is a conjunction copulative ſignifieth the holy Ghoſt, Vatabl. But betweene theſe words Urim and Thummim, and the name Jehovah, there ſeemeth to be ſmall affinity.

6. Some of the Rabbines, as Paulus Fagius reporteth their opinion, thinke that this Urim and Thummim, was an expoſition of the name Jehovah, conſiſting of certaine letters 42. in number, which were put within the pectorall: and Hugo de S. Victor thinketh, that they were characteres inſcripti divinis literis, characters written with certaine letters. But there is no reaſon to call ſo many letters by the name of Urim and Thummim.

7. Some thinke that theſe very words, Urim and Thummim, were graven in the pectorall: of which opinion ſeemeth Philo to be, calling the Urim and Thummim, duas virtutes depictas, two vertues ſet forth and pictured in the rationall, or pectorall. But the phraſe of putting in the Urim and Thummim ſheweth that they were not wrought into the breaſt-plate, but put into it after it was made.

Lib. 3. de vit. Moſis.

8. Suidas thinketh it was a bright Diamond in the pectorall, which ſhined extraordinarily, when the Lord gave an acceptable anſwer: ſome thinke they were two precious ſtones ſet into the pectorall, beſide the other twelve, as Calvin thinketh, Duas fuiſſe inſignes notas; That they were two notable marks in the pectorall, to the which theſe names agreed. But the order of the precious ſtones being ſet in foure rankes, would not leave any place for any other to be ſet in, Zanchy. And it is not like that this Diamond was one of the twelve; for why ſhould one of theſe ſtones be called Urim and Thummim, rather than another?

9. Oleaſter, Lapomon, Oſiander, thinke that the Urim and Thummim were the very ſtones themſelves called Urim of their brightneſſe, and they were called Thummim of their perfection, or becauſe they filled up the places, where they were ſet in. But if they were nothing elſe but the very precious ſtones themſelves, which were deſcribed before to be ſet in the breaſt-plate, what needed it be added againe, Thou ſhalt put in the breaſt-plate of judgement, Urim and Thummim? Ribera.

10. And the ſame Ribera, though he miſlike the former opinion of Oleaſter; yet he doth not differ from it; adding only this, that the Vrim and Thummim were those twelve precious stones, not simply, Sed quia eniu per eos Deus solebat futura pronunciare, & respondere in agendis; but as God did by them foretell things to come, and give answer what was to be done. And he urgeth this as a reason, because Exod. 39. where it is reported, what things the workmen had made according to Moses direction; the least thing being not omitted, yet no mention is made of the Vrim and Thummim, which sheweth that they were the very same with the twelve stones. Of the same opinion seemeth Iosephus to be, that the Vrim and Thummim were the twelve precious stones, which he saith, used to shine exceeding bright, when the Lord would give good successe to the people in their warre. Lib. 3. de Antiq. cap. 4.

But this reason may be retorted againe, that seeing no mention is made of Vrim and Thummim, that it was not prepared by the workmen, but was rather some sacred monument, which Moses received of God: as he did the tables of stone. To this opinion I before inclined in another place, that the Vrim and Thummim were the precious stones themselves, so called of their excellent brightnesse and perfection: but now upon better reason I am moved to thinke, that they were a reall and distinct thing from the precious stones: for the workmen set in the stones, Exod. 39. 10. they filled it with foure rowes of stones: but Moses put in the breast-plate, after it was made, the Vrim and Thummim, Levit. 8. 8. Harmon. in 1 Sam. cap. 28. quæst. 5.

2. Thomas thinketh, that Quædam scribebantur in rationali, &c. Some things were written in the pectorall, which concerned the verity of justice and doctrine. But this was no place for such writing in the pectorall being filled with the stones. 1. 2. qu. 102. ar. 5. ad 9.

3. Some therefore are of this judgement, that this Vrim and Thummim, Rem fuisse multiplici figura distinctam, claram, &c. was a thing of great variety, cleare, bright, as may appeare by the signification of the words, and that they are put in the plurall number, Non humano artificio factum, sed divinitus Moysi datum; Not made by humane workmanship, but given unto Moses of God. What matter it was of, can be no more conjectured, than of what stone the tables were made, wherein the Law was written; and whereof the Manna was, which melted with the Sunne, and was hardened at the fire; or of what substance the holy fire consisted, which came downe from heaven upon Aarons sacrifice. This precious monument of Vrim and Thummim, was put into the fold of the pectorall, which was to that end made double. Montan. in apparat. To the same purpose also Iunius: who thinketh that it was, Soli Mosi a Deo datum, given unto Moses only of God, and so put into the breast-plate, Levit. 8. 8.

4. Piscator reporteth this to be the opinion of Matthias Martinius, that these words, אורים ותומים, Vrim and Thummim, Intra duplicitatem pectoris interposita fuisse, were put betweene in the doubling of the breast-plate. So also Beda, Doctrina & veritas in rationali judicii sive literis est impressa, seu nominibus. Doctrine and verity was imprinted either in letters, or in names in the rationall, or pectorall of judgement: likewise Rupertus, Doctrina quæ & veritas inscribitur illi; Doctrine and truth is written thereto: that is, the Hebrew words, Vrim, Thummim, which they so interpret doctrine and verity: but they rather signifie light, or illumination, and perfection. Procopius inclineth to the same opinion, Incertum est an illi intelligendi sint lapides, vel capienda sit quædam duorum nominum, quasi in tabella, inscriptio; It is uncertaine, whether other stones are here to be understood, or wee may take it for a certaine inscription of these two names in a table, &c.

These two latter opinions I put together: that it is like, these Vrim and Thummim were written upon some precious matter, not made by art, but prepared of God, and given to Moses, who put them within the breast-plate. So Gallasius resolveth, Diversum aliquid fuisse a lapidibus & catenis, minime dubium est: It is without doubt, that they were a divers thing from the stones and chaines: and what if we say, that these names, Vrim and Thummim, inscripta fuisse intra pectorale, were written within the pectorall?

Quest. XXVIII. How judgement was given by the Vrim and Thummim.

NOw it will be further inquired, how the Lord made answer, and the Priest consulted with God by Vrim and Thummim? 1. Iosephus thinketh, that when the Lord promised good successe to his people, the stones shined extraordinarily: but he saith, Desiit eam effon, quam Sardonix fulgorem emittere, &c. As well the Pectorall, which he calleth the effon, or rather chosben, which is the Hebrew name of the Pectorall, and the Sardonix stone upon the right shoulder, which used to shine extraordinarily, as often as the high Priest sacrificed, did cease to send forth such brightnesse, and that two hundred yeeres before his time: which Tostatus thinketh was in the time of the Macchabees: as he doth gather out of that place, 1 Macchab. 4. 46. where it is said, that they laid up the stones of the Altar, upon the mountaine of the Temple, till there should come a Prophet to shew what should bee done with them. It is like then they wanted that direction, to know the Lords will by the shining of the stones, Tostat. qu. 15. I thinke it more probable with Montanus, that the Vrim and Thummim was lost in the captivity, as the Arke, tables of stone, Aarons Rod, and the pot of Manna: as also thinketh Burgens. addit. 2. And why not the fire, Ezra 2. 63. that after the captivity they had no Priest with the Vrim and Thummim. The Priest which met Alexander in his glorious apparell, might have precious stones in his breast, without the Vrim and Thummim.

Some also thinketh, that they used to write the thing inquired upon in a peece of paper, and so put within the breast-plate upon the Vrim and Thummim: and there they should finde written an answer of their question and demand. But it is evident, that the Lord, when he was consulted with, answered by voice. 1 Sam. 22. 10.

2. Suidas thinketh, that when the Lord granted their petition, the Adamant shined extraordinarily: if Suidas in dictum. Ephod. non addebat ad solitum lapidis fulgorem, nothing was added to the usuall brightnesse of the stone; and when the Lord threatned warre, pestilence or famine, the stone had the colour of bloud. But it is shewed before that the Vrim and Thummim was no such stone.

and

4. Hugo de S. Victor. thinketh there were certaine characters of letters, quibus projectis, ex literarum junctura desuper apparentium, &c. by the casting whereof, and the joyning together of certaine letters, it appeared what was to be done. But the Vrim and Thummim was no such uncertaine conjunction of letters: but some certaine glorious thing put into the Pectorall, as is before shewed.

5. Monanus thinketh, that the Vrim and Thummim, inde proferebantur, were taken out of the Pectorall, when any answer was to be given: and that the Priest by the inspection thereof had his direction. But it is not like after Moses there put them, that they were taken out: as Tostatus well thinketh, Oportebat eas educere è plicatura rationalis, quod non conveniebat, &c. That it was not convenient to draw them out from the folding of the Pectorall.

6. Nehemonides is of opinion, that the answer given by Vrim and Thummim was madregeh, a certaine degree and instinct of the Spirit, inferiour to prophecie; yet of an higher nature than nathkol, the voice which came from heaven: Ex Pelarg. Ribera also thinketh, beside the brightnesse of the stones, that the Priest, ad præsentiam rationalis spiritum prophetiæ accipiebat, at the presence of the Pectorall received the spirit of prophecie. But for the Lord to answer by Vrim, and by Prophets, were two distinct things: 1 Sam. 28. 6. the Lord would not answer Saul neither by dreames, by Vrim, nor by Prophets.

7. Wherefore it is most like, though this be not certainly determined in Scripture, that the Lord, when the Priest asked counsell of God by Urim, made answer by voice: As when David asked of God by the Priest that had the Ephod, whether Saul would come downe, and whether the Lords of Keilah would deliver him into his hands: the Lord answered to both his questions, that Saul would come downe, and that the other would deliver him. So, 1 Sam. 30. 8. David asked counsell of the Lord, saying, Shall I follow after this companie, shall I overtake them? and the Lord answered, Follow, for thou shalt surely overtake them, and recover all. Hence Tostatus well inferreth, Non fiebat inquisitio in aliqua tabula, sed à Deo inquirebatur veritas; There was no inquisition made in any such place, but the truth was inquired of God, quæst. 12. Ribera also useth this reason: that seeing God answered to every point, it was necessary there should be some voice heard: Nam fulgor gemmarum vix tantas, minuta declarare non potuit, &c. For the brightnesse of the precious stones could not declare such and so many small particulars. God used then to answer the high Priest by voice: as Numb. 7. 89. When Moses went into the Tabernacle of the congregation to speake with God, hee heard the voice of one speaking unto him from the mercie seat. But it will then be asked, if the Priest discerned not the Lords will by the Vrim, why is it called the Vrim of judgement, and what use was there of it? I answer, that it was so called, not of the effect, as though by the inspection of the Vrim hee gave judgement, but ex consequenti, by a consequent, because the Lord onely vouchsafed to give judgement in the cause enquired of by the Priest, when he applied the Pectorall with the Vrim and Thummim: which was ordained to be a type of Christ, the true and perfect light, to signifie that in him all wisdome dwelleth, and that by him only the will of God is revealed to us, Calvin. And this further may serve as a proofe thereof: that it is like, if there had beene any reall demonstration in the stones of Gods will, that meanes had beene certaine and perpetuall, and never failed. But it was otherwise, for God answered not Saul by Vrim; and in Iosias time, who was a vertuous King, the high Priest Hilkiah enquired Gods will of the Propheteſſe Huldah, which he needed not to have done, if he might have knowne Gods will by looking into Vrim. The Lord therefore onely when it pleased him made answer by Vrim: which sheweth that it was by voice, rather than by any usuall signification appearing in the precious stones, or Vrim.

Lib. 3. de sacr. vestib. cap. 12.

2 King. 22.

Quæst. XXIX. Whether the high Priest used to ake counsell of God by the Vrim, or Ephod, and what Ephod it was.

1 Sam. 23. 9.

BUt it is said, that the Priest applied the Ephod, not Vrim, when he asked counsell of the Lord for David: 1. The reason thereof is, because the Ephod, wherein the Vrim and Thummim were, was tied fast unto the Pectorall, and the Pectorall unto the Ephod, so that the one was not loosed from the other, as it is said here, vers. 28. So then by applying the Ephod, the Pectorall, Vrim, and all were applied together. 2. Neither is this to bee understood of the ordinary and common Ephod, such as the inferiour Priests did weare, as Saul put to the sword in one day 85. persons, that did weare a linen Ephod: but it was the glorious Ephod, which was set with the foure rowes of the precious stones, peculiar onely to the high Priest: for Abimelech the high Priest being dead, the right of the Priesthood descended by succession unto Abiathar his sonne, who escaping from that danger, as hee fled tooke the Ephod out of the Tabernacle at Nob, and brought it with him to David, 1 Sam. 26. 6. where it is not called a linen Ephod, as before, where the Priests are said to have worne lined Ephods: but simply the Ephod, Tostat. quæst. 15. wherein Gods providence appeared, that the right Ephod should be preserved and kept with David the true King, Genevens. and that he might have meanes to consult with God in all his dangers.

Quæst. XXX. Of the mysticall application of the priestly pectorall with the Vrim and Thummim.

NOw the mysticall signification of the Pectorall with the Vrim and Thummim followeth: First I will omit the curious significations, which are brought by some, as being impertinent and superfluous: 1. As Iosephus and Philo by the breast-plate understand the Zodiake; by the twelve precious stones, the twelve signes in the Zodiake, and the twelve moneths of the yeere: which application Hierome himselfe seemeth not much to mislike. 2. Hierome by the foure rowes of precious stones would have signified the foure morall vertues, Prudence, Fortitude, Iuſtice, Temperance; Epiſt. ad Fabiol. 3. Beda thus applieth them, that as there were foure order of ſtones, and in every of them three: ſo, In quatuor virtutibus ſancta Trinitatis fidem teneamus; That wee ſhould profeſſe and hold the faith of the Trinity joyned with the foure morall vertues. 4. Gregorie by the twelve ſtones, containing the names of the twelve Patriarkes, inſinuateth thus: Aſcriptos patres ſemper in pectore ferre, eſt antiquorum vitam ſine intermiſſione cogitare; To beare the fathers written in the breaſt, is alwayes to thinke of the life of thoſe which are gone before.

Secondly, there are fitter applications than theſe. To omit the reſt: 1. Hierome by the twelve precious ſtones underſtandeth the twelve Apoſtles, by whom the Church was inlightened, and upon whoſe doctrine the Church of God was founded: as the twelve Apoſtles are ſet forth by theſe twelve precious ſtones, Apocal. 21. So alſo Gregorie: Sancti Apoſtoli lapides ſunt ornamenti in pectore; The holy Apoſtles are the ſtones of ornament in the breaſt. 2. As the Urim and Thummim was put unto the precious ſtones, it ſignifieth Chriſtum eſſe & converſari cum ſanctis, that Chriſt is converſant with his Saints, Propoſit. 3. Rupertus underſtandeth it thus, that as the Prieſt did beare two ſtones on his ſhoulders, and twelve in the breaſt-plate of judgement: ſo Chriſt, cunctorum ſuper humeros peccata portavit, carried the ſinnes of all upon his ſhoulders: and in judgement, ſhall give nnto every one according to his workes: by the twelve ſtones ſignifying the divers manſion places in the kingdome of heaven. 4. The Urim, that is interpreted light, ſhewed, that in Chriſto ſunt reconditi omnes theſauri ſcientiæ & ſapientiæ, in Chriſt are laid up all the treaſures of wiſdome and knowledge: and Thummim, which betokeneth perfection, ſymbolum fuit perfectæ puritatis, &c. was as ſigne or ſymboll of perfect purity, which is to be ſought only in Chriſt, Calvin. So alſo Marbach. 5. So both theſe doe ſignifie, that extra Chriſtum nihil aliud niſi tenebræ & peccatum, without Chriſt there is nothing but darkneſſe and ſinne, he is our illumination and perfection, Gallaſ. 6. As the two ſtones, each of them having ſix names were upon the Prieſts ſhoulders, and the twelve ſtones with their particular names in his breaſt: ſo Chriſt, non geſtat ſolum electos in humeris potentiæ, ſed & in pectore per dilectionem, doth not only beare his elect in his ſhoulders by his power, but by love and dilection in his breaſt: neither this in generall, but every of their names are there written: ſo, ſinguli fideles, &c. the faithfull in particular are for ever written in Chriſts breaſt, Ferus. 7. As there are two offices of the Mediatour, one to reconcile us unto God, the other to communicate the graces of God unto us: ſo both theſe functions of the Mediatour are here ſhadowed forth. As the Prieſt did beare the names of the tribes in his breaſt: ſo Chriſt doth preſent the Church in the ſight of his Father: and as there was Urim and Thummim beſide, ſo Chriſt from God communicateth unto us illumination and perfection: hee is both our wiſdome, and righteouſneſſe, Iun. in Analyſ. Piſcator. And that Chriſt was prefigured by the Urim and Thummim, this may be a reaſon, becauſe in the ſecond Temple they were wanting, as likewiſe the Arke with other things. Id agente Deo, &c. God ſo providing, ut ſanctiorum rerum deſiderio afficerentur, &c. that they might long for more holy things which ſhould be offered in the new Teſtament, Montan.

QUEST. XXXI. Of the robe of the Ephod, the faſhion, and matter thereof.

Vers. 31. THou ſhalt make the robe of the Ephod. 1. The word is meghil, which Montanus ſaith, was of two ſorts, there was one common as well to the Prieſts as others, a civill kinde of garment anſwering unto the Greekiſh gowne, or Romane cloake, which was a looſe and open garment: there was another, called the robe of the Ephod, peculiar onely to the high Prieſt, which was whole round about, having only a place for the head and armes: ſo alſo Ribera thinketh that meghil was as the cloake and outward garment, and that chetonez the coat, differed from meghil, as with the Greeke χιτὼν, and ἱμάτιον, with the Romanes tunica and pallium, the coat and cloake: as our Saviour ſaith, Hee that will take away thy coat, let him have thy cloake alſo. But Oleaſter thinketh rather, that this was a ſtrait coat: for looſe garments were not ſo fit for thoſe which did miniſter, and becauſe it is ſaid, that Samuel made him a little meghil coat. But becauſe there was another coat beſide under this, this is better taken to be the robe, which was the outward garment: the coat was next underneath, which was a longer garment, but this the looſer: it is better therefore tranſlated pallium, a robe, Iun. than mantum, Vatab. Matth. 5. 40. 1 Sam. 2.

It is called the robe of the Ephod, quia pars non minima ſuperhumerali tegebatur, becauſe a great part of him was covered with the Ephod, or ſhoulder garment, Beda. Et quia immediate erat ſub veſte ſuperiori; And becauſe it was next under the Ephod, Cajetan.

2. For the faſhion of it: Hierome thinketh, that it had aſſutas manicas, ſleeves ſewed unto it. So alſo Lyranus. But the more probable opinion is, that it was ſine manicis, without ſleeves, and had only holes or ſlits in the ſides for the armes, Montan. Iunius Ribera: and Joſephus ſeemeth to be of the ſame opinion, Quo brachia exeruntur eſt ſuſſa; It was ſlit for the going out of the hands, &c. for the robes uſed not to have ſleeves, but the coats and inward garments.

It had an hole in the middeſt for the head to goe thorow: and it ſeemeth to have beene inconſutilis, to have beene made whole of weavers worke without any ſeame: and ſo was the edge round about the hole for the head, made alſo opera textoris, of woven worke: ne extrinſecus aſſuatur, it was not ſowed or made out of the ſame, Auguſtinus. So alſo Hierome: though Toſtatus and Ribera ſeeme to thinke that the edge was ſewed to, therein following Joſephus. But the text is againſt them: which forbideth the edge to be made, textorio opere, with woven worke: and the reaſon is added, ne facile rumpatur, that it be not rent: but if it had beene ſewed to, it had not beene ſo ſtrong, and would more eaſily rent, than being woven unto it.

3. The

5. The Septuagint, whom Iosephus followeth, calleth it ποδήρη, tunicam talarem, a coat downe to the feet: but it was shorter than the inward coat, which was a side garment reaching downe to the ground, Montanus. And if the bels and pomegranates had hung downe to the feet, it would have hit upon the Priests feet, and so hindred his going, Simler. Mouerons and Lyranus in their description, make it to reach but a little beyond the knees.

6. For the matter of it, it was unlike unto the Ephod, to the making whereof went five things, gold, blew purple, silke, skarlet, and fine linen: but this was made altogether of blew silke, like to the hyacinth: which Gajetanus taketh to have beene a violet colour: some an azure colour like to the aire: but it was rather betweene both: for if it had beene a perfect violet, it would not have differed much from the purple: it is better translated then a blew colour, than a violet, Geneuens.

QUEST. XXXII. Of the bels which hung in the skirts of the robe.

Vers. 33. Thou shalt make Pomgranates. 1. The Pomgranates are prescribed to be made of three colours, blew, purple, skarlet: all which doe appeare in the Pomgranates themselves: for the kirnels within are red: the colour of the rine or barke on the Sunside is purple, and on the other blewish. And by this mixture, the naturall colours of the Pomgranates were fitly represented, Montan. 2. Oleaster seemeth to thinke, that these Pomgranates were rather acupicta, quàm suspensa, wrought in with the needle into the skirts of the robe, than hung on. But seeing that the bels were made by themselves, and did hang betweene the Pomgranates; it is like also that the Pomgranates were made after the same manner, and so put to, as the bels were. 3. Montanus conjectureth that the golden bels were made ad formam mespilorum, after the fashion of medlers, being open below, as little brasen bels of that fashion are in use this day: and being thus made, they were more apt to send forth their sound. 4. Hierome thinkes, that there were 72. golden bels hanging in the skirts, and as many Pomgranates: Prosper saith, there were fifty of each sort: Iustin in Tripho saith there were twelve, to signifie the twelve Apostles: but of this there is no certainty: only it is said, Ecclesiastic. 45. 9. that he compassed him about with many bels: there were many of them, but what was the certaine number, it is not expressed.

QUEST. XXXIII. Why the sound of the bels was to be heard.

Vers. 35. And his sound shall be heard, when he goeth in, &c. and commeth out, that he dyeth not. 1. Some thinke, that because in the holy place there were divers visions and apparitions of Angels, that by this signe the Priest comming in about his office and ministery, might give warning, and not rush in of a sudden to see the Lords secrets: like as men use to knock at their neighbours doores, before they enter in. But God needeth not any such signe to be warned by; hee knoweth every mans going in and out: and the holy Angels being searching Spirits, could have knowne when the Priest was coming, without any such notice. 2. But the reasons why the Lord would have the bels heard, were these two: first in respect of the Priest himselfe, that hee might enter with more reverence: like as one will not rush into a great mans house by stealth, but first will knock at the doore, or ring the bell, Tostat. quæst. 17. Oleaster. The other reason was in regard of the people: it was done for a remembrance to them, Ecclesiast. 45. 9. that they might know when the high Priest entred in, and then lift up their hearts, when the high Priest went in to minister before the Lord for them, Calvin. 3. Mention is made of his going in, and comming out, because only, when he went and moved himselfe, the bels sounded; but while hee remained within, and stood still, the bels stirred not. 4. The Lord threatneth death, if the Priest should enter otherwise, than thus apparelled with these garments: Non quòd sonus aliquid conferret ad evadendum mortem sed obedientia erat illa, quæ conferebat, &c. Not that the sound helped any thing to escape death: but it was his obedience that helped, Cajetan.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the mysticall application of the robe.

THis priestly robe is diversly applied. 1. Iosephus, by the linen coat, understandeth the earth; by the blew robe, heaven; by the pomgranates, the lightning; by the bels, the thunder. 2. Philo resembleth the aire to the blew robe, which was long and side, as the other is extended from the Moone to the earth, and the consent of the elements among themselves, to the sound of the bels. 3. Hieronym approveth Philo his conceit concerning the coat, and Iosephus for the bels. 4. Rupertus by the bels much better understandeth the sound of Christ preaching in the dayes of his flesh. 5. Bede by the blew robe, which resembleth the heavens, the celestiall conversation of the Ministers of the Gospell. 6. Athanasius saith, that talaris tunica, the side coat is a type of humane flesh, which Christ wholly put on. 7. Procopius saith, the bels doe signifie the fiery tongues that sate upon the Apostles. 8. Augustine saith, that by these bels is insinuated, Honesta & conversatio Sacerdotis, that the conversation of the Priest should be knowne to all. 9. Pererius, by the blew robe of skie colour, understandeth immortality: the Pomgranates, urbium quandam species præseferunt, doe signifie Cities, which consist of walles and houses, as the pomgranate of the bark, and the graines or kirnels within: that as every pomgranate had a bell by it, so in every City there should be preaching. 10. But the best accommodation of the type is this: the pomgranates, which are of themselves of pleasant savour, and the bels doe shew, that Deus fragrantiam & suavitatem requirebat unicuique sensui; That God in that garment required both a pleasant smell and sound, signifying that we being clothed with Christs righteousnesse, as with an heavenly garment, are accepted unto God, and this sweet savour is dispersed, and communicated unto us, by the sweet sound of the Gospell, Calvin, Simler.

Quæst. 129. in Exod.

QUEST. XXXV. Of the golden plate, the fashion thereof, inscription, and fastening.

Vers.36. THou shalt make a plate, &c. 1. Concerning the fashion of this plate of gold, Iosephus saith it was like, dimidiato globo, to an halfe circle or globe; and Lyranus in his description, maketh it like an halfe moone, or an horne turning up with both the ends. But it seemeth by the text, that it lay plaine upon the forefront of the miter; as Tostatus thinketh, it was an halfe coronet, reaching from eare to eare: which is most like, because it is afterward called, chap. 39. 30. the holy crowne: it therefore compassed the head before, as a coronet, Borrh. Pelarg. 2. Hence also it appeareth, seeing the text maketh mention but of one plate or crowne; that Iosephus narration hath no warrant out of the text, who saith, Hunc corona triplici circumdabat; Hee compassed the miter, or bonet, with a three-fold Crowne. 3. This plate had written in it, holinesse to the Lord, kodesh lajovah, holinesse to Iehovah, not la adonai, as Tostat. which was the Jewes superstition, who were afraid to pronounce the name of Iehovah, but in stead thereof said, Adonai. The meaning is, that all holinesse belonged unto God, ille solum actus est purus, that he only in himselfe is a pure act: and that all his workes are pure, Cajetane. It also signified, that sacerdotalis majestas sacra Deo, that the priestly dignity was holy unto God, Borrh. Et non aliunde petendam esse sanctitatem, and that they should not looke to be sanctified elsewhere, Calvin. Wherein the high Priest was an evident type of our blessed Saviour, who sanctified himselfe for us, and in whom wee are sanctified: and this to be the meaning, the next words doe shew, because Aaron did beare the iniquities of their offerings, and sanctified them. 4. For the fastening of this plate, or crowne of gold: Tostatus thinketh it was tied at both the ends to the miter, with two silke laces at the two eares. But the text maketh mention only of one silke lace. Cajetan saith, that the plate did lye and rest upon this silke string or lace, which was in infima parte, in the neather part thereof, and so it stood upright, neque inclinabatur antrorsum, and was not put close to the miter: but the golden plate could not lye without some fastening: therefore Iunius better giveth the sense, Appones cum vitta hyacinthina, Thou shalt put it to, with a blew lace.

QUEST. XXXVI. How Aaron is said to beare their iniquities.

Vers.38. THat Aaron may beare the iniquity of the offerings. 1. Augustine by iniquities here understandeth those things which are offered for their iniquities: quæ peccata dicuntur, quia pro peccatis offeruntur, &c. which are called sinnes, because they are offered for sinnes: and so his meaning seemeth to be, that Aaron shall take those things, which the people offer for their sinnes. But in saying, the iniquities of the offerings, it is evident that in this place a difference is made betweene the offerings themselves and the iniquities of the offerings. 2. Oleaster taketh here iniquity, pro pœna iniquitatis, for the punishment of iniquity: and would have this to be the meaning, that if any oversight were committed by the people in their offerings, in not doing as they should, by Aarons default, who was to looke unto it, he should be punished for it. But the words following in the end of the verse, to make them acceptable before the Lord, shew, that the meaning is, not that Aaron should be punished, but that by his office, their offerings, though otherwise imperfect, should be accepted. 3. Some thinke, if any errour were committed in the ceremonies, id remissum fuisse sacerdotis precibus, that it was pardoned by the prayers of the Priest. But Calvin calleth this frigidum, a slender conceit: for here is no mention made of any prayers of the Priest, but only of the having the golden plate in his forehead. 4. Tostatus giveth this reason, why the Priest herein was acceptable unto God, quia sola erat obedientia in istis, quæ Deo placebat, because it was obedience only in these things, which pleased God: which the Lord so highly esteemed of, that where obedience was wanting, things otherwise commanded were not accepted, as Sauls sacrifice: and where it was found, even the service in things of themselves evill, was pleasing unto God, as Abrahams obedience in sacrificing his sonne, Tostat. 19. Who hath given a good reason, why the Priest in his owne person could bee accepted of God, performing his obedience in such things, as were commanded: but the Priests obedience was no cause why the Lord should be pleased with the people: for the word is lahem, that with them God may be pleased. 5. Cajetane saith, this is the reason, ut profitendo sanctitatem summo pontifici immunditiam sacrificiorum, &c. that in professing holinesse unto God (as it was written in his forehead) hee might take away the uncleannesse of their offerings. But Tostatus addeth further: Hoc gestari meritorium est; To professe this, that is, to give God the praise, and to ascribe all holinesse to him, was meritorius. But Aaron herein merited not for himselfe, much lesse for others: the bearing of the plate could be no such meritorius thing of it selfe. 6. Herein therefore the high Priest was a type of Christ: Condonabitur propter sacerdotem summum; It shall be pardoned because of the high Priest, who represented Christ, Vatabl. Sic in fronte unici sacerdotis omnes sensus vestri defixi maneant, &c. Let all our senses be so fixed in the forehead of the only high Priest, that wee may know that all holinesse floweth from him to his Church, Calvin.

Quæst. 120. in Exod.

QUEST. XXXVII. The mysticall signification of the golden plate.

This golden plate upon Aarons head, is diversly applied: 1. Hierome maketh this application: The writing of the name aloft, sheweth universa, quæ subter sunt, Dei nutu gubernari, that all things beneath are governed at Gods becke. 2. Lippoman thus: It signifieth, ut in fronte & anima portent nomen Dei, that men should beare in their forehead, that is, in their soules, the name of God: as Apocal. it is said they had the name of the Lambe, and the name of his Father written in their foreheads. Hee adds also to the same purpose, Significat hæc lamina ipsam professionis nostræ fiduciam; This plate in the forehead signifieth the confidence of our profession. 4. Origen: Hereby is signified, that the name Iehovah was set highest above the rest of the garments, sic super omnia eminentior scientia Dei, that the knowledge of God exceedeth all. 5. But it is more properly referred, and applied to Christ: This

Hom. 8. in Lev. vid.

golden

golden plate, corona est gloriæ & honoris in capite, &c. is the crowne of glory and honour in the head of our Redeemer; whom God hath exalted, and given unto him a name above all names, as the Apostle saith, Philip.2. Rupertus. And hereof prophesied *David, Psal.*132.18. Upon him shall his crowne flourish: as if he should say, Super ipsum erit lamina diadematis; Upon him shall be the plate of the Diadem. He it is indeed that hath sanctified himselfe, to beare the iniquities of the people, Lippoman.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Of the embroidered coat, the fashion and making thereof.

Vers.39. THou shalt embroider the fine linen coat, &c. 1. Iosephus, whom Ribera followeth, taketh this to be the linen coat, which was common as well to other inferiour Priests, as to the high Priest, which, he saith, was called chitonem. But herein he is deceived: for this coat is embroidered: whereas the other for Aarons sonnes, are simply called coats, without any other addition, which were of linen only, *Levit.*16.4. 2. Pagnine readeth, stringes, thou shalt tye close the linen coat: and so the Latine Interpreter, Stringes tunicam bysso; Thou shalt tye the coat with silke: which some understand of the girdle, which should gird it about: but the girdle is described afterward, which was not made of linen, but of needle worke. 3. Tostatus understandeth it of the robe of the Ephod, which was made of blew, that hee should tye and binde it about with silke, as the Septuagint reade, κοσυμβοι, and the knoppes or purles of the coats shall be of silke. But the robe before described is called meghil, this is named cetoneth, which are rehearsed as two distinct garments, *vers.*4. 4. The word shabats, rather here signifieth, thou shalt embroider, or make with eyes: which Montanus thinketh were made in the garment, as in the Low Countries they have linen clothes with birds eyes, which we call Diaper. Iunius calleth it tessellatam tunicam, a coat made as it were with checker worke. 5. Hierome thinketh it was a strait coat, without any wrinkle, and close to the skin. So Lippoman: Adhærebat cuti; It was next to the skin: and that it had sleeves, and came downe to the feet: all which seemeth to be true, saving that an embroidered coat was not like to be next to the flesh: neither was it so strait or close as a shirt, because it was girded about, *Levit.*8.8. which needed not, if it had beene so close and strait. 6. Hæc tunica descendebat ad talos; This coat came downe to the ankles, Oleaster. Hoc erat primum ornamentum, &c. This was the first ornament, and it was under the robe of blew silke, Cajetane: and it was seene hanging downe beneath the blew robe or mantle even to the ground, as both Montanus and Lyranus doe set it forth in their description.

QUEST. XXXIX. Of the high Priests miter.

Vers.39. THou shalt make a miter of fine linen. 1. Iosephus, whom Ribera followeth, thinketh that the high Priest had a linen cap underneath, and then a miter upon that, of an hyacinth or blew colour: Hierom thinketh contrariwise, that the blew silke miter was underneath, and covered with linen. But the text is otherwise; that this miter was made of fine linen: as Cajetan well noteth thereupon, Ubi clare vides, non sericam, vel auream, sed lineam scribi mitram pontificis; where you see that the high Priests miter is written to be of linen, not of silke, or gold, &c. So also Ribera thinketh, that the high Priests miter, and the other Priests bonets were made of the same. The golden plate put upon it, made a difference betweene the high Priests miter, and of the rest: there was also some difference in the fashion, as appeareth by the divers names, whereby they are called. 2. Hierom following Iosephus, thinketh, that this miter covered not all the head, sed tertiam partem à fronte inapertam relinquit, but it left the third part from the brow or forehead uncovered, and was tied behind with a lace or string. But the word mitznepheth, which is derived of tzanaph, which signifieth to compasse, or goe out, sheweth rather, that it covered the head, and compassed it round, much like to the Turkish Torbant, as Montanus thinketh. 3. For the fashion of it: Iosephus saith, Gestabat pileum non fastigiatum; The Priest did weare a cap, which did not rise to a top: so also Hierom, Non habet acumen in summo, it is not sharpe above, as Lyranus describeth it to be, and Genevens. But it was rather in fashion like unto the caps of estate, which Princes weare; it may bee called a Diadem: as *Isai.*62.3. the like word tzeniph, of the same root is used. Hierom calleth it Galerum, an hat, and rotundum pileolum, a round cap. The other Priests bonets did rise up like a miter, as the word migbaoth signifieth, of geba, which is an hillock: so Oleaster saith, that the Priests cap or miter, was involucrum capitis, wrapped about the head, but the other were mitræ elevatæ, miters rising up. The high Priests cap came neerer unto the fashion of a Princes Crowne and Diadem, than a Bishops miter: though Iosephus thinketh, that none of the Priests bonets did rise, or were lifted up, as is touched before.

QUEST. XL. Of the girdle of needle worke, and embroidered.

Vers.39. THou shalt make a girdle of needle worke, &c. 1. Some thinke that this which is here called a girdle, was medietas vestis, halfe a garment reaching downe from the middle to the foot, like unto an apron. But this is not like, for it was necessary that the Priest should have a girdle, to tye his garments together, which were loose about him, which otherwise would have hindered him in his ministery. Iosephus opinion then is more probable, whom Hierom followeth, that this girdle was about foure fingers broad, hanging downe somewhat before, *Tostat. quæst.*6. 2. This girdle was made of needle worke, and that of divers colours, not of linen only, but of blew silke, purple, and skarlet, as it is described, *chap.*39.29. 3. This girdle, Lyranus thinketh, was put above upon the Ephod, and so girded the Ephod and the robe, and the rest of the high Priests garments; so also Beda, and Cajetan. But it appeareth otherwise, *Levit.*8.8. that the girdle was put upon the broidered linen coat. And so thinketh Hierom, after he had described the fashion of this girdle, that it was in colour like unto a snakes skin, and that it was made round and hollow, Ut marsupium longius putes, that you would take it for a long purse, and that it was made of skarlet, purple, and blew silke, addeth, Lineam tunicam inter umbilicum & pectus & pectus hoc ſtringunt baltheo, they doe tie the linen coat betweene the navell and the breaſt, with this girdle, &c.

QUEST. XLI. How the high Prieſts attire differed from the apparell of the inferiour Prieſts.

Verſ.40. THou ſhalt make for Aarons ſonnes coats, &c. Here follow three other kinds of garments, which were common unto the inferiour Prieſts, the linen coats, girdles and bonnets, which differed from thoſe which the high Prieſt did weare: 1. Aarons inward coat was embroidered, as is ſhewed before, *verſ.*39. but the other coats for the inferiour Prieſts were onely of linen, *chap.*39.27. Aaron upon his fine linen coat, had firſt a robe, then upon that, the Ephod with the pectorall: but the other Prieſts did weare their linen coats uppermoſt of all: theſe linen coats of the Prieſts were called Ephods or mantils, 1. *Sam.*2.18. and 28. and *chap.*21.18. Iun. becauſe it was their uppermoſt garment; but the high Prieſts coat was not ſo called, but the uppermoſt garment onely, which had the pectorall faſtned to it, wherein were the precious ſtones ſet, was named the Ephod.

2. Their girdles alſo differed: for Aarons girdle wherewith he girded his fine linen coat, was of diuers colours, chap. 39. 29. but the other girdles were of fine linen onely, Levit. 16. 4. Againe, Aaron beſide that coſtly girdle, which girt his linen coat, he had a kinde of girdle upon his Ephod, the neather parts whereof did cloſe in the robe and Ephod, *chap.*29.5. ſo that the high Prieſt had in effect two girdles, the one upon his linen coat, the other which was faſtned to the Ephod.

3. Their bonnets differed not in matter from Aarons miter, they were both made of fine linen, but in forme they were divers: the miter was round to the head, the bonnets were piked and ſharpe above, as is before ſhewed, queſt. 38. Likewiſe the high Prieſts miter had a crowne or plate of gold, ſo had not the other.

QUEST. XLII. Whether Aaron did alwaies put on the common Prieſtly garments.

Verſ.41. AND thou ſhalt put them upon Aaron and his ſonnes. Hence Cajetane collecteth, becauſe both Aaron and his ſonnes are named, that theſe three garments before mentioned were common to them both. But here are three opinions: 1. Ioſephus, thinketh, that the high Prieſt did weare all theſe together, both the linen garments of the inferiour Prieſts, and then his owne glorious apparell put upon them: ſo alſo Beda, Lyranus, Toſtatus. But this is both againſt the text, *chap.*39.5. and *Levit.*8.8. where mention is made but of one coat, or tunicle, upon the which the next was the robe, then the Ephod: and beſide, it is unlike that he did weare two bonnets, one upon another, Cajetan: neither is it like that he had two girdles one upon another, as Toſtatus reaſoneth, *qu.*19. for one girdle wou'd have ſufficed to bind many garments together cloſe.

2. Some thinke, that Aaron did not weare them all together, the common Prieſtly garments and his owne, but apart: his owne, cum ſacra obeunda eſſent, when hee was to offer ſacrifice; and the common, when he did any other ſervice about the Tabernacle, ex Simler. But the text is otherwiſe, the ſound of the bels muſt be heard, as often as he goeth in and out of the Sanctuarie, *verſ.*35. and he muſt beare the iudgement of the children of Iſrael, which was the Urim and Thummim, put into the pectorall, before the Lord continually, *verſ.*30. Therefore at all times when he miniſtred, Aaron was to put on his glorious attire.

3. I therefore here conſent rather unto Cajetan: Doe not ſo (ſaith he) underſtand this, quòd Pontifex omnes iſtis tribus, &c. that firſt the high Prieſt put on theſe three garments, and then the other ſeven: not that, quandoque utebatur iſtis, quandoque illis, ſometime he uſed theſe, ſometime thoſe, &c. not all at once, but at divers times: as in the day of reconciliation, hee onely put on theſe plaine linen garments, *Levit.*16.4. and not the other: and this ſeemeth to bee Ioſephus opinion, as hee is explained by Ribera; though, as he is uſually tranſlated, he is drawne to a contrarie ſenſe, as though he ſhould thinke that the high Prieſt did weare his glorious apparell onely then, when he went into the moſt holy place, which was but a yeare; whereas Ioſephus meaning is, that then viliorem aſſumebat, he put on a plainer garment: and he giveth a reaſon, Quia eo die omnes jejunare mos eſt, Becauſe it is the cuſtome that all faſt upon that day, and humble themſelves.

De bel. Iudaic. lib.6. cap.6. Riber. de veſtib. ſacr. l.3. cap.14.

QUEST. XLIII. What it is to fill the hands of the Prieſts.

Verſ.41. THou ſhalt fill their hands. 1. Toſtatus underſtandeth it thus, In manus cujuſlibet complebis ceremonias, quæ requiruntur ad conſecrationem ejus; Thou ſhalt fulfill in their hands the ceremonies, which belong to their conſecration, *qu.*19. he underſtandeth all the ceremonies which were uſed in their conſecration, as their waſhing, annointing, putting on their garments. But this rather is underſtood by the next word following, Thou ſhalt ſanctifie them. 2. Some underſtand it of their annointing, becauſe their hands were as filled with oyle, when they were annointed. But the annointing is ſpoken of immediatly before, Oleaſter. 3. Some take this to bee the ſenſe, Thou ſhalt give them poſſeſſion of the Prieſthood: for when poſſeſſion is given, they uſe to put ſomewhat into the hand, Vatablus. But the poſſeſſion of the Prieſthood went not before their conſecration. 4. Some underſtand it of filling their hands with gifts and ſacrifices, which they ſhould bring and offer to the Lord: ſo the Chalde, Oleaſter, Borrh. Some take it for their conſecration, becauſe they uſed to put ſome part of the ſacrifice into their hand, when they were conſecrated, Gallaſ. Pagnine alſo tranſlateth, Conſecrabis, Thou ſhalt conſecrate them. But the filling of their hands, ſignifieth rather the conſecrating of their miniſterie, which is ſignified by the hands, not becauſe any thing was put into their hands at the time of their conſecration, as chap. 29. Moſes ſaith to the Levits, when they went up and downe ſlaying the Idolaters, Conſecrate your hands unto the Lord: the Hebrew phraſe is, Fill your hands, Iun. To this purpoſe alſo Calvin, Implere manus dicuntur, dum aptantur ad offerendum; Their hands are ſaid to be filled, while they are made fit to offer; offer: Quamdiu profana sunt, vacua censentur, &c. as long as they are prophane, they are counted empties, because no gift is acceptable to God, nisi jure sacerdotii, but in the right of the Priesthood.

QUEST. XLIV. Of the fashion and use of the linen breeches.

Vers.42. Thou shalt also make linen breeches, &c. 1. Iosephus describeth the fashion of them, that they were made of twisted silke, or rather, linen; and first the Priest put thorow his legs, and so drew them up to cover his secret parts, and tied them about his middle. 2. They reached downe from the middle, or loynes, to the knees: they could not be so woven together, but were first woven and afterward sewed together with the needle, Hierom. 3. The word is micnesaim, which is derived of casa, which signifieth to tie, or gather together, as Iosephus interpreteth it, Constrictorium, a gathering garment, or trussing up: because thereby the secret parts were trussed together: or as Rab. Salomon, because the two slops or breeches were tied and knit together about the middle. 4. These linen breeches, though they are last spoken of, were first put on, as well of the high Priest, as of the inferiour Priests, Cajetan. 5. These are not mentioned afterward, where Moses caused Aaron to put on his Priestly apparell, chap. 29.5. and *Levit.*8.8. the reason is, Quod ad genitalia nostra lex non mittit manum, sed ipsi secretiora nostra tegere debemus, because the law reacheth not unto our secret parts, but we of our selves should cover our privie members, Hierom. Because modestie it selfe, the garment being once prescribed, would put them in minde to weare it, it is therefore in those places omitted. 6. The use of this garment was for comelinesse, to hide their secrets; lest while they went about their service in the Tabernacle, if they should chance to fall they might discover that, which was to be hid, Hierom. And beside, Tostatus giveth this reason, that by the trussing up of those members, the inordinate motion thereof might thereby be better stayed, *qu.*21. And Hierom further addeth, why these uncomely parts should not be discovered, that is should not appeare to the eye, Quomodo de fœdissimis initiis, tanta hominum nascatur pulchritudo, How from such homely beginnings, such great beautie in men and other things is brought forth.

QUEST. XLV. *How this precept and charge concerning the linen breeches, agreeth with that law, Exod.*23.26.

BUt it will seeme superfluous, that this kinde of garment should be prescribed, seeing before, Exod. 20.26. it was provided, that they should not goe up by steps unto the Altar, lest their nakednesse might be discovered. 1. To this question it cannot bee answered, that the former law was abrogated by this, seeing it was made not many dayes before, it may be, not above nine or ten, or at the most fortie; for the first precept was given at that instant, when the Morall law was proclaimed, and other judiciall lawes prescribed, *chap.*21.22,23. Then Moses came downe, and went up againe, and stayed in the mount six dayes, and the seventh God called him up, and there he stayed fortie dayes, in wich time he received all these orders, concerning the making of the Tabernacle, and of the Priests apparell: the former law being not yet put in practice, it is not like it was repealed: for God is not as men, who many times make lawes, and afterward seeing the inconvenience, doe reverse them. Aud further it is evident, that both these lawes stood still in force, and were put in practice in the old Testament. 2. Wherefore the better answer is this; that the nakednesse of a man is taken two wayes, either for the secret parts themselves, or for the parts next adjoyning: so then, although the privie parts being thus covered, could not be seene in the casting abroad of their garments, yet the neare parts thereunto, as their knees, and part of their thighes being left bare, might be seene. Therefore that there might be a greater care of comelinesse and decencie, a double bar is laid, and two cautelous provisions made, that neither the one part or the other should be discovered. To this purpose *Tostat. qu.*20.

QUEST. XLVI. Of the mysticall application of the inferiour Priests garments.

FOr the mysticall application of these foure Priestly garments, the linen coat, the girdle, bonnet, and linen breeches: 1. Hierom by the coat made of linen, which groweth out of the ground, understandeth the earth: by the girdle, the Ocean sea, quo terra constringitur, by the which the earth is as it were girded about: and by the bonnet aloft, Gods providence, that watcheth over all. But this seemeth to be somewhat curious. 2. Rupertus applieth them unto Christ, the linen breeches hee would have to signifie the holy incarnation of Christ, qua præornata est natura nostra ignobilis, by the which our unable and base nature is adorned; and the uncomelinesse of our nature, even originall sin covered and healed. But as the high Priest with his ornaments was a type and figure of Christ: so the inferiour Priests with their attire doe better resemble other sorts of Christians. 3. Therefore, thus may the ornaments of the high Priest be applied unto Christ: The long white garment signifieth his innocencie: the miter with the crowne, his Kingdome and power: the girdle, his justice: as *Esai.*11.5. Justice shall be the girdle of his loines, Marbach. As in our blessed Saviour there are three heavenly functions and offices: his Prophetical, to teach us what evill is in our selves, and what good we receive from God: his Priestly, to reconcile us to God, in delivering us from the evill which we have deserved, and from our sins, and in communicating unto us righteousnesse, and other graces from God: his Kingly, that our deliverance from evill, and our possession of heaven and heavenly things may be confirmed unto us by his Kingly power for ever. So these three offices were shadowed forth in Aarons glorious apparell: his robe with the bels setteth forth Christs Prophetical office: the golden plate, wherein was written, Holinesse to Iehovah, his Priesthood: and the miter, which was put aloft as a crowne, his kingly power, Iun. in Analys. And herein Aaron also was a lively type of Christ: that as three duties were to bee performed by the high Priest; to teach the people by puritie of doctrine, with integritie of life, signified by Urim and Thummim, and to take care of the Church continually, which is meant by bearing the names of the tribes, graven in precious stones, in his breast: and by his sacrifices and prayer to be Mediatour for them unto God: So all these

but

but shadowed forth in Aaron, are truly performed by Christ: who is our Prophet, most holy and perfect, to teach us his Fathers will: as our King, hee protecteth and keepeth us, and taketh care for us: and as our Priest, hee did once for all offer up himselfe in sacrifice for us, and still continueth our Mediatour, Barth. 4. Now the inferiour Priests garments are fitly applied to set forth the qualities and conditions of the faithfull, which are the members of Christ, as the other did shadow forth Christ our head. 1. Beda by the linen garment interpreteth decorem castitatis, the comelinesse of chastitie: by the girdle, vigilantem mentis custodiam, the diligent watchfulnesse of the minde to keepe the same: by the bonnets, visus, auditus, gustus custodiam, the diligent keeping of the sight, hearing, taste, and of all the senses. 2. Thomas maketh a more generall use: Castitas significatur per femoralia, &c. Chastitie is signified by the breeches, Puritas vitæ per lineam tunicam; Puritie of life by the linen garment: Moderatio discretionis per cingulum; Moderate discretion by the girdle: Rectitudo intentionis per tiaram; And a right intention by the bonnet. 3. But this application is more fit: The linen garment signifieth our innocencie and righteousnesse, which we receive in the lavacre of regeneration, being cloathed with Christs righteousnesse: as the Apostle saith, All yee that are baptized unto Christ have put on Christ: the girdle signifieth constancie in the truth: as S. Paul saith, Stand therefore, your loines girded about with veritie: Tiaræ protectionis divinæ signa sunt; The bonnets were signes of the divine protection: the linen breeches shew, what care should be had of comelinesse, and what reverence is to be used in the service of God, Pelarg. Marbach. Who addeth this further, that as we put more cõmelinesse upon our uncomely parts: as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 12. So our Saviour hath respect unto the vile and abject members of the Church, such as are despised and counted base in the world. 4. And like as we use three kinde of garments, some for necessitie to cover our naked parts, some for ornament and comelinesse, and some for defence, as militarie garments: so there the Priests had their linen breeches of the first sort; their linen coat of the second, and their girdle of the third: So unto a Christian are necessarie three kinde of spirituall garments: the first is the garment of faith, whereby our sins are covered: secondly, the ornaments of the soule are requisite, whereby Christians must be adorned, in the sanctitie and integritie of life: thirdly, they must put on their spirituall armour, and take the sword of the Spirit, the word of God, whereby they may fight against Satan, Hinder. Borrhaus.

1.2.qu.102. ar.5.ad.9.

*Galath.*3.27. *Ephes.*6.14.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. None must intrude themselves into the callings of the Church.

Vers.1. Cause thou thy brother Aaron to come. In that Aaron intruded not himselfe into the Priests office, but was thereunto called, Procopius giveth this note: Qui temerario ausu ad se trahere sacerdotium, &c. He that will rashly draw unto himselfe the Priesthood, shall suffer punishment. So also Oleaster. So the Apostle observeth upon this very example of Aaron: *No man taketh this honour to himselfe, but he that is called of God, as Aaron, Heb.*5.4.

2. Doct. The agreement which ought to be betweene the Civill and Ecclesiasticall state.

Oleaster noteth here further, in that Moses, who was the chiefe Magistrate, called Aaron to the Priesthood, the concord and amitie that ought to be betweene the Civill and Ecclesiasticall state is commended: that as Ioash prospered while hee followed the direction of Iehoiadah; so both the Ecclesiasticall state should imitate Iehoiadah, to give holy counsell and direction unto the Magistrate, and the Magistrate to be like Ioash in following the same. 2 *King.*12.2.

3. Doct. Profitable arts are the gift of God.

Vers.3. Speake unto all cunning men, whom I have filled with the Spirit of wisdome, &c. Gallasius hereupon thus writeth: Omnem artem & industriam, &c. Dei donum agnosco; Every art and industrie, which bringeth utilitie unto man, I acknowledge to be the gift of God: as the Prophet Isaiah saith, *that God instructeth the husbandman to have discretion, Isa.*28.26. Men therefore to whom God hath given the knowledge of profitable and commendable arts, should have a care to employ them to Gods glorie, and not to abuse them to wantonnesse.

4. Doct. Whatsoever is instituted in Gods service, must proceed from his wisdome.

Vers.3. Speake unto all cunning men: in the Hebrew, wise in heart. Whatsoever is instituted in the service of God, à sapientia Dei proficisci debet, must proceed from the wisdome of God: no humane device must have place or bee admitted there, Simler. Sauls policie, in transgressing Gods Commandement, in saving the best things of the Amalekites, though hee thought hee did therein well and wisely, yet was displeasing unto God.

5. Doct. The sound of the Word in the Gospell, exceedeth the sound of Aarons bels under the Law.

Vers.35. His sound shall be heard, &c. Herein, as Lippoman well observeth, appeareth the excellencie of the Gospell beyond the Law: they heard then but the sound of Aarons bels, Nunc audimus clarum sonitum Evangelii, Now we heare the cleere sound of the Gospell, &c. And as the understanding of a man exceedeth the capacitie of a childe, and the cleere day the dawning: so the cleere light of the Gospell excelleth the shadowes of the Law: God providing better things for us (as the Apostle saith) *that they without us should not be perfect, Heb.*11.40.

6. Doct. There ought to be order among the Ministers of the Church.

Vers.40. Thou shalt make for Aarons sons coats. In that Aaron the high Priests coats were made more costly and glorious, than his sons the inferiour Priests: therein commendatur ordo inter Ecclesiæ ministros, is commended order among the Ministers of the Church: that although Christ doe forbid his Disciples, *Luk.*22. to exercise dominion one over another, as the Princes of the world doe, Vestigium tamen ordinem abrogat; Yet he doth not abrogate order, seeing he hath not onely distinguished them himselfe in gifts, but in offices: as the Apostle saith, *Ephes.*4. He hath given some to be Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists, some Pastors and Doctors, &c. Marbach.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Controv. Against the superstitious apparell of the Romish Priests.

Vers.4. Thou shalt make a breast-plate, an Ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat. These Priestly garments being ceremoniall and typicall, are now abolished, Christ the true high Priest being come with his ornaments. Therefore the Romanists doe plainly Judaize, in bringing againe into the Priestly order such varietie of garments: as the Pall, the Miter, the Crozier staffe, the Albe, the Chimere, the gray amice, the Stoale, with such like. Their Priests come forth, as though Aaron addressed himselfe with his attire to sacrifice at the Altar. S. Paul hath given us a rule concerning these things, *which are but a shadow of things to come, but the bodie is in Christ, Coloss.*2.17.

But it will bee here further asked, if it bee not lawfull now for the Ministers of the Gospell to bee distinguished by some distinct apparell in their ministerie? For answer and satisfaction unto this demand, I will produce two grave testimonies of two learned Writers in this age: Marbachius of late the Professor of Divinitie in Straughsborow, and Gallasius not long since a Minister of the Church of Geneva.

Marbachius thus writeth: In Ecclesia omnia decenter, fieri debent, & ad aedificationem, &c. In the Church all things ought to be done decently and to edification: Itaq; tali vestitu utendum, qui non sit offendiculo, &c. Therefore such a garment must be used, as is not offensive, but bringeth some commendation and authoritie to them which minister, and may discerne and distinguish them from other men.

Gallasius also thus delivereth his judgement upon this place: Ego quidem fateor hoc ad decorem pertinere, ut ordines in politia distinguantur, &c. I confesse, that this appertaineth to comelinesse, that degrees should be distinguished in the Common-wealth: neither is the Gospell against decencie and order, but rather helpeth and maintaineth them: Sed nego ad verbi aut sacramentorum administrationem vestem hanc, &c. But I denie, that the linen garment or pall belongeth to the administration of the word or Sacraments. I would not truly have any stirres or tumult moved in the Church for the use of externall things (seeing it is indifferent;) yet the superstition, into which men are readie to fall, and the abuse I hold to be condemned. We must also take heed lest while we tolerate things indifferent, or are constrained to winke at those things which cannot be amended, wee detract from other mens libertie. Thus farre Gallasius of this matter.

How far the Surplice may be used, & tolerated in divine service.

2. Controv. That we offend in our best works.

Vers.38. That Aaron may beare the iniquitie of the offerings. The people then sinned even in their religious works: which sheweth, in ipsis benefactis nostris peccatorum labem inesse, &c. that even in our best works, there is some blemish of sin, which cannot be acceptable unto God, but for the worthinesse and mediation of the true high Priest Christ Jesus, whom Aaron prefigured, Simler. To the same purpose also Calvin: Discamus nostra obsequia, ubi in conspectum Dei veniunt, peccato permixta esse; Let us learne, that even our service when it commeth into Gods sight (to bee examined) is mixt with sin, and is onely sanctified by Christ, &c. So the Prophet Isaiah saith, *chap.*64.6. All our righteousnesse is as a stained cloth. Hereby then appeareth the error of the Romanists, who hold, that a just man in his good works doth not sinne so much as venially, *Concil. Trident. sess.*6. *can.*25. See more hereof *Synops. Centur.*4. *err.*70.

3. Controv. Against merit in good works.

Vers.38. To make them acceptable before the Lord. Tostatus saith here, that the Priest was accepted of God, and the Lord was well pleased with him: because he ascribed all holinesse unto God, as it was writen in his forehead: Holinesse to Iehovah. Hoc autem protestari meritorium est, & Deum nobis placatum reddimus; And to protest this is meritorious, and by this meanes we doe pacifie and appease God toward us, *Gen.*19.

Contra. 1. The former doctrine, that the people sinned in their very offerings, in their best works, which are spotted and blemished with some imperfection or other, overthroweth this error: for that which meriteth at Gods hand must be perfect: our best works then being imperfect are not meritorious. Therefore Calvin much better here inferreth; This place teacheth us, Quicquid bonorum operum Deo offerre studemus, adeo nihil mercedis mereri, &c. That whatsoever good works we offer unto God, they are so farre from meriting any reward, that they make us guiltie before God, unlesse the holinesse of Christ, wherewith God is pleased, doe procure pardon for them, &c. 2. The Scripture evidently testifieth this: as *Dan.*9.8. We doe not present our supplications before thee, for our owne righteousnesse. So Luk. 17.10. When ye have done all, say ye, we are unprofitable servants; we have done that which was our dutie to doe. If then we are unprofitable servants in our best service, we are farre from meriting or deserving any thing: and if we doe no more than our bounden dutie, nor yet all that, we have no reason to expect any reward beyond our desert. See more hereof, *Synops. Centur.*4. *err.*79.

4. Controv. Against the Popes triple crowne.

Vers.36. Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold. Ribera following Iosephus, who speaking of this plate of gold, saith: Hunc aurea corona triplici circundabat, &c. He beset round the Priests miter or bonnet, with a threefold crowne, &c. hereupon thus inferreth: Hinc factum arbitror, ut summus pontifex pontifex triplicem in capite coronam gerat, &c. Hence it is, that the chiefe Priest (meaning the Pope) doth now beare a threefold crowne upon his head,&c. And he addeth further, Quamvis hujusmodi corona,&c. Although such a crowne was received from the Apostle Peter: which is yet to bee seene in S. Peters Church, which Silvester shewed unto Constantine, &c. This he saith S. Peter used by the instinct of the Spirit, that the veritie might be answerable to the figure, that Christs high Priest might weare that, which the high Priest the figure of Christ did weare.

*Lib.*3. *de sacr. vestib. c.*14.

Contra. 1. All this is grounded upon an uncertaine text: for there is no mention made here of a triple crowne: it is but Iosephus report without any warrant out of the text: the golden plate indeed is called the holy crowne, *chap.*29.30. But of a threefold crowne there is not one word. 2. They may be ashamed to abuse the world with such foppish fables: who ever will beleeve, that S. Peter ever did weare a triple crowne, or that any of the Apostles used any such worldly pompe, whose glorie was their povertie, and contempt of the world; their crowne their sufferings, their obedience to powers and subjection, their renowne. 3. And if there had beene such a glorious crowne, it had belonged rather to S. Paul, than to Saint Peter, for hee was the Apostle of the Gentiles, the other of the circumcision. 4. And if any such crowne had beene then, it is more like that Constantine gave it to Silvester, whose donation they pretend for their great soveraigntie and privileges, than that Silvester first shewed it to him. 5. And if that indeed be Peters triple crowne which yet is to be seene, why doth the Pope refuse to weare that, but rather maketh choice of a massie triple crowne of gold and precious stone? 6. I had thought that Aaron had beene a figure of Christ, not of the Pope: and temporall things doe not prefigure temporall, one triple crowne another, but that outward crowne shadowed forth the spirituall Kingdome and regall dignitie of Christ.

5. Controv. Of the single life of Priests.

Vers.40. And thou shalt make them girdles. Ribera further by the girdle which compasseth the loines, understandeth the continencie and single life of Priests, out of Beda. Contra. 1. If it had any such signification, wherefore was not single life injoyned Aarons sons first, to whom this girdle was prescribed? 2. Beda indeed hath such a collection, but he addeth withall: Quod videlicet genus virtutis, nulli per legem Dei necessario imperatum, sed voluntaria est devotione Deo offerendum; Which kinde of vertue is necessarily injoyned none by the law of God, but it must with a voluntarie devotion be offered unto God, the Lord thus saying hereof: Non omnes capiunt verbum hoc; All cannot receive this saying, &c. Why then doe they impose necessarily upon their Priests solitarie and single life? which forced chastitie hath brought forth and yet doth many foule fruits among them, as adulterie, fornication, Sodomitrie, and such like uncleannesse.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Apparell commendeth not one to God.

Vers.2. Thou shalt make holie garments for Aaron, &c. glorious, and beautifull. Wee reade of divers glorious garments made in the world: As of the costly vesture of Alcisthenes the Sybarite, which Dionysius sold for 120. talents unto the Carthaginians: Demetrius King of Macedon had a robe set forth sumptuously with the representation of the heaven and starres, which no King durst put on, quod invidiosa nimis esset impendii magnificentia, because it was too envious, because of the magnificent cost. But Aarons glorious apparell exceeded all these, not so much in the sumptuous cost and cunning workmanship, as in respect of the institution, which was from God, and the signification, which was to set forth the glorious Priesthood of Christ: and as this was typicall in it selfe, so morally it shewed with what varietie of vertues first the Ministers of God, then all his faithfull people and worshippers should be adorned: not with putting on of gold, or outward apparell, but with the spirituall ornaments of the inward man, as S. Peter teacheth how women should be adorned, 1 *Pet.*3.4. Athenæus lib.12. cap.16. Cal.lib.8.cap.9.

2. Observ. Ministers must be adorned with veritie of doctrine, and holinesse of life.

Vers.30. Urim and Thummim. Which signifie knowledge and perfection: whereby the Minister and man of God is set forth, that he ought to be adorned with soundnesse of doctrine, and integritie of conversation, B. Babing. As Saint Paul requireth, that his Bishop for the one should be apt to teach, for the other unreproveable, 1 *Tim.*3.

3. Observ. Ministers must not be dumbe or idle.

Vers.35. And his sound shall be heard, &c. Gregorie well noteth upon this, that the Priest dieth, if his sound be not heard, when he goeth in and out before the Lord: Iram contra se occulti judicis excitat, si fine sonitu prædicationis incedit; Hee stirreth up the anger of the secret Judge against him, who goeth on without the sound of preaching, &c. So the holy Apostle saith: Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospell, 1 *Cor.*9.16. This maketh against two sort of Ministers, the ignorant and unskilfull, that cannot sound forth the voice of preaching, and the idle and slothfull, that doe not. In regist. lib.1. cap.34.

Chap. XXIX.

1. The Method and Argument.

THe Tabernacle with the parts thereof being thus finished, with the garments and apparell of the Priests: now followeth the consecration of them in this Chapter, which consisteth of two parts: first, of the consecration of the Priests, to *vers.*37. Then the sanctifying of the Altar and Tabernacle for the publike service of God.

In the consecration: 1. Is set downe the preparation it selfe, both of the things wherewith they should be consecrated, to *vers.*5. then of the persons, Aaron and his sons, who are first attired and apparelled, with their severall rayments, to *vers.*10. 2. The consecration followeth: first, of Aaron and the rest for that time, to vers. 28. then the generall manner is prescribed to be observed afterward, *vers.*28. to *vers.*37.

In the speciall consecration for that time: 1. The manner is prescribed how the calfe or bullocke shall be used: 1. How and where he should be killed, *vers.*10,11. 2. What shall be done with the bloud, *vers.*12. with the fat, *vers.*13. with the flesh and skin, *vers.*14.

2. How the ramme of burnt offering should be sacrificed, is shewed, *vers.*16. to *vers.*19.

3. The ramme of consecration, which was the third beast, must be thus bestowed: 1. The bloud, part must be laid upon certaine parts of Aaron; with part the Altar, and Aaron and his sons, with their garments, must be sprinkled, *vers.*20,21. 2. The flesh and parts, some must bee burnt upon the Altar, with the manner how they must bee first put into Aarons hands, and shaken to and fro before the Lord, to *vers.*26. some, as the breast and shoulder shall be for Aaron and his sons, to *vers.*28.

In the generall prescription, these things are declared. 1. The perpetuall law of the heave offering, *vers.*28. 2. The use of the Priestly garments, *vers.*29,30. 3. How the ramme should be dressed, and eaten, to *vers.*34. 4. And nothing must be reserved, *vers.*34.

The second generall part belongeth unto the daily and publike service of God. 1. The instrument thereof is declared, the Altar, with the manner of consecration, to *vers.*38. 2. The matter of the daily offering, two lambs, one at morning, the other at even, to *vers.*42. 3. The place is described, at the doore of the Tabernacle, *vers.*42,43. 4. The Ministers, *vers.*44. 5. The effect, Gods dwelling among them, *vers.*45,46.

2. The divers readings.

I. Vers.1. Take a young bullocke under the damme, or, sucking. I. ben bakar, the son of a bullocke. A.P.H. better than, a young calfe. B.G. for here, ben bachar, is not interpreted, phar, of it selfe signifieth a young calfe, or than, a young bullocke from the oxen, V.S. or, a calfe from the heard. L.C. See *qu.*2. following.

I.B.C. Vers.5. And shalt gird them with the broidered girdle of the Ephod, I.B.C.P. or, braidered gird of the Ephod. G.V.A. better than, thou shalt gird them with a girdle. L. for here, Ephod is wanting: or, thou shalt couple the breastplate to the superhumerall or Ephod. S. for here, becheseb, with the broidered gard, or girdle, is omitted.

I. A. Vers.10. Shall stay his hands upon the head of the calfe: fulcient. A. or, shall rest with his hands upon, &c. better than, put to their hands. V. or, joyne their hands upon, &c. P. or, put on their hands, &c. G.L.S.C. samac signifieth sustentare, to stay, Oleaster.

S.A.V. Vers.14. It is sinne. S.A.H.&c. that is, an offering for sinne. I.G.B. as S. Paul saith in the same sense, that Christ was made sinne for us, 2 *Cor.*5.21. V. better than, it is an expiation. C. or, it is for sinne. L. for, is added, the word is חטאת, chatath, sinne.

I.A.C. Vers.25. And thou shalt burne them in the Altar upon the burnt offering. I.A.S. better than, for a burnt offering. P.L.B. or, in the Altar of burnt offering. S. for here the preposition is omitted: or, beside the burnt offering. G.V. the word is על, ghal, above, upon.

B.G.V. Vers.35. Thou shalt fill their hands. B.G.V.A. consecrate their hands. P.S.L. consecrate their ministrie. I. offer their oblations. C. the word is, תמלא, temalle, shals fill.

B.G. cum cater. Vers.36. Thou shalt cleanse the Altar. G.B. cum cater. not, sprinkle the Altar with the sinne offering. L. חטא, chata in piel signifieth to cleanse, and so Innius translateth, *Levit.*14.52.

3. The questions explained.

Quest. I. Why it pleased God to have the Priests thus consecrated.

Vers.1. THis is that thou shalt doe unto them in consecrating them, &c. 1, First, it was requisite that there should be some singled out, and appointed to minister in the Priests office, to avoid confusion: lest every one at his pleasure might have presumed upon the Priests office; as among the Gentiles, he that was the more mightie and honourable, tooke upon him to be a sacrificer, Lippom. Pelican. 2. The Lord, as before hee beautified the Priests with glorious apparell, so here he by certaine publike and solemne rites, doth cause them to be consecrated in the sight and view of all the people, for the greater reverence and authoritie of their calling. 3. And hereby the Priests themselves were assured also of their their calling, which was ſealed and confirmed unto them by theſe ſignes. 4. And theſe ceremonies were figures and types of the high Prieſt Chriſt Jeſus, whom the Lord hath anointed: and of all the faithfull and beleevers, whom Chriſt hath made Kings and Prieſts to God his Father, Simler.

QUEST. II. Why the calfe is ſaid to be the ſonne of a bullocke.

Verſ.29. TAke a young bullocke yet under the dam. 1. Some take this to bee according to the Hebrew phraſe: A calfe, or ſteare, the ſonne of a bullocke; that no more is thereby ſignified, but that he ſhould take a bullocke; as, ſo they ſay, the ſonne of a goat, the ſonne of a dove, and ſuch like, Oleaſtet. But this were in that ſenſe a needleſſe repetition: for a bullocke muſt needs come of a bullocke, and a goat of a goat. 2. Some make this to be the meaning, that he ſhould take a young bullocke out of the heard, de armento, ſo Latin. Septuag. Chalde, Vatab. But more is ſignified thereby than ſo, for Geneſ. 18.7. it is ſaid that Abraham ran to the heard, and fetched filium bovis, the ſonne of a bullocke; not out of the heard, for that is ſaid before. 3. Rab. Salomon thinketh this is added by way of diſtinction, becauſe the word phar ſignifieth not onely a young bullocke, but an old calfe: and therefore by this addition it is ſignified, that it ſhould be a young bullocke. But this addition needed not for that cauſe: for the word phar, of it ſelfe ſignifieth a young bullocke, as the Septuagint tranſlate it, μοσχαριον, a calfe. 4. Wherefore I preferre here Iunius reading: who interpreteth it, juvencum filium bovis, a young bullocke, the ſonne of an oxe or bullocke, juvencum ſubrumum, a calfe or bullocke yet ſucking, under the dam not weaned: and therefore ſometime ben bakar, the ſonne of a bullocke, is put alone without the other word, phar.

QUEST. III. Why a bullocke, two rams, and other things were offered at Aarons conſecration.

A young bullocke. 1. Lyranus thinketh, that they are bid to take a calfe or young bullocke for Aarons conſecration, to make atonement for that ſinne, which hee had committed in making the golden calfe: and the two rams were preſcribed, one in remembrance of the ramme, which was ſacrificed in the ſtead of Iſaack, and the other for a commemoration of the paſchal Lambe, which they offered at their departure out of Egypt. But theſe are light conjectures: for Aaron had not yet committed that ſinne, in making the golden calfe, neither was it a ramme, but a lambe, which they celebrated the paſſeover withall. 2. Therefore this is the reaſon, why all theſe things, and of this ſort and kinde are taken: According to the dignitie of the perſons here conſecrated, ſuch are the ſacrifices and gifts of their conſecration, as *Levit.*4. a calfe or young bullocke is preſcribed to be offered for the ſin of the Prieſt, whereas but a goat was ſacrificed for the ſinne of the Prince: becauſe the ſins of the Prieſts, who profeſſed knowledge, were more dangerous, and ſcandalous. So then becauſe here the high Prieſt with his ſons are to be conſecrated, a bullocke muſt be taken. 3. And becauſe the Prieſts were to offer unto God all the gifts and ſacrifices of the people of all ſorts: it was fit and requiſite, that they ſhould be conſecrated with ſacrifices of all ſorts, which were three, either ſinne offerings, burnt ſacrifices, or peace offerings: of the firſt kinde was the bullocke here; of the ſecond, the firſt ramme, and of the third, the ſecond. 4. And for that there were divers kinds of meat offerings, ſome of things that had life, as beaſts and birds; ſome without life, as cakes, unleavened bread, and ſuch like: and the meat-offerings of things without life, were of divers ſorts, ſome out of the oven, ſome of the frying pan, ſome out of the cauldron, *Levit.*2.4.5. here all theſe varieties are preſented: unleavened bread out of the oven, cakes tempered with oyle in the frying pan, and wafers boyled in water, as R. Salomon thinketh, like unto our ſimnels, *Toſtat.qu.*1. 5. And becauſe the Prieſts were duces & anteſignani aliorum, the Captaines and ring-leaders of others, to ſignifie, that there was a greater holineſſe required in them; they are conſecrated all kinde of wayes: 1. They are waſhed. 2. They are clad with the Prieſtly robes. 3. They are anointed. 4. The ſacrifices, both for ſin, the burnt offerings, and peace offerings are offered for them. 5. They are purified with bloud: both their eares, hands and feet are touched therewith, and they themſelves and their garments are beſprinkled alſo with bloud. And this was not to be done one day, or two: but their conſecration did continue for ſeven dayes together, *verſ.*36. Gallaſ.

QUEST. IV. Why Aaron and the Prieſts were called to the doore of the Tabernacle.

Verſ.4. THou ſhalt bring Aaron and his ſons to the doore of the Tabernacle. The reaſons hereof may bee theſe, why Aaron was brought to the Tabernacle there to put on his Prieſtly garments: 1. Becauſe he was to ſerve with the reſt of the Prieſts in the Sanctuarie within, into the which Aaron was not to enter without his Prieſtly attire: for his ſound muſt be heard when he goeth in and out, leſt he die, *chap.*28.35. 2. Becauſe at the doore of the Tabernacle was placed the braſen Altar, where the Prieſts were daily to offer ſacrifice: and therefore it was meet they ſhould be there conſecrated, where the chiefe of their ſervice and miniſterie was to be executed. 3. And there betweene the doore and the Altar was the braſen Laver, where Aaron and the Prieſts were to waſh themſelves before they put on the holy garments: thither therefore are they called, becauſe there they were to be waſhed with water, *Toſtat.qu.*1.

QUEST. V. Why Aaron and the reſt are waſhed, and how.

Verſ.4. ANd waſh them with water. 1. Not with common or every water, but with that which was in the braſen Laver, *chap.*30.18. Iun. 2. But here we muſt conſider, that alwayes the order of time is not ſet downe in Scripture, in ſetting downe the ſtorie of ſuch things, as were done: for the braſen Laver wherein they were to be waſhed, is afterward appointed to bee made, chap. 30. *Toſtat. quaſt.*2. 3. They were waſhed, not onely their hands and feet, as in their daily miniſterie, *chap.*40.33. but in their whole bodie, as thinketh Rab. Salomon: becauſe their firſt conſecration required a more ſolemne oblation, and waſhing, than their daily miniſtration. And like as the oyle was powred upon Aarons head, but ran downe along upon his beard and other parts; ſo it is like the water was applied to his whole bodie, bodie, Lyran. Toſtat. And this waſhing was a figure of Chriſts baptiſme, who went into the water when he was baptiſed, Matth. 3. Simler. 4. It was fit they ſhould be waſhed before they put on the holy garments, both for decencie and comelineſſe, that the ſoile of their bodie might be cleanſed, before they applied the precious and glorious apparell: and for ſignification, that they might thereby be admoniſhed to cleanſe and purge themſelves from their ſins and corruptions.

QUEST. VI. Of the Prieſtly apparell which Aaron put on, and why the girdle is omitted.

Verſ.5. PVt upon Aaron the tunicle, &c. 1. Toſtatus thinketh that this was the linen garment, which was common to Aaron and the inferiour Prieſts. But it is ſhewed before, *chap.*28.39. that the high Prieſts linen coat was embroidered, and ſo were not the other Prieſts linen coats. 2. Toſtatus alſo hath another conceit, that the high Prieſt did put on this linen coat, ſuper veſtes communes, upon his common wearing apparell, *qu.*2. But that is not like: for Aaron put off his cloaths, when he was waſhed, and then he is immediatly cloathed with his Prieſtly apparell. 3. Becauſe no mention is here made of the girdle; Cajetan thinketh, that cingulum erat commune pontifici & ſacerdotibus, that there was one common girdle for the high Prieſt and the reſt: and therefore afterward verſ. 9. mention is made once for all of the girdles of the Prieſts. But it is evident, chap. 28. 39. that the high Prieſts girdle was embroidered of needle worke: whereas the common girdles were onely of linen, *Levit.*16.4. This rather is to be ſupplied out of *Levit.*8.8. where he is girded with a girdle upon his coat: and ſo Oleaſter thinketh well, that Aaron hath ſeven ornaments put upon him beſide the linen breeches: the tunicle, the robe, the Ephod, the pectorall, the girdle, the miter, and golden crowne. 4. And whereas it is ſaid, and ſhall cleave them with the broidered gard of the Ephod: Toſtatus following Ioſephus thinketh, that this was the girdle, wherewith his garments were girded all together, *qu.*2. whereas it was the broidered gard, which was in the nether part of the Ephod, the laps whereof below, did gird the Prieſt in the waſte, as a girdle, Iun. Lippoman. Simler. Vatab.

QUEST. VII. How Aaron was anointed, and with what.

Verſ.7. ANd thou ſhalt take the anointing oyle. 1. Though it be called oile, yet was it more than oile: for it was a precious ointment, made of Roſin, Myrrh, Cinamom, and other things, as it is preſcribed, *chap.*30. Iun. 2. The high Prieſt was anointed in his head, but it is not expreſſed how the inferiour Prieſts were anointed; it is like, but in their hands: though Toſtatus uſeth but a ſlender conjecture to prove it, becauſe now their Biſhops uſe to be anointed in the head, the inferiour Prieſts but in the hands, to ſignifie that the one receive a ſuperioritie in their conſecration, the other but a kinde of ſervice and miniſterie: for what warrant have they to uſe the Jewiſh rites and ceremonies under the Goſpell, in their conſecrations? 3. Now becauſe it would ſeeme an uncomely thing, that all Aarons garments ſhould be beſmeared with this ointment, if it had beene powred on Aarons head; R. Salomon thinketh that Moſes tooke his finger and dipped it in the oile, and ſo ſtrake it on Aarons forehead. But the text is againſt his conceit, both in this place; becauſe it is ſaid, and ſhalt powre it upon his head; and likewiſe *Pſal.*133. where it is expreſſed, that the ointment ran downe upon Aarons beard, and ſo to the skirts of his cloathing, *Toſtat. qu.*2.

QUEST. VIII. How the ordinance of the Prieſthood is ſaid to be perpetuall.

Verſ.9. THe Prieſts office ſhall be theirs for a perpetuall law. 1. Whereas the like phraſe is uſed, chap. 28.43. This ſhall be a law for ever, &c. which ſome reſtraine unto the particular precept of wearing linen breeches, becauſe the law of comelineſſe and decencie is perpetuall: here it is evident, that it is generally meant of the exerciſing and execution of the whole Prieſthood, Calvin. 2. Therefore this ordinance is ſaid to be eternall, and perpetuall in reſpect of the ſubject, becauſe it was to continue, uno tempore, quo durarent ſacrificia, all the time that the ſacrifices were to continue: the ſacrifices therein Chriſt being determined, (for the Jewes themſelves at this day forbeare to ſacrifice, nay they would chuſe rather to die, than offer ſacrifice, out of the land of Canaan, and eſpecially becauſe they have no Tabernacle nor Temple, where onely by the law they were to ſacrifice:) the law of the Prieſthood muſt alſo ceaſe, the ſacrifices, wherein the Prieſthood was exerciſed, being aboliſhed, *Toſtat.cap.*28.*qu.*21. 3. Auguſtine giveth another reaſon why it is called perpetuall, quia res ſignificaret æternas, becauſe it ſignified eternall things. So alſo Gloſſ. interlin. it is ſo called, quia perpetuam futuram, id eſt, Chriſtianam religionem ſignificabat: becauſe it ſignified the Chriſtian religion, which ſhould be perpetuall. And Calvine alſo approveth this ſenſe: Hæc vera eſt ceremoniarum perpetuitas, &c. This is the true perpetuitie of the ceremonies, that they have their being in Chriſt, the ſubſtance and truth of them.

*Quæſt.*114.

QUEST. IX. The ſpirituall application of Aarons manner of conſecration.

NOw this manner of conſecrating of Aaron, by offering ſacrifices, waſhing, putting on the Prieſtly apparell, in being anointed, hath this ſignification: 1. The preſenting of the bullocke to be ſacrificed, Aſperſionem deſignat ſanguinis Domini noſtri, doth ſignifie the ſprinkling of Chriſts bloud, Beda. The two rams doe ſet forth Chriſt, ex anima & corpore, &c. conſiſting in his humane nature of bodie and ſoule, Strabus: or they ſignifie, duplicem populum, &c. the two people, the old and new, Lippom. panes azymi munditiam vitæ, the unleavened bread betokeneth the holineſſe of life, without the leaven of maliciouſneſſe, as S. Paul expoundeth, 1 *Cor.*6.

2. The ſolemne waſhing of Aaron and his ſons, did ſignifie the Sacrament of Baptiſme: and as they doe not put on their garments, untill firſt the filth of the fleſh be waſhed away: Sic niſi in Chriſto novi homines renaſcantur; So unleſſe they become new men in Chriſt, they are not admitted unto holy things, Hierom. They which come unto God muſt firſt bee purged, and cleanſed from their ſins, Pelarg. And hereby more ſpecially was ſignified in this ſolemne waſhing with water, the publike Baptiſme of Chriſt, which which though he needed not in respect of himselfe, yet thereby he would consecrate that Sacrament for us, Osiander.

3. By the putting on of the Priestly garments, after they were washed, is signified the putting on of Christ, cum tunicas pelliceas deposuerimus, after we have put off our old vestures, Hierom. So Procopius applieth those words of the Apostle, Put on the Lord Iesus Christ; So also Pelarg.

4. By the oyle, wherewith Aaron was annointed, Beda understandeth, Gratiam Spiritus sancti, The grace of the Spirit. And Hierom here applieth that saying of the Prophet David, *Psal.*45. God even thy God hath annoimted thee with the oyle of gladnesse above thy fellowes. Therefore was Aaron onely annointed in the head, and none of the rest: because Christ received the Spirit beyond measure; and the holy Ghost descended and lighted upon him, when he was baptized, *Matth.*3. Osiander.

QUEST. X. Why the Priests lay their hands upon the head of the beast.

Vers.10. Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head, &c. 1. Augustine by this ceremonie understandeth the receiving of power, Vt ipsi etiam aliquid consecrare possent, that they also might consecrate afterward unto God. So also Lyranus. But because the people also did use to lay their hands upon their sacrifices which they brought, Levit. 4. who received thereby no power to sacrifice, this seemeth not to be the meaning. 2. Iunius thus expoundeth it, Quasi seipsos sisterent. & sacrificarent Iehova: As though they did present themselves to bee sacrificed unto God, yet not in their owne person, but Christs. But this cannot be the meaning, for the former reason, because the people did also lay on their hands, who were therein no type of Christ that sacrificed himselfe for us. 3. Some thinke, that by this ceremonie in imposing of their hands, they did resigne their right in that beast, Tostat. Et designarunt illud, ut fieret sacrificium, and ordained it to be a sacrifice, Osiander. 4. But there is more in it than so: they hereby confesse, that they were worthie to die in Gods justice for their sins: Sed ex divina misericordia mors in animal transferebatur: But by the divine mercie, their death was transferred upon the beast, Lyran. wherein Christ is lively shadowed forth, who died for us, Simler. *Quæst.*125. in Exod.

QUEST. XI. Of the divers kinds of sacrifices, and why some kinde of beasts were taken for sacrifice, and not other.

Vers.11. So thou shalt kill the calfe, &c. 1. There were three kinde of sacrifices which were usually offered: the first was called holocaustum, a burnt offering, because it was wholly consumed upon the Altar: and this kinde was offered specially, ad reverentiam majestatis, for reverence of the divine majestie, to testifie our obedience and service. The second was the sacrifice for sin: whereof part was burned upon the Altar, part was for the Priests use, unlesse it were a sin offering for the Priest or the people: in which cases all was consumed on the Altar. The third sort were peace offerings, which were offered in signe of thanksgiving for some benefit received, or to be received; whereof part was burnt upon the Altar, part was for the Priest, and the rest was for the offerer, Thom. 2. Now although there were many cleane birds and beasts, yet there were onely two kinde of the one, the pigeon, and turtle dove; and three of the other, bullocks, sheepe, and goats, which were taken for sacrifice: whereof Philo giveth this reason; because both among the fowles and beasts these are of the meekest and mildest nature, the pigeon and turtle dove, and amongst the beasts these three sorts are tamest, when we see, that whole heards and flocks of them may be driven by a boy: and they have neither pawes or clawes to hurt; as ravenous beasts; nor yet armed with teeth to devoure, wanting the upper row: wherein appeareth the harmlesse disposition of these creatures. Philo addeth further, that these beasts of all other are most serviceable unto mans use, sheepe and goats for cloathing and food, and bullocks beside the use of their flesh for meat, and their skins for leather, they serve with their labour in the tilling of the ground. To these may a third reason bee added: because the land of Canaan most abounded with these kinds of fowles and beasts, they are prescribed for sacrifice. And a fourth also may be this: they were not to offer of wilde beasts, because they could not easily bee had, and hardly are they gotten alive: for which cause they were not appointed to offer fishes, which could not so easily be taken; and very hardly alive: but their sacrifices must be brought alive, Riber. 3. Now in the consecration of Aaron and his sons, all these sacrifices are offered; a bullocke for a sinne offering, one ramme for a burnt offering, and another for a peace offering. 1.2.qu.103.ar. 3.ad 8. Libel. de victimis. *Lib.*4. *de sacrif. cap.*1.

QUEST. XII. Why the blond was laid upon the horns of the Altar.

Vers.12. Thou shalt take of the blond, and put it upon the hornes, &c. 1. The bloud here was not used, to confirme any league or covenant betweene God and his people, as *chap.*24. for in that case, first the words and articles of the covenant were read, before the bloud was sprinkled, and beside each partie, betweene whom the covenant was made, were besprinkled; not onely the Altar, which represented God, but the people also. But here neither of these is performed, there is no covenant rehearsed, neither are the people sprinkled with the bloud. 2. There was then another use beside this of the sprinkling of bloud, which was to purge and cleanse, and so to pacifie and appease: as this reason is yeelded why they should not eat the bloud, because the Lord had given it to be offered upon the Altar, to be an atonement for their soules, Levit. 17.11. And not onely the Altar of burnt offering was cleansed by bloud, but the whole Tabernacle; the high Priest in the day of reconciliation sprinkled the bloud upon the Mercie seat, and before the Mercie seat, the Altar and Tabernacle also, to purge them from the sins and trespasses of the people, Levit. 16.16. Therefore the Apostle saith, *Almost all things by the law are purged with bloud, Heb.*9.22. The bloud of the sacrifices then was put upon the Altar, that thereby, as if it were their owne bloud, Gods wrath might be appeased: by which bloud of the externall sacrifices Christs bloud of atonement was prefigured, whereby indeed the wrath of God is appeased toward us, *Tostat. q.*5.

3. And

3. And although the sin offerings were specially intended for the remission of sins, and so the bloud in such sacrifices was to that end laid upon the hornes of the Altar, to purge and reconcile: yet in other sacrifices also, as in burnt offerings, *Levit.*1.11. and in peace offerings, *Levit.*3.2. the bloud was sprinkled round about upon the Altar; because in them also there was atonement made with God, Levit. 1.4. though not so directly as in sin offerings, *Tostat.qu.*6. 4. R. Salomon here is of opinion, that the bloud was not laid upon all the foure hornes of the Altar, but onely in two corners thereof one opposite to another, and not upon the same side. But *Levit.*16.18. it is said in expresse words, that he should put of the bloud upon the hornes of the Altar round about.

QUEST. XIII. What became of the bloud, which was powred at the bottome of the Altar.

Vers.12. THou shalt powre the rest of the bloud at the foot of the Altar, &c. 1. Lyranus thinketh that there was some pipe full of holes in the bottome of the Altar, whereby the bloud soked into the ground, and was so dried up. But the ground could not drinke up all the bloud of the sacrifices: especially in their solemne feasts, when many sacrifices were offered: as when Solomon at the dedication of the Temple offered so many thousands of beeves and sheepe: the ground being so filled with bloud would have beene very noisome. 2. Tostatus therefore saith, that this bloud, miraculosè defecabatur was miraculously dried up, and converted by Gods power into some other element, *qu.*6. But where any other reason may be found out, we must not run unto miracles. 3. Cajetane here maketh mention of his former conceit, that the Altar was filled with earth within, which might be imagined to serve to drinke up the bloud, and that there was some void place left beside. But the same inconvenience in the noisome smell of the earth so tainted, would have followed. But Cajetane addeth further, that jugis ignis altaris tollebat omnem indecentiam fœtoris, the continuall fire upon the Altar did take away the stinch of the bloud. 4. But the more probable opinion is, that not onely the smell was taken away by the smell of the fire, but sanguis ipse consumebatur: but the bloud it selfe was consumed by the heat of the fire, being powred at the bottome of the Altar on the inside, Oleast. Simler.

QUEST. XIV. Why the fat was burned upon the Altar, and how.

Vers.13. THou shalt take all the fat. 1. The Lord commanded the fat of the offerings to be burnt upon the Altar, ut obviaretur ritui idololatrarum, to contrarie the rite and custome of Idolaters, who used to eat the fat of their sacrifices, as *Deut.*32.38. *they did eat the fat of their sacrifices, Lyra. Tostat.qu.*6. And another reason is this: Deus optima quaq; sibi offerri, &c. God will have the best of the sacrifice to be offered to him, Lippoman. 2. Together with the fat, and kall they must also take the kidneyes, which are not properly taken for any part of the flesh: for the flesh must bee burnt without the host, yea all the flesh, *Levit.*4.11. 3. Because the word katar, doth properly signifie thurificari, to burne, as incense: and so the fat here is prescribed so to be burned. Cajetane would inferre, that it was to bee burned as incense, that is, not to be consumed with the flame, sed instar thuris paulatim resolvi in fumum: but as incense to be resolved into smoake by little and little. But this seemeth to be too curious. Oleaster giveth a better reason, why this word is used, because God being displeased with the stinking smell of our sins: Hujusmodi suffumigationibus occurrebatur; These suffumigations were used by way of remedie whereby the Lord smelled a favour of rest, as the Scripture speaketh, and yet but typically: for the true sweet smelling sacrifice was Christ.

QUEST. XV. Why the flesh, skin, and dung was burned without the host.

Vers.14. THe flesh, his skin and dung shalt thou burne without the host, &c. 1. In this speciall sacrifice for sin, which was offered in the consecration of Aaron, the skin, together with the flesh was burnt without the host: but in burnt offerings, because all was to be burned upon the Altar, and yet it was not fit the skin should bee consumed with the rest, that belonged to the Priest, *Levit.*7.8. but in peace offerings the skin was the offerers, as the rest which remained beside the Priests portion, Tostat. 2. All is commanded to bee carried out of the host and there burned, not onely to signifie, as Lyranus saith, Quod peccata longè esse debant à sacerdotibus; That sins must be farre off from the Priest: for the like was to be done also in the sin offering for the whole congregation, *Levit.*4.1. but in every sin offering they did not so; as if the sin offering were for the Prince, or any other private person, they did not then carrie it without the host: this was done therefore, in detestationem peccati sacerdotis, to shew the greatnesse of the sin of the Priest, as likewise of the whole congregation, *Tostat. qu.*7. 3. And whereas this is added as a reason, for it is a sin offering, it must not be so understood, as though generally every sin offering was so to be served: for in the sin offerings for the Prince, or any private person, that usage of burning without the host, was not observed: but it must have speciall reference to the thing here sacrificed for sin, which was a young bullocke. Now for the Prince or private person a goat was offered, not a bullocke: but when a bullocke was offered, as for the sin of the Priest, or of all the whole congregation, then it was to be so burned without the host: this then is the sense, because this bullocke is sacrificed for sin. *Tostat. qu.*7. 4. Though here no mention be made what shall be done with the inwards and legs, and other parts of the beast, which are not here rehearsed: yet it may be supplied out of *Levit.*4.11. that all those likewise should be carried without the host, and there burned, *Tostat.qu.*6.

QUEST. XVI. Of the mysticall application of the sacrifice of the bullocke, with the rites thereof.

THis first sacrifice of the bullocke is thus mystically applied: 1. By the fat of the inwards, the liver and kidneyes, Theodoret understandeth the affections: Adeps, qui ventriculum operit, gulæ vitium indicat, &c. The fat which covereth the bellie, signifieth the vice of gluttonie, &c. that which covereth the reines and kidneyes, the pleasure of the flesh; and the liver, unto which the seat of choler is annexed, betokeneth anger: Hæc omnia consecrari jubet; He commandeth these things to be consecrated. To the same purpose purpose also Basil, Quibus omnibus id nobiscum agitur, ut adversus voluptatem totam, quasi contra multorum capitum hydram, &c. By all these we are moved, that we should fight against all pleasure, as a serpent of many heads, &c. 2. So Borrhaius thereby understandeth the mortifying of the old man: and by the burning of the flesh, skin and dung without the gate, as a thing ignominious, the suffering of Christ, which tooke upon him our reproch without the gates of Jerusalem, as the Apostle applieth it, Hebr. 13.12. So also Gallas. Marbach. 3. By the foure corners of the Altar, which were touched with bloud, Lippoman interpreteth the shedding of Christs bloud, who is our Altar and sacrifice, by the which we are redeemed: Terra quoque nostris sceleribus polluta, &c. hausto Christi sanguine reconciliatur, &c. The earth also, being polluted with our sinnes, having as it were drunke in Christs bloud, is reconciled: which otherwise would crie out for vengeance against us. 4. Marbach. by the laying the bloud upon the foure corners of the Altar, would have signified the preaching of the shedding of Christs bloud, and the dispersing thereof to the foure corners of the world. And by the inwards, liver, and reines, which are the seats of pleasure, the willingnesse of Christ, and delight in fulfilling the will of his Father. So also Osiander. But this is the most proper signification thereof: by the fat is understood the grosnesse of our nature, in all the faculties and powers of the soule: which are three, τὸ νοοῦν, the understanding in the heart; τὸ θυμικὸν, the angrie motion in the liver, τὸ ἐπιθυμητικὸν, the concupiscence or desiring facultie in the reines: all which by nature are corrupted: and therefore they must be offered unto God, to be purged by the fire of his Spirit. So Iunius, Pelargus, Simlerus. Basil. de vera Virgin.

QUEST. XVII. Why the sacrifice for sinne was offered first.

Vers. 15. Thou shalt also take one ram. Now followeth the second kinde of sacrifice, which was the burnt offering: 1. The bullocke, the sacrifice for sinne, was first to be offered, that thereby the other sacrifices might be accepted: for as it is in the Gospell, Ioh. 9. 31. God heareth not sinners: neither doth he accept the sacrifice of sinners. And hereof it was, that in the solemne day of reconciliation, the high Priest first prayed for his owne sinnes, and made reconciliation for himselfe and his house, Levit. 16. 11. and then for the people. So in this place the burnt offering and peace offering would not have beene accepted, unlesse first the Lord were appeased toward them for their sinnes: it was requisite therefore, that the sacrifice for sinne should be the first, whereby the rest might be sanctified. 2. But it will be objected, that by the same reason neither can the sacrifice for sinne be accepted, because he that offereth it, hath not yet obtained remission of his sinnes. The answer whereunto is this: That it must be considered, whether he that sacrificeth for sinne doth it for his owne sinnes, or anothers: for others, his sacrifice cannot be accepted, as long as he is in sin, but for his owne sins such sacrifice is available. As concerning prayer likewise, which is the spirituall sacrifice of Christians: a man yet in his sins shall not be heard, praying for another: but for his owne sins he shall be heard: otherwise it would follow, that he which hath committed any sin, should never have remission and forgivenesse of them, if his prayers should not be received. 3. Beside, as it is in the Sacraments of the new Testament: Quædam requirunt dispositionem in suscipiente, quædam non; Some required a disposition and preparation in the receiver, some not: as in the Eucharist, unlesse one examine himselfe before, and so be prepared to receive that holy Sacrament, he is an unworthy receiver, and eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1 Cor. 11.29. But in the other Sacrament of Baptisme no such disposition in the receiver is required: for infants that cannot examine themselves, neither have faith, are thereunto admitted. So the like difference there was in the sacrifices of the Law: some served to prepare and dispose the offerer to performe other duties, as the sacrifices for sin: some required a preparation, and disposition going before, as the burnt offerings, and peace offerings, Tostat. qu. 9.

QUEST. XVIII. How the bloud of the burnt offering was bestowed upon the Altar.

Vers. 16. Thou shalt take his bloud, and sprinkle it round about upon the Altar. 1. This must be understood to be all the bloud, which was to be bestowed round about upon the Altar: for it was not lawfull to carrie any part of the bloud to any other prophane place: and it was the law of burnt offerings, that all the bloud should be offered unto God, Levit. 1. 5. 2. Concerning the manner of sprinkling or powring this bloud round about upon the Altar, neither is the opinion of R. Salomon and Lyranus to be received, that thinke, this was not done in parte superiore, sed magis circa basin, in the upper part of the Altar, but rather toward the bottome: for it was sprinkled upon the Altar, therefore not under; and it was offered unto God: but all offerings were offered upon the Altar. And againe, Levit. 1. 15. it is said the bloud should be strained, shed or pressed forth on the sides of the Altar: it seemeth then that it was sprinkled above, and so ran downe by the sides of the Altar. Neither yet doth Tostatus ghesse aright, that the bloud being powred aloft did run downe per partem exteriorem, by the outward part or side of the Altar: for it could not be conveniently so powred without, as to run downe by the sides: therefore the bloud was rather powred on the inside of the Altar: because it was part of the burnt offering, and therefore was to be consecrate unto God by fire, as it is said, vers. 18. It is an offering made by fire unto the Lord. And by this meanes the fire licked up the grosse substance of the bloud, and so dried up the vapours thereof, which otherwise would have beene very noisome, Simler.

QUEST. XIX. Why the hornes of the Altar are not here touched with bloud.

Vers. 16. And thou shalt sprinkle it round about upon the Altar. 1. Some things are common to the burnt offering, and the sacrifice for sin; as that Aaron and his sons did stay their hands upon the head thereof, that it was killed before the Lord, and that the bloud thereof was laid upon the Altar: but these things were peculiar unto it; the dividing of the parts, not to burne them by peece-meale one after another, but to couch them better together, and to lay one part upon another: then the inwards and legs were washed, and all was burnt upon the Altar, Simler. 2. But here the bloud is not appointed to be laid upon the hornes of the Altar, as in the sinne offering: not because, as some thinke, in the sinne offering expiation was made for sinne, and therefore the hornes of the Altar were touched with blood: for in other sacrifices also there was expiation of sinne: as *Levit.*1.4. it is said of the burnt offering, It is his atonement; and the peace offering also was for a sweet savour, *Levit.*33. And generally in every sacrifice, the bloud which was offered upon the Altar, was for atonement, Levit. 17. 11. now the Altar was sprinkled with bloud both in the burnt offerings, *Levit.*1.5. and in the peace offerings, 3.2. therefore in them also there was atonement made. But because the sinne offering was specially and principally intended to be a sacrifice for sinne, whereas the other directly were referred to the praise of God: therefore after a more speciall manner the hornes of the Altar are touched with bloud in the sacrifice for sinne, and not in the other, *Tostat.quæst.*8.

be

QUEST. XX. Why the dung in the sinne offerings, being an uncleane thing, was prescribed to be burned.

Vers.17. And wash the inwards, and the legs, &c. This rite and usage was not observed before in the sinne offering, for there the skin and dung was burnt without the host. But here this doubt will be moved, seeing that no uncleane thing must be offered unto God, how the dung could be burnt with fire. For answer whereunto: 1. It must be considered, that this was no part of the sacrifice properly: for the sacrifices which were offered unto God, were burnt upon the Altar: but these things were burnt without the host: so likewise the red cow which was burnt without the host, with the skin and dung, *Numb.*19. was not properly a sacrifice offered unto God, though it were an holy rite by him ordained to be observed. 2. This ceremonie in burning the skin, and dung of the sin offering without the host, was prescribed to be done to this end, ad monstrandam detestationem peccatorum magnorum, &c. to shew the detestation of great and enormous sinnes: and therefore this rite was onely observed in the sin offerings for the Priest, and the whole congregation, to shew that their sinnes were greatest: in the sin offerings for the trespasses of others, it was not prescribed, *Tostat.quæst.*10.

QUEST. XXI. Why the burnt offering was so called, and how it differed from other sacrifices.

Vers.18. Or it is a burnt offering unto the Lord. 1. The name in Greeke is ὁλοκάυτωμα, so called, because it was whole, or all burnt upon the Altar, saving the skin: in other sacrifices, as for sinne, and in the peace offerings, certaine parts onely were burnt, as the fat and the kidneyes, with some other parts; but here all was consumed, Tostat. qu. 10. 2. But the word in the originall is, עלה, gholah, or as Im. reades, hholah, Oleaster pronounceth it without an asperation, olah, which is derived of ghalah, to ascend: so called because it all ascended into vapour and smoake, Oleaster. 3. So this holocaust or burnt offering is commended for three things: 1. Because it was a burnt offering, it was all consumed upon the Altar: 2. In respect of the effect, it was a sweet savour: all here turned into vapour, and so gave a more fragrant smell than the other sacrifices, which did not send up such a cloud of vapour or smoake, because they were not all consumed, as the burnt offering was: 3. It was an offering made by fire: Dicuntur hoc ad differentiam elixorum, which is so said by way of difference from those things which are boyled in water, Cajetan.

QUEST. XXII. Why the burnt offering is called a sweet savour.

Vers.18. For a sweet savour. 1. The word is riach nichoach, a savour of rest, that is, an acceptable savour wherein the Lord delighteth, and being thereby appeased, resteth and ceaseth from his anger, Oleaster. It is a metaphor taken from sweet odors, wherein he which smelleth a sweet savour resteth and contenteth himselfe: Non parientes aliquid fastidii, &c. such odors as bring no loathsomnesse, Cajetan. 2. Which phrase must be figuratively taken; for properly God, nor no other spirit, is said to smell: for savour and smell is the object of the sense of smelling: Spirits then not being endued with the sensitive facultie, are not properly affected with the object of the sense. And though the Lord should bee affected with smells, yet the savour that commeth from the burning of flesh, of it selfe is not so pleasant and savourly, *Tostat.qu.*10. 3. Therefore it is said to be an acceptable savour unto God, in regard of their obedience and willing minde: as Augustine, Deum delectat, cùm spiritualiter exhibetur, God is delighted, when it is spiritually presented, &c. that is, with faith and true devotion of the heart. So also Theodoret, Sacrificium quod ex lege fiebat, suavem odorem appellavit, The sacrifice which was done according to the law, he calleth a sweet odor. Therefore where the externall act was offered, without the inward devotion and obedience, the Lord was not pleased with such sacrifices, as with Cains and Sauls, *Tostat.qu.*10. 4. But it is called a savour of rest, specially because it was a type and sacrifice of our blessed Saviour, who was indeed *an offering and a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savour unto God, Ephes.*5.2. Ofiander, Gallas. To the same purpose, before them, Procopius. Christ was offered for us all unto his Father, in odorem bonæ fragrantiæ, for a sweet smelling savour.

*Quæst.*127. in Exod.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the mysticall sense of the ramme of burnt offering.

FOr the mysticall sense of this second sacrifice of the first ram, which was a burnt offering: 1. Procopius by cutting the same in peeces, understandeth the divers members of Christ, which make all one bodie: by the washing of the inward parts, sermonis puritatem, the pureneſse of speech. 2. Pelargus, by the division of the parts, would have signified the right dividing of the Word: by the washing of the inwards, the purging of our internall parts: by the burnt offering, the consecration both of our bodies and soules unto God. 3. But these figures are more fitly accommodated and applied to Christ. By the killing of the ram, the division of the parts, and the washing of them, is shadowed forth the passion of Christ: and by the burnt offering the ardent love of Christ, quo totus in cruce conflagravit, wherewith he was all as it were set on fire on the crosse, Marbach. 4. And as the burnt offering ascended up in the fire, so so Christ is ascended into heaven, having obtained eternall redemption for us: and afterward sent the fire of his Spirit upon his Apostles, Simlerus, Borrhaius.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the third ram, why it is called the ram of consecration.

Vers.20. AND take of the bloud, and put upon the lap of Aarons eare, &c. 1. Now followeth the third kinde of sacrifice, which was of the kinde of Eucharisticall, or peace offerings: and in the consecration of Aaron, and his sonnes divers sacrifices are used, because this calling, ceteras omnes dignitates superet, &c. did excell all other in dignity, Gallas. 2. The peace offerings were of two sorts, either to obtaine some blessing, as to intreat for peace and prosperity, or to give thankes for some blessing received: in both these respects; it was requisite, that Aaron should offer peace offerings in his consecration, both to beg of God, that he might prosper in the execution of his office, as also to shew his thankfulnesse to God, who had advanced him to such an high calling, Tostat. qu. 10. 3. Yet this offering was nor properly of the kind of peace offerings, which are called שלמים, shelamim pacifica, peace offerings: but this was the ram, מלואים, milluim, of filliug or perfection, vers. 22. quia illic Sacerdotum consecratio perficeretur, because thereby the consecration of the Priests was perfected, Gallas.

QUEST. XXV. Why the bloud was put upon the right eare, thumbe, and toe of Aaron.

Vers.20. PVT upon the lap of Aarons eare. 1. Not, in superiore parte auris, in the upper part of Aarons eare, as the Chalde, but the nether lap, Inn. Or soft part of the eare, Genevens. 2. The eare, hand and foot, are anointed with the bloud, to signifie the purging and sanctifying of all their parts, to make them fit for the Priesthood: as Isaias tongue was touched with a coale from the Altar, and so purified, Isai. 6. Tostat. qu. 10. 3. Though the right eare, right hand and foot are only named, because dextera pars sunt insigniores, the right parts are more excellent: yet thereby the consecration of the whole man is signified, Simler. 4. The tongue of the Priest is not here mentioned, but the eare, which is the sence of doctrine, by the which the understanding is informed, and without the which the tongue cannot speake: for as the Wise-man saith, He that heareth, speaketh continually, Prov. 21.28. And beside, the eare is expressed to shadow forth the obedience of Christ, in hearing and obeying his Fathers will, Simler. Calvin also giveth another reason, Hic non attingi docendi munus, sed intercedendi; That Christs office of teaching is not here touched, but of mediating.

QUEST. XXVI. How the bloud was sprinkled upon the Altar round about.

Vers.20. AND shall sprinkle the bloud vpon the Altar round about. 1. The Latine Translater here readeth, Thou shalt powre the bloud vpon the Altar: but the word is zarak, to sprinkle. First, the Altar was sprinkled, and then the rest was powred at the foot of the Altar, vers. 12. for if it had beene all powred there now, whence should Moses haue had the bloud, which in the next verse is said to be upon the Altar, that is, in some vessell there standing, wherewith he besprinkled Aaron, and the rest, and their garments? 2. Neither is R. Salomon his conjecture probable, that the bloud was laid only upon two corners of the Altar, not on the same side, but one contrarie to the other; for this is against the Text, which saith, that he sprinkled upon the Altar round about: then not in two corners onely. And beside, if the bloud had beene put onely in two corners of the Altar, it should haue beene laid, not powred or sprinkled; but the bloud was not put upon the hornes of the Altar, in any peace offering, as was used to bee done in sinne offerings, Tostat. quæst. 11. 3. And whereas the Altar is sprinkled round about, wee must not understand this to bee done at the bottome round about upon the pavement, but above, so that the bloud might run downe to the bottome.

QUEST. XXVII. How the bloud and oyle was sprinkled upon their garments, without spotting.

Vers.21. AND he shall take of the bloud, &c. and of the anoynting oyle, &c. 1. Some may thinke that this sprinkling of the bloud, and oyle, was done severally one after another. But because there is mention made but of one sprinkling, it is more like they were tempered and mingled together, and so sprinkled, Lyran. 2. R. Salomon thinketh, that the oile was sprinkled in remembrance of Iacobs anointing the stone in Bethel with oile: and the bloud, in remembrance of the striking of the bloud of the paschall lambe, upon the doore-posts in Egypt. But there was small affinity betweene those ceremonies, and the consecration of the Priests. Therefore this rather was the reason of it, because almost all things in the Law were purified with bloud, that the Priests garments might by this meanes be purified, and sanctified first of all, which they were to use in the sanctifying of others. 3. And because the sprinkling of bloud and oile, might seeme to be a blemish to the priestly garments: some thinke that they were washed afterward. But it is not like, that that was washed off, wherewith the garments were consecrated. Some doe bring in here a miracle, in that the garments were kept from spots and blemishes, notwithstanding the sprinkling of bloud and oile upon them. But we are not to admit of unnecessary miracles. These spots if there were very small, and so made no notable markes in the garment: and if they did, it was magis ad honorem, quam horrorem, &c. more for honour, than horror: seeing thereby the priestly vestures were consecrated, Tostat. qu. 11.

QUEST. XXVIII. The mysticall signification of the ram of consecration, with the rites thereof.

THe mysticall signification of this ceremony is this: 1. The ram of perfection or consecration, signifieth Christ: Christus omnes in virtutibus perfectos constituit; Christ maketh us perfect in all vertue: hee it is that sanctifieth our eares, hands and feet, and all our parts and members, as here the lap of the eare, the right thumbe, and great toe, are touched with bloud, Procopius. 2. Hereby also is signified the obedience of Christ, by dipping the eare in bloud, who was obedient to his Father, Simler. And hereby also, the high Priest was put in mind of his duty, by the dipping of the eare is signified, that the Priest, primum oracula Divina auscultare, &c. should first give eare to the Divine oracles, and then teach them unto others, Simler. By the dipping of the thumbe and toe in bloud, omnes actiones vitæ, &c. all the actions of the life are expressed, Calvin. By the feet also in Scripture, are signified the affections: this dipping then of the hands and feet, doth signifie, Omnem actionum externarum & internarum sanctificationem, the sanctifying of all, both externall and internall actions, Simler. 4. And by this sprinkling of the bloud, is signified the sprinkling of Christs bloud by faith, upon the hearts of the faithfull, hæc enim aspergillum illud est, &c. for this is that sprinkle, wherewith our hearts are sprinkled, Marbach. 5. And further, whereas Aaron with the rest of the Priests are thus sprinkled with bloud, it is likewise, summos Sacerdotes non fuisse ita perfectos, &c. that the high Priests of the Law were not so perfect, that they needed not to be purged, Osiand. But they had need of another high Priest, by whose bloud they should be sanctified.

QUEST. XXIX. How these things were put into the Priests hands, and shaken to and fro.

Vers. 24. THou shalt put all this in the hands of Aaron, and shake them to and fro, &c. 1. The Latine Interpreter here readeth amisse: thou shalt sanctifie them: which Tostatus would helpe out thus: because divers ceremonies were used in the consecration of the Priests, quælibet earum sanctificatio vocabatur, every one of them was called a kinde of sanctifying. But the word nuph, signifieth to shake, or move to and fro. 2. Some doe translate it, thou shalt lift up. So Pagnin. Oleaster, who referreth it to the ascending and rising up of the vapour or smoake. But this shaking to and fro was done before they were burned upon the Altar, which followeth in the next verse: and there is another word afterward used, to shew the lifting up, for the shaking to and fro is called tenupha, and the lifting up terumah, of rum to lift up. 3. R. Salomon saith the manner of putting these things into the Priests hands, and shaking them to and fro, was this: Moses did put them into their hands, and then with his hands underneath theirs, did shake them to and fro, toward the East and West, and then toward the North and South. 4. And by this ceremony of putting those things into the Priests hands: Moses delivered them, jus talia possidendi, right to enjoy such things: they should be afterwards for the Priests use, Lippom.

QUEST. XXX. Whether Moses were indeed a Priest.

Vers. 26. AND it shall be thy part. 1. The Latine Interpreter readeth here corruptly, erit in partem suam, it shall be for his part, that is, Aarons: for what Aarons part should be, is afterward shewed, vers. 28. the word is, lecha to thee: as the Septuagint translate, ἔσῃ σοὶ εἰς μερίδα: it shall be for thy part, that is, Moses should have the Priests part at this time. 2. Lippoman hence would inferre, that Moses was the high Priest: both because he did consecrate the high Priest, and he had the breast for his part, which only belonged to the high Priest. 3. I rather thinke with Osiander, that Moses did at this time, quodam modo fungi officio Sacerdotis, &c. after a sort execute the Priests office. So also Simler. Gallas. Hee was in the Priests stead in the consecration of Aaron. But if Moses had beene actually a Priest, he could not afterward have resigned that office and calling: neither can this be inferred upon that place, Psalm. 99. 6. Moses and Aaron among his Priests, that Moses was a Priest: but it sheweth that Moses and Aaron were most excellent among the Priests, as Samuel among those that called upon his name, Vatabl. Or Moses was counted among the Priests, because he did extraordinarily execute the Priests office, as in the consecration of Aaron. 4. Tostatus calleth Moses, simplicem Levitam, a simple or plaine Levite, quæst. 14, He was indeed of the tribe of Levi, and in that sense Aaron also might be called a Levite: but Moses was more than a Levite, because hee both sacrificed, and consecrated the Priests, which the Levites could not doe.

QUEST. XXXI. Whether Aaron had the breast and shoulder of the ram of consecration.

Ver. 27. THou shalt sanctifie the breast of the shake offering, and the shoulder of the heave offering. 1. Whereas the right shoulder was shaken to and fro before and burnt upon the Altar, this could not be the shoulder of the heave offering here spoken of: for it was burnt already upon the Altar. 2. Some thinke therefore that it was the left shoulder, which is here called the heave offering, and that Moses had that and the breast for his part at this time, because he was now in the Priests stead, Osiand. Marbach. But this is not understood of Moses, that he should have them; they are for Aaron and his sonnes, vers. 28. Moses part is set downe before, what it should be, vers. 26. namely the breast. And it was the right shoulder, not the left, which was given to the Priest, Levit. 7. 32. The left shoulder, and the rest of the peace offering, beside that which was due unto the Priest, belonged unto the offerer. 3. Therefore this Law here set downe is not concerning the ram of consecration, out of the which Aaron had not now the Priests part, because he and the other Priest were at that time but as the offerers and presenters: but for the time to come an order is set, what part they should have out of the peace offerings of the children of Israel, namely, the breast, and the right shoulder, Tostat. quæst. 13. Iun. Gallas.

QUEST. XXXII. What difference there was betweene the shake-offering and heave-offering.

Vers. 27. THe shoulder of the heave-offering, &c. 1. Some thinke, that the breast was only shaken to and fro, and therefore was called tenupha, the shake-offering, and the shoulder was onely lifted up, so called also terumah, Vatabl. Which Osiander calleth, the one Movenda, the sacrifice to bee moved or shaken, the other Levanda, to be lifted up: and Iunius seemeth to be of the same opinion, who readeth distinctly, which was shaken to and fro, that is, the breast, and which was lifted up, that is, the shoulder. But the words following will not beare this sense: which was heaved up of the ram of consecration. Now no mention is made before of the heaving up of the shoulder, but of the shaking of it to and fro with the other things which were put into Aarons hands, vers. 24. so that the right shoulder of the consecration ram, was not onely lifted up, but it was also shaken to and fro. 2. The generall opinion therefore is, that as well the breast as the shoulder, were first heaved up and downe, and then shaken to and fro

So R. Salomon, Lyranus, Simlerus, Gallasius, Tostatus, with others. But if they were both indifferently shaken to and fro, and lifted up alike: why are these speciall names given unto them, *Levit.*7.34. The breast shaken to and fro, and the shoulder lifted up? 3. Therefore I neither thinke, that the breast was shaken onely, nor the shoulder lifted up onely, because the shoulder was shaken to and fro, *vers.*24. and the breast together with the shoulder are indifferently, *vers.*28. called an heave-offering: neither yet is it like, that there was no difference of motion in the shaking of them; and the heaving them up: seeing they have speciall names given them of their divers motions. But it is most probable, that the breast was more shaken to and fro, than lifted up, and therefore is called tenuphah, of the more principall motion: and the shoulder, though it were moved to and fro, yet was chiefly heaved up, and thereof is called terumah, an heave-offering.

QUEST. XXXIII. What is here understood by the heave-offering.

Vers.28. FOr it is an heave-offering of the children of Israel. 1. Some by Terumah, which is a speciall name signifying an heave-offering, doe understand in generall an oblation, Vatablus. But the same word being in the next verse before used in a speciall signification for an heave-offering, must bee also so taken here. 2. Some doe take it in that speciall sense, but then they restraine it only to the shoulder before spoken of, which is called the shoulder of the heave-offering, Osiander. But it is evident, in that a perpetuall Law is made for Aaron and his sonnes, what part they should have of the peace-offerings, and they had as well the shaken breast, as the shoulder, that was lifted up, *Levit.*27.34. that this clause must be understood of both those parts before spoken of, the breast, and the shoulder. 3. Some by the heaving here understand only the dividing and separating of these parts, which was to be made by the children of Israel, So Oleaster: and in the same sense the Latine Interpreter translateth, primitiva sua, they are the first things, that is, the principall or best of the offerings of the children of Israel. But the word terumah being before used in that speciall signification for an heave-offering, should bee also so taken here. 4. Therefore this terme terumah, heave-offering, is given both to the shaken breast, and heaved shoulder, of the more principall motion: for these gifts were first of all by the Priest lifted up, and presented before God in the hands of the Priest, and in that respect were called an heave-offering, Borrh.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the mysticall application of the shaking to and fro, and of the breast and shoulder of the ram given unto the Priests.

FOr the mysticall application of these rites and ceremonies: 1. In that part of the sacrifice was shaken to and fro on every side, it signified Deum totius terra esse Dominum, that God is Lord of the whole earth, Oleaster: and beside it betokened, that Christi vera victima merita & beneficia, &c. that the merits and benefits of Christ, the true sacrifice, should by the preaching of the Gospell be spread abroad into all the world, Borrh. But the Hebrewes exposition is fond, who would have hereby signified, that all men from all parts of the world should come to Jerusalem, ibi optimâ aurâ fruituros, there to have their health, and to enjoy an wholesome aire, Ex Oleastro. For wee see that not by comming to Jerusalem, but in departing from the earthly Jerusalem, with the carnall rites thereof, by preaching of the Gospell the Gentiles have received health and salvation of their soules, which is more precious than the health of the body.

2. In that part of the sacrifice was given unto the offerers to eat; it sheweth that Christ did not only deliver himselfe unto death for us, sed etiam in cibum dare, &c. but also giveth himselfe to be our meat, nourishing us unto eternall life: as he saith, *Ioh.*6.54. My flesh is meat indeed, my blood is drinke indeed, &c. Marbach.

3. And in that the breast and shoulder are given unto the Priest, it teacheth, as Gregorie well saith: Ut quod de sacrificio præcipitur sumere, hoc de seipso discat author immolare; That what he is commanded to take of the sacrifice, he should learne himselfe to offer unto God; quod toto pectore & opere, &c. that with all their heart and endevour, they should watch upon their office, Iun. Ut sint tanquam pectus, & humeri populi, &c. To be as the breast of the people to provide and take care for their soules, and to bee as their shoulders, to beare the burthen of their vocation, Simler. Lib.1. Moral. cap.40.

QUEST. XXXV. Of the consecrating of Aarons successour in his garments.

Vers.29. AND the holy garments, &c. 1. The Latine Interpreter readeth in the singular, the holy garment: but it is in the plurall, bigdee, garments: for there was not one garment, but many, even in all, which were consecrated for the high Priest. 2. The Priests which succeeded Aaron, were not to use any other garments, but those which Aaron was consecrated in: as Eleazar put on Aarons priestly vesture, when he was consecrated Priest in his fathers place, *Numb.*20. Lyran. 3. And it is added, shall be his sonnes after him: whereby the use of these garments is not made generall to all the Priests, but onely unto them which should succeed in the priesthood, Cajetane. 4. And this difference may be observed betweene the consecration of Aaron, and his successour: that Aaron in his consecration, was both consecrated himselfe, and his garments with him: but his successour only was to be consecrated in those garments, which needed not to be consecrated againe: unlesse, the old garments being old, new were to be made in their place, and then they were to be consecrated, as Aarons priestly garments were at the first, *Tostat. quæst.*13. 5. These garments the high Priest at the time of his consecration was to weare seven dayes together: he was not afterward tied necessarily to weare them so long together, but as his ministery and service required, *Tostat. qu.*14.

QUEST. XXXVI. By whom the high Priests succeeding Aaron were consecrated.

Vers. 29. TO be consecrate therein. 1. There were two high Priests consecrated extraordinarily: first Aaron, who received his consecration from Moses, who was no Priest, but only for the time executed that office in Aarons consecration: secondly, Eleazar was consecrated high Priest, his father being yet living: which was not afterward seene in any other succeeding high Priest: for there could not be two high Priests together. But Eleazar was consecrated, his father yet living, because the time of his death was certainly knowne: as the Lord had shewed to Moses: and immediatly after Eleazars consecration he died, Numb. 20: but this could not be knowne in any other high Priest. 2. The rest of the high Priests, which followed after Moses death, were consecrated by the inferiour Priests. Tostatus giveth an instance, how the Pope at this day is consecrated by the Bishop of Hostia. But the Gospell acknowledgeth no such high Priesthood, and the Pope doth usurpe that place over other Churches: therfore it is nothing to us how an usurper entreth. A better instance may be given, Act. 13.3. where certaine that were but Prophets and Doctors of the Church, do yet lay their hands upon the Apostles, Saul and Bernabas, and so they did consecrate them to the worke whereunto they were called. Therefore by the like example the inferiour Priests might consecrate the high Priest in the old Testament, there being no other high Priest to do it.

QUEST. XXXVII. Whether Eleazar was consecrated after the manner here prescribed.

Vers. 30. THat sonne that shall be Priest in his stead, &c. Which is not understood onely of the next sonne of Aaron, which should succeed him, which was Eleazar, but of all the rest of his posteritie, which should succeed Aaron in the priesthood: and this order of consecration was rather fulfilled in them, after they came into the land of Canaan, and had a setled State there, than in Eleazar, in whose initiation and entrance into the Priests office, many of these rites and ceremonies were omitted, in respect of the necessitie of the time and place: for hee is only said to have put on Aarons priestly cloathes: there is no mention made of his washing, anointing, sprinkling.

1. Some thinke, that those things were done also, though they are not there expressed: as in Scripture many things belonging to the historie and narration are omitted. But the ceremonies here prescribed to be done in Aarons consecration, are not only omitted there in the narration, but they could not be performed in act: for the high Priest was ordinarilie to be brought to the doore of the Tabernacle, and there to be first washed, and then to put on the priestly garments; but Eleazar was in mount Hor, when hee put on Aarons cloathes; where the Tabernacle was not: for this was done in the sight of all the people, who could not see what was done in the Tabernacle. And if Aaron had died in the Tabernacle, it should have been thereby polluted; for the tent wherein any died was uncleane, Numb. 19.15. Againe, the high Priest, who was anointed in his head and hands, was not to come neere any dead bodie, Levit. 21. 10, 11. Eleazar then could not be anointed here in the presence of Aaron, who died there before his face.

2. Some other thinke therefore that Eleazar onely put on Aarons cloathes there; the other ceremonies were performed afterward, when they were come downe from the mount: but Eleazar, for the comfort of his father, was there bid to put on his cloathes, that hee might see his sonne consecrated in his stead before he died. But this is not like: for the ceremonies could not be kept according to the law of the consecration: seeing the high Priest was first to he washed at the doore of the Tabernacle, before hee put on the holie garments: he was not by the usuall order to put on the Priests apparell first, and then to bee washed. Againe, seeing Aaron by stripping off his cloathes, was together with them deprived of his Priesthood; Eleazar together with the cloathes received the full right and authoritie of the Priesthood: as Vatablus well expoundeth those words of the Lord to Moses, Numb. 20. 26. Cause Aaron to put off his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his sonne: that is, constitues pontificem Eleazarum, thou shalt appoint Eleazar Priest for his father.

3. Some further may alleage, that seeing Eleazar was consecrated to bee a Priest before, there needed now no new consecration, but onely the putting on of the priestly garments. But this answer doth not fully satisfie, though Eleazar were now consecrated with his father, and in that respect needed not in all respects to bee consecrated, as they which had received no such consecration: for there were certaine peculiar things used in the consecration of the high Priest, whose head and hands were anointed with the holie oyle, Levit. 21.10. and so were not the inferiour Priests.

4. Therefore Tostatus opinion upon the former reasons is most probable, that Eleazar was made high Priest, speciali modo, after a speciall manner, qu. 15.

QUEST. XXXVIII. What services the high Priest was bound to do in the Sanctuarie.

Vers. 30. TO minister in the Sanctuarie, or, holy place. 1. The holie place or Sanctuarie is taken diverswaies: 1. For the whole Tabernacle, together with the outward court: in which sense it is said, that Aaron and his sonnes should beare the iniquitie of the Sanctuarie, Numb. 8. 1. 2. For the Tabernacle it selfe, without the outwart court: as Exod. 28.35. His sound shall be heard when he goeth into the holy place, that is, when he went into the Tabernacle. 3. It is sometime taken for the outward court chap. 28.43. when they come to the Altar to minister in the holie place: here it is taken for the Tabernacle. 2. Aaron had foure services to doe in the Tabernacle: 1. To set the bread in order upon the table Levit. 24. 6. 2. To dresse the lampes morning and evening, Levit. 24.3. 3. To burne incense upon the golden Altar, chap. 30.7. 4. To goe into the most holie place once in the yeere to make reconciliation Levit. 16. But the three first services were common unto the inferiour Priests: the last was peculiar to the high Priest, Tostat. qu. 16. 5. Augustine is here deceived, with whom Borrhaius accordeth that the most holy place is here meant, into the which the high Priest entred only once in the yeere: for the high Priest did not then put on his glorious apparell, as he did here at his consecration when he went into the most holie place, but the common linen garments, Levit. 16. 4.

Quest. 129.

QUEST. XXXIX. Of other rites belonging to the ramme of consecration.

Vers. 31. And seeth his flesh in the holy place. Now follow other rites and ceremonies belonging to the ramme of consecration: 1. The flesh thereof, that is, the third part remaining, beside that which was offered upon the Altar, and that which was due for this time unto Moses, Osiand. was to be boyled, not upon the Altar, nor yet in any prophane place, but in the outward court, here called the holy place. 2. They must eat them at the doore of the Tabernacle: after they had boyled them in some place of the court further off, then they shall come neerer to the Tabernacle, and there eat them, Tostat. qu. 16. 3. A stranger shall not eat thereof, not only they which were strangers from Israel, but even the Israelites themselves not of the tribe of Levi, yea the Levites not of the familie of Aaron, could not eat hereof, Tostat. Borrhaus, Osiander: though Simlerus thinketh otherwise, understanding by strangers such as were polluted and uncleane, because the lay people might eat of their peace offerings. But though the people might eat of their ordinarie peace offerings, yet here because the Priests were the offerers, they only must eat thereof: yea here is no exception of their wives, or children. Lippom. 4. The flesh and bread must be eaten the same day, if any remained till the morning, it should be burnt with fire: this is required, lest by reserving any part thereof, either they might grow into contempt of the holy things, making no difference between them, and their ordinarie food, which they might reserve at their pleasure; or lest that which remained might be abused to superstition, Simler. And whereas in ordinarie peace offerings they might eat of it the next day, but not upon the third day, Levit. 7. 18. but no part of this must be eaten the second day: this was to shew that this ramme of consecration was a more holy thing, than their ordinarie peace offerings, Tostat. quæst. 16.

QUEST. XL. Whether all these rites were of the necessitie of the consecration.

Vers. 35. Thou shalt do thus unto Aaron, and to his sonnes, &c. 1. Some are of opinion, that all things here prescribed to bee observed and done, were de necessitate consecrationis, of the necessitie of the consecration, and if any thing were omitted, the consecration was voide, R. Salomon, Lyranus. But this is not like, that if any thing were neglected in the manner of eating, in respect of the place, persons, or time, that their consecration should thereby have been void: as Levit 10. 17. Aaron being in griefe for the sudden death of Nadab and Abihu, forgot the sinne offering, which they should have eaten, and suffered it to be all burnt: and this was the eighth day after their consecration, Levit. 9. 2. when as yet the anointing was fresh upon them, and they did not yet come forth of the doores of the Tabernacle, Levit. 10. 7. And yet, notwithstanding this negligence, there was no nullitie of Aarons consecration, Tostat. quæst. 18.

2. Therefore Tostatus opinion is rather to be received, that some things were of necessitie in the consecration, as the washing, anointing of the Priests, the putting on of the priestly apparell, the sprinkling of themselves, and their garments: some things were only de solennitate, belonging to the solemnitie of the consecration: as the seething, and eating of it in the holy place, and eating it the same day: it was a sin to omit any of these: but thereby their consecration was not made voide.

QUEST. XLI. Why the consecration of the Priests continued seven daies.

Vers. 35. Seven daies shalt thou consecrate them, &c. 1. This consecration of the Priests was to continue seven daies together, that both the Priests hereby might bee confirmed in their vocation, and be assured thereof, that they were thereunto appointed of God: and that the people also might thereby take better notice, that they were set apart by the Lord for that holy function, Osiander. 2. And further hereby thus much was signified, that as the Priests seven daies together were consecrated, so we, per totum vitæ curriculum, throughout the whole course of our life, should be consecrated, and addicted to Gods service, Simler. Marbach. 3. Likewise we are hereby admonished, Pontificem continuo proficere, non posse repente summum fieri, &c. that the Priest must daily increase, and go forward, that he cannot be made perfect at once, that many gifts and graces are required in him, Lippoman. 4. It also sheweth, that as their consecration was not perfect before the seventh day, so we cannot attaine to perfection in this life, Osiander.

QUEST. XLII. Whether all the sacrifices of the first day, were iterated seven daies together, or the sacrifice for sin only.

Vers. 36. And shalt offer everie day a calfe. 1. Lyranus thinketh, that not onely a calfe for a sinne offering was sacrificed everie day, but two rammes also; so that seven calves were offered, and fourteene rammes in these seven daies: So also Simler. Borrh. Lippom. Pellican. But seeing there is no mention made but only of the sinne offering, we have no warrant to imagine any other sacrifice to have been iterated but that, as belonging to their consecration. 2. Iosephus thinketh yet more, that all things were iterated every day, which were done upon the first day, as the anointing of them, and the sprinkling of the Priests themselves, and their garments. But this is not like, that their consecration was iterated: it was sufficient for them once to be consecrated: and seeing the ramme of consecration was killed onely upon the first day, with the bloud whereof they were sprinkled; they were so sprinkled but upon the first day. 3. Tostatus his opinion is, that the calfe which was the sacrifice for sinne, and the consecration rammes were offered everie day: expresse mention is made of the one, and the other is implied in these words, seven daies shalt thou fill their hands, that is, put into their hands part of the peace offering, to be waved to & fro before the Lord, as is prescribed, vers. 24. Now the ramme of burnt offering needed not to be daily offered during theſe ſeven dayes, becauſe there were every day morning and evening a lambe offered for a burnt ſacrifice, Sic Toſtat. But this opinion cannot ſtand: 1. Seeing Moſes is bid to take two rams, chap. 24. 2. it is like, that either both of them were renued every day, or none: 2. And the filling of their hands ſignifieth nothing elſe but the conſecrating of their Miniſtery, (as is before ſhewed) whereof the hand was the organe and inſtrument: it is not literally to be preſſed, to ſignifie the putting of the things offered into their hands. 4. Therefore according to the words of the text, of all the ſacrifices appointed for the firſt day, onely the calfe which is the ſinne offering, is preſcribed to be iterated: and the reaſon is, becauſe it was to cleanſe and purifie the Altar, Levit. 8. 15. But only in this ſacrifice were the hornes of the Altar touched with bloud, and ſo ſanctified, which was not done in any of the other ſacrifices.

QUEST. XLIII. To what end the ſinne offering was offered every day of the ſeven.

Verſ. 36. Thou ſhalt offer every day a calfe, &c. for reconciliation, or to make atonement. 1. This reconciliation was not only made for the ſinne of the Prieſts, as thinketh Toſtatus: for the hornes of the Altar were laid on with this bloud, whereby it was purified, Levit. 8. 15. 2. Neither yet was this ſinne offering preſcribed only, ad expiandum Altare, to cleanſe the Altar, as thinketh Oſiander, Calvin. For he had ſaid before, ſeven dayes ſhalt thou conſecrate them that is, the Prieſts: and then it followeth, and ſhalt offer every day, &c. ſo that this daily offering for the ſpace of ſeven dayes, belonged unto the conſecration of the Prieſts. 3. Therefore the end of this ſacrifice for ſinne, was both to make atonement for Aaron and his ſonnes, as alſo to purifie and cleanſe the Altar, Iunius.

QUEST. XLIV. How the Altar was cleanſed, and why.

Verſ. 36. And thou ſhalt cleanſe the Altar. 1. After the conſecration of the Prieſts, is ſet forth their Miniſtery and ſervice, both at the Altar of burnt offering, and in the golden altar, in the next Chapter. Here three things are declared, concerning the Altar of burnt offering: 1. How it ſhould bee purified: 2. What ſhould bee offered thereon: 3. The profit and benefit that ſhould come thereby: the Lord would there come unto them, and ſpeake with them, verſ. 42. and dwell among them, verſ. 45. Lyranus.

2. Two things are required to the purifying of the Altar: it muſt firſt be cleanſed, not that it was polluted of it ſelfe; but to ſhew, that in reſpect of man, omnia corruptione naturæ profana ob peccatum, &c. that all things by the corruption of our nature are profane, becauſe of ſinne, Gallaſ. Marbach. As alſo it was not only cleanſed, but ſanctified, and ſet apart for holy uſes: that it ſhould not be lawfull to offer their ſacrifices elſewhere, but upon that Altar, Oſiander.

3. To the cleanſing of the Altar, two things only were required: the bloud of the ſacrifice was laid upon the hornes of the Altar, and it was anointed with oile, Borrh. Toſtatus beſide ſaith, that the bloud which was powred upon the Altar was rubbed and ſcraped off, and it was cleanſed from the aſhes. But neither of theſe were now needfull to be done: for the Altar yet neither had much bloud powred into it, nor was full of aſhes, this being the firſt time of hallowing and conſecrating it. And though the Latine text ſo reade, Numb. 4. 13. mundabis illud cinere, thou ſhalt cleanſe it from the aſhes, the word is diſhun, they ſhall take the aſhes from it, when they were to remove the Altar: but the aſhes did not defile the Altar.

QUEST. XLV. How the Altar ſanctified whatſoever touched it.

Verſ. 37. So the Altar ſhall be moſt holy. 1. This name kodeſh kadaſhim, holy of holies, that is, moſt holy, was peculiar unto that place of the Tabernacle where the Arke was: but here it is uſed in another ſenſe, Lyran. And thereby is ſignified, that it ſhould be moſt holy in reſpect of the uſe, becauſe it ſhould ſanctifie whatſoever touched it, as it followeth in the next words, Oleaſter.

2. Whatſoever toucheth it ſhall be holy. Which Toſtatus expoundeth thus: that every one which commeth to the Altar, muſt bee ſanctified before, and ſo hee referreth it to the perſons. So alſo Vatab. Oſiander. But the text ſheweth that by touching of the Altar, the thing ſhould thereby be ſanctified, and made holy. Rab. Salomon expoundeth it thus, that if any thing to bee offered upon the Altar, ſhould chance to gather any pollution, it was mundified and cleanſed by the Altar. But the meaning rather is, that ſuch things as were offered upon the Altar, were thereby ſanctified, that is, conſecrated to an holy uſe, and were no more to returne to any prophane uſe: and the things offered therein, were only to be eaten by the Prieſts, Lippoman. And this interpretation is confirmed by the words of our bleſſed Saviour, Matth. 23. 19. Ye fooles and blind, whether is greater, the offering, or the Altar, which ſanctifieth the offering? Iunius, Gallaſ.

QUEST. XLVI. Of the daily ſacrifice, with the rites thereof.

Verſ. 38. Two lambes of a yeere old. 1. Theſe lambes were to be offered daily beſide all their other extraordinary ſacrifices, as burnt-offerings, peace-offerings, and whatſoever elſe, Toſtat. 2. For the age of them, Lyranus thinketh, that if they were under a yeere old, from eight dayes old and upward they might be offered. But that is not like; a lambe of a moneth old cannot be ſaid to be a yeere old: this then is required, that it ſhould be a perfect beaſt, and of ſufficient growth, Simler. 3. There are foure things required for the daily ſacrifice; a lambe, fine flower, oile, and wine: whereby all the fruits of the earth, and the kindes thereof are ſignified, Cajetane. God will have nothing lacking to the daily ſacrifice: as he would have fleſh offered, ſo likewiſe bread and wine, Toſtat. qu. 20. 4. This ſacrifice was to be done continually, to make a difference betweene this and other ſacrifices, which were not to be offered continually, but as they had occaſion, Toſtat. 5. And this daily ſacrifice was of the kinde of burnt offerings, it was to be wholly burnt upon the Altar, together with the wine and oile, which ſhould be powred upon it: as it is called a burnt offering, verſ. 41. 6. But this daily ſacrifice could not be offered continually, while they were in the deſert: it was to be put in practice when they came into the land of Canaan: as is evident by the like Lawes concerning other ſacrifices and offerings, Numb. 15. 2. When ye are come into the land of your habitation, and will make an offering, &c. for many things were neglected in the wilderneſſe by reaſon of their continuall travell, and want of neceſſary things: and therefore the Lord ſaith, when they are come into the land of Canaan, Ye ſhall not doe after all theſe things, which yee doe here this day, Deut. 12. 8. Toſtat. qu. 20. 7. The time of the offering theſe two lambes, was in the morning, and betweene the two evenings: which was not after the Sunne ſet, as Oleaſter; who noteth the word gherab, evening, to be taken either for the twilight after Sunne ſet, or for the night it ſelfe: but the time was rather, inter occaſum ſolis, & ſolem propinquum occaſui, betweene the ſetting of the Sunne, and the declining of the Sunne, Cajetane: which might be from the ninth houre: for from thence began the time of the evening ſacrifice: as Ioſephus. See more hereof, chap. 16. qu. 10. 8. So this continuall and daily ſacrifice is commanded and ſet forth in theſe ſix things: 1. It was a burnt offering, that is, wholly conſumed upon the Altar. 2. It was acceptable, of a ſweet ſavour. 3. It was continuall. 4. In reſpect of the place, it muſt be offered at the doore of the Tabernacle. 5. And for the fruit thereof, there the Lord will appoint to ſpeake with them, Cajetane. 6. And beſide, this ſacrifice had both fine flower, wine, and oile to attend upon it.

powred

Quest. XLVII. How much the Hin contained.

Verſ. 40. A tenth part of fine flower, and the fourth part of an Hin of oile. The tenth part of an Epha is meant, as it is expounded, Numb. 28. 5. which was a Ghomer, chap. 16. 36. containing about three pints, ſo much as 42. egs can receive: of this meaſure ſee before, chap. 16. queſt. 24. Now it is to be ſhewed how much this meaſure of the Hin contained, which was a meaſure of liquid things, as the Ghomer and Epha were of drie: 1. Some thinke that it cannot now be certainly knowne how much the Hebrew meaſures contained, Lyran. Toſtat. Cajetan. and ſo they leave it as uncertaine.

2. Lyranus alleageth out of Papias, that there were two kinde of meaſures called the Hin, the greater, which held foure quarts of Paris meaſure, and the leſſe, two quarts. But it is evident, that the meaſure of the Hin was but one, and that of a certaine quaintity, which was well knowne: as mention thereof is made, Numb. 15. 4, 5. 7. 10. and in divers other places. And it neither was ſo little to containe two quarts, nor ſo large to hold foure.

3. Pelargus thinketh the Hin contained two Sextaries and an halfe: the Sextarius being a meaſure, according to Glarean, of foure inches long, three inches deepe, and as many broad, is about our pint and halfe: ſo that in this account, the Hin ſhould not receive foure pints in all.

4. Some thinke it held foure Sextarii, which make ſix pints, Borrh. and this account agreeth with the computation of the Hebrewes: who doe generally hold, that the Hin contained twelve of the meaſure called Log: and a Log held ſix egs: ſo that the Hin was of the capacitie of 72. egs: and the fourth part thereof then muſt be of the content of 18. egs. Sic. Iun. Leppoman. Simler. Gallaſ. which is a pint and quarter of ale meaſure: for there goe unto a pint of our Engliſh meaſure, as much as fourteene eg-ſhels can containe.

Quest. XLVIII. Of the ſpirituall application of the Altar, and daily ſacrifice.

THe ſpirituall ſignification of theſe things is this: 1. Chriſt is our Altar, whereby wee are ſanctified; he is, & ara & victima both our Altar, and the ſacrifice: of this Altar the Apoſtle ſpeacketh, Heb. 13. We have an Altar, whereof they have no authority, which ſerve in the Tabernacle, Gallaſius. Heb. 13. 10.

2. By the daily ſacrifice of the lambes Chriſt alſo is ſignified, who is the Lambe of God that taketh away the ſinnes of the world, Simler.

3. By the bread and wine which was offered, Lippoman would have repreſented the Euchariſt, which is miniſtred with bread and wine. Rather it ſignifieth, Chriſtum pro nobis oblatum cibum eſſe & potum, that Chriſt offered for us is both our meat and drinke to be received by faith, Oſiander.

4. The offering of the one in the morning, the other at evening, Cyprian thus applieth: Ut hora ſacrifi-cij ſignaret veſperam & occaſum mundi; That the houre of the ſacrifice ſhould ſignifie the evening and the ſet of the world, when Chriſt ſhould be offered. Bernard underſtandeth two oblations of Chriſt; one when he was offered and preſented by his parents in the Temple; the other when he was offered upon the croſſe: at the firſt oblation he was received, inter brachia Simeonis, betweene the armes of Simeon: in the ſecond, inter brachia crucis, betweene the armes of the croſſe. Lippoman thus: Agnus veſpertinus Dominum morientem præfigurat, &c. The evening lambe did prefigure Chriſt dying, the morning lambe Chriſt riſing againe from the dead. But rather hereby is ſignified that Chriſt from the morning to the even, from the beginning of the world unto the end, is the Saviour of all them that truſt in him: he is the Lambe which was ſlaine from the beginning of the world, Oſiander. And by this daily offering and that twice done, is ſhewed, that wee have daily need of reconciliation: that Chriſts bloud ſhould continually be applied unto us by faith, Simler. And by this daily ſacrifice twice offered, the Iſraelites were admoniſhed, ut a principio ad finem diei, ad Dei miſericordiam confugerent; that from the beginning to the end of the day, they ſhould flee unto Gods mercie. And that this continuall ſacrifice was an evident figure of Chriſt, is evident, becauſe it is propheſied to ceaſe at the comming of the Meſſiah, Dan. 9. 27. for the ſhadow muſt give place to the body, Calvin.

Lib. 2. epiſtol. epiſt. 3.

Serm. 2. & 3. de purific. beat. Mariæ.

Quest. XLIX. How the Lord appointed with the children of Iſrael.

Verſ. 43. There I will appoint, or meet with the children of Iſrael, &c. 1. Here the reaſon is given from the notation of the word, why it was called before, ohel maghed, the Tabernacle of appointment or meeting, because the Lord would meet with them there: it is derived rather of iaghad, which signifieth to meet, or appoint a time; than of ghadah to testifie, Calvine. 2. Here the Lord will appoint with Israel; not by speaking himselfe unto them: for after the Lord had spoken unto them out of mount Sinai, when he delivered the Law, and the people were afraid of Gods voice, and desired that Moses might speake unto them; the Lord after that did not speake himselfe, but declared his will by Moses, Tostat. qu. 21. 3. Where it is said in the former verse, where I will make appointment with you, to speake unto thee there; Caietanes note is somewhat curious: that God in respect of the Levites, promittit se dantem paratum, promiseth onely to be readie: but with Moses hee promiseth to speake: for by with you the Lord meaneth the Israelites, with whom hee will speake by Moses, as it followeth vers. 43.

ments

QUEST. L. What the Lord promiseth to sanctifie.

Vers. 43. I shall be sanctified by my glorie. 1. Junius referreth this to the Israelites, that everie one of them should be sanctified by the Lord. But that were too generall: it is evident by the next verse where the Lord speaketh of sanctifying the Tabernacle, the Altar, and the Priests, that he meaneth a speciall sanctification, and consecration to holy uses. 2. The most do supplie place, and understand it of the Tabernacle: but that is expressed afterward, I will sanctifie the Tabernacle. 3. Therefore the speech is more generall; that he will sanctifie by his presence: and what things hee will sanctifie, is expressed in the next verse in particular, the Tabernacle, the Altar, Aaron and his sonnes.

QUEST. LI. What is meant here by Gods glorie.

By my glorie. 1. Some interpret it, To my glorie, because that was the end wherefore the Lord appointed all those things. 2. Some doe understand it of Christ, who is the glorie of God, without whom nothing is sanctified in the Church: this glorie Moses desired to see, chap. 33. 3. Lyranus and Lippoman refer it to the comming downe of fire upon Aarons sacrifice, Levit. 9. 4. Tostatus to that example of Gods power in destroying Nadab and Abihu with fire, for offering strange fire: and thereupon the Lord saith, I will be sanctified in them that come neere me, and before all the people will I be glorified. But this promise of God is not so to be restrained, to one or two of Gods glorious workes. 5. Therefore by glorie the Lord understandeth gloriosam praesentiam, his glorious presence, Vatablus: as Exodus 40.34. Then the cloud covered the Tabernacle, &c. and the glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle, Oleaster.

Levit.10.3.

QUEST. LII. How the Lord is said here to sanctifie Aaron.

Vers. 44. I will sanctifie also Aaron, &c. 1. Lyranus understandeth this of their consecration: which although it were described alreadie, non adhuc tamen erat in executione posita: yet it was not hitherto put in execution: but the Lord speaketh not here of that sanctification which consisted in the outward ceremonies: for they were not Gods glorie, whereby he saith he will sanctifie them. 2. Tostatus referreth it to that miraculous approbation of Aaron, and his two sonnes Eleazar and Ithamar, by shewing his fierce wrath in the sudden destruction of his other two sonnes Nadab and Abihu. But as Aaron and his sonnes are promised to be sanctified, so the Altar also shall be sanctified: but the Altar was not sanctified by that example of judgement. 3. Therefore the meaning is this, that as God had prescribed the externall rites of their consecration, so he promiseth, se in his efficacem fore, that he will be effectuall in them, Simler. Divina actio sanctificans aderit, &c. The divine sanctifying action shall be present, Caietane: lest they might thinke, that their sanctification depended upon the outward ceremonies of their consecration. For those externall things were used only, ut verae sanctificationis symbola, as figures or symbols of the true sanctification.

QUEST. LIII. How the Lord is said to dwell among them.

Vers. 45. And I will dwell among the children of Israel. 1. We must make a difference betweene Gods generall presence every where, and his gracious presence in his Church: his presence of power is in all places, but his presence of grace is only among his owne servants, Simler. So God is said sometime to be with his children, when he blesseth and prospereth them: as Potiphar saw that God was with Joseph, Gen. 39. and he is said not to be among them, when hee withdraweth his favour and assistance: as Moses saith unto the people, Numb. 14.42. The Lord is not among you, and therfore they were in that place overthrowne of their enemies. Thus also Thomas distinguisheth of Gods presence: Est communis modus, &c. There is a common manner of Gods being every where and in all things, per essentiam, potentiam, praesentiam, by his essence, power, and presence: est alius modus specialis, and there is another speciall way of Gods being present: sicut amatum in amante; as that which is loved is present in him that loveth: as our Saviour saith, If any man love me, &c, my father will love him, and we will come unto him, and we will dwell with him. Ioh. 14.23. And so the Lord is said to dwell here among his people. 2. And here also there is speciall relation to the situation of the Tabernacle, which was set up in the middest of the tribes: three of them pitching before, three behind, and three of each side; and in that respect God also is said to dwell in the middest of them, because his Tabernacle, which the Lord made his habitation, was in the middest of the host, Tostat. qu. 21. 3. But this must be understood conditionally, that the Lord would dwell among them, so long as they worshipped him aright, as hee commanded them, Osiander. 4. And so hee will not onely dwell among them, but worke such wonders among them, that they shall by experience knowe, that God onely, and none other, delivered them out of Egypt to serve him, Tostat. ibid.

1.p.q.43.ar.3.in Corp.

4. Places

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. No perfection in the Priesthood of the law.

Vers.1. TAke a young bullocke, &c. This first sacrifice being offered for the sin of the Priests that were to be consecrated, ought to put them in mind, that they themselves were sinners, and had need of sacrifice, Oleaster. Which evidently proclaimed, that there was no perfection in their Ministerie, but that they were to looke for an high Priest so perfect, that needed not first to offer sacrifice for his owne sinnes, as the Priests of the law did, Hebr.7.27.

2. Doct. Of dividing the Word aright.

Vers.17. THou shalt cut the ramme in peeces. To this usage of the law, the holy Apostle seemeth to allude, exhorting Timothie to divide the Word aright, 2 Tim.2.15. that as the Priest divided the sacrifice, and laid every part in order, and as hee in other sacrifices gave the Lord his part, and tooke the Priests part, and delivered the rest to the people: so the Minister of God should ὀρθοτομεῖν, divide the Word aright, deliver the true sense thereof; not wrest or deprave it with false glosses, or fained allusions, as the Valentinians abused the Scripture: and Origen is found herein to have been in great fault, Sanderus.

3. Doct. Of the imposition of hands.

Vers.21. THou shalt sprinkle it upon Aaron, &c. These ceremonies of washing, anointing, sprinkling, which were used in the consecration of the Priests of the old Testament, are not requisit now. The Apostles in the new Testament used imposition of hands: as the Deacons are ordained by imposition of hands, *Act.*7.8. So thy praied and laid their hands upon Saul and Barnabas, and sent them forth for the worke of the Ministerie, Act. 13.4. which externall observation is yet retained in the Church of God: whereby, 1. They which are ordained, are confirmed in their calling: 2. They are admonished, that their abilitie and sufficiencie for that calling, is not of themselves, but from him, in whose name, hands are imposed upon them. 3. It is a signe of Gods protection and assistance, if they be diligent in their calling, that his hand shall protect them. 4. And if they be unfaithfull, that his hand shall be upon them to judge them: in this sense the Prophet David saith, Thine hand is heavie upon me day and night, *Psal.*32.4. Marbach.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Cont. Against the anointing of Priests with oyle in their consecration.

Vers.7. THou shalt take the anointing oyle. This oyle was a signe of the graces of the Spirit, which should be powred abundantly upon Christ the true high Priest, as the Prophet David saith, *Psal.*45.7. Thy God hath anointed thee with the oyle of gladnesse above thy fellowes. This ceremonie then of anointing being fulfilled in Christ, it savoureth of Iudaisme to revive this ceremonie now, as the Romanists doe in the consecration of their Bishops and Priests. This were to be wiser than Christ, who commanded no such thing to be done, and than his Apostles, who used no such ceremonie in the ordaining of Ministers, Gallas.

2. Cont. Against the anoynting of the fingers.

Vers.20. AND upon the thumbe of the right hand. The Romanists retaine the like ceremonie in ordaining of their Priests: for they anoint their thumbes, and forefingers with oyle, as Aarons thumbe was with bloud, that those fingers may bee consecrated to handle the bread in the Eucharist, which they call the Lords bodie. But we reade not, that either Christ himselfe, or his Apostles anointed their fingers for the consecrating of the Sacrament: these then the Apostle calleth the commandements of man, touch not, taste not, handle not, Coloss. 2.21. Gallas.

3. Cont. That the ramme signified not Peter.

Vers.19. AND thou shalt take the other ramme. These two rammes some would have signifie Peter and Paul; the ramme of burnt offering, which was wholly consumed, they say, signifieth Paul, amore Christi totum incensum, that was wholly set on fire with the love of Christ: the other ram, wherewith they anointed the eare, thumbe and toe of the Priests, did prefigure Peter; Nam Ecclesiæ Romanæ obediendum est in his, quæ sunt fidei; For the Church of Rome must bee obeyed in those things which belong unto faith, which commeth by hearing: and this is signified by touching the eare: likewise in those things which concerne manners, which is understood by anointing the hands and feet, which are instruments of all actions, Gloss.ordinar. Moraliter.

Contra. 1. And was not Peter wholly ravished, and set on fire also with the love of Christ, as well as Paul? If not, why do you preferre him before Paul? 2. If faith come by hearing, how should the Pope be obeyed in doctrine, seeing he useth not to preach, to be heard? 3. In matters of faith, not onely the Romane Church, but any other is to bee heard and followed: but seeing the Romane Church teacheth doctrines contrarie to faith, there it may worthily bee left. 4. And will they have us to follow them in manners also? The Pope and his Cardinals, (no marvell) give such good example of life, that it is pitie that they are not imitated. They that know Rome, and the generall prophanesse, and licentious living there, though never so much addicted to the Popish religion, I think would be ashamed to follow their conversation. 5. This ramme signifieth Christ, by whose blood only we are purged, our eares, hands, and all other parts sanctified: of whom the Prophet speaketh, Isai. 50.4. He will waken mine eare, as the learned: it is blaspemie therefore to applie it to Peter: he sanctifieth not the eare, Christ indeed healed the eare which Peter cut off. I hope they will not say, that Peters bloud doth sanctifie them. 6. Oleaster giveth a better sense of this place, Nihil aliud hujusmodi sanguinis respersione adumbrari video, quàm Sacerdotum punitionem, &c. I see nothing else shadowed forth by this sprinkling of bloud, than the punishment of the Priests, Si negligentiores in audiendis ejus mandatis, &c. If they should be negligent in hearing Gods Commandements, and in the executing of their ministery, &c. Let the Pope and popelings therefore looke unto it, that they smart not for it one day, in neglecting Gods Commandements in respect of their owne traditions.

which

4. Controv. Of the elevation of the host, and of the signe of the crosse, &c.

Vers. 24. Thou shalt shake them to and fro. The Latine text readeth, Thou shalt sanctifie them, elevating, or lifting them up. Whereupon Sa in his annotations would ground the elevation of the host in the Sacrament: and Lyranus and Tostatus observe, that the Priest shaking them to and fro, and lifting them up and downe, in this motion, made as it were a signe of the crosse in the aire.

Contra. 1. Who taught them to borrow their ceremonies from the figures and types of the Law? If such rites as shadowed forth Christ, be still to be used, to what end died Christ? The Jewes, that thinke Christ not yet to be come, have some colour in retaining their legall ceremonies: but seeing Christians doe beleeve that Christ the body and substance of the Law is come; in him all those shadowes are determined. 2. Neither was it yet revealed unto them how Christ should suffer, and whereon hee should bee offered, therefore it is not like, that the moving of those things up and downe, and to and fro, had any such signification. 3. Neither was the crosse of Christ of that fashion, that as much should be left above the crossing in the head, as under it in the feet, so that the upright peece should be crossed in the middest: after which similitude this motion of the Priests hands seemed to be, up and downe, and then sideways to and fro.

5. Controv. Against the burying of Bishops in their Pontificials.

Vers. 29. And the holy garments, which are Aarons, shall be his sonnes after him. It was not the fashion then among the Hebrewes, as it is now among the Romanists, for their high Priest to be buried in his priestly robes: as now their Bishops are intombed in their pontificials. Lippoman, one of their owne Writers, giveth this note hereupon: Lest any should say Aaron shall use the pontificall vestures all his life time, and when he dieth, ipse eisdem indutus tumulabitur, he shall be buried in them, &c. He seemeth closely to glance at that superstitious use practised among them. Simlerus ghesseth well at the cause of this ridiculous usage: I cannot tell (saith he) why they should doe so; nisi forte ut mortui fungamur munere suo, quod vivi nunquam fecêre; unlesse it be, that they might exercise their function when they are dead, which they never did being alive.

6. Controv. Of the lawfulnesse of Ministers marriage, and the legitimation of their children.

Vers. 29. Shall be his sonnes after him, &c. Tostatus here thus noteth; that because in the old Testament the Priests had wives, the sonnes succeeded their fathers, as others did in civill principalities: but now in the new Testament, sacerdotes non habent uxores, the Priests have no wives, and therefore their sonnes succeed them not, because they have no sonnes: and if they have sometime sonnes, illegitimi sunt, they are illegitimate, &c. Tostat. qu.16.

Contra. 1. If the Priests of the Law had their wives, of whom was exacted a greater legall purity, in outward observations, than now: why should the Ministers of the new Testament be restrained in the times of the Gospell, which hath given us liberty that were in bondage under the Law? 2. Then the sonnes succeeded the fathers in the priesthood, both because the tribes were distinguished, and their families and kinreds divided, that Christs line of Iudah might be continued, and then the service of the Tabernacle, consisting chiefly in externall observations, required no such exactnesse, but that the sonne might be fit to succeed his father in the priesthood; especially God giving an extraordinary blessing unto that lineall succession: but now it is not fit that children should alwayes succeed their fathers, because the Gospell requireth a greater sufficiencie: and the childe is not alwayes heire of his fathers gifts: but where the sonne is endued with sufficient parts, to take upon him his fathers charge, there is no reason why he should be barred. We see in these dayes that divers learned men, Ministers and Professors under the Gospell, have left behind them their sonnes men of worthy parts: as Iosias Simlerus had a sonne of the same name, who writ the Dedicatory Epistle to his fathers learned Commentaries upon Exodus; David Parens that learned man, hath likewise his sonne Philip Parens, who hath written of Logike: Kicherman the Author of his Logike, and politike Systemata, succeeded his father, in Gymnasio patrio, in his fathers schoole. And divers such beside might be named. 3. And doth he thinke indeed, that the sonnes of Priests are illegitimate, and unfit to succeed their fathers? What thinketh he of divers Popes, that were Priest sonnes? as Bonifacius the first, Felix the third, Agapetus the first, Sylvester, Theodorus, Hadrianus, Benedict the 8. Iohn the 12. all which were the sonnes of Priests: and Gratian addeth further; Quamplures etiam alii inveniuntur de sacerdotibus nati; and divers beside are found to have beene borne of Priests. 4. Indeed they which have sonnes, and are not married, which is no rare thing in the Popish Clergy, doe leave an illegitimate seed behind them: but such as are borne in lawfull matrimony, are an holy seed, of what calling soever their parents be: for both, marriage among all men is honourable, *Hebr.*13.4. and so consequently among Ministers: and their children are holy, *1 Cor.*7.14. They therefore that condemne their marriage, and make their children illegitimate, and so unholy, doe contradict the holy Apostle, and in a manner give him the lye. See more *Synops. Centur.*1. *err.*77.

Gods blessing upon Ministers sonnes.

Distinct.56. c.2.

7. Controv.

7. Controv. That the wicked doe not eat the body of Christ.

Vers.33. A Stranger shall not eat thereof. Like as none which were not of Aarons family were admitted to the eating of this holy meat: so none but those which are of Christs family indeed, and doe beleeve in him, can be partakers of his body and bloud: for whosoever eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud (saith our blessed Saviour) hath everlasting life, Ioh.6.54. They therefore are grossely deceived, who thinke that the wicked and unbeleevers doe eat the very flesh, and drinke the very bloud of Christ in the Eucharist, Simler. for then it would follow upon our blessed Saviours words, that they should have everlasting life also. See more, Synops.Cent.3.err.27.

8. Controv. Against the reservation of the Sacrament.

Vers.34. If ought of the flesh, &c. or of the bread remaine unto the morning, thou shalt burne it with fire. This was commanded, lest that which remained of the holy flesh and bread might either bee prophaned, or might bee superstitiously abused. It therefore may seeme strange, that the Romanists, which are in other things so superstitiously addicted to the rites and usages of the Law, doe not also follow the same herein; but rather have taken up a contrary use, in reserving the consecrate host, hanging of it up in a pix, and adoring it: for this is a true position; sacramenti ratio non durat extra usum, that set apart the use, and the sacrament all respect ceaseth, Simler. For as the water used in Baptisme, is no more a sacrament, extra usum, out of the use, but is as other common water; so neither are the bread and wine in the Eucharist. For the more full handling of this point I likewise referre the Reader to Synops. Cent.3. err.19.

9. Controv. Against the continuall sacrifice of the Masse.

Vers.38. This is that which thou shalt present upon the Altar, &c. two lambes, &c. day by day continually. To this daily and continuall sacrifice, the Romanists resemble and compare their continuall sacrifice of the Masse: and they hold them as Antichrists, that doe abolish it, as Antiochus abolished the daily sacrifice, Ex Simlero. 1. There is no externall sacrifice now remaining under the Gospell daily to be iterated: for Christ was once offered to take away the sinnes of many, Heb.9.28. he is not then to be often sacrificed. 2. Antiochus was the forerunner of Antichrist, because he abolished the daily sacrifice before the time, which was to continue untill the Messiah came: but Christ himselfe by the one oblation of himselfe once offered, was at his comming to abolish the daily sacrifice, as it is prophesied, Dan.9.27. He shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease: not only for that he tooke away from the incredulous Jewes their City, Temple, and sacrifice: but because he was the body and substance of those sacrifices which are not now to be iterated and repeated; seeing (as the Apostle saith) With one offering he hath consecrated for ever them that are sanctified, Heb.10.14. which sacrifice of Christ is often to be celebrated by way of thankfull commemoration, not to be iterated by any externall oblation.

10. Controv. That, doe this, in the institution of the Eucharist signifieth not, to sacrifice this.

Vers.39. Thou shalt present or make ready one lambe in the morning. The word in the originall is עשה ghashah, thou shalt make: that is, sacrifice or offer. The Romanists would take advantage by this word, because to make here signifieth to sacrifice, that it should be so taken, when Christ said, in the institution of the Sacrament, hoc facite, doe this, as if he should say, sacrificate, sacrifice ye this. Gallasius here maketh mention, how a certaine Sorbonist, then a Popish Bishop, but illius hara porcus, a swine out of the same stie, to use his owne words, in a certaine booke written against the Protestants, did make this word a chiefe foundation of the Missall sacrifice.

Contra. 1. But this will afford them small helpe: for this word ghashah, to doe, is of a generall signification, and is applied to divers senses, according to the circumstance of the place: as Genes.11.4. faciamus nobis nomen, let us make, (that is) get us a name: Gen.18.7. fecit vitulum, he made the calfe (that is) killed it, or made it ready. Likewise, 2 Sam.13.6. Faciat mihi cibum, let her make me meat, (that is) prepare it: it doth not therefore always signifie to sacrifice. And our Saviour, when he saith, this doe, &c. hath relation to the former words, take eat, as S. Paul sheweth, 1 Cor.11.24.

2. The sacrifices of the Law were types and figures of Christs sacrifice, the shadow of the body, they did not prefigure aliud umbratile sacrificium, another shadowing sacrifice, such as is the imaginary sacrifice of the Masse.

3. And there remaineth now no externall ceremoniall sacrifice, but only spirituall, by us to be offered unto God, as S. Peter sheweth: Ye are an holy Priesthood, to offer up spirituall sacrifices acceptable to God by Iesu Christ, 1 Pet.2.5. Marbach. See further of this controversie, Synops.Cent.3. err.31.

Vers.44. I will sanctifie also Aaron, &c. Cajetane out of this place would prove the Sacrament of Orders in the new Testament, calling them Heretikes that deny it: thus inferring, Si specialis divina actio sanctificans Aaron, &c. If there were present a divine action sanctifying Aaron, to execute his office; much more in the time of grace, specialis divina actio concurrit ad sanctificandum aliquos, &c. a speciall divine action concurreth to sanctifie some, ut sacerdotio fungantur, to execute the Priesthood.

11. Controv. That there is no Sacrament of Orders.

Contra. 1. Cajetanes argument is not good, that where there is a grace conferred by an outward signe, there necessarily should bee a Sacrament: for presently upon Davids anointing by Samuel, the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, 1 Sam.16.13. yet I thinke he will not make it a Sacrament to be anointed King. 2. It is likewise false, that alwayes the inward grace concurreth with the outward signe: for this were to tye Gods grace and Spirit to the element. Nadab and Abihu were consecrated as well as the rest of Aarons sonnes, but they were not sanctified: the very next day after their consecration ended, which was the eighth day, they were destroyed for abusing their office, in offering strange fire,

Levit.

*Levit.*10.1. 3. Neither is there now any externall Priesthood in the new Testament, to be exercised in the Church: but the Priesthood of the new Testament resteth in the person of Christ, *Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedek, Hebr.*7.21. See further, Syn. Centur. 3. *error.*107.

Controv. 12. Against Pythagoras, concerning the lawfulnesse of the legall sacrifices.

NOw in the last place, in that the Lord himselfe gave direction unto his people, concerning divers kindes of sacrifices of beasts: the opinion of Pythagoras appeareth to be ridiculous and foolish, who condemned all such sacrificing of beasts, as the Poet describeth it in this manner:

Nec satis est, quod tale nefas committitur: ipsos
Inscripsére Deos sceleri, numenque supremum
Cade laborifera credunt gaudere juvenci.
They thinke it not enough, themselves evill for to do,
But make the gods above, as parties thereunto;
As though they joyed to see, a painfull bullock slaine to be.

But herein was Pythagoras errour and ignorance, that he could not conceive, Deum sine expiatione non placari, that God could not be appeased, without some expiation and atonement made. The blood of these sacrifices then shadowed forth the bloud of Christ, the only sacrifice of atonement, whereby God was well pleased, not that he delighted in the death of that just one, but in his obedience, wherein Gods justice was satisfied: indeed take Christ away, and then the sacrifices of beasts, nihil differunt à profana cernificina, differ nothing from a prophane shambles, Calvin.

6 Morall observations.

1. Observ. A Bishop must be gentle and full of clemencie.

Vers.7. AND anoint him. Disce Sacerdos Dei esse misericors; Learne thou which art Gods Priest and Minister, to be mercifull and given to pity, for the which cause the Priests of the old Law were anointed, Oleaster. Which property of gentlenesse Saint Paul requireth in his Bishop, No striker, not given to filthy lucre, but gentle, no fighter. It is more seemely for a Christian Bishop to win by clemencie, than to force by rigour and severity. 1 *Tim.*3.3.

2. Observ. Ministers must both teach and live well.

Vers.20. AND put it upon the lap of Aarons eare, &c. The laying the bloud on the right eare of Aaron, signifieth the right hearing of the Word: on the right thumbe, that they should not be hearers of the Word only, but doers: on the right toe, that their conversation should be aright, B. Bab. as S. Paul would have his Bishop unreproveable, 1 *Tim.*3.2.

3. Obsery. No delayes to be used in Gods service.

Vers.34. I ought remaine till the morning, &c. As the holy flesh was to be eaten the same day, so hereby the Lord would shew, sibi alacriter esse inserviendum, that we must serve him cheerefully, not to use any delayes or procrastinations in his service, Simler. As the Prophet David saith, *I made haste, and delayed not to keepe thy Commandements, Psal.*119.60.

CHAP. XXX.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter is first described another object of the service of the Priests, namely the Altar of incense, to *vers.*11. Secondly, such things as were necessary for their Ministery: 1. Money to be collected, *vers.*11. to 17. 2. A laver to wash them in, to *vers.*22. 3. The anointing oile for consecration, to *vers.*33. 4. The sweet perfume for sacrifice, to *vers.*38.

In the description of the Altar of incense, are set forth: 1. The matter, *vers.*1. forme and fashion, *vers.*2. 2. The parts, the crowne and barres, to *vers.*6. 3. The situation of it, *vers.*6. 4. The use, daily, *vers.*7,8. anniversary, *vers.*10.

In the second part: 1. The collection of the money is appointed in generall, by whom it should bee given, what, and to what end, *vers.*12. then in particular, what shall be given, *vers.*13. by whom, *vers.*14, 15. to what end, *vers.*16.

2. The laver is described: 1. The matter and forme, *vers.*18. 2. The place, *vers.*18. 3. The use, for the Priests to wash in, *vers.*19,20. 4. The danger, if they doe it not, *vers.*21.

3. The holy oyntment is appointed to be made: 1. The matter, *vers.*23,24. 2. The forme, *vers.*25. 3. The use, to anoint both the holy things, to *vers.*30. and the holy persons, *vers.*30. 4. Punishment is threatned to those which should prophane this ointment, to *vers.*34.

4. The holy perfume also is commanded to be made: 1. Of what matter, *vers.*34. 2. After what manner, *vers.*35. 3. How it must be used, *vers.*36. 4. The punishment of those which doe abuse and prophane it.

2. The

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 3. The top thereof. B.G.V.I.A.P. better than, the grate thereof. L.S. gag signifieth the top or roofe. B.G.I.cum cæter.

Vers. 4. On either side. B. or, the two sides. V.I.P.A.C.S. better than, per singula latera, on everie side. L.G.

Vers. 6. Where I will meet with thee. B.I.P.A. better than, where I will speake with thee. L. or, appoint my word with thee. C. or, covenant with thee. V. or, appoint with thee. G. the word commeth of יעד jaghad, to meet with, or to appoint a time. B.I. cum cæter.

Vers. 10. Aaron shall make reconciliation. B. G. I. cum cæter. not, Aaron shall pray. L. the word is כפר caphar, to reconcile. B.G. cum cæter.

Vers. 19. Shall wash their hands, &c. thereat, G. or, out of it. I. V. P. A. S. C. better than, inis. B. L. minnemm, out of it. H. G.I. cum cæter.

Vers. 23. Five hundred sicles. B.G.V.A.P. cum cæter. not, five hundred pounds. L. for it had beene too great a proportion for an him of oyle. And beside, vers. 24. mention is made of the shekel, after the shekel of the Sanctuarie. B. G. cum cæter.

Vers. 33. Take, &c. Stacte, onycha, galbanum. B.I.C.L.S.P. better than, myrrh, and cleare gumme. G. for myrrh is called before, מר mor. I.B. cum cæter.

Vers. 34. Spices, and pure frankincense. B.G.V.A.P. better than, to referre it to gallanum, of sweet sauour. L. S. G. for a distinction commeth betweene: or, nard, with the leaves. I. the word is, סמים sammim, spices so taken, vers. 23. B.G.V.

Vers. 34. Everie one by it selfe alone. I. So also Oleaster, better than, of each a like weight. B. G. cum cæt. ברר badadh signifieth alone, Levit. 13. 45. I.

3. The questions discussed.

Quest. I. Why the narration of the making of the golden Altar is transposed.

Vers. 1. THou shalt make an Altar, &c. 1. The Hebrewes well observe, that in the sacred historles, we should not alwayes looke to have things set downe in that order of time, wherein they were done: as the altar of incense was made before the priestly apparell, as is evident, chap. 37. 25. and chap. 28. yet it is prescribed to be made after. 2. Iunius giveth this reason, why the same order is not observed in the prescription, which was in the making & preparing of these things: because first the things are described, wherein the service and ministerie of the Priests consisted: and then the common instruments, and sacred things belonging to their service: as the perfume, and perfume altar, money, and the holy oyntment: and so though the order of time be not kept, yet the order of nature seemeth to bee observed. But then it is like, if the things are set downe in the narration, as the nature of them required, that the same course should have beene much more kept, in the framing and making of them. 3. Tostatus thinketh rather, that the order of nature is not here followed: which is, cum sic res narrantur, ut geruntur; when things are so rehearsed, as they were done. But Moses useth an artificiall method, in setting downe those things together, quæ maxime cohærent, which most agree in argument, for better understanding: As having made mention of the brazen altar, wherein chiefly consisted the ministerie of the Priests, then hee commeth to set forth the priestly apparell, and their manner of consecration: first making an end with those things which were of most frequent and necessarie use: and then hee commeth to describe those things which by reason of the connexion of argument were omitted before. Tostat. qu. 1. But as I refuse not this reason, so I incline rather to the first opinion, ordinis non inquirendam esse rationem, that alwayes a reason must not be enquired of the order of things in Scripture, Pellican.

Quest. II. Wherefore the altar of incense had hornes comming out of it.

Vers. 2. THe hornes thereof shall be of the same, &c. 1. This altar had foure ends at the corners comming forth, called hornes, like as the other brazen altar had, and of the same fashion, which were not only as certaine pomels, as Lyranus: or certaine little pillars standing upright, but come out somewhat sloping, because they are likened to hornes. 2. They were made out of the same matter and wood, not grafted in: so that it seemeth there were foure quarters at each corner, which came out above like hornes, and at the nether end were as feet unto the altar. Cajetan, Simler. 3. But Lyranus upon good reason misliketh their opinion, who thinke that this altar had likewise craticulam, a certaine grate or net, which did hang above upon the foure hornes: for so the golden altar would have beene annoyed with the ashes that might fall thorow the grate: and beside, this altar was covered above as a table, which was laid over with plates of gold: whereas the other brazen altar was hollow, and open above, and the grate of brasse was made unto it in stead of an hearth, whereon the fire should be made, and the sacrifice laid. 4. Yet Tostatus reason is not good, why nothing hanged upon the hornes of the altar of incense, because it is most like that the vessels which were used in the service of that altar, should have there hanged, if any thing did: but onely one vessell was needfull for the ministration of that altar, namely, a censer to receive the coales, upon the which the incense burned, which he saith was kept upon the brazen altar without in the Court, with other instruments thereto belonging. But that cannot bee, for all the instruments of the brazen altar were of brasse, which were not used within the Tabernacle, where all the vessels and instruments were made of gold. It is more like, that if any vessels were used about the golden altar, that they were the incense cups, which were made for the golden table, chap. 25. 29. But there is no such necessitie to make any such supply: for the coales were laid upon the verie hearth of the golden altar, and the incense thereupon, as shall be shewed afterward.

QUEST. III. Wherein this Altar of incense differed from the other.

Vers.3. AND thou shalt over-lay it with fine gold. This Altar differed much from the brazen Altar: 1. In the bignesse of it: this was but a cubit square, and two cubits high; the other was five cubits square, and three cubits high: because the sacrifices were to be burned upon it, and therefore it required a greater space for the fire to be made, and the wood couched thereon, and upon that the sacrifice. 2. This was covered with plates of gold, the other of brasse; for the brazen Altar was imbrued with the bloud of sacrifices, but this was onely for incense, and therefore was made of pure metall. 3. The brazen Altar was made open above, and had a grate in the middest for the ashes to fall thorow: but this was covered above. Hierome thinketh it had craticulam, a grate above for the ashes to fall thorow: but the word is gag, which signifieth tectum, the top or roofe, which was overlaid with gold; it was not then like unto a grate. 4. But Cajetan is deceived, who thinketh that this was another difference, that the brazen Altar had, neque parietes, neque tectum; neither wals, nor cover above; but this had both: for the brazen Altar though it had no cover, yet it had sides made of boords, which were covered with brasse, as is evident, chap. 27. 8. Thou shalt make it hollow of boords. 5. It differed in respect of the place, this being placed within the Tabernacle, the other in the outward Court: the use also was divers, this only for incense, the other for sacrifices.

QUEST. IV. How the incense was burned upon the golden Altar.

Vers.3. AND the top thereof. This was the upper part of the Altar, which Cajetan calleth mensam, the table; Iunius, aream, the plaine above; Iosephus, foculum, the hearth, where the incense was burned. 1. Some thinke that a censer stood upon this golden Altar, which was filled with coales, and the incense was laid upon them: So Genevens. in their description. But if there had been any such golden censer belonging to this Altar, it is like, it being so necessarie an instrument for the service of that Altar, that it should not have beene omitted; as all the instruments belonging to the golden Table, and to the golden Candlesticke, and to the brazen Altar, were described together with the things themselves.

2. Tostatus thinketh, that the vessell wherein they brought coales from the other Altar, and put incense therein, which he calleth, vas receptorium carbonum & thymiamatis, the vessell which received the coales and incense, was kept among other vessels belonging to the brazen Altar, because by this meanes there should not be tanta circulatio, such going to and fro, as if the censer were still upon the golden Altar: for then the Priest should first goe in and fetch it, and then put in coales from the Altar, and carrie it in againe; whereas if the censer were without, he need but take it from thence at the first, and so carrie it in, *Tostat. qu.*3. But it is shewed before, quest.2. that this vessell which served for the golden Altar, was by all likelyhood of gold, and therefore was not kept among the brazen vessels, which belonged to the burnt offering Altar: neither need it to be imagined, if there were any such censer upon the incense Altar, that the Priest went first in to fetch it; he might at once with some instrument of the brazen altar, carrie coales in thither.

3. Wherefore it is more probable, that there was no censer standing upon the golden Altar, to burne incense in: but that the coales were laid upon the hearth, and the incense thereon, and so burned: the reasons are these. 1. Because no mention is made of any such censer, which should not be omitted, *Ribera lib.*2. cap. 8. 2. Iosephus saith there was upon it, foculus corona cinctus, a little hearth compassed with a crowne: so it seemeth by the description of the Altar, that the crowne above served to that end, as an edge to keepe in the coales, that they should not fall downe. 3. The Apostle speaking of this golden Altar, calleth it χρυσοῦν θυμιατήριον, a golden censer, *Heb.*9.3. So also Iosephus giveth it the same name: the Altar it selfe was but as a great censer, whereon the incense and perfume was burned. 4. And to what end should it have been made as an Altar for incense, if any other instrument were set upon it to receive the coales and incense? any other thing would have served as well as an altar to that end, to bee as a seat or place for the censer to stand upon.

*Ioseph. lib.*3. *de Antiquit. cap.*5.

*Lib.*6. *de bell. Iudaic, cap.*6.

QUEST. V. Of the placing of the barres, and how the Altar was carried.

Vers.4. THOU shalt make rings on either side, &c. 1. The Latine Translator readeth per singula latera, on everie side; which Tostatus would helpe by this exposition, understanding everie opposite side; that two rings should be placed on one side, and two more on the other side against it: but two sides were not everie side, for there were foure sides. Some say that by everie side are meant everie corner: but that cannot be, for there were two rings on a side: there were not two in a corner, for then there should be eight rings in all: the Hebrew word then is shenee, which signifieth two, not everie: this error then ariseth by the mistaking of the word.

2. Cajetan therefore well observeth these three circumstances concerning the placing of these barres. 1. They were not per singula latera, on everie side, but onely on two sides. 2. In angulis, and in the corners. 3. Et in superiori parte, and in the upper part under the crowne.

3. Now whereas this Altar was one cubit broad, yet was it carried upon two barres, and by foure men, two at each end: this then taketh away the like scruple and doubt moved by Tostatus before, about the manner of bearing the table of shew bread, which he thinketh was carried broad-wayes; because otherwise if it had been borne in the length, it being but one cubit in bredth, there should not have been space enough betweene the barres for two to carrie it, qu. 27. in cap. 25, for here wee see, that this Altar being but one cubit square, on which side soever the barres were placed, there should be but the space of a cubit betweene barre and barre to carrie it by.

QUEST.

Quest. VI. Where the Altar of incense was placed.

Vers.6. Thou shalt set before the veile. 1. Augustine is of opinion, that the golden Altar was in the most holy place; because the Apostle there placeth the golden censer, which Augustine understandeth to be the Altar: for these are the Apostles words; After the second veile was the Tabernacle, which is called the holiest of all, which had the golden censer, and the Arke of the Testament, &c. *Heb.*9.4. But that the Apostle is not so to be understood, that the golden censer or altar was within the veile, shall be shewed in the next question. Arias Montanus seemeth to be of the same opinion, that, Altare incensi erat intra adytum ante arcam ipsam; The Altar of incense was within the oracle before the Arke. So also Origen hom. 9. in Levit. Quæst. 173. in Exod.

2. But that the golden Altar was without the second veile, and not in the most holy place, it is evident by these reasons. 1. It is apparent, *Exod.*40.26. that after Moses had hung up the veile, within the which the Arke was, then he set without before the veile the golden Altar. 2. Likewise, Levit. 16. 12. the high Priest taketh the censer full of burning coales from the Altar, which was before the Lord, and so shall bring it within the veile: this Altar before the Lord was the Altar of incense, not of burnt offering, as Tostatus understandeth it, as appeareth *vers.*18. it was that Altar whereupon reconciliation was made. If then the Priest went from the Altar, and so entred within the veile, then was not the Altar within the veile, Ribera. 3. The high Priest onely was to enter into the most holy place, as it followeth, *vers.*10. but the other Priests did offer incense upon the Altar, as Nadab and Abihu offered incense before the Lord, *Levit.*10. and Zacharie Iohn Baptists father burned incense, who was not the high Priest: for then he should not by lot or by course have burned incense, as he did, *Luk.*16. 4. The incense was to be renued everie day twice, morning and evening: but the high Priest entred once onely in the yeere into the most holy place. Augustine answereth, that the high Priest did, semel in anno intrare cum sanguine, once in the yeare enter with bloud to make reconciliation, but with incense hee entred often. But the contrarie appeareth, *Lev.*16.2. where it is said, that the high Priest should not come at all times within the holy place: but if he had come twice everie day, he had entred almost at all times. Beside, the Apostle saith, The Priests went alwayes into the first Tabernacle, and accomplished the service; but into the second went the high Priest alone, once everie yeare, not without bloud, &c. Now if twice everie day the high Priest entred in to burne incense, he had gone as often as he did into the first Tabernacle.

Quest. VII. What the Apostle meaneth by the golden censer, which the most holy place is said to have.

Recontil.

But a great doubt here is moved, how Moses that placeth the golden Altar before the second veile in the first Tabernacle, and the Apostle who saith that the second Tabernacle, which was the most holy place, had the golden censer, and the Arke of the Testament, *Heb.*9 4. should be reconciled. 1. Augustine upon this place thinketh that the golden Altar was indeed within the veile, before the Arke: but that is shewed to bee otherwise in the former question. And so Iosephus, who was an eye-witnesse of those things, saith; Candelabrum aureum, mensam, & altare aureum statuerunt in Templo ante adytum; The golden candlesticke, the table, and the candlesticke they placed in the Temple before the oracle, Lib. 8. Antiquit. cap. 2. The same is the opinion of *Theophylact. in Hebr.*9. Beda lib. de Templ cap. 12. *Thom. 1.qu.*102.*ar.*4.*ad.*6. *Comestor histor. Exod.cap.*67. *Lyran. Exod.*3. Cajetan. Lippoman. Exod. 30.

2. Paul. Burgens. thinketh it is said to be in the most holy place, quoad dignitatis gradum, in respect of the excellencie and dignitie thereof, because once a yeare reconciliation was made upon the hornes of this Altar, not in respect of the place: therefore it is said, vers 10. this is most holy unto the Lord. But Matthias Thoring replyeth, that here Moses speaketh not of the Altar, but de exercitio summi Sacerdotis in altari, of the Ministerie of the high Priest upon that Altar which is called most holy. And againe, if in this respect it was said so to be in the most holy place: by the same reason the brazen Altar should be said to be there, for that is also called most holy, *chap.*29.37.

3. Some thinke that aureum thuribulum, the golden censer, which the Apostle speaketh of, was not the golden Altar, but a golden censer, which was kept in the most holy place, wherein the high Priest offered incense, when he went into the holy place once in the yeare. Of this opinion is Thomas, and Lyranus in 9. Hebr. and before them Hierom. But this cannot be so for these reasons. 1. Because in Moses description of the Tabernacle, and all things thereto belonging, there is no mention made of any such golden censer in the most holy place. 2. If the Apostle did not thereby meane the golden Altar, then had he omitted one of the principall things in the Sanctuarie, which he would not doe. 3. Againe, the high Priest is first bidden to take a censer full of burning coales of the Altar before the Lord, and so bring it within the veile, *Levit.*16.12. He then had not the censer within the veile, but without, Tostat. qu. 6. Exod. lib. 2. cap. 8. 4. And Iosephus also calleth the Altar of incense without the veile, thuribulum, the censer; and the Syriake Interpreter, domum aromatum, the house of perfume. *Lib.*6. de bell. Iud. cap. 6.

4. Ribera thinketh therefore, that the most holy place is said to have the golden Altar, quia ad ejus ministerium deputatum est, not because it was in it, but because it belonged to the service thereof; for once the high Priest tooke the burning coales and incense, when he went to make reconciliation once the yeare in the most holy place.

5. But I rather take Tostatus solution here, because the golden Altar, aliquem modum situs specialem habuit respectu veli, had a speciall kinde of situation in respect of the veile, which was before the Arke, and had before it, as it is said to be set iuxta before the veile: and therefore the holy place behinde the second veile may be said to have it, in respect of the neere situation to the veile. So 1 *King.*6.22. It is said, asher ladebir, the altar, which was to the oracle, or, by the oracle. And *Levit.*16,18. it is called the Altar, which was before the Lord, becauſe it was next unto the veile before the Mercie ſeat, where Gods preſence was, Ribera lib. 2. de templ. cap. 8,

QUEST. VIII. Why incenſe was commanded to be burned morning and evening.

Verſ.7. AND Aaron ſhall burne thereon ſweet incenſe, &c. 1. Thomas thinketh that the incenſe was appointed to be burned upon the golden Altar to this end, to qualifie the ſmell and ſtrong ſavour which did ariſe from the ſacrifices of fleſh, which were offered upon the brazen Altar without: and therefore everie morning and evening the incenſe was burned about the ſame time, when the daily ſacrifice was offered. But Toſtatus thus confuteth the opinion of Thomas. 1. Becauſe the incenſe was not burned juſt at the ſame time, but ſomewhat before the morning ſacrifice was offered, and at night after the evening ſacrifice: for the incenſe in the evening was offered, when the lamps were lighted, and it began to be darke, but the evening ſacrifice was not deferred ſo long, but was prepared about the ninth houre, which Act.3.1. is called the ninth houre of prayer. 2. Though it had concurred with the morning and evening ſacrifice, yet there were other extraordinarie ſacrifices, which were offered at other times, when the incenſe burned not. 3. And though it might ſerve to mitigate the ſavour of one lamb offered morning and evening, yet it could not helpe this inconvenience, when many ſacrifices were offered, yea thouſands, as at the dedication of Salomons Temple. 4. And if the incenſe had been to this end, it ſhould rather have beene appointed to bee burned in the ſame place where the ſmell of the ſacrifices was, in the outward Court, than within in the Tabernacle. 5. It is verie like that God ſo provided, as that the ſmell of the burnt ſacrifices was not grievous and irkſome, or offenſive; but that rather was by ſome ſupernaturall worke, than by naturall meanes.

2. Therefore this was rather the end why incenſe was offered, ad majorem reverentiam cultus, for more reverence of Gods worſhip. As among men it is counted an honour, to entertaine great perſons with ſweet odours, and the Gentiles did honour their gods with incenſe: ſo the Lord would hereby adorne the ſervice of the Tabernacle, Toſtat. qu. 4. And beſide, the Lord would hereby have ſhadowed forth the ſpirituall incenſe of his people, which are their prayers, as the Prophet David ſaith, Let my prayer bee directed in thy ſight as incenſe, Pſal.141.2. Borrh. And the golden Altar was a lively type of Chriſt, by whom the ſpirituall incenſe of our prayers is acceptable unto God, Apoc.8.3.

QUEST. IX. Whether any of the lamps burned by day.

Verſ.7. WHEN he dreſſeth the lamps thereof. 1. Toſtatus following Ioſephus, thinketh that all the ſeven lamps of the golden candleſticke burned and gave light in the night, but three of them only in the day, and that in the morning the Prieſt did put out foure of them, and at night againe hee did ſet them up. So alſo Lyranus.

2. But I rather herein ſubſcribe to the opinion of Vatablus and Oleaſter, with others, that the lamps, mane mundabantur, veſpere accendebantur, were cleanſed onely in the morning, and lighted in the evening, &c. And ſo much may be gathered here by the diverſitie of the phraſe here uſed: in the morning it is ſaid, behetibo, in making of them good, that is, cleanſing of them; in the evening, behaghaloth, in cauſing them to aſcend, that is, kindling of them, Iun. or ſetting of them up, Vatab. Likewiſe, chap.27.21. they are ſaid to be dreſſed from the evening to the morning, that is, to burne ſo long. See more hereof upon the queſtion upon that place handled before.

QUEST. X. What things were inhibited to be offered upon the golden Altar.

Verſ.9. YEE ſhall offer no ſtrange incenſe. 1. Foure things are forbidden to be offered upon this golden Altar: ſtrange incenſe, that is, made after another compoſition than the holy perfume afterward in this chapter preſcribed to be made: burnt ſacrifices of beaſts, oblations, which were ex aridis, of dry things, and drinke offerings, of liquid things, Lyran. 2. The reaſons hereof were theſe: that if any other kinde of incenſe ſhould be uſed, redundaret in quandam irreverentiam, it would tend to a certaine irreverence in Gods ſervice: and it was not fit to offer any ſacrifices or oblations upon that Altar. 1. Becauſe the fire aſcending upon the Altar, might have put the Tabernacle in danger, which was covered with curtaines, or with the ſmoake it would have defaced the beautie, and abated the colour of them. 2. Beſide, the ſacrifices with bloud would have imbrued the Altar, and ſo annoyed the Sanctuarie. 3. The Altar in reſpect of the ſmalneſſe, being but a cubit ſquare, was not fit for that ſervice. 4. Neither was it convenient in regard of the forme and faſhion, it was made plaine above: whereas the brazen Altar was made hollow above, the grate or hearth being about the middeſt thereof, where the fire was made, and the ſacrifice burned, Toſtat. qu. 7, 8. 3. Beſide, two other things concerning this Altar are, though not directly, yet by neceſſarie conſequence inhibited: Firſt, that they ſhould make no other Altar of incenſe in any other place, and therefore they ſinned, which offered incenſe in the high places: Secondly, none but Aaron and the Prieſts were to burne incenſe: therefore Core, Dathan, and their company diſpleaſed God for offering incenſe, being not thereunto called: and Uzzia King of Judah was ſtricken with leproſie, for uſurping the Prieſts office in burning of incenſe, 2 Chron.26. Lippom.

QUEST. XI. Whether the high Prieſt entred more than once in a yeare upon any occaſion into the moſt holy place.

Verſ.10. AARON ſhall make reconciliation upon the hornes of it once a yeare with the bloud, &c. 1. Auguſtine, whoſe opinion is briefly touched before, queſt.6. thinketh, Sacerdotem quotidie intra velum ſolere ſine ſanguine, that the Prieſt uſed to enter into the moſt holy place everie day without bloud, to lay incenſe upon the Altar: but onely once a yeare with bloud.

2. But it ſhall now bee made manifeſt, that hee entred onely once in the yeare at all: 1. None but the high Prieſt were admitted to enter into the moſt holy place; for none were ſuffered to be in the Tabernacle nacle, when he entred in, *Levit.*16.17. And so the Apostle saith, that the high Priest entred alone into the most holy place, *Heb.*9.7. but it was lawfull for the inferiour Priests to burne incense, as is shewed before in Zacharie Iohn Baptists father, who was not the high Priest: so it would follow that they also might go into the most holy place to burne incense. 2. It was not lawfull for the high Priest to goe at all times into the holy place within the veile, *Levit.*16.2. but if hee went in everie day twice, then there should no time be exempted. 3. The high Priest was not to enter into the most holy place, without a young bullocke for a sinne offering, and a ram for a burnt offering, *Levit.*16.3. but these were not offered everie day: the daily sacrifice morning and evening was only of two lambs: therefore everie day the high Priest went not into the most holy place. 4. Further, when the high Priest went within the veile, he put not on his glorious apparell, but only the common linnen garments of other Priests, *Levit.*16.4. but in his daily ministerie and service, when hee went into the Tabernacle, he put on his priestly robe, whereon hung the bels, that his sound might be heard going in and out, *ehap.*28.35. 5. The Apostle also saith directly, that the high Priest went into the second Tabernacle alone once everie yeare, *Heb.*9.7. Likewise *vers.*25. he saith, he entred everie yeare into the most holy place: he saith not everie day, or everie moneth: and this was upon the tenth day of the seventh moneth, *Levit.*16.29. And herein consent Beda, Lippoman, Vatab. Iun. Oleaster, Osiander, Lyran, with many other, that the high Priest entred into the most holy place but once everie yeare.

QUEST. XII. How Aaron made reconciliation upon the hornes of the altar.

Vers.10. AND Aaron shall make reconciliation, &c. 1. Hee meaneth not Aaron only in respect of his person, but of his place and office: Aaron for the time present, and his successours afterward, Tostat. 2. Whereas the Latine Translator readeth, deprecabitur super cornua altaris, hee shall pray upon the hornes of the Altar; Lyranus thinketh that the Priest did extend and spread himselfe upon the hornes of the altar, and so prayed. But this had beene an unseemly gesture, as Tostatus noteth, and it would have shewed presumption rather than humilitie, to have come so neere that holy Altar. And beside, this could not have beene conveniently done, the incense burning upon the coales upon the Altar. This errour then ariseth upon the false translation of the word, vechipher, which signifieth & expiabit; and he shall make reconciliation, or expiation upon the hornes of the Altar, which was by putting of the bloud of the sinne offering upon the hornes of the Altar, as is declared, *Levit.*16.18. 3. And the reason why he made reconciliation upon the hornes of the Altar is there also shewed, to hallow it from the uncleannesse of the children of Israel: quia ex irreverentia filiorum Israel peccaminum in circuitu Sanctuarii videbatur esse pollutum Sanctuarium: because by the irreverent behaviour of the children of Israel sinning round about the Sanctuarie, the Sanctuarie it selfe seemed to be defiled, Tostat. qu. 8.

QUEST. XIII. The spirituall sense of the Altar of incense.

COncerning the mysticall application of this golden Altar, with the rites thereof, I will omit the curious observations of Beda, who by the Altar of incense understandeth those which are perfit, and give themselves unto contemplation, in offering continuall prayers unto God; by the gold, charitie; by the squarenesse of it, patience and constancie; by the foure hornes thereof, the foure morall vertues. So also Ribera following Beda. But it is more fitly applyed thus: 1. The Altar of incense signifieth Christ, by whom we doe offer up the incense of our prayers, *Apoc.*8.2. This Altar was within of wood, without of gold, to signifie both the humanitie and divinitie of Christ. 2. The incense betokeneth the prayers of the Saints, Psal. 141. 2. Let my prayer, &c. be as incense. 3. The squarenesse of this Altar signifieth the firmenesse of it; the crowne, the regall dignitie of Christ; the hornes, his power, which sheweth it selfe in all the world. 4. As no incense must be offered but upon this Altar, so no prayers are accepted which are not offered in Christ, & proceed of faith: and therefore the Prophets reproved the Israelites, for offering of their incense without faith in God, He which remembred incense, after a carnall manner, was, as if hee blessed an idoll, *Isai.*66.3. Simler. 5. The incense must bee burned when the lamps were lighted: so our prayers are then accepted, cum fidei lumen praecedit, when the light of faith goeth before. 6. Everie day morning and evening the incense must be offered, to shew that we must pray continually, Pelarg. 7. No other incense must be offered, but the holy perfume appointed by God; and our prayers must bee directed according to Gods will, as we have a rule prescribed in the Lords prayer. 8. The hornes of this Altar must be laid on with bloud, so our prayers are availeable against sinne and Satan, si Christi sanguine tincta fuerint, if they be dipped and died in Christs bloud, Marbach. Borrh.

QUEST. XIV. How this Altar of incense differed from Salomons.

BUt before I proceed to the questions remaining to be handled in this Chapter, somewhat would be briefly touched concerning the difference betweene this golden Altar, which Moses made, and that which Salomon erected.

1. Some thinke that Salomon made a new Altar of incense, as Comestor. *Tostat. qu.*16. *in cap.*6.1. Reg. because this was made of Shittim wood, but Salomons of Cedar. But Ribera answereth, that it is not said, that Salomon made the golden Altar of Cedar, but onely covered it with Cedar, 1 *King.*6.22. that is, enlarged it, *lib.*2. *cap.*8. de Templ.

2. But Beda and Lyranus are farre wide, who thinke that Salomon made the Altar of incense of stone, which was covered over with Cedar, Osiander. The text before alleaged is evident, that it was of Cedar; there is no mention made of stone.

3. Iunius his opinion is, that it was the same Altar, and readeth thus, Obduxit altare Cedrinum; He laid over the Altar of Cedar, not with Cedar, but gold, as it followeth, *ibid. v.*22. but the Altar which Moses made was of Shittim wood, the Cedar is called, Cedrinum: therefore it seemeth then, they were two divers kinds of wood.

4. Ribera therefore thinketh, that Salomon first did enlarge the golden Altar with Cedar boords, and then covered it with gold, so that it was the same Altar, but enlarged. So also Borrhaius. For the words of the Text are, he covered the golden Altar with Cedar: and Iosephus writeth evidently, that Salomon did build a new brazen Altar; but of making a new golden Altar he maketh no mention, Ribera ibid. So some things were made new by Salomon, as the brazen Altar, and the brazen sea, or laver, ten golden candlesticks, ten tables, 2 *Chron.*4. Some things he only beautified and enlarged, as the Arke, over the which he made two Cherubims, beside those upon the Mercie seat, 1 *King.*6.23. Likewise he enlarged the Altar of incense, for one Altar might serve to burne incense upon, though for other services the number of vessels and instruments was increased, according to the proportion of the Temple, which was larger than the Tabernacle.

Iosephus lib.6. antiquit. cap.2.

QUEST. XV. Whether it were lawfull to number the people, and wherein David offended.

Vers.12. When thou takest the summe of the children of Israel, &c. 1. Simply then it is not unlawfull to number the people, which may be done upon two necessarie occasions: as when either a publike collection is to be made of tribute, or subsidie money, unlesse account should be taken, the burthen should lye upon a few, and others should escape. Againe, when any great warres are taken in hand, it is fit that the people should be mustered, that choice may be made of such as are fit for warre, *Tostat. qu.*9. 2. But then Davids example will be objected, with whom God was offended for the numbring of the people. To this divers answers are made: 1. Augustine thinketh David did evill therein, to number the people, quia Deus non jusserat, because God commanded him not. But this is no sufficient reason; for then it should be unlawfull for Princes now to number the people, they having no speciall warrant from God. 2. Simlerus saith that God was angrie with David, because, non curavit Domino persolvi tributum, hee did not cause this tribute here appointed to bee given unto God. So also Beda. But this was not the cause neither; for neither did Moses when he numbred the people, which he did thrice, *Exod.*38. *Numb.*10. and 26. Neither is it like that David was so ignorant of the Law. 3. Oleaster maketh this the reason, because the Lord promised to multiply the seed of Abraham, as the starres of Heaven, and the sand of the sea without number: therefore he was angrie whensoever they were numbred. But by this reason they should never have beene numbred at all: rather this might tend to Gods glorie, in seeing by the numbers of the people, how the Lord performed his promise. 4. This rather was the cause of Gods indignation, because David numbred the people for an evill end, ad gloriam suam, for his owne glorie, to rejoyce, and as it were, to put confidence in their multitude, *Tostat. qu.*9. Therefore, Hoc sive superbia, sive temeritas, sive ingratitudo, this either pride, or rashnesse, or ingratitude, was severely punished, Calvin.

Quæst. 134. in Exod.

QUEST. XVI. Whether this collection of money were commanded only at this time, or were to continue.

When thou takest. 1. Some thinke though here be no certaine time expressed, when this account of the people should be taken, whether everie yeare, or everie fifth yeare, as the ancient Romans used to doe: yet this is certaine, that whensoever the people was numbred, this summe of halfe a sicle of everie one was collected, Simler. Lippoman thinketh also that they were often numbred, ut gratia Dei agnosceretur, &c. that the grace and goodnesse of God might bee acknowledged in multiplying his people. And it is the received opinion of the Hebrewes, that this precept for the collection of this summe was perpetuall and anniversarie, toward the charge of repairing the Tabernacle, and maintaining of the sacrifices and other services. So also Calvin in 17. Matth. vers. 24.

2. But Iunius opinion is more probable, (with whom agreeth *Beza, annot. in Matth.*17.24. that this was a precept only for this time, and not to continue afterward, which he confirmeth by these reasons. 1. From the end and use of this money, which was to acknowledge their late redemption and deliverance out of the bondage of Egypt. 2. Moses himselfe did not exact this summe, when hee numbred the people againe, *Numb.*1. and the third time, *Numb.*26. 3. This money was not to be spent in the sacrifices which were consumed, but in the worke of the Tabernacle, which was permanent and remained: and so it was as a memoriall for them before the Lord, *vers.*16. And of this money now collected, which came to 100. talents of silver, and 1775. shekels, were made the sockets of the Sanctuarie, and of the veile, the hookes also and the fillets of the pillars, *Exod.*38.26,27. So that the end of this collection being extraordinarie, and for this time only, toward the building of the Tabernacle and the instruments thereof, it was not to be perpetuall. 4. And if this proportion had beene perpetually to be observed, for everie one to pay halfe a shekel toward the Tabernacle, Nehemiah would not have appointed another rate, that everie one should pay the third part of a shekel by the yeare toward the service of Gods house, *Nehem.*10.32.

3. But this further may be added, though this manner of collection was not enjoyned, as ordinarie and perpetuall, yet upon the like occasion, as to repaire the ruines of the Temple, they might raise Mosis tax upon the people, as Ioash did, 2 *Chron.*24.9. which was upon the like extraordinarie occasion: which ceasing, the collection also was intermitted, as Ioash said to the Priests, that having received money of the people, yet were slacke to repaire the decayed places of the Temple: Receive no more money of your acquaintance, except yee deliver it to repaire the ruines of the Temple, 2 *King.*12.7.

QUEST. XVII. Why this money was collected, and to what end.

Vers.12. They shall give everie man a redemption of his life. 1. Tostatus giveth this reason, because if at any time they were numbred, and did not pay this tax, the plague was sent among them, as in the time of David: and therefore it is added, that there be no plague among them, when thou countest them. But Moses himselfe, so often as he counted them, did not exact this summe of them, as is before shewed ſhewed, queſt.15. and yet the plague followed not. And there is another reaſon why the people were plagued, when they were numbred under David, as is likewiſe there declared. 2. But theſe reaſons may be yeelded, why the payment of this money was a redemption of their ſoules: 1. That hereby they might aſcribe their deliverance out of Egypt unto the Lord: Quare, ne pœna tanquam ſervis fugitivis infligere-tur, &c. therefore, leſt that ſome puniſhment might be inflicted upon them, as fugitive ſervants, it was fit that by this ſolemne rite they ſhould aſcribe their preſervation unto God, Calvin. This therefore was enjoyned them, in memoriam beneficiorum Dei, for a remembrance of Gods benefits, Galloſ. They might therefore be juſtly puniſhed for their ingratitude. 2. Seeing that this money collected was for the uſe of the Tabernacle, where the people did meet together, and there acknowledge their ſinnes, and aſked mercie and forgiveneſſe at Gods hands: in this reſpect alſo this collection tended to the redemption of their ſoules, becauſe it ſerved for the maintenance of the Tabernacle, and the Miniſterie thereof, which was inſtituted for the comfort of their ſoules, Gallaſ. 3. Obedientiam teſtabantur cenſu, &c. they did teſtifie their obedience by this tax, Simler. And by this meanes they were accounted as belonging unto God: therefore, qui illud non pendet, excluſus erit à populo Dei: hee that paid it not ſhould bee excluded from Gods people, Marbach. And might worthily be puniſhed becauſe of his contempt; and ſo by this obſtinate refuſall, did count himſelfe as none of Iſrael, and ſo not under Gods protection. To this purpoſe alſo Cyrill, Lib. 2. ſuper Ioan. They payed this tribute unto God, to ſignifie, that, Nemo eſt ſui capitis Dominus, &c. No man is Lord of himſelfe, but that we have all one Lord, which they did profeſſe by paying of this tribute. 4. And by this tribute Chriſt is ſhadowed forth, qui ſeipſum dedit in pretium redemptionis, &c. who gave himſelfe to bee a price of our redemption, which whoſoever apprehendeth by faith, is free from death, Marbach.

QUEST. XVIII. How much the ſicle of the Sanctuarie, and halfe ſicle was.

Verſ. 13. HAlfe a ſhekel, after the ſhekel of the Sanctuarie. 1. The weight of the ſhekel of the Sanctuarie is valued by the conſent of the moſt, at foure of the peeces called drachma, a dram, which is the eighth part of an ounce: a groat, when eight of them made an ounce. So Ioſephus calleth it, tetradrachma, of the value of foure old groats, that is, halfe an ounce, and the halfe thereof was δίδραγμον, two drams or groats. Arias Montanus for this allegeth the opinion of Moſes Gerundenſis, who at firſt diſſented from Salom. Iarchi, who valued the ſicle at halfe an ounce; but afterward changed his opinion upon this occaſion: this R. Moſes travelling out of Spaine into Paleſtina, comming to Acron now called Jacha, did there ſee a peece of ſilver ſhewed him by the inhabitants, which on the one ſide had the pot of manna, with this inſcription, ſhekel Iſrael, and on the other Aarons rod, with this title, Jeruſalem kedeſſah, holy Jeruſalem, in the ancient Samaritane characters; which peece of coine the ſaid R. Moſes weighed, and it came juſt to halfe an ounce: and there was likewiſe ſhewed unto him another peece with the verie ſame pictures, which was but halfe ſo much in weight, being but halfe the ſicle. Arias Montanus addeth further, that while he was at the Councell of Trent, there was brought unto him by a friend an ancient peece of ſilver, with the verie ſame figures and characters, which he likewiſe found to weigh halfe an ounce. Beza ſetteth downe the verie ſame deſcription of the ſhekel, which he had given him by Ambroſius Blancerus, in Matth. 17. verſ. 24.

2. Concerning the eſtimation of the ſhekel, being compared with money now current, Oſiander valueth it at the halfe Dollar, which is an ounce of ſilver, Marb. at the halfe aurei Rhenani, of the Rhene Crowne. Gallaſius out of Budæus ſaith, the Drachma, whereof the ſicle of the Sanctuarie contained foure, was of French money of Tours, three ſhillings ſix pence, and Didrachma, or halfe ſicle, was about the fifth part of the French Crowne, Marlorat: and the whole ſicle twice ſo much, that is, two five parts, which will amount to two ſhillings ſix pence ſtarling, or thereabout, that is, halfe an ounce. Arias Montanus valueth the ſhekel at foure Spaniſh Royals, or at foure Roman Julians, or two peeces of Venice coine, called Macigenori, or one Flanders peece, which goeth for fourteene Stivers. Pelargus maketh the ſicle equall to halfe of the Vallenſe coine, all commeth to the ſame rekoning.

3. Here the ſicle of the Sanctuarie is valued at 20. gerahs: ſo alſo Exech. 45.12. a gerah, Pelargus ſetteth at the value of ſeven Miſnian peeces: Oſiander at foure peeces of Wittenberg coine: but wee are not acquainted with thoſe kinds of money. Iunius ſaith it weighed 16. graines of barley: Montanus ſaith he found it in weight anſwerable to a peaſe, whereof twentie were equall in weight to the ſicle. But by the former eſtimate, ſeeing a ſicle weigheth but halfe an ounce ſtarling, which maketh two ſhillings ſix pence of Engliſh money, the gerah cannot be above j^d. ob. three halfe pence of our Engliſh money.

4. The Septuagint are here deceived, which call the ſicle δίδραγμον, allowing unto it but two drachmas, or drams, whereas the halfe ſicle contained ſo much, as is evident, Matth. 17.24. where everie one paid δίδραγμα, two drachmas, which was halfe a ſhekel, according to the rate and tax ſet by Moſes, toward the charge of the Tabernacle, but was then exacted by the Roman Emperours.

5. The ſicle was divided into divers parts: there was the halfe ſicle which is mentioned here, which was a quarter of an ounce, there was the third part of a ſhekel, Nehem. 10.32. which weighed ſix gerahs and an halfe, with a fixth part: and the fourth part of a ſhekel, 1 Sam. 9.8. which Montanus ſaith was in value as much as the Spaniſh Royall of ſilver, of our Engliſh money ſeven pence halfe penny.

6. As the ſicle was a kinde of money, ſo was it uſed for a weight, whereby they weighed all other metals, whether of gold, iron, or braſſe; yet we doe not finde that there were any ſicles, but onely of ſilver, as Numb. 7.38. the incenſe cup which was offered, was of ten ſhekels in weight, not in value: for ten ſhekels of gold in value, that is, ſo much gold as was worth ten ſhekels of ſilver, which was but 25. ſhillings five ounces, would have made no cup of any bigneſſe for ſilver. Beſide, here appeareth the error of Salom. Iarchi, that taketh the ſhekel for the pound weight: becauſe the head of Goliaths ſpeare is ſaid to weigh

weigh 600. shekels, 1 Sam. 17.7. which make but 300. ounces in the former account, that is, about 25. pound, which was a sufficient weight for the point of his speare: of 300. pound in weight it was not like to be, which had beene too massie and heavie for that use, Montan.

In apparat. lib. de mensur. sacris.

Quest. XIX. Whether there were divers kindes of shekels.

Vers. 13. After the shekel of the Sanctuarie. 1. The opinion of the most is, that there were two kinde of shekels, the common or prophane shekel, which weighed but ten gerahs, and the shekel of the Sanctuarie, which weighed twentie; the one was halfe an ounce, the other but a quarter: as likewise the usuall and common talent was but sixtie pound, the sacred talent one hundred twentie pound, Iun. Oleast. Vatab. Marb. But Montanus objecteth that the sicle which hee saw, and the other which R. Moses Gerundens. made mention of, was but halfe an ounce, and the halfe thereof but a quarter: so that it should seeme, that those were the usuall coines. Simlerus urgeth that place, Ezech. 48.12. where the Prophet exhorting the Princes to use just measures and weights, (speaking of common measures and weights) appointeth the sicle to weigh twentie gerahs. Iunius thinketh that the Prophet speaketh of the sacred sicle in that place: but the other seemeth more probable, because the Prophet there inveigheth against the oppressions and exactions of the Princes.

2. Arius Montanus saith it was called therefore the sacred sicle, because it was the sicle of Israel, who were an holy people unto God: but seeing the Lord speaking of Israel his people, maketh this difference, it seemeth there was a difference of shekels among them: for otherwise that distinction needed not.

3. Simlerus thinketh it was called the shekel of the Sanctuarie, that is, of a just and full weight, because the standard measure was kept in the Sanctuarie. And this may seeme the more probable, because the measures and weights which were commonly used, were altered and changed according to mens covetous desires, as the Prophet Amos noteth them, which made the Ephah little, and the shekel great: that is, in selling they used small measures, and in buying great weights: as Vatab. and Montanus expound that place, they did buy with one weight, and sell by another.

Amos 8. 5.

Quest. XX. Of the halfe shekel which Christ paid for tribute, what it was, and how it came to be paid for tribute.

Vers. 13. The halfe shekel shall be an offering to the Lord. How came it then to passe, that this halfe shekel afterward was paid to the Romane Emperours, and our Saviour himselfe paid it, Mat. 17.24. and taught others to doe the like, to give unto Cæsar that which was Cæsars, Matth. 22.22.

1. Some are of opinion that the poll money, which is called Κῆνσος, Matth. 17. 24. and the other called δηνάριον, the penny, Matth. 22. 19. were not all one: for this was imposed as tribute, by way of conquest upon the Jewes, according to their substance: the other they used to pay by the poll to the Temple, which the Romans also usurped to themselves, and diverted it from the originall use, Vide annot. Matth. 22.19. But we finde no mention made of any such double taske imposed upon the Jewes. Iosephus saith, that Vespasian enjoyned the Jewes yearely to bring binas drachmas, two drachma's into the Capitoll. Iunius thinketh there were two kinde of the coyne called denarius, the one of the Sanctuarie, which was double to the common, and equivalent to the didrachma, or halfe sicle: by this the Priests accounted, and the publicans and toll-gatherers by the other. But the denarius being a Latine name, and part of the tribute which they paid to the Romans, and so being a civill and prophane payment, is not like to have beene reckoned after the account of the Sanctuarie.

Neither was this denarius the same with the didrachma the halfe sicle, Matth. 17. for the denarius, the Roman penny, is almost the same with the Grecians drachma, the eighth part of an ounce, and the fourth part of a sicle, the tenth part of a French crowne, three shillings six pence French: Budæus: and about six pence halfe penny sterling, or thereabout: it was as much as an old groat, when eight groats made an ounce.

Therefore this is most likely, that in both places mention is made of tribute or poll money, as the Syrian Interpreter calleth it argentum capitationis, head or poll money, Mark. 12.14. And Beza saith that in his ancient Greeke copie, in stead of κῆνσον, tribute, he found ἐπικεφάλαιον, head money, in that place of Marke. But yet this was the difference, that whereas they were taxed at two drachma's, or Roman pence, they shewed unto Christ onely one of those tribute pence stamped with Cæsars image and superscription: two of the which pence made the didrachma, the double groat, or halfe sicle, which everie one was set at: and two of those double groats made but one stater, which is usually translated a peece of twentie pence; but it was more, a full sicle, which was halfe an ounce, which peece Peter found in a fishes mouth, and paid it for him and his Master, Matth. 17.25.

2. Now it so pleased God, that this portion which was first set apart for the use of the Temple, was usurped by the Roman Emperours, and turned to a civill use: 1. Because, Dei jugum excusserant, they had cast off the Lords yoke, the Lord departed from his right, and delivered them over unto hard Lords, Calvin. 2. And because they gave but with a grudging minde to the Temple, they are now turned over to others: for so it falleth out often, that, quod Deo denegamus, &c. hostis eripiat, that what wee deny unto God, the enemie taketh away, Gallas. 3. And because by the comming of Christ the externall worship prescribed by Moses was to bee abolished, God would have this pension taken away from the Temple whereby it was maintained, Simler. 4. And our blessed Saviour did not therein approve the unjust exactions and impositions of the Romans; but giveth this reason, lest we should offend, that is, ne suspicionem illis demus, &c. lest we should give them occasion of suspition, as though we would be seditious, or disturb the kingdome, Musculus. Christ therefore by his example teacheth the people not to move any tumult tumult and ſedition about their tribute, as they had before time, but willingly to ſubmit themſelves to that yoke, which for their ſinnes was laid upon them.

QUEST. XXI. Why they were numbred only from twentie yeares old.

Verſ.14. ALL that are numbred from twentie yeare old and above. 1. They which were under twentie yeare old were not numbred, but from twentie and upward, becauſe they begin at twentie yeares to be fit for ſervice in the Common-wealth at home, and abroad in warre, Toſtat. qu. 9. 2. The children then and women are not counted, but the one were reckoned with their fathers, the other went under the account of their husbands, Simler. 3. It is not here expreſſed, as they began at twentie, ſo at what age they ended the account. It is not like that the aged men were here reckoned, but ſuch only as were fit for warre, Numb. 1.3. which Ioſephus ſaith was from twentie untill the age of fiftie, Cajetan. And this may be gathered by the like, becauſe the Levites after fiftie gave over their ſervice in the Tabernacle, *Numb.*8.25. as to beare burthens, and to remove the Tabernacle: much more at that age were they to be freed from the ſervice of warre, which was much more painfull and cumberſome. 4. The Levites were accounted after another manner, they were numbred from a moneth old, *Numb.*3.39. Oleaſter, who here affirmeth that David offended God in numbring the people, becauſe hee would have all numbred, and not onely from twentie and above. But that was not the cauſe of the offence, for it is evident out of the text, that they onely were numbred which were ſtrong men, and able to draw ſwords, 2 *Sam.*24.9. See before queſt.15.

QUEST. XXII. Why the poore pay as much as the rich.

Verſ.15. THE rich ſhall not paſſe, and the poore ſhall not diminiſh, &c. Divers reaſons may bee yeelded hereof, why the ſame portion was required as well of the poore as rich. 1. It was done concordiæ cauſa, for concord and unitie: for otherwiſe there might have growne contention, the poore being unwilling to pay as much as the rich, *Toſtat. qu.*10. 2. And by this meanes alſo the poore were not deſpiſed: and, ne divites ſe ſanctiores reputarent pauperibus, leſt that the rich might have thought themſelves holier than the poore, in giving more unto the Tabernacle, the Lord would have an equall rate ſet, Lyran. 3. And this was preſcribed, ut numeri ratio conſtaret, that the number of the people might bee certainly knowne, which had beene uncertaine, if they had not all paid alike. 4. This was jus perſonale, a perſonall right, Calvin; & ad teſtandum obedientiam impoſitum, and impoſed to teſtifie their obedience, that hereby everie one ſhould acknowledge that they belonged unto God, Simler. 5. It was for the redemption of their ſoules, quæ unicuique æqualis fuit, which was equall to all, Gallaſ. 6. And to ſhew that God is no accepter of perſons: but that the poore and rich, if they bee faithfull, are alike accepted before him, Oſiander. 7. Hereby alſo is ſpiritually ſignified, that the ſpirituall price of our redemption by the bloud of Chriſt, doth belong equally unto all, Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether all theſe things were declared to Moſes at once.

Verſ.17. ALſo the Lord ſpake unto Moſes. 1. It appeareth by this, that all theſe things before rehearſed from chap.25. concerning the Tabernacle, and things thereunto belonging, were not delivered by one continued ſpeech from the Lord unto Moſes but that there were certaine breakings off, as is evident in this place: and likewiſe verſ. 11. afterward the Lord ſpake. 2. It alſo may bee gathered, that all theſe things were not delivered in one day unto Moſes, but in the ſpace of fortie dayes, as is ſhewed chap.31.18. that after the Lord had made an end of communing with Moſes, hee delivered him the tables of ſtone, which was in the end of fortie dayes, as is declared *Deut.*9.10. *Toſtat. qu.*11. The Lord could have delivered all theſe things at once unto Moſes, and have made him capable thereof, to underſtand and remember. But as the world was created in ſix dayes, which the Lord in his great power could have finiſhed all in one day, yea in a moment: yet it pleaſed him, for our better underſtanding, and for the eſtabliſhing of a perpetuall order to be obſerved, while the world endureth, in giving ſix dayes for worke, and one for reſt, to ſort out all his workes into ſix dayes: ſo likewiſe he divided the narration of theſe things unto Moſes, into the conference of many dayes.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the faſhion of the brazen laver.

Verſ.18. THOU ſhalt make a laver of braſſe, and his foot of braſſe. 1. By this deſcription it may be gathered, that this laver did not ſtand flat upon the ground, but was reared upon his foot; and conſequently it being ſo lifted up upon the foot or baſe, the Prieſts could not put their feet therein to waſh them. 2. R. Salomon therefore thinketh, that this laver was made broad and large below, and narrow above, and that it had two ſpouts of each ſide for the water to iſſue forth, and at the foot or bottome there was ſome place to receive the water, which otherwiſe would have run along upon the ground. This deſcription followeth Lyranus, Toſtat. Montan. Genevenſ. And Cajetan doth inferre thus much out of the text, becauſe it is ſaid, verſ. 19. Aaron and his ſonnes ſhall waſh their hands and feet, mimmenu, ex ipſa, out of it; not as the Latine, whom Beda followeth, in ea, in it. 3. This laver was ſet in the outward court, betweene the Altar of burnt offering and the Tabernacle, but not directly, for then it would have ſomewhat hindred the ſight of the Tabernacle: but it was placed toward the South ſide, which though it be not here expreſſed, may be gathered by the ſituation of the great brazen ſea, which Salomon made in ſtead thereof, which was ſo placed in the Temple, 1 *King.*7.39. Simler.

QUEST. XXV. Of the uſe of this brazen laver.

Verſ.20. WHen they go into the Tabernacle. 1. The Latine Interpreter readeth, When they go into the Tabernacle, &c. and when they go unto the altar, to offer incenſe, &c. which Toſtatus underſtandeth of the altar of incenſe: but that was included in the former clauſe, When they go into the Tabernacle: and the word is iſhah, which ſignifieth a ſacrifice made with fire, & he meaneth the altar of burnt offering; offering; that when they went in to doe any ſervice in the Tabernacle, or miniſtred at the Altar without, they ſhould waſh both their hands and feet. 2. Theſe parts above the reſt muſt bee waſhed, becauſe they were apteſt to gather ſoile, the feet with duſt, and the hands with touching and handling of other things, Toſtat. 3. It is evident then, that at the leaſt twice everie day they waſhed their hands and feet, at morning and even, for then without in the Court they offered the morning and evening ſacrifice: and in the Tabernacle they burned incenſe, and dreſſed the candleſticks. Lippoman alſo thinketh that they miniſtred at the Altar barefoot: as Moſes was bid to put off his ſhooes, when the Lord appeared unto him, *Exod.*3. But it is more like that they were ſhod with a kinde of light ſhooes called ſandals, as Toſtatus inferreth out of Ioſephus: for as they waſhed their feet from ſoile, when they began to miniſter; ſo it is like they had a care to keepe them cleane during their Miniſterie. 4. Neither did the Prieſts onely waſh themſelves thereat, but they alſo waſhed their ſacrifices, the inwards, and ſuch other parts, which were not to be carried forth into any profane place to be waſhed, Toſtatus, Lippoman, Ribera.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the myſticall application of the laver, wherein the Prieſts waſhed.

BY this waſhing of their hands and feet: 1. Beda underſtandeth the lavacre of Baptiſme, wherein we are firſt received into Chriſts Church, as the Prieſts firſt waſhed their hands and feet before they entred into the Tabernacle. 2. But becauſe Baptiſme is miniſtred once onely, whereas the Prieſts did waſh often, he rather would have thereby underſtood, ablutionem compunctionis & lachrymarum, the waſhing of compunction, or contrition, and of teares, ſo often as we come before the Lord. 3. And thereby was ſignified the ſpirituall waſhing and cleanſing of the ſoule, which the faithfull in the old Teſtament well underſtood, as Dauid ſaith, *Pſal.*51.7. Waſh me, and I ſhall be whiter than ſnow: and the Prophet Iſay alluding unto this rite ſaith, *Waſh you, make you cleane, chap.*1.16. Simler. 4. And for this cauſe our Saviour reproved the Phariſies, for being addicted ſo ſuperſtitiouſly unto their outward waſhings: wherein they committed a double fault, both in bringing in other kindes of waſhing than were preſcribed in the Law, and in being addicted only to the outward ceremony, Simler. 5. And by the hands, our works are ſignified; by the feet, the affections, that we ſhould both cleanſe our hearts, and be holy in our workes, when we come before the Lord, Toſtat. qu. 11. 6. And in that the Prieſts waſhed their hands and feet, Has ablutione apertam impuritatis confeſſionem edebant, They did by this waſhinggive an evident confeſſion of their impuritie and uncleanneſſe, Galla. 7. The Heathen had ſuch a cuſtome to waſh themſelves, when they ſacrificed to their gods: as this was a proverb among them, Sacra non tractanda illotis manibus, That holy things muſt not be handled with unwaſht hands, Calvin. 8. Therefore like as men doe not ſit downe at their owne table, but firſt they waſh their hands; ſo wee muſt not preſume to come neere the Lords table with unprepared affections, and uncleane hearts, Simler. Wee muſt be inwardly waſhed by the Spirit of grace, the water of life, whereof our Saviour ſpeaketh, *Ioh.*4.14. Marbach.

QUEST. XXVII. The difference betweene Moſes laver, and Salomons great ſea of braſſe.

Reconcil. NOw to finiſh up this matter concerning the laver, theſe differences may bee obſerved betweene it, and the great brazen ſea which Salomon made, and other veſſels to the like uſe. 1. They differed in the quantitie and large capacitie; Salomons was ten cubits wide, and five cubits deepe: it contained 200. baths, 1 *Kin.*7.26. being filled after the ordinarie manner: but 3000. baths, 2 *Chro.*4.5. that is, if it were filled up to the brim. So Cajetanus and Ribera doe well reconcile theſe places. The bath was of the ſame capacitie for liquid things, that the Epha was for dry, containing each of them ten pottles, or thereabout, foure or five gallons. And therefore becauſe of the great capacitie, it was called a ſea. But the laver that Moſes made was nothing ſo big: for it had not beene portable. 2. They were divers in faſhion; Moſes laver ſtood but upon one foot, the other was borne upon twelve oxen. And it was caſt with knops and flowers, and wilde cucumers, 1 King. 7. 24. But this laver is not ſo appointed to be made: it ſeemeth it was plaine. 3. There was alſo ſome difference in the number; Moſes cauſed but one laver to be made; Salomon beſide the great molten ſea, made ten other caldrons or ſmall lavers, 2 *Chron.*4.6. becauſe in Salomons Temple there was more uſe of ſuch veſſels than in Moſes Tabernacle. 4. Their uſes alſo were divers: Moſes laver ſerved both for the Prieſts to waſh thereat, and to waſh the ſacrifices: but Salomons great ſea ſerved onely for the Prieſts to waſh in, the other appertained to the ſacrifices, 2 *Chron.*4.6.

QUEST. XXVIII. Of the ſpices that went toward the making of the oyntment.

Verſ.23. TAke unto thee principall ſpices, &c. 1. Here are two confections appointed to be made, the firſt of things more liquid and moiſt, and the ſame to bee tempered with oyle to make an oyntment of: to the making whereof, in generall were required the principall or head ſpice or drug, which Iunius inclineth to thinke to be the Balme, which is the principall among ſuch precious drugs, and therefore is called of the Arabians Belſuaim, as having dominion or excelling among ſuch things: but that there is no quantitie expreſſed of this, as of the reſt that follow; neither were they yet come to the land of Canaan, where great ſtore of Balme was: it is therefore the generall name rather of theſe ſpices and drugs, which are named afterward in particular.

Of the myrrh. 2. The firſt is myrrh, which Oleaſter taketh for balme; but the Hebrew word מר mar, ſheweth it to be myrrh. There is another word tzeri, which is taken for balme, *Ieram.*8.22. There were two kindes of myrrh, one which of it ſelfe diſtilled out of the tree, and therefore it is called mar deror, myrrh of liberty, that is, freely flowing, Pagnine, Oleaſter: or right myrrh without mixture, Iun. Vatab. There was another which came of the cutting of the barke of the tree, which was not ſo good, Lyran. The myrrh tree groweth in Arabia five cubits high. Strabus writeth that the fume thereof would breed incurable diſeaſes in that countrey, niſi fumo ſtoracis occurrerent, but that they correct it with the perfume of ſtorax, &c. But it it is not like, that if it were so dangerous and offensive, that the Lord would have prescribed it to make the holy oyntment of. These properties rather it hath; it is good to heale wounds, to dry up rheume, to cure a stinking and unsavourie breath, to cleere the voyce, Plin. lib. 12. cap. 8. Pelargus.

3. The next is, קִנָּמוֹן kinemon, cynamom: whereof because there are two kindes, one that is verie sweet and pleasant, the other of no great smell: therefore it is added here, sweet cynamom, R. Salomon, Lyran. It cureth the biting of venomous beasts: it helpeth the dimnesse of the sight, Dioscorid. lib. 1. cap. 13. Pelarg. But whether it be the same cynamom which is in use among us, it is doubted: it seemeth to be of another sort, Simler. For our cynamom is rather pleasant to the taste than smell: whatsoever it was, it is certaine it gave a pleasant smell, Pro. 7. 17. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cynamom. Of Cynamom.

4. The third kinde is kaneh, which signifieth a cane, it is calamus odoratus, sweet calamus, which was a kinde of reed or cane of verie sweet savour, Genevens. It groweth like a shrub in India, about two cubits high, Strabus. It is full of knots and joynts, like the stalke of corne, Tostat. Calamus.

5. The fourth sort that goeth to the making of this oyntment is kidah, cassia, so called of the crookednesse thereof, of kadad, which signifieth to make crooked, Oleaster. Isidor taketh it for the name of a sweet herb: but it is rather a tree of pleasant smell, Lyranus, which groweth to a great height in watrie places, and giveth a pleasant smell, Tostat. It is not the common Cassia in Apothecaries shops, Simler. for that hath no such sweet smell, Oleaster. Cassia.

QUEST. XXIX. Of the manner of making and compounding this holy oyntment.

Vers. 24. And of oyle olive an Hin. 1. This oyntment is tempered with oyle to make it liquid: and beside, it is compounded of such things as were of liquid and soft substance: as they say the myrrh of it selfe will make an oyntment, Borrh. And therefore there is of that sort 500. sicles in weight, and so of cassia, but of cynamom and sweet calamus, onely of each 250. 2. Now although the word shekel, which must be here taken for the weight, not the value of the shekel, be not in the originall, yet it must be supplyed, and not pondo, so many pounds, as Iunius: for 500. pound weight of myrrh had been of too great a proportion to temper with an hin of oyle, which was not full three quarts, as much as 72. egges containe: but 500. shekels, counting a shekel at halfe an ounce, and 16. ounces to the pound, will make but 16. pound and a quarter. 3. Further, whereas mention is here made of the Apothecaries art, or, rokeach, the maker of oyntments: they are in errour, which thinke that the use of oyntments was not knowne in the time of the Trojan warres, Alexand. lib. 4. cap. 17. Seeing Moses was long before those times. The Lacedemonians also were too nice and curious, that expelled those which either made or sold oyntments: the skill and use whereof is commendable, onely the abuse and superfluitie is to be condemned. Athenæus lib. 15. cap. 14.

QUEST. XXX. Of the use of this oyntment in anoynting the Tabernacle.

Vers. 29. So thou shalt sanctifie them, &c. 1. Whereas Moses is commanded to anoynt with this oyntment the Tabernacle it selfe, the Arke, the Table, and the rest of the instruments: wee must not so understand, as though these things were anoynted all over; for neither would this quantitie of oyntment have served, to have anoynted everie part: and beside, the oyle, if it had beene laid over all the curtaines, would have blemished them: it is like therefore that some part was anoynted for the rest, as the high Priest, when hee was consecrated, was not all over anoynted, but onely in certaine parts. 2. But Lyranus his observation is somewhat curious, that Moses with his finger, in everie corner made a certaine figure with his finger dipped in the oyntment, like to the Greeke tau, which representeth the figure of the crosse. 3. By this ceremony, the Lord would have the Tabernacle and all the vessels thereof consecrated, and applyed to his service, so that, in communem hominum usum non veniant, they should no more returne unto common and prophane uses, Lippoman.

QUEST. XXXI. How all that touched the Tabernacle became holy.

Vers. 29. All that shall touch them shall be holy. 1. Which is not so to be understood, as that everie one which touched them should be thereby sanctified, as R. Salomon expoundeth: but the absurditie appeareth, in that they which touched those holy things, being not thereunto called, were slaine, as Uzzah, for staying the Arke with his hand, which he ought not to have touched, 2 Sam. 6. 6. Lyranus and Tostatus thus expound it, that everie one which toucheth them must first be sanctified. For the words doe imply a certaine holinesse transmitted by touching those things into that which toucheth them, not an holinesse preceding or going before. The same sense followeth Augustine, sanctificatum tetigerit, he shall be sanctified, that it may be lawfull for him to touch them. So also Ostiensis, sanctificetur prius, let him be sanctified before. But this holinesse going before by way of preparation, proceeded not of the touching of these things. 3. Some give this sense, sanctificatione indigebit, &c. shall have need to be sanctified, because he touched them being prophane, or uncleane, Oleaster. But in this sense it should not be generally taken, seeing the Priests that touched them needed not to be so sanctified, seeing they were holy already. 4. Some thus; Non possunt tractari, nisi à Sacerdotibus; These things may not be handled but by the Priests, Calvin. But then the Priests being holy already, should have received no holinesse by touching these things, as the words doe import. 5. Therefore that other sense of Augustine is to be preferred, Oblationes sua sanctitate imbuet; It shall indue the oblations with holinesse: for the things which they brought to offer, after they touched the Tabernacle, were holy unto God: and as the things, Non licebat uti in rebus privatis, sed in sacris, It was no more lawfull to use in private businesse as in the sacred affaires, Lippom. See the question before upon chap. 29. vers. 37. Quæst. 135. in Exod.

QUEST.

QUEST. XXXII. When and how Aaron and his sonnes were anoynted.

Vers.30. Thou shalt also anoynt Aaron and his sonnes. 1. Simlerus thinketh, that Pontifex primus, &c. the high Priest, and other inferiour Priests were first anointed. But it is more probable, that first the Tabernacle, and the things thereto belonging were anointed, and last of all the Priests, Pelarg. For the same order is likely to have beene observed in the consecrating of these things, which was in the framing and making. Now the Priests apparell was made last of all, chap. 9. And first the Tabernacle, as the place where the Priests should be employed, was to be prepared before the Priests should be consecrated, there to performe their service. 2. Lyranus thinketh, and so Tostatus, that onely Aaron was anointed in his consecration, both in his head and hands, and that his sonnes were not anointed with oyle at all, but only their eare, hand and foot touched with the bloud of the consecration Ram, as is prescribed, Exod 29.20. for this was the privilege of the high Priest, to be anointed in his head and hands, *Levit.*21.10. But that Aarons sonnes were anointed also at this time, is evident, *Exod.*40.15. Thou shalt anoint them, as thou diddest their father: but whether they had their heads onely anointed, as some thinke, it is uncertaine: that place, *Levit.*21.10. sheweth the privilege of the high Priests succeeding: they onely indeed were anointed, yet is there no mention made there of the anointing of their hands, but of filling their hands, that is, consecrating their Ministerie. 3. Therefore I subscribe here to the judgement of learned and judicious Iunius, that at this time both Aaron was anointed, and that on his head, *chap.*29.7. and his sonnes also, *Exod.*40.15. but how, or in what part they were anointed, is not expressed. Afterward only the high Priest was anointed, as *Levit.*4.3. If the Priest that is anointed doe sinne, that is, the high Priest: and Levit. 21.10. Also the high Priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oyle was powred, &c. The inferiour Priests were only anointed at their first consecration, by which anointing, they and their posteritie were consecrated to exercise a perpetuall Priesthood, as the Lord saith, *Exod.*40.15. Their anointing shall be a signe, that the priesthood shall be everlasting unto them throughout their generations. And in this sense Aristobulus is said to bee of the stocke of the anointed Priests, 2 *Macchab.*1.10. *Iun. in cap.*40. *vers.*15.

QUEST. XXXIII. Who are understood here by the name of the children of Israel, whether the Levites also are there comprehended.

Vers.31. Moreover thou shalt speake unto the children of Israel. 1. Tostatus, though in other places he thinketh the tribe of Levi to be excluded in this manner of speech, and to be distinguished from the children of Israel, as *chap.*29.28. the breast and shoulder there given unto the Priests, are said to be an heave offering of the children of Israel: so also *Numb.*1.2. it is said, take yee the summe of the congregation of the children of Israel, and yet the tribe of Levi was not numbred among them, as it followeth, *vers.*40. yet in this place he thinketh that the Levites are comprehended under the name of the children of Israel: for otherwise they should not be forbidden to make a composition like unto this perfume, for their private uses. 2. But it may appeare by these reasons, that the other tribes onely beside Levi, are called here by the name of the children of Israel. 1. Because in this verie chapter it is used in that sense, as *vers.*12. When thou shalt take the summe of the children of Israel: for here the Levites were not numbred, *Numb.*1.40. 2. This is a generall speech, vers. 32. None shall anoint mans flesh therewith, neither shall you make any composition like unto it, &c. But the Priests flesh might be anointed therewith: and it was lawfull for them to make the like composition for the use of the Tabernacle, therefore the Priests are not here comprehended. 3. Yet was it not lawfull for the Priests to prophane that holy oyntment, which is necessarily inferred before, *vers.*29. all that the oyntment touched was sanctified, and became holy: the Priests therefore knew well enough by this, that this oyntment was not to be put to any prophane use. And if it were not lawfull for the people to prophane the holy oyntment, much lesse for the Priests, to whose charge and care those holy things were committed. And by the like generall charge afterward, vers. 37. that none should make the like composition to the holy perfume: they also might understand this caveat, touching the holy oyntment to be as generall.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the forbidden uses whereunto this oyntment should not be put.

Vers.32. None shall anoint mans flesh. Three things are forbidden concerning the private use of this oyntment. 1. That no mans flesh should be anointed therewith; that is, for delight, or ornament, Tostat. nor otherwise than is before prescribed: for Aaron and his sons might be anointed therewith, as God before commanded, to consecrate them, Simler. 2. It was not lawfull for them to make any composition like unto it, though they put it to no use; for it might give an occasion of prophanation, to have but the like composition in their houses. As upon the same reason, where they are commanded to eat no leavened bread for seven daies in the feast of the Passeover, they are charged to remove leaven out of their houses, *Exod.*12.15. though they did not eat it, it was not lawfull so much as to have it in their houses, lest it might have beene an occasion to transgresse, *Tostat. qu.*13. They might make an oyntment of some of these, or of all them, so they did it not after the same manner, and with the like composition, Lyran. But I thinke rather with Oleaster and Berthaius, that they were not to make the like oyntment, either in number or weight: for the word tacan signifieth as well to number, as weigh.

What is meant here by stranger, or strange thing.

3. They are forbidden also to put any of it upon a stranger, which Augustine expoundeth extere natione upon one of a forraine nation: so also Tostatus, upon a Gentile. Some by a stranger understand any one of Israel that is not a Priest, Vatab. Simler. But the people of Israel, to whom this charge belongeth, did not use to anoint Priests; and if it were understood of anointing any person, so much is said before, none shall anoint mans flesh: therefore Iunius giveth a better sense, aut quisquam imponet ex eorei extranea: if any man shall put thereon, upon any strange (that is, prophane or common) thing, &c. which not consecrated to an holy use. So also Oleaster. 4. Tostatus here moveth divers questions, qu. 14, 15. as whether a Gentile not knowing the God of Israel, or if he did, yet were no proselyte nor converted to Judaisme, if he should use the like composition, whether he should therein offend, or not: and he resolveth he should not; because this Law is given onely to the children of Israel, who had bound themselves by covenant to keepe all the Lords ordinances: wherein he resolveth well, unlesse any such Gentile should doe it in the contempt of the God of Israel. But he might have spared all this labour: for these questions are altogether impertinent here, seeing, as is before shewed, not any strange person is here understood, but strange and common things.

QUEST. XXXV. Whether the anointing of Kings were not against this Law, in cap. 3. Habacuk.

Vers. 32. NOne shall anoint mans flesh. It is here doubted how it was lawfull afterward to anoint Kings and Prophets with this oile, wherewith the Priests onely, and the holy things were to bee anointed. 1. Some thinke it was another kinde of oile: as Hierom saith, Est aliud unguentum quo reges unguuntur, &c. There is another ointment, wherewith Kings were anointed. And that (he saith) was of two sorts: David and Salomon, cornu unguntur, are anointed with an horne: but Iehu and Hazael, lenticula, with a violl called in Hebrew, phach. But howsoever it may be thought that Iehu and Hazael were not anointed with the holy ointment, which was kept in the Temple at Jerusalem: yet it is like, that both Samuel filled his horne with this oile, wherewith David was anointed, 1 Sam. 16. 1. and that Zadok the Priest anointed Salomon therewith, 1 King. 1. 34. Simler.

2. Some thinke, that whereas they are forbidden to lay this oile upon any stranger, the Priests and Kings were not excepted, Borrhains. But if by strangers we understand persons; as well the King as other of the people were strangers in respect of the Priesthood: as it is said in that sense, chap. 29. 33. No stranger shall eat thereof, that is, none that is not of Aarons family.

3. Tostatus giveth this solution: That Kings are not here excluded, because Kings, when they were anointed, did not use this ointment, ad delectationem, for delight, which is here only forbidden, sed ad cultum Dei, but for the service and worship of God: because as the Lord appointed Priests for his service, so he ordained Kings in his stead to rule and governe his people, Tostat. quæst. 13. But it was not lawfull for any of the people to use this oile upon any occasion at all, whether for delight, or otherwise to consecrate any thing privatly: nor upon any person, not here excepted, which are the Priests only: for the words are generall.

4. Wherefore the best answer is this: God forbiddeth any other to be anointed with this ointment, saving the Priests, nisi scilicet aliter jusserit, unlesse he otherwise command: the Lord reserveth unto himselfe liberty above his Law, Simler. As yet there were no Kings in Israel, and therefore no mention is made of their anointing. So that this ointment was afterward used to anoint both Kings and Priests: solum sine novo Dei mandato; but not without a new commandement from God, Pelarg.

QUEST. XXXVI. What it is to be cut off from his people.

Vers. 33. HE shall be cut off from his people. 1. Pellicane seemeth to understand this of the penalty of death to be publikely inflicted upon him that should prophane this holy ointment: prohibet profanus usus sub pœna mortis, the prophane use is forbidden under paine of death. 2. Some, of the separation of them, de cœtu sanctorum, from the society and company of the faithfull, Gloss. interl. 3. Some, of the punishment, divinitus, by God himselfe to be imposed upon them, Osiander: as Uzzah for the like transgression was smitten with sudden death. 4. Tostatus both understandeth the extraordinary punishment, by the Lords hand, and the sentence of death to be denounced by the Magistrate, if any did continue in this offence, nec desistere vellet, and would not cease, or give over. 5. Vatablus referreth it to the spirituall and everlasting punishment of the soule: anima ejus peribit, his soule shall perish. 6. But all these three are better joyned together: that both God shall cut off such an one by sudden and extraordinary death in this world, and punish him eternally in the next: as in this sense it is said, that hee which was not circumcised should be cut off from his people, because he had broken the Lords covenant, Deut. 17. 16. Iunius ibid. For as the faithfull are said to be gathered to their people when they died, as Abraham, Gen. 25. 8. and Iacob, Gen. 49. 33. so the wicked and prophane shall be cut off from their people: that is, from the fellowship of the Saints in the next world, Tostat. qu. 18. unlesse they doe repent, Pelarg. Likewise, if such prophane persons did obstinately persist in their sinne, they were to die also by the hand of the Magistrate: in which sense it is said, that he that did sinne with an high hand, that is, presumptuously, shall be cut off from among his people, Numb. 15. 30.

QUEST. XXXVII. The spirituall application of this holy ointment.

THis holy ointment made of these foure simples, Myrrh, Cinamom, Calamus, and Cassia, 1. Some apply unto the senses, by Cinamom understanding two of them, the senses of seeing and hearing, ut à filthinesse purgati, that they should be purged from filthinesse, &c. Procop. 2. Some, by these foure would have signified the foure morall vertues, which must be tempered together, Gloss. ordinar. 3. Other by the Myrrh, the mortification of the flesh: by the Cinamom, of ashy and earthly colour, mortality; by the Cassia, growing in moist places, Baptisme, Gloss. interlinear. 4. But these applications are too curious, and improbable: therefore this holy ointment better setteth forth that holy ointment of the Spirit, wherewith the Messiah was anointed, who is said, Psal. 45. 8. to be anointed with the oile of gladnesse above his fellowes. Thus Hierome applieth it in 3. cap. Hab. and Cyril. lib. 12. in Levit. 5. But it signifieth not only the holy Ghost, which was powred upon Christ without measure: but that portion of grace, wherewith every one of Christs members is anointed, Osiander: that as without this ointment neither the Tabernacle, nor any part thereof was sanctified: so without the operation of the holy Ghost, all our labours and endevours are unprofitable, Marbach. 6. Pelargus more particularly applieth every one of theſe foure ſeverall ingredients: by the Myrrh, which is good to joyne, and as it were glue wounds together, and helpeth a ſtinking breath, and cleereth the voice, he underſtandeth the merit of Chriſts death, which healeth our wounds, and cureth our evill thoughts and words: by the Cinamom, which is good againſt poiſonfull beaſts, the ſpirituall force of Chriſts death, which prevaileth againſt Satan: by the ſweet Calamus, charity is ſignified, which covereth a multitude of ſinnes: by the Caſſia, which healeth the biting of vipers, the holy Sacrament of the Euchariſt, which is a ſpirituall medicine to the ſoule. But we have no direction in Scripture for any ſuch particular application. It ſufficeth that this ointment prefigured the ſpirit of grace, wherewith the faithfull are anointed: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Ye have an ointment from that Holy one, and knew all things, 1 Ioh. 2. 20.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Of the ſpices whereof the holy perfume was made.

Of ſtacte. Verſ. 34. TAke theſe ſpices, ſtacte, &c. Now followeth the compoſition of the perfume: 1. The firſt is called in Hebrew, nabaph, which ſignifieth a drop diſtilling: R. David, Vatablus, Oleaſter, take it for balm, which diſtilleth from the tree: ſome for ſtorax liquida, liquid ſtorax. But liquid things could not be beaten to powder, as this was, verſ. 36. Some interpret it pure myrrh, Genevenſ. But that was preſcribed before for the oyntment, called there mor. Rab. Salomon thinketh it was a kinde of gum. But there is great difference betweene ſtacte and gum: it was therefore the diſtilling of myrrh indurata, being hardned, Lippom. Which the Septuagint called before, ἀπὸ σμύρνης, the flower of myrrh, Simler.

Of onycha. 2. The next is שחלת, ſhecheleth, which Oleaſter would derive of ſhachal, a Lion, or Cat a mountaine, the ſweat or ordure whereof is of great ſavour: that which we call muske. R. David, and Papias take it for the root of a certaine odoriferous and fragrant herbe. But the moſt thinke it to be a little ſhell, like unto a ſmall oyſter or cockle, of the bigneſſe and colour of ones naile: which is found in India in the lakes, where nardus groweth, where the ſmall ſhelfiſh doe feed of nardus, and thereupon the ſhels become to be of an excellent ſweet ſmell, Dioſcorides lib. 2. cap. 20. So Lyranus, Toſtat. Pelargus. Some take it for cleare gum, Genevenſ. But that is not ſo apt to be beaten and pounded. Vatablus calleth it ungulam cabellinam, or aromaticum, which he taketh for a certaine ſpice, in colour and ſmoothneſſe, like unto a naile. But I preferre the third opinion, which is of the moſt received; that take it for a certaine ſhell, about the bigneſſe of the ſhell of the purple fiſh, Borrhaius.

Of galbanum. 3. Then followeth חלבנה, chelbenah, which receiveth the ſame name in the Greeke χαλβάνη, and in Latine galbanum. Lyranus is deceived, who deriveth it of gala, which ſignifieth milke in the Greeke tongue: whereas it commeth of cheleb, an Hebrew word, which ſignifieth fatnes, or, chalab, milke, Oleaſter. The firſt rather: it ſeemeth to be the juice or fatneſſe diſtilling from ſome tree, Oleaſter: not of ſtrong and evill ſavour, as R. Salomon: for then it had beene unfit to make a perfume of. Some thinke it the juice of an herbe called ferula, like unto fennell, Toſtat. Gloſſ. ordinar. But the notation of the word being derived of cheleb, fatneſſe, ſheweth Oleaſters opinion to be more probable. This galbanum hath very ſoveraigne properties, it is good againſt the cough, the falling-ſickneſſe, bruiſes, the ſmoake thereof driveth away ſerpents, Lippoman.

Of frankincenſe. 4. The fourth is לבנה, lebonah, which retaineth the ſame name in the Greeke, λίβανος, as the Septuagint here tranſlate: it is incenſe, frankincenſe. Some thinke it is called in Greeke libanum, of the hill Libanus in Arabia, not of Libanus in Phenicia, where the tall Cedars grow, Gloſſ. interlinear. But it commeth of laban, the Hebrew word, which ſignifieth white, Oleaſter. This frankincenſe commeth out of the tree, by cutting of the barke thereof, Dioſcorid. lib. 1. cap. 83. it groweth in Arabia, much like unto the maple tree in quality: naſcitur in Arabia ad aceris qualitatem. Unto this is added an epithite, זכה, zaccah, that is, pure, which the Latine Tranſlater readeth, thus lucidiſſimum, the bright or cleare incenſe, which is the beſt without any mixture, which is called thus maſculinum, the male frankincenſe, which is like unto a light white round ſtone, Toſtat.

QUEST. XXXIX. What is underſtood here by the word ſammim, ſpices.

Verſ. 34. THeſe ſpices with pure frankincenſe. 1. Some joyne the word ſammim, ſpices, with galbanum going before: reading thus, and ſweet galbanum. So Hierom, Toſtat. Lyranus, Lippom. Becauſe they ſay, galbanum when it is old loſeth his ſavour: but there is an Hebrew diſtinction over chelbenah, galbanum, which letteth, that it cannot be joyned with the word following. 2. Some referre it to the ſpices ſpoken of before in the firſt compoſition of the ointment: but they were of a divers nature, they were of a liquid ſubſtance to make an ointment of; theſe of a dry quality, fit to be made into powder. 3. Toſtatus taketh it for a certaine compoſition of divers kindes of ſpices, as it is ſaid, Geneſ. 37. 25. that the Camels of the Iſhmaelites were laden with aromata, ſpicerie: but beſide, the word there uſed, נכאת, is divers from ſammim, the word here tranſlated ſpices: theſe were no compounded confections here preſcribed, but the ſimples, becauſe every one muſt be beaten by it ſelfe alone, as it followeth in the end of the verſe. 4. Iunius interpreteth it, nardi folia cum ſpicis, the leaves of nard with the ſpike: becauſe, as Plinie writeth, it is the moſt excellent among ſweet ointments, lib. 12, cap. 12. and not onely the eare or cod of nard, but the very leaves alſo are of moſt fragrant ſmell: ſo the generall name of ſpices, or ſpicery he would have given unto it, becauſe of the excellencie. But nard, or ſpikenard, is a liquid ointment, ſuch as the woman powred upon the head of our Saviour, Mark. 14. 3. it was therefore fitter to make the liquid ointment before ſpoken of, than a dry perfume. 5. Wherefore Vatablus reading ſeemeth to be the beſt, who referreth it to the ſeverall ſweet odors before mentioned, namely, ſtacte, galbanum, onycha, theſe ſpices with pure myrrh.

QUEST.

QUEST. XL. Of the composition and manner of making this perfume.

Vers. 34. EVery one by it ſelfe alone. 1. The moſt reade, of each like weight, ſo the Latine, Chalde, Septuagint, Pagnin. But bad, which commeth of badad, ſignifieth alone, as it is ſaid of the leprous perſon, Levit. 13.46. badad jeſheb, he ſhall ſit or dwell alone. Oleaſter. The meaning then is, that theſe ſpices which make the perfume ſhould be beaten and pounded by themſelves alone, not tempered with oile as the other were that went to the making of the ointment, Iun. Vatab. The quantity is not expreſſed, becauſe he was to take of every one alike (the Hebrewes ſay of each 70. pound, but it is their conjecture only) and not in divers proportions, as the other ſpices were preſcribed to be, whereof the ointment was compounded.

2. They muſt be made by the art of the Apothecary, the word is rokach, which was uſed before in the compoſition of the ointment: the Latine tranſlateth, unguentarii, of the ointment maker, but not properly: for it was to be made rather by the perfumer, than maker of ointments: the word therefore is generall, and ſignifieth a confectioner or compounder of ſuch things, pigmentarii, Iun. Which is fitly tranſlated an Apothecary, who deales as well with powders and perfumes, as with ointments and electuaries.

3. They muſt be mingled. The word is memulach, which properly ſignifieth ſalitum, ſalted, Iunius; that is, mingled, as ſalt is with thoſe things which are ſalted. The perfume then muſt be ſalted, that is, reſolved or powdred as ſalt, one kinde with another, Oleaſter.

4. They muſt be mingled together, and yet pure. The word tahor, pure, is taken three wayes: 1. It ſignifieth that which is of a ſimple nature, without any compoſition at all: ſo God is ſaid to be a pure ſpirit. 2. That is pure, which is not mixed with any thing of another kinde: as wine is ſaid to be pure, when it is not mingled with water. 3. That is pure, which hath no impurity, corruption, or uncleanenеſſe in it, and in this ſenſe, this perfume is ſaid to be pure, that is, perfect and purified without any droſſe, Toſtat. qu. 15.

QUEST. XLI. The ſpirituall application of this incenſe.

THis holy perfume compounded of theſe foure kinds of ſpices, ſtacte, onyche, galbanum, incenſe. 1. Gregorie applieth to the foure morall vertues: for there is no vertue, ſi mixta aliis virtutibus non eſt, if it be not mixed with other vertues. 2. Iſidore by theſe foure underſtandeth the foure elements: by frankincenſe, the aire; by ſtacte, the water; by galbanum, the earth; by onyche, the fire: which ſheweth that the incenſe of praiſe muſt be offered unto God, and his glory ſet forth in all his creatures. 3. But moſt properly this incenſe and perfume ſignifieth our prayers, as the Prophet David applieth it, Pſal. 141. 2. And the odors are expounded to be the prayers of the Saints, Apoc. 8. 3. 4. Theſe odors muſt be beaten to powder, which ſignifieth the contrition of heart, Borrh. Opartet nos in minutias ſecare peccata; We muſt divide our ſinnes into ſmall peeces, that is, confeſſe them particularly unto God, Procop. 5. And as this perfume is to be offered unto God, ſo our prayers muſt only be directed unto him, Oſiander. Lib. Moral. c. 39.

QUEST. XLII. How the Lord talked with Moſes in the Mercie ſeat, whether in any viſible ſhape.

Vers. 36. WHere I will meet with thee, &c. 1. That is, in the Arke of the Teſtimony before mentioned, not in the Altar of incenſe, becauſe as Lyranus ſaith, the voice of the Lord was heard from the Mercie ſeat thither; for neither did it belong unto Moſes, but unto Aaron, to offer incenſe, and the Lord uſed to ſpeake unto Moſes, not from the Altar of incenſe, but from the Mercie ſeat, Numb. 7. 89. Toſtat. quæſt. 16. 2. But though in this he correcteth Lyranus upon good ground, yet he himſelfe is more groſſely deceived, that Moſes, who was privileged at all times to goe into the moſt holy place, videbat effigiem qua apparebat in propitiatorio, &c. he ſaw a certaine ſhape, which appeared in the Mercie ſeat, which was an Angell in a bodily appearance. And for this cauſe, he ſaith, the high Prieſt when he went into the moſt holy place, was with a cloud of incenſe to cover the Mercie ſeat, Levit. 16. 13. that the Angell in that viſible ſhape might not be ſeene, Toſtat. qu. 17. Contra. 1. God could frame a voice from the Mercy ſeat, without any ſuch viſible apparition: therefore it is ſuperfluous to imagine any ſuch. 2. Neither is it more like, that Moſes ſaw any image in the moſt holy place, than he did in mount Horeb, Deut. 4. 15. 3. The cloud of incenſe was to cover the Mercie ſeat, not to that end, but for reverence of the place, that the high Prieſt ſhould not gaze upon Gods ſeat.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. That it is lawfull to number the people upon juſt occaſion.

Vers. 12. WHen thou tak eſt the ſumme of the children of Iſrael, &c. It is not then unlawfull for Princes to take the numbers of their people, either to make choice of ſuch as are fit for warre, or for the impoſition of moderate and neceſſary taxes and ſubſidies: As here this people are numbred to pay a certaine ſumme toward the maintenance of the Tabernacle. Servius Bullus is noted to have beene the firſt that brought in this order of ſumming and muſtering the people in the Romane Commonwealth: which as a politike device may ſafely be reteined now of Chriſtian Magiſtrates; ſo that they do it not with oſtentation, as rejoycing in the numbers of the people, and as it were placing their confidence therein: which was Davids fault, when he cauſed Ioab to number the people, 2 Sam. 24. Simler. But Kings, when they ſee their people to multiply and increaſe, may thereby be ſtirred up to give the praiſe unto God: as the Wiſe-man ſaith, In the multitude of the people is the honour of a King: and for want of people commeth the deſtruction of the Prince, Prov. 14. 28.

2. Doct. God is no accepter of persons.

Vers.15. The rich shall not passe, and the poore shall not diminish from halfe a sicle. This sheweth that God is no accepter of persons: that the poore as well as the rich doe belong unto him: therefore God would have the poore to pay as much as the rich, lest they might have thought themselves to be lesse deare in Gods sight. So the Apostle saith, There is neither Iew, nor Grecian, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Iesus, Galath.3.28. Marbach.

3. Doct. The Ministers of the word are to be competently maintained.

Vers.16. And put it to the use of the Tabernacle. Here the common charge of the Tabernacle, and the things thereunto belonging lieth upon the contribution of the people: which sheweth how ready and carefull all sorts of men ought to be in maintenance of the Lords house: for he that is borne to inherit heaven, must thinke himselfe borne to maintaine the meanes that lead us unto heaven. Men are carefull to maintaine their labouring beasts, which worke for their corporall food: as the Apostle to this purpose alleageth that text out of the Law: Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the oxe that treadeth out the corne, 1 Cor.9.9. much more should the Ministers of Gods word be maintained, which labour for the food of our soules. To this purpose B. Babings.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Controv. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers.8. The perfume shall be perpetually before the Lord, &c. As this perfume was only to be censed to the Lord, which signifieth the prayers of the Saints: so God only through Christ must be invocated; this honour must not be given unto any other, Simler. for God only must be beleeved upon: as our blessed Saviour saith, Yee beleeve in God, beleeve also in me, Ioh.14.1. And men cannot call on him, in whom they have not beleeved, Rom.10.14.

2. Controv. Against superstitious censing of Churches.

NOw seeing that this perfume and incense was a type of the spirituall sacrifices and prayers of the faithfull, Psal.141.2. Apocal.8.3. which types and figures are now ceased: the superstition here of the Romanists and Grecians is discovered, that use censers and censing still in their Churches: not as a civill thing for reverence and decencie, but as a part of their religious service: which seeing it is now abrogate with other shadowes, the body being come, Coloss.2.17. I say with Gallasius, Caret testimonio verbi, & meum hominis commentum est; It wanteth the testimony of the word, and is a meere device of man.

3. Controv. Of the superstitious use of washing the hands among the Romanists.

Vers.21. So they shall wash their hands, &c. The Romanists have the like use, who when they addresse themselves to consecrate the host, and to approach unto the Altar, doe wash their fingers, muttering these words of the Prophet David, Psal.26.6. I will wash mine hands in innocencie, O Lord, and compasse thine Altar. The like fashion was retained among the Gentiles, among whom it was counted an impious thing χερσὶν ἀνίπτοις, with unwashen hands to handle holy things. But this outward ceremony did not make the idolatrous service of the Heathen acceptable: so neither is the superstitious worship of the Romanists thereby justified: who while they wash their hands, coenam Christi profanant, &c. doe profane Christs supper, and take away the fruitfull application and efficacie of his death, by instituting a new sacrifice, Gallas. And as Pilate washed his hands, yet delivered Christ over to be crucified: so they wash their hands, and yet doe crucifie Christ daily in the Masse, in offering him up still in sacrifice.

4. Controv. Against the superstitious Chrisme of the Romanists.

Vers.29. And thou shalt make of it the oile of holy ointment, &c. This holy ointment was a type and figure of the spirituall ointment, the graces and gifts of Gods spirit, which should be shed upon the faithfull: the Romanists then in consecrating Chrisme mixed with balme to anoint their Bishops and Priests, se veteris legis sacerdotes, non ministros Christi profitentur, doe professe themselves to be Priests of the Law, not Ministers of the Gospell, Gallas. And after this manner doe they consecrate their Chrisme: first the mitred Bishop muttereth certaine charmes and inchanted words over the Chrisme, and then bloweth upon it: and after him come in their order twelve Priests standing by, who likewise breath over the Chrisme: then the Bishop useth certaine exorcismes with prayers, wherein he maketh mention of Moses, Aaron, David, the Prophets, Martyrs, praying that this Chrisme may have power to conferre the like gifts, as they had. Then he putteth to a little balme, and at the last boweth himselfe to the Chrisme, with these words: Ave sanctum Chrisma; All haile holy Chrisme. The like doe all the Priests in their order: and so they make an Idoll of their Chrisme, ex Gallasio. But thus to consecrate their Chrisme, they never learned of Christ, nor his Apostles. Saint Iohn sheweth what is the ointment, and anointing of Christians: Yee have an ointment from him, which is holy, 1 Epist.2.20. And vers.27. The ointment or Chrisme, which ye received of him, dwelleth in you, &c. and the same Chrisme or ointment teacheth you all things, &c. Wee have received no other ointment or Chrisme of Christ, but the graces of the Spirit, which are bestowed upon the faithfull.

6. Morall

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. To come to the Sacraments with prepared affections.

Vers. 19. Aaron and his sonnes shall wash their hands and feet thereat, when they goe unto the Altar. This washing of the hands and feet, teacheth men, ut cautiore cura actus suos & cogitatus discutiant, &c. that they should carefully examine, and purge their acts and thoughts, and so come to be made partakers of the holy Sacraments: remembring what Saint Paul saith, 1 Cor. 11.29. He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, Beda. This washing of the hands and feet therefore sheweth, with what preparation and diligent examination we should come into Gods presence. Augustine saith well: Si macula in veste aut corpore apparet, non audes intrare, si vero sordida mens & conscientia, nihil times, &c. If there be a spot in thy body, or rayment, thou darest not goe in, but if thy minde and conscience be filthy and uncleane, thou feareſt nothing, &c. Thus the Preacher admonisheth, Take heed unto thy feet, when thou entrest into the house of God, Eccles. 4.17. By the feet he understandeth the affections, wherewith the soule is carried, as the body with feet.

2. Observ. Against the contempt of the Ministerie.

Vers. 32. YE shall not make any composition like unto it. Which therefore is commanded, that holy things be not prophaned: Neve Ecclesiasticum Ministerium ludibrio & contemptui hominum exponatur: And that the Ecclesiasticall Ministerie be not exposed to the scorne and contempt of men, Lippom. As it is in the Psalm. 105. 15. Touch not mine anointed, and doe my Prophets no harme. Which sheweth their great prophaneneſſe, who both speake and thinke basely of the Ministers of the Gospell, and despise the vocation of the Ministery, and hold it as a base thing; wherein men doe bewray their prophane and unbeleeving heart, who can have no great hope of salvation, despising the meanes whereby they should be brought thither.

3. Observ. Against flattery: in giving divine titles unto men.

Vers. 37. YOu shall not make any composition like this perfume. Precibus & laudibus Divinis non debemus uti in adulationibus humanis; Wee must not use the praises of God in humane flatterings, Glos. ordinar. As the people that gave applause unto Herod, saying, it was the voice of God, and not of man, Act. 12. Basil also giveth this note, Quicunq; bene agit, Deo non sibi adscribat; He that doth well, let him ascribe it unto God, and not to himselfe. And so accordingly I yeeld unto thy divine Majesty, most gracious God and heavenly Father, all bounden thankes through our blessed Lord Christ Jesus, that it hath pleased thy divine goodneſſe thus far to strengthen and assist mee thy unworthy servant, and weake instrument, in this worke, trusting to the same gracious helpe for the finishing and accomplishing of the same to thy glory, Amen.

The end of the first booke of the second part, or tome of this Commentarie upon Exodus.

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE SECOND PART OR TOME OF THIS COMMENTARIE UPON EXODVS:

VVherein is shewed the practice and execution of the Lawes and Ordinances before prescribed;

VVhich consisteth of the Israelites disobedience to the Morall law, in their apostasie, and falling away to idolatrie: and their obedience afterward upon their reconciliation to the Ceremonials,

In the willing offerings of the people toward the Tabernacle; the diligence of the workmen in making it; the faithfulnesse of Moses, in the approbation of their worke, and the erection of the Tabernacle.

LONDON,
Printed by the Assignes of THOMAS MAN, PAVL MAN, and IONAH MAN. 1633.

REVERENDO IN CHRISTO PATRI AC DOMINO D. THOMÆ DIVINA PROvidentia Episcopo Londinensi, Dioceſano ſuo, ſalutem in Chriſto ſempiternam.

ANui jam ſexdecim (Reverendiſſime Præſul) ex eo tempore effluxerunt, cum Synopſis mea, quæ tum primò in lucem prodiit, tuæ cenſuræ & judicio à Reverendiſſimo Archiepiſcopo Caniuarienſi commiſſa, & commendata fuerit. Vt primæ illæ lucubrationes meæ te facilem Cenſorem invenerunt; ſic poſteriores iſtæ, te, ut ſpero, æquum judicem reperturæ ſunt. Cum Ambroſio hoc libere profiteor; Malo tuo corrigatur judicio, ſi quid mover, quàm laudari à tè, quod ab aliis reprehendatur: non eſt longi ſubtelliii iſta judicatio, facile eſt tibi de noſtris judicare. Epiſtol. 40.

Dicam jam paucis, quid à me in hoc opere præſtitum ſit. In tribus maximè me compendio, & commodo ſuo conſuluiſſe, & proſpexiſſe lector inveniet: Primò dum varias authorum ſententias de graviſſimis quæſtionibus inter ſe comparo, & ſimul uno intuitu oculis ſubjicio; labori ſuo in poſterum hac ex parte parcet, qui hoſce noſtros commentarios legere dignetur. Deinde, cum authores illi varii, unde hæc noſtra deſumpta ſunt, vix poſſint pretio 50. librarum comparari, & rationem me ſumptuum habuiſſe judicabit lector humanus, cùm centeſima parte venalis ſit hic liber. Tertiò, cùm collatis inter ſe diſcrepantibus plurimorum ſententiis, illam calculo meo paſſim comprobaverim, quæ ad veritatem proxime accedat, & hìc adjutum ſe ſentiet, & judicium confirmatum (qui huc animum applicet) altero jam præeunte, & viam monſtrante. Atque hæc feci, ut Auguſtinus Hieronymo, in eorum gratiam, quibus aut non vacat propter alia negocia, aut non valent propter alienam linguam tam multa legere, & cognoſcere. Video tamen, qualeſcunque mei conatus fuerint, illos omnibus non comprobari. Alii ſcriptis nomen meum lacerant, alii verbis in libros meos invehuntur, &, quod dudum expertus ſum, ſtudiis & conatibus. Alii ſe mihi minime favere prodiderunt, tanquam nimiam meam (ut credo) incuſantes diligentiam. Sed iſta me non movent: utcunque mihi iniqua menſura metiantur homines, obliti illius præcepti, non ſit in re menſura major, nec menſura minor; quod fit, ut commodè quidam interpretatur, Apolog. Pamphil.

tur, quando aut plus donatur rebus, quam merita depoſcunt, vel ſubtrahitur rebus, quod debetur. Æquiſſimum retributorem Seruatorem meum Optim. Maxim. expecto, qui Apoſtolos ſuos, fideleſque omnes ſeruos, iſtis verbis erigit, & conſolatur: Luk.6.23. Gaudete, &c. quià multa eſt merces veſtra in cœlis. Iſta, inquam, mihi parum moleſta ſunt, neq; ab incepto itinere revocabunt. Ad ſcribendum fateor me primò impulit juvenilis fervor, ſcribentem aluit proficiendi ſpes, nunc ſcribendo proficienti aliorum proponitur & quæritur commodum. Militem pugnantem mori, Epiſcopum orantem glorioſum eſt: & ſi optionem mihi dare dignetur miſericors Deus, in ſcripturas me commentantem, & ſcribentem, diem meum extremum obire, mihi in votis eſt. Denique Act.20.24. cum Apoſtolo lætus pronuncio: Nullius rei rationem habeo, neque vita mea mihi chara eſt, ut peragam curſum meum cum gaudio, & miniſterium quod acepi à Domino Ieſu.

Tibi vero ſat ſcio (humaniſſime Domine) miniſtrorum ſtudia grata ſunt, & accepta: & tam in ſcriptores, quàm concionatores, qui gregi paſcendo operam dant, te clementem & mitem fore ſperamus, qui ipſe in hoc genere exercitatus es. Iſto modo non oculi ſolum noſtri, ſed animi in te erecti erunt, & re ipſa experieris, quod olim ſcripſit De dignitat. Epiſcopal. c.2. Hieronymus ad Theophilum: Tu offers oſculum, illi colla ſubmittunt, exhibes militem, ducem impetras, quaſi unus in pluribus es, ut ſis unus ex pluribus. Sic locus ille ſublimis, quem poſſides, non tam tibi dignitati erit, quam tu illi ornamento: Ad Pammach. cap.3. ut bene Ambroſius; Dignum eſt, ut dignitas ſacerdotalis primò noſcatur à nobis, deinde ſervetur. Et recte iterum Hieronymus: Minus eſt tenere ſacerdotium, quàm mereri.

Sed vereor ne tuæ reverentiæ gravioribus negotiis occupatæ, ſi iſto modo pergerem, moleſtiam faceſſerem; ſic tibi felicem rerum omnium & proſperum ſucceſſum precatus in Domino, deſino, importunæ meæ ruſticitatis veniam petens; & ſic lineolis hiſce exitum dabit Hieronymi ſententiola: Hæc ad brevem lucubrationem celeri ſermone dictavi, &c. quod idcirco dixi ut qui non ignoſcat ingenio, vel ignoſcat tempori. Dat. Barleæ ſummo mane 5. Calend. Maii.

Tuæ reverentiæ obſervantiſſimus,

Andreas VVillet.

Chap. XXXI.

1. The Method and Argument.

This second booke sheweth the execution of the Lawes prescribed vnto the people, in the former booke of this second part, or tome: which execution consisteth in the declaration of the peoples disobedience to the Morall law, and their falling from God by their idolatrie, with their reconciliation, to chap. 35. And of their obedience to the ceremoniall prescriptions, touching the erecting of the Tabernacle, with the parts, ornaments, and services thereof, in the six last chapters.

In the former of these is set forth the sinne of the people, chap. 32. then their reconciliation, chap. 33. and afterward the renuing of the covenant, and the restoring of the Law written in the tables of stone, chap. 34.

In the second is declared: 1. The readinesse of the people in offering their gifts toward the making of the Tabernacle, chap. 35, 36. 2. The diligence of the work-men in framing all things according to the patterne, chap. 36, 37, 38, 39. 3. Moses approving of the worke, chap. 39. vers. 33. and the erecting and setting up of the Tabernacle, chap. 40.

But first of all, the Lord giveth certaine caveats and provisions to be observed, before they should set the themselves toward this worke in building the Tabernacle, and they are two, which are contained in this chapter: the first, concerning the work-men and instruments, by whom this worke should be undertaken, to vers. 12. the second, of the time, that during this businesse, the Sabbath notwithstanding should be kept, to vers. 18.

First, concerning the work-men, three things are declared: 1. Their vocation and calling, who they were, whom the Lord had called and appointed, Bezaleel, vers. 2. and Aholiab. vers. 6. 2. Their gifts, whereby they are made able and fit for this worke, are rehearsed, vers. 3, 4, 5. 3. Their worke is appointed, which is either of the Tabernacle it selfe, vers. 7. or of the things which belonged to the Tabernacle, vers. 8, 9. or of the instruments necessary for the service thereof: the Priests apparell, anointing oile, and perfume, vers. 10, 11.

Secondly, they are charged to keepe the Sabbath, vers. 13. which charge is renued, vers. 16. enforced by three reasons: 1. From the end; it is a signe betweene the Lord and them, vers. 13. 2. From the punishment of death threatned to the transgressors, vers. 14, 15. 3. From Gods example, that rested on the seuenth day, vers. 17.

Then followeth the ratification of all this, the delivering of the tables vnto Moses, whereby all before delivered vnto Moses, is warranted, confirmed, and as it were sealed.

2. The divers readings.

Vers. 7. The Tent of the meeting together. I. V. better than, the Tabernacle of the meeting together. A. or, the Tabernacle of the Congregation. B. G. P. or, the Tabernacle of the Covenant. L. C. or, the Tabernacle of the Testimonie. S. the words are אהל מועד, ohel moghed, the Tent of meeting together. I. V.

Vers. 10. The garments of the ministration, and the holy garments for Aaron. G. B. I. C. A. P. not, the ministring garments of Aaron. L. S. for here the word בגדי, bigdhe, twice repeated, is omitted, or, the vestments wherein the things remaining are wrapped up. V. for here, wrapped up, is added: the word שרת, sharad, signifieth to remaine, but shered, is a ministery, or service. See afterward, qu. 9. I. B. C. cha cater.

3. The questions discussed.

Quest. I. How the Lord is said to call Bezaleel by name.

Vers. 2. Behold I have called by name, Bezaleel. 1. After that the Lord had made an end of shewing vnto Moses all things belonging to the Tabernacle, which he would have made, lest Moses might have have beene troubled how to finde workmen, to undertake such a curious and cunning worke, the Lord preventeth this doubt of Moses, and telleth him that he had provided such as should take it in hand, Tostat. qu. 1.2. And he saith, he had called by name, that is, had specially appointed him to that businesse: for so this phrase is used, when the Lord sheweth his speciall care toward one, either in ordaining him as an instrument of some great worke, as the Lord saith of Cyrus, that he had called him by name, Isai. 45.4. or it is an argument of Gods great love toward such as he calleth by name: as chap. 33.17. the Lord saith to Moses, I know thee by name, and of Israel, Isai. 43.1. Feare not, I have redeemed thee, and called thee by name, Pelarg. Simler. 3. This sheweth also, that whereas the Lord had appointed divers workemen beside: for all the worke could not goe thorow one mans hand, or two: yet he had named Bezaleel, to be chiefe, and the directer of others, Tostat. qu. 1.

QUEST. II. Whether Caleb the sonne of Iephunneh were grandfather to this Bezaleel.

Vers. 2. THE sonne of Uri, the sonne of Chur. Which Chur, or Hur, was the sonne of Caleb, for Caleb of Ephrath begat Chur, Chur begat Uri, and Uri begat Bezaleel, 1 Chron. 2.21, 22. But hereupon ariseth a great question, seeing Caleb was but forty yeere old, when hee was sent by Moses to search out the land, Iosh. 14.7. which was the next yeere after this, in the second yeere of their comming out of Egypt, Numb. 13. how Caleb being but fortie yeeres old, could be great grandfather unto Bezaleel.

1. Hugo de S. Victor. saith it is, insolubilis quæstio, a question not to be dissolved: for by this reckoning Bezaleel could not be above two yeere old; which was impossible, that a child so young should be fit for this worke. And so he leaveth this doubt without further answer. 2. R. Salomon would give some satisfaction: but in stead of avoiding one inconvenience, he falleth into many: he saith that Caleb at eight yeeres old married his first wife Azuba, and she died in the first yeere: the next, which was his ninth, he married Ephrath, his second wife, which was otherwise called Marie, the sister of Moses: and of her he begat Chur in his tenth yeere: Chur in the end of his tenth yeere, which was the 21. of Caleb, begate Uri: Uri in his ninth yeare, which was the 30. of Caleb, begat Bezaleel, and Bezaleel in his tenth yeere, which was the 40. of Calebs age, began to frame the Sanctuary.

Contra. But here many unlikely things are affirmed: 1. That Caleb should take a wife at eight yeeres old. 2. That he at nine should have to wife Miriam, that was very neere ninety yeeres old; for she was elder than Moses, who was now 81. yeeres old, or thereabout: for shee was of some discretion when Moses was but a childe, as appeareth by her answer to Pharaohs daughter, Exod. 2. shee might be then some ten or twelve yeeres old. 3. It is as unlikely that Chur and Uri should have children at the age of ten yeeres. 4. And as improbable it is, that Bezaleel at ten yeeres should be a principall workman in the Sanctuarie.

2. Lyranus also is deceived: who saith, that those there mentioned, 1 Chron. 2.21, 22. Chur, Uri, Bezaleel, were not the same with these, yet of the same name, and of the same tribe. But, as Tostatus reasoneth, it is not like that three in one line, the sonne, father, and grandfather, should be of the same name, with three other following one another in the same line and kinred, as sonne, father, and grandfather, and yet not be the same men: Non credo in tota scriptura reperiri; I thinke (saith he) the like cannot be found in all the Scripture.

3. Tostatus therefore is of opinion, that there were two Calebs, and that this Caleb the sonne of Iephunneh could not be the grandfather, but the other, which was the sonne of Ezram: which he proveth by these two arguments: 1. Because these two Calebs came of divers fathers, the one was the sonne of Ezra, 1 Chron. 2.18. the other the sonne of Iephunneh, 1 Chron. 4.15. wherein Vatablus in his annotation there taketh to be Ezron: but therein is deceived, and must needs so holding fall into the same inconvenience, that Caleb at 40. yeeres was a great grandfather. 2. Because Caleb the sonne of Ezrom, if hee had beene now living could not have beene lesse than 167. yeere old, as it may be thus gathered: Let it be granted that Pharez begat Ezrom at 25. Ezrom begat Caleb at 25. which make 50. yeeres: and the time of the Israelites being in Egypt was 215. from that take 50. yeeres, when Caleb was borne, and there remaineth 165. and two yeeres more were run, when Caleb was sent to spie out the land: so if it were that Caleb, he should be then 167. yeere old, whereas he himselfe saith he was but forty, Tostat.

4. But Tostatus, as he ghesseth right, that there were more than one Caleb, and that Caleb the sonne of Iephunneh could not be the great grandfather to this Bezaleel: so yet herein he is deceived; in making but two Calebs in all; Caleb dupliciter invenitur, Caleb is found to be double, that is, two of that name: whereas it is evident there were three: one was Caleb, called also Chelubai, the sonne of Ezron, 1 Chron. 2.9.18. the second Caleb was the sonne of Chur or Hur, the sonne of the first Caleb, 1 Chron. 1.50. And the third Caleb was the sonne of Iephunneh, 1 Chron. 4.15. Iun. ibid. The first of these three was the great grandfather unto this Bezaleel.

5. But it will be objected, against this answer, that the first Caleb called also Chelubai, had a daughter called Achsah, 1 Chron. 2.49. And this Achsah was daughter to the younger Caleb the sonne of Iephunneh, which was married to Othniel, Iud. 1.13. Whereunto the answer is this, that the first or elder Caleb might have a daughter called Achsah, and the younger Caleb also might call his daughter after the same name, Iun. annot. 1 Chron. 2.49. for upon the reasons before alleaged, it can by no meanes bee admitted, that Caleb of Iephunneh should bee the father of this Chur or Hur, and so great grandfather to Bezaleel.

[ ] QUEST.

QUEST. III. Whether this Hur were the same before mentioned, chap. 24. 14. supposed to be Moses brother in law.

Vers. 2. THe sonne of Uri the son of Chur. 1. This Chur or Hur is held by the most to have been the same Hur mentioned chap. 17. which helped to stay Moses hands, whom they affirme to have married Miriam or Mary Moses and Aarons sister; So Iosephus, Lyranus, Simlerus. But Tostatus taketh exception hereunto, because this Hur could not be lesse than 140. yeere old, or thereabout; which was too great an age for any to live in those daies: and therefore he thinketh it was not the same Hur, whom Moses left with Aaron, to bee Iudges among the people in his absence, while he returned. And thus they would collect the yeeres of the age of Hur: Phares might beget Ezrom at 25. Ezrom, Caleb at 25. Caleb, Chur at 25. which make yeeres 75: this summe being taken from 215. the time of Israels sojourning in Egypt, there will remaine 140. But Tostatus buildeth upon uncertaine suppositions: for these might as well beget at fortie or fiftie yeeres, as at 25. For it is directly expressed of Hezron, that he had a child at 60. yeeres, after hee had married his third wife, 1 Chron. 2. 21. And he had Caleb by his second wife Ephrath: he had another wife, Azubah before, 1 Chron. 2. 19. he may therefore bee supposed to have begotten Caleb. at 60. yeeres or thereabout, and Caleb likewise his sonne at the same yeeres or more: wee may allow unto them both 120. yeeres, that they at 60. had those children: so that Hur should not be in this account above 95 yeere old. And it is not necessarie to suppose him to bee so old; seeing he is in the same degree from Ezrom, of the tribe of Iudah, that came downe with his father into Egypt; which Moses was in, from Kohath of Levi, that likewise descended into Egypt with his father, Gen. 46. 11. for Ezron begat Caleb, and Caleb Hur: so Kohath begat Amram, and Amram Moses. Hur was in the third generation or degree from Ezron, and so was Moses from Kohath: and the Hebrewes hold, that Amram begat Moses at 77. yeeres. By this comparing of these two lines, it is not necessarie to make Hur much elder than Moses. Therefore whether he were the same Hur or not, Tostatus reason inforceth not the contrarie, but that in respect of his age, this Hur might bee the same before mentioned.

QUEST. IIII. Of the age of Bezaleel.

2. FUrther, Tostatus according to the same computation maketh Bezaleel to be elder than Moses 91. or 92. yeers old. But it is not like, that the Lord would have chosen so aged a man to worke with his hands, in the worke of the Tabernacle: for hee as well wrought himselfe, as taught, and gave direction to others, as is here expressed vers. 4. especially seeing the Levites were at fiftie yeeres discharged from the service of the Tabernacle. Then supposing his grandfather Hur to have been now 90. yeere old, or thereabout, his grandchild Bezaleel might be thirtie or fortie yeeres old: which was a fit age both for ripenes of understanding, and for agilitie and strength in working. Both these supputations then of Tostatus are but weakly grounded, concerning the age of Hur and Bazaleel.

QUEST. V. Of the difference betweene the gifts of wisdome, understanding and knowledge.

Vers. 3. I have filled with the Spirit of God, in wisedome, and understanding, and in knowledge. 1. Some by these three doe understand the same thing, and thinke that nothing else is here expressed, but the same thing in divers words, that God had indued them with singular skill and dexteritie to make the workes of the Tabernacle: Ex. Tostat. qu. 2. But it is not like that so many words are set downe without speciall use and signification: the rehearsall of the same thing in divers words without some difference, would have seemed superfluous. 2. Augustines opinion is, hoc significativè dictum esse, that these things are spoken in another signification: that these three, the spirit of wisedome, understanding, and knowledge, must be referred to those things which are hereby signified. But the text it self sheweth, that this wisedome, understanding and knowledge are referred to the skill of working in all manner of workes for the Tabernacle: as vers. 4. to finde out curious workes, to worke in gold, in silver, and in brasse, &c. 3. Salomon thus distinguisheth them; he taketh wisdome, for that cunning which is infused of God; understanding, for that skill, which a man findeth out of himselfe; and knowledge, for that, which he learneth by the instruction and teaching of another. But seeing the Spirit of God was their teacher, it is not like that they learned of any other. And they taught others, chap. 35. 34. they were not taught of others. Quæst. 85. in Exod.

4. Tostatus thus doth interpret them: By wisedome hee understandeth the habit of skill infused of God; by understanding, their naturall subtiltie of wit; by knowledge, the cunning which they had learned by instruction and experience. And of the habits infused, some were totally and wholly given them, some were augmented and increased only. And all these three are wrought by Gods Spirit, though not in the same degree and manner: the wisedome, which is the infused skill, was only wrought by God: the naturall aptnes of wit was given them by God, but yet by natural meanes, nothing at all by their own industrie: the knowledge obtained by instruction was also the gift of God, but by their owne labour and diligence.

Contra. But this may be misliked in Tostatus interpretation, that hee thinketh they had the knowledge of Arts gotten by experience: for whence should they have this experience? in Egypt they were only occupied in servile workes, in working in clay, and making of bricke: therefore it is not like, that these were aforehand practised in any such curious Arts, Simler.

5. Oleaster therefore maketh this difference betweene these three: by חכמה chocmah, wisedome, or cunning, he understandeth the internall conceit and knowledge, out of the which one proceedeth to worke prudently: by תבונה tebunah, discretion, to applie and direct that inward apprehension, and by דעת daath an experimentall knowledge: to know, saith he, is sensu, vel intellectu experiri, to take triall by by ſenſe or underſtanding, as Lot ſaith, he had two daughters, which knew no man, that is, had no experimentall knowledge. But what experience could theſe have of working in all manner of metall and wood, and needle worke, there being no ſuch occaſion of triall given them before?

6. Thus then are theſe three gifts better diſtinguiſhed: That whereas theſe workmen are ſaid to have done three things: to finde out or invent curious works themſelves, verſ. 4. and to teach others, chap. 35. 34. and to worke alſo with their hands, verſ. 5. to worke in all manner of workmanſhip; theſe three gifts may be applied thus to theſe three faculties: they had wiſedome given them to conceive and apprehend how to worke themſelves, which is called the finding out or excogitating of worke: their underſtanding ſerved to ſhew, and teach others: therefore the other workmen are ſaid only to be wiſe hearted, verſ. 6. becauſe they were taught, and teached not: and their knowledge guided their hand to be appliable to expreſſe that in their working, which they conceived in their underſtanding. Theſe three may be reduced alſo to theſe two faculties: Σοφια, the gift, power, or skill, and ἐνεργεια, the practice, Simler: the skill was either in their owne apprehenſion, or in the inſtruction of others: their practice was in the agilitie of their hands, and expedition of the worke.

QUEST. VI. Whether all the kinds of workes are rehearſed here, which were neceſſarie for the Tabernacle.

Verſ. 5. AND in the art to ſet ſtones, &c. 1. The Latine tranſlater addeth, to worke, marmore, in marble: which is not in the Hebrew, but only in working of ſtones. But we doe not reade, that any marble was uſed in the Tabernacle. Toſtatus ſaith, though no marble went to the making of the Tabernacle, yet they might have skill to worke therein: becauſe it belongeth to perfect workmen to have skill to do ſome things, which they have no need to doe, queſt. 7. Contra. This wiſdome and underſtanding was given them, To worke in all manner of workmanſhip, and to make all which the Lord commanded, verſ. 6. Therefore ſeeing they were not commanded to do any thing with marble, that belonged not to their skill. 2. But Toſtatus addeth further, that ſome workes are expreſſed, which they did not, as, in diverſitate lignorum, to worke in divers kinds of wood, whereas they wrought onely in Shittim wood; and ſome kinds of worke are omitted, which they did, as in curious weaving, and embroydering. Contra. The Latine Interpreter here doth not tranſlate right: the words are bacharoſheth ghetz, in the workmanſhip of wood, or timber: the text ſpeaketh not of diverſitie of wood: and yet they being able to cut and carve in one kind of wood, had skill to doe it in another. 3. Indeed ſome of their workes are here omitted, which the Septuagint ſupplieth here, To worke in blew ſilke, purple ſcarlet, fine twined linen: but none of this is found here in the originall; yet chap. 35. 35. mention is made of all theſe, whence a ſupplie may be made here, Simler. 4. It is not to be imagined, that all theſe workes went only thorow the hands of Bezaleel, and Aholiab, who is joyned with Bezaleel: but that there were many workmen beſide, which were taught and inſtructed by them, chap. 35. 34. 5. There were two chiefe and principall workmen, Bezaleel and Aholiab, that were directers to the reſt, and taught them to worke, chap. 35. 34. And of theſe two it ſeemeth, that Bezaleel was the moſt excellent workman, whoſe gifts and faculties are firſt of all deſcribed by themſelves.

QUEST. VII. Whether the wiſe in heart, received a new gift, or increaſe rather of the old.

Verſ. 6. IN the hearts of thoſe which are wiſe hearted, have I put wiſdome, &c. 1. The opinion of the moſt is, that God in theſe increaſed only thoſe gifts which they had before, as their naturall parts, and their skill in arts, which they had learned: and gave them a further degree of wiſdome and knowledge in thoſe kind of workes, as he had done to Bezaleel and Aholiab, Genevenſ. Toſtat. qu. 7. Oſiander. But it is rather to be thought, that God altogether furniſhed them for this worke: that as the Apoſtles were taken from among the unlearned ſort, to build the ſpirituall Church of Chriſt; ſo theſe were altogether unfit of themſelves to have enterpriſed this buſineſſe, if the Lord had not endued them with the Spirit of wiſdome, leſt they might have aſcribed part of the worke to themſelves. And further, whereas they are ſaid to be filled with the Spirit of wiſdome, chap. 35. 31. this phraſe inſinuateth, that this gift of skill was inſpired, it was not then in them before in part; for then they ſhould not have been filled with the Spirit of wiſdome, but received part onely.

2. Oleaſter maketh this difference, Deum impleſſe duos præcipuos artifices, ſapientia ſcilicet nova, &c. That God had filled the two principall workmen with new wiſdome: and auxiſſe eam eis, qui eam ante habuerunt, &c. And that hee increaſed the ſame to thoſe which had it before. But by this means, the inferiour artificers ſhould have had more helps than the other, both naturall and ſupernaturall, whereas the other had only ſupernaturall.

3. Simlerus giveth this interpretation, In the hearts of all that are wiſe hearted, have I put wiſdome to make, that God beſtowed two things upon them: artem à me habent & in hunc finem, &c. they have both the skill and art from me, and to this end, to make, &c. ſo they were wiſe hearted, but they were wiſe of Gods making. But that this phraſe, to bee wiſe in heart, ſheweth not any ſpeciall and extraordinarie gift of art infuſed unto them, is evident, chap. 35. 25. where the women, that did ſpinne with their hands, are ſaid to bee wiſe hearted.

4. Therefore, Iunius giveth a better interpretation, calling theſe wiſe in heart, induſtrious: now two things are required to make one induſtrious and ſo wiſe in heart, one is willingnes, and the other is aptnes, and agilitie to any worke: as both theſe are touched, chap. 35. 21. Every one whoſe heart made him willing: and verſ. 25. The women that were wiſe hearted ſpunne with their hands. So God gave unto them firſt a willing heart, and they which had any aptnes to do artificiall workes, were then endued with an extraorextraordinarie gift of wisdome, to do the workes of the Tabernacle: they received speciall grace to know how to worke according to the paterne given them, and willingnes beside to exercise their gifts to Gods glorie, in setting forward the worke of the Tabernacle. So M. Calvine, He had given them aptnes, and insight: Vt eorum dexteritas semen quoddam esset, That their dexteritie should be but a certaine seed.

QUEST. VIII. Why Moses was not made fit to do the worke of the Tabernacle.

NOw if it be inquired, why Moses received not this gift of wisdome, seeing hee might best have knowne how to frame those things, having seene the fashion of them in the mount: it may bee thus answered, that although it had been no hard thing with God, to have given Moses wisdome to do such things; yet for these reasons the Lord saw it was not fit: 1. Because Moses was to oversee and direct every mans worke, and to approve and allow of it being done: and therefore it was not meet, that he should have been a labourer with them himselfe. 2. And beside, Moses was to attend the publike government, to speake unto the people, and to judge their causes; therefore he could not, being letted by publike affaires, have been spared for those works. And as it pleased God to direct his father in law, to give him counsell to appoint under-officers and governours, and not to undertake the whole burthen of government himselfe: so it was requisite, that the finishing of this worke should be transmitted over to other, and the chiefe direction and overlight only to belong to Moses, Tostat. qu. 8.

QUEST. IX. Of the garments of ministration, what they were.

Vers. 10. ALso the garments for Ministration, and the holy garments for Aaron the Priest, and the garments for his sonnes, &c. 1. Some do understand by the garments of Ministration, the holy garments for Aaron, as Tostatus following therein the Latine Translater and the Septuagint, who reade only, the holy garments for the Ministerie of Aaron, &c. Whereas there are three distinct garments spoken of, bigdee haserad, garments of Ministration, and bigdee hakodesh, holy garments for Aaron. 2. Oleaster understandeth, vestes inferiores seu communes, the inferiour or common Priests garments which remained, exutis pontificalibus, the pontificall vestures or rayment being put off, &c. for so the word serad, signifieth to remaine, to be left. But this cannot bee so: for in the third place the common garments for Aarons sonnes are mentioned also. 3. Iunius thinketh that the curtaines and veiles of the Tabernacle are hereby signified, as also those coverings wherein the Arke, Altar, Table, with other things were folded up, when the Tabernacle was removed. But the curtaines and veiles are not here meant, for they were made of foure colours, blew silke, purple, scarlet, fine twined linen, chap. 26. 1. these garments of Ministration were made only of three, blew silke, purple and scarlet, chap. 39. 1. Therefore the latter kind is onely here understood: namely, those coverings, wherewith those holy things before spoken of were covered, Vatabl. Borrh. Simler. For such cloathes they had to wrappe them in, Numb. 4. 6, 7. The curtaines and veiles of the Tabernacle are before understood, vers. 7. under the name of the Tabernacle, which is taken either generally for the coverings, boords and pillars, whereof the Tabernacle consisted: and so it is called ohel, or more specially for the curtains only, which is properly called miscan, chap. 26. 1. It is taken in the generall sense here, Tostat. qu. 7. As likewise, chap. 31. 26. where it is said, thou shalt anoint the Tabernacle.

QUEST. X. The spirituall signification of the furnishing of Bezaleel, and Aholiab with gifts.

BY the furnishing of Bezaleel, and Aholiab with excellent gifts, for the worke of the materiall Tabernacle. 1. Strabus understandeth here the mysterie of the Trinitie: Aholiab (which he saith) signifieth my protection, betokeneth the Father: Bezaleel (interpreted in the shadow of God) the holy Ghost and the word or commandement to make the Tabernacle, the Sonne of God. But this application is curious, and dangerous, to prefigure the blessed and immortall Trinitie, by sinfull and mortall men. 2. Yet Bezaleel of Iudah doth most properly prefigure the Messiah of the tribe of Iudah, upon whom the Spirit of God was, the Spirit of wisdome, the Spirit of understanding, &c. and of knowledge, Isai. 11. 2. who should be the spirituall builder of the Church, Borrh. Marbach. 3. And by the inferiour workmen, the Apostles are signified, the Euangelists, Pastors and Ministers; who as inferiour workmen under the chiefe builder Christ Iesus, doe edifie the Church. So Saint Paul saith, 1 Cor. 3. 10. As a skilfull master builder I have laid the foundation. Againe, as here Bezaleel and Aholiab, and many other were filled with the Spirit of wisdome, for the worke of the outward Tabernacle: so the Apostle saith, Ephes. 4. 11: He gave some to be Apostles, some Prophets, and some Euangelists, and some Pastors and Teachers for the gathering together of the Saints, for the worke of the Ministerie, and for the edefication of the bodie of Christ, And so as Hierom well saith, Iudais perdentibus archi: ectos, omnis edificandi gratia translata est ad Ecclesiam; The Iewes having lost their workmen, all the grace of building is transferred to the Church, cap. 3. in Isaiam.

QUEST. XI. Why the precept concerning the Sabbath, is here renued.

Vers. 13. NOtwithstanding keepe yee my Sabbaths. Divers reasons may be yeelded, why the Lord maketh rehearsall here of that precept of sanctifying the Sabbath: 1. Quia segnes admodum & tardi sumus ad cultum Dei; Because we are slow and backward in Gods service, Gallas. 2. Because they were now appointed to begin the worke of the Tabernacle: Ne crederent sibi licitum esse die Sabbati ædificare, Lest they might thinke, that it was lawfull for them to build upon the Sabbath day, the Lord in this place giveth them charge even in this busie and necessarie worke to keepe the Sabbath, Lippoman. Tostat. Lyran. Pelarg. Iun. As likewise, chap. 34. 21. both in earing time and in harvest, they are charged to keepe the Sabbath: lest they might take themselves to be excused by the necessitie of these works, Oleast. 3. Seeing they were not to keepe the ceremoniall lawes, untill they came into the land of Canaan: Excepit Deus hoc præceptum, &c. God excepteth this precept of ſanctifying the Sabbath, from other ceremonies, it being partly morall, partly ceremoniall: and though the obſervation of the reſt were deferred, yet God willed that this, even then, executioni mandetur, ſhould be executed, that is, the precept of the Sabbath onely, which was kept and obſerved in the deſert: the other feſtivals were omitted: for the paſchal lambe was but once ſacrificed in the wildernes, Cajetan. 4. Beſide, the Lord hereby would teach them the right uſe of the Tabernacle, which conſiſted in their comming together there, eſpecially upon the Sabbaths to ſerve the Lord. And therefore theſe two are put together, Levit. 23. 30. Yee ſhall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my Sanctuarie: and the Lord complaineth by his Prophet, Ezech. 23. 38. They have defiled my Sanctuarie, and prophaned my Sabbaths, Simler. Pelarg. 5. This charge alſo renued, ad ſuppletionem omiſſorum, for the ſupplie of ſome things omitted, becauſe it was not expreſſed before, what puniſhment hee ſhould have, that did violate the Sabbath, which is declared here that hee ſhould die the death: and it was put in execution, Numb. 15. upon the man that gathered ſtickes upon the Sabbath, Toſtat. Lyran.

Quest. XII. Why it was more forbidden to labour in the building of the Sanctuarie upon the Sabbath, than for the Prieſts to ſacrifice.

AMong other reaſons before alleaged, why mention is here made of ſanctifying the Sabbath, this was one; that the people might be hereadmoniſhed to forbeare even from the workes of the Sanctuarie upon the Sabbath. But then it will bee thus objected, ſeeing the Prieſts did violate and breake the Sabbath (as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith) Matth. 12. 5. and were blameleſſe: as in killing the ſacrifices, and doing other things thereunto belonging, why it was not as lawfull to labour in the building of the Sanctuarie alſo upon the Sabbath?

Hereunto anſwer may be made, that there was great difference betweene the ſacrifices which the Prieſts offered upon the Sabbath, and other things belonging to their ſervice, and the other works of the Sanctuarie. 1. The Lord commanded the one, namely, that ſacrifices ſhould be offered upon the Sabbath, and that double to any other day: for upon the other daies they ſacrificed a lambe in the morning, and another at night. But upon the Sabbath two lambes were appointed for the morning ſacrifice, and two for night, Numb. 28. 9. And the holy fire upon the Altar was commanded never to go out, Levit. 6. 13. this fire then they kept upon the Sabbath, bringing, and laying wood to preſerve it. Theſe works they had the Lords word and warrant for. But for the other they had not, nay they were forbidden all kind of worke and labour upon the Sabbath: ſaving thoſe, which the Lord himſelfe excepted concerning the ſervice of the Sabbath: therefore theſe alſo in building and framing the things appertaining to the Tabernacle, were likewiſe inhibited. 2. The Prieſts are ſaid to violate the Sabbath, in their ſacrifices and other Sabbath works, but not properly: becauſe they did ſuch things upon the Sabbath, which if they had not been permitted, yea commanded, of themſelves had tended to the violating of the Sabbath: ſo they did breake it, materialiter, materially, but not formaliter, formally: he breaketh the Sabbath formally, who doth that which is expreſſely forbidden to bee done upon that day: he materially breaketh it, who doth a worke like unto that which is forbidden, but yet is permitted by the law. As if there were a law, that no citizen ſhould ſell any thing to a ſtranger, but ſuch as were licenſed to doit; hee that ſo ſelleth being not allowed, tranſgreſſeth the law formally: he that doth it, being thereunto licenſed, doth tranſgreſſe onely materially, in that he doth the ſame thing, which he committeth that tranſgreſſeth the law, but not in that manner. The ſame difference there was betweene the workes of the Prieſts, which were allowed by the law upon the Sabbath day, and the like workes of thoſe which laboured in the building of the Tabernacle upon that day, which were forbidden. 3. Another difference is this: the ſacrifices belonged to the ſervice of God, which if they ſhould have been intermitted upon the Sabbath, the ſervice of God ſhould therby have been neglected. But though the workes about the Tabernacle did ceaſe upon the Sabbath, Gods worſhip was not thereby neglected; for they might as well be made upon other daies, and ſo were. 4. They were to do no ſervile works upon the Sabbath, but many works neceſſarie for the building of the Sanctuarie, were ſervile; ſo were not the ſacrifices, and other duties performed by the Prieſts upon the Sabbath: therefore the one were permitted upon the Sabbath, and not the other, Toſtat. qu. 9.

Quest. XIII. How the Sabbath is ſaid to bee a ſigne, that the Lord did ſanctifie them.

Verſ. 13. IT is a ſigne betweene me and you, that I the Lord do ſanctifie you. Which words are diverſly expounded. 1. Some make this the ſenſe: It is a ſigne, that I ſanctifie you, in that I have ſeparated you from other people, & ſelected you unto my ſelf, Vatab. Lyran. 2. Oleaſter thus; Sanctitas Sabbati ſignum eſt munditiæ, &c. The holineſſe of the Sabbath is a ſigne of cleaneneſſe, which I require of you: Vt ex dicato tempore Deo, credamus magis nos ipſos dicari Deo, &c. That by the time dedicated to God, wee ſhould know, that wee our ſelves much more ſhould be dedicated, Cajetan. But more is here ſignified than ſo: the words implie an actuall ſanctification, not ſignified onely. 3. Hieron ſaith, it is ſo ſaid, becauſe it was, ſignum veri Sabbati, a ſigne of the true Sabbath, wherein wee ſhall reſt from the labours of the world. 4. So alſo Irenæus, Non ſine ſymbolo erant ſigna, the ſignes were not without ſome ſymbole, and ſignification: Sabbata perſeverantiam totius diei, &c. The Sabbaths holding out the whole day, did ſignifie our continuance in Gods ſervice. But here the Lord ſpeaketh of an actuall ſanctification, not of a typicall ſignification. 5. Some ſay it is ſo called, quia ſignum erat fœderis, becauſe it was a ſigne of the Covenant, whereby the people did bind themſelves to worſhip the Lord for their God, and ſuch ſignes were all the other ceremonies, Marbach. But there is a morall conſideration in the ſanctifying of the

In Ezech. cap. 20

Adverſ. hæreſ. lib. 4. cap. 30.

the Sabbath, therefore it was otherwiſe a ſigne, than the other ceremonies. 6. It was then a common ſigne betweene God and them, they holding God to be their God, Creator and ſanctifier, becauſe the Sabbath was a commemoration of the creation: and the Lord taking them for his people, whom he created, redeemed and ſanctified, Iun. Toſtat. 7. Beſide, the keeping of the Sabbath was a ſigne of difference eetween them and all other prophane people of the world, who derided the Jewes for their Sabbaths, as Seneca derided them for this; Quod ſeptimam partem ætatis perderent; Becauſe they loſt the ſeventh part of their age, in reſting every ſeventh day, Toſtat. qu. 10. 8. And ſpecially it was a ſigne of their ſanctification: becauſe that day they were ſequeſtred by an holy reſt, from thinking or ſtudying upon prophane things: and in reſpect of the exerciſes of religion upon that day, whereby they were ſanctified: ſanctificamur verbo Dei; we are ſanctified by the word of God, Simler. And they did meet together, ad confirmandam fidem Sacramentis, to confirme their faith by the ſacraments, Oſiander. And becauſe every Sabbath, diſcatis doctrinam meam, you learne my doctrine, &c. Iunius.

QUEST. XIV. The reaſons why the Sabbath muſt be obſerved.

Verſ. 13. FOr it is a ſigne, &c. There are here divers reaſons yeelded for the obſervation of the Sabbath: 1. The firſt is, à fine, from the end, it was a ſigne betweene God and them. 2. Ab utili, it is holy unto you, that is, ordained for your benefit and commoditie, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, Mark. 2. 27. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath, Pelarg. So alſo Cajetan: It is holy unto you, that is, ad veſtrum bonum mandatur cuſtodiendum, it is appointed to be kept for your good. 3. A neceſſario, from the neceſſitie of it: becauſe if they did not keepe it, they ſhould ſurely die: as thrice the puniſhment of death is here threatned to thoſe that defile the Sabbath, and doe any worke therein, Pelarg. 4. From the authoritie of the Inſtitutor, quia dicatur Domino, &c. becauſe it is conſecrated unto God, verſ. 15. It is the Sabbath of the holy reſt unto the Lord: therefore it ought to be obſerved, Cajetan. 5. A facili, from the eaſineſſe of the precept: the Lord appointeth but one day for the holy reſt, whereas he alloweth ſix for labour, Pelargus. 6. Ab exemplo Dei, from Gods example, who created the world in ſix daies, and reſted the ſeventh, Pelarg. Simlerus. 7. A conſequenti, from the event or conſequent, in obſerving the Sabbath: efficient in ſuccedentibus generationibus, &c. They ſhall procure, that a perpetuall covenant ſhall be eſtabliſhed in their generations, betweene the Lord and their poſteritie for ever, Cajetan.

QUEST. XV. What death is meant in this phraſe: He ſhall die the death.

Verſ. 14. SHall die the death. Whereas there are divers kinds of death: there is everlaſting death both of bodie and ſoule in the next world, and the temporall death in this life, either of the ſoule, in being deprived of the life of grace; or of the bodie, either by the hand of God, by ſudden and extraordinarie death, or by the hand of the Magiſtrate: according to theſe divers kinds of death, ſo is this place diverſly interpreted. 1. Some referre it to everlaſting death, and excluding from the ſocietie of Gods ſervants, Iun. 2. Some underſtand it of being deprived of the life of grace, Vita gratiæ deſtituetur hic, & in futuro ſeculo, &c. He ſhall be deſtitute of the life of grace, both here, and in the next world, Lippoman. 3. Some, of being excluded from the people of God, no more to be counted an Iſraelite, Ex Oleaſtr. 4. Some of the violent death by the Magiſtrate, Oſiander, Simler. 5. Some of extraordinarie death, when God cutteth one off, and ſo puniſheth him by death unlooked for: as God is ſaid to offer a man into ones hand, when he is ſuddenly killed, Exod. 21. 13. Toſtatus, who alſo includeth the puniſhment of death inflicted by the Magiſtrate: that when the tranſgreſſion is apparent, and found out by witneſſes, then the Magiſtrate putteth to death: as the man was ſtoned that gathered ſtickes, Numb. 15. But if the profaner of the Sabbath eſcape the puniſhment of man, the judgement of God ſhall overtake him, Toſtat. qu. 12. 6. But beſide theſe kinds of death, which ſhall bee inflicted here, in that it is ſaid, He ſhall die the death, the other phraſe, In being cut off from among his people, ſheweth, that beſide there remaineth for them everlaſting puniſhment in the next world, as the Lord threatneth to the prophane, fire unquenchable, Ezech. 20. 47.

QUEST. XVI. Why the ſeventh day is called Sabbath Sabbaton.

Verſ. 15. IN the ſeventh day is the Sabbath of holy reſt unto Iehovah. 1. Whereas the words in the originall are, ſabbath ſabbaton, ſome Hebrewes by the firſt underſtand the determined time of the Sabbath from evening to evening: but becauſe they know not certainly where the reſt of the Sabbath ſhould begin, and where it ſhould end, they have added an houre more at the beginning, and an houre at the end of the Sabbath: and this they ſay is called ſabbaton, which is a diminutive word, which is formed by putting to on, as of iſh a man, is derived iſhon a little man. But it is a weake conceit to imagine, that their additions, which are brought in only by their tradition, ſhould be grounded upon Scripture. 2. Oleaſter therefore, as the Hebrewes make both theſe words ſabbath, and ſabbaton, proper names for the ſeventh day of reſt, ſo hee tranſlateth them thus, requies requiei, it ſhall be a reſt of reſt, making them both appellative, and common names: becauſe there was a greater reſt required on the Sabbath, than upon any other day: whereupon in the Goſpell, Ioh. 19. 31. the Sabbath is called a great or high day: it was greater than the Paſſeover. But Oleaſter is deceived in this collection: 1. For that Sabbath is called an high day becauſe the Paſſeover did fall out upon that Sabbath. 2. And though it be true, that the Sabbath was a greater day of reſt than the Paſſeover, wherein they were allowed to do ſuch works as were about that which they ſhould eat, Exod. 12. 16. which were not lawfull upon the Sabbath, Exod. 16. 23. yet the reſt of the Sabbath was not greater, than of all other feſtivals: for the tenth day of the ſeventh moneth, which was the day of reconciliation, was kept as strictly with rest from all kinde of worke, Levit. 23. 30. (not from servile worke only, as in the Pasch, ibid vers. 7.) as the Sabbath was. 3. But that the word Sabbath is heere taken for the proper name of the Sabbath, is evident ver. 13. Notwithstanding keepe yee my Sabbaths: likewise vers. 14. Therefore yee shall keep my Sabbath; where the same word is used.

3. Therefore it is better interpreted, It is the Sabbath of rest: to make the first a proper name and peculiar to the seventh day, and the other common. So reade Vatab. Iun. Pagnin. agreeing with the Lat. Chald. Septuag. who thus interprete: σαββάτα ἀναπαυσεως, the Sabbath a rest, holy unto the Lord.

4. Now in that there is so often mention made of rest, there is more intended, than the outward rest of the bodie only: as though it were sufficient to spend all the day, in lying downe, playing, sleeping: sed sacro die sacra opera perficienda sunt: but upon that holy and sacred day, sacred exercises also should be performed, Lippoman.

QUEST. XVII. How the observation of the Sabbath is perpetuall.

Vers. 16. That they may observe the Sabbath throughout their generations for an everlasting covenant.

1. The Jewes hereupon doe take occasion to raile upon Christ, tanquam fœdifragum, as a law breaker for abolishing the Sabbath: and so they presse these words literally; as though the Lord ordained, that the Sabbath injoyned them should be perpetuall. But beside that the word gholam, or hholam, doth not alwaies signifie that which is indeed perpetuall and eternall: but sometime onely a long time, Calvine: or tempus non determinatum, a time not limited, or determined: the words which are annexed, Throughout your generations, shew that the perpetuitie of this Sabbath is restrained to their posteritie, and that as long as their policie and Common-wealth continued, Osiander. 2. Some doe understand it to bee eternall, in this sense: quia erat aterna rei signum, because it was signe of a thing eternall, August. qu. 139. that is, of our everlasting rest in Christ: aternum manet ipso effectu, it remaineth eternall in effect, Calvine: that is, in ceasing from the works of sin. 3. Some thinke that it is called perpetuall, with relation unto the time of ceremonies: quamdiu vellet Deus observari statum illum imperfectum Iudaicum, &c. as long as God would have that imperfect state of the Jewes to be observed, Tostat. 4. But as I refuse not these two last interpretations; so I thinke that there is more signified, that God would have perpetually observed a day of rest set apart for his service, (though not that precise day prescribed to the Jewes) as long as the world endureth: so that it is not only spiritualiter, sed moraliter aternum, spiritually, but morally eternall, Pelarg. and not onely appointed for a politike order, to avoid confusion, that the people should have some certaine day to meet together into heare the Word, and receive the Sacraments: Gallas. For if the keeping of the Lords day were only grounded upon policie; then any other day might as well be set apart, as this which is now observed. But I say further with Pelargus: Nobis severissime demandatam religionis exercenda curam: That the care of the practice of religion upon the Lords day is straitly commanded us: atque ad eam nos perpetuo alligari, and that we are for ever tied unto it, by the institution and practice of the Apostles, Act. 20. 7. 1 Cor. 16. 2. who, as Gallasius well concludeth, did substitute the Lords day in remembrance of Christs resurrection in stead of the old Sabbath, Spiritu Dei, quo ipsi regebantur, by the Spirit of God whereby they were guided. And here Thomas giveth a good note, why the Sabbath onely is here mentioned, the other festivals of the Jewes being omitted, wherein there was a commemoration of some particular benefite, as in the pasch of their deliverance out of Egypt: on the Sabbath; præcipuum beneficium creationis, the principall benefit of the creation was remembred, which is generall to all people, and not peculiar only to the Jewes: beside, therein was prefigured, Quies mentis in Deo, in præsenti per gratiam, in futuro per gloriam; The rest of the mind in God in the present by grace, and in time to come by glorie, Thomas. Therefore, seeing the seventh day of rest is a commemoration of the creation of the world, and includeth a memoriall of Christs resurrection upon that day, and is a symbole of our everlasting rest in heaven, it ought to be perpetually observed.

1. 2. qu. 100. ar. 9. ad. 2.

QUEST. XVIII. Whether the world were made successively in time, or in an instant.

Vers. 17. For in six daies the Lord made heaven and earth. 1. Oleaster well concludeth from hence, that God made the world, and the things therein not all at once, but successively one day after another; which he proveth by these reasons: 1. Because the seventh day is determined, wherein he rested, then consequently they were six daies wherein he was making the world. 2. Mention is made of the evening and morning, therefore the day and night one succeeded another. 3. And seeing light was created the first day, and light and darknesse could not be at once in the same hemisphere, the one therefore must needs successively follow the other.

2. But yet, although God made the world successively, in respect of the daies, which one succeeded another; and all was not made in one day: Yet Tostatus opinion is not to be received, that in some of the works of the creation, God did, agere per successionem, worke by succession, and in time, and did not produce the creatures, in instanti, in an instant. The first, second and fourth daies worke he granteth were done in an instant: but the third daies worke was done successively, the winde helping to drie it, which is said to have moved upon the waters. And the plants and trees were brought out of the earth in time, God giving such great strength and force to the earth, to bring them forth. As he giveth instance of some herbs, as petroselinum, parsely, that will grow out of the ground in the space of two houres. Likewise in the creation of man, hee thinketh it is probable, that the Angels made his bodie of the slime of the earth, and the Lord breathed in the breath of life.

Contra,

Contra. 1. That God created everie daies worke at once, and not in ſucceſſion of time, is affirmed, Pſal. 33. 9. he ſpake, and it was done: as ſoone as he ſpake the word; the creature preſently came forth. 2. That was not the winde, which moved upon the face of the earth, but the Spirit of God; as in the ſame Pſalme, verſ. 6. the Spirit is called the breath of Gods mouth: By the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth. 3. Neither did God uſe the helpe of the Angels in the framing of mans bodie; he did it himſelfe: for when he ſaid, Let us make man in our image: he conſulted not with the Angels, but with the bleſſed Trinitie: for he was created in the image of God, Geneſ. 1. 27. not in the image of Angels: for then Chriſt, when he was made man, ſhould have taken upon him the nature of Angels, which the Apoſtle denieth, Hebr. 2. 16. And it is directly ſaid, that God Iehovah made the man of the duſt of the earth, Geneſ. 2. 7. but Iehovah is not given unto any Angell, it is a name peculiar unto God.

QUEST. XIX. How the Lord is ſaid to have reſted, and from what.

Verſ. 17. IN the ſeventh day he ceaſed, and breathed. 1. Which is a metaphor taken from thoſe, which when they have ſore laboured doe breath and take aire, Oleaſter. Not that God was wearied with the works of the creation, but he onely left creating, all things being finiſhed, which he intended to make, and he did it for our inſtruction, that we by his example might keep an holy reſt. 2. God then ceaſed from creating of another world, Oſiand. or from creating any new workes; for then the creation had not been perfect, if any thing had been wanting: neither could it have been ſaid, God ſaw all that hee had made, and loe it was verie good, Gen. 1. 31. 3. But he ceaſed not both from preſerving that which hee had made, which is no new worke, but that was continued during all the ſix daies, and is exerciſed ſtill, Toſtat. For God is not like to a builder of an houſe, or carpenter of a ſhip, which having finiſhed his worke, ſo leaveth it: but Gods providence ſtill watcheth over that which he hath made, Gallaſ. Likewiſe, the Lord ceaſeth not from making particular works daily, for he doth wonderous things, and miraculous thorow the world: ſed non creat novas ſpecies, he doth not create now any new kind, Marbach.

4. Then here appeareth the error of certaine Hebrewes, which thinke that the Sabbath, which is called Saturns day, was appointed firſt to bee kept, becauſe that is an unluckie planet, and unfortunate; and therefore it was not fit to undertake any buſineſſe upon that day: for the reaſon appeareth to be this, becauſe God reſted upon the ſeventh day: and they will not ſay that God was afraid to doe any thing upon Saturns day, Toſtatus queſt. 11.

5. Againe, hence is gathered a firme reaſon, for the continuance and perpetuitie of the Sabbath, becauſe God did not create the heaven and earth only for the ſonnes of Iacob, but for all men: Quibus ex æquo Creator eſt, neminem ergo ab iſto Sabbatiſmo excludi, &c. To whom he is a Creator alike, and therefore no man is to be exempted from the keeping of the Sabbath, Lippoman.

QUEST. XX. What workes are to be reſted from upon the Lords day, what not.

AND as God reſted not from all kind of workes upon the ſeventh day: ſo neither are all kind of workes unlawfull now to be done upon the Lords day of reſt. The workes that men attend are of two ſorts, either naturall, or voluntarie: 1. Naturall workes are not forbidden to be done, as to eat, drinke, ſleepe, ſo they be done in order, and meaſure. 2. Voluntarie works, are either good or evill: evill workes are at all times unlawfull, much more upon the ſabbath. 3. Good workes are either ſacred, or civill and politicall: the ſacred are either immediatly belonging to the worſhip of God, as the duties of the firſt Table, which principally are to be done upon the Lords day. 4. Or they are ſuch workes as are mediatly referred unto God; as the workes of mercie, the duties of the ſecond Table; which alſo, if occaſion ſo require, are to bee done upon this day, as to viſite the ſicke, to helpe thoſe that are in danger. 5. The politike workes follow, as the workes of mens vocation, merchandiſe, making of warre: all which muſt be intermitted upon the Lords day: and therefore that commandement beginneth with Remember, that men aforehand ſhould thinke of the Lords day, and not deferre any of their buſines till then: but vrgent neceſſitie conſtraining, ſuch things may be done then, as the Macchabees did fight upon the Sabbath, and the Diſciples of Chriſt being hungrie, pulled the eares of corne, Marbach.

QUEST. XXI. Whether Moſes received the directions concerning the Tabernacle, in the firſt or ſecond fortie daies.

Verſ. 18. THus when the Lord had made an end of communing with Moſes, &c. 1. R. Salom. whom Lyranus followeth, underſtandeth this communing, or ſpeech of God with Moſes, only of the former charge concerning the Sabbath, not of all the declaration before going, which concerned the making of the Tabernacle; which hee thinketh was done in Moſes ſecond going up to the Lord, after the people had made the golden calfe, and ſo he thinketh the hiſtorie to be tranſpoſed.

2. Contra. 1. Firſt, as ſometime in Scripture the order of time is changed, and the hiſtorie tranſpoſed, when there is any apparant cauſe, to meet with ſome inconvenience, which otherwiſe might follow: ſo to imagine any ſuch tranſpoſing, where there is no ſuch neceſſitie, were to bring in ſuch an uncertaintie into the ſacred ſtorie, as that we ſhould never know in what order any thing was done. 2. Beſide, the manner of ſpeech uſed by way of tranſition, verſ. 12. when the Lord began againe to ſpeake of ſactifying the Sabbath, afterward, or, then, or, further the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, &c. ſheweth, that this ſpeech followed immediately upon the other communing, which the Lord had with Moſes concerning the Tabernacle. 3. The ſpace of time, even fortie daies, while Moſes communed with God, ſheweth, that God had conference with Moſes about more things, than the morall and judiciall lawes, rehearſed, chap. 20, 21, 22, 23. 4. And the ſecond fortie daies was an unfit time for Moſes to receive all theſe inſtructions instructions in, for then he fell downe fortie daies and fortie nights before the Lord, Deut. 9.25. to intreat him for the people: there was not then such opportunitie for Moses to receive those directions; all the time being spent in prayer and supplication unto God, Tostat. qu. 13.

QUEST. XXII. Why Moses stayed fortie daies with God in the mount.

VVHen the Lord had made an end. Which was after fortie daies: 1. Because all this time needed not be spent in promulgation of the former lawes, which might have been delivered in a shorter time; the Hebrewes thinke, that Moses further received then their Cabala, which if they indeed did understand to be the mysticall doctrine of the Messiah, they therein should not thinke amisse: but the Jewish Cabala hunteth after letters and syllables, and doth gather mysteries out of them, which hath no warrant from Moses. 2. During then this time, beside the receiving of these lawes, and instructions, Moses no doubt was exercised in the meditation of them, and made perfect in the sense and understanding thereof, as likewise the mysterie of the blessed Messiah was now revealed unto him. 3. And although the Lord by the illumination of his Spirit, could in one day have inspired Moses with the knowledge of all these things: yet it pleased God, that Moses should continue in this exercise the space of fortie daies, for these two ends: 1. That he himselfe might hereby be more assured of his calling, and by this continuall meditation be throughly prepared and made fit: 2. And that the people by this miraculous worke of Moses abode with God fortie daies without meat and drinke, might be induced to receive Moses message and ministerie with greater reverence, Simler.

QUEST. XXIII. Why the Lord gave the written law.

HE gave him two Tables of the Testimonie. 1. the Lord gave not the written law to the ancient Fathers, but deferred it till Moses time; because as the Apostle saith: lex non est posita justis, the law is not given unto the righteous: habebant in semetipsis justitiam legis, they had in themselves the law of righteousnesse: but after that this law of righteousnes grew into oblivion, & extincta esset in Egypto, and was as extinguished in Egypt, &c. it was necessarie to be renued by the written law, Irenæus, 2. Lex data est, ut per eam lux, quæ in nobis est, accendatur, &c. The law was given, that thereby the light which was in us should bee increased, Cyril. The light of nature being dimmed, it was to be cleared and renued by the law. 3. Ambros addeth further, Lex quid operatur, nisi ut omnis mundus subditus fieret Deo, &c. What else doth the law worke, but that all the world should bee subjected unto God? &c. for by the law cometh the knowledge of sinne. 4. Hierom giveth another reason, why the written law was given, which was first written in all mens hearts: because, Judæi se solos accepisse legem gloriantur, &c. The Jewes only boast, that they received the law: hereby is signified, that seeing the law commandeth nothing, which was not before imprinted in the heart by the instinct of nature, that they, qui leges has observaverint, &c. which should observe these lawes, should obtaine the reward, &c. whether they were Jewes, or Gentiles, as S. Peter saith, In everie nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteousnesse, is accepted with him, Act. 10.35. 5. The law also was given to prepare men for the Messiah, whose comming then more and more approached: for two waies did the old law lead men unto Christ; one way, Testimonium de Christo perhibendo, by giving testimonie of Christ: as our blessed Saviour saith, All things must be fulfilled, which are written of me in the law, the Psalmes and the Prophets, Luk. 24.44. alio modo, per modum dispositionis, another way, by way of disposing, by drawing men from idolatrie, and holding them to the worship of the true God, and so preparing them for Christ, Thomas.

Lib. 4 cap. 30.

Lib. 1. super Ioan. cap. 11. De fuga secul. cap. 3.

In Esaiam cap. 64.

See more of this question, quæst. 6. generall in cap. 20. pag. 311.

1.2. qu. 98. ar. 2. in cor.

QUEST. XXIV. Why the Lord gave the law to the Israelites, and to no other people.

THis law was also given unto the Jewes rather than to any other nation: 1. Not for that they only were found to continue in the true worship of God, all other nations being given to idolatrie: for they also fell presently to idolatrie, in worshipping of a golden calfe: and the Lord telleth them that he did not set his love upon them for their righteousnesse. 2. But the reason was, because the Lord would performe his oath and promises to their fathers, to make them his people, Deut. 7.8. So it appeareth, quod ex sola gratuita electione, &c. that onely by the free and gracious election of God, the fathers received the promises, and their children had the law given them. 3. But if it againe bee asked, why the Lord did chuse the fathers, of whom Christ should be borne? Augustine answereth, Quare hunc trahat, illum non trahat, noli velle dijudicare, si non vis errare, &c. Why the Lord draweth one, and not another, do not take upon thee to judge, if thou wilt not erre. 4. The law also was given unto the Israelites, especially for these two reasons; imponitur duris & superbis, &c. it was imposed first upon them that were stubborne and proud: De duobus enim naturalis homo superbit, de scientia & potentia, &c. A naturall man is proud of two things; knowledge, and abilitie or power. Therefore, because the Jewes might take themselves to bee wiser than other people, as both having more knowledge, and greater strength to do those things which were requisite; God therefore gave them the morall law written, both to shew their ignorance in the duties which God required, as also their insufficiencie of strength: imponebatur etiam legis onus; Likewise the law was given unto the good and well disposed, that they thereby might be holpen to performe those duties which they desired. To this purpose, Thomas ibid.

Deut. 7. 7. and chap. 9. 5.

5. Hierom seemeth to give another reason, of giving the morall law unto the Israelites: first, the Lord gave them his morall law, but after they had committed idolatrie, than hee required sacrifices to bee offered unto him, rather than to idols: Auferens puram religionem mandatorum Dei, & concedens sanguinem victimarum, &c. So taking away the pure religion of keeping Gods commandements, and granting unto them the blood of sacrifices, &c. And this assertion he groundeth upon that place of Ieremie, chap. 7.22. I spake not to your fathers, &c. when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offerings and sacrifices; but this thing I commanded them, saying, obey my voice, &c.

Contra-

Contra. 1. This saying of the prophet is to be understood comparatively, that God spake not of burnt offerings, chiefly or principally, but rather required obedience. 2. Though the sacrifices were enjoyned after they had committed idolatrie, yet the morall law was in force still. 3. And they were commanded to offer sacrifices, and received the morall law, both of them together, while Moses was fortie daies in the mount, before they set up the golden calfe. Lib. de Spirit. sanct.

6. But Cyril giveth a better reason, why the morall law, not the Gospell, was given at this time unto the Israelites: Opus habebant institutione, & educatione quasi puerili; They had need of a kind of childish instruction, and education: quia fuerunt adhuc crassi, because they were yet but dull and of grosse understanding.

QUEST. XXV. Why the Lord delivered onely two tables of the law.

HE gave him two tables of the Testimonie. 1. They are called tables, not in respect of the matter, but of the forme: for they were fashioned with cutting, planing, and carving, and dented in with letters, Tostat. And they were like unto the tables or cover of a booke, one to shut upon another, Oleaster. 2. They are called tables of the Testimonie: quia data sunt ad testificandum, &c. because they were given to testifie unto them, what the Lord spake with his owne mouth, and to be witnesses of his will, Cajetan. 3. They were but two tables, as two witnesses, because according to the law, in the mouth of two or three witnesses everie truth standeth: or because there are two generall precepts, our dutie toward God, and toward our neighbour, Simler. The affirmative precepts were not written in one table, and the negative in another, as Tostatus: or five precepts in one, and five in another, as the Hebrewes: but all the commandements concerning our dutie toward God were comprehended in the one, and those which prescribed our dutie towardour neighbours in the other. 4 And all other things commanded, Ex illis decem præcepti, &c. pendere intelliguntur, Are understood to hang of these ten precepts, written in the two tables.

QUEST. XXVI. Why the tables were made of stone.

Vers. 18. EVen tables of stone. 1. Not that they were both of one stone, as some Hebrewes thinke, for though the word, אבן, aben, stone, be put in the singular, yet the phrase signifieth no more but this, that they were stonie tables: and whether they were of saphire or no, as the Hebrewes, it is uncertaine, Cajetan. It is like they were made of some precious matter, and not of ordinarie stone. 2. And they were made of stone: 1. Ad significandum cor lapideum Iudæorum, To signifie the stonie hearts of the Jewes, Isidor. 2. And not only of the Jewes, but to shew what we are all generally by nature, in respect of divine things, stupidi, hebetes, & lapidei, heavie, dull, and as it were stonie, Simler. 3. And hereby is insinuated a difference betweene the law and the Gospell, which is written by the spirit of grace, not in tables of stone, but in the fleshie tables of our hearts, 2 Cor. 3. 2. 4. And by these tables of stone, Voluit Deus significare stabilitatem legis sua, God would have signified the firmnes and stability of his law. As the Gentiles used to grave their lawes in brasse, to shew that they would have them inviolablie kept, Lippom.

QUEST. XXVII. What is meant here by the finger of God.

WRitten with the finger of God. 1. By the finger of God, Augustine understands the Spirit of God, which he proveth by comparing of those two places together in the Gospell: that where the one Evangelist writeth, that Christ should say, If I by the Spirit of God doe cast out devils: another saith, If I by the finger of God cast out, &c. which signified, that as the law was written by the finger and power of God, in tables of stone, so is it written in our hearts by the Spirit of grace. Gregorie by the Spirit signified by Gods finger, understandeth, spiritualem intelligentiam legis, the spirituall sense and meaning of the law. Theophylact thereupon concludeth, that the Spirit is, ὁμοούσιον, of one substance with the Father, as the finger is to the hand. So Ambrose saith, Ad formam unitatis, non ad distinctionem potestatis referendum digiti nuncupationem; That the terme of finger is to be referred to the forme of unitie, not to the distinction of power. But this may seeme somewhat curious. De verb. Apost. ser. 6. Matth. 12. 28. Luke 11. 20. Theophyl. in 11. Luc. Epistol. 60.

2. These reasons therefore may rather be given of this phrase, and terme: 1. It is said, By the finger of God, that is, opere Dei, by the worke of God, because the fingers are instruments of working, Tostat. q. 13. 2. Gallasius referreth it to the paucitie and fewnesse of the precepts, Ita ut in digitis enumerari possent, which were not so many, but might be numbred upon the fingers. 3. This is added also, to shew a difference betweene the first tables of stone, which were both made and prepared, and written by the finger of God: so were not the second, which Moses made like unto the first: they were prepared by Moses, but written upon by God, chap. 34. 1. Iun. 4. And further, though God have no hands, nor fingers, neither is like in bodilie shape unto man: yet this may have a speciall reference to Christ, who was become verie man, with hands and feet like unto us; as Borrhaius noteth, Digitus humanus Deo affingitur in Christo vero Deo & homine, &c. The finger of man is attributed to God, in Christ, who was true God and man.

QUEST. XXVIII. Whether Moses did write upon the tables.

Vers. 2. OF God. It will be here objected, that Exod. 34. 28. it is said that Moses wrote in the tables: how then were they written by the finger of God? 1. Augustine thinketh that the first tables were written by the Lord, the second by Moses. But it is otherwise affirmed, chap. 34. 1. that God also did write upon the second tables. 2. Lyranus thus reconcileth those places, Deum scripsisse authoritative, Mosen ministerialiter; That God did write, because he endited, and it was done by his authoritie, and Moses did write them as the penman and instrument. And he hath another conceit beside, that Moses seemed to put his hand to the tables, and yet the Lord might miraculously frame the letters. But it is evident, that Moses did nothing at all to the first tables, they were delivered him readie written; and he did only prepare the second tables for the Lord to write upon. 3. Hug. de S. Victor. saith it is a phrase only, he did Lib. 5. quæst. in Deuter.

write

write the tables, that is, received them written: but this were an improper speaking. 4. The best solution is, that where it is said, Exod. 34.28. He wrote in the tables the words of the Covenant: that it is to bee referred unto God, not to Moses. So Iunius, Vatablus, Pelargus. And then there remaineth no doubt at all.

QUEST. XXIX. How the law is said to have been ordained by Angels.

BUt it will be againe objected, how the law is said heere to bee written by the finger of God, when Stephen saith, Act. 7.54. They received the law by the ordinance of Angels. And the Apostle likewise saith, That the law was ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediatour, Galath. 3.19. 1. Some answer, that this was indeed the difference betweene the law, and the Gospell: that the one was given immediately by God himselfe, the other by his Ministers the Angels: as it is in all arts, Qui superiorem, principalem actum per seipsum operatur, That he which is the chiefe workman, doth the principall worke himselfe, and the other by his Ministers, and underworkmen, Thomas. But the finger of God is not taken in Scripture for the Ministerie of Angels; Gregorie saith, Quid est digitus Dei, nisi Spiritus sanctus? What is the finger of God, but the holy Spirit? 2. Tostatus thus interpreteth: they were written by the finger of God, that is, per operationem Divinam, & hoc fuit per Angelos, By the Divine operation, and this was by the Angels, quæst. 13. But the finger of God signifieth more, as is shewed before. 3. Ambrose by Angels understandeth the Prophets, which were the Ministers of the old Testament: and Beza, by the Mediatour there mentioned, Galath. 3. would have Moses signified, which Theophyl. Chrysost. Ambr. better expound of Christ, in 3. ad Galat. But all this removeth not the former doubt. 4. It is evident then, that the law was delivered by God himselfe, by Christ, that great Angell of the Covenant; as Stephen witnesseth, that this Angell spake to Moses in mount Sinai, &c. to whom our fathers would not obey, Act. 7.39. but obedience is not required to Angels, that is onely due unto God. God then delivered the law as the Author, the Angels as Ministers attending upon God: in which sense it is also said, that the law was given by Moses, Ioh. 1.17. so was it also delivered by Angels, as the Ministers and instruments, Pelargus, Cajetan also agreeth, that the tables of the law were written, digito summi Legislatoris, by the finger of the chiefe Law-giver. And Oleaster noteth well herein, the love and favour of God, that gave unto us the Law written, Suo digito, non alicujus Angeli vel hominis, With his owne finger, not of any Angell, or man.

Ex. qu. 98. ar. 2. in Cor.

In primum Regum.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Gods speciall and particular providence toward his children.

Vers. 2. BEhold I have called by name Bezaleel. This sheweth the singular care that God hath of his elected and chosen vessels; in that he knew them by name, as the Lord called unto Samuel by name, 1. Sam. 3. Like as among men it is counted a great grace and favour, if any be knowne unto the Prince by name. And in the Athenian, and Romane Commonwealth, such as were popular, would labour to call the most of the citizens by their names. God hath not then a generall care only over his children, but his particular providence watcheth over them, Simler.

2. Doct. Mechanicall arts Gods gifts.

Vers. 3. WHom I have filled with the Spirit of God, &c. Bezaleel was inspired of God with the knowledge of arts: whereby we learne, that manuall trades and mechanicall arts doe proceed from Gods Spirit: and they are his gifts, Marbach. B. Babing. For every good gift is from above, Iam. 1.17.

3. Doct. Even works tending to charity and pietie, are not to be done ordinarilie upon the Lords day.

Vers. 13. NOtwithstanding keepe yee my Sabbaths, &c. If it were not lawfull for the Israelites, no not to worke in the building of the Sanctuarie upon the Sabbath, then no other servile works are to be done then, intuitu pietatis, &c. with the pretense of pietie: as to make garments to cloath the poore, to go a fishing to redeeme captives, Oleaster. Which workes of charitie, where necessitie constraineth, may be done upon the Lords day, but not to make an ordinarie practice of it.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. Against those that despise handicrafts, as base and contemptible.

Vers. 2. WHom I have filled with the Spirit of God, in wisdome, &c. If then handicraftsmen have a portion of Gods Spirit, and are endued with wisdome from heaven, to worke skilfully in their mysteries, that assertion of Cicero is to be misliked, who thus writeth of these mechanicall arts, Opifices omnes in arte sordida versantur, nec enim quicquam ingenuum habere potest officina, &c. All tradesmen are occupied in base arts, neither can any ingenuous thing be found in an artisans shop, &c. True it is that handy-crafts may be counted base and illiberall in comparison of liberall sciences: but yet in themselves they are commendable, and not to be despised, Marbach. Our blessed Saviour wrought carpenters worke, and therefore is called a carpenter, Mark. 6.3. and S. Paul was a tent-maker and laboured with his hands, which, he saith, ministered to his necessities, Act. 20.34.

Lib. 1. Officior.

2. Confut. Against free will.

I Have filled with wisdome, &c. Hereupon Calvin giveth this note Vitiosa est ergo illa partitio, &c. Thus there is a faultie and evill partition, whereby men doe ascribe all the helps which they use, partly to nature, and Gods gift, partly to mans industrie, whereas their industrie it selfe is the gift of God. Therefore we are hereby taught, that the honour of everie good thing must be given unto God. And if humane arts proceed from from Gods Spirit, how much more hath man no activitie at all in divine things, but as it is wrought by grace. This then evidently overthroweth free will, in divine and spirituall things, as our blessed Saviour saith, Without me yee can do nothing, Ioh. 15.5.

3. Confut. No festivall daies to be dedicated to Saints.

Vers. 17. IT is a signe betweene me, and the children of Israel, &c. If this festivall day of the Sabbath was consecrated unto the Lords honour, and it was a signe betweene the people and him: hence it is evident, that holy and festivall daies are not to be erected to the honour of Saints. The Lord is the Creator of time and daies, and therefore he only must have the honour of them, Simler.

4. Confut. Against the observation of the Iewish festivals.

Vers. 17. FOr ever, &c. Hence the Ebionites grounded their heresie, that Christians were bound now to keepe the Jewish Sabbath; because the Lord calleth it here and in the former verse, an everlasting covenant. But this is a weake and slender ground: Augustine thinketh it is called an everlasting covenant, because the Sabbath was a signe of that which was eternall, namely, our spirituall rest in Christ: or because there is no time prefixed or determined for the continuance of it. But rather it is so called, not simply but in respect of the policie and state of that Common-wealth, that as long as it stood, and the time of ceremonies did hold, so long should the law of the Sabbath be in force: for otherwise, they may as well urge the celebration of the Jewish Passeover, which is established by an ordinance for ever, Exod. 12. 17. and Aarons Priesthood by the same reason should continue still: of the which the Lord saith, Exod. 28.43. This shall be a law for ever unto him, and his seed after him.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Arts not to be abused to any unlawfull purpose.

Vers. 2. WHom I have filled with the Spirit of God. Seeing humane Arts are the gift of God, artificers must take heed, that they do not profane Gods good gifts, and abuse their trades to pride, wantonnes, superstition, or such like: Gallas. B. Babingt. As in these daies many doe make their handicrafts to attend as handmaids upon pride. And some thereby set forth superstition and idolatrie; as Esay describeth the foolishnes and vanitie of such as carved images, to make them gods thereof to worship, Isai. 44.13. Such an one was Demetrius, who made silver shrines for Diana, Act. 17.

2. Observ. Against vaine pompe in the multitude of servants and officers.

Vers. 4. TO worke in gold, silver, brasse, &c. The Lord could have raised up a cunning workman in every one of these: but hee rather thought it good to give unto one man skill in all these: whereby the pompe of many vaine-glorious persons in the world is reproved, that will have a severall officer for every service: as Oleaster noteth, Alius culinam curat, alius equos, &c. One looketh to the kitchin, another to the horse, a third waiteth on the table, another attendeth in the chamber, &c. Bernard reproved this pompe in the Abbats of his time, whereof some hee noteth to have ridden in the way accompanied with threescore horse: An non unus aliquis minister posset (saith he) & jumentum ligare & ad mensam servire, & lectulum praparare? May not one minister suffice to saddle the horse, serve at the table, and make the bed? But Oleaster here is overseene to checke Princes for this their magnificence and state, in having many officers: for it is seemely for their high place and calling to bee served in different sort from others. In meaner persons it may worthily be noted for a fault, if any in the vaine ostentation of servants and officers, shall exceed the bounds of their calling. Bernard. de Moll.

3. Observ. Gifts to be mutually communicated.

Vers. 6. I Have joyned with him Aholiab. Oleaster hereupon giveth another good note: Servi Dei societatem admittunt: The servants of God refuse not societie: though they have never so good gifts, yet they desire the helpe of others: as Moses envied not that Eldad and Medad prophesied in the campe. So then as in the bodie one member standeth in need of another, so is it in the diversitie of gifts which are given to the members of Christs mysticall bodie: they should communicate them one to another, and so use them, as best may serve for the common good of the Church.

CHAP. XXXII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter is set forth the sinne of Israel, in committing most grosse idolatrie: whereof there are foure parts: 1. The narration of their wicked fact, to Vers. 7. 2. The examining of their fact, and the knowledge thereof, to vers. 26. 3. The punishment inflicted, thence to vers. 30. 4. A preparation to their repentance, vers. 30. to the end.

1. Their sin is described: 1. Both by the counsell and advice which they tooke: first the people in propounding the matter to Aaron to make them gods, with the occasion moving them therto, the absence of Moses: then Aaron, in setting them a course what to doe, vers. 2. 2. By the fact it selfe, which is either of them apart: of the people in bringing their jewels, vers. 3. of Aaron in making thereof a Calfe, and setting up an Altar, vers. 4, 5. or of them both together, Aaron proclaimeth an holy day, vers. 5. The people offer sacrifices, eat, drinke, and play, vers. 6.

2. The

2. The examination cognizance or taking knowledge of this sinne, was either while Moses was with God, to vers. 15. or when he was departed from God, and returned to the campe.

1. In the first, there is first the Lords complaint of the people in generall, that they had corrupted their waies, vers. 7. so also vers. 9. in particular, by the description of their sinne, vers. 8. Secondly, Moses intercession, with the effect thereof. Moses intercession is grounded upon three reasons: The deliverance of the people, vers. 11. The blasphemie of the Egyptians, which is feared, vers. 12. The covenant made with their fathers, vers. 13. Then the effect is, God changed his minde, vers. 14.

2. In the second cognizance, there are two degrees: first, Moses, confused knowledge when they were yet a farre off, as he went and conferred with Ioshua, to vers. 19. Then his certaine knowledge: 1. By the sight of his eyes, vers. 19. whereupon followed two effects of his indignation, the breaking of the Tables, and the burning of the golden Calfe, vers. 20,21. 2. By Aarons confession, whom Moses sifteth and examineth, to vers. 25.

3. The punishment is thus set forth: 1. The reason that moved Moses to take revenge, the nakednes of the people, vers. 26. 2. Moses charge to the Levites, vers. 26.27. 3. The execution, vers. 28,29.

4. The preparation to their repentance and reconciliation consisteth 1. of Moses admonition to the people, vers. 30. Of Moses supplication unto God, his petition, which containeth the confession of their sinne, vers. 32. and the craving of pardon, with a disjunction, or else himselfe to bee blotted out, &c. 2. And of Gods answer, wherein the Lord refuseth Moses disjunctive request concerning himselfe, and yeeldeth to his request for the people, with a reservation of their punishment, vers. 34.

2. The divers readings.

B.G.L. Vers. 1. Gathered themselves together against Aaron. B.G.L.P. upon Aaron. A.H. to Aaron. I.V.C.S. ghal, upon, or against.

B.V. Vers. 12. For a mischiefe. B.V. rather than, maliciously. G.B. craftily. L. with a mischievous intent. I. with maliciousnes. S. C. in maliciousnes. A. ברעה beraghah, to a mischiefe.

B.I. cum cater. Vers. 15. So Moses turned him. B.G.I.L.V. Moses looked backe. P,C. פנה phanah signifieth both to turne, and looke: but the first rather here, because of the word following, he went downe.

I.S.A. Vers. 18. It is not the noise which the strong make, nor the noise which the weake make: I. the voice of them which crie out strength, or, the voice of them which crie out weakues. S.A.H. better than, the voice of them which answer strongly, or, of them which answer weakely. V. or, the noise of them which have the victorie, or, of them which are evercome. G.B. or, the crie of them which exhort to fight, or, of them which compell to flie. L.

A great error in the Latine text. Vers. 28. Three thousand men. B. G. cum cater. three and twentie thousand. L. very corruptly. See 7. qu. following.

I.A. Vers. 29. When every one shall be upon his sonne. I.A.H. better than, every one upon himsonne. B.G. cum cater. for here the word בי ci, when, is omitted.

I.A. Vers. 32. And now, whether wilt thou forgive them their sinne. I. if thou wilt, &c. A.H. better than, and now forgive them their sinne: B.G. cum cater. for here the conjunction אמ im, is omitted in the translation.

B.G. cum cater. Vers. 35. Because they procured the calfe which Aaron made: or made the calfe which Aaron made. B.G. cum cater. for that which they did to the calfe, which Aaron made. I. But the preposition את eth is seldome a signe of the Dative but of the Accusative case: because they worshipped the calfe which Aaron made. C. the word is עשה gashah, to make.

3. The questions discussed.

Quest. 1. Whether Moses had signified unto the people, when hee would returne.

Vers. 1. WHen the people saw that Moses tarried long, &c. 1. R. Salomon here is of opinion that Moses, when he went away told the people, that he would returne after 40. daies: but they were deceived in the account, and reckoned that day wherein Moses ascended, so that in the end of 39. daies they then consulted to make them gods.

2. Contra. But this assertion can stand by no meanes. 1. It was not knowne unto Moses himselfe how long he should stay, when he went from them: for he himselfe staied six daies in the mount, before he was called up to the top, chap. 14.16. If he had set them a certaine time, he would not have spoken ambiguously, but plainly, that they might have knowne certainly when to expect his returne. 3. At the least, though they had mistaken a day, they would have waited for him so long after the appointed time. 4. Neither could all this be done in the space of one day: the people to gather their earings, and Aaron thereof to make a golden Calfe; and beside, Aaron putteth off the solemnitie to the next day: all this could not be done upon the 40. day, therefore it is like that they began this wicked enterprise upon the 35. day, or thereabout: and that Moses had not given them any direction for his returne, Tostat. qu. 2. Lyran.

Quest. 2. Whether the Egyptians were the first beginners and motioners of this idolatrie.

Vers. 2. WHen the people saw. 1. R. Salomon againe, some what to excuse here this fact of the Israelites, saith, that the Egyptians which went out with the Israelites did egge and intice them, and set them a worke to make this golden image; as they likewise provoked the people to falla lusting for flesh by their example, Numb. 11.4.

2. Contra

2. Contra. 1. But howsoever at other times the strangers, that were mingled among them, might set them a murmuring, it is like here that the Israelites themselves were most forward in this wicked enterprise: for the name of people is given unto them: whereas the other are not simply called the people, but with some other addition: as chap. 12. 38. A great multitude of sundrie sortes of people; and Numb. 11. 4. A number of people that was among them fell a lusting, &c. 2. They themselves speake of their bringing out of Egypt by Moses: but Moses brought the Israelites out; the rest were not so much brought out, as voluntarily came forth being mingled among the people. 3. The people also themselves were subject and prone to idolatrie: as S. Stephen sheweth out of the Prophet, Act. 7. 43. yea he saith directly, vers. 39. that they were their fathers, that said unto Moses, Make us gods, &c. Tostat. qu. 1. 4. S. Paul also so expounded it of the Israelites, 1 Cor. 10. 7. Neither be ye Idolaters, as were some of them. So not all the people, but onely some of them were guiltie of this sinne of idolatrie: for it is like that they, whom Moses armed afterward to slay their brethren, were not opinioning thereunto, Iun. 5. The Levits, vers. 29. did consecrate their hands every one upon his son and brother: they were then their owne brethren and consequently Israelites, who were ringleaders of this mischievous exploit.

QUEST. III. The occasions of idolatrie in generall, and particularly of the idolatrie of the Israelites heere.

Vers. 1. THat Moses tarried long, &c. Here we are to consider of the occasions and causes of idolatrie, which are either generall, or particular in this place, which moved the Israelites to fall into this follie. 1. The generall are these: 1. Feare in extremitie and distresse maketh men prone to wicked devises, and to erect unto themselves gods: as the mariners in Jonas ship being in danger, called every one upon his god. 2. Another cause is ignorant imitation of things not rightly understood: as because Abraham at Gods commandement would have offered his son Isaac unto God, the heathen idolaters likewise did sacrifice their owne children with bloudie hands unto their idols. 3. A third cause, is foolish doting love and affection: as Salomon doting upon his wives, was by them enticed, and seduced to idolatrie. It is written that Alexander so loved Ephestio, that he decreed divine honour to be given him. 4. A fourth cause is good hap and prosperitie: as the Atheniens having obtained a victorie against the Persians at Marathe, onely with the helpe of ten thousand men, seeing at that time in the aire, a spirit in the likenesse of Pan, which terrified their enemies, they afterward worshipped him, and built him a Temple, B. Babington.

2. The particular causes and occasions of this idolatrie, which deceived the Israelites, were these: The first was, absentia ducis, the absence of their Captaine: 2. Curiositas, their curiositie, that not being contented with those things which Moses had taught them, must adde of their owne: 3. Timiditas Aaronis, the fearefulnesse of Aaron, that durst not resist the people: 4. A false opinion, in thinking that whatsoever they did with a good intention, to be pleasing unto God, Ferus. 5. Adde hereunto their impatiencie, in not enduring to stay any longer for Moses: as Saul, because the Lord answered him not, when he would, went unto a witch, B. Babing.

QUEST. IV. Of the divers faults and infirmities at once here committed by the people.

THe people gathered themselves together against Aaron, &c. The people in this their outrage doe offend diversly: 1. In their violence: the word signifieth super Aaron, they came upon Aaron, tanquam superiores potentia, as being mightier than he, and so pressing upon him. 2. They say, make us gods; Vide insaniam populi; See the madnesse of the people, as though God can be made with mens hands, Ferus. 3. There appeared in them, levitas & inconstantia, great levitie and inconstancie, that had not long before bound themselves by covenant to obey the Lords Commandements, and so soone fall away, Marbach. 4. Their great forgetfulnesse also bewrayeth it selfe, that had heard the Lord with his owne voice thundering out his Commandements, whereof one prohibited directly idolatrie, and yet they in despite of God, do set up an idoll. 5. Their ingratitude also is manifest, both against God the author of their deliverance, and Moses the Minister thereof, and of many great works, speaking of him contemptuously, We know not what is become of this Moses, Gallas. 6. Their stupiditie was wonderfull, that having the cloud before them, an evident signe of Gods presence, and the manna, which fell daily of his providence, they setting at nought such excellent signes, signorum appetunt, qua ipsorum vanitati respondeat, desire a signe answerable to their vanitie, Calvin. Oleaster thinketh, the cloud at this time was taken out of their sight: but that is not so; for it is said, chap. 13. 22. That he tooke not away the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people. 7. Thus the people at once sinned diversly: 1. They have manifestly against the first Commandement: 2. They offend in publicam ipsorum fidem, against their publike faith given: 3. They offend not onely in the outward worke, but also impiissima opinione, in their wicked opinion, thinking hereby to obtaine remission of their sins: 4. And they doe not onely transgresse against God, but against Moses their deliverer, and so they violate both the first and second table, Ferus.

QUEST. V. Why the people say unto Aaron, Rise.

Vers. 1. VP, or rise. 1. Which is not so said, as though Aaron did then sit, when the people came unto him. 2. Neither is it necessarily hence collected, Quod matutinum fuit hic vociferari, &c. That this running together was in the morning, as Cajetan thinketh, and that they did as it were awaken and raise up Aaron. 3. But this manner of speaking sheweth their importunitie, that they would have him dispatch quickly, and with all speed doe, as they willed him. 4. And beside, they seeme to cast some good colour and pretence upon this their haste, because they had expected and waited Moses comming downe a great while: and therefore they would stay no longer, Tostat. qu. 3. 5. Beside, they seeme hereby to tye Aarons negligent administration, that he was secure and remisse in the government, and therefore in this manner rouse him up, O sleander. 6. This their speech also sheweth, that they pressed upon him violently, and urged him, saying, Surge, Rise, that is, Age, Goe to, Iunius.

QUEST. VI. Of the divers kindes of idolatrie.

Make us gods. 1. There are divers kindes of idolatrie, which may be brought to these foure heads: 1. When either that is worshipped for a god, which is nothing; such were the Idols of the Heathen, the imaginations of their owne blinde hearts. 2. When the divine honour is given unto any creature, as to Angels, or Saints. 3. When any divine power is ascribed to the images of God, or Saints. 4. When the true God is worshipped, but otherwise than he hath prescribed; as Ahaz caused an Altar of a strange fashion to be reared up unto God, and such were their traditions of the Pharisies, Simler.

2. Or idolatrie may be thus distinguished; it is committed two wayes: 1. When, res extra Deum adoratur, &c. when things beside God are worshipped, and that either externally, by bowing unto them, or inwardly, in putting trust and confidence in them. 2. Quando Deus aliter colitur, quam ipse instituit; When God is otherwise worshipped, than he appointeth; which is also done two wayes: either when men devise unto themselves a forme of worship not prescribed: such are the Processions, Pilgrimages, Vigils, and such like used in Poperie: or when the worship which God instituted, alio fine observatur, quam est institutum, &c. be observed upon another end than is appointed, as thereby to merit at Gods hand: as the hypocrites in Israel thought to please God, by the externall act of their sacrifices; and so doe now the Romanists by their idolatrous Masse, Marbach. The idolatrie of the Israelites was of all these sorts, communicating with part of each: for they outwardly set up an Idoll, and inwardly put their confidence in it; and did seeme yet in this Idoll to acknowledge God, so worshipping him after another manner, than God himselfe had prescribed.

QUEST. VII. Why they say, Make us gods, not god.

Make us gods, &c. The word is put in the plurall, Elohim, gods. 1. Whereupon some of the Fathers doe gather, that the Israelites here fell away into the idolatrie of the Gentiles, who brought in a multiplicitie of gods. But that is not so, for they did proclaime an holy day unto Iehovah, vers. 5. Glos. interlinear. giveth this exposition, that although there was but one idoll made: yet he that falleth to idolatrie, doth fall into all vices, & tot diis & dæmonibus, quot vitiis servit, and so serveth as many gods or devils, as vices. But it is not put in the plurall number in any such sense, because of that which followeth: which may goe before us; but their vices and corruptions could not be said to goe before them. 3. Some referre it to the idols, which they desired to have made; they would have many, but Aaron made but one: neither is this like to be the reason: for then Aaron should not have contented them. In that therefore Aaron satisfied their desire, it seemeth he knew their minde, that one idoll would serve their turne. 4. Some thinke, that because Elohim in the plurall, is taken for the true God, therefore it is so used here: Quia sub Deo hunc errorem instituerunt; Because they instituted this service to the true God, Simler. But by gods, here it is evident, they understand not God himselfe: for they were not so absurd to thinke, that God could be made with mens hands. 5. Therefore the plurall here is taken for the singular, according to the Hebrew phrase, Oleaster. As so the Lord saith, I have made thee Pharaohs god, chap. 7.1. where the word is Elohim, in the plurall: and sometime a word of the plurall number is joyned with an adjective of the singular, as Isai. 19.4. I will deliver the Egyptians into the hands, adonim kasheh, Dominorum duri, of Lords hard: where the adjective is put in the singular: sometime the adjective that is joyned with it, is put in the plurall also, but the relative in the singular, Iosh. 24.19. Elohim kadoshim hu, he is holy gods, that is, an holy God: so likewise sometime Elohim is put with a verbe singular, as Gen. 1.1. Bara Elohim, creavit Dii, God created: sometime with a verbe in the plurall, as in this place, asher jeelhen, which may goe before us. So then, Elohim, gods in the plurall, is here put for the singular: Make us a god, Tostat. qu. 4.

QUEST. VIII. How the Israelites would have their god to be made to goe before them.

To goe before us. 1. It is evident by this, wherefore they desired a visible god to be made; not to that end, that they might with greater libertie eat and drinke, feast, and play before the idoll, which they could not doe before the Lord: for the Lord did allow them to rejoyce before him in sober and seemely manner. Nor yet because they bee like unto other nations, to have some visible image to worship: but they shew the end thereof, that they might have some visible presence to goe before them, Tostat. qu. 6. 2. And whereas Moses being absent, they might have desired some other guide in his place to direct them: they doe not so, both because they know, none could be given them like unto Moses: and if such an one might be found, he was subject to the like danger, as they imagined Moses to be fallen into: they desire rather some visible god to be given unto them, Tostat. qu. 8. 3. Neither were they so senseless to thinke, that an idoll made of silver or gold, which hath eyes, and seeth not, eares, and heareth not, could goe before them. 4. And Tostatus conceit is too curious: that because they had seene images in Egypt, which had, as they thought, a certaine divine power in them, speaking sometimes, and making answer unto demands. And among the rest, the Egyptian God Apis, which was like a pide bull, did appeare once in a yeare unto them, and used to goe before them unto Memphis, and all the Egyptians followed after, playing upon their harps and other instruments: he thinketh, that the Israelites desired the like god to be given them; that they might have an image made, endued with some divine power to goe before them. But they never had seene any image in Egypt made with mens hands, to stirre, and move, and walke before them. The Egyptian god, Apis, was either a very pide bull indeed, or the devill in that likenesse: therefore they having seene no such president in Egypt, it is not like they imagined any such thing. 5. Wherefore, these Elohim gods, which they desire to be made, were none other but images, as Laban to collect his little images, gods, Gen. 31. Gallas. This then is the meaning, that some image may be made [illegible] which should admonish them of the divine presence, Oleaster. And they fly in effect but thus much, Instruo nobis ritum, &c. Appoint us some kinde of worship, that God may be reconciled unto us, Ne porro nos praetereat; That he may go forward and be first with us, as he hath begun, Pererius. So then their meaning is not, that the calfe should be made, should goe before them; but that God represented, and reconciled thereby, might goe on still with them.

QUEST. IX. Why the people came to Aaron rather than to Hur.

BUt it will bee here questioned, why the people demand this rather of Aaron, than of Hur, who was joyned with him in the government, chapter 24. 14. Some make this the reason, because that the people had killed Hur, because he resisted them; and this he feared, under the manner of his death, all the people came and spet into his mouth, and so choaked him. But it is more like, if Hur in so good a cause had given his life, that it should have beene omitted: Pineda as fit for slaying the adulterer, and adulteress commended, and honourable mention is made thereof; but Hur had beene more worthie to have been recorded, for not killing, but in suffering himselfe rather to bee killed in defence of Gods part worthie, Tostat. qu. 3. 2. Neither yet is it to be supposed, that Hur was dead: for some mention then to have beene made of his death, being a principall governour, and of the people his intercession for him. 3. Therefore, although Hur may bee thought to have yeelded and consented to their motion, as well as Aaron, as not being a more holy man, than he; yet because Aaron was the chiefe, and more principall, he onely is mentioned, Tostat. qu. 3.

QUEST. X. Whether at this time the Israelites were deprived of the cloud.

FUrther, whereas they desire gods to bee made to goe before them: it will be demanded, that they had the presence of the cloud, which went before them; and they therefore needed not to have had any other guide. 1. Oleaster therefore thinketh that the cloud might at this time be taken out of their sight: but this opinion is briefely confuted before, quest. 4. the cloud did not leave them till they came into the land of Canaan, when the manna also ceased, Ioseph. 5. 2. Some make the blinde curiositie of the people, the cause why they regarded not that ordinarie signe of Gods presence, but requested some figure and representation of God, answerable to their vanitie, Calvin. So also Chrysostome, Adhuc infirmis, & oblivionis & ingratitudinis. Thou seest daily that which thou wonderest at, (namely, the manna, which fell every morning) and thou forgettest the giver. 3. But this also may bee joyned to the former reason, they had staied 40. dayes in a plaine, and the cloud stirred not; they had continued as long in this place about mount Sinai, even fortie dayes, as they had beene in all the mansion places, since their coming out of Egypt: and so they might doubt, that this cloud should be their direction no longer to goe before them into the promised land, and therefore they desire another guide. Homil. de proditione Iudæ.

QUEST. XI. Why they say they knew not what was become of Moses.

Vers. 1. Or of this Moses, &c. we know not what is become of him, &c. 1. R. Salom. thinketh, they supposed he had beene dead, and that Satan had made such an apparition in the aire, as if they had indeed seene a coffin, as if Moses had beene dead, and his bodie put into it. But if they had conceived that Moses were dead, they would not have spoken so doubtfully, as not knowing what was befallen him, Lyranus. And beside, God would not have suffered Satan in the same place, where hee gave them signe of his glorious presence in the clouds, to have practised his cosening and counterfeits there. 2. They shew their contempt, not vouchsafing to call him by his name; Contemptim etiam illum appellabant, &c. They in contempt call him the man, &c. Lippoman. 3. They also bewray their infidelitie, that having daily experience how the Lord fed them with manna, could not conceive how the Lord should preserve Moses alive also fortie dayes, without any supplie of food from them, Simler. 4. They shew their oblivion and unthankfulnesse, that having seene Moses goe up into the mountaine, and entring into the thicke cloud, talking with God: they now begin to imagine, that he might be consumed, and devoured in those flames, Osiander. 5. This their apostasie, and falling away from God, and despising of his Prophet, did prefigure their falling away afterward from Christ, Perer.

QUEST. XII. Why Aaron had them put off their earings.

Vers. 2. Then Aaron said, plucke off the golden earings, &c. 1. Some thinke, because the people made great account of their jewels and earings, that Aaron by this meanes did thinke to have weaned them from their purpose. So Augustine; Intelligunt illi difficultatem praecepti vetitum, ut ipso modo ab illicitis revocarent; He may be thought to have commanded them hard things, to revoke them from this transgression, &c. So also Tostatus, Lyranus. 2. And Calvin further addeth, that he required this, lest they might have spoiled the Tabernacle, to finde gold for this idoll, and he might thinke the people would be thereby more hardly drawne unto it, because they had given so liberally unto the Tabernacle alreadie. But Calvin is herein deceived, for the Tabernacle was not yet made: for Moses being not come downe from the mount, where he received instruction for the making of the Tabernacle. 3. Further, Aaron might thinke, that the women would hardly have parted with their jewels, and that there might have risen by this meanes, some tumultes and stirres in their families, by which meanes this attempt should have beene hindered. Oleast. And this is very like, that Aaron used all meanes secretly to have put off the people: but herein was his great fault, that he dissembled in so weightie a matter, and did not plainly and openly withstand the people. Quæst. 141. in Exod.

QUEST. XIII. Whether Aaron be here to be excused.

SOme goe about to excuse, or extenuate Aarons offence here. 1. Bernard alleageth, that Aaron was forced thereunto: Scelerata tumultuantis populi omnia voluntatem suam vobis efflagitantibus; Hee gave way, way unto the wicked clamours of the people against his owne minde. So also Theodoret, Videtur fortasse voluisse eos à se abigere: He was forced of necessitie to frame a calfe. And so he excuseth himselfe afterward by the peoples outrage, vers. 22. But nothing should have compelled Aaron to doe evill: he should have feared God, rather than man, and chosen to die, before he would see God dishonoured.

Epistol. 56. 2. Ambrose saith, Nisi incassum rem vanam Satanæ dare possumus, quæ condemnare audemus. We cannot ther excuse so great a Priest, and yet dare condemne him. But setting Moses did afterward sharply reprove him, and the Lord would for this have slaine him, Deut. 9. there is no question, but that he most grievously sinned.

3. Some alledge by way of excuse, that all Aarons counsels tended to have fought delayes, till Moses comming, in that he called for their earings, which he thought would have bene gathered with great trouble; and lastly, when he casteth them altogether, and melteth them, and then caused it to be fashioned with a graving toole: after that he made an Altar, and deferred the solemnitie till the next day, Oleaster. But all this being granted, it is so farre from excusing Aaron, that perfidiosior est affectus, his conscience is so much the more treacherous, dissembling his conscience, which he saw idolatrie so generall, and rooted in the people, than if he had given a simple assent, Iun. in Analys.

4. Procerpius saith, Quasi confitendo exprobrat, &c. Aaron doth as it were upbraid them, and scoffingly say unto them, These are thy gods, &c. but neither were these the words of Aaron, the people so said, neither is it like that Aaron being afraid of them, would have scoffed with them: wherefore that Aarons sinne was very grievous, and inexcusable, doth now follow to be shewed in the next question.

5. Theodoret addeth, Primo populi impetum tentat compescere, &c. That first he tried to pacifie the heat of the people with words. But this is not expressed in the text: it may be he would have dissuaded them, but that he saw them so violently carried, that there was no speaking unto them.

Quæst. XIV. Of the greatnesse of Aarons sinne.

Aarons sin then is made manifest, & set forth by these circumstances. 1. In respect of his person, he had often conference with God, and by him the Lord had wrought great works and miracles in Egypt: therefore his example was so much the more dangerous, and his fall the greater. 2. The thing that he consented unto, was a breach of the first table: it was not theft or adulterie, or such like, but wicked idolatrie: for, Spiritualia peccata graviora sunt; Spirituall evils are more grievous. Ferus. 3. Quod populi manibus accepit, signum est effœminati & servilis animi: In that he taketh their earings with his owne hands, it was a signe of an effeminate, and servile minde, Calvin. 4. He sinned also grievously in his dissimulation: when for feare hee against his owne conscience dissembled, and so betrayed the truth, Iun. 5. Berbaius addeth, that he sinned two wayes beside, in usurping a lawgivers office, which belonged unto Moses: and in bringing in new rites, and worship which God had not commanded. But Aaron offended not in the first, because Moses had left him governour in his place till he returned: but in the latter his presumption was great. 6. Aarons fall also appeareth in this, that after he made a golden calfe, seeing it to be pleasing unto the people, he was so forward afterward, both in making an Altar, and proclaiming a solemnitie, Polanc.

Quæst. XV. Why it pleased God to suffer Aaron to fall.

NOw it pleased God to suffer Aaron to fall. 1. Ut humiliaretur, that he might be humbled, lest he might afterward have beene too much lifted up, being called to bee high Priest, Ferus. 2. By this example we doe see, Sanctissimos interdum fœde labi, &c. that holy men may sometime grossely fall, Bertr. 3. This sheweth, that Aarons Priesthood was not perfect, nor able fully to reconcile men unto God, seeing he himselfe was a sinner, Marb. Quomodo unus captivus alium liberaret? How should one captive deliver another, Ferus. Or one sinner make reconciliation for another? 4. And for this cause also, it pleased God to suffer Aaron to fall, Ut nemo de gratia sua præsumat, that no man should presume of his gifts or strength, but let him that standeth, (as the Apostle saith) take heed lest he fall, Ferus. 5. And by Aarons presumption, we see how dangerous a thing it is, to bring any thing into Gods service without his warrant, Bertr.

Quæst. XVI. How the golden calfe is said to be fashioned with a graving toole.

Vers. 4. AND fashioned it with a graving toole, and made thereof a molten calfe. 1. The word here translated a graving toole, is cheresh, which is sometime taken for a bag or purse, as 2 King. 5. 22. where it is said, that Naaman bound two talents of silver in two bags, & gave them to Gehezi: and so some thinke that Aaron put all the peoples jewels and earings in a bag together, lest they might thinke he had converted any part thereof to his owne use, Cajetan. but the other word vajatzar, he fashioned, is against this sense. 2. But most usually cheresh is taken for a penny, style, or graving toole: and so some thinke, that Aaron with this instrument did drawe a patterne, making the proportion of a calfe, which the workmen should follow in their casting. So R. Salom. Obadi. Lyran. 3. Others thinke, that with this instrument Aaron made a mould in clay, or such like matter, and the mettall cast into it received that forme, Tostat. Oleast. 4. Simeon taketh a double use of this graving toole, Unum in formando typo, alterum in perficiendo opere fuso: One in making the mould, the other in polishing the worke after it was cast. 5. But I rather subscribe to Gallasius, that thinketh here is an ἀναστροφὴ, a transposing of the words, putting the latter first: for the golden calfe was first cast and melted, and then polished and trimmed with a graving toole, as workmen use to doe.

6. This calfe was made by Founders worke: there are three wayes to make and frame things of mettall; either by hammering and beating them to some fashion, as the Cherubs upon the Arke were made: or by joyning the peeces and joints together, which are sunderly made; or by casting and melting it in moulds: and so was this golden calfe made, Tostat. qu. 10.

Quæst.

QVEST. XVII. Why Aaron caused the likenesse of a calfe to be made, rather than of any other thing.

Verse 4. Molten calfe. 1. Some of the Hebrewes give this ridiculous reason, why the image of a calfe was made rather, than of any other thing: when the Israelites were comming out of Egypt, all intended to bring out Iosephs bones with them, as they did, they say Nilus had overflowen the place where his bones were, and so Moses did make the picture of a calfe in a certaine golden plate, which hoping upon the water shewed the place where Ioseph bones lay: which plate, they say, was brought among other jewels to Aaron here, and cast into the fire, by vertue whereof the whole masse of gold was turned into the shape of a calfe. But here are many fables couched together. 1. It is a very tale, that Ioseph bones were found out by any such meanes. 2. The people onely brought their golden earings, therefore not any such plate. 3. Neither was there any such vertue in that golden plate, if there had beene any such to convert or change the whole masse. 4. Neither was there any such cause, seeing the molten calfe was cast into a mould, Opere fusario, by Founders worke, as the Latine translator readeth.

2. Abraham seemeth to thinke that this figure of a calfe was made, rather than any other, as apteſt at that time to receive some divine and celeſtiall influence: but though Aaron were at this present grossely blinded and deceived, yet it were impietie to thinke that he was given to such superstitious astrologicall observations, as to make figures to derive some secret supernaturall influence and vertue into, by the celeſtiall constellations.

3. Some thinke, that Aaron caused a calfe to be made, to deride them, as Helias did Baals Priests, supposing they would not be so absurd, as to ascribe divine vertue unto a calfe, Procopius. But it seemeth that Aaron was in good earneſt, by that which followeth, in that he set upon Altar, and proclaimed an holy day.

4. It is further alleaged by some, that Aaron intended not to make any thing of the gold, thinking that the fire might consume it: but that the Egyptians which were in the campe by their art Magike, and by the operation of the devill, caused the image of a calfe to come forth, Ex Fero. But it may appeare, vers. 24. by Aarons confeſſion unto Moses, that he intended to make them an image, when he cast the metall into the fire: and to what end else served the graving toole, but to fashion it? he would not have fashioned and trimmed the devils worke.

5. Some further thinke they would have a calfe made, because the sacrifices of bullocks are the chiefe: and thereby they thought the better to please God. But it is not like, that they had any such purpose this time to doe that which was pleasing unto God, seeing they had heard not long before the same by his owne mouth forbidding them to make any kinde of image to worship.

It is therefore most like, that Aaron according to the desire of the people, made a Calfe like unto the Egyptian god Apis, which they had seene the Egyptians to worship: and therefore they were drawne to the corrupt imitation of them, to have the image of a Calfe made, Lyran. Calvin. Simler. Gallas. Augustine addeth further, that the Egyptians had set up the image of an oxe or bullocke by Ioseph tombe, which they worshipped. So the Interlineary gloſſe giveth this reason: Quia bovem adoraverunt in Egypto, Because they had used to worship a bullocke in Egypt. And the Egyptians used to worship their king being dead, under the forme of a live bullocke, Plin. lib. 8. cap. 46. Lib. 1. mirabil. sacr. Script. c. 33.

QVEST. XVIII. Whether the Israelites thought indeed the golden Calfe to be the God that delivered them.

Then they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee out of Egypt. 1. Procopius thinketh that these words were uttered by Aaron, and that hereby he would have brought them to remember that God which had brought them out of Egypt. But it is evident by the text that these were the acclamation of the people.

2. Lyranus thinketh, that the people attribuebat idolo, did attribute unto this idoll it selfe those great workes which God had wrought for their deliverance: and therefore for honour of this idoll, they spake in the plurall number, as men used to doe to great persons. But it is not like they were so mad, as to think, the golden Calfe brought them out of Egypt, cum res esset inanimata, it being a thing without life. And men use to speake for more honour sake in the plurall number, in the first, and second person, not in the third: and though the pronoune or verbe be put in the plurall, yet the noune is not: as when it is to say, nos summus Rex, we are the King, not Kings, as here in the plurall they say, These are thy gods, O Israel. The plurall therefore is taken here for the singular, according to the Hebrew phrase as before hath been observed, quæst. 7.

3. Tostatus thinketh, that the people did not in so saying conceive so much of the golden Calfe, as of the divine vertue and power of the true God: quam latere putabant in illa vitulo aureo, which they imagined to be in that golden calfe. For they could not be ignorant, that the true God, the God of their fathers, brought them out of Egypt. And they knowing this, it is not to be thought, quod cum populus vellet publicare, that all the people would agree in a lye, Tostat. But what divine vertue could they imagine to be in the Calfe, which they saw to be made presently before their eyes of their earings?

Thoring in his replies, saith, the judgement of the people was so blinded and swallowed up, Ut rem viderent penitus inanimatam esse Deum: That they thought a thing altogether without life to be God. So Rupertus: Veritatem quam cognoverant, dicentes, &c. The truth which they knew, saying, Let us sing unto him, for he hath triumphed gloriously: In mendacium commutarunt, &c. They turned into a lye, saying, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee out of Egypt. He thinketh that they tooke this very calfe to be the god, that delivered them.

But be it admitted that the people were so grosse, it cannot bee thought that Aaron could be so grossely grossely deceived. And whereas Thorius obiecteth that place, *Psal.*106.20. They turned their glory into the similitude of a calfe, &c. they forgate God their Sauiour, which had done great things in Egypt, &c. hence it cannot bee gathered, that they had cast off all knowledge or memorie of God: for then Aaron that made the calfe should have fallen into the same oblivion. But they had forgotten their obedience, which should have beene yeelded to Gods commandement, as it is said before in the same place, *vers.*13. albeit as yet they had not made the molten calfe, Moses being then with him, Incontinently they forgate his workes, they waited not for his counsell. So Gregorie expounded the pulling off their earings, Vt inobedientiæ ipsorum offenderet ad cultum idolorum esse peruenisse; To shew, that by their disobedience they fell to the worship of idols.

5. Therefore, in that they say, These are thy gods, they have relation unto God himselfe, In honorem eorum extruxerunt vitulum; In honour of whom they set up the calfe, Ferus. They give the name of the thing signified to the signe: as if they should have said, Hoc Dei illius signum est, &c. This image is a signe of that God which brought us out of Egypt, Marbach. They thought that Gods honour was hereby more set forth, Quia sub externa imagine ipsum colerent; because they did worship him in an outward image, Calvin. He that giveth any honour unto this image, præstat gratissimum cultum Deo illi, & dat yeeld acceptable service unto that God, which brought us out of Egypt, Osiander.

And that the Israelites in the golden calfe had respect unto God, unto whose honour they made it, may further be declared by these reasons: 1. Because the Gentiles themselves had not that imagination of their Images, to thinke them the very gods, but onely representations of them; their gods they beleeue be in heaven. 2. To call the images of God, Elohim, gods, by a certaine metonymie, was usuall among idolaters, as Laban calleth his images, Elohim, gods, *Gen.*31.30. Gallas. 3. Non probabile est tam crassæ fuisse, &c. It is not probable they were so grosse, to thinke a new god could bee made, Calvin. Or to thinke the calfe delivered them, being a thing without life, Ferus. 4. And that Aaron saith to morrow shall bee an holy day to Iehovah, Cognitus est Deus his, &c. It is evident that God was knowne unto them, that made the molten calfe, Borrh.

Quæst. XIX. Why Aaron proceeded to build an Altar before the golden calfe.

Vers.5. WHen Aaron saw that, he made an Altar, &c. 1. R. Salomon, whom Paulus Burgensis followeth, who had beene sometime a Jew himselfe, hath here this assertion: that as soone as the calfe was made, it went alone, and therefore Aaron seeing such a great wonder, did make an Altar for the honour of this calfe; to this purpose they alleage that text, *Psal.*106.20. They turned their glory into the similitude of a calfe that eateth hay, that is, of a living calfe. Contra. 1. This text is against them, that this calfe was made onely in the similitude of a calfe that eateth hay, not that it did eat hay, or exercise any other worke of life, but it was made like unto it, Thorius. 2. And this golden calfe wanting joynts and sinewes, instruments of motion, and chaps and jawes, which are the meanes of feeding, could not goe, nor feed of it selfe: it might have beene moved, and carried by some spirit, but of it selfe it could not bee made to walke. 3. And if Aaron should have set up an Altar to this calfe, as thinking any divine vertue to be in it, he should have consented to most abominable idolatrie, Tostat. 4. And whereas they wrest those words of Aaron, *vers.*24. There went out this calfe, as though it came walking out of it selfe: the meaning is, Egressus fuit opere fusorio; It came forth by the melting, and casting of the workman.

2. Yet it is not to be thought, that Aaron was so forward, as of himselfe to please the people yet more, to build an Altar before the idoll, as Simlerus thinketh, and Cajetan is in the same opinion, Aaron populum nolens perdere, ædificat altare coram vitulo, non expectans rogari; Aaron because he was loth that any should be before him, doth build an Altar, not staying to be intreated, &c. For if Aaron had beene thus willing, he could not have so excused himselfe afterward, by the violence of the people: which he saith, were set on mischiefe, *vers.*22.

3. Nor yet did Aaron of himselfe make an Altar, Vt tempus tereret, to spend time, that he might have put off his businesse till Moses comming, Ex Ferо. For then, what pretence soever he had, he should have given them occasion of greater idolatrie, as it followeth afterward.

4. But the truth is, that Aaron made this Altar, not onely being thereunto, rogatus, asked of the people, Osiander. but impulsus, compelled, Marbach. For now they have an idoll, they must have an Altar, and sacrifices, and an holy day, and all things belonging to this superstitious service, Gallas. So also Calvin. Cum videt populum sic furere, when he saw the people so madly bent, &c. or when he saw that they would kill him, Nisi Altare construeret; unlesse he would build an Altar: then he proceeded, Tostat. qu.19.

Quæst. XX. How Aaron proclaimed an holy day unto the Lord.

Vers.5. TO morrow is the holy day of the Lord. 1. Some thinke that Aaron of purpose did put off this solemnitie to the next day: Quia sperabat Mosen redditurum, &c. because hee hoped Moses would returne before the next day, Vatablus, Tostat. But Cajetans opinion is here more probable, that noteth great forwardnesse in Aaron to keepe this solemnitie (the people no doubt urging and importuning him:) Nec potuerunt festum citius indici; The feast could not be sooner appointed, than against the next day. So by this it rather may be gathered, that Aaron to satisfie the peoples desire, when he saw they would not be gainsaid, proclaimed this solemnitie upon a very short warning.

2. But Cajetans opinion in the rest is very harsh, that Aaron was herein more besotted than the people; for whereas the people gave but the common name, Elohim, to the idoll; Ipse ineffabile & incommunicabile nomen attribuit; He attributeth unto it, that incommunicable name, not to be uttered, &c. which meaneth Iehovah: and that, Nulle instigante; none pricking him forward, Et more publico; and with publike proclamation.

Contra

Contra, Aaron was not so prophane and irreligious, as to attribe the name Iehovah unto an Idoll: but he would seeme to doe all this for the honour of God, Illa festa haud dubie instituta indicat, He sheweth that this solemne worship was instituted for God, Simler. Bullus, Osiand. Calvin. Like as Micah having made him images, and gotten a Levite into his house, thought that God was thereby well pleased, and would surely blesse him, Iud. 17. And with the like superstitious devotion, they sacrificed unto God aforetime in high places, thinking that service to be acceptable unto God: as here Aaron would seeme to celebrate this solemnitie unto the Lord, Ferus.

Quest. XXI. Of the sacrifices, who, and what was offered upon the Altar that Aaron made.

Vers. 6. SO they rose up the next morning, and offered burnt offerings, &c. 1. Here their diligence is observed, that early in the morning rose up to keepe this idolatrous and impious solemnitie, Simler, Cajetan. 2. And whereas the Priests of the Levites were not yet consecrated to the Priesthood: it is like, that according to the ancient custome, the first borne offered sacrifices, as it is observed, c. 24. how Moses sent certaine young men of the children of Israel to sacrifice. 3. And though as yet the lawes and ordinances were not delivered them concerning sacrifices, yet herein they followed the ancient practise continued among Gods people, in offering sacrifices, and that of cleane beasts: for the distinction of cleane and uncleane beasts, was of old time observed, even before the floud, as is evident, Genes. 7. They offer but two kinde of sacrifices, burnt offerings, which were wholly consumed upon the Altar, and peace offerings, part whereof they did eat which brought the sacrifices, and therewith the people at least now: sin offerings they brought none, because they had not seene Moses hitherto to have offered any sacrifice for sin, but onely of the two former kinds. And the people did flatter themselves, that herein they did well, and were farre off from acknowledging their sinne: and therefore thought not of any sin offering, Tostat. qu. 16.

Quest. XXII. What is meant, in that it is said, They rose to play.

Vers. 6. THe people sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play. 1. Whereas this word tsechak to play, signifieth foure things, either play and sport, as children use to play, as Ismael did with Isaak, Gen. 21. or to dally as man and wife, as Izhak sported with Rebekah, Gen. 26. or to fight, as Abner like to Ioab, that the young men might play together, in which sword play the one killed another, Sam. 2. or to commit idolatrie: Here R. Salomon, whom Tostatus followeth, doth thinke it to bee taken in the last sense: as the Apostle seemeth also to affirme, 1 Cor. 10. 7. Neither be yee idolaters, as were some of them, as it is written, they sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play. But this their wanton and lascivious playing, was a fruit rather and effect of their idolatrie: they first had committed idolatrie, in offering sacrifices before the golden calfe: then, Ex idololatria ad gulam prorumpunt, ex gula in lasciviam; From idolatrie they fall to gluttony, from gluttony to wantonnesse. And the Apostle doth not conclude their idolatrie out of that word: but Ludos illos inter idololatricos sacra recenset; Rehearseth their play among the ceremonies and rites of idolatrie, Osiander. They were idolaters, because they did all these things in honour of that idoll.

2. By their playing therefore properly is understood, their dancing, singing, and leaping before the golden calfe, as appeareth by the noise, which was described by Moses, and Iosua, before they came at the campe, Iun. Tostat. Simler. Thus the people turned all upside downe: their earings and jewels, which God had given them from the Egyptians, they bestow upon an idoll: with the same feet wherewith they walked thorow the red sea, they dance before the golden calfe; and with the same mouth wherewith they sung praises unto God, after the destruction of the Egyptians in the red sea, they now sing unto the idoll.

3. But although by play is chiefely meant here, the mirth and melodie which they made; yet they by likelyhood fell into a further degree of wantonnesse, and lascivious behaviour; as when Israel joyned themselves to Baal peor, they did not onely commit spirituall fornication in bowing unto their gods, but defiled their bodies also with the daughters of Midian. Such were the sacrifices of the Gentiles set forth with obscene spectacles: in their sacrifices called floralia, the harlots were brought forth naked upon the stage, Simler. So Procopius: Immunditia conspicitur in idolatricum solemnibus; Uncleannesse and filthinesse is seene in the solemnities of idolaters.

4. Where it is said, they did eat and drinke, Calvin saith, Inscite multi ad crapulam torquent; many unskilfully doe wrest it, to shew their riot and excesse, and thinketh thereby onely to bee signified thither, that they feasted. But I rather here approve Simlerus judgement, Credo hoc convivium immodestum fuisse & intemperans, &c. I beleeve rather that this feast was immodest and intemperate. And so Ambrose expoundeth it, Nemo se luxui committit, nisi qui recedit à præceptis Dei; No man giveth himselfe over to riot, but he which departeth from the precepts of God: and then he alleageth this place. 1 Epist. 3 6. lib. 9 Epistol.

Quest. XXIII. Whether this sin of Aaron and the Israelites can any way be excused.

Now, all this fact of Aaron and the Israelites, in making a golden calfe, sacrificing, and dancing before it, some goe about to excuse. 1. There are, which doe thus qualifie the first petition of the people, Make us gods, that because the word Elohim, gods, is applied to Magistrates and great men, as well as unto gods: they say their meaning was, to desire onely some guide, and governour to bee given them in Moses place. But this cannot be so, for these reasons: 1. Aaron could not make them a man to be a governour or guide, but by generation; which could not have beene done, but in continuance of time. 2. And if that had been their request, to what purpose should Aaron have demanded their earings? And the golden calfe being made and set up, why did they worship and dance before it, if it were not their meaning to have such an one made? Tostat. qu. 10.

2. Quidam

ni. Quidam ejunt hostiam non esse immolatam in honorem vituli, &c. Some thinke, that the sacrifice was not slaine for the honour of the golden Calfe, but to be an expiation of their sinne, Ex Præcep. But this contrary appeareth, vers. 8. the Lord himselfe saith, they offered unto it: and if they had sorrowed for their sinne, they would not have leaped and danced as they did.

3. Some Hebrewes say further, that Aaron and the Israelites intended not to worship the Calfe, but did keep that solemnity unto Iehovah, as Aaron caused to be proclaimed: God was offended with them, because they offered sacrifices, being not commanded to doe it, &c.

Coins. 1. Though they had not worshipped the golden Calfe, yet it was a great impiety in them, to cause it to be made with any such intent, to be a scandall and offence. 2. They sinned concerning the Calfe in singing praises unto it, and in sacrificing unto it: saying, These are thy gods, &c. And the Lord himselfe saith, They offered unto it, vers. 8. 3. And Moses himselfe calleth the calfe, their sinne, and stamped it to powder, Deut. 9. 21. and made them drinke thereof: all which sheweth, that they sinned concerning the Calfe, Tostatus qu. 14.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the lawfulnesse of play and recreation, and how it must be moderated.

Vers. 6. They rose up to play. By occasion of this word, here it shall not be amisse to insert somewhat concerning play, recreation and delight, how farre it may be lawfull. 1. Like as the body being wearied with labour, had need of some rest, so the minde being with much study and contemplation dulled, requireth some refreshing: quies animæ est delectatio, the rest of the minde is recreation and delight; as it is reported of Iohn the Evangelist (as Thom. Aquin. writeth) that certaine were offended seeing him playing with some of his disciples: then he bad one of them draw a bow and shoot an arrow, and after that another asking him, if he could doe so continually: they answered, No, for then the bow would breake: So, saith he, would the minde of man be broken, Si nunquam ab intentione sua relaxaretur; If it should never have intermission from serious studie.

2. But here three things specially must bee observed, concerning the moderation of delight and recreation: 1. This delight must not be, in operationibus, vel verbis turpibus; in unseemlie and uncleane words or actions, for that were obscene scurrilitie. 2. We must have a care, that the minde be not wholly given over to sport, and delight, as Ambrose saith, Caveamus, ne dum animum relaxare volumus, suavem omnem harmoniam, tanquam concentum bonorum operum: Let us take heed, lest while we would recreate the minde, wee doe not dissolve the harmonie, and concent of profitable works. 3. It must be carefully seene unto, that our recreation, congruat tempori, personæ, & loco, doe agree unto the time, person, and place.

3. Whereas then Chrysostom saith, Non dat Deus ludere, sed diabolus; God is not the giver and author of play, but the devill; and thereupon he alleageth this text, They sate downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play: He must be understood to speake of those, qui inordinatè ludis utuntur; which use plaies inordinately: which abuse and excesse consisteth in two things: 1. Ex ipsa specie actionum, &c. In the very kinde of actions, wherein the delight consisteth, if they be illiberall, obscene, and uncomely. 2. Secundum defectum debitarum circumstantiarum; If there be a defect in the due circumstances of time, person, or place, Sic Thomas. 22. q. 168. ar. 2. in Cor. & ad. 2.

QUEST. XXV. Why the Lord biddeth Moses get him downe.

Vers. 7. Then the Lord said to Moses, Go get thee downe. 1. Cajetan thinketh, that Moses having received the tables of the law, and the Lord having left talking with him, that Moses was now going downe. But it is not like, that Moses would have departed before the Lord spake unto him, to bid him goe. The Lord had ended all his former communication, Sed nondum dicitur discessisse a colloquio Dei; but hee was not yet departed from the presence and speech of God, Sinler. 2. Rab. Salomon thinketh that this is to be understood of the great dishonour, which Moses sustained by the disobedience of the people, as if the Lord should have said, Descende de honore; Descend from thine honour. But it is evident, in that Moses presently upon these words came downe from the mount, that the Lord spake of his locall descending. 2. Tostatus giveth this reason, why he is bid to descend: because it was not necessarie, that Moses now should stay any longer, to receive lawes and precepts for the people, for they should be given in vaine to such a disobedient people. But the Lord even at this instant had given Moses the tables of the law; therefore that was not the reason. 4. But he is willed to goe downe quickly, Vt effrenem populi licentiam cohiberet; That he might stay the unbridled licentiousnesse of the people, and to chastise them for their disobedience, Gallas. He sendeth him downe, Ad puniendum eorum pervicaciam, to punish their sinne, Lyran. Ferus.

QUEST. XXVI. Why the Lord saith to Moses, Thy people.

Vers. 7. For thy people, which thou hast brought, &c. 1. Some doe expound it thus, Tuum, secundum carnis, vel affectus sollicitudinis; Thy people, in respect of the kindred of the flesh, or loving care, Interlinear. But more is thereby signified. 2. Some thinke by this which is added (thy people) Moses quodammodo vocat in partem criminis, &c. That Moses here after a sort is brought into the crime, to cric his patience, Calvin. He saith, (thy people) ad cumulum criminis, ut etiam ipsum Moses aliquo modo significetur; To accumulate the crime, thereby to signifie, that Moses in a manner had sinned in them, Cajetan. But Moses could no way be touched with their sinne, being not at all accessarie unto it.

3. The most doe make this collection; that God, who, while they were obedient, vouchsafed to call them his people: now doth renounce them, calling them, not my people, but thy people: Quia vere populus deseruit; Because they have forsaken me by their sinne: as the Angell Gabriel saith unto Daniel thy people, in the same sense, Seventie weeks are determined upon thy people, to finish their wickednesse, Dan. 9. 24.

Hieron.

Vivimus, Deus sanctè vivimus Domini servum. Cùm peccamus nostri sumus. While we live well, we are the Lords, but when we sinne, we are our owne, Dipposit. Pellæus. So also, Ostander, Simlerus, Ferus. Though others mislike this sense, yet it is warranted by that place, Deut. 32. 5. They have corrupted themselves, and their children, Iunius. In Deu. 9.

And beside, the Lord in this speaking doth tax their ingratitude: thy people, whom thou hast brought all these wonders for, and done so much for, they have corrupted themselves, Pelarg.

And in that the Lord doth attribute unto Moses their deliverance, which was wrought by his owne hand, and calleth them his people: this he doth, to make Moses more carefull for the reformation of the people. Vt ipse videns eorum sibi commendari, eorum saluti diligentiùs consulat; That he seeing all these to be given him, should diligently chastise them, and see unto them as his owne, Tostat. Gallas.

QUEST. XXVII. Of the greatnesse of the sinne of the Israelites, as the Lord himselfe describeth it.

Vers. 7. HAve corrupted their owne, &c. 1. That is, of themselves, being not seduced by others, but of their owne corrupt inclination, they have committed this great iniquitie, Simler. 2. Like as a wife committeth her selfe by adulterie, so had they falsified their faith toward God by their spirituall fornication, Oleaster. 3. They were soone turned out of the way: there were not fully six weeks passed, from the law was delivered, Ferus, Simler. 4. And from the way which God commanded them, with thunder and lightning, and some of these terrible signes remained still in their sight as the thicke cloud in the top of mount Sinai, into the which Moses was entred to speake with God, Simler. 5. Then followeth the particular description of their sinne: 1. They had transgressed directly against the first and second Commandement, in making a molten image, Ferus. 2. And the same an image of a brute beast, being more brutish and without understanding themselves, Simlerus. 3. They had not onely made it, but worshipped it: 4. Yea offered sacrifices unto it, Tostat. 5. And more than that, Beneficium meum idolo imputarunt; They have ascribed my benefit of their deliverance to an idoll, Interlineus. 6. Obtulerunt vitulo, quæ ipsis dederam; They offered toward the calfe, the things which he had given them, their jewels and earings, which they received of the Egyptians, the Lord having so moved their hearts, Ferus. 7. And to make up the measure of their sinne; the Lord saith, they were a stiffenecked people, intractable, and incorrigible, Simler.

QUEST. XXVIII. Why they are called a people of a stiffe neck.

Vers. 9. I Have seene this people, and behold it is a stiffe-necked people. 1. Deus loquitur more humano, &c. God speaketh here according to the manner and phrase of men: for we doe not upon one fault condemne a man of stubbornesse: but after we have had sufficient experience, and see there is no amendment, then wee will pronounce him contumacious and stubborne. So the Lord in respect of his owne knowledge, knew in the beginning what this people was, Per suam cognitionem simplicem & æternam unicuique omnia comprehendit, &c. By his everlasting knowledge, at once he comprehendeth all things. But in respect of us now, he saith, after he had had experience of this peoples perverseness, who had divers times before murmured against him, and tempted him, and now they had proceeded from evill to worse, he now at the length pronounceth them to be a stiffe-necked people, Tostat. qu. 16.

Some thinke this similitude is taken from them, that make haste in running, and will not turne their neck, to heare or regard those that call them backe, Tostat. But allusion is rather made here unto stubborne bullocks, not used to the yoke, which will not yeeld their neck unto the coller. So this people refused the Lords yoke of obedience, Simlerus, Barrhaius, Iunius.

And hereby is signified, not onely their intractable nature, that they were a stiffe-necked people, Non recipiens correctionem; not receiving any correction, or shewing any hope of amendment: but this is agreeable to their punishment, Vbi talis est duricies, non superest venia locus; Where such hardnesse and obstinacie is, there is no place for pardon, Calvin. There is nothing remaining, Quam ut extrema ultione deleatur, than that they be utterly destroyed, Gallas.

QUEST. XXIX. Why the Lord did not prevent the sin of the people at the first.

BVt it will here be demanded, seeing the Lord might have kept the people from sinning, why he did not. 1. The Lord thought it good in his wisdome to leave this people a little to themselves, and not to call them backe at the first: 1. Quia non ita conspicua esset eorum nequitia, &c. Because their wickednesse should not have so fully appeared, Gallasius. 2. And if they had presently recovered themselves, De justitia sua præsumpsissent; They might have presumed of their owne righteousnesse: and therefore God suffereth them to fall, that they might thereby be humbled, and learne to know themselves, Marbach. 3. And God herein also, Tantæ fidem Mosis, doth trie the faith of Moses, who having received the tables, might perswade himselfe, that all was now in good case: and suddenly in his greatest joy, hee hath a pull backe, hearing of this grievous sinne of the people, Calvin, Marbach. 4. And God suffered this to be, that Moses hereby might interpose himselfe, as a mediator betweene God and his people; Figuram gerens Christum, to imitate Christ, (and to be a perfect type and figure of him) who hath dissolved the wrath of God hanging over our sinnes, Procopius.

But whereas God sometime winketh at mens sins, and suffereth them to goe on, till their wickednesse be at the full, and then punisheth them: herein Gods mercie appeareth, Qui tempestive occurrit populi, &c. which in time preventeth the destruction and ruine of the people, Gallas.

QUEST. XXX. Why and in what sense the Lord saith to Moses, Let me alone.

Vers. 10. NOw therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot, &c. 1. Which the Lord so speaketh, not, Ac si libere non posset exequi vindictam suam, &c. As though he could not freely take vengeance, unlesse Moses gave him leave: but the Lord by this manner of speech sheweth, quanti æstimet servum, seruum, &c. how much he esteemeth his seruant, ascribing so much to his prayers, as though they were let and hinderance vnto him, Caluin. 2. Some thinke, that the Lord by this speech should discourage Moses from praying; because their sinne was so great, as the Lord forbiddeth Ieremie to pray for the people, Ier. 7. 16. 3. But the Lord rather hereby sheweth, that hee remembreth his mercie in iudgement, signifying, se posse seruare, that he could be saued, Pomar. 4. Yet hereby he incourageth Moses rather to pray for the people: like as a father being angrie, and making as though he would smite his son, desireth one standing by, Ne retineas me quæsumo te; Hold me not from smiting, meaning the contrarie, that he would have him interpose himselfe, and mediate for his sonne, Lyran. Tostat. Moses hortatur, &c. precari &c. He exhorteth Moses rather to desire vs pray for the people, Procopius. Because he should might have beene afraid to have prayed, considering the greatnesse of their sinne. So also to the purpose Gregorie, Quid est quod dicens, Dimitte me, nisi deprecanti innuit ne obsistam? What is it for the Lord to say vnto his seruant, Let me alone, but to make him bold to pray? But indeed, Non hic verba, &c. God doth not commaund Moses to pray in these words directly, but sheweth what it was that would stay him from punishing, Iunius. 5. And now the Lord was contented to accept of Moses prayer, because he was not in his secret counsell appointed to destroy them. But the same Moses, who at this time appeased the wrath of God toward the people, could not pacifie him concerning himselfe, when he provoked God at the waters of Meribah: because prayer then will not serve the turne, Cum semel Deus statuit de rerum euentu disponit, When once God being throughly provoked, hath determined to doe a thing, Obstat ordinat. Ex Gregor.

Greg. 9. moral. cap. 11.

QUEST. XXX. whether the Lord changed his minde, in saying, I will destroy them, and yet destroyed them not.

Vers. 10. Or I will consume them. Yet God consumed them not. 1. Not that there is any mutabilitie or changing in God; as though afterward he saw which he did not before: for these comminations, Secundum hypothesin accipiendæ sunt; are to be taken conditionally: and sometime the condition is expressed, sometime it is understood: as the Lord suspendeth the execution of his iudgements, either vpon mens repentance, or being intreated by the prayers of his seruants: Et propter Mediatorem veniam dat; But most of all he giveth pardon for the Mediators sake, Simler.

Cyrill. Iulian. l. 5. 2. And thus the Lord threatneth, yet stayeth his hand, Quia necessarium est nosse nos, benignum, quæ sit Dei, misericordia, & quanta vis orationum sanctorum; Because it is necessarie for vs to know, the exceeding great loving kindnesse which is in God, and what force there is in the prayers of the Saints, Cyrill.

3. And further, this was not the will of God to destroy them, that will of God, qua vocatur beneplaciti; which is called the will of Gods good pleasure, because this is alwaies fulfilled: but it was voluntas signi, his signified, or reuealed will, according to the which he shewed, that they had deserued to be destroyed. But in his secret will he had ordained, that Moses should pray for them, and that hee would be intreated by his prayer, Tostat. qu. 16.

QUEST. XXXI. How the Lord promiseth to make a great nation of Moses.

Vers. 10. I will make of thee a mightie people. 1. Some thinke that God indeed did performe this promise vnto Moses: for now the Christian world, which farre exceedeth the people of Israel, Mosaicum tempus, obeyeth Moses, Rupertus, Pomar. So also Oleast. in effect. by this mightie people vnderstandeth, Generationem sanctorum; The Generation of the Saints. But that which the Lord promised here vnto Moses was conditionall, that if he at that time destroyed the people, he would make a great nation of Moses: seeing the first was not done, neither did he performe the second.

2. Bernard saith, Ego hoc munus puto seruatum sponsæ; I thinke this gift (to become a great nation) to be reserved for the spouse, the Church now dispersed ouer all the world. But this vpon the former reason is not the meaning.

3. Tostatus thinketh the meaning to be this, that, Deus præponeret eum in ducem gentis magnæ; God would set him ouer a great nation; not that a great nation should come of him. So also Vatablus, Lippom. Tostatus reasons are these: 1. Because, if the Lord should promise to increase Moses to a great nation, he should have no great comfort by it, seeing he was old, and could not see many generations. 2. Whereas the Lord saith in the like words, Numb. 14. 12. I will make thee a nation mightier than they: there is comparison made betweene the nation, which should come of Moses, and the nation of the Israelites: but the seed of Moses could not be distinguished from the seed of the Israelites: for he also was of Israel. 3. And the Lord promiseth Moses a recompence: Ne grave esset tam nobilem principatum amittere; Least it should be grieuous vnto him to lose such a noble principalitie and government, Caluin. But if his posteritie onely had beene multiplied, there should have beene no recompence made for that losse.

Contra. 1. Moses expected not, neither desired any greatnesse in the world, but onely the fulfilling of Gods promise toward Abraham, Isaak, and Iacob: and therefore though Moses had not presently seene this promise effected in his time, yet hee might have comforted himselfe, as Abraham did, in the very propounding and making of so gracious a promise, by faith relying vpon God for the fulfilling thereof. 2. Moses posteritie might have beene as well compared with Israel, as Iacob and Esaw offspring are; of whom the Lord saith, one people shall be mightier than another, Gen. 25. 23. and as it is said, Ephraim shall be a greater people, than Manasseh, Gen. 48. 18. 3. Moses, that wished himselfe for Israels sake to be raced out of the booke of life, expected no compensation of his principalitie, if it had seemed so good vnto God, to destroy Israel.

4. Therefore the meaning is, that God would so increase and multiplie Moses posteritie, as that he should should grow into a great nation: 1. Because in the same sense the Lord saith to Abraham: Faciam te in gentem magnam, Genes. 12. 2. I will make of thee a great nation, Gallas. Oleast. 2. And the Lord saith in effect, Iuta præstiturus, quæ majoribus promisi. I will performe in thee, that which I promised to the fathers. But if in the other sense the Lord should onely have set him over a great nation; then had not Gods promise to Abraham beene performed, Borrhaius.

QUEST. XXXII. Of Moses prayer in generall, and the manner thereof.

Vers. 11. THen Moses prayed, &c. why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people?

1. Although the Lord seemed unto Moses to be purposed to destroy the people: yet Moses in praying doth not oppose himselfe to Gods will: for his prayer, Dei promissionibus nititur, was grounded upon Gods promise made unto the fathers: this therefore shewed a singular faith in Moses, that giveth not over, no not when, verbum Dei inter se conuitietur, the word of God seemeth to fight with it selfe. But as Abraham in the like temptation, when Gods former promise, and his present commandement seemed to bee contrarie, yet shewed his obedience, not doubting of the truth of Gods promise: So Moses relieth upon the same ground and foundation of Gods promise, though the Lord seemed for the present to be otherwise minded, Simler.

2. He prayeth therefore, first, directus spiritu, being guided by Gods Spirit so to doe, Gallas. and God moved Moses to pray two wayes; primo interius inclinando, first by stirring him inwardly to pray: then, movebatur exterius verbis Dei, outwardly he was moved by Gods words, though not directly, Tostat. for the Lord in saying, Let me alone, as he did not directly bid him pray, so directly thereby he did insinuate, that by prayer his judgement might be staied, Iunius.

3. Moses prayeth with a vehement interrogation, why doth thy wrath wax hot? which is not an expostulating with Gods justice, but rather, admonentis de benignitate ejus, of one admonishing God of his clemencie and gracious promise, Borrhaius. Neither doth Moses thus speake, why, &c. as though God had no cause to bee angrie; for it was well knowne to Moses, that God had but too just cause at this time against his people: but though God had just cause, his meaning is, Non debere irasci, quia redundaret in illius dedecus, That he ought not now to be angrie, because it would redound to Gods dishonour, Tostat.

4. Further it is said, that Moses intreated the face of God; as the Hebrew phrase is, whereby is signified the earnestnesse of Moses in his prayer; Et magna mentis elevatio ad faciem Dei, And the great devotion of his minde, even unto Gods face and presence. And in that it is said, Elohim, to his God, whom he calleth also Iehovah, Magna describitur fiducia orantis, Hereby is shewed the great confidence of Moses in his prayer, Cajetan.

5. And whereas Moses regardeth not the personall promise made to him, that the Lord would make a generation of him: therein he sheweth his great charitie and love to his people; as Chrysostome well noteth, Noluit audire sustinuit; He endured not to heare any such thing; Sed potius una cum his, qui jam evenerant, perire, quam sine illis salvus esse, & ad majorem dignitatem assumi, præstitit; But rather chose to perish together with those which were committed to his trust, than without them to bee advanced to greater honour. Mauit cum ipsis perire.

QUEST. XXXIII. How the Lord is said to be angrie.

WHy doth thy wrath wax hot? God is not subject to wrath and anger, and other humane passions, as man is. But he is said to be angrie, when he taketh revenge of sinners. 1. Vltio divina furor dicitur; The divine revenge is called rage or anger, Hierom. And this is spoken to our understanding, and after the manner of men, Quia homines non puniunt, nisi irati; Because men use not to punish, but when they are angrie: therefore God is said to be angrie when he punisheth, because he so seemeth to doe unto us, Tostat. qu. 16. 2. Another reason, why God is said to be angrie, is in respect of us: Quod nos, qui irascimur, nisi irascentem audierimus, Dominum non timeamus, Because we, when we sinne, unlesse wee heare that God is angrie, will not feare and stand in awe of him. 3. Againe, God is said to be angrie, for more ample commendation and setting forth of his mercie: Facilimus enim ad deponendam iram; who is most readie to lay aside his anger: not like unto earthly Princes, that being angrie will admit no reconciliation, Cyril. This therefore doth more set forth the mercie and clemencie of God, that being as it were inflamed with anger, is so soone turned unto mercie, as in this place, his anger is mitigated by the prayer of Moses. Isa. 54. 8. Cont. Iulian. l. 5.

QUEST. XXXIV. Of the reasons, which Moses useth in his prayer.

Against thy people, &c. Moses useth divers forcible and effectuall reasons to perswade the Lord, in this his earnest and zealous prayer. 1. Non excusat peccatum, &c. He doth not excuse their sinne, but acknowledgeth and confesseth it, Ferus. 2. His second reason is, à peculio & hæreditate, from the peculiar inheritance of God: he calleth them, thy people. Pelarg. Occurrit sermoni Domini & pie corrigit, &c. He as it were correct the Lords speech in a pious and dutifull manner: the Lord had called them Moses people, but Moses returneth that speech unto the Lord, and calleth them his people, Lyranus. Not thereby contradicting the Lord, but relying upon his promise. 3. From the memorie of Gods benefits, (which he had brought out of the land of Egypt) all which should have beene in vaine, if the Lord would now slay his people, Pelarg. Iun. 4. From the inconvenience that would ensue, that while he thought to be revenge upon his enemies, sævire in se, he should in a manner rage against himselfe; the hurt would redound unto God, his name would thereby bee blasphemed, Oleaster. So, prætendit gloriam Dei, hee pretendeth the glory of God, which was like to bee obscured, and hindered by this meanes; for the Egyptians would take occasion hereby to blaspheme, and to accuse the Lord of malice against his people, and of weaknesse and impotencie, Iunius, Pelarg. This argument is most forcible, and therefore our

our blessed Saviour teacheth us to pray, Hallowed be thy name, Ferus. 5. Lastly, he putteth God in minde of his promises made to Abraham, Isaak, and Iacob, which promise the Lord bound with an oath: and two things the Lord promised, the multiplying of their seed, and the inheritance of Canaan. And so Moses saith in effect, if those change in these things, Nemo tibi amplius credet, No man will give credit unto thee hereafter, Ferus.

QUEST. XXXV. Why the Egyptians were more like then to object, than any other nation.

Vers. 12. VVherefore shall the Egyptians speake &c. 1. Other nations likewise might so object, as the Amalekites, Moabites, Edomites, Canaanites, which were all enemies unto Israel, and were afraid of them, as Moses saith in his song of thanksgiving, chap. 15. 15. Then the Dukes of Edom shall be amazed, and trembling shall come upon the great men of Moab, all the inhabitants of Canaan shall waxe faint-hearted: and therefore they would have rejoyced likewise in the destruction of Israel. 2. But instance is specially given of the Egyptians in this place, (and yet Numb. 14. 14. both the Egyptians, and other the inhabitants of Canaan, are brought in thus speaking) for these causes: 1. Because they had endured more for oppressing the Israelites, than any other nation: even those ten grievous plagues sent upon Egypt. 2. They had lost more than any other people, in a manner halfe their substance, when they gave unto the Israelites at their departure jewels of gold, and silver: 3. They for Israels cause were overthrowne and drowned in the red sea. Therefore they had a greater spite at Israel, than other nations, and would have beene most readie thus to have objected, Tostat. qu. 17.

QUEST. XXXVI. In what sense the Egyptians would say, The Lord brought them out to slay them.

Vers. 12. HE hath brought them out maliciously, or, of an evill minde; Iun. Or, for a mischiefe (rather,) Vatab. Oleast. To slay them in the mountaines. 1. Not because the Egyptians might imagine, that God could not slay them in Egypt, the constellations of heaven, and aspects of the planets hindring the destruction of the Hebrewes there, and leaving fitly in the wildernesse and mountaines: for seeing no such constellation could hinder the servitude of the Israelites, but that the Egyptians most cruelly oppressed them, much lesse could it prevent Gods judgements. And if the constellation had beene against the Hebrewes, after they were come out of Egypt into the desert; how came it to passe, that the red sea gave way unto them, the Egyptians there were drowned, Manna from heaven was given, and water out of the rocke? all these things were for Israel in the desert, and against the Egyptians, Tostat. quæst. 18. 2. Neither doe the Egyptians so say, because some of their Astrologers, by calculating the time of the Hebrewes departure (as some Hebrewes affirme) did prognosticate, because they went, male signo, in an evill signe, that much bloud should be shed in Israel, and that many of them should die in the wildernesse and therefore when Iesous had circumcised the Israelites in Gilgal, the Lord said he had taken away the shame of Egypt, Iosh. 5. 9. because that which the Egyptians had foretold was now turned, ad confusionem, non ad obprobrium not to their shame, but their holinesse, and honour. Contra. 1. By shame is there meant no such thing, but onely that their uncircumcision was then taken away, which is called the shame of Egypt, because therein they were like unto the uncircumcised Philistims. 2. And if it had beene spoken in any such sense, this had beene to confirme, and justifie the superstitious calculations and prognostications of the Egyptians. 3. The Israelites indeed perished in the desert, but not all, onely those which were above twentie yeare old; and they died not by any naturall death, which onely may be foreseene, and in some sort by prognostication ghessed at; but their death was procured by their sinne: then as their sinne being an act of their will, could not by any such constellation bee foretold; so neither could their extraordinarie death caused by their sinne, be forseene by any such meanes. And this being an act of Gods justice, like as mans will, and the acts thereof, are not wrought upon, nor ruled by constellations, much lesse are the Lords judgements, which he worketh most freely, Tostat. qu. 19.

Neither could the Egyptians say thus, as though the Lord could not have destroyed the Israelites in Egypt, seeing he plagued both the Egyptians and their gods; or that he could not for want of power have brought them into the land of Canaan, as the heathen would have objected, Numb. 14. 16. For he that was able to overthrow Pharaoh and his host, and all the power of Egypt, and that wrought such great wonders for them in the desert, was of power sufficient to plant them in the land of Canaan, casting out their enemies before them, Tostat. qu. 17.

4. But the Egyptians of malice onely, without any ground, nay against their owne knowledge, Occasione saltem levissima licet omnia falsa ratiocinarentur, quacunq; tamen possent, in Deum Hebræorum probra conficerent; Upon a light occasion, although they knew all to be false, would upbraid what they could, the God of the Hebrewes, Tostat. qu. 18.

QUEST. XXXVII. Why Moses maketh mention in his prayer of Abraham, Isaak and Iacob.

Vers. 13. Remember Abraham &c. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that mention is made of these three, to declare a treble punishment: as if the Lord were to bring downe fire from heaven upon them, Abraham was cast into the fire in Hur of the Chaldees: if the Lord would punish with the sword, Isaak had offered himselfe to be slaine in sacrifice by his father: if with exile and banishment, Iacob had before indured it; and therefore these three are mentioned, that by their merits and deserts, the people might escape these three judgements, Sic Lyran. Lippom. But Tostatus well refuteth this conceit: 1. Because these three are mentioned, as well when any blessing is crayed of God, as when any judgement is prayed against. 2. God hath other judgements beside these, whereby to punish his people: therefore in other cases the mentioning of these had beene insufficient, Tostat. qu. 20.

Yet Tostatus also missith the marke, saying, that In meritis ipsorum fiebat salus posteris eorum, for the merits of these, their posteritie were preserved; for Abraham himselfe was not justified by merit but by faith, as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 4. Abraham beleeved God, and it was counted to him for righteousnesse: therefore much lesse was his posteritie saved by his merits.

3. Therefore Moses in bringing in Abraham, Isaak and Iacob only, putteth God in minde of the promises made unto them, which proceeded onely of the meere grace and favour of God toward them, as the Lord himselfe saith, Because the Lord loved you, and because he would keepe the oath, which hee had sworne to your fathers, the Lord hath brought you out with a mightie hand, Deut. 7. 8. Simler. Osiander.

QUEST. XXXVIII. How the Israelites are promised to possesse the land of Canaan for ever.

Vers. 13. They shall inherit it for ever. 1. This promise, that the Israelites should inhabit the land of Canaan for ever, may diversly be understood: 1. It is taken for a long time, not limited nor determined: and so they enjoyed that land many yeares, about 1400. Tostat. qu. 20. 2. Or it may bee likewise understood during the time of the Law and ceremonies, which were to continue but untill Christ: as Aarons Priesthood is said to be for ever, chap. 28. 43. and the keeping of the Passeover is said to be an ordinance for ever, Exod. 12. 17. Tostat. 3. Or it may be applyed to the spirituall seed of Abraham, which are the heires of the true Canaan, Genevens. annot. Gen. 13. vers. 14. 4. But in these temporall promises a secret condition rather must be supplyed: that if they had continued in obedience to Gods Commandements, then they should have had a perpetuall inheritance in Canaan. And this is the best interpretation, as appeareth by the like, Psal. 132. 10. If thy sonnes keepe my covenant, and my testimonies, which I shall teach them, thy sonnes also shall sit upon thy throne for ever. Tostat. qu. 20. See this question handled more at large, Hexapl. in Genes. cap. 13. vers. 12.

QUEST. XXXIX. How the Lord is said to repent.

Vers. 14. Then the Lord repented of the evill. 1. This is spoken ἀνθρωποπαθῶς, according to the passions and affections of men: yet θεοπρεπῶς, as it is convenient to understand of God; who seemeth to repent and change, sine motu, quod nos sine motu nostri non possumus facere; without any motion or passion at all, which wee cannot doe without passion, Iun. Wee could not understand how the Lord turneth from his wrath, unlesse the Scripture should speake to our capacitie, Pelarg. 2. So indeed the Lord is immutable and unchangeable in himselfe: but, Dicit se mutare sententiam, non in homines, sed in opera, quæ mutata sunt; He is said to change his sentence, not toward men, but in respect of the workes or things that are changed: For God is not angrie with men, but with their sins, which ceasing to be, neque enim punit quod mutatum est, God punisheth not that which is changed, Hierom. God is said to repent, cum rem mutat, consilium non mutat, when he changeth the thing, not his counsell, Gloss. interlin. In Dan. cap. 5.

3. But it will bee said, that God is here changed indeed, that whereas hee purposed to destroy Israel at once, yet he doth it not at Moses intercession. It may bee answered: 1. That God here had determined no such thing, sed loquebatur per modum optantis, but he spake after a wishing manner, let me alone, Tostat. qu. 20. 2. We must understand that the divine sentence is of two sorts; one is κατ' ἐξουσίαν, with a condition: such was the proclamation against Niniveh, that within fortie dayes they should be destroyed; and the message sent by Isaiah to Ezekiah that he should die: for in these sentences there was a secret condition included, in the one of the Ninivites repentance, in the other of Ezechiahs intercession: so there is here a condition understood, that the Lord would bee intreated by Moses. The other kinde of sentence is absolute, without any condition; such was the decree for the destruction of the old world by water, and of the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host in the red sea, Berth.

QUEST. XL. Whether Moses at this time was kept in suspense, or indeed obtained pardon for the people.

Vers. 14. Repented of the evill, which he threatned to doe unto his people. 1. Some thinke that an ἀνάγκη μετανοίας is here to be admitted, because Moses obtaining nothing at this time, but at his second intreatie, as is shewed in the end of the chapter: Et nullo accepto venia responso suspensum venisse; And that he came downe in suspence, having received no answer for any pardon, Calvin, Gallas. But it is not like that Moses would have given over and gone away, till he had knowne the Lords minde in part.

2. Iunius thinketh, that Deus distulit, donec Moses vidisset, God onely deferred his sentence, till Moses had seene what might bee done with the people; and, consilium sustinuit, suspended his counsell. But the Text sheweth more, that God at Moses request actually repented of the evill which hee had threatned: Moses therefore is here put out of doubt for that, that the people at this time should not be destroyed.

3. Cajetan thinketh that Moses onely intreated, quòd non tunc fiat punitio, quam populus meretur, that the people at that time be not punished as they deserved. But Moses reasons tend to that end, that the people at all should not utterly be destroyed, because of Gods promise made to Abraham, Isaak and Iacob: and so much he obtained.

4. But Oleaster goeth somewhat too farre, that Moses did not onely intreat God not to punish, sed ut eum pœnitear voluisse punire, but that he would repent him that hee had purposed to punish. But that had beene too great boldnesse in Moses to have presumed so farre; and it was enough that he by his prayer obtained a pardon of that great punishment.

5. Wherefore Moses obtained only by his prayer now at this time, that the Lord mitigated his sentence, noe totum populum perdere velis, that he would not destroy the whole people, Marloch. and hee only repenteth of the evill which was threatned: that is, ne totaliter deleret, that hee would not wholly destroy them: yet God might notwithstanding consume them, per partes, by parts, as hee did afterward in the desart: for if Moses had obtained an absolute and generall pardon, hee needed not have sollicited the Lord againe, as he did in the end of the chapter; nay, he continued his supplication unto God for the people fortie dayes and fortie nights, Deut. 9. 25. Tostat. qu. 20.

QUEST. XLI. What was writ en in the tables of stone.

Vers. 15. THe tables were written, &c. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke, that beside the morall Law, which consisted of ten Commandements, there was written the exposition, as a commentarie of the Law. But that is not like: 1. Because the Commandements being certaine, evident, and knowne principles, grounded upon the light of nature, needed not to receive any exposition by the Law-giver himselfe; but afterw rd the same were explaned, and amplified by Moses. 2. If there had beene any such exposition, Moses when hee declared to the people the ten Commandements, Deut. 5. would not have omitted them, being a part of Gods writing. 3. Seeing the tables were to be kept in the Arke, never to be brought into the peoples sight, it was requisite, if there had beene any such exposition, that it should have beene set downe in some of Moses bookes, that the people might have taken knowledge thereof, Tostat. qu. 22.

2. Therefore there was no such exposition, nor any other thing written in the tables, beside the ten Commandements: 1. Not because, as some thinke, there were yet no other lawes delivered to the people: for it is evident, that Moses before hee came downe from the mount, when the Lord had uttered with his owne voice the ten Commandements, received also other lawes, judiciall and ceremoniall of the Lord, as they are set downe, chap. 21, 22, 23. and writ them in a booke, and read them to the people, Exod. 24. therefore other laws were given before to Moses, before hee came downe with the tables of stone. 2. And the reason which Isidore giveth, why the ten Commandements were there only written, is both curious and without ground: Ut per eundem numerum figura crucis exprimeretur, that the figure of the crosse might be thereby expressed: for the Roman X signifieth ten, and doth also represent the figure of the crosse: for neither doth this figure in the Hebrew tongue signifie ten, neither was there any such figure written in the tables.

3. These reasons rather may be yeelded, why the morall precepts only were written in these tables: 1. Because these onely the Lord pronounced with his owne mouth, the other were delivered by Moses. 2. The morall precepts are most evident and manifest, as grounded upon the light of nature. 3. They were so pronounced, as that all the people were witnesses thereof, and therefore least exception could be taken unto them, Tostat. quæst. 21.

QUEST. XLII. Why there were but two tables, neither more, nor fewer.

THe two tables, &c. The reasons why there were two tables were these: 1. Because if all the Commandements had beene written in one table of stone, it would have beene too large, and so too heavie and cumbersome for Moses to beare; whereas being now divided in two, they need not bee so great in thicknesse, or bredth, and so were more portable for Moses, that he might carrie them without a miracle, which some Hebrewes vnnecessarily conceive: for they being tables of stone, in forme and fashion made like unto writing tables, but larger, not thicke or grosse, but plaine, and of no great thicknesse, but so much as might suffice for the depth of the letters, might well bee taken up, and borne in Moses hand. 2. But the speciall reason of this division of the tables into two, is to distinguish the Commandements, which concerned our dutie toward God, and the other towards our neighbour: The first being written in one table, and the other in the second, Tostat. qu. 23.

QUEST. XLIII. How the tables were written on both sides.

Vers. 15. THey were written on both sides. 1. R. Salomon thinketh that each table was so written, that the letters might appeare on both sides; and so be read indifferently on each side. But this opinion is improbable: for two unlikely things are here presupposed; one that the stone whereof the tables were made was transparent, that what was on the one side written might be discerned on the other: and beside, whereas the letters appearing on the backside must be read backward: these letters by another miraculous worke must on both sides appeare all one.

2. Lyran. Tostatus, and Lippoman thinke, that the tables were written each on both sides: as in the first table there might be the three first Commandements, which Tostatus maketh but two, graven on the one side, and the fourth on the other: so in the second, foure on the one side, and two on the other, which he divideth into three: or he thinketh that the same Commandements might be written on the inside, and repeated againe on the outside. So also Gallasius, aversa & adversa parte scriptas fuisse, that they were written on the neare and ofward side, both of them: such writing the Greekes call ὀπισθόγραφα, written behinde, and before. But the words of the text will not beare this sense, for thus the tables should have been written on their foure sides: whereas it is said, they were written, mishene, on the two sides.

3. Therefore the meaning is no other but this, that these tables were written on the two sides, namely, the two inward, or foresides. And so Oleaster noteth by the signification of the word gheber, which he pronounceth without any asperation at all, eber, which signifieth properly, not the side, but the forepart, because so the word ghabar, or abar, signifieth to goe over, or passe on before. So also Vatablus translateth, ab utraque facie, on both the foresides. And thus the writing might better be preserved, one table lapping over another like unto a booke, Oleaster. But this further may be gathered, that these tables were written full within, that no spare place was left, which signified that the Law of God was perfect: Et nullum locum nobis relictum aliquid addendi, That no place was left for us to adde any thing to his Law, Simler.

QUEST. XLIV. Why the tables are called the worke of God.

Vers. 16. ANd these tables were the worke of God, and this writing was the writing of God. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke, because it is said before, vers. 15. that they were written, and here againe mention is made of the writing; that the first writing was of the Commandements only, the second was the exposition expoſition of the Commandements. But that there was no ſuch expoſition, is ſhewed before, queſt. 41. 2. But in that the tables are ſaid, both to be the worke of God, and writing of God, to ſignifie that God both prepared thoſe tables, and was the writer alſo; he was both artifex tabularum & ſcriptor, the workman of the tables and the writer, Cajetan. The ſecond tables were facta opere Moſis, made by Moſes workmanſhip, and written onely by God, Toſtat. qu. 23. 3. And whereas they are ſaid to be Gods worke, we are not to thinke with ſome, that theſe tables of ſtone were of purpoſe now created of God anew: Vocatur factio Dei non creatio, ſed dolatio; The worke of God is not ſaid to bee the creation, but the faſhioning and preparing of them, Toſtat. 4. And this was not done by the worke of Angels, as Toſtatus thinketh, aut ſcalpello, non calamo, or was graven with a knife, not written with a pen, Cajetan. For the Lord needed no ſuch inſtruments: but it was written with the finger of God, chap. 31. 18. that is, as Ambroſe expoundeth, Spiritu ſuo dedit legem. He gave his Law by his Spirit, whereby it is written in the fleſhie tables of our hearts. See more, chap. 31. verſ. 18. Lib. 3. de Spirit. ſanct. cap. 2.

QUEST. XLV. How many precepts each table contained.

COncerning the order obſerved in the writing of the Commandements in the tables, there are divers opinions: 1. Some thinke that the negative precepts were written in one table, and the affirmative in another. But this cannot be admitted, for theſe cauſes: 1. There are but two affirmative precepts, the fourth concerning the Sabbath, and the fifth, Honour thy father and mother: ſo it would follow, that two precepts ſhould onely be in one table, and eight in another; and ſo the one table muſt needs be very large, the other very little. 2. Thus alſo the precepts which concerne our dutie toward God, and the other belonging to our neighbour, ſhould bee mingled together. 3. And the greateſt inconvenience of all is, that the order of the Commandements ſhould be inverted, and that they were not written in the ſame order wherein they were delivered, Toſtat. qu. 24.

2. Rab. Salomon, and ſo alſo Joſephus doe thinke, that five Commandements were written in the firſt table, and five in the ſecond: and to the foure firſt they joyne the fifth, Honour thy father, &c. in the firſt table. But by this meanes the precepts of divers kindes, which command love toward God and our neighbour, ſhould be put together, which are better diſtinguiſhed into two tables.

3. Toſtatus with other, doe diſtinguiſh the Commandements well in reſpect of the tables; placing in the firſt thoſe which containe our dutie toward God, and in the ſecond, thoſe which are to bee practiſed toward our neighbour: but the Commandements he rightly divideth not, making of the two firſt but one, and ſo counting but three in the firſt table, and dividing the laſt into two, which is but one. But theſe two points are handled before at large, that it were ſuperfluous to treat of them here againe: the laſt, queſt. 9, 10. generall, before the Commandements, chap. 20. and the ſecond, queſt. 1. upon the 10. Commandement.

4. Wherefore the Commandements are thus beſt ſorted: that to the firſt belong foure, preſcribing our dutie toward God; to the ſecond ſix, touching our neighbour: the laſt, Thou ſhalt not covet, &c. being but one intire precept, as is ſhewed in the places before quoted.

QUEST. XLVI. Whether the writing of the tables were the firſt writing in the world.

Verſ. 16. AND the writing, &c. Feron inferreth upon this, Quòd Deus fuerit primus author ſcripturæ & literarum, &c. That God was the firſt author of writing and letters: 1. Becauſe Cadmus that is ſaid to have invented the letters among the Greekes, was long after, in the time of Othoniel, one of the Judges: and Nicoſtrata, or Carmentis, which found out the Latine letters, was in the time of Iair, another of the Judges. 2. And it was fit that no other ſhould be the author of ſo profitable a thing, but God: for there is nothing that bringeth us neerer to the knowledge of God, than writing: therein is contained the hiſtorie of things paſt and preſent, and the declaration of things to come. And thereby God ſpeaketh unto us, and declareth his will. 3. So this is the third gift that God hath given unto man, to bring him to the knowledge of himſelfe: the firſt is to meditate in the minde of God: the ſecond to expreſſe the meditation of our minde by ſpeech: the third to commit to writing, ſic Feron. Wherein, as Feron in ſome thing collecteth well, that the invention of the Hebrew letters was more ancient than the times of Cadmus, or Carmentis, and that ſo profitable an invention came from God: yet two things hee erreth, the one being uncertaine, whether this invention proceeded from God, mediately or immediately: the firſt is more probable, as other arts of graving and working in braſſe, and ſuch like, were invented by men, Gen. 4. yet through Gods gifts: the other is untrue, that this writing of the tables was firſt of all: for before this, chap. 24. it is ſaid, that Moſes wrote all the words of the Lord in a booke. And though Moſes is held to have beene the moſt ancient writer in the world, as is proved before, qu. 7. in Exod. yet it is like, and verie probable, that letters and writing were in uſe before Moſes time: as is likewiſe ſhewed before, queſt. 13. upon the ſecond chapter.

QUEST. XLVII. Where Joſhua ſtayed all the while Moſes was in the mount.

Verſ. 17. AND when Joſhua heard, &c. 1. It is evident that Joſhua went not up with Moſes into the top of the mountaine, for then he ſhould have heard what the Lord had told Moſes, concerning the making of the golden Calfe, which he was ignorant of, as it appeareth afterward by his ſpeech to Moſes, Feron. 2. But whether hee returned to the camp, or not, during this ſpace of fortie dayes and fortie nights, ſome make it doubtfull, as Hugo de S. Victor. becauſe onely, in aſcenſu & deſcenſu legis ſocium Moſe, he is read to have beene with Moſes in his going up and comming downe: yet it is evident by theſe reaſons, that Joſhua all this while returned not to the camp: 1. Seeing Joſhua met Moſes in the uppermoſt part of the hill, when they had no ſight of the camp, but onely heard a noiſe a farre off, as the next words ſhew: it had beene too labourſome for Joſhua everie day to goe downe, and come come up againe so high into the hill. 2. He not knowing the time of Moses returne, by this meanes might have missed of him, and so failed in his attendances, Tostatus qu. 25. 3. If Iosua had beene in the camp, he could not have beene ignorant of that which was done there, as it appeareth he was, by his speech to Moses: Iunius, Cajetan.

3. Therefore Iosua stayed in that place where Moses left him, when he was called up into the thicke cloud: Iosua followed Moses up still into the hill, after Aaron and his two sonnes, and the Elders were departed, chap. 24. and when Moses was called up after six dayes into the top of the hill, there Iosua stayed, where hee had stood waiting with Moses. But how Iosua was occupied these fortie dayes and nights is not expressed, nor whereof he lived: he might feed of the Manna, which might fall also in that place, Tostatus. Without eating any thing it is not like hee continued, as Moses did, such a miracle would not have beene omitted, as it is so written of Moses.

QUEST. XLVIII. Whether Iosua first heard the noise.

Vers. 17. AND when Iosua heard the noise, &c. 1. Tostatus here noteth, that Iosua first heard the noise and shouting, because it is likely he was quicker of hearing than Moses, who was now 80. yeares old, and Iosua about 39. or 40. But seeing Moses immediately maketh answer, that it was not the noise of warre in the host, it seemeth that his eare was not heavie, in that he discerned the noise what it was: and Moses must bee supposed to have beene verie deafe, that could not heare such a confused noise and shouting: the reason why Moses, though he heard the shouting as well as Iosua, yet first spake not, was, for that he had revealed nothing yet to Iosua, concerning the sinne of the people: Iosue verba indicant silentium Mosis, Iosuahs speech declareth Moses silence, Lippoman.

2. Lyranus thinketh that Moses discerned of the noise what it was, propter vivacitatem sensus, &c. because of the quicknesse of his sense in his old age: for being 120. yeares old, his eye was not dimmed, nor his naturall force abated, Deut. 34. 7. But although Moses at these yeares had fresh and quicke senses, it is not like that they were more lively than Iosuahs, at halfe his yeares.

3. Tostatus thinketh that Moses immediately after Iosuahs speech, did not discerne the noise, but after some pause, as they went on still walking he perceived more. But in that Moses maketh answer unto Iosuah, it seemeth there was no long pause made, but that Moses in the same place having listened with his eare, gave judgement of the noise.

4. The verie cause therefore, why Moses ghessed right what this noise meant, was for that God had revealed to him before, what the people had done: Moses praemonitus intelligebat quid sonus populi sceleratius portenderet; Moses being premonished did understand what the noise of the people shouting out did portend, Lippom. Galat. Lyranus also toucheth this reason.

QUEST. XLIX. Why Moses anger was kindled at the sight of the Calfe, and not before.

Vers. 19. AS soone as he came neere, &c. he saw, &c. so Moses wrath waxed hot, &c. 1. Gallasius thinketh that Moses, Satis ira accensus audita populi defectione, was sufficiently angrie and moved already, as soone as he had heard that the people had fallen away, and that this anger was more increased by that which he saw. But although Moses, when the Lord told him what the people had done, was inwardly grieved: yet seeing the Lord so much provoked to anger, it was not for him also to shew his anger too; but rather to expresse his love, in pacifying the Lords wrath: Non oportuit in Dei praesentia indignari, sed furorem Dei deprecari, &c. It was not for Moses in Gods presence to be angrie, but by entreatie rather to pacifie his anger.

2. Now then, whereas there are duo impetus in ira, two forcible motions in anger: the one when we know any thing by heare-say, which may worthily move us to anger: the other, when by our sense we perceive it; so was it here with Moses, hee was inwardly moved when first the Lord declared unto him the sinne of the people. But this motion he suppressed, when he saw the Lord bent to destroy the people, amor vicit iram, love in him overcame his anger: but afterward, when first by hearing he perceived their singing and rejoycing, and further by his eye beheld the Calfe which he had made, then his anger was vehemently kindled, Tost. qu. 26.

QUEST. L. Whether Moses sinned in his anger.

Vers. 19. MOSES wrath waxed hot. 1. It may seeme at the first that Moses wrath was immoderate, because in his haste he cast the tables of the Law out of his hand. And this may be thought more probable, because Moses long after this sinned in his hastinesse, when he smote the rocke in anger, Numb. 20. and if this had beene a sudden passion in Moses, it had not beene so much, now being so vehement and fervent, it should seeme to bewray some infirmitie. But Moses cannot bee convinced by these reasons, to have offended in this his anger. 1. Though Moses sinned at the waters of strife, it followeth not that he was overseene here: for there the Scripture noteth Moses infirmitie, but here no such thing in him is reproved. 2. And anger though it be exceeding great, if it be in Gods cause, is commendable: Sicut enim amor Dei non circumscribitur termino, &c. For as the love of God is not limited, nor hath any bounds, so neither hath zeale in Gods cause, Simlarus.

2. This then was a just anger, and an holy rage in Moses. There are two kindes of anger, one is inconsiderate, rash, seeking private revenge: there is another, which is for Gods cause, when wee see his honour called in question, and his glorie defaced: this anger is pleasing unto God, when wee are angrie with mens vices, not with their persons: which kinde of anger is discerned by this; Si postquam quis se correxerit, eum odio habeat, &c. If one hate a man still after he hath amended his fault, it is a signe hee hated not his vice, but his person. But if he returne in love againe, the fault being redressed, it sheweth his anger was only for Gods cause: such was Moses here, who after hee had taken revenge of the people for for their sinne, continueth his prayer unto God for them, Tostat. qu.27. Such was the zeale of Phinehas, in slaying the adulterer and adulteresse; and of Helias against Baals Priests; and of our blessed Saviour, when he cast the money-changers out of the Temple, Ferus. So Calvin concludeth well, that Moses anger, Cum manaverit à Spiritu sancto, which proceeded from the holy Spirit, was a vertue praise-worthy: though it must be confessed that the affections of the Saints are not so perfect, but that they may sa-vour a little of the leaven of our corrupt nature.

QUEST. LI. Whether Moses offended in breaking the tables of the Law.

Vers.19. HE cast the tables out of his hand. 1. Some thinke that Moses being carried away with heat of anger, did not well consider what hee did, Et præ infirmitate tabulas è manu excidisse. And that through infirmitie the tables fell out of his hand. But the text sheweth that Moses cast them out of his hand: and Deut.9.17. he saith, I tooke the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands: it was then a voluntarie and advised act.

2. R. Salomon to excuse Moses saith, that of a sudden the writing of the tables was wiped out, and Moses seeing them to be then for no further use, cast them out of his hand. But this fable contradicteth the text, which describeth the tables at the verie same time when Moses carried them, to bee written on both sides; which is expressed of purpose, to shew what a precious monument the Israelites were deprived of.

3. Some make it simply an act of Moses rage, that, Furore turbatus tabulas fregerit, &c. Being distempered with rage, he brake the tables: which oversight of Moses in their opinion may seeme to be proved by these reasons: 1. Because the tables of the Law were a most holy monument of Gods Covenant with his people, in so much that Moses would not commit them to Iosuah, but carried them in his owne hands: so that Moses in breaking the monument of the Covenant, might seeme to offend against God the author of the Covenant, and of that writing. 2. It may be thought also to have beene done rashly and hastily of Moses, so that therein hee could not be blamelesse. 3. Like as if a Princes letter should bee cancelled by his messenger that was sent with it: so the Lord might be herein angrie with Moses for defacing this writing.

Contra. 1. The tables indeed were a most holy and worthy monument, when Moses received them of God, but now inutiles facta sunt, they became unprofitable; the Covenant being broken by the people, the signe of the Covenant was needlesse and of no necessarie use, and therefore it was no offence to breake them. 2. Neither did Moses it suddenly or rashly, but with good advisement, he cast the tables out of his hand, judging the people unworthy of them: and he did it not without the instinct of Gods Spirit. 3. It is no wrong to the Prince to have his letters cancelled, where hee meaneth they should serve to no use, but his minde is they shall be reversed. So Moses knew that God would not have the tables of the Covenant offered at this time to the people, that had broken his Covenant.

4. This fact then of Moses in breaking of the tables, may bee thus justified: 1. Id fit afflatu peculiari Divini Spiritus; It was done by the peculiar motion of Gods Spirit, Simler. Iun. Though Hugo de S. Vict. make some doubt of it, Utrum ex humano affectu, vel divino instinctu, hoc fecerit, non patet; It is not evident whether hee did it of an humane affection, or a divine instinct. But seeing God was not angrie with Moses for doing it, but biddeth to prepare the like tables againe, chap.34. it is certaine that it was no humane motion in him to doe it. 2. Moses in respect of himselfe brake them, Recusans esse pædagogus inobedientis populi, Refusing to be the schoolemaster of such a disobedient people. 3. Moses thought the people unworthy of such a benefit, In pœnam populi indigni beneficio tabularum, &c. Hee brake them, to bee a punishment of the people unworthy of such a benefit, Cajetan. 4. Beside, the equitie thereof appeareth, that as they had broken the Covenant on their part, so it was fit the monument of Gods Covenant should be broken, Tostat. qu.29. And Moses shewed by this, that they by their apostasie, tabulas legis rupisse, had broken the tables of the Law first, Marbach. So Chrysostome saith, Moses thought it an absurd thing, si populo ebrio, &c. legem afferet, if hee should have brought the Law to a drunken and besotted people. Theodoret to the same purpose, Quia dotalium libellorum typum tabulæ gerebant, &c. Because the tables were as the libels, or bils of dowrie, and the spouse, before the marriage was solemnized, had committed adulterie, jure optimo dotalem libellum fregisse existimandus est, hee may bee thought by good right to have cancelled the bill of dowrie. 5. Testari etiam voluit, &c. And Moses would hereby testifie unto them, how they deserved to be cast off, and forsaken, Pelarg. And God hereby for the time, Per manum Mosis repudiavit populum, Did by the hand of Moses cast off his people, Calvin. 6. And this was done, ad majorem terrorem populi, for the greater terrour of the people, who was more moved with signes than with words, as when Samuel declared unto the people their sinne, he prayed, and there came thunder and lightning, that the people by those terrible signes might be the more moved, 1 Sam.12. So Ieremie to shew after a more lively manner the destruction of Jerusalem, brake the earthen bottle before their face, signifying that the Lord would breake them as a potters vessell, Ier.19.11. Ferus, Gallas.

QUEST. LII. What the breaking of the tables signified.

7. AND by the breaking of the tables, the Lord would have other things signified. 1. Fracti o tabularum signum fuit evacuationis legalium in adventu Christi, The breaking of the tables was a signe of the evacuating of the legall ceremonies in the comming of Christ, Lyran. The first Law delivered in mount Sinai continued not, Lex nova ei successit, the new Law of the new Testament succeeded in place thereof, Tostat. qu.29. 2. It was a signe, Regnum Iudæorum ad Gentes transiturum, That the kingdome of the Jewes should be translated to the Gentiles, Ferus. That the Arke, Tables, Temple, Altar should be dissolved, and taken from the Jewes, Simler. 3. The breaking also of the tables signified, that it was impoſſible for the Law to be kept, Donec Chriſtus per Spiritum ſanctum, &c. Untill Chriſt ſhould reare the fame in our hearts by his holy Spirit, Marbach. Oſiander. 4. Auguſtine further maketh this ſignification of it: that as the tables which God made were broken, and yet thoſe which Moſes prepared, did continue: So God created man with reaſon and underſtanding, and freedome of will: Sed eas bonus confregit, cùm Diabolo acquievit, & ſe illa gratia indignum reddidit: But man brake thoſe tables, when he gave place to the Devill, and made himſelfe unworthy of that grace: But now the ſecond tables muſt be made, that is, enitatur elaborare ad virtutes, man muſt endevour to labour for vertue, &c. Ex Gloſſ. ordinar. Seeing man loſt the graces of his creation, which were given him without his labour, he muſt by his endevour and labour (Gods Spirit ſo working in him) ſeeke for the renovation of grace by faith in Chriſt.

QUEST. LIII. In what part the tables were broken, and what became of the fragments.

COncerning other circumſtances obſerved in this action of the breaking of the tables: 1. That is a ridiculous and unſavourie fable of the Hebrewes, that Moſes tooke the fragments of thoſe broken tables, which they ſay were made of a precious ſtone, and ſold them, and became verie rich thereby: for this were to lay a grievous imputation of covetouſneſſe upon Moſes, which he was not in the leaſt manner touched with. 2. Some thinke that Moſes tooke thoſe fragments, and put them in a cheſt, which was uſed to be carried before the hoſt, *Numb.*10.35. But the Arke there ſpoken of was the Arke of the Covenant, *ibid. verſ.*33. 3. That alſo is a light conjecture, that the tables were broken about the place, where the fourth Commandement concerning the Sabbath was written; becauſe that precept onely of the ten was ceremoniall, and not to continue: for both the tables were broken, and not onely the firſt, wherein that Commandement was written.

QUEST. LIV. Why the tables were broken at the bottome of the mount.

Verſ.19. HE brake them in peeces beneath the mountaine. Why the tables were broken in this place, at the foot of the mountaine, theſe reaſons may be given: 1. Becauſe Moſes was now come to the bottome of the mountaine, before he ſaw the golden Calfe, through the indignation of the ſight whereof, being moved in zeale, he forthwith brake the tables. 2. Alſo the people when they came forth to meet the Lord, and to heare his voice, were ſuffered to come ſo farre to the foot and bottome of the hill, *chap.*19.17. in the ſame place therefore where the Law was given unto the people, it was convenient that the tables of that Law ſhould bee broken, which they had firſt tranſgreſſed and broken themſelves, Toſtat. qu. 30. 3. Beſide, it may have this myſticall ſignification: that as the Law was given in the mount, and broken at the bottome of the mount; ſo if we will know the Law, oportet nos altiùs aſcendere, we muſt aſcend higher into the mount, and mortifie the old man, Simlerus.

QUEST. LV. Whether the Calfe were burned to powder in the fire.

Verſ.20. HE tooke the calfe, and burned it in the fire, and ground it to powder, &c. 1. This golden Calfe was more than melted in the fire: Deformavit liquefaciens igne; He deformed the faſhion thereof, melting it in the fire. As Iunius: for if it had beene only melted, it would have run into a lump, and ſo have been the more unfit to fall to powder. 2. Toſtatus thinketh that Moſes might apply certaine herbs unto the gold, which if they be uſed in the melting of gold, in cineres redigetur, it will fall to aſhes, queſt.30. But ſuch conjectures having no ground out of the text, are better rejected than received: whence ſhould Moſes have ſuch herbs, here in the barren deſart? and to what purpoſe ſhould they bee uſed, ſeeing the gold not by burning, but by ſtamping and beating was brought to powder? 3. Some thinke, that by the verie burning it ſelfe, the gold was made powder: as Sa. upon this place ſaith, that he ſaw at Millaine gold in a founders ſhop burned in the fire to powder. So alſo thinketh Oſiander. But it is evidently gathered out of the text, that beſide the burning the gold was beaten to powder, yea it was ſtamped, and ground ſmall as duſt, *Deut.*9.22. 4. Wherefore it was firſt caſt into the fire, not onely to be melted, and the faſhion thereof to be defaced; but it was burned, that is, ſo long kept in the fire, that by the burning it was made brittle, as wood when it is burned to a coale; and ſo being taken out, it was pounded and beaten. So alſo Toſtatus adding ſomewhat to his former opinion.

QUEST. LVI. Why the powder of the golden Calfe is caſt into the river.

Verſ.20. HE ſtrowed it in the water. 1. Cajetan thinketh, that as everie one tooke of the water of the river, and did drinke, modicum pulveris ſpargebatur ſuper aquam, a little of the duſt or powder was ſtrowed upon the water: for if it had beene any while in the water, it would have ſunke downe to the bottome, and ſo the people ſhould not have drunke of it. But this had beene too great a labour for Moſes, as everie one drunke, to have ſprinkled a little of the gold powder in the place, where hee tooke up the water to drinke. And Moſes ſaith, *Deut.*9.21. that hee caſt the duſt into the river: it is like it was all at once throwne into the river, and the people being afraid to doe otherwiſe than Moſes commanded, were ready as the powder was caſt into the water, to take thereof and drinke. 2. Auguſtine findeth out here a myſterie; by water, underſtanding Baptiſme, which ſignified the converſion of the idolatrous Gentiles unto the faith of Chriſt; Ille vitulus per ignem zeli, aciem verbi, & aquam Baptiſmi, ab eis, quos abſorbere conatus eſt, abſorptus eſt; The golden Calfe (that is, the idols of the Gentiles) by the fire of zeale, the edge of the word, and water of Baptiſme is devoured, which ſought to have devoured them, &c. But this ſeemeth too curious. 3. The hiſtoricall meaning is this rather: the duſt is caſt into the water, which they had received not long before out of the rocke, in that drie and barren place, Pelarg. Iunius. Thereby to upbraid their unthankfulneſſe, which in the ſame place where they had received ſo great a benefit, forgate God and fell away from him.

Lib. 22. cont. Fauſtum Manichæum.

QUEST.

QUEST. LVII. How the Israelites were brought to drinke of this water, and why.

Vers. 20. AND caused the children of Israel to drinke of it, &c. 1. This was done for some speciall signification, though it bee not expressed. For it is not to bee thought, that so holy a man as Moses being directed by Gods Spirit, would cause all this to bee done, the golden image to bee burned, and beaten to powder, and cast into the water, and the people to drinke thereof, and all in vaine, Tostat. qu. 31. 2. And the people, though they knew that this was no good signe unto them, to drinke water mingled with such ashes, and beside, it was a bitter and unpleasant water; yet durst not gaine-say Moses, as neither before did they resist him, when he so used their new molten god: for both they were stricken with a conscience of sinne, and inward terror, and God had set in Moses an evident Majestie and authoritie, which made them all to feare and tremble before him: as it appeareth afterward, when a few of the Levites armed themselves against all the host, which consisted of six hundred thousand fighting men, and killed whom they met, none daring to resist them. 3. Such like authoritie and Majestie appeared in our blessed Saviour, when he whipped the money-changers and merchants out of the Temple, and none durst oppose themselves against him, Tostat. qu. 31.

QUEST. LVIII. Wherefore the people were compelled to drinke the powder of the idoll.

NOw these reasons are given, why Moses compelled them to drinke of this bitter water: 1. Ambrose saith it was done, Ut omnia impietatis aboleret vestigia, To abolish all the reliques of impietie, &c. So also Gregorie Nyssen, Materia quæ eorum peccato subministravit, deleta est; The verie matter which ministred occasion to their sin, was taken away. 2. By this meanes a kinde of judgement was shewed upon the verie instrument of their sinne; for otherwise it had beene sufficient, if hee had done as Iacob did, Genes. 35. 4. to have defaced it, and hid or buried it in the ground: therefore this was done, ut in eo scelerispateret judicium, in quo scelus patratum fuerit, that there might be shewed a signe of their sin in that, wherein it was committed, Tostat. quæst. 30. 3. This was done to shew the baseneſſe and vileneſſe of that idoll, Ut contemnere discat, quod in secessum projici videat, To contemne that which they saw cast out in the draught, Hierom. So also Borth. That they should thinke no better of such idols, than of their dung and excrements: simulque testatur idoli impotentiam, and withall it shewed the impotence and weakneſſe of that idoll, which they saw consumed to dust. 4. Hereby was also signified, Quod corpora & animos inquinaverant, That they had defiled their bodies and soules with this sinne: that by drinking of the ashes of the idoll, they might understand, non cutis tantum adhærere, that this sin did not cleave only to their skin, sed defixum in visceribus, but that it was fastened to their verie bowels, Calvin. So also Iunius, to shew, Animos ipsorum infectos idololatria, that their verie soules were infected with idolatrie. 5. Voluit ut pulveribus idoli sui satiarentur; He would have them glutted and satiate with the dust of their idoll: as when they lusted for flesh, they had such plentie, that it came out at their Nostrils, Numb. 11. So here, as with greedineſſe they desired an idoll to be made, Moses will have their greedie desire satisfied and filled, even with drinking it, Oleaster. 6. And by this was signified, Maledictionem ase exhauriendam & potandam, That they should drinke and draw out their owne malediction, and sup up the verie dregs; if the Lord were not more mercifull unto them, Iun. That as this bitter water was heavie to the stomacke, so their sinne was like to sticke by them. And this shewed, calicem bibere perpetuæ infœlicitatis, that they should drinke the cup of perpetuall miserie, as when they cried unto Pilate, wishing Christs blood to bee upon them and their seed, Lippom. Pellican. And so Moses Gerundens. one of their owne Rabbines confesseth, Non accidit tibi O Israel ultio aliqua, in qua non sit vel uncia de iniquitate vituli; There hath not happened unto thee O Israel any revenge, where there is not an ounce, or some part of the iniquitie and sinne of the Calfe. Hierom. ad Fabiolam.

7. Augustine maketh this mysticall signification of it: that as the Israelites did drinke and receive into their bodies the golden Calfe; so the Gentiles, qui erant corpus diaboli, credendo transirent in corpus Christi, which before were as the body of the Devill, while they were idolaters, should by beleeving bee put into the body of Christ, &c. Like as Moses serpent devoured the Magicians serpents: sic diabolus assumitur amissis membris suis, so the Devill is devoured, his members being lost and taken from him. So doth Ruperius understand by this image beaten to powder, Eos, qui ex parte diaboli per pœnitentiam confessi, &c. Those which having beene as of the body of the Devill, are broken by repentance. In Psal. 73.

8. Gregorie maketh this action propheticall, to signifie the generall destruction of idols thorow the world: Cernas oculis, qui huic vanitati erant prius dediti, templa sua diruentes, &c. You may see with your eyes, that they which trusted before in their idols, doe now pull downe their temples. And Procopius by the drinking thereof with the mouth, understandeth the true confession of the faith: quæ ore fit, which is done with the mouth: whereby idolatrie is overthrowne. But the other historicall reasons are rather to be insisted upon. And this drinking of the water mixed with this powder, was rather an evill signe unto them, as the bitter water was unto the adulterous woman, Numb. 5, than a signification of any good.

QUEST. LIX. Whether by the drinking of the water, any visible signe of difference was made among the people, who had most deeply offended about the golden Calfe.

BUt some further affirme, that this drinking of the water served to another end, than that thereby some signe of difference might be made betweene the Ring-leaders unto this idolatrie, and the rest, that they might easily bee discerned of the Levites, when they went up and downe in the host, killing those whom they met. 1. Therefore R. Salomon thinketh, that this bitter water did cause their bellies to swell, that were guiltie of this great sinne: but to the rest it was pleasant and wholsome water: like as the water of jealousie, Numb. 5. did cause the adulterous womans belly to swell, and her thigh to rot:

but

but if shee were not guiltie, it made her fruitfull. 2. Others thinke that the signe was this, everie ones beard that consented unto this idolatrie, was coloured yellow like unto gold: and by this marke the Levites knew them from others. But if there had beene any such visible marke set upon them, seeing most of the camp consented unto this sinne, there should have beene more found guiltie, and more slaine than three thousand, vers. 28. 3. Tostatus thinketh that there was some externall and visible signe caused by drinking of the water, though he will not determine what it was, because it was not like that the Levites would hand over head slay one with another. And he thinketh that Aaron drinking of the water had not that marke, because the Lord pardoned his sinne, because hee was thereunto drawne by compulsion. This instance of Aaron sheweth, that the drinking of the water did make no such signe; for then Aaron should have had it, whose sin was not yet pardoned: neither had Moses yet intreated for him, having not yet examined him. The Levites might know to make difference among the people some other way, than by any such visible signe. See more of this, quest. 70. following.

QUEST. LX. How farre Moses fact herein is to be imitated.

BUt whereas Moses did not onely put downe this abominable idoll, but made it altogether unprofitable for any use, burning and beating it to powder, the question is, how farre Moses herein is to be imitated. 1. Neither is their opinion to be approved which take this example of Moses to be extraordinarie in demolishing this golden Calfe; for as Moses did take away this publike stumbling block, so it belongeth unto Princes, è medio tollere, to remove out of the way whatsoever is done against the worship of God: as Hesekiah did likewise breake downe the brazen Serpent, after it began to bee abused to idolatrie, Ferus. Who addeth further, I would we had now some Moses to take away the evils which are in the Church: Non enim unum tantùm vitulum habemus, sed multos: For we have not one (golden) calfe, but many. Thus Ferus complaineth of the Papall Church. 2. But this is extraordinarie in Moses example, that he converteth not this golden idoll unto any use, but consumeth it to powder. Herein Christian Magistrates are not bound to follow Moses example: for Moses fact herein was singular, ad majorem detestationem, &c. for the greater detestation of idolatrie. Now it is lawfull to convert things consecrate to idolatrie, to some profitable use, ut juventur membra Christi, that the members of Christ may be helped and releeved, Gallas. 3. And in that Moses doth remove this idoll, which none else attempted to doe (yet it may bee thought that many in Israel were offended with it) so, magistratus officium est, non privatorum hominum, it is the office of the magistrate, not of private men, to take away idolatrous images, Osiander.

QUEST. LXI. How Moses maketh Aaron the author and cause of this sinne.

Vers. 21. WHat did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought, &c? 1. Moses layeth this sinne upon Aaron, though he were not the first author of it, because hee being left in Moses place, stayed not the people by his authoritie: therefore he is worthily reproved, tanquam author scelaris, quod passus est admitti, as the author of this sinne which he suffered to be committed, Calvin: so that permissio peccati aque in vitio sit, atque commissio; the permitting of sinne is as well in fault, as the committing, Pelarg. 2. Here then the Hebrewes, in seeking to excuse Aaron and the people, as seduced by the Egyptians, doe labour in vaine, seeing Moses doth so straitly charge Aaron as a principall doer in it. for if he had not grievously sinned, why should Moses here make him the cause of this sinne, and the Lord be so offended with him, that he purposed to slay him, if Moses had not intreated for him, Deut. 9. 20. And in these three things Aaron sinned: 1. In not staying the people, and stilling them. 2. In that besides consenting unto them, hee is an agent, in making a Calfe for them. 3. And being made hee approved it, and set up an altar before it. So that Aaron is no more here to be excused, than Peter in the Gospell, which denied his Master, Oleaster.

3. Yet Aaron sinned not, as the people did; but as there were degrees of offenders among the people: some incouraged and perswaded others, some only gave consent, and were seduced by others perswasion, to commit idolatrie: and some did neither, but onely went with the multitude for company to desire a Calfe to be made. So Aarons sin differed from the rest, timore dutus fabricavit vitulum, hee made a Calfe being drawne by feare, Tostat. qu. 33. And therefore Moses dealeth otherwise with Aaron than with the people. Aaronem verbis redarguit, populum cecidit gladio; Hee rebukes Aaron in words, the people he slayeth with the sword, Ferus.

4. But yet Aarons sinne cannot bee so much extenuated, as to free him from the sinne of idolatrie: as Tostatus confesseth that he sinned, Nec tamen sequitur ex hoc, quòd fuit idololatra, and yet it followeth not hereupon, that he was an idolater: for howsoever Aaron thought in his heart, the verie making of an idoll to be worshipped, erecting of an altar, and offering sacrifice unto it, all which Aaron did, doe proclaime him guiltie of externall idolatrie.

QUEST. LXII. Why idolatrie is called a great sinne.

THis great sinne. 1. Idolatrie is counted a great sinne, even in the highest degree, because it is a sinne committed directly against God, not as other sinnes of the second table, which are done against our neighbour: which are also against God, because they are against his Law, but not directly against Gods honor, as the sins against the first table are. 2. And among all the sins of the first table, there is none which so directly impugneth the honour of God, as idolatrie; for he which taketh Gods name in vaine, or prophaneth the Sabbath, is an enemie to Gods honour: but yet such an one denieth not the Lord to bee God, as idolaters doe, Tostat. qu. 33. 3. Like as then in a Common-wealth all offences are against the King, because they are against his Lawes: but those which are against his person, are most directly against him, and among them treason specially, which is intended against his life: of the same nature is is idolatrie, which is high treason against God. 4. Thomas saith, Tantum est aliquod peccatum grauius, quanto longius per ipsum homo à Deo separatur: A sinne is so much the more grievous, the further wee are thereby removed from God: but by infidelitie and idolatrie one is furthest separated from God. 5. Idolatrie also is a great and grievous sinne, in regard of the judgement and punishment which it bringeth with it: for here Aaron, as much as in him lay, accersit vltimam cladem, had brought upon them utter destruction, Calvin. if Moses had not turned the Lords wrath, they had all beene at once destroyed. 2.2.qu.10.ar.3.

QUEST. LXIII. Why Moses onely rebuketh Aaron, and forbeareth further punishment.

NOw that Moses spared Aaron from further punishment, and onely rebuked him: 1. Some make this to be the cause, for that the Lord had revealed unto Moses Aarons sinne in the mount, before he came downe, at what time Moses prayed also for him, seeing the Lord bent to kill him, *Tostat. qu.*35. But that intreatie for Aaron was afterward, at Moses second going up to God, when hee fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights, as before: at that time he saith he prayed for Aaron, Deut. 9. 20. And seeing at this time the Lord purposed to destroy all the nation, and so Aaron could not escape: Moses now onely prayed in generall for all Israel, that God would not destroy the whole nation.

2. Others thinke that Moses did after a milde manner reprove Aaron: quia sit arguendi prælati, because Prelates (and Ecclesiasticall Governours) are so to be reproved, Ferus. he thinketh he was now the high Priest: So also Oleaster calleth him, Pontificem summum, the chiefe Priest. But as yet Aaron was not consecrated, as Lippoman inferreth upon these reasons, Quia non illi improperatur consputa in sacerdotium; He is not upbraided with defiling of his Priesthood by this meanes: neither doe we read of his reconciliation afterward, which should not have beene omitted in such a case of irregularitie.

3. Procopius thinketh that Aaron was both spared at this time, and afterward likewise, when he repined against Moses, cum propter suas, tum propter sanctos ex ejus lumbis prodituros: Both for other causes, as also for those holy mens sakes which should come out of his loynes. But if this had beene the reason, all the tribes should have beene spared likewise: because out of all of them came holy and worthy men, Judges, Prophets, or Kings.

4. But the causes rather were these: 1. Aaron confessed his sinne, and therefore Moses inclined to favour him. 2. Moses afterward intreated the Lord for him, and the Lord at his instance forgiving his sinne, the punishment also was remitted, Simler. 3. Adde hereunto that Aaron was now appointed to be high Priest: order was taken for his priestly apparell and his office, what it should be, and how he and his sonnes should bee consecrated: all which had beene in vaine, if Aaron now had perished. 4. Beside, Moses had direction from God, to put divers of the people to the sword for this offence, but for Aaron hee had no such commandement. 5. But Augustine yeeldeth the best reason, Novit ille cui parcat, &c. God onely knoweth whom to spare for amendment, and whom not to spare at all, or for a time, for his wayes and judgements are past finding out, *qu.*148.

5. Now whereas Tostatus further reasoneth, that Moses by all likelihood had prayed for Aaron in the mount, because then the Lord did specially reveale unto him his sinne: for otherwise Moses had knowne nothing of Aarons doings, as he did, as it appeareth by this reprehension: it may be answered, that it is not necessarie for this cause to presuppose any such notice to have beene given unto Moses in the mount: for either Moses might by examination and inquirie after hee came downe learne out the truth: or which is rather like, Moses Aaronem vicarium constituerat, had left Aaron his deputie governour, when he went up into the mount, Simler. and therefore he was sure that such a thing could not bee attempted in the host, without Aarons permission at the least and sufferance.

QUEST. LXIV. What things are to be commended in Aarons confession, what not.

Vers. 22. Then Aaron answered, &c. 1. Some things are to be commended here in Aarons confession: 1. His modestie, that being Moses elder brother, yet hee calleth him Lord, and submitteth himselfe unto him: whereof these two reasons may be yeelded: both because Moses was greater in office than Aaron, both as a Prophet and Governour of Israel, *Tostat. qu.*32. and his owne conscience accused him, agnoscebat se jure argui, he knew he was worthily reproved. 2. Aaron confesseth and acknowledgeth his fault, in saying, Let not the wrath of my Lord waxe fierce: Agnoscit crimen, hee therein yeeldeth himselfe to be in fault, Borrh. 3. He maketh a full and large declaration of the manner, rem gestam liberè enarrat, he freely openeth all the matter how it was done, Pelarg. both what the people required, and upon what reason and ground, what he did, and what came thereof: rem ut gesta est simpliciter narrat, he simply declareth the matter as it was done.

2. But Aaron in some things sheweth his infirmitie: 1. Peccatum & culpam in alios trajicere studet: hee seeketh to turne over the sinne and offence upon others, laying the fault upon the people, Ferus. 2. Aaron bewrayeth some hypocrisie, that seeketh to extenuate his fault as much as he can, being afraid, ne aliquid de existimatione sua deroderet, lest he should lose any thing of his credit, Simler. 3. He sheweth his ignorance, thinking himselfe excusable, because hee was urged and compelled through the importunitie of the people to doe it: Importunitas populi eos levare non potest, &c. The importunitie of the people cannot ease them any thing, who should have beene more prudent and circumspect in their government, Gallos. 4. In excusing hee accuseth himselfe; for in that the people were bent to mischiefe, hee ought to have beene so much the more vigilant over them. And whereas they asked to have gods made to goe before them, and alleaged, they knew not what was become of Moses; he should have told them, that the Lord was their guide, and have declared where Moses was, Simler. 5. In saying, there of came this calfe; frigidè & exilis narratione culpam tegere, &c. he goeth about by a cold and slender narration to hide his fault, Calvin.

QUEST.

QUEST. LXV. Whether Aaron dissembled in not confessing plainly, that he made the Calfe.

Vers. 24. I did cast it into the fire, and thereof came this Calfe. 1. The Hebrewes seeking to excuse Aarons fault what they may, say that he intended not to make a Calfe, but cast in the golden eare-rings into the fire to consume them: but by the operation of Satan, working by certaine Egyptian Magicians in the camp, the forme of a Calfe came forth. But that Aaron had an intention to make a Calfe, appeareth by the former narration, vers. 4. how Aaron, after it was molten and cast, caused it to be fashioned with a graving toole. See more hereof, quest. 17. before.

2. Some thinke that Aaron, mentitur timore perterritus, maketh a plaine lie, being overcome of feare, Oleaster. So also Lyranus. But Aaron would have beene ashamed publikely to make a lye, as though he had purposed to make a Calfe, seeing it was not well knowne to all the people to be his doing.

3. Tostatus is of opinion, that Aaron herein is not faultie at all, but that he simply confessed that he made the Calfe, being through feare of the people thereunto compelled: Sed Scriptura, quæ brevilaqua est, &c. hic eum breviter tangit: But the Scripture which is compendious, because the narration hereof was set downe before, doth but briefly touch it here. But it might as briefly have beene set downe, that Aaron made the molten Calfe, as it is expressed before vers. 4. therefore the brevitie of speech is not the cause.

4. Augustine thinketh that Aaron himselfe, compendio locutus est, used this compendious speech, and that he lied not at all, because Moses, cum de mendacio non arguit, doth not reprove him for lying. But as Aaron is not convinced here of a manifest lye, yet some colouring and dissimulation appeareth in his speech, because he doth not plainly confesse hee did it: Substantia facti narratur, tantummodo fatendi: He confesseth only the substance of the fact, concealing the manner. Moses reproveth him not for this dissembling, no more he doth for any other infirmitie here shewed, because he replieth not againe.

Quæst. 145. in Exod.

5. Hugo de S. Victor. would have the meaning of Aarons words to be this: Therefore came this Calfe, opere scilicet hominis, non miraculo, by the worke of man, not by any miracle. But the manner of his speech sheweth that Aaron sought to extenuate his sinne.

6. I therefore here rather consent to those, which thinke that Aaron coloured his fault by this speech: Rem ita refert, ac si præter ipsius intentionem formatus sit vitulus: He so reporteth the matter, as though the Calfe were formed beside his intention, Marbach. Iejune & simpliciter narrat: Hee maketh a dead and slender narration, Simler. Exili narratione culpam tegere, &c. By a slender report he would cover his sinne, Calvin. Quicquid sit, attenuat quantum potest culpam: Whatsoever it is, in these words he extenuateth his sinne what he may, Lippoman. And this seemeth to be more likely, because Aaron maketh a colourable defence and excuse of his fault thorowout, as is shewed before, quest. 64.

QUEST. LXVI. In what sense the people are said to be naked.

Vers. 24. Moses saw therefore, that the people were naked, &c. 1. Some understand it of their jewels of gold, which they were deprived of, being bestowed upon the idoll, Lyran. Hugo de S. Victor. But we read in the next chapter, that they were, splendidè ornati, they had goodly ornaments, Calvin, Marbach. Therefore they were not stripped of all. 2. Some thinke that they were disarmed: for Aaron fearing some mutinie and rising among the people, had taken away their armour, Cajetan. But in that it is said afterward, that the Levites girded their swords to them, vers. 27. it appeareth that their weapons were not taken from them, Simler. 3. Some expound it of the manifestation of their sinne; that whereas hitherto they were counted the true worshippers of God, now they should bee knowne to be idolaters, and so defamed among the Heathen, R. D. Kimhi, Oleaster, Vatab. 4. Some give this sense: Aaron had made them naked, that is, laid all the fault upon the people. 5. Or they were naked, because they went about obstinately to defend their sinne; but in this sense Aaron could not bee said to have made them naked; for he would not have encouraged them to stand in defence of their sinne, having himselfe confessed it. 6. The Chalde translateth, Moses saw the people were idle, that is, gave themselves to eating, and drinking, and playing, and neglected the feares of warre, which would have beene unto their shame, if their enemies should encounter with them.

7. But beyond the rest, this is the most proper interpretation: that they were naked, gratia & præsidio Dei, of the favour, help and assistance of God, Iunius. Nudatum erat gratia & protectione, they were naked of his favour and protection, Forus. Therefore, Si tunc commissent hostes, proculdubio res ignominiosè cessissent, If then the enemie had fallen upon them, they had most shamefully foiled them, Gallus. As the Canaanites overcame the Israelites, when they set upon them wilfully, God being not among them, Tostat. qu. 34. So also Calvin: Significat rejectos esse à Deo, Hee signifieth they were rejected of God, under whose protection they were. To the same purpose, Osiander, Bertram, Lippoman, Simlerus.

QUEST. LXVII. Why Moses stood in the gate, and what gate it was.

Vers. 26. Moses stood in the gate of the camp. 1. Cajetan thinketh that the camp had gates to enter in by, Quia castra muris erant tanquam civitas, because the camp was fenced about like a citie: and Simlerus thinketh that the camp was compassed about with a ditch, and by the same were certaine passages and entrances into the camp. But that is not like that they alwayes entrenched themselves, seeing they were to remove at all times, as the cloud before them removed, which was sometime the same day, sometime within two dayes, Numb. 9. 22. so that they could have no time to make any such ditch or trench, Tostat. qu. 34. 2. Who therefore thinketh right, that these gates were only the places of entrance into the great streets which went thorow the camp, for the host lay in such order, as that they had wayes and streets betweene their tents, as wee see now in cities and townes; as Iosephus also describeth the situation and disposing of the camp. 3. Now Moses stood in the gate or entrance, not because the use was to give sentence and judgement in the gates, Lyran. Borrh. Or because Moses would have the Levites to give the onset in the beginning of a street, and so to go thorow, as Tostat. ibid. But this was the reason: Moses tabernacle or tent was without the camp, and so upon that occasion Moses stood in the entrance of the camp, going now to his owne tent, Iun.

QUEST. LXVIII. Whether all the Levites were free from consenting unto this idolatrie.

Vers. 26. AND all the sonnes of Levi. R. Salom. to whom consenteth Tostatus, thinketh, Quod nullus de Levitis aliquid peccaverit, That none of the Levites sinned in this great transgression; because it is said, All the sonnes of Levi gathered themselves unto him: and if the Levites had sinned, as other tribes, there had beene no more cause to advance them to the Priesthood, than other tribes.

Contra. 1. If that generall particle, all, bee pressed, then it would follow, that the children and all came, which could not be; for they were not able to use swords: the meaning then is, not that all the Levites came, but all which came were Levites, Iun. Sa. Or, all, is taken for many, as this speech is usually restrained in Scripture; as all nations are said to have come, and bought corne in Egypt, Gen. 41. 2. The Levites were more of Gods favour and grace, than of their desert, separated and selected for the Priesthood: yet it is evident, that this tribe was freer from consenting to this idolatrie, than other tribes: and for this their courage and readinesse in Gods service, they received a blessing.

2. Some thinke that even these Levites, which armed themselves against their brethren, were not altogether, immunes à reatu, free from this sinne, but while they did it for feare, levius peccarunt, their sin was the lesse: and so the mercie of the Lord appeared so much the more, not only in pardoning their sin, sed gloriam suam eorum manu asserere dignatus est, but he vouchsafed by their hand to maintaine his glory, Calvin, Simler.

But it is not like that God would use their ministerie in the punishing of others, which were guiltie of the same punishment themselves, and their owne conscience accusing them, they would have had no such courage to revenge the Lords cause upon their brethren: it had beene also verie offensive to the guiltie parties, to be punished by them, which had beene alike guiltie. And Moses proclaiming, who pertaineth to the Lord, let him come to me, did meane, that they only should come, who had beene faithfull unto God, and had not consented to that sinne.

3. Some Hebrewes doe help the matter thus, that because they cannot avoid it, but that some of the kindred of the Levites were guiltie of this transgression, because they did not spare their owne sonnes, versa. 9. that because it was lawfull for any of the other tribes, to take unto them the wives of Levites, their husbands being dead, those children which they had by them might be said to be the sons of Levi, that is, grand children on their mothers side. But this shift is taken away, because Deut. 33. 9. it is said that the Levites knew not their owne father, or mother, or children: therefore they must needs bee understood to be Levites, not by marriage, or in some removed degree of kindred unto them, but the immediate fathers, and sonnes of Levites.

4. Therefore the best opinion is, that all of the tribe of Levi were not free from this sin of Idolatrie: many of them kept themselves, as it is like, at home, and consented not: but that a great sort even of Levi offended, it may thus appeare: 1. Because both Aaron himselfe was a ring-leader, who can by no meanes be excused from this sin, Lyranus. 2. It could not be avoided, but that many of the Levites were drawne away by Aarons example, Iun. 3. But yet it is more evident, because they consecrated their hands upon their owne sonnes and brethren; yea their fathers and mothers, that divers of the tribe of Levi fell away with the rest, Lyran. Iun.

Tostatus here answereth, that the name of brethren is taken largely, Pro fratribus, qui sunt de filiis Israel; For their brethren which were of the children of Israel, qu. 35. Contra. 1. If it be allowed that the name of brethren is sometime so taken, what saith he to the other names of father, mother, sonne? These must be taken for the names of kindred; or else we shall never have any certaintie in Scripture, when we should by these names understand naturall fathers, mothers and children. 2. The other words, companion and neighbour, shew that the first is a name of kindred: the first word ach signifieth here a brother in affinitie; the second, reah, a companion and friend: the third, karob, Vicinia ratione conjunctum, him, that was a neighbour in dwelling, and vicinitie or neerenesse of place, Simlerus.

5. It is evident then that some of the Levites were accessarie to this great impietie, because they were punished among the rest. So that R. Salomon is herein greatly deceived, who thinketh that the Levites, though they were blame-worthy in not resisting the idolaters, yet were not idolaters themselves: neither consensu mentis, nec facto exteriori, in consent of minde, nor in any outward fact, &c. for the Levites had beene unjustly punished, if they had beene innocent. Nay, R. Moses Egyptius goeth further, saying, that although the Israelites often are found to have committed idolatrie: yet Levitæ nunquam idolatrarunt, the Levites never committed idolatrie. But the contrarie is evident by Aarons fall: for hee apparantly was an idolater in his externall act, in building an altar unto the golden Calfe, and offering sacrifice before it. Paulus Burgensis in his reply proceedeth yet further, that when our blessed Saviour was put to death, the Levites, as they are distinguished from the Priests, were not principes in crimine illo fuisse, principall agents in that wicked crime: whereas it is evident, that the Priests were the chiefe enemies that Christ had: the Levites indeed are not named: but seeing the high Priest with the other Priests, which were of the tribe of Levi were the contrivers of Christs death: then cannot that whole tribe be exempted from this villanous act, which is the intendment of Burgensis, a great favourer of that nation.

QUEST.

QUEST. LXIX. Of the authoritie which the Levites had, to doe execution upon the idolaters, and the rules prescribed them.

Vers. 27. THus saith the Lord, &c. 1. Tostatus thinketh that it is not necessarie here to understand, that Moses had any speciall commandement from God, but because he had received a Law from God, that idolaters should bee put to death, in executing that Law hee might justly say, that God commanded it, quest. 35. But seeing Moses was faithfull in all Gods house, we must not thinke that hee would pretend the name of God, without Gods speciall warrant: yet whether Moses received this commandement from God by revelation, or by manifest vision, is not expressed, Pelarg. The latter is more like, as God used to speake to Moses at other times face to face. 2. And Moses maketh mention of Gods commandement, both to deliver himselfe from all suspition, that he did not give this charge of hatred toward the people, and in rage, Simler. As likewise the Levites were encouraged hereby to enterprise this worke, which otherwise they would have beene hardly drawne unto, Tostatus.

3. Certaine rules are given them to observe: 1. They must goe to and fro, non solum transire jussi sunt, they are not only bid to passe thorow, but to returne, to goe everie way, ut in omnes populi partes animadverterent, that they should in everie place take punishment of the people, Gallas. 2. They must go from gate to gate, that is, thorow the streets and common wayes; Non committitur istis ut ingrediantur tentoria; It is not permitted them to enter into their tents and houses, Cajetan. 3. And everie man is commanded to slay his brother, &c. not that everie one had a brother or kinsman to slay, sed ut occidat indifferenter, but he must indifferently kill both one and other whom he met, that was to be killed, not respecting kindred, affinitie, or acquaintance, Tostat. qu. 35.

QUEST. LXX. Whether the Levites did not make some difference among the people, as they went and killed.

Vers. 27. SLay everie man his brother, &c. 1. Some thinke there was an outward marke of difference made among the people, by the which the Levites discerned who were to be killed, and who to be spared. And here are divers opinions. 1. Ab. Ezra, with some other Hebrewes, thinke that by drinking of the water, their faces or bellies did swell, that were the chiefe actors in this sinne. But then many more should have been killed than 3000. See this conceit overthrowne before, quest. 59. 2. Gallasius thinketh that by the drinking of the water Moses perceived, quibus idolum displiceret, who they were which were displeased with this idoll, and repented of their sin: and who were obstinate by their refusall. But it is not like that any of the people trembling now, and being afraid at Moses presence, durst so publikely and openly shew their contempt. 3. Simlerus inclineth to thinke, that there were some seditious persons in the camp, that went about to make a commotion among the people, and that the Levites did slay these as they met them. But it is evident, vers. 35. that they were not slaine for sedition, but for the golden Calfe, Gallas.

2. Some thinke there was no other signe of difference, but in the notice and knowledge of the Levites: it is probable, Minime Levitas latuisse quinam primi essent perversi consilii duces, That the Levites were not ignorant, who were the chiefe Captaines of this perverse counsell, Calvin. But it had beene hard for the Levites, who as it is like kept themselves at home, and were not present with the people, of themselves to know, in so great a multitude, and in so short a time, who were the ring-leaders. Cajetan resolveth, that the Levites were so directed by God, who commanded this to bee done, Et qui omnia recte disponit, and who rightly disposeth all things; so that no innocent man was put to the sword. But this needed not to be feared, seeing all the people in generall consented in this sinne, and few or none of them were innocent.

3. Wherefore their opinion is most probable, who thinke that seeing all the people were guiltie only of this sinne, a few only excepted, that the Levites could not doe amisse, whomsoever they killed as they met, without making any difference: that whereas all had sinned, it was not unjust, if a few were singled out from the rest, to pacifie the wrath of God, and to terrifie the rest. 1. Ambrose giveth this reason, Quia melius est paucorum supplicio universos eximi, quam in omnes vindicari; It was better by the punishment of a few, for all to escape, than all to be punished. 2. Gregorie Nyssenus saith, Omnes sine dispositione punitos, that all were punished without any difference, quia una omnes ad malum conspirantes, quasi unus effecti sunt, because all of them conspiring together in evill were now but as one, &c. Like as when one is chastised for his fault, Nam hoc aut illud affligis membrum, he that beateth him doth not make choice of one part rather than another, knowing that whersoever he is whipped, ad totum corpus sensum doloris transmittit, that the sense of the griefe will reach to the whole body: so was it here. 3. Lippomanus addeth, because all the people were culpable, Ut & totus populus aliquando punitus videatur; That the whole people might seeme to be punished: it was more to Gods glorie, and the honour of the tribe of Levi, Si praeceptum Mosis generaliter factum intelligamus; If we understand this precept of Moses generally without any difference to have beene executed. 4. Oleaster further so thinketh, Omnes occurrentes sine delectu, &c. That the Levites killed all they met without any choice, quemadmodum in aliis punitionibus accidit, as it happened in other generall punishments, when some were plagued for all. 5. Calvin and Simler make mention how the like thing was in use among the Romans, that if a whole band or company of Souldiers had run away, or committed any grievous offence, the Emperour would tithe them out, and put everie tenth man, as he was drawne out by lot, to death. And thus the Theban Legion, which consisted all of Christians, was twice tithed out by that cruell Emperour Maximianus.

4. Now the contrarie reasons, why some thinke that there was some difference made, are these. 1. Deus caeco & turbulento impetu, &c. God would not have revenge taken in his cause upon a blinde and and disordered heat, Simler. 2. By this meanes it came to passe, ut placide totus populus quiesceret, that all the people was well pacified, when they saw only certaine pestilent men to be taken out of the way, Calvin. 3. Otherwise, if there had beene no such difference made, there would have no respect beene had of those, which shewed themselves penitent for their sinne, Gallas.

Contra. 1. Here need no disorder or confusion to bee feared, seeing all the people were guilty, the sword could not light upon any unjustly; and in that three thousand onely of six hundred thousand were slaine, it sheweth that the Levites executed Moses sentence with great discretion and moderation. 2. The people might as well be pacified, when they saw a few for examples sake, to be punished among such a great multitude. 3. They which were penitent, it is like kept them within, sorrowing for their sinne: the busie-bodies, and careless people went up and downe in the streets, whom the Levites, as they met, killed.

QUEST. LXXI. Why none came unto Moses, but only of the tribe of Levi.

Vers. 28. SO the children of Levi did, &c. 1. Some thinke, that others, which feared God in the campe, might joyne themselves also unto the Levites, who might be spared, Gallasius. But the text saith, vers. 26. that they were all Levites that came unto Moses: there were none then but of Levi, to whom Moses gave this thing in charge. 2. Calvin saith, Credibile est Levitas nominatim fuisse vocatos; It is credible that the Levites were called by name, which is the cause that none of any other tribe came. But Moses proclamation was generall: Who so pertaineth to the Lord, let him come unto mee. 3. Therefore this rather may be the cause, why none of any other Tribe came, though it is not to bee doubted, that some among them feared God, and were not polluted with this sinne of idolatry: yet because they were not many of a Tribe, it is like being ashamed of their paucity and small number, they did forbeare to shew themselves: likewise this was done, singulari Dei consilio & tractu, by the singular counsell and instinct of God, who drew the Levites unto him, and put it in their minde to come, that because the Lord had already appointed them for the Priesthood, voluit Deus aliquo singulari facto eos reddere sacerdotio dignos; God would by some singular fact make them worthy of the Priesthood: and that by their zeale Aarons fall might be somewhat covered, Simler. And by this meanes, eluitur infamia, ipsi Levi & posteris imputa. &c. that blot and infamy is done away, which did cleave unto Levi and his posterity for the slaughter of the Sichemites: for the which he received a curse of Iacob in stead of a blessing: which curse is now taken away, and they are rewarded and honoured of God for this their zeale: for the which Moses pronounceth a blessing upon them, Deut. 33. 8. Gallas.

QUEST. LXXII. Of the number of them which were slaine, whether they were three thousand, or twenty three thousand, as the vulgar Latine readeth.

Vers. 28. ABout three thousand men. 1. The vulgar Latine text readeth after some copies, which Lyranus and Tostatus follow, 23. thousand: after other, triginta tria millia, 33. thousand, as Vatablus and Osiander set downe the Latine text: which oversight of the Latine Translater is diversly defended: 1. Some thinke that the Hebrew text making mention but of three thousand, meaneth the principall only which were slaine: the Latine in the number of 23. thousand comprehendeth the number of the whole. 2. Rab. Salomon thinketh, that there were divers slaughters of the people, some died of drinking the bitter water: others were slaine by the Levites, and some were smitten and plagued of God: and that all these are summed together in the number of 23. thousand: those which the Levites only killed were three thousand. So also Ferus. But if all this should be granted, yet cannot the Latine Translater be excused, in setting downe 23. thousand, whereas three thousand only are named in the originall. 3. Tostatus alleageth, that whereas the word in the originall is שלשה cishlosheth, as three thousand, the first letter caph, which is used for a note of similitude, may here stand for number of twenty. But he himselfe misliketh this answer; because neither is it the use of the Hebrewes to set downe their numbers by letters, as the Greekes and Latines doe: and beside, the Latine text doth expresse here a note of similitude, quasi, as it were, or about 23. thousand. 4. Wherefore Tostatus resolute answer is, that in this place the Hebrew text is corrupt, and that the Latine is the truer: as the Talmudists themselves confesse, that in fifteene places the Hebrew text is corrupt, per errorem scriptorum, by the errour of the Writers. But this is a very absurd shift; rather than they will acknowledge any errour or oversight in the Latine, to lay the fault upon the originall: 1. Both the Septuagint and Chalde doe reade in this place three thousand, which translations are more ancient than the Latine: therefore in the originall the errour is not. 2. There may be some scapes in the originall by the ignorance or negligence of the Writers, as in the mistaking of a letter, or such like: but to put in one word for another, both of unlike signification and sound, cannot be the Writers errour, as שלשה shelosheth signifieth three, עשרים gesrim, twenty: there is no affinity betweene these words. 3. The Latine translation hath many such like scapes, as Gen. 8. 4. whereas the Hebrew hath, the seventeenth day of the moneth; the Latine readeth, the seven and twentieth: and many such places may be noted in the Latine, which cannot be justified: as is elsewhere shewed at large. Synops. Contr. 2. qu. 2. As therefore it erreth in one place, so it may be subject to errour in another. 4. And how should the Latine text come to be privileged from errour? the writings of the Prophets only, which were directed by the Spirit of God, have that privilege: but the Latine Translater had not a Prophetical spirit. 5. The Hebrew is more ancient than the Latine: and the Latine is translated out of the Hebrew fountaine: and the Jewes have beene most carefull to preserve the originall copies pure: therefore in all likelihood the Latine is more subject to corruption than the Hebrew.

2. Wherefore the ingenuous modesty rather of those Popish Writers is here to be commended, which confesse the Latine text here to be corrupted: as Montanus, who hath herein amended the Latine, and Cajetanus, Vatablus, Lippom. Whereof this is an evident argument; because the Latine copies disagree, some have triginta tria millia, 33. thousand; some, viginti tria, 23. thousand, as is before shewed: some, tria millia, three thousand, as that which Montanus followeth in the great Philips Bible.

QUEST. LXXIII. How the Levites are said to consecrate their hands.

Vers. 29. CONsecrate your hands unto the Lord, &c. 1. The Latine Translater readeth, Consecrastis manus; Ye have consecrated: but it being put in the imperative moode, consecrate yee, sheweth that these words were spoken not after the slaughter was made, but either before to incourage the Levites, Vatablus, Calvine, Cajetane: or while they were in the act doing, Moses by these words animated them, Iunius.

2. By consecrating their hands: 1. Tostatus understandeth, that as in their consecration, their right thumbes and toes were anointed with bloud, so now by shedding of bloud they should be consecrate, and as it were initiate in the Priesthood. 2. But the meaning is nothing but this: that this their service should be instar sacrificii, acceptable to God, as if they had offered a sacrifice, they did consecrate their ministery and service herein to God, as Iunius readeth, because they were employed in the Lords businesse, and were carried away with a zeale of his glory. 3. Beside, by this their fact, consecrati sunt ministerio, they were consecrate to the ministery and service of God: as Deut. 10.8. it is said, The Lord the same time separated Levi: where reference is made unto this fact of the Levites: and this is the blessing, which here is bestowed upon them. 4. Some understand it thus: Unusquisque in filio & in fratre suo erit per hanc actionem consecratus; Every one by this action shall be consecrate in his sonne and in his brother, Cajetane. So also Gallas. that is, they and their posterity should hereby be consecrated unto God. But seeing the word is in the imperative, consecrate ye: the meaning is rather, that they should consecrate every one his hand, interficiendo filium, &c. in killing his sonne, or brother, Vatab. Calvin. And so is it expounded, Deut. 33.9. where it is said, that the Levites knew not their owne sonnes or children: but mention is not made of slaying their sonnes before.

QUEST. LXXIV. Of the time when Moses came downe from the mount, and when he returned againe.

Vers. 30. AND when the morning came. 1. This was the next day after the idolaters were slaine, which was the very day of Moses comming downe from the Mount, which was the fortieth day of his being in the Mount with God: for that day was the publike solemnity celebrated by the Israelites to the honour of their new golden god: as it appeareth by their melody and dancing, as Moses came downe from the Mount; the same day when Moses returned to the campe, which might bee about the sixt houre of the day, he cast the golden calfe into the fire, and armed the Levites against their brethren: the next morning he had this communication with the people, Tostat. quæst. 37. 2. Now, whereas Moses saith, upon this next day, that hee would goe up to the Lord to intreat for them; some thinke it must be understood of his going up againe into the Mount, as it is written, Deut. 9. Cajetane, Borrh. So that this his going up, was when he stayed other forty dayes and nights, as he had done before, to make supplication for the people, Simler. And then this followed not immediately after hee had thus said, but certaine dayes after, other things comming betweene, Tostat. qu. 38. 3. But it seemeth that this was another going up unto God, than when hee stayed there forty dayes the second time: for this going up was the next day after, Iun. But many things came betweene before his second solemne going up, which are rehearsed in the next chapter.

QUEST. LXXV. Why Moses urgeth the greatnesse of their sinne.

Vers. 30. YE have committed a grievous sinne, &c. 1. There were two dangers to be feared in the people; on the one side security and extenuating of their sinne, and on the other, desperation: therefore to prevent the one, he telleth them of the greatnesse and grievousnesse of their sinne: and to helpe the other he promiseth, that he will goe up and pray for them, Simler. 2. And here, lest they might thinke that they only had sinned which were punished, he telleth them, that even they which remained, were guilty also of a great sinne, Tostatus. As our blessed Saviour telleth the Jewes, that they were not the greatest sinners, whom Pilate had put to the sword, but that others should repent, lest they likewise perished, Luk. 13. Ferus. 3. And Moses still urgeth the greatnesse of their sinne, ut ipsi quoq; supplices confugiant ad Dei misericordiam, that they also themselves should by their supplications flee unto the mercie of God, Calvin. 4. And this Moses doth, to take from them a false opinion, lest they should thinke to be excused in this sinne by their good intention, that they made the golden Calfe to the honour of God, Ferus. 5. And that which Moses doth here, in telling the people of their sinne, the Law of Moses practiseth still, in bringing men to a knowledge of their sinnes, Ferus.

QUEST. LXXVI. Why Moses speaketh as it were doubtfully, If I may pacifie him, &c.

Vers. 30. IF I may pacifie him for your sinne. 1. This word אולי vlai, is not taken here as a signe of doubting: for Moses being a faithfull man and full of confidence, did not doubt in his prayers: for he that doubteth, either maketh question of Gods power, that he is not able to grant that which hee asketh: or he is not perswaded of his mercie and goodnesse: he that doubteth hee shall not receive that which he asketh, bonitati Dei injuriam facit, doth offer wrong unto the goodnesse of God, which he distrusteth. And such an one as asketh not in faith, shall receive nothing of the Lord, as S. Iames saith, Iam. 1. If Moses then had prayed doubtfully, he had not obtained that which he prayed for, Tostat. qu. 40.

2. But Moses speaketh thus, either in respect of the temporall punishment, which hee was not sure, whether it should wholly be remitted, for in temporall things wee have no assurance: De fide & salute certi esse debemus in precibus; Wee must be sure in our prayers of faith, and such things as concerne our salvation, ſalvation, Simler. Or rather he uſeth this doubtfull ſpeech, Ne ſecurè de petenda venia cogitent; That they ſhould not be ſecure in asking of pardon, Calvin. Difficultatem venia ſignificat; He ſignifieth hereby how hard it was to obtaine pardon for them, Gallaſ. that hee might more effectually move them to repentance, Ferus. As in the like ſenſe this phraſe is uſed in other places of Scripture: as Ioel 2. 14. If perhaps he will returne, and repent him of the evill. Ioſh. 14. 12. It may be the Lord will be with mee. 1 Samuel 14. 6. It may be the Lord will give deliverance by us. So 2 Tim. 2. 25. If ſo be the Lord give them repentance to know the truth, Pelarg.

QUEST. LXXVII. Why Moſes againe intreateth the Lord, ſeeing he was pacified before, verſ. 14.

BUt what needed Moſes to have intreated the Lord, ſeeing it is ſaid, that he had repented him before of the evill which he had threatned? verſ. 14. 1. Ferus thinketh it was an infirmitie in Moſes, that having heard before, that the Lord was pacified, iterum, quaſi nihil tale audierit, ſollicitus erat; yet prayeth againe, as though he had heard no ſuch thing. So alſo Calvin: Quod dubitanter inchoant preces; That the faithfull begin their prayers doubtfully till faith prevaile. But this prayer of Moſes proceeded of faith, for otherwiſe the Lord would not have heard him, as he did, Deut. 9. 20. it ſhewed not then his infirmity. 2. Some thinke that Moſes obtained nothing at his firſt prayer, but was kept in ſuſpence. But this is before confuted, queſt. 40. 3. Some are of opinion, that Moſes prayer before, and this were but one, Simler. But the contrary appeareth, Deut. 9. 20. 4. Therefore, theſe may be the cauſes why Moſes prayeth againe: 1. The Lord granted before, that he would not deſtroy all the people at once, ſed utrumque ex intervallo, vel partes; but whether he would doe it in continuance of time, and as it were by peecemeale, hee knew not: which he prayeth for here, Lippom. 2. And there might be other ſinnes as well as this, for the which the Lord ſhould be angry with them: as Deut. 9. 18. he ſaith, he prayed and faſted, becauſe of all their ſins, Toſtat. 3. And now he prayeth not only for the turning away of judgements: but that the Lord would be againe fully reconciled unto his people, and reſtore them to their former ſtate and condition of favour, Simler. 4. And he prayeth not only for the pardoning of their temporall puniſhment, but againſt everlaſting death, which ſinne deſerveth, Oſiander.

QUEST. LXXVIII. What booke it was, out of the which Moſes wiſheth to be raced.

Verſ. 32. IF thou wilt not race me out of the booke which thou haſt written. 1. By this booke R. Salomon underſtandeth the booke of the Law, as Deut. 33. 4. Moſes commanded us a Law: hee deſireth, if the Lord were purpoſed to deſtroy the people, that his name ſhould not be mentioned in the Law, nor he taken to be the Law-giver: for to what purpoſe ſhould he be ſpoken of, as a Law-giver unto that people, which was not?

Contra. But this is not the meaning. 1. Becauſe the bookes of the Law were not yet written: Moſes therefore would not deſire to be raced out of a booke, which was not. 2. Neither would Moſes aske that of God, which was in his owne power to doe: now Moſes did write the booke of the Law, and he might have left out his owne name, if he would. 3. Againe, Moſes ſetteth againſt this great benefit, the ſafety of the people, the greateſt loſſe which he could have: but this had beene no ſuch great loſſe unto Moſes, not to have his name remembred in any ſuch written booke. 4. Moſes here uſeth a disjunctive ſpeech, Doe this, or elſe race mee, &c. but if he meant the racing of his name out of the booke of the Law, there had beene no disjunction at all; for one had followed upon the other: for if Iſrael had beene deſtroyed, neither ſhould Moſes have written the booke of the Law, which was only given unto Iſrael: for it had beene in vaine to give Lawes nnto a people, that were not. 5. Moſes alſo ſpeaketh of a booke which God had written: now Moſes writ the booke of the Law, the ten Commandements only were written with Gods hand, Toſtat. quæſt. 41.

2. R. Abraham Francus, who writeth upon Aben Ezra, underſtandeth the racing out of this booke, of the death of the body; and he addeth further, that there is, quadam rota cœleſtis, a certaine celeſtiall wheele, wherein are many ſtarres, which worke by their influence upon thoſe inferiour bodies: and by the moving of this wheele, death or life is cauſed: ſo that thus he would interpret Moſes ſpeech, Cauſe me by the motion of this wheele to dye.

But ſeeing the motion of this wheele, which he imagineth, is the naturall cauſe, as he ſuppoſeth, of life and death: Moſes could not dye naturally, before his time came: and if now he ſhould have died, it had beene not a naturall death, but ſupernaturally cauſed by God; therefore not by the motion of any ſuch wheele, Toſtat. ibid.

3. Hierom alſo differeth not much from this former opinion in ſubſtance, underſtanding Moſes deſire of death in this life: he wiſheth, Perire in præſentiam, non in perpetuum; To periſh for the preſent, not for ever. But whereas the Lord afterward anſwereth Moſes, Whoſoever hath ſinned will I put out of my booke, verſ. 33. it followeth, that they which ſinne not, that is, without repentance, are not put out of that booke: but all, as well the righteous, as unrighteous, the juſt, and the ſinners, are ſubject to this temporall death: therefore Moſes ſpeaketh not of that. Hieronym. Auguſtin.

4. Hierom hath beſide another opinion, for upon that place, Pſalm. 69. 28. Let them bee put out of the booke of life, neither let them bee written with the righteous; he inferreth, that God hath two bookes, viventium, & juſtorum, of the living, and of the righteous: that was the booke of the living, In quo ante adventum Dei Prophetæ & Patriarchæ ſcripti ſunt; Wherein the Prophets, and Patriarkes were written before the comming of God (in the fleſh;) the other, wherein the faithfull are written: whereof our bleſſed Saviour ſpeaketh, Rejoyce becauſe your names are written in the booke of life: and of the firſt Moſes (ſaith he) ſpeaketh in this place. So ſome doe underſtand this booke (in the ſame ſenſe with Hierom) of the booke of Gods Covenant, which hee made with Iſrael, out of the which the Gentiles were excluded, of which mention is made, *Ezech.*13.9. where the Lord saith that the false Prophets, shall not be written in the writing of the house of Israel. So Moses desireth here, not to be counted of the family of Israel, wherein all the Prophets and Patriarkes were written. But if Israel had now perished, the booke of Gods Covenant with Israel likewise, should have beene no more remembred: therefore it had beene superfluous for Moses to desire to be raced out of that booke. And againe, the booke of the living, mentioned in the Psalme, is the same with the booke of life, spoken of, *Apocal.*3.5. I will not put his name out of the booke of life. In which booke of life, not only the Prophets and Patriarkes before Christ, but all the faithfull before and since are written.

5. Cajetane understandeth it, De libro principatus in hoc mundo, Of the booke of principality and preeminence in the world: for it is decreed with God, as in a booke, Quod isti vel illi principentur in hac vita; That such, or such shall beare rule in this life. And so Moses desireth to lose his principality and government, which the Lord promised him, that hee would make of him a great nation, &c. But whereas they which sinned, only are taken out of this booke of life, and yet many wicked and evill men are governours in the world, it cannot be meant of any such booke or decree of principalitie or government.

6. Oleaster by this booke thinketh to be understood, the booke of the acts and doings of the righteous, which is mentioned, *Iosh.*10.13. and 2 *Sam.*1.18. But there are many righteous men, whose names and acts were not written in that booke: which is now thought also to be lost: therefore it had beene no great matter for Moses to wish to be put out of that booke.

7. Burgensis maketh foure bookes of God. 1. One is the booke of life, wherein only are written the names of the Elect, that are ordained unto life: as when souldiers are written in the muster booke, which are pressed, and appointed for warre. 2. That also may be called the booke of life, wherein those things are written, which lead and direct us unto life eternall: as that may be called a booke of warfare, wherein the precepts of the act military are contained. So the Scriptures are called the booke of life, wherein the truth is contained, *Eccles.*24.26. 3. The booke of God is that divine power, wherein every mans doings shall bee brought to his remembrance, as it is said, *Dan.*7.10. Iudgement was set, and the bookes opened. 4. There is also a booke of the righteous, which conteineth the acts of the Saints, for the memory of times to come. In this place he thinketh the booke of God here may be taken, either the first or second way, *Burgens. addit.*8. But Moses here speaketh of a booke only written by God, but those bookes of the Scriptures, and of the righteous, were written by men.

8. Tostatus maketh three bookes: one a great booke, wherein are all things registred in the world, and all men foreseene good or bad; which booke hee saith is divided into two other bookes, the one which only containeth the names of those which are ordained unto life, which is called liber predestinationis, the booke of predestination: the other, wherein they only are written, whom the Lord foreseeth shall come to everlasting destruction: and this is called liber prascientia; the booke of Gods prescience. And in this place, Moses by Gods booke, understandeth the booke of predestination, *Tostat. qu.*41.

But as Tostatus resolveth well, that the booke of life, and of Gods predestination is here understood: so yet that assertion of his, that there is a booke of prescience wherein their names are written, which shall be damned, hath no warrant in Scripture: for although it be most true, that as the number is certaine with God of those which shall be saved, so the Lord knoweth who are left unto destruction; yet the Scripture only giveth the name of a booke unto the first, and they which are rejected, are not said to bee written in any booke, but only not to be written in the booke of life, *Psal.*69.28. *Apocal.*17.8.

9. Therefore, thus better are the Lords bookes distinguished: 1. There are two generall and common bookes, as they may be so called; the one is the booke of Gods prescience, and providence, wherein the Lord seeth and directeth all things, which hee himselfe doth in the world: of this booke speaketh the Prophet *David, Psal.*139.26. In thy booke were all things written, Simler. 2. The second generall booke is the booke of remembrance before the Lord, wherein all the acts of men, good and evill, are as registred before the Lord, as *Malach.*3.16. it is said, A booke of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord: so *Apocal.*20.12. other bookes beside the booke of life were opened: the booke of every ones conscience, Borrh. 3. Then the third booke is the particular summe of all the elect appointed to salvation, and this is the booke of life, which Moses meaneth here, Simler.

Quest. LXXIX. How the Lord is said to have a booke.

Take me out of the booke, &c. 1. This is a metaphoricall speech, sicut nos ea literis consignamus, as we use to signe with letters, those things the memory whereof we would have kept: so God is said to have a booke, not that he needeth any booke of remembrance, but because all things are present before him, as if they were written in a booke, Simler. Iunius.

1.q.q.24.ar.1. in cor. 2. So also Thomas: Liber vitæ in Deo dicitur metaphorice; The booke of life is said to be with God by a metaphor, according to the use and custome of men: for they which are chosen to any speciall place or service, conscribuntur in libro, are written in a booke, as souldiers, and Counsellers, as among the Romans the Senators were called patres conscripti, the fathers whose names were written or registred.

3. So also Burgens. Sicut liber militiæ vocatur, in quo scribuntur electi ad militiam; As the muster booke, or of warfare is so called, wherein their names are written, which are chosen for warre: so the Lord is said to have a booke of life, wherein all they are comprehended, which are ordained to salvation, *Burgens. addit.*8.

Quest. LXXX. Whether any can indeed be raced out of the booke of life.

Take me out of the booke of life. 1. Some thinke that the elect indeed may be raced out of the booke of life: for they which are elected, Si secure vivunt absq; penitentia à numero electorum Dei exclu- duntur, dantur, If they live ſecurely without repentance, are excluded out of the ranke, and number of the elect, Marbach. To the ſame purpoſe alſo Oſiander: Deletur rurſus de libro vitæ, &c. He is blotted againe out of the booke of life, which by his ſinnes loſeth the celeſtiall inheritance. 2. Contra. But this is an unſound opinion: 1. For thus either they muſt make God ignorant of things to come, that he certainly forſeeth not the end of the elect and reprobate, and ſo is deceived in his decree, in ordaining ſome to be ſaved, which ſhall not be ſaved; or elſe they muſt be driven to confeſſe, that Gods decree is mutable, that hee changeth his ſentence in excluding thoſe upon their ſinnes, which were before elected. But neither of thoſe are to be admitted, for neither is God ſubject to change, Iames 1. 17. neither can his preſcience or foreknowledge be deceived: as the Apoſtle ſaith, The foundation of God remaineth ſure, &c. the Lord knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19. But this were no ſure foundation, if they, which God in the decree of his election, knew to be his, ſhould afterward fall out not to be his.

2. Indeed, they which live and dye without repentance, cannot be elected. But it is impoſſible that they which are elected, ſhould finally fall away, or be void of repentance: but as God hath decreed the end of ſuch to be everlaſting ſalvation, ſo he hath alſo ordained the way and meanes, which they ſhould walke in: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Epheſ. 1. 4. As he hath choſen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that wee ſhould be holy, and without blame before him in love. Therefore Toſtatus, with other of that ſide, are herein more ſound, than the moderne Lutherans: Qui intus ſcripti ſunt in libro vitæ ſecundum firmam Dei prædeſtinationem, impoſſibile eſt deleri, &c. It is impoſſible for thoſe to be blotted out, which are written in the booke of life, according to Gods firme and certaine predeſtination, Toſtat. qu. 43. So alſo Lyranus, Impoſſibile eſt deletio, &c. It is impoſſible to be blotted out, if we take it ſimplie to be written in the booke of life. So alſo Burgenſ.

QUEST. LXXXI. Of the two wayes whereby we are ſaid to be written in the booke of life.

BUt one may be ſaid two wayes to bee written in the booke of life. 1. Lyranus hath this diſtinction; one way they are ſaid ſimply to be written, In quantum prædeſtinati ſunt in noticia Divina, as they are ordained to ſalvation in the knowledge and preſcience of God; and they that are thus written can never bee blotted out: another way, they are ſcripti ſecundum quid, written after a ſort, not according to the divine preſcience or predeſtination: Sed ſecundum diſpoſitionem in eis actu exiſtentem, & ſecundum præſentem juſtitiam; But according to their diſpoſition, which is in act in them, and according to their preſent juſtice: and thus are they ſaid to be blotted out, not in reſpect of Gods knowledge, as though any thing can fall out againſt his preſcience, but in reſpect of their change, from grace into ſinne.

2. Thomas alſo to the ſame purpoſe: ſome are ſaid to bee blotted out, Non ſecundum rei veritatem, ſed ſecundum hominum opinionem; Not according to the truth of the thing, but in the opinion of men: for it is uſuall in Scripture, ut aliquid dicatur fieri, quando innoteſcit, that a thing ſhould be ſaid to be done, when it appeareth. So ſome are ſaid to be written in the booke of life, quia homines ibi opinantur ſcriptos propter præſentem juſtitiam, becauſe men thinke they are there written, in reſpect of their preſent juſtice. Then ſome are there written, ex prædeſtinatione, by predeſtination, which can never bee blotted out. Some, ex gratia, in reſpect of their preſent grace, which they may fall from, and ſo be blotted out. And againe in another place, he expreſſeth the ſame thing in other termes. Some are predeſtinate of God, In ſe ut ſimpliciter habituri vitam æternam, Simply to have life eternall in themſelves: and theſe are ſo written in the booke of life, as they can never be blotted out. And ſome are ſo written, Vt habeant vitam æternam non in ſe, ſed in ſua cauſa; To have life eternall not in themſelves, but in reſpect of their cauſe and preſent ſtate of Juſtice, which when they fall from, they are ſaid to be blotted out. 1. p. qu. 24. art. 1. & 3.

3. So before them both, Auguſtine, We muſt not ſo take it brethren, Quod quenquam Deus ſcribat in libro vitæ, & deleat illum; That God writeth any in the booke of life, and blotteth him out: for if a mortall man ſaid, that I have written, I have written, ſhall we thinke that God writeth and blotteth out: Præſcius eſt Deus, & prædeſtinavit omnes ante conſtitutionem mundi regnaturos cum filio; God foreſeeth all things, and he did predeſtinate all before the making of the world, that ſhould reigne with his ſonne, &c. Therefore this is ſaid, Secundum ſpem ipſorum qui ibi ſe ſcriptos putabant; That ſome are written, which are ſaid to be blotted out in their owne opinion, becauſe they thought they were there written: ſo that where it is ſaid, let them be blotted out of the booke of life, the meaning is, ut ipſos conſtet non illos ibi eſſe, that it may appeare unto them, that they are not there. To this purpoſe Auguſtine, as he is alleaged both by Simlerus, and Borrhaius. In Pſalm. 68.

4. Toſtatus followeth the ſame diſtinction: that ſome are written in the booke of life, ſecundum firmam prædeſtinationem, according to Gods ſure predeſtination: ſome only ſecundum præſentem juſtitiam, in reſpect of their preſent juſtice: theſe may bee blotted out, and not the other: but he addeth further; that ſo likewiſe in the booke of Gods preſcience, wherein onely they are written, whoſe end is damnation: ſome are written there, ſecundum firmam Dei præſcientiam, according to Gods firme preſcience: others, ſecundum præſentem injuſtitiam, according to their preſent injuſtice: Theſe may be blotted out, and not the other. And this writing of them in one booke, according to their preſent juſtice; in the other, according to their preſent injuſtice, he calleth the writing, foris, without the booke: the other writing according to Gods predeſtination and preſcience, he ſaith, is intus, within the booke.

Then out of theſe poſitions, he inferreth certaine concluſions: 1. That it is poſſible for one to be written in both theſe bookes, the booke of life, and the booke of death together: in the one, according to Gods predeſtination or preſcience; in the other, according to their preſent juſtice or injuſtice. As he which is predeſtinate unto life, may according to his preſent ſtate of injuſtice be written in the booke of death, foris without, as Paul, while he was yet a persecutor: and one may be in Gods prescience written in the booke of death, and yet according to his present state of grace, he may be written in the booke of life, as Iudas, while yet he continued in Christs obedience and preached the Gospell.

2. Yet it is possible for one to be written twice in the same booke, both in regard of Gods prescience, and his owne state and condition: as Moses was thus written in the booke of life, and Iudas when he betrayed Christ in the booke of death.

3. They which are written in the booke of life according to predestination, may be blotted out thence, according to their present state and condition, as David, when he sinned: and so in the other booke likewise, as Saul, while he was yet a vertuous King, he was written in the booke of rejection in Gods prescience, but blotted out, in regard of his present justice.

4. But he that is written in the booke of life according unto predestination, cannot be written in the booke of death according to Gods prescience, and so on the other side: because one and the same cannot be foreseene of God, both to salvation, and condemnation.

5. And they which are written according to their present justice in the booke of life, cannot at the same time be written in the booke of death, according to their present injustice: because one cannot at the same time be counted righteous, and wicked before God, Tostat. qu.43.

But these exceptions may worthily be taken unto Tostatus conclusions: 1. Because he maketh a booke of death, and speaketh of putting in, and blotting out of that booke: whereas the Scripture acknowledgeth only a booke of life, not any of death: for not to be written in the booke of life, though they bee not written in any other blacke booke, is sufficient unto everlasting perdition. 2. He calleth the booke of death the booke of Gods prescience only, as though God were not a Judge also in condemning the vessels of wrath into hell, and ordaining them justly thereunto, as he is in the electing the vessels of honour to salvation. 3. It is an errour, that God writeth any in either of those bookes on the backside in respect of their present state or condition of justice or injustice: for Gods writing there is unchangeable: they are there said to be written, in regard of their present state, secundum spem ipsorum, in their owne hope, as Augustine, or secundum opinionem hominum, according to the opinion of men, that thinke them to be there written: as Thomas before alleaged.

QUEST. LXXXII. Whether Moses did well in wishing to be raced out of the booke of life, and in what sense he so prayeth.

NOw then seeing the elect, which are once written in the booke of life, can never be blotted out, and Moses was not ignorant thereof, how could he pray so directly against the will of God?

1. Some thinke that he might so pray, to be raced out, not as he was there eternally written according to Gods prescience, but in respect of his present state of grace: as Lippoman saith, that when Moses sinned at the waters of strife, delevit eum de libro secundum praesentem justitiam; God blotted him out of his booke in respect of his present justice, but afterward put him in againe, &c. But it cannot be so here: for seeing none are so blotted out, but by their sinne: for Moses to desire to be so raced out, had beene, petere peccare mortaliter, to crave to sinne mortally: and againe, God doth not thus race out any, in respect of their unrighteousnesse, but they race out themselves.

2. Some thinke that Moses thus prayed, quia turbatus erat, because he was troubled and perplexed, and did not consider at that instant, whether that were impossible, which he desired: and they thinke he thus spake, ex impetu passionis, in the heat of his passion, Ex Lyrano. And Calvin saith not much unlike: Mosen tanta vehementia fuisse abreptum, ut loquatur quasi ecstaticus; That Moses was carried away with such vehemencie, that he spake as a man beside himselfe. But Lyranus reason confuteth this answer: because, tranquillitas mentis, tranquillity of minde is required in him that commeth unto God.

3. Augustine giveth this expositon: Ego sum certus, quod non delebis me de libro vita, &c. I am sure that thou wilt not blot me out of the booke of life, and so Lord let me be as sure, that thou wilt not destroy this people, Ex Lyran. Tostat. But in that to this part of Moses request, the Lord answereth negatively, that he will not blot out him, but whosoever sinneth; Moses spake not so in that sense of his owne confidence and assurance, for then the Lord would not therein have contradicted him, but rather have given consent unto his speech, as approving his confidence; or else it would seeme to be an impertinent answer, neither of which is to be admitted.

4. Rupertus, whom Ferus followeth, thinketh that Moses speaketh affirmatively in this sense; that if so the Lord in mercie would not pardon the peoples sinne, but deale rigorously, consequitur, ut me de libro tuo deleas, it must also follow, that I be blotted out of the booke of life.

But this should have shewed Moses to be wavering and doubtfull of his owne salvation; whereof the faithfull have such confidence and assurance, that though thousands should perish, they would make no question of their owne salvation.

5. Lyranus giveth this interpretation, that Moses thus spake, Secundum dispositionem partis inferioris animae; According to the disposition of the inferiour part of his minde, that is, in his affection and desire: though it were not so, in voluntate rationem superiorem sequente, in his will following his judgement, the superiour part of his soule; as Christ in his desire wished the cup to passe from him, yet simpliciter vellet pati, simply would suffer: and so Moses here, simpliciter voluit non deleri, simply would not bee blotted out.

Ex Epistol. Athanas. ad Const. in 14. Marc.

But this example is nothing like. 1. For first divers of the ancient Writers prove out of this place the two wils of Christ, as Athanasius, Humana voluntas propter infirmitatem carnis refugiebat passionem; His humane will, by reason of the infirmity of the flesh refused to suffer: sed divina prompta erat, but his divine will will was ready,&c. So alſo Hierom: then in this ſenſe, this example fitteth not Moſes at all, who had not two ſuch wils as Chriſt had. 2. But allowing Chriſt here to pray as man, which is rather to be received: for as God he prayeth not, but is prayed unto. We may further admit that diſtinction of Peter Lombard, that there is Duplex affectus, mentis, & ſenſus; A double affection of the minde, and of the ſenſe: Chriſt in the affection of his minde and judgement, was willing to ſuffer, but ſenſualitatis affectu, in the affection of his ſenſe, he deſired the cup to paſſe: but this was a naturall deſire in Chriſt to eſcape death; now in Moſes to wiſh not temporall, but eternall death, was a ſupernaturall deſire, and therefore proceeded not from the ſenſuall part of his minde, but rather out of his moſt inward feeling and meditation.

6. Toſtatus thinketh it to be a parabolicall ſpeech, Ad ſignandum intentionem deſiderii; To ſhew the intention of his deſire: like unto that of Rachels unto Iacob, Give me children, or elſe I dye, Gen. 30. and yet Rachel would rather have choſen to live, and have no children, than to have children, and then preſently die: like as if a man ſhould ſay, Doe this thing for mee, or elſe kill me: and yet he had rather that thing ſhould be left undone, than himſelfe to be killed: and after the ſame manner doth Moſes pray here. But this were for Moſes to ſpeake one thing, and meane another. And, as Hierom well compareth them together, Moſes ſpake here with the like affection, that S. Paul prayeth to be an anathema, and accurſed for his brethren ſake; which the holy Apoſtle ſpake with his whole deſire, calling Chriſt to witneſſe that he lied not. As S. Paul is not to be taken there to ſpeake parabolically, or figuratively, but even from his heart, ſo doth Moſes here.

7. Borrhaius ſaith, that Moſes thus prayeth with a condition, Si non vis, if thou wilt not pardon Iſrael, then race me out, Iam vero Moſes non velle Deum Iſraelem in totum perdere, fide agnovit; Now Moſes was ſure by faith, that God would not wholly deſtroy Iſrael.

But Borrhaius maketh that the concluſion here: God will not deſtroy Iſrael, therefore I cannot bee blotted out, &c. which Moſes uſeth as an argument to perſwade the other, Race mee out, if thou wilt not, &c. And beſide, Moſes here prayeth not, that the Lord would not wholly deſtroy the people, for that God had granted him before, verſ. 14. but that the Lord would forgive them their ſinne, and be fully reconciled.

8. Iunius underſtanderh this deſire of Moſes, alſo to be conditionall, but in another ſenſe, as this condition he would have ſupplied, Si Deo placebit, ſi videbitur; If it ſhall pleaſe God, if it ſhall ſeeme good unto him: which condition the Apoſtle would have generally underſtood, Iam. 4. So alſo Marbachius would have the like condition expreſſed, Si poſſibile ſit, If it be poſſible, as our Saviour putteth in that condition, If it be poſſible.

But theſe inſtances are not alike in temporall things, becauſe Gods will is not revealed unto us, we muſt limit our deſires with a ſubordination of our wils unto Gods will: as our bleſſed Saviour there prayeth out of the naturall will and deſire of man, not looking unto Gods ſecret counſell. But in ſpirituall things, where Gods will is evidently knowne, as Moſes knew, that it was impoſſible for Gods decree in the election of his Saints to bee changed: it had beene an idle and ſuperfluous condition, inwardly to have ſo conceived, or outwardly to have profeſſed, if it were poſſible: himſelfe knowing the contrary, that it was impoſſible.

9. And to ſay, that Moſes preferred the ſafety of the people before his owne ſoule: as Calvin ſeemeth to affirme, Nihil aliud venit in mentem, quam ut ſalvus ſit populus; Nothing elſe came into his minde, than that the people ſhould be ſafe; may be thought to be againſt the rule of charity: for though another mans ſoule ought to be dearer unto mee, than mine owne bodily life, yet my ſoule ought to be dearer unto me, than all mens ſoules in the world. And Toſtatus further addeth, that if all the ſoules of the Saints, yea of the Virgin Marie ſhould periſh, unleſſe my ſoule periſh, Citius deberem eligere omnes illas perire, quam animam meam; I ought rather to wiſh all their ſoules to periſh, than mine owne.

10. Wherefore this only remaineth to be the meaning and ſenſe of Moſes fervent deſire here, that, becauſe the ſalvation of Iſrael was joyned with Gods glory, both in reſpect of the promiſes made to Fathers, which it was not for Gods honour to fruſtrate; and to prevent the blaſphemies, which the Egyptians and other, would be ready upon the ruine, and deſtruction of the Lords people, to caſt out againſt him: Moſes therefore, Non tantum populi ſalutem, ſed ante omnia gloriam Dei ſpectavit; Did not only looke unto the ſalvation of the people, but unto the glory of God, ſo that in reſpect thereof is careleſſe of his owne ſalvation, Simler. Pretioſa eſt nobis animarum ſalus, ſed multo pretioſior nobis eſſe debet gloria Dei; The ſalvation of our ſoules is precious unto us, but Gods glory ought to be more precious unto us, Gallaſ. So Moſes in this place, prayeth not as a man beſide himſelfe, not conſidering what he ſaid: as neither was Paul forgetfull of himſelfe, when he wiſhed to be accurſed, ſo Iſrael might be ſaved; for Paul ſo writeth, Poſt longam meditationem; After long meditation and adviſement.

QUEST. LXXXIII. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I will put out of my booke, &c.

Verſ. 33. WHoſoever hath ſinned againſt me, him will I put out of my booke, &c. 1. Some doe gather hence, Inconſideratè precatum Moſem; That Moſes prayed inconſiderately: quia caſtigat Deus præpoſterum ejus votum, becauſe God correcteth his prepoſterous deſire, Calvin. But Ferus collecteth better, as if the Lord ſhould ſay thus; Delector quidem tanto charitatis tuæ ardore, &c. I am delighted with ſuch great heat of charity, but juſtice muſt be kept, which condemneth not the innocent, &c. 1. Hugo de S. Victor. underſtandeth the Lord here to ſpeake of blotting out, not ſecundùm præſcientiam Dei, according to Gods preſcience, but ſecundum præſentem ſtatum, in reſpect of their preſent ſtate. So alſo Toſtat. quæſt. 44. But the Lord anſwereth to Moſes petition in his ſenſe, which was to be raced out of his booke, (rather than the people ſhould periſh) not in reſpect of his preſent ſtate, for that had beene to desire to sinne, and by sinne to be raced out but eternally: therefore in that sense the Lord also maketh answer.

to

3. Some hold indeed, that God may race out the very elect upon their sinne, Marbach. But that were to make God mutable, and changeable. See this assertion confuted before, quæst. 80.

4. Iunius maketh it a conditionall speech: si aliqui delendi essent, if any were to be blotted out, then they which sinne shall be so raced out: But the Lord speaking here of notorious sinners, pronounceth certainly what shall be their end: they shall have no part in God.

5. Some interpret it only of the manifestation of the rejection of the wicked: Deum tandem patefacturum reprobos, &c. That God will at the length make manifest the reprobate, which for a while seemed to be counted in the number of the elect, Calvin. But the Lord answering to Moses petition, keepeth the same sense: now Moses, by racing out, meaneth not any such manifestation, for he was no reprobate, but indeed an actuall blotting or putting out: therefore that must be also the Lords meaning here.

6. Borrhaius giveth this sense, of these words, Whosoever hath sinned, &c. that it must not be understood of every sinne, but of such as sinne, and are not restored by repentance. So also Ferus: Qui peccaverit mihi, He that sinneth against me: quò iungitur finalis impœnitentia; by the which is signified finall impenitencie. This exposition is sound: but yet it taketh not away the doubt and scruple which lieth in the other words, him will I put out, &c. and not in these.

7. Wherefore I rest in Gallasius interpretation: Delere hic dici impropriè, atque accipi pro rejici, reprobari; That to blot out is spoken improperly, and it is spoken to be rejected, and become a reprobate: the Lord will blot them out, that is, they shall not be numbred among the elect. And this exposition is warranted by that place, Psal. 69. 28. Let them be put out of the booke of life, neither let them be written with the righteous: to be put out then of the booke of life, is as not at all to be written there.

QUEST. LXXXIV. What day of visitation the Lord meaneth here.

Vers. 34. IN the day of visitation, &c. 1. Some of the Hebrewes say, Primum diem anni, That the first day of every yeere, is this day of visitation. But God did not use to plague them upon every such day. 2. Some understand it of the captivity of Babylon, but beside, that other causes are shewed by the Prophets of that captivity, so the sinnes of the ages then present: God would not visit the sinnes of the fathers upon so many generations; he saith he will visit the iniquities of the fathers, but to the third and fourth generation. 3. The Interlinearie Glosse referreth it to the Romane captivity. But our Saviour in the Gospell sheweth there was another cause thereof, for that they did not know the time of their visitation, Luk. 19. 44. Christs bloud, which the Jewes wished to be upon them and their seed, calleth for vengeance against them. 4. Lyranus taketh this day of visitation, for the day of finall judgement. So also Osiander. But that judgement shall be generall: the Lord here speaketh of a particular day of visitation for the Israelites onely. 5. Some thinke that God sent a speciall plague not long after, for this idolatry, which is mentioned in the last verse of this chapter, Tostat. quæst. 46. So also Iunius Analys. But we reade not of any such plague mentioned in the Scripture, and therefore, it being a conjecture without ground, is with more reason rejected, than received.

6. Rab. Salomon thinketh, that every day, wherein the Hebrewes were punished, was this day of visitation: and R. Moses Gerundens. saith, that there is no revenge to this day in Israel: Wherein there is not an ounce of the iniquity of the calfe, Ex Oleaster. But the Lord meaneth some speciall day of visitation here, Tostat. quæst. 46. And this is the Jewes blindnesse, to thinke still that they are punished for their fathers sinnes, because they see not their owne.

7. Simlerus and Borrhaius, Pelargus, doe thinke this day of visitation, to be understood of all those plagues and calamities, which they suffered in the desart; where all their carcasses fell, which were above twenty yeere old, when they went out of Egypt, onely Caleb and Ioshua excepted. And though this befell them for their murmuring, as is declared, Numb. 14. yet other former sinnes might concurre withall.

8. But it is not necessary to set downe any certaine time of punishment, which should be this day of visitation, Cum varie tum in patres tum in filios, Deus animadvertit, Seeing God did divers wayes punish both the fathers, and the children, Gall. And it is no new thing with God, Plura simul peccata uno vindictæ genere vocare in judicium, In one kinde of punishment to judge many sinnes, Calvin. Therefore, seeing God often times deferreth the punishment of the fathers, to the third and fourth generation: the Lord afterward when he saw his time, and other sinnes gave occasion, did also remember this.

9. But together this must be understood, that God would in the meane time expect their repentance: and if they did not repent, then when time served, he would remember them accordingly, Marbach. Yet the Lord doth also here in a manner foretell, that the people would give novas subindies occasiones, new occasions still of punishment, such was their hardnesse of heart, Calvin.

QUEST. LXXXV. When the Lord plagued the people for the calfe.

Vers. 35. SO the Lord plagued the people. 1. R. Salomon thinketh, that this was some plague sent into the host by the Lord at this time, beside the slaughter of three thousand by the Levites. So also Tostatus. But there being here no expresse mention made thereof, this opinion wanteth a foundation to be built upon.

2. Lyranus addeth further, that thus the Latine text may be helped, which readeth 23. thousand, for three thousand: these 20. thousand might be those which died of the plague. But Tostatus taketh away this answer; for still, if the originall only make mention of three thousand, and the Latine of 23. thousand, it must needs be in errour departing from the Hebrew fountaine, quæst. 46. Yet Tostatus falleth into into a worse inconvenience, in justifying here the Latine text before the Hebrew, as is shewed before, quæst. 72.

3. Therefore these words, And the Lord plagued the people, have relation to the slaughter of three thousand, made by the Levites, vers. 28. and it is said the Lord plagued them, that they might know, that this punishment, Non à Mosis arbitrio, sed judicio Dei profectum est, Proceeded not from Moses minde, but from the judgement of God, Gallasius. So also Simler. Calvin. Oleast. Osiand. Marbach. Pelarg.

4. Iunius thinketh that this plague was alio tempore, at another time, when the Lord punished them for other sinnes. But the former exposition is to be preferred, because wee reade not of any such plague inflicted for this sinne. So Hugo de S. Victor. interpreteth: so God plagued the people, scilicet supradictis interfectionibus, &c. that is, by the former slaughter which the Levites made: whence it appeareth, Hoc instinctu Dei factum, non malevolentia Mosis, That this was done by instinct of God, not through the malice of Moses.

QUEST. LXXXVI. Of the difference betweene the act of sinne, the fault, staine, and guilt.

Vers. 35. BEcause they made or procured the calfe which Aaron made. The Latine Translater readeth, the Lord plagued them, pro reatu vituli, for the guilt of the calfe, that is, the sinne committed about the calfe. Tostatus hereupon taketh occasion to shew the difference betweene peccatum, & reatus, the sinne and the guilt thereof, which Hierom thus translating seemeth to confound; and because some use may be made of his tractate here, I will compendiously, and summarily abridge it.

In every sinfull act then there are five things to be considered, Actus peccati, culpa, macula, reatus, pœna; The very act of the sinne, the fault, the blot, the guilt, the punishment.

1. The act of sinne, as it is an act, is not alwayes evill: for idem est actus in peccato, & in honesto, there is the same act in substance in sinne, and in that which is honest: as in adultery there is the like externall act, as in lawfull matrimony; the fault, which is in respect of the circumstances, which are not observed, maketh the difference.

2. The second thing to bee considered, is culpa, the faultinesse of the action, which is committed by the not due observing of circumstances, which are these: 1. Quid, what it is, that he doth, whether it bee lawfull or unlawfull, honest or dishonest. 2. Quantum, the quantitie must bee considered, as one may steale much or little, and raile sparingly, or with a full mouth. 3. Quoties, how often, for hee that committeth the same sinne often, is more blameable, than he which doth it but seldome. 4. Qualiter, in what manner, whether willingly or unwillingly, whether hee be quicke or slow in doing it. 5. Cum quo, with what instrument: as he that smiteth with a stone, is not equall to him that striketh with a sword. 6. Ad quem, with whom the sinne is committed, as fornication betweene them that are married, is more heinous, than betweene single parties. 7. Ubi, where, in what place: as to steale any thing out of the Church is worse, than out of an house. 8. Quando, when, for it is more to sinne upon the Lords holy day, than upon another. 9. Ad quid, to what end: for the end maketh a thing of it selfe lawfull, unlawfull: to make an action good, all these things must concurre: but it is enough to make it evill, if it faile in any of them: Now this faultinesse of the action passeth with the action it selfe, which is the subject thereof, and remaineth not.

3. But there is left behind macula, a certaine staine, or blot in the soule, whereby the image of God is deformed.

4. And beside this staine, there is a guiltinesse of punishment.

5. And then the last thing is the punishment it selfe in this world, or the next.

QUEST. LXXXVII. How God may justly punish twice for one sinne.

BUt seeing it is here said, that God plagued the people, how can it stand with Gods justice to punish them againe for the same sinne, as he threatneth he will visit their sinne in the day of visitation. The like doubt may be moved, how God in justice inflicteth eternall punishment after temporall: as the disobedient in Noahs floud then perished with water, and now their spirits are in prison of hell. So Sodom and Gomorrha were burnt with fire, and now suffer beside the vengeance of eternall fire, whereas the Lord saith by his Prophet, Non consurget duplex tribulatio; Tribulation shall not rise up the second time: but to this divers answers are made. 1 Pet. 3. 19. Epist. Ind. v. 7. Nahum 1. 9.

This rule being admitted, that God punisheth not twice for one fault, though it is not well concluded out of that place of the Prophet, for there the meaning is, that God will make a finall destruction at the first, he shall not need to afflict them againe: as Abishai said to David in that sense, Let mee smite with a spare to the ground, and I will not smite him againe. But this principle being granted, thus it may further be answered. 1 Sam. 26. 8.

1. That the same sinne is not twice to be punished, if the punishment be equivalent to the sinne: otherwise we see divers punishments may be inflicted justly even among men, according to the quality of the offence, as traitors are hanged drawne and quartered. So because no temporall punishment is equall to the sinne committed, the everlasting is justly also added.

2. If the wicked were but guilty of one sinne, one punishment might satisfie, but seeing they commit many, it is not unjust for them to taste of divers punishments.

3. Everlasting punishment is to be considered two wayes, Extensive, in respect of the continuance of it, and intensive, in the increasing and inlarging of it, though the wicked are temporally punished here, yet God may afterward use some mitigation of punishment in hell, for that which they indured here. And this solution Tostatus insisteth upon, as the best, quæst. 47.

But none of these answers doe fully satisfie: not the first, for everlasting punishment is equivalent to the greatest sinne, though no temporall judgement should goe before: nor the second, for though they are guiltie of many sinnes, yet when God punisheth them for all together, it is counted but as one punishment, and therefore should not be iterated according to that rule: nor the third, for though everlasting punishment should be mitigated, yet it is a second, and iterated punishment.

the

4. Wherefore the best solution is this, that temporall judgement is not properly a punishment: but it is tanquam aliquid hortativum, as meanes to perswade them to repentance. And if they be intractable, and will not repent: yet is their example profitable for the admonition of others, as S. Peter saith, That Sodom and Gomorrah were made an example to them, that afterward should live ungodly. And unto the obstinate themselves, their finall destruction is not so much here a temporall punishment, as principium pœnæ æternæ, a beginning of their everlasting punishment.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The Iewes found to be Idolaters as well as the Gentiles.

Vers. 1. VP, make us gods. Rupertus and Ferus following him, note hereupon, that the Jewes sinned as well as the Gentiles: lest they might have insulted over them as the onely Idolaters: Vt tam Iudæis, quam Gracis os omne obstruatur; That as well the Jewes mouth as the Grecians might bee stopped: as the Apostle saith, Rom. 11. 32. God hath shut up all in unbeleefe, that hee might have mercie upon all.

2. Doct. God seeth all things both good and evill.

Vers. 7. The people have corrupted their wayes. The Lord did behold the vanity of the Israelites, how they had made them a golden Calfe, and sacrificed unto it, and danced about it: according to that saying of the Wise-man, Prov. 15. 3. The eyes of the Lord in every place behold the evill and the good: and Iob 11. 11. He knoweth vaine men and seeth iniquity, and him that understandeth nothing.

3. Doct. All anger not unlawfull.

Sermon. de ira. Vers. 19. SO Moses wrath waxed hot. Basil upon this example of Moses, who afterward commanded the Levites to put their brethren to the sword, which was not done without an holy anger, inferreth, that ira quando oportet, & ut oportet ex ratione dispensata, &c. anger shewed when and as it ought, and governed by reason, est actionum bonarum ministra, is the instrument of good actions: as hee sheweth further by the example of Phinches against the adulterer and adulteresse, and of Helias against Baals Priests. And hereby Calvin confuteth that paradox of the Stoikes: Omnes animi motus esse vitiosos; That all the motions of the minde are vitious: for this anger of Moses being in zeale towards Gods glorie, and so proceeding from the instinct of Gods Spirit, was a commendable vertue.

4. Doct. All monuments of idolatrie must be removed.

Vers. 20. AFter he tooke the Calfe. Moses here taketh away the occasion of idolatrie, & ita tollit, ut nihil inde reliquatur, and so he taketh it away, that nothing remaineth thereof: So likewise did Ezekiah, that brake downe the brasen Serpent, and Iosias, that demolished all the monuments of idolatrie, Ferus.

5. Doct. Peace not to be had with the wicked.

Gregor. in Pastor. p. 3. cap. 23. Vers. 27. SLay every one his brother, &c. Gregorie hereupon well observeth, that although peace be much to be desired, yet men must take heed, ne consentiendo perversis, ab authoris sui se pace disjungat, lest by consenting unto the wicked, they doe disjoyne themselves from the peace of their Creator, &c. as here the Levites would have no peace with the Idolaters, but put them to the sword. So the Prophet David saith, Psal. 139. 21. Did I not hate them O Lord, that hate thee, &c. yea I hate them with a perfect hatred.

6. Doct. To punish, and doe execution upon wicked offenders, no disgrace.

Vers. 29. COnsecrate your hands unto the Lord. They had shed the bloud of their brethren, which had committed idolatry, yet therein did an acceptable service unto God: for they were armed thereunto by the lawfull authority of the Magistrate. Atque hic unus casus est, quo licet privato uti gladio. And this is the only case wherein it is lawfull for a private man to use the sword, when it is given him by the lawfull Magistrate, Ferus. Therefore, Si iudex vel tortor es malorum, ne iudices te prophanum; If thou art a Judge or tormentor of the wicked, doe not thinke thy selfe thereby prophaned: for it is as acceptable unto God to punish the offenders, as to extoll the righteous, Oleaster. Gedeon commanded his eldest sonne Iether to fall upon the Kings of Midian, and afterward at their request, he did execution with his owne hands, Iudg. 8. So Phinchas ran thorow with his sword the adulterer and adulteresse: Samuel with his owne hands hewed Agag the King of the Amalekites in peeces. It was not then a shamefull or opprobrious thing to be an executioner, as now adayes it is: whereof these two reasons may be given; because such commonly as are used in that service, are lewd persons themselves, and so odious: and men that are evill bent, would not have any punishment inflicted upon sinne, and therefore they hate the very minister of justice. But seeing that God useth as well good Angels as evill in the execution of his judgments; and the place and calling of a Judge is honourable, that giveth sentence upon the wicked, and seeing it is as pleasing to God to punish a wicked person, as to set free the righteous, it cannot be an odious thing in it selfe to be a minister of justice, Simler.

7. Doct. The number of the elect certaine with God.

Vers. 32. TAke me out of the booke. God then hath as it were a booke written, wherein all the names of the elect are contained: whence it may be concluded and inferred, that the number of the elect elect is certaine with God, and none of them can possibly perish, Piscator: as the Apostle saith; The foundation of God is sure, and hath this seale, the Lord knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Controv. That it is not lawfull to make images to represent God by.

Vers. 5. TO morrow shall be the holy day of Iehovah. It is evident then, that neither Aaron, nor yet Israel did thinke this Idoll to be their God; but they thought this tended to Gods honour: and they used this only as a visible representation of God: the Romanists therefore use but a slender shift, when they alleage, that they are unlike the former Idolaters, Quod statuas & simulachra neq. vocent, neq. existiment deos; Because they doe neither call, nor thinke their images to be gods: for no more did the Gentiles thinke, that the very idols which they worshipped, were their gods: they called them all by a figurative speech, because they were made to represent their gods: likewise, those are but vaine pretences, which are commonly used by the popish Idolaters: Nolumus à Deo recedere, ipsum quærimus, &c. his adjumentis imbecillitas nostra sublevatur, &c. Wee purpose not to depart from Gods service, wee seeke and serve him, but by these meanes our infirmity is helped, &c. for all this here the Israelites pretended, Gallas. See more hereof, quæst. 18. before, and Synops. centur. 2. error. 44.

2. Controv. The Papists proved to be Idolaters like unto the Israelites.

Vers. 6. AND offered burnt offerings, &c. Though the idolatrous Israelites intended here the service of God, yet in as much as they set up an Altar before the golden calfe, danced before it, and praised it, they were very formall Idolaters, and idoll Worshippers. The Romanists therefore are not here wrongfully charged to worship idols, seeing they set them up in their Church before Altars, decke them with flowers, adorne them with apparell, and jewels, burne candles before them, and incense, kneele unto them, and knocke their breasts: yea they set their similitude of beasts before their images, as a dog they dedicate to Rachus, an hog to Antonie, a Dragon to S. George, an Hart to Hubert, Gallas.

3. Controv. Against the Iewes that boast they came not of Idolaters.

THe Jewes likewise are here refuted, who make their boast, Quod ex iis, qui idololatriæ dediti fuerunt, non descenderunt; That they are not descended of them, which were given to idolatry: whom Cyril thus confuteth: Patres eorum in deserto vitulum conflatilem adoraverunt; Their fathers in the desert worshipped the golden Calfe, and in the time of the Judges they went after strange gods, and under the Kings, Judea as well as Israel played the harlot, Ierem. 3. 8. and committed spirituall fornication. Cyril. lib. 6. super Ierem. c. 5.

4. Controv. That the Pope may erre.

Vers. 5. WHen Aaron saw that, he made an Altar before it. By this that Aaron was seduced, and not only made a calfe for the idolatrous people, but erected an Altar, and proclaimed an holy day: we see that even holy men of excellent gifts, and high calling, erroribus & peccatis gravissimis obnoxios, are subject to errours, and grievous sinnes, Piscator. Which sheweth the shamelesse pride of them, which being neither in calling nor gifts like Aaron, yet say they cannot erre, B. Babing. The Pope is farre inferiour to Aaron, who erred; at the least he would not challenge to be superiour to Peter, who erred in denying his master, and after was received, when he was reproved openly by S. Paul, Galath. 2. See more of this, Synops. Pap. Centur. 1. error. 47.

5. Controv. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 13. REmember Abraham and Isaack, &c. The Romanists doe urge this place to prove the invocation of Saints: who (they say) being in heaven doe pray for us here in earth. But herein they contradict themselves, holding that the Fathers under the old Testament, were in that dungeon of darknesse, which they call Limbus Patrum, and so were ignorant of such things, as were done in the world: but it is evident in this place, that Moses doth not make these Fathers Mediators or intercessors for Israel; but only presseth and urgeth the covenant which the Lord confirmed by oath unto them.

6. Controv. Against merits.

LYranus further upon this place noteth, Allegat merita Patrum, Moses alleageth the merit of the Fathers. But Moses insisteth only upon the promise, which the Lord made to Abraham, which was founded upon the Messiah: therefore, Non propter patrum merita, sed respectu promissi Messiæ petit, he maketh request, not for the merits, or worthinesse of the Fathers, but in respect of the Messias who was promised, Simler. For neither was Abraham himselfe justified by his workes or merits, but by faith, as Saint Paul sheweth, Rom. 4. 3.

7. Controv. Against the Lutherans that tolerate images in their Churches.

Vers. 20. AND he tooke the calfe. Moses did not only restraine the people from worshipping this abominable idoll, but he defaceth it, and taketh it out of the way; which practice and example of Moses sheweth their errour, who although they condemne the adoration of images, yet thinke they may be tolerated in their Churches. But Moses could not indure the sight of this Idoll. So the Apostle saith, Babes keepe your selves from Idols, Ioh. 5. 21. They must not only beware of worshipping them, but take heed of the offence that may come by the sight of them, Gallas.

8. Controv. Against the Popes insolencie that indureth not to be reproved.

Vers. 21. AND Moses said unto Aaron, &c. Though Aaron were appointed of God to be the high Priest, yea he was Moses elder brother: yet Moses doth not forbeare him, but doth openly reprove him: therefore the insolency of the Bishop of Rome is intolerable, who holdeth scorne to bee reproved: unto whom his clawbackes ascribe so much, Vt si mille animas duceat ad orcum nemo ei dicat, dicat, cur facis sic, &c. That although he should lead a thousand soules to hell, none should say unto him, why dost thou so? Simler. Paul rebuked Peter openly, who by silence confessed his errour, and suffered himselfe to be reprehended.

9. Controv. Against satisfaction before God by temporall punishment.

Vers.28. SO the children of Levi did as Moses commanded, &c. The Lord was well pleased with this punishment, which was inflicted by the Levites upon the idolaters: yet we must not thinke, that Gods wrath was hereby satisfied: for God was appeased before by Moses prayer, *vers.*14. neither was it likely that the punishment of a few could satisfie for the sinne of the whole host; that the death of three thousand could make amends for the sinne of six hundred thousand. Simler. But, ad exemplum profuit, this punishment was profitable for the example of others: and by this meanes, castra purgata fuerunt, the campe was purged of the ringleaders of this sinne, Calvin.

10. Controv. Of the corrupt reading of the vulgar Latine text, setting downe 23. thousand, for three thousand.

ABout three thousand: The Latine Translater therefore here readeth corruptly, 23. thousand, as is before shewed at large, *quest.*72.

11. Controv. All shedding of blood maketh not one irregular, and unmeet for the Ministery.

Vers.29. COnsecrate your hands. The Romanists observation therefore of irregularity is superstitious, that allow none to be admitted to Orders, which have beene shedders of bloud: Lippoman one of their owne Writers, giveth here a good note, Non est ergo omnis effusio sanguinis irregularitatis nota; All shedding of bloud is not then to be held a note of irregularity; seeing the Levites thereby were consecrated, &c. Indeed manslayers, and bloudy men are not easily to bee admitted to the Ecclesiasticall Ministery: but one which hath served in the warres, or had borne the office of a Judge, being otherwise meet for his gifts, is not for any such respect to bee debarred: As Ambrose in the better times of the Church, of a Judge was made a Bishop.

12. Controv. Against the Romanists that thinke no man can be certaine of his salvation, but by revelation.

Vers.32. RAce me out of thy booke. Procopius here well collecteth, Ecce Mosi per omnia exploratum fuit, &c. Behold, Moses did certainly know, that his name was contained in the booke of life. But Tostatus thinketh, that this was extraordinary: and that now, Aut rarissimi homines aut quasi nullus certus est; That few, or in a manner none are sure of their salvation. Moses he thinketh had this by revelation, and by his familiar conference with God: and so S. Paul, when he was taken up into the third heaven, *Tostat. quæst.*42.

Contra. 1. Moses was assured of his election, even as other faithfull are: God answereth him, that hee which sinneth, that is, without repentance and recovery, shall be raced out: therefore he that sinneth not so, but repenteth of his sinne, is sure he is there written: as the Apostle saith, Hee that is borne of God, sinneth not: sinne doth not reigne in him: and so againe it may be turned, he that sinneth not, is borne of God. And S. Peter saith, Brethren give diligence to make your election and calling sure, for if yee doe these things, ye shall never fall, 2 *Pet.*2. 10. By good workes then, as lively testimonies of our faith, our election may be made sure. 2. The ground also of S. Pauls confidence and assurance, was not so much any speciall revelation, as the common operation of faith in Christ: he was perswaded nothing should separate him from the love of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord, Rom. 8. 39. Faith therefore in Christ, Pauls Lord and ours, assureth us of Gods inseparable love. See more Synops. Centur. 4. *err.*25.

1 Iohn 3. 9.

13. Controv. That God doth not only foresee, but upon his foresight also decree the condemnation of the reprobate.

Vers.33. HIm that sinneth, will I put out of my booke. Tostatus further here hath this observation: that the reprobate are not predestinate of God, as the elect are, but præscitis tantum, onely foreseene: Solum cognoscit Deus quod iste vel ille homo erit infœlix, non quod de eo aliquid statuerit, &c. He only knoweth, that this or that man shall be damned, and be unhappy, not that God decreeth any thing of such, *quest.*41.

Contra. 1. This opinion is contrary to the Scripture: Iudas is called the child of perdition, *Ioh.*17.12. Saint Paul calleth the reprobate vessels of wrath, prepared to destruction, Rom. 9. 22. and Saint Iude, They were of old ordained to this condemnation, vers. 4. These places doe evidently shew, that the reprobate are ordained, prepared, and appointed unto condemnation. 2. Otherwise, if it were not so, that God decreeth the end and condemnation of the wicked, hee should be deprived of the one part of the office of the supreme Judge, which is as well to decree punishment to the wicked, as rewards to the righteous. 3. Indeed a difference there is betweene the decree and foreknowledge of the one, and of the other, but not that which Tostatus imagineth. As first, God ordained both for the elect, the end, which is salvation, and the way for them to walke in: but God foreseeth only the evill wayes of the wicked, but their end he both foreseeth, and decreeth: secondly, the decree of election is only of grace, without the foresight of the faith, or good workes of the Saints: but the decree of actuall condemnation in the wicked, is upon the foresight of their sinne, and misbeleefe, as is elsewhere shewed more at large. See more hereof, Synops. pag. 822.

14. Controv. The punishment of sinne remaineth not after forgiveneſse of sinne.

Vers.34. YEt in the day of visitation, I will visit them. Ferus hereupon observeth, that God many times, dimissa culpa pœnam sibi reservat, &c. doth reserve the punishment, the fault being pardoned. As Adam and Eve had their sinnes forgiven upon the promise of the Messiah, yet they both received receive d punishment: so Numb. 14. 20. God at Moses request forgave the sinne of the murmurers, yet all their carkasses fell in the wildernesse.

Contra. 1. That which God forgiveth, he perfectly pardoneth: Ierem. 31.34. I will forgive their sinnes, and remember their iniquities no more: Ezech. 18. 22. His transgressions shall be mentioned no more unto them. But if the punishment should bee reserved still, then after remission, their sinnes should bee remembred. 2. Wherefore their chastisements which follow after the confession of sinne, as in the examples given in instance, were rather corrections for their owne emendation, or the example of others, than punishments for sinne: as Tostatus reasoneth, that if sinne be directly punished, nunquam daretur ei temporalis pœna, sed æterna, it should never have temporall, but eternall punishment: it is therefore, non pœna peccati, sed admonitio quædam, not the punishment of sinne, but a certaine admonition, Tostat. qu. 47. See Synops. pag. 653.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. The absence of the Pastor verie dangerous.

Vers. 1. OF this Moses, we know not what is become. Vides hoc loco absentia rectoris, grandem fieri jactu-ram populi; Wee see by this place, that the people are in great hazard by the long absence of the governour, Lippom. Let idle Pastors, and secure Non-residents remember this, how that the wolfe will spoile the flocke, when the Pastor is gone: therefore Saint Paul exhorteth the Elders of Ephesus to take heed of themselves and the flocke, because he knew, that after his departure grievous wolves would enter, not sparing the flocke, Act. 20. 29.

2. Observ. Men are then unthankfull, when their good is intended and procured.

FUrther, herein is noted their great ingratitude, that while Moses was occupied in receiving lawes for them for their good, they go about to make an idoll: so as Chrysostom noteth, The Jewes the sime night sought to take Christ, when he instituted his last Supper for their comfort. The people here renounce Moses, even when he was most carefull for their good, Oleaster.

3. Observ. Excesse in eating and drinking, maketh men forget God.

Vers. 6. THey sate them downe to eat and drinke, and rose up to play. Which sheweth that gluttonie and drunkennesse is the mother of play and wantonnesse: as Gregorie noteth, Cum corpus in re-fectionis delectatione resolvitur, cor ad inane gaudium relaxatur: While the bodie is too much delighted in outward refection, the heart is let loose to vaine rejoycing, Pelarg. So the Apostle saith, Be not drunke with wine, wherein is excesse, but be filled with the Spirit; the filling with wine maketh us emptie of Gods Spirit. 1. Moral. cap. 3.

4. Observ. Against prodigall expenses, in superstition and vanitie.

Vers. 3. THey plucked from them their golden earings. Here appeareth the right guise of superstitious men, that are very sparing in setting forth the true service of God, but are most lavish in decking their idols, as many adulterers doe suffer their wives and children to want, being most prodigall in maintaining their harlots, Simler. They also are here noted, which upon their vanities can bestow whatsoever, as in playing at dice and cards, and such like, but are verie sparing in workes of charitie, as giving to the poore, Oleaster.

5. Observ. The force of the Saints praiers.

Vers. 10. LEt me alone. Wee see what force is in the prayers of the Saints, whereby the Lords hands are as it were tied and bound from smiting: Dei potentiam servi preces impediebant: The servants prayers hindred the Lords power, Hierom. Ligatum habent sancti Dominum, ut non puniat, nisi per-miserint ipsi; The Saints have the Lord bound, that he cannot punish, unlesse they will; Bernard. So the Apostle saith, The prayer of the righteous availeth much, if it be fervent, Iam. 5. 16. Serm. 30. super Cantic.

6. Observ. Not to be rash in anger.

Oleaster further doth thus collect here, that as God without Moses consent, would not exeicise his fierce wrath upon the people, so men in their anger should consult with their friends, not as Rehoboam, who refused the aduice of his prudent counsellers.

7. Observ. Of the commendation of fasting.

Vers. 19. HE brake them in peeces, &c. Ambrose hereupon thus noteth, Tabulas legis, quas accepit abstinentia, conteri fecit ebrietas; The tables of the law, which abstinence and fasting received, drunkennesse caused to bee broken: that is, as soone as Moses saw the riot and excesse of the people, through anger he brake them: Sterilitatem matris Sampson, vini abstinentia fœcundavit: Annam non man-ducantem exaudivit Deus; Abstinence from wine made Sampsons mother fruitfull: and God heard Anna, abstaining from meat, &c. And our blessed Saviour saith, This kind goeth not out, but by prayer and fasting. Matth. 17. 21.

8. Observ. No respect of persons to be had in regard of Gods glorie.

Vers. 21. AND Moses said to Aaron. Calvine here giveth this good note, that Moses, the question being of Gods worship, non minus fratri suo germano parcere, &c. doth no more spare his owne brother, then if he had been a very stranger: there must bee no respect had of friendship, kinred, acquain-tance, when Gods glorie commeth in question: as the Levites afterwards sheathed their swords even in their owne sonnes and brethren. So the Apostle saith, Have not the faith of our glorious Lord Iesus in respect of persons, Iam. 2. 1.

9. Obſerv. Not to put off the fault to another, whereof our ſelves are guiltie.

Verſ. 22. Thou knoweſt this people. Aaron putteth off the fault from himſelfe, and laieth it upon the people: Hic eſt pernitioſus iam inde ab Adam in nobis inveteratus mos, &c. This pernicious error even from Adam is growne into a cuſtome, to transferre the fault upon another, Lippoman. for ſo did Adam turne it to Eve.

10. Obſerv. Mercie and juſtice to be tempred together.

Verſ. 27. Lay every man his brother. Videmus in Moſe duo contraria, &c. We ſee two contrarie things in Moſes, mercie and judgement: mercie in his praying for the people, and juſtice in commanding the idolaters to be ſlaine, Ferus: which two being joyned together in Governours Civill and Eccleſiaſticall, doe make a pleaſant and ſweet harmonie: as the Prophet David ſaith, Pſal. 101. I will ſing mercie and judgement, unto thee O Lord I will ſing.

11. Obſerv. We muſt go on in our calling, though we ſee others puniſhed before us.

Verſ. 34. Goe now therefore, bring the people, &c. Though the Lord did reſpite the peoples further puniſhment; yet he would not have Moſes be negligent in that charge which was committed unto him: Etſi vult populum punire, tamen nobis pergendum eſt in noſtro munere: Although God intend to puniſh his people, we muſt goe on in our dutie, Simler. So when the plague was begun in the hoſt, Moſes bid Aaron take his cenſer, and ſo hee cenſed betweene the dead and the living, and the plague ſtaied, Numb. 16.

Chap. XXXIII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter is ſet forth the reconciliation of God with his people, wherein firſt the preparation to this reconciliation goeth before, to verſ. 12. then the manner of the reconciliation followeth to the end of the Chapter.

1. In the preparation: 1. There is ſhewed on Gods behalfe, how firſt he telleth Moſes, that although he would bring them into the land of Canaan, yet hee will not goe with them himſelfe, verſ. 1,2,3. and the effect that followed, the ſorrow of the people, verſ. 4. Secondly, the Lord chargeth them to lay aſide their good raiment, verſ. 5. and the people obeyed, verſ. 6.

2. On Moſes behalfe: he to ſhew that the Lord was departed from them, the more to humble them, pitched his tent without the hoſt, verſ. 7.

3. On the peoples part is deſcribed their humilitie in looking toward Moſes, and worſhipping toward the Tabernacle: with the cauſe that moved them, Gods preſence there in the cloud, and his talking with Moſes, to verſ. 12.

2. The manner of the reconciliation followeth: 1. The reconciliation it ſelfe is ſet down: 1. With Moſes reaſons, taken from Gods favour toward him, verſ. 12. from his covenant with the people verſ. 13. from the contrarie inconvenience, verſ. 14. from the effects, the glorie of God among the people, verſ. 15. 2. And Gods gracious condeſcending, verſ. 15,17. 2. The ſigne of this reconciliation where we have Moſes requeſt to ſee Gods glorie, verſ. 18. And the Lords anſwer partly granting his petition, verſ. 19. partly denying it, but with ſome limitation, verſ. 20. to the end.

2. The divers readings.

I. Verſ. 6. Farre off from the mount Choreb, I. better than, by the mount Horeb, B.V. or, from the mount Horeb, A.P.C.L.S. See the queſtion following upon this verſe.

I. Verſ. 10. Afterward, as he returned with Ioſhuah his miniſter to the hoſt, he departed not, &c. that is God, I. better than to referre it to Ioſhuah, that he departed not. See the 21. queſtion following.

B.G. cum cæter. Verſ. 12. Thou haſt not ſhewed me whom thou wilt ſend, A.P.B.G. &c. better than, what thou wouldeſt ſend. See 23. queſtion.

I.B.G. cum cæter. Verſ. 13. Shew me thy way, I. cum cæter. the way of thy goodneſſe, C. thy goodneſſe, is not in the text: better than, ſhew me thy face, L. or, ſhew thee my ſelfe manifeſtly, S. The word is, דרכך deracheca, thy way.

I.B.G.&c. Verſ. 15. If thy preſence or face goe not, I.V.B.G.A.P. if thy majeſtie, C. better than, if thou goe not, L.S. the word is פניך paneca, thy face.

I.V. Verſ. 16. I and thy people ſhall be ſeparated, I.V.C.A.P. better than, ſhall be glorified, L. S. or, have preeminence before all people, B.G. the word is פלא phala, to devide, ſeparate: it ſhall appeare, that thou haſt a ſpeciall care of us beyond all people.

3. The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. At what time the Lord uttered this commination.

Verſ. 1. Afterward the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, &c. 1. Calvine thinketh, that this commination here ſet downe was delivered unto Moſes, before he did breake forth into that patheticall petition to be raced out of the booke of life, if the Lord would not pardon the people: and that upon this threatning that the Lord would goe no more with him, then followed that vehement prayer of Moſes. 2. But rather father thinke with Iunius, that this was ſpoken after God had repented him of the evill, which he had intended utterly to have deſtroyed the people: and after Moſes had in his great zeale and love toward his people wiſhed to be raced out: for immediatly upon that prayer, chap. 32. 34. he promiſeth his Angell ſhould goe with them: and ſo doth the Lord here: therefore the coherence of the argument ſheweth, that this followed immediatly upon the other.

QUEST. II. Whether the narration of Moſes Tabernacle in this chapter be tranſpoſed.

YEt though this commination be joyned in order of time to the Lords ſpeech, ſet down in the end of the former chapter, a great part of this chapter, Toſtatus thinketh of neceſſitie muſt be tranſpoſed: as that narration which is inſerted of Moſes Tabernacle, verſ. 7. to verſ. 12. which was done before Moſes went up the ſecond time into the mount. And this he goeth about to prove by theſe reaſons: 1. When the Lord thus ſpake unto Moſes, hee was in the mount with God: for thither hee went againe, chap. 30. 31. but Moſes Tabernacle was not in the mount: for out of the Tabernacle Moſes went into the campe and returned: but when he went up the ſecond time, he ſtaied 40. daies there continually and came not downe: the people alſo ſaw Moſes when he went into the Tabernacle, but they could not ſee him in the mount: and it is ſaid verſ. 11. that his ſervant Ioſhua went not out of the Tabernacle, but hee did not goe up into the mount with Moſes. 2. At ſuch time as Moſes removed his Tent without the campe, the Lord was not yet reconciled to the people: and therefore Moſes pitched his Tent without the hoſt, as a ſigne, that God was departed from them: but after that Moſes came downe the ſecond time, the people were reconciled, and fell to making of the Tabernacle. 3. And after the Tabernacle worke was taken in hand, Moſes was then continually preſent to overſee the worke; it is not like then that Moſes Tent at that time was removed without the campe: wherefore Toſtatus ſeemeth to conclude upon theſe reaſons, that this was done before Moſes went up the ſecond time into the mount, where he ſtaied other fortie daies: and it was moſt like that then Moſes ſequeſtred himſelfe out of the campe, when he ſaid hee would goe againe up unto the Lord, chap. 31. 30. Toſtat. qu. 3.

But this being granted, that all this was done before Moſes went up the ſecond time unto God to fetch the ſecond tables; yet it followeth not that the hiſtorie is tranſpoſed: but all this which is in this chapter contained, is likely to bee done in that order which is heere ſet downe: and that going up, mentioned chap. 32. 30. was not that when Moſes carried up the tables of ſtone; which the Lord bid him prepare, for that followeth after, chap. 34. 1. but it was ſome other going up unto God, though not into the top of the mountaine, where the thicke cloud was: the reaſons are theſe: 1. Becauſe this going up of Moſes was the next day after the ſlaughter by the Levites, which was the next day after he came down with the tables, chap. 32. 30. But he went not up with the ſecond tables ſo ſoone. 2. Moſes at this conference with God, came and told the people what the Lord ſaid, that hee would not goe with them; whereupon they ſorrowed, verſ. 4. But when hee went up with the ſecond tables, he ſtaied there fortie daies, and came not downe. 3. Moſes was ſet in a cleft of the rocke which was in the mountaine, while the Lord paſſed by, verſ. 22. before hee went up the ſecond time with the tables, chap. 34. 1. therefore this was another going up beſide that. See more of this, qu. 74. chap. 32.

QUEST. III. How God ſaith he will ſend his Angell, and yet himſelfe not go with them.

Verſ. 1. I will ſend an Angell before thee. 1. Some thinke, that this is but a repetition of that which the Lord promiſed before, that they ſhould be brought into the land of Canaan, and that Gods Angell ſhould go before them. But God promiſed theſe things upon a condition, and now upon their diſobedience he reverſeth all, and ſaith in effect unto them, Pergite quo vultis, ego omnem veſtri curam abjiciam; Go whither you will, I will have no more care of you, Ferus, Marbach. But by the former promiſe, chap. 32. 34. Mine Angell ſhall go before you: it is evident, that the Lord doth confirme here his former promiſe, and not reverſe it. 2. Cajetane thus expoundeth, that God was content his cloud ſhould goe before him, as it did, but he will not dwell among them in his Tabernacle, as he had promiſed. So alſo Burgenſ. But the contrarie is evident, becauſe God had alreadie preſcribed unto Moſes, the forme and faſhion of the Tabernacle, all which had been to no effect, if the Lord would not make it his habitation: for to what purpoſe then, ſhould they make it? 3. Calvine, becauſe a difference is here made, betweene the ſending of an Angell before them, and Gods being among them, thinketh that this is underſtood of a created Angell, and not of that Angell of Gods preſence, before promiſed, chap. 23. which was Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe. But the ſame Angell is underſtood both here, and there, becauſe the ſame office was to be performed in both places, to bring the people into the land of Canaan. And ſo the Interlinearie Gloſſ. underſtandeth, Angelum quem ſe miſſurum ſpondet Dominus Deus, Dominum Ieſum Chriſtum poſſumus intelligere; The Angell, which the Lord God promiſeth to ſend, we may underſtand to be our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

4. Rupertus giveth this ſenſe, I will ſend mine Angell before thee, that thou maieſt enter into the land of Canaan, ſed non ut intras in terram viventium, but not to enter into the land of the living. But here the text doth not inſinuate the ſpirituall Canaan, but the terreſtriall only, as it is deſcribed to be a land, that floweth with milke and honie.

5. The author of the Scholaſticall hiſtorie, here ſaith, that whereas God was the keeper of Iſrael himſelfe, before they committed idolatrie: he afterward appointed Michael the Arch-angell to be their keeper and guide; who is called their Prince. But the ſame Angell, which the Lord promiſeth now to ſend before them, did go before them before, Exod. 14. 19. and 23. 20. Behold I will ſend an Angell before thee, which indeed was Michael the Arch-angell, or principall or chiefe Angell, who was no created Angell, but even Chriſt himſelfe, for who elſe is the Prince of the Lords people?

6. Wherefore, whereas God ſaith he will ſend his Angell, and not go himſelfe, the meaning is not, seeing God is everie where, that he would not be with them per potentiam, by his power, but not as before, per miraculorum operationem, by the operation of miracles, Lyran. Toſtat. Negat ſe amplius familiariter illis præſentem fore; Hee denieth that hee will in that familiar manner be present, as he was before, Simler. Gallaſ. Aut inter eos viſibiliter reſidere, Or to be visiblie resident among them Iun. But afterward, when upon Moſes request God changed his purpoſe, that he would go with them himselfe: then hee was present, in working miracles for them, as before, as in sending them flesh, Numb. 11. and causing water to come out of the rock, Numb. 20. Toſtat. qu. 4.

QUEST. IIII. Why the Lord saith, he will not goe with them himselfe, lest he should consume them.

Vers. 3. LEſt I consume thee in the way. 1. Rupertus so understandeth this, as though the Lord would have the people no more to take him for their God: Non tibi expedit, ut me Deum tuum nomines culturam meam profitearis; It is not good for thee, that thou doe henceforth name mee for thy God, or professe my worship: for it were better not to know God at all, than knowing to provoke him, &c. But if the Lords meaning were utterly to renounce them, as being not his people, he would not have promised to send an Angell before them.

2. Neither is it to be thought, that the Angell should be, Deo miſericordior, more mercifull than God, and readie to spare them: for even the Lord had told them before concerning the Angell, that he would not spare their misdeeds.

3. But if God should be present, as is said before, in working miracles for them, and multiplying his benefits, tanto eſſet populi rebellio gravior, the rebellion of the people and their unthankfulnesse, should be so much the greater, Lyran. And this is the reason, why the Lord punished his owne people more for their idolatrie, than he did the Gentiles, because the Lord had done more for them, than any other people, Toſtat. qu. 5. So Hugo de S. Victor. Lest I should destroy thee, Iratus aliquando tua ſtultitia, ſi tecum eſſem aſſidue. Being at the length angrie for thy foolishnesse, if I should be continually with thee. So also Iunius, Ne ſi gravius in præſentiam ipſius peccaverint Iſraelitæ, &c. Lest the more the Israelites did sinne against the Lord being present, the more grivous punishment should be decreed against them.

QUEST. V. What ornaments they were, which the people laid aside.

Vers. 4. AND no man put on his best rayment, or his ornament. 1. Hugo de S. Victor. by their ornament, heere understandeth the Tabernacle of Moſes, where the Lord talked with him, which was an ornament and grace to the people: which now was removed away from them, and pitched without the campe. So also Gloſſ. interlinear. But the removing of Moſes Tabernacle is afterward mentioned, vers. 7. it was then a divers thing from this: and this ornament here spoken of, was peculiar, and severall to everie one, which they laid aside, so was not this Tabernacle.

2. R. Salom. understandeth this ornament of certaine golden coronets, which were miraculously put upon every ones head by the Angels, at that time when the law was delivered, whereby they were espoused unto God: which now they put off, as having broken their faith toward God, to whom they were espoused.

But, neither is it likely, that everie one had such a golden coronet, for whence should they have such abundance of gold? Toſtat. qu. 7. And if this ornament were miraculously given them, it was no more in their power to put them off, than it was at the first to assume them: and if it had been any such ornament of their espousals, they were then stripped of them, when they had first transgressed, when Moſes saw that the people were naked, chap. 33. 25. Simler.

3. R. Salom. beside this, hath another exposition: by their ornaments understanding their favour, and dignitie with God, which now they had lost. But it was not in their power, either to lay aside, or to take up this kind of spirituall ornament. The Lord could deprive them thereof, whether they would or no.

4. The Chalde paraphrast, by these ornaments, understandeth, arma bellica, their weapons of warre, their swords, and their bowes, and such like. But it seemeth that both men and women laid aside these ornaments: whereas the men only did weare armour.

5. Some thinke that these were the ornaments, which they did weare for the honor of the golden calfe, Oleaſter. But it is not like, that if they had worne any such, that they did put them on still, seeing the Levites had put to the sword divers of them for their idolatrie: they would not have been so shamelesse as in despight of Moſes to have carried in open view those markes of idolatrie.

6. Therefore these were none other ornaments, than their costly and precious apparell; which they used to weare in the time of publike joy: as the Septuagint translate them, τὰς στολὰς τῆς δόξης, their glorious garments, such as they received of the Egyptians, with other jewels of gold and silver, when they came out of Egypt, chap. 3. 22. Toſtat. quæſt. 7. So also Burgenſ. Nullus ex more, indutus eſt cultu ſuo; None of them was decked in apparell, as they used to be; Depoſitis ornamentis, lugubri habitu incedebant; Having laid aside their ornaments, they went in mourning weeds, Iun. Pelarg.

QUEST. VI. Why in publike repentance they used to change their habit.

Vers. 4. THey sorrowed. That is, they put on sackcloth and mourning garments, not as though true repentance consisted in the change of the outward apparell: for the Lord saith by his Prophet, Rent your hearts, and not your garments, Ioel 2. but the externall signes of repentance are profitable also, and not to be neglected for these causes. 1. That by these signes, Conſpicuum ſiat eos vere peccatum ſuum agnoſcere; That by these outward arguments it may appeare, that they do truely confesse their sinne, Lippom. God will have fructus cum arbore, the tree with the fruit: the tree is the penitent and contrite heart, the fruit outward confession, and humiliation, Forus. 2. Because men by their sinne doe not onely provoke voke God, but offend men, it is requiſite, that as in their heart, they doe humble themſelves before God, ſo they ſhould by their outward behaviour give ſatisfaction unto men, Ferus. And ſo, ignominiæ partem ultro ſubire inter homines, &c. willingly undergoe ſome ſhame among men, in condemning themſelves. 3. It is profitable alſo for the good example of others: ut alios ad imitationem provocent, to ſtirre up others to imitate the like, Calvin. 4. Iis infirmitas noſtra ſublevatur; By theſe outward ſignes of repentance, our infirmitie is helped, Gallaſ. and our ſorrow and repentance thereby increaſed. 5. Reales ſunt quædam preces, The humble habit and geſture of the bodie, are certaine reall prayers whereby wee are ſtirred up more earneſtly to intreat pardon at Gods hand, Simler.

QUEST. VII. VVhy the Lord thus ſpake unto Moſes.

Verſ. 5. FOr the Lord had ſaid. 1. Toſtatus opinion is, that this here is inſerted by way of anticipation, becauſe Moſes delivered this unto the people, after his comming downe from the mount the ſecond time, becauſe at the ſame time, Moſes moved his Tabernacle without the campe, which was after his ſecond comming downe; for it is called heere the Tabernacle of the Covenant, verſ. 7. becauſe the tables of the Covenant were there kept, which Moſes had not yet received; for the firſt tables were broken.

Contra. 1. At Moſes ſecond comming downe, the people were reconciled, for Moſes brought the tables of the law, which was a ſigne of reconciliation betweene God and his people: therefore it is not like, that then ſo long after the people put off their rayment in ſigne of repentance. 2. Neither is it like, their ſorrow and repentance was ſo long deferred. 3. And as unlike it is, that then Moſes removed his Tabernacle, which was a ſigne unto the people, that God would not dwell among them, when the Covenant was renued, and the tables new written. 4. Neither is it called the Tabernacle of the Covenant, as the Latine Interpreter readeth; but ohel mogned, the Tent of the Congregation.

2. Some thinke, that this is here rehearſed, concerning the peoples laying aſide of their coſtly apparell, and the removing of Moſes Tent, per recapitulationem, by recapitulating: ſuppoſing theſe things to have been done before Moſes went up into the mount: their reaſons ſee before queſt. 2. where they are propounded by Toſtatus, as though he inclined to that opinion: but qu. 8. upon this chapter, he ſeemeth rather to be of opinion, that here an anticipation of the ſtorie is to be admitted, a narration of that before, which was done after, and not a recapitulation, a ſetting downe after, of that which was done before. But the hiſtorie is not prevented in this place, as is ſhewed before: ſo neither is it deferred, for all this here rehearſed could not be done in the ſpace of one day; which muſt be admitted: if theſe things were done before Moſes went up againe unto God, which was the verie next day after the ſlaughter of the people by the Levites chap. 32. 30. 3. Cajetanes opinion is, that Moſes was at this time with God in the mount; Et quod rurſus de monte deſcenderit; And that he came downe againe from the mountaine, and told the people theſe things. But at Moſes ſecond going up to the mount, to receive the ſecond tables, he continued there fortie daies, and fortie nights, and eat nothing, Deut. 9. 18. during that time he came not downe. 4. Wherefore this was ſome other going up of Moſes unto God, though not into the thicke doud, beſide his ſecond ſolemne going up, for the ſecond tables: ſo that Moſes went unto God, and returned to the people againe, before he was called up, and bid to bring other tables of ſtone with him like to the firſt, chap. 34. 1. And then this hiſtorie is not tranſpoſed, but things are ſet downe in that order, wherein they were done. See before queſt. 2.

QUEST. VIII. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I will come upon thee, whereas he ſaid before, I will not go up with thee.

Verſ. 5. I will come ſuddenly upon thee, and conſume thee. 1. Some thinke that this is ſpoken comminatorie, by way of threatning: promittet ſe manifeſtare eis in malo eorum, hee promiſeth to ſhew himſelfe unto them, but to their hurt, Hugo de S. Victor. That as he denied before hee would go up with them, that is, to ſhew his comfortable preſence among them: now he will come upon them with indignation, Gallaſ. Although I have ſpared thee, ſemper tamen non parcam, yet will I not alway ſpare thee, Ferus. But if indeed the Lord did here threaten certainly to be revenged of them, he would not preſently have called unto them for repentance, bidding them to put away their coſtly rayment.

2. Therefore Lyranus thinketh, that theſe words are uttered alſo comminatorie, in threatning manner, but with condition of their repentance, that then he would not deſtroy them, as the deſtruction of Niniveh was ſo conditionally threatned. But this is no commination, but a repetition only of that, which the Lord had denounced before, verſ. 3.

3. Some thinke that theſe words are uttered, prophetice, prophetically: Rabanus of the day of judgement, wherein they ſhall certainly be judged for their ſinne. Gloſſ. interlin. Of the Babylonian, or Romane captivitie. So alſo Burgenſ. Semel aſcendit Dei filius incarnatus, &c. Once the Sonne of God incarnate came among them, and utterly deſtroyed them. So alſo Ferus. But the Lord ſpeaketh of the time preſent, of his comming unto them now, in bringing them to the land of Canaan, as appeareth, verſ. 1, 2.

4. Therefore others thinke, that theſe words are delivered, not comminatorie, by way of commination, ſed cammonitorie, by way of admonition, as Chryſoſtom obſerveth, Hoſtes. qui volunt ſupplicium infligere, &c. The enemies, which intend to puniſh, doe not onely ſay nothing of it, but go about it moſt ſecretly, leſt they which are to be puniſhed for it, knowing of it, ſhould eſcape: but the Lord contrariwiſe, prædicit, differt, territ, when hee intendeth to puniſh, doth give warning of it, defferreth it, terrifieth, &c. ut quæ minatur, non inferat, that what he threatneth, be not brought upon them, and ſo the Lord doth heere, he threatneth to move them to repentance.

5. But theſe words are rather ſpoken, enuntiativè & declarativè, by way of declaration, as Cajetane, Declaratio eſt ejus, quod dixerat; It is a declaration of that, which hee had ſaid before verſ. 3. Leſt I con- ſume thee in the way. And the meaning is this, ſi tecum aſcenderem, contingere poſſet, &c. if I ſhould go up with thee, it might come to paſſe, that I ſhould deſtroy thee. Oſiander. So alſo Iunius. It is therefore a declaration, or repetition of the former reaſon, why the Lord would not go up with them, leſt being provoked by their ſinnes, hee might conſume them.

6. And the Lord to this end ſo often telleth them, that he will not go with them, that they might more earneſtly ſue unto God, for his comfortable preſence ſtill: for the Lord purpoſed not to withdraw his preſence from them: as afterward he ſaith unto Moſes. My preſence ſhall go with thee. Like unto this, Cyrillus maketh that anſwer of our Saviour in the Goſpell, who being asked of his brethren, if hee would go up to the feaſt, ſaid firſt hee would not go up, and yet afterward went up: Propter incredulitatem Iudaorum iturum ſe negavit, tamen propter paucos ſanctos aſcendit, &c. He denied to go up, becauſe of the unbeliefe of the Jewes but he went up for their ſakes which beleeved, &c. So here, though the Lord refuſed in reſpect of the idolatrous and rebellious people, to go up with them, yet for Moſes ſake he granteth his preſence.

Lib. 4. ſuper Ierem. cap. 36. Iohn chap. 7.

QUEST. IX. Whether the people put off their ornaments twice.

Verſ. 5. NOw put thy coſtly rayment from thee. 1. Lyranus thinketh, that this was another putting off, than that before ſpoken of, that the people firſt of themſelves put off their coſtly rayment, and then, when the Lord commanded them, they alſo put off their golden crownes. But, 1. It is a meere imagination, that they had any ſuch crownes: 2. If they had any ſuch, it is like when they put on their mourning apparell, that they would alſo have laid by their coronets, which were not ſeemely for mourners to weare, Toſtatus, qu. 7.

2. Cajetane thinketh, that firſt, ornatum perſonalem ſpontanei depoſuerunt, they did lay downe of their owne accord their perſonall ornaments: but afterward they are commanded to take away alſo the ornament of the place: Locus ſuperior, mons Dei, ornatus erat à filijs Iſrael; The higher place, which was the mountaine of God, the Iſraelites had decked and adorned, becauſe the Law there was given; which the Lord commandeth to be taken away, becauſe of the ſinne of the people there committed. But ſeeing they were ſtraitly charged not to come neere the hill upon paine of death, chap. 19. 13. it is not like they did decke and adorne the hill: and they are bid to put their ornaments from them, not from the place.

3. Oſiander thus interpreteth; Depone totum ornamentum tuum; Lay aſide all thy ornaments, and put on ſackcloath: He thinketh they had put off ſome before, and now are bid to put off the reſt: but the ſame word עחת gnathah, uſed in both places, ſheweth, that the text ſpeaketh of the ſame ornaments.

4. The Interlinearie gloſſe, by their ornaments here underſtandeth, manifeſtam Dei præſentiam the manifeſt preſence and apparition of God. But it was not in the peoples power to lay aſide that ornament.

5. Some underſtand by this ornament, faith, qua populum illum carniſſe luget; which it is evident that people wanted: Ex Lippom. But God would not bid them lay aſide any ſuch ornament.

6. Lippoman expoundeth it thus: Videri poteſt hoc quadam præcedentis depoſitionis approbatio; This may ſeeme to bee a certaine approbation of their former laying aſide of their garments. But it is a commandement, that they ſhould doe it, therefore not an approbation of a thing done.

7. Toſtatus thinketh that this laying aſide of their garments was done all at once: but hee ſaith, that it was not now done, but after Moſes ſecond returne from the mountaine, which opinion is confuted before, qu. 7.

8. Therefore Gallaſius better reſolveth, in reading here in the preterpluperfect tenſe, (for the Lord had ſaid) So alſo Iun. Geneveſ. And thinketh this to be given as a reaſon, why the people put off their ornaments, quia juſſu Dei factum, becauſe it was done at the Lords commandement: Neq; enim illi excogitarunt hoc opus pœnitentiæ; For the people did not deviſe this worke of repentance of themſelves, Simler. So alſo Calvine ſaith, it is an explication of the former, Non fuiſſe ornatos, quia id vetuerat Deus; That the people had not their ornaments, becauſe God forbad them. The ſame alſo is the opinion of Oleaſter, that God ſpake theſe words before, when he ſaid, I will not go up with thee, verſ 3.

QUEST. X. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, That I may know.

Verſ. 5. THat I may know what to doe unto thee. 1. The Interlinear. Gloſſ. giveth this ſenſe, Ut ſciam, id eſt, ſcire faciam, &c. That I may know, that is, make thee know, what a great wickednеſſe thou haſt committed, whereby thou art deprived of my preſence: Nam ab illo die non ita manifeſtè apparuit illi populo; For from that day he did not ſo manifeſtly appeare unto that people, &c. But beſide, that the Lord ſtill went before them after this, by his viſible preſence; he ſpeaketh here, not as having determined what to doe, but as yet one deliberating with himſelfe.

2. Rupertus thus interpreteth, That I may know, &c. Nullam enim habet materiam ſtruendæ miſericordiæ, &c. Becauſe the Lord ſhould have no matter for his mercie to worke upon, if there did not go before ſome ſhew of repentance, &c. But the Lord in this ſpeech determineth nothing, he keepeth them in ſuſpenſe.

3. Toſtatus turneth it the other way, that ſeeing the objection, and humiliation, Sciam, quid debeam pœnæ tibi infligere, &c. I may know, what part of the puniſhment I ſhould inflict, qu. 7. But, as it is ſaid before, ſuſpenſos relinquere videtur, hee ſeemeth yet to leave them in ſuſpenſe.

4. Lyranus therefore reſolveth upon this ſenſe: Non quod Deus aliquid de novo cogneſcat: Not that God ſhould know any thing more than he did, but that by the change of the people it might be made manifeſt, what it was fit for the Lord to doe unto that people. So alſo Ferus. That although the Lord knew all things in himſelfe, yet ut ex operibus ejus ſciat, &c. he might know by their workes, whether he ſhould doe good or evill unto them, Simlerus. The Lord ſpeaketh not then of his knowledge in reſpect of himſelfe, ſed ut manifeſtum fieret, but that it might be manifeſt unto men, Toſtat. That a reaſon of Gods workes might be evident to all.

5. So

5. So although God, Non ſimpliciter ignoſcit, guſtum tamen miſericordiæ dando, &c. Doth not ſimplie pardon them, yet in giving them a taſte of his mercie, he doth animate them, to ſue more earneſtly for pardon, Calvin.

QUEST. XI. Why it is ſaid, they laid aſide their good rayment, from the mount Horeb.

Verſ. 6. THey laid aſide their rayment, from mount Horeb, &c. 1. Some give this ſenſe, after Moſes came downe from the mount, they put them off, Genevenſ. But it is ſhewed before, that this was done before Moſes came downe from the mount the ſecond time, qu. 2. and how many words are inſerted: after Moſes came downe, which libertie, if it were lawful to take, one might make any ſenſe of the Scripture.

2. Cajetane, whoſe opinion is partly touched before, qu. 9. thinketh, that indeed they tooke off the ornaments from the verie mount, which they had decked, and adorned: but they are bidden, verſ. 5. to put off their ornaments from them; they were then upon them, and not upon the place.

3. Toſtatus underſtandeth it thus: Ex eo loco non habuerunt ornatum; From that place, they had no ornaments; and ſo maketh this the ſenſe, as though not onely in that place, but afterwards going from that place, they left off thoſe ornaments. And Oleaſter conjecture th thus; Forte uſque ad ingreſſum terræ nullis feſtivis veſtibus uſus eſt; It may be, they uſed not their beſt apparell, till they came into the land of Canaan, &c. But if they had not worne their garments afterward, it had been no ſuch miracle, that their rayment did not wax old upon them, during the ſpace of fortie yeares, as it is obſerved, Deut. 8. 4. And after they were reconciled unto God, the cauſe of their mourning being taken away, it is like the ſigne of their ſorrow, their mourning weed was diſcontinued.

4. The moſt doe expound, circa montem Horeb, about the mountaine Horeb, Ferus. Ad montem, at the mountaine, Vatab. They mourne in the ſame place, where they had offended God with their ſinne, Marbach. that the very place might put them in minde, what great benefits they had deprived themſelves of: there they had received the Law, and there the tables of the covenant were broken, Gallaſ. What place this Horeb or Choreb was, is ſhewed before queſt. 2. chap. 3. Gallaſius and Marbach think, that Sinai was the name of that part of the hill toward the Eaſt, and Choreb, of the other part toward the weſt.

5. But Junius doth give the beſt ſenſe of this place, they laid aſide their ornaments procul à monte Choreb, a great way off from the mount Choreb; as taking themſelves to be unworthie of Gods preſence, who abode in Choreb. And ſo in the like manner Moſes removed the Tabernacle, where the Lord ſhewed viſible ſignes of his preſence farre off from the campe, in the verſe following, as a ſigne of Gods indignation and departure from among them.

QUEST. XII. What Tabernacle Moſes removed out of the campe.

Verſ. 7. THen Moſes tooke his Tabernacle, &c. 1. Calvine taketh this for the Tabernacle, which God appointed Moſes to make, which he ſuppoſeth to have been made alreadie. So alſo Rupertus. But that cannot be, for the making of the Tabernacle followeth afterward, chap. 35. And if this bee admitted, the whole hiſtorie that remaineth in this booke ſhould be tranſpoſed: neither had they any time to make it; for Moſes was newly come downe from the mount, where hee had hitherto received but inſtructions, how the Tabernacle ſhould be made: and if the Tabernacle of the Lord had been alreadie made, it ſhould not now begin to have been firſt called, Ohel moged, the Tent of the congregation.

2. Some thinke that this is, per prolepſin dictum, ſpoken by a figure Prolepſis: the Tabernacle is mentioned as now made, which was not made till afterward, Gloſſ. interlinear. But that Tabernacle ſituated, and erected in medio caſtrum, in the middeſt of the campe, and never without the hoſt: therefore this was not that great Tabernacle or Sanctuarie, Gallaſ.

3. Cajetane ſeemeth to underſtand this of the great Tabernacle, and thinketh, that Deus revocat, quod alias promiſerat, &c. God doth here revoke that which hee had promiſed concerning the Tabernacle, that he would therein dwell among them, and that he purpoſed to ſubſtitute Joſhua to bee high Prieſt in Aarons ſtead, becauſe hee went not from the Tabernacle, verſ. 11. This God threatned, to move them to more effectuall repentance, but hee performed it not; Ex Simlero. But this cannot be that great Tabernacle afterward erected, for the reaſons before alleaged: neither was that the reaſon of Joſhuahs ſtaying in the Tabernacle, eſpecially ſeeing no ſuch thing is inſinuated in the text, but becauſe he was Moſes miniſter, and gave daily attendance upon him.

4. Neither is this to be underſtood, de ſuo ipſius tentorio, of Moſes owne Tabernacle or Tent: as Gallaſ. Jun. Borrhaius: for he dwelt ſtill among the people, Simler. and hee went only to this Tabernacle out of the hoſt when the people had any buſineſſe with God. And if it had been Moſes owne Tent there ſhould have been his wife and children with them, that Joſhuah needed not to have been left behinde to keepe it, verſ. 11. when Moſes returned into the hoſt, Toſtat, qu. 9.

5. Wherefore, this was ſome peculiar Tabernacle, which Moſes erected ſpecially for the ſervice of God, as it may appeare by the name of it, it hath the ſame name, which the other great Tabernacle was to be called by: there was the cloud the viſible ſigne of Gods preſence, and the people worſhipped toward that place, Simlerus, Oſiander, Toſtatus.

Calvine uſeth here divers reaſons, to prove that it was not Moſes private Tabernacle. 1. Becauſe Moſes is ſaid ſimplie to have taken the Tabernacle, not his Tabernacle. 2. Becauſe a ſacred name is impoſed upon it. 3. Moſes changed not the place of his dwelling. 4. The Lord there ſhewed viſible ſignes of his preſence. 5. The people worſhipped toward it: all this ſheweth, that it was a ſacred place, and not Moſes Tent of habitation, &c. All this being granted, yet it followeth not, that it was the great Tabernacle, as Calvine and Oleaſter thinke, both in reſpect of the time, it was not yet made, and of the place, that was planted in the middeſt of the campe, and not without, Lippoman.

Verſ. 7.

QUEST. XIII. Why Moses pitched his Tabernacle without the hoſt.

Verſ.7. AND pitched it without the hoſt. 1. Toſtatus taketh the reaſon thereof to bee this, becauſe when the people were willed to lay aſide their ornaments, Moſes alſo would remove the Tabernacle, Quia in eo pars quædam honoris populi conſiſtebat; Becauſe therein a part of the peoples honour conſiſted, *qu.*8.

2. Oleaſter giveth this reaſon, Quia immunda erant caſtra; Becauſe the campe was defiled by their idolatrie, Moſes removeth the Tabernacle.

3. But the verie cauſe hereof was this, that as God had ſaid before, that hee would not go up with them, ſo Moſes is commanded to remove the Tabernacle; Vt hoc ſigno admoneremur Deum ab ipſis abalienatum; That they might hereby be admoniſhed, that God was alienated from them, Simler.

4. Moſes alſo doth this, ut promoveret ipſorum pœnitentiam; to ſet forward their repentance: ut agnoſcerent ſe indignos cohabitatione Dei; that they ſhould acknowledge themſelves unworthie of Gods preſence and cohabitation: as the Publican in the Goſpell ſtood a farre off, and knocked upon his breaſt, Ferus.

5. But herein appeareth notwithſtanding, the mercie and clemencie of God: that departeth not altogether, nor yet removeth the ſignes of his preſence farre off: quin interpellare poſſint, but that they might have acceſſe thither to offer up their requeſts. Marbach.

6. Rupertus maketh this myſticall application of it: the pitching of the Tent without the campe ſignifieth, Quod cœleſtia ſacra, quorum Miniſter & Pontifex Chriſtus, &c. That the heavenly things, whereof Chriſt is the high Prieſt and Miniſter, are extended farre beyond the carnall rites, and ceremonies of the Jewes.

QUEST. XIV. How far from the campe this Tent was removed.

Verſ.7. FARRE off from the hoſt. 1. R. Salom. thinketh, that this Tent which Moſes pitched without the hoſt, was removed ſome twelve cubits from the campe. But this had been all one in a manner, as if the Tent ſhould have been in the campe ſtill: neither in ſo ſmall a diſtance had it been a ſigne of Gods departure from them, which herein was ſpecially intended, Toſtat. qu.9.

2. Iunius thinketh it was removed, ad milleſimum cubitum, about a thouſand cubits: by the analogie of the place, Numb. 35.5. where the Levites ſuburbes are deſcribed to be 2000. cubits from one ſide to another: of each ſide a thouſand from the citie, which was in the middeſt. But there can be no proportion taken from the fixed ſituation, and compaſſe of their cities, and ſuburbes, for the meaſure and diſtance of their ambulatorie, and walking campe.

3. Rather the ſpace of diſtance betweene the Tent and the campe, may be apportionated by the like, Ioſhua. 4. 3. where the ſpace betweene the Arke, that went before them and the campe, is preſcribed to be two thouſand cubits which maketh a mile: but hereof there can be no certaintie, it being not expreſſed in Scripture.

QUEST. XV. Why it is called the Tent of the Congregation.

Verſ.7. AND he called it ohel mogned. The Tent of the congregation. 1. Toſtatus thinketh that it is ſo called, becauſe here were kept the tables of the law, wherein was conteined the covenant of God, before they were put into the Arke. So alſo Sa. But the firſt tables were broken, and Moſes yet had not received the ſecond.

2. Rupertus thinketh it is called the Tabernacle of the Covenant: Quia non ante ſolvuntur inimicitiæ, quam tendatur Tabernaculum; becauſe the emnitie betweene God and the people was not diſſolved, before the Tabernacle was pitched. But the erecting of this Tabernacle rather was a ſigne, that God was angrie with the people, and vouchſafed not to be among them.

3. Ferus much what to the ſame ſenſe ſaith, it was ſo called, Quia datum fuit ad confirmationem fœderis; This Tabernacle was given, to confirme the Covenant: but it was ſet up rather as a ſigne of ſeparation betweene God and them.

4. Lyranus: it is ſo called, Quia ibi fiebant fœdera, id eſt, compoſitiones & concordiæ; Becauſe covenants were there made, that is, the compounding and according of ſtrife. But all thoſe are deceived in the vulgar Latine text, which doth not here well tranſlate the Hebrew word מוֹעֵד moghed.

5. This word than rather ſignifieth a congregation or meeting together, than a Covenant. Oleaſter ſheweth, that this word may have foure derivations: 1. It may come of gnavad, which ſignifieth to teſtifie, and ſo it may be taken for the Tabernacle of the Teſtimonie, which ſenſe the Septuagint followeth: 2. Of gnadhah, to adorne, and ſo it may be called the Tabernacle of ornament: 3. Of gnadhadh, to erect, & ſo it is named the Tabernacle of erection, becauſe it was erected and ſet up, or taken downe: 4. It is derived of, iagnadh, which ſignifieth to congregate, to meet together at an appointed time. And this hee preferreth as the apteſt derivation. So alſo Iun. Pagnin. Vatabl. Becauſe there the Lord did meet and ſpeake with Moſes; Oleaſter. Or rather Moſes proclaimed unto all, that would aske counſell of God, that they ſhould come thither, whereupon it was called the Tent of the Congregation, or meeting together, Iun. annotat.

QUEST. XVI. Why the people ſtood up unto Moſes, and looked after him.

Verſ. 1. ALL the people ſtood up. 1. Calvine thinketh, that this is not to be referred to any civill honour, which they ſhewed unto Moſes, but that it muſt be underſtood de ſpirituali cultu, of the ſpirituall worſhip, which they yeelded unto God, when Moſes went to the Tabernacle. But the ſpirituall worſhip is ſpoken of afterward, verſ. 10. They worſhipped everie man in his Tent doore.

2. Wherefore by this behaviour of the people, is rather ſhewed the great reverence, which they ſhewed toward his perſon; and this was the firſt fruit of their repentance, Quod honorant enim, quem prius contemp- contempserant, They honour him, whom they had despised before in his absence, calling him in disdaine, This Moses; Gallas. 2. Another effect of their repentance was, they stand in their doore, but dare not follow after him, as thinking themselves unworthie to draw neere unto God. 3. They looke after him, untill he was gone in, signifying their desire unto him. 4. They worship toward the Tabernacle, Ferus.

3. Tostatus supposing that this was done after Moses came downe from the mount, thinketh, that the people gave this great reverence to Moses now more than before, because of his shining countenance, which the children of Israel could not endure to behold. But it is shewed before, qu. 7. that Tostatus is herein deceived, concerning the time and order of this storie; for Moses was not gone up yet the second time, but was called up afterward, chap. 34. 1. and therefore he had not yet such a shining countenance; which may further appeare by this, because heere they looke after Moses, and upon him, but when his face glistred after his comming downe, they were afraid to come neere him, or looke upon him.

4. In that the Israelites looke upon Moses backe parts, Rupertus maketh this mysticall collection: that till all things are fulfilled which are promised in both the Testaments, Iudæi non videbunt, the Jewes shall see but the back parts of Moses; Strabus applieth it thus: Moses face was hid to the Jewes, that is, mera & vera legis cognitio, the very true knowledge of the law: wherein the Jewes could see no spirituall or mysticall thing but all carnall.

QUEST. XVII. Whether there were two clouds or one, to cover, and conduct the host.

Vers. 9. The cloudie pillar descended, &c. 1. Tostatus here doth utter his opinion; that there were two cloudes, one which was spread over the host in the length and breadth thereof, which served only to shelter them; the other was a cloud like a pillar, not so thick as the other, but more lightsome, and this served to direct them: and this is the cloud spoken of here. These two clouds he would prove out of that place, Numb. 14. 14. Thy cloud standeth over them, and thou goest before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night. But here are not divers clouds described; only divers offices of one and the same cloud, are mentioned: which are there to cover them, direct them, and to give light unto them. Hee may as well gather out of this place, that there were three clouds as two.

2. Therefore it cannot otherwise be gathered, that there was any more but one cloud: as it is in the Psalme. 105. 39. He spread a cloud to be a covering, and fire to give light in the night. The same cloud covered them, which gave them light, and that which gave them light guided them. Neither is it necessarie to imagine this cloud to overspread the whole host: hanging aloft in the aire, and being dispersed in the upper part all abroad, it might, being objected against the bodie of the Sunne, be a sufficient shelter, though wee doe not imagine it to be of such length and breadth. See more hereof, chap. 13. qu. 14.

QUEST. XVIII. Why the Lord spake to Moses in a cloud.

Vers. 9. The cloudie pillar descended. 1 Tostatus thinketh that the reason why the Angell of God spake unto Moses in a cloud, was this: because he tooke upon him an humane bodie, quia hoc erat convenientius ad edendum voces; which was most fit to frame a voice by: and to the end that the people should not see this humane shape, the Angell was hid in the cloud. But, the cloud being lightsome and cleere, which as a pillar of fire gave light unto the campe in the night; if there had been any such humane shape, it would have been seene in that bright bodie: beside, it was not an Angell, but God himselfe that talked with Moses face to face, vers. 11. who could frame a voice without any such assuming of an humane bodie.

2. Ab. Ezra thinketh that the cloud is said here to descend, because the Lord did apply himselfe, and so descended as it were to Moses capacitie: as a learned man, that readeth to the simple, doth frame his speech to their understanding. But although the Lord in himselfe, being an infinite spirit, cannot bee said properly to ascend, or descend, yet because this cloud was a materiall and sensible thing, it may be said properly to descend, Tostatus, quæst. 10.

3. Rupertus maketh this mysticall application of the cloud descending: Nemo reconciliari potest, nisi per istam columnam nubis, per istam carnem, &c. That no man can be reconciled unto God, but by this pillar of the cloud, that is, by that flesh wherein all fulnes of the Godhead dwelled bodily, Lippoman thus also applieth it, that, as Moses entred, the cloud covered the Tabernacle; so when Christ entred into that Tabernacle, not made with hands, nube susceptus est, he was taken up in a cloud, Ferus maketh this morall use: Debemus in ostio tabernaculi, post eum aspicere; Wee must in the doore of these tabernacles of our bodies look after him: that is, be readie as at the doore to follow him, and to lay aside these earthly tabernacles, when the Lord calleth.

4. This cloud descended, both for more reverence and maiestie, because they were not able to behold Gods glorie, Gallas. as Christ was taken up in a cloud, that his Disciples should not gaze after him into heaven: likewise, it was fittest both to shelter them and conduct them: and typically shewed, that they saw, but as in a cloud and darkly: the cleere light being reserved for the comming of Christ.

QUEST. XIX. How the Lord spake to Moses, face to face.

Vers. 11. The Lord spake unto Moses face to face, &c. And yet afterward vers. 20. the Lord saith, thou canst not see my face. 1. Augustine doth thus reconcile these places: in the first he speaketh, de oculis mentis, of the eyes of the minde, whereby wee see God: in the other, hee sheweth, corporeis oculis neminem videre Deum, that no man can see God with bodily eyes. But Gods essence, as it is, no creature can see at all: Eius substantiam, neque hominum, neque Angelorum, sicut est, quisquam videre potuit; The substance of God as he is, neither any man or Angell can see: and therefore the Apostle calleth him, the King immortall, invisible, 1. Timoth. 1. 17. Gloss. ordinar.

2. Some

2. Some thinke that God appeared here in an humane shape; and therefore hee is said to have spoken with him face to face: but the face of God, his divine essence, hee could not see, Osiander. So also Tostatus saith, that the Angell here assumed a bodie, which was hid in the cloud, and so he spake face to face. But if Moses had at any time seene any such assumed face or countenance, it is most like he did in the mount, where he had the most glorious vision: but there was no image to be seene, Deut. 4. 15.

3. Cajetane and Oleaster say, that God here, non videbatur, was not seene face to face, but loquebatur facie ad faciem, hee spake face to face, as one friend with another, tanquam duobus in tenebris colloquentibus amicis, as when two friends talke together in the darke, and see not one another: as the Chalde paraphrast readeth, that God talked with him, verbo ad verbum, word to word: and so it is to bee referred to the Lords familiar speech, not to his familiar sight, which is afterward denied. But Iacob saith, Gen. 32. that he had seene God face to face; therefore this phrase is referred as well to the sight, as to the hearing.

4. The Hebrewes give this solution: that Moses is denied, totaliter, to see wholly the face of God: but he did see him, interposita quadam caligine, some mist being put between. But one friend doth not put a vaile upon his face, when hee talketh with his friend: as the Lord is here said to talke with Moses: the divine essence Moses could not in that mortall state see at all.

5. Thomas thinketh that it is spoken, secundum opinionem hominum, according to the opinion of men; because Moses might thinke, that hee had spoken to him face to face. But if Moses had thought here, that he had seene God face to face, hee would not have desired to see his face afterward.

6. Wherfore, by this phrase is only meant, that cleere revelation, which the Lord shewed to Moses more than to any other; so that it is spoken comparatively: to other Prophets the Lord will speake by vision and dreame, but to Moses, mouth to mouth, Num. 12. 8. Simler. He spoke to him face to face, valde familiariter, very familiarly, his divine essence he could not see, as the Lord answereth him afterward, vers. 20. Lyranus. As a friend imparteth to a friend his secrets and counsell: so, Deus non abscondebat ab illo consilium, God did not hide from him his counsell, Rupertus. The face of God is the knowledge of God: Cognoscitur Deus per speculum, cognoscitur per seipsum; God is knowne as by a face in a glasse, he is seene by himselfe; in a glasse here, in himselfe in heaven, Gregor. Moses saw God here as in a glasse, but as he is in himselfe he could not see him.

But it will be objected, that Iacob also saw God face to face, therefore he saw as much as Moses: but the meaning onely is, that God appeared there to Iacob more manifestly than before: sed pro ipsius gradu & mensura; but according to his degree, and in measure, Gallas. Marbach.

Burgensis hath another answer: that he which spake with Iacob face to face, was an Angell: he is called Elohim, which name is given unto Angels, as well as unto God: but here, he that spake with Moses is called Iehovah, which name is proper and peculiar unto God. But, in as much as that Angels name was ineffable, for Iacob desired to know it, but it was not declared unto him, it is certaine that it was Christ himselfe, who in humane shape there wrestled with Iacob: and therefore I preferre the former answer.

QUEST. XX. Why Ioshua is here called a yong man.

Vers. 11. His servant Ioshuah a yong man. 1. Ioshua was not in respect of his yeeres a yong man, but was at the least at this time 43. yeeres old, as Simlerus collecteth, for he lived after this fortie yeeres during the sojourning of Israel in the desart, and afterward was Captaine and Governour of the people 27. yeeres: which all make together 100. and 10. which was the whole age of Ioshuah. But allowing unto Ioshuah 17. yeeres of government only, as Iunius, which is more probable; then Ioshuah was 53. yeeres old at this time. And it is evident, that Ioshuah was of good yeeres and experience, who was before made Captaine of the warres against Amalek, chap. 17.

2. And that Ioshuahs time of government was not 27. but only 17. yeeres, may bee thus gathered: from the going out of Israel out of Egypt unto the fourth yeere of Salomons raigne, are 480. yeeres, 1 King. 6. 1. which are thus gathered, fortie yeeres in the wildernesse, the Judges make. 299. yeeres; Eli, Samuel and Saul 80. David 40. of Samemons reigne there must be counted foure: there want only 17. yeeres to make up the former summe of 480. which time must be given unto Ioshuahs government, and no more.

3. He is therefore called a young man, נַעַר nagnar, not so much with relation to his manners, because he was integer, an upright man and innocent, without guile or fraud, Simler. Cajetane: or in respect of his service or attendance: as sometime in that sense, puer, a lad, is taken for a minister, as Iun. Oleaster, Tostatus: for there is another word mesharthe, which signifieth, his minister, Lippoman. But it either may be taken here pro discipulo, for a disciple, or scholar: as our blessed Saviour after his resurrection, said to his Disciples, children, or lads, have ye any meat, Ioh. 21. Lippoman: or else he is called juvenis respectu Mosis, a young man in respect of Moses; Lyranus.

QUEST. XXI. Whether Ioshuah is here understood not to have departed from the Tabernacle.

Vers. 11. Departed not out of the Tabernacle. 1. The most doe understand this of Ioshuah, that he departed not out of the Tabernacle. But after the Lord was departed from Moses, and the cloud removed, manebat ibi ad custodiam, he remained there to keepe it, Oleaster: ne cui pateret accessus homini aut bestiæ, that none should come neere it, man or beast, Tostat. qu. 11.

2. Upon this ground they further make Ioshuah a type of Christ, qui semper in conspectu Dei intercedit pro nobis, who is alwaies in the sight of God to make intercession for us, Osiander. Rupertus maketh Ioshua a figure of the Gospell, as Moses signifieth the Law: Spiritus vivificans à tabernaculo, cujus pontifex Christus non recedit: The quickning spirit doth never depart from the Tabernacle, the high Priest whereof is Christ: which spirit the Law hath not. Gloss. interlin. applieth Ioshuahs continuall being in the Tabernacle, unto Christs promise, that he would be with his Disciples to the end of the world.

2. Some

3. Some hereupon further note, that Aaron quaſi ſacerdotio ſuo privatur, Aaron is for the time deprived as it were of his prieſthood, and the keeping of the Tabernacle committed to Ioſhua; Simler. Pelarg.

4. But all theſe collections are grounded upon the falſe interpretation of the text: for this laſt clauſe muſt be referred unto the Lord, mentioned in the beginning of the verſe, not unto Ioſhua, for over the word יָשׁב yaſhav, is the diſtinction rebiah, which doth diſtinguiſh, and divide it from the ſentence following. So that thus the ſentence muſt bee read: When Moſes returned into the hoſt, and his ſervant Ioſhua, a yong man: hee departed not from the middeſt of the Tabernacle: that is, God, who was preſent in the viſible ſigne of the cloud, Iun. The meaning then is, that the cloud departed not from the Tabernacle, which was without the campe; whereby the Lord ſignified that he would not go among them, as he had ſaid, verſ. 3. And ſeeing Moſes could not enter into the Tabernacle, while the cloud was thereon, chap. 40. how is it like that Ioſhua could abide there continually. And further, whereas only Moſes and Ioſhua, as Cajetane noteth, were admitted to come unto the Tabernacle, quia ſoli immunes erant à peccato populi, becauſe they onely were free from the ſinne of the people: it was fit that Ioſhua ſhould attend upon Moſis, being his Miniſter, and that Moſes ſhould not go, and returne alone into the campe.

5. Procopius ſo underſtandeth it, as that Ioſhua intra caſtra ſe continet, did keepe himſelfe within the campe, becauſe he was yet but a young man, and not perfect, and ſo not fit to be admitted to the colloquie or ſpeech of God. But Ioſhua neither ſtayed in the campe, when Moſes went forth to the Tabernacle, neither yet is it to bee ſuppoſed to have ſtayed behind in the Tabernacle when Moſes returned, but he did accompanie him, and attend upon him, both to and from the Tabernacle.

6. The Tabernacle needed no keeper, God ſhewing there continually evident ſignes of his preſence, the cloud by day reſting upon the Tabernacle, and fire there appearing by night.

Quest. XXII. When the Lord thus ſaid to Moſes.

Verſ. 12. THen Moſes ſaid unto the Lord. 1. Toſtatus admitteth, that all this which followeth to the end of the chapter, is ſet downe in the ſame order of time, as it was done, and that there is no anticipation of the hiſtorie, as there is before from theſe words in the fourth verſe, And when the people heard, &c. unto theſe words, verſ. 12. Then Moſes ſaid to the Lord: and he yeeldeth three reaſons, why the hiſtorie is tranſpoſed in the former place, and not in this. 1. Becauſe in the beginning of the next chapter there is a word of coherence, deinceps, afterward, which coupleth that hiſtorie, with that which goeth before. 2. The argument is continued from the 12. verſe, to the end of the chapter, and ſo one thing hath dependance of another. 3. The hiſtorie muſt not be tranſpoſed without great neceſſitie, for then we ſhall have no certaintie in Scripture, in what order any thing was done.

Contra. As theſe reaſons may well be admitted, for the conſequence and coherence of the reſt which followeth in this chapter, that the things here rehearſed were done before Moſes was called up with the ſecond tables, ſo they ſerve as well to prove, that the former narration, from verſ. 4. to verſ. 12. which Toſtatus thinketh to have been done after Moſes comming downe from the mount, is ſet in order according to the time of the doing, and went before Moſes going up the ſecond time into the mount: 1. There is the ſame word of coherence uſed in the beginning of the 12. verſe, vaiomer, and Moſes ſaid, which beginneth the next chapter, vaiomer, and the Lord ſaid. 2. There is alſo a coherence of the matter and argument: for Moſes having ſhewed how the Tabernacle, where was Gods viſible preſence, was without the hoſt, which was a ſigne of the Lords departure from the people: now Moſes entreateth the Lord, that he would returne unto his people, and that his preſence might go with them. 3. Neither is there any neceſſitie, why the former hiſtorie ſhould be imagined to be tranſpoſed: and therefore according to Toſtatus owne concluſion, Semper eſt accipienda qualibet litera, &c. Every place of Scripture muſt be taken according to that order wherein it is ſet downe, without any anticipation, or recapitulation: niſi ex litera ipſa, vel alibi demonſtretur, &c. unleſſe by the letter it ſelfe, or otherwiſe it may be ſhewed, that it is otherwiſe to be taken, Toſtat. qu. 13.

Quest. XXIII. How Moſes deſireth to know, whom the Lord would ſend with them, ſeeing he had promiſed before to ſend his Angell.

Verſ. 12. THou haſt not ſhewed, whom thou wilt ſend with me. And yet the Lord had promiſed to ſend his Angell before them, verſ. 2.

1. Some thinke, that Moſes eauſatur differri adventum Meſſiæ, doth complaine that the comming of the Meſſiah was deferred, Lippom. And that he ſpeaketh of one, which ſhould lead them, not into that earthly countrie, ſed in terram viventium, but into the land of the living, Rupertus. But it is evident, that Moſes heere ſpeaketh of the conducting of them into the promiſed land, therefore he ſaith, verſ. 15. if thy preſence go not with us, carrie us not hence: neither was Moſes ignorant of the true Meſſias, who ſhould conduct him, and all Gods people to the heavenly Canaan.

2. Some againe take it, as though Moſes ſhould deſire ſome aſſiſtant, and aſſociate: videbat ſe ſolum, & omni auxilio deſtitutum: he ſaw himſelfe to be left alone, and void of all helpe: for Aaron, who was joyned with him before, had made himſelfe unworthie of the government; and Ioſhua was yet too young to take upon him the adminiſtration, Gallaſ. But it appeareth by the Lords anſwer, verſ. 14. My preſence ſhall go with thee: that Moſes required no humane coadjutor to be given him, but the Divine aſſiſtance.

3. Oſiander thinketh that Moſes thus ſaith, becauſe the Lord had retracted, and revoked his former grant, that his Angell ſhould go before them: and therefore laboureth for the renuing of this promiſe. But it is evident, that twice together the Lord promiſed to ſend an Angell, chap. 32. 34. and 33. 2. but it no where appeareth that the Lord retracted that promiſe.

4. Oleaſter

4. Oleaster thus reconcileth these places, Quia non acceptaverat Angeli ducatum, because Moses had not accepted of the guiding, and leading of an Angell, which was promised: therefore he further presseth God, to know who shall be sent with them. But seeing this Angell should cast out the Canaanites before them, vers. 2. it is not like that Moses would not accept of so gracious a promise.

5. Calvine thinketh, that the Angell before promised to be sent, was a created Angell, and ministring spirit: and that being a common benefit which is granted to other nations, over whom the Angels of God are set, therefore de continua serie prioris gratiæ certior fieri cupit, he desireth to be sure of the continuall course of Gods former grace.

But Moses could not be ignorant, that the Angell which was promised to be sent before them, was God himselfe; of whom the Lord had said before, chap. 23. 21. my name is in him.

6. Some understand it of the meanes, ostende mihi media & auxilia; shew mee the way and meanes, whereby I should overcome so many nations, Ferus. But this had been curiositie in Moses, to have enquired after the particular meanes, and it had shewed some weakenesse, and infirmitie in him.

7. Cajetane interpreteth thus, God had promised his Angell before, but he shewed not, quem Angelum, what Angell he would send, quanæ auctoritatis, cujus præsidentiæ, of what authoritie, and presidencie, Lippom. But Moses looketh higher, than to the presidencie of Angels: for he saith, vers. 15. If thy presence go not with us, carrie us not hence.

8. Burgensis hath this observation, that Moses intelligitur implicite petiisse, quod regimen populi esset sibi commissum, sine alicujus Angeli præsidentia, &c. is heere understood secretly to have made request, that the regiment of the people should have been committed to him, without the presidencie of any Angell. But Moses rather declined the government of the people, as being to heavie a burthen for him to beare as Numb. 11. 14. I am not able to beare all this people alone: therefore it is unlike that hee desired here the sole government. This opinion of Burgensis shall bee handled more at large in the next question following.

9. Therefore Moses meaning is nothing but this, that whereas onely he had a generall promise before, that an Angell should be sent, but the Lord himselfe would not go, that is, in those visible signes, and working wonders for them. Moses desireth here to be instructed in the manner, which he calleth the waies of God, vers. 13. whether the Lord would still go before them in the cloudie, and fierie pillar, and dwel among them in his Tabernacle, as he had promised. Iunius, who here translateth, Thou hast mee sowed, quæ missurus, what things thou wilt send: but this translation seemeth not to be so fit, sending in this sense, is properly of persons, not of things: yet the sense that Iunius giveth, is consonant unto the text. So also Lyranus, Non sufficiebat Mosi nisi ei assisteret modo prædicto; It contented not Moses, unlesse the Lord would assist them, as he had done before: Mosis petebat sibi assignari præcessorem, qui miracula operaretur; Moses desired heere one to be given to go before them, which should worke miracles, such as had been done before, Tostat. qu. 18.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether the sole government, and leading of the people, were here given to Moses, without the administration of Angels, as Burgensis thinketh.

NOw commeth Burgensis opinion before rehearsed, further to be discussed, and examined. His assertion is this, that Moses heere is desirous to know, whereas God had promised to send an Angell, whether præcursorem & præceptorem, a forerunner to drive out the nations before them, and an instructer also whom they should obey, as before was prescribed, chap. 23. 21. are now but onely as a guide and forerunner, no longer as a teacher and instructer: and so Moses doth secretly insinuate, that the sole government of the people should be committed unto him: wherein he saith the Lord condescended to Moses request; for this his opinion, further he alleageth these reasons.

1. The great merit and worthinesse of Moses, is to bee considered, who now after his fortie daies fasting, had profited and increased both in contemplation, having had conference with God, and in active vertues, both in shewing his zeale toward God, in putting the idolaters to the sword, and his great charitie in preferring their safetie before his owne salvation. And therefore the Lord held him meet and worthie, to whom the sole government of his people should be committed.

2. It is said also, Deut. 32. 12. The Lord alone led them, and there was no other God with him: God alone without the leading of any Angell guided and protected them.

3. Michael the Arch-angell appearing unto Ioshua, said, As a captaine of the Lords host, am I now come, Iosh. 5. 14. as if he should have said: Ego impeditus fui tempore Mosis magistri tui, sed nunc venio: I was hindred in the time of thy master Moses, but I now come: whereupon Burgensis inferreth, that subjectio populi Israelitici ad Angelum incepit à Ioshua, &c. the subjection of the people to the Angell, began from Ioshua, not from Moses.

Contra. Mathias Thoring in his replies, confuteth this phantasie of Burgensis, as hee calleth it, and thus answereth his reasons.

1. Though Moses were an excellent man and in high favour with God, yet was he not to be compared with Christ: Qui usus est ministerio Angelorum in multis, Who in many things used the ministerie of Angels: and of whom specially the Psalme speaketh, He shall give his Angels charge over thee, &c. Psalm. 91. not that Christ needed their ministerie, but propter Hierarchicam institutionem, because of the order of the celestiall Hierarchie: God hath appointed the Angels, and blessed Spirits, as the Ministers of his will.

2. And in that place in Deuteronomie, only strange gods are excluded, not the ministerie of Angels, which are subordinate unto God, for by the same reason, the ministerie of Moses should be excluded also.

3. Neither can it be affirmed, that the administration of the Angels was suspended untill Ioshuahs time: for seeing the law was given by the administration of Angels, as the Apostle sheweth, Galath. 3. much much more motio columnæ, the moving of the cloudie and fierie pillar, was by their ministerie: Deo tamen immutabiliter præsente & præsidente, God yet himselfe being unchangeably present and president. To this effect Thering, who here with great reason opposeth himselfe to Burgensis.

QUEST. XXV. When and where God thus said to Moses.

Vers. 12. THou hast said moreover, I know thee by name. 1. Burgensis thinketh, that although it be not found in these verie words, where the Lord so said to Moses: yet equivalenter dicta fuisse, &c. words equivalent, and of like force were uttered, when the Lord said, Let me alone, &c. For thereby Moses might perceive, that hee was well knowne unto God, seeing by his prayers hee was able to turne aside Gods judgements. But by the rehearsall of these words in the same phrase afterward, vers. 17. I know thee by name, it is evident that God had so said to Moses before.

2. Augustine therefore resolveth, Non omnia scripta esse, quæ Deus cum illo locutus est, That all things are not written which God spake unto Moses. Quæst. 153. in Exod.

3. Oleaster further giveth this conjecture: that it is like, Deum hæc in montis colloquio dixisse, that God spake these things unto him in the mount; for that was the most familiar conference, which God had with Moses.

QUEST. XXVI. How the Lord is said to know Moses by name.

I know thee by name. 1. This is spoken humanitus, according to the custome of men, who know many by their face, whom they know not by name; but Princes and great men doe know by name, and specially marke and regard those which doe attend upon them: and so the Lord saith thus much in effect, Novi te tanquam Ministrum, &c. I know thee as my Minister and servant, whom I often use, Oleaster. So the Lord also is said to know Moses by name, because he was in great reputation and favour with him, Tostatus. And that hee had chosen him out of many for his service, Calvin. And God is said to know them that please him, and not to know those which offend him: Non quia ignorat, sed quia non approbat; Not because he knoweth them not, but doth not approve them, Augustine. Quæst. 155.

2. God therefore herein sheweth what singular regard he had of Moses, in respect of his knowledge. God knoweth all men, yea all things by their names, as the Prophet saith, Esay 40. 26. Who hath created these things, and calleth them by their names; Non prodissent ad esse, nisi ea Deus vocasset ad esse; For nothing could have a being, unlesse God had called it to have a being, Tostat. qu. 13. But God in respect of his grace and favour, tooke speciall notice of Moses, whom he vouchsafed to speake with face to face.

3. God hath then a common knowledge of all his creatures, but a peculiar of his elect. Concerning his common knowledge: Some have thought that God hath not, particularium cognitionem, the knowledge of particular things, but as he knoweth his owne essence. Some, as Avicenna, that God knoweth, singularia universaliter, particular things universally, in respect of their generall causes, not of the particular effects. As if a man were skilfull in the celestiall globe, he might foresee the particular eclipses in their causes, though he see them not in particular. But we are not so to thinke of God, for nothing is hid from his knowledge, be it never so particular, as our Saviour sheweth in the Gospell, that the sparrow cannot light upon the earth without our heavenly Father, Thomas. Matth. 10. 29. 1. 36. q. in 1 Cor. 9. art. 2.

But beside this common and generall knowledge of the creatures, God taketh speciall notice of men, and among them of the elect; He is the Saviour of all men, but especially of those that beleeve. The Lord knoweth the wicked, but as a Judge to condemne them, suas novit ut pater, ut servet; hee knoweth his owne as a father to save them, Borrh. 1 Tim. 4. 5.

4. Yea, and among all the Lords people, Moses was of speciall grace with God: that whereas the people of Israel were not knowne in their owne name, but in the names of Abraham, Isaak and Iacob: Moses was knowne of God in his owne name, etiamsi non esset filius, although hee had not beene the son of Abraham, &c. Cajetan. And as the proper name sheweth some speciall propertie, so God had given him, specialem gratiam pra cæteris, speciall grace beyond others, Pelarg.

5. Procopius addeth further, that God hath a double knowledge; one whereby hee knoweth everie thing, and this knowledge, neque recipit magis, nec minus, is neither more nor lesse; hee knoweth all things alike: there is another knowledge, whereby the Lord only knoweth them that know him; as the Apostle saith, The Lord knoweth who are his. And of this reciprocall knowledge, the Apostle speaketh in another place, Seeing yee know God, or rather, are knowne of God, Galat. 4. 9. And this knowledge is divers, varie cognoscit Deus, God in divers degrees knoweth those which know him, as hee is diversly knowne of them.

6. Rupertus further here hath this note; it was no great a matter for Moses to be knowne of God, and called by his name Moses; for the Lord also called Pharaoh by his name; Et nunquid in regno ejus hujusmodi vocabulis indigebimus? And shall we need any such names in his kingdome? Therefore in that he saith, I know thee by name; it must be understood in nomine Dei, in the name of God, which is called upon over thee; for by this name is everie one knowne, that is, written in the booke of life, as it is said, Apocal. 3. 12. I will write upon him the name of my God, &c.

QUEST. XXVII. What Moses meaneth saying, Shew me thy way.

Vers. 13. SHew me now thy way. 1. The Latine text, for thy way, readeth thy faces whereupon many of the ancient writers have taken occasion of long discourses, concerning the vision of God; Super quæ (saith Lippoman) tot clarissima virorum ingenia multa scitu digna, &c. Upon the which word such excellent wits have set forth many worthy things, &c. But the foundation being not sound, that which they build hereupon is impertinent: concerning the vision of God, occasion shall bee offered to treat afterward.

2. Toſtatus, by way, underſtandeth, cognitionem creaturarum, the knowledge of the creatures, which is the way to know God by: but Moſes ſpeaketh of ſuch a familiar knowledge, whereby hee may finde grace in Gods ſight, as it followeth in the next words, which the generall knowledge of the creatures cannot doe.

3. Ferus herein noteth Moſes curioſitie, that he was not content an Angell ſhould goe before them, but vult ſcire modum, he would alſo know the manner; and therefore the Lord reproveth his curioſitie in the words following, My preſence ſhall goe before thee, as if the Lord ſhould ſay, Let this ſuffice thee, why deſireſt thou more? But it is evident, verſ. 17. that the Lord granted Moſes requeſt here, therefore the Lord reproved him not, but approved it.

4. Burgenſis giveth this ſenſe, as Moſes had inſinuated in his prayer, that the ſole regiment might bee committed unto him: ſo now hee prayeth, that the Lord would ſhew him his wayes, that is, his manner of government; Vt poſſim te imitari in hujuſmodi regimine; That I may imitate thee in this government. But it is ſhewed before, that Moſes had no ſuch intendment, to deſire the ſole regiment, queſt. 23, 24.

5. Borrhaius referreth it to the knowledge of the Meſſiah, who is the way, the life, the truth: but it is evident, verſ. 15. that Moſes ſpecially meaneth the way which they ſhould goe, and how they ſhould be directed unto Canaan.

6. Oleaſter, by the way, underſtandeth the will of God, that Moſes might underſtand which way to pleaſe him: for he that is acquainted with ones manners, beſt knoweth how to ſatisfie and content him: in which ſenſe David ſaith, Shew me thy wayes, and teach me thy paths. So alſo the Chalde, viam bonitatis tuæ, ſhew mee the way of thy goodneſſe. But theſe wayes the Lord had ſhewed unto Moſes in the mount, how he would be ſerved.

7. Some doe thus expound, Shew me thy wayes, per quam ſcilicet ducam populum tuum, by the which I ſhould lead thy people, Vatab. Ne in aliquem miſerabilem errorem inciderent, Leſt they might erre in the wilderneſſe, Lippom. So alſo Oſiander. But that which Moſes requeſted here, the Lord granted, yet the way in the wilderneſſe hee ſhewed him not, otherwiſe than going before them in the cloud, as hee had done before; for thereto afterward he deſired the company of Hobab to ſhew them their way, and the beſt camping places, Numb. 10. 31.

8. Gallaſius applieth it to the government, Teach me thy way, that is, rationem, quam in hoc tam difficili negotio ſequi debeam; the manner, which I ſhall follow in this difficult buſineſſe. But Moſes expounded it of Gods going with them, verſ. 16. as he had done formerly.

The Hebrewes fables.

9. The Hebrewes have here a fabulous narration, how Moſes made this requeſt, beſide his firſt intendtment, (which was onely to deſire a guide to be given them) upon this occaſion: There came a travellet and ſate downe by a well, and going away left a bag of money behinde him; there followed another, and carried it away; likewiſe came the third, whom the firſt returning for his money, finding there, demanded his bag of him, who denied it, and thereupon being provoked ſtill by the other, he killed him: Moſes ſeeing what had happened, deſired of God the way how to finde out the truth, and to give right judgement: and then the Lord anſwered him, that there was no wrong done; for the firſt paſſenger ſtole the money from the ſeconds father, and the third had ſlaine before the firſt paſſengers father, and therefore was juſtly killed by him.

But all this is a verie unlikely tale. 1. For Moſes being in the mount, neither could ſee what was done below; for then he might have ſeene the golden Calfe, before he came at the camp, as well as have heard the noiſe. 2. And Moſes ſtill waiting upon the Lord, though he had ſeene, could not have attended any other thing. 3. Neither was it likely that any travellers of other nations would have come ſo neere the hoſt of Iſrael, of whom they were afraid. 4. And the Iſraelites themſelves did not uſe to ſtray farre out of the hoſt, Toſtat. queſt. 13.

10. Moſes meaning then is this, oſtende te fore ducem noſtrum, &c. ſhew that thou wilt be our guide as before, notwithſtanding that threatning, verſ. 3. that I may know thee to be preſent, and finde favour to have acceſſe unto thee, as before, Iun. And Calvin collecteth well, that it appeareth by the Lords anſwer, verſ. 14. My preſence ſhall goe with thee, what Moſes deſired, and ſo uno verbo affirmat ſe præſturum, ut ſolebat, he affirmeth in one word, that he will goe before them, as he was wont.

QUEST. XXVIII. In what ſenſe Moſes ſaith, That I may finde grace, &c. which he was aſſured of.

Verſ. 13. THat I may know thee, and that I may finde grace in thy ſight. 1. Toſtatus maketh this as a part of Moſes petition: that although he had found grace already with God in many things, as in bringing the people out of Egypt, in dividing the red ſea, in talking with God face to face; yet that in this alſo he might finde favour with God, to ſee his glorie. But Lyranus better collecteth, that Moſes yet deſired not a ſight of the Divine Eſſence, ſed procedebat ordinatè, but he proceeded orderly in his petitions, and by degrees, as he found the Lord enclined in his gracious anſwers. And this to bee ſo, appeareth by the Lords anſwer, My preſence ſhall goe with thee, that yet Moſes deſired not a ſight of his glorie.

2. Cajetan underſtandeth it actively: after I have knowne thy way, that is, the diſpoſition of thy minde: Exhibebo me morigerum & gratioſum; I will ſhew my ſelfe dutifull and pleaſing, that is, I will apply and frame my ſelfe to pleaſe. But this phraſe is taken in the ſame ſenſe, as it is before, the Lord ſaith to Moſes, Thou haſt found grace in my ſight; where it is underſtood paſſively of grace and favour, which Moſes received of God.

3. Some take it to bee no part of Moſes petition, but an argument thereof from the effect: by this meanes, meanes, if thou wilt goe with us, I ſhall certainly know that I have found grace in thy ſight, Oſiander, Calvin, Simlerus. But Moſes could no way doubt of that, ſeeing the Lord had before certified him, that he had found grace; and upon that aſſurance Moſes groundeth his prayer: If I have found grace in thy ſight: this had beene to make the ground and foundation unſtable, and then his prayer alſo had failed.

4. Wherefore with Iunius, I take it rather to be a part of Moſes requeſt: that as God had beene many wayes gracious before unto Moſes, and he had diverſly found favour in his ſight; ſo that the Lord would vouchſafe in ſuch manner to be preſent ſtill, that Moſes might have acceſſe unto his preſence, and finde acceptance in his prayers as before. To the ſame purpoſe Lyranus, Oſtende te mihi familiarem, ſicut ante fabricationem vituli; Shew thy ſelfe familiar unto me, as before the making of the calfe.

Quest. XXIX. What is underſtood by Gods preſence.

Verſ. 14. MY preſence, or face ſhall goe with thee. 1. Auguſtine by face, here underſtandeth the knowledge of God: Facies Dei eſt cognitio Divinitatis, &c. The face of God is the knowledge of his divine nature. Auguſt. de eſſent. Divinitat. 2. Cyrillus ſaith, Facies Dei Spiritus ſanctus; The face of God is the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe he declareth the eſſence of God. Cyril. lib. 13. Theſauri. 3. Gregorie, Facies Dei reſpectus eſt gratiæ, &c. The face of God is his favourable reſpect, which ſhould bring them happily into the land of promiſe. 4. But here is a revocation of the former ſentence, the Lord had ſaid, hee would not goe up with them. Cajetan, Penitentia mina commutat comminationes Dei in promiſſiones; Repentance changeth Gods threatnings into promiſes, Eorus. And partly upon the peoples repentance, partly by Moſes earneſt interceſſion, the Lord is entreated to vouchſafe them his gracious preſence: whereas hee had ſaid, hee would not goe up with them, which the Lord did not pronounce abſolutely, but upon condition of their repentance. 5. The Lord ſaith then, My preſence ſhall goe before, that is, ego ipſe, I my ſelfe, Lyran. Sa. Aſpectabilis præſentia mea; My viſible preſence, as before, Iun. Sic te præcedam, ut vere ſentias me tibi adeſſe, &c. I will in ſuch manner goe before thee, as thou ſhalt verily perceive that I am preſent, as though thou diddeſt ſee my face in a glaſſe, Calvin. The Lord promiſed the like viſible ſignes of his preſence, which they enjoyed before. 6. And typically is here ſignified the bleſſed Meſſiah, who is called the face or preſence of God: as the Prophet ſpeaking of Iohn Baptiſt the fore-runner of Chriſt, I will ſend mine Angell, who ſhall prepare the way before my face, Borrh. Malach. 3. 1.

Quest. XXX. What reſt the Lord promiſeth to Moſes.

Verſ. 14. AND I will give thee reſt. 1. Cajetan referreth to Moſes: Non erit ſollicitus de eventibus; Hee ſhould not bee carefull of any event, ſeeing the Lord tooke upon him to guide them. 2. Oleaſter: I will cauſe thee to reſt, à ſollicitudine & precibus, from taking any further care, or intreating me, in granting thy requeſt. So alſo Marbach: Ut ſis ſecuro & tranquillo animo: That thou mayeſt be ſecure and quiet. 3. Lippoman underſtandeth it of Moſes death and departure, that God would bring him to reſt before the people came into Canaan, yet the Lord would notwithſtanding accompliſh his promiſe. 4. Gloſſ. interlin. underſtandeth here, requiem eternam, everlaſting reſt promiſed to Moſes. But it appeareth by Moſes reply, verſ. 16. ſhall it not be when thou goeſt with us: that this promiſe was not peculiar to Moſes, but generall to all the people, as Calvin well collecteth: Quod totius populi commune erat, Moſis perſonæ aſcribitur; That is aſcribed to Moſes perſon, which was common to all the people. 5. Therefore by reſt, Hugo de Sancto Victor. well underſtandeth, the leading of them into the land of promiſe. So alſo Simlerus: and their ſetling there after they came thither, ſignifying, ſub Dei patrocinio fore, that they ſhould be ſtill under Gods patronage and protection there, Calvin: and by this externall reſt is ſhadowed forth our reſt in Chriſt: as our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Come unto me all that labour, and you ſhall finde reſt unto your ſoules: which our ſpirituall reſt ſhall be perfited in that glorious reſt in the kingdome of God, Borrh.

Quest. XXXI. Whether Moſes here reſted in Gods anſwer, or begged any thing further.

Verſ. 15. IF thy preſence goe not with us. 1. Calvin taketh this to be a confirmation of the Lords former grant: and that Moſes embracing the Lords anſwer, ſaith thus much in effect; that if the Lord ſhould not ſo doe, grant them his preſence, it were better for them to periſh there, than to goe any further: he therefore taketh them to bee deceived, who thinke, diverſum aliquid hic notari, that ſome divers thing is here noted than before: for in the ſame ſenſe the Lord is ſaid to goe before them, and to goe with them in the middeſt of them.

But in that the Lord ſaith againe, verſ. 17. I will doe this thing alſo which thou haſt ſaid: it is evident that Moſes added ſomewhat to his former requeſt, and begged ſomewhat which was not yet granted: though Calvin thinketh it is but the repetition of the ſame thing, tollendæ dubitationis cauſa, to take from Moſes all doubting: So alſo Oleaſter. 2. Some doe thinke that Moſes here aſketh a divers thing from that which the Lord granted, where there are divers opinions: 1. Lyranus taketh it, that whereas God promiſed to goe before Moſes, he further entreateth that hee would totum populum præcedere, goe before, not him only, but all the people, &c. But the Lords promiſe was generall, that his preſence ſhould goe before, not expreſſing whom: and Moſes requeſt, (which the Lord yeeldeth unto) wherein hee maketh mention of the people, verſ. 13. ſheweth that the Lord ſo meant, that hee would be a guide to all the people.

2. Cajetan ſaith, becauſe the Lord had promiſed only in generall, My face ſhall goe, not expreſſing whether, ante eos, cum eis, poſt eos, before them, with them, or behinde them: now he entreateth that hee would goe with him. But Moſes repeating Gods words, doth put to no ſuch limitation: only hee ſaith, If thy preſence goe not, carrie us not hence: by which repeating of Gods words, Moſes knew well enough that God promiſed to goe before them.

3, Rupertus therefore and Toſtatus follow this ſenſe, that becauſe the Lord by his preſence might vnderſtand ſome Angell, he preſſeth God yet further, that he would goe himſelfe with them. But this anſwer is granted vpon the overſight of the Latine tranſlation, which readeth here, If thou wilt not goe before: whereas in the originall it is, being well tranſlated, If thy preſence goe not. So that Moſes by Gods preſence vnderſtandeth God himſelfe, as hee expoundeth, verſ. 16. ſhall it not bee when thou goeſt with vs?

4. Wherefore in this reply Moſes partly confirmeth the Lords anſwer, by ſhewing the inconvenience that would follow, that it were better for them to remaine there ſtill, than without Gods preſence to goe on, and offer themſelves to infinite danger: partly hee intreateth that God would not onely goe before them, as he did before others of the Heathen, whom he vſed in his ſervice, as he raiſed and ſtirred
Iſai. 45. 1, 2. up Cyrus, whom he conducted: as the Lord ſaith by his Prophet, Thus ſaith the Lord to Cyrus his anointed, whoſe right hand I have holden to ſubdue nations before him, &c. I will goe before thee, and make the crooked ſtraight, &c. But that the Lord would alſo dwell among them in his Tabernacle, as he purpoſed. And therefore the Lord herein condeſcending to Moſes, ſaith afterward, verſ. 17. I will doe this alſo which thou haſt ſaid, that is, Non ſolum præibo, ſed cohabitum ero; I will not only go before you, but with you alſo, Gallas. So Moſes alſo in ſaying, that the people may have preheminence, entreateth, ut non ceſſet Deus facere ſigna coram gentibus, that the Lord would not ceaſe ſtill to doe ſignes and wonders for his people before the nations, that they may know that God is among them, Ferus, Simlerus, Oſiander. For the faithfull are not ſatisfied, niſi Deum totum habeant, vnleſſe they have God wholly and all, Ferus.

QUEST. XXXII. Why Moſes addeth, Carrie vs not hence: ſeeing even in that place alſo they had need of Gods protection.

Verſ. 15. Carrie vs not hence, 1. Calvin ſo vnderſtandeth Moſes here, as though hee ſhould meane, that it were better, perire in deſerto, to periſh in the deſart, than to goe forward without Gods preſence. But Moſes by no meanes would have wiſhed the periſhing of the people, for whoſe preſervation he intreated ſo earneſtly before, wiſhing himſelfe rather to be raced out of Gods booke, than them to periſh.

2. Rupertus draweth it to a myſticall ſenſe: Carrie vs not hence, &c. Quid attinet nos vivere, &c. To what end ſhould we live and beget children, vnleſſe thou come, which onely canſt regenerate vnto life thoſe which are borne to death, &c. He applyeth it to the comming of the Meſſiah: but the phraſe here vſed, Carrie vs not hence, ſheweth that Moſes here ſpeaketh of going into the land of Canaan: for otherwiſe the Meſſiah might have beene given vnto them as well in this place, as in Canaan.

3. His meaning therefore is, melius eſſe iter non ingredi, that it were better for them not to goe thence at all, vnleſſe God would be their guide, Simler. not to ſtirre one foot from thence.

4. Which Moſes ſpeaketh not, as though they needed not Gods protection and preſervation there, but becauſe they were ſubject to many more dangers in walking forward ſtill: for they were to paſſe by the countries of divers nations, who would ſuſpect them, as having a purpoſe to invade their land: whereas now remaining ſtill, they ſhould not be moleſted of any, Toſtat. qu. 16.

QUEST. XXXIII. Why it is added, People vpon the earth.

Verſ. 16. ALL the people that are vpon the earth. 1. This is not added by way of diſtinction, as though there were any people vnder the earth: they which are gone out of the world are called Geneſ. 25. people, as Abraham is ſaid to be gathered vnto his people, but not properly, becauſe they are ſpirits, and not men: in hell there can be no people, becauſe there is no order, nor communitie: as where a people is, there is a mutuall communitie, and they are governed by Law: nor yet in heaven is there ſaid to bee a people properly, their bodies being laid aſide, their ſpirits only there living in bliſſe.

2. Neither are thoſe which are called Antipodes, which dwell on the other ſide of the earth, vnder, but vpon the earth as we are.

3. Sed poſitum eſt ex ſuperabundantia; This is added of abundance, for more plaine evidence and demonſtration, Toſtat. qu. 16.

QUEST. XXXIV. Whether Moſes deſired to ſee the verie divine nature and eſſence of God.

Verſ. 18. I Beſeech thee ſhew me thy glorie. 1. Ferus thinketh that Moſes only asked of God, to ſhew him certaine ſignes and evidences of his glorie, quibus omnes homines te agnoſcant, credant; whereby all men may acknowledge thee, and beleeve in thee. But this had beene a lawfull requeſt, and the Lord would not have denied it. 2. Some thinke that Moſes deſired, oſtendi ſibi aſpectabilem formam divinæ majeſtatis, that there might be ſhewed vnto him ſome viſible forme of the divine Majeſtie, not for his owne ſatisfaction, but to content the rude people, that he might make ſome deſcription thereof vnto them, who deſired to be inſtructed by ſome viſible demonſtration, which was the cauſe why they cauſed in Moſes abſence a Calfe to be made. But this had beene too much, to condeſcend to the weakneſſe and infirmitie of the people, and beſide it had been a ſuperfluous requeſt, ſeeing they had already viſible ſignes of Gods preſence, the cloudie and fierie pillar, ex Simlero.

3. Some are of opinion that Moſes deſired not to ſee Gods majeſtie with his bodily eyes, but that hee craved for his further confirmation in his calling, an inward knowledge of God, as hee was in himſelfe, Toſtat. qu. 18. So Gregorie: Moſes deſired, ut ſuperna eſſentia mentis oculis adeſſet, that the high eſſence (of God) might bee preſented to the eyes of the minde, 18. Moral. cap. 6. But it is evident by the deſcription following, that God did ſhew ſome viſible ſight of his glorie vnto Moſes, and therefore Moſes deſired not onely a ſpirituall, but a ſenſible demonſtration of Gods glorie.

4. The moſt are of opinion, that Moſes deſired to ſee, ipſam majeſtatem & eſſentiam Dei, The verie majeſtie majestie and essence of God, Osiander: Splendorem divinæ amplitudinis videre voluit; Hee would see the brightnesse of the divine excellencie, Borrh. So before them Theodoret; Divinam naturam se videre, oravit; He prayed that he might see the divine nature, &c. Shew me thy glorie, that is, te ipsum, ut videritin gloria, thy selfe, as thou art seene in thy glorie, Lyran. But it is not to bee thought that Moses so conceived, that God could be seene with corporall eyes, as Procopius noteth, he desireth to see Gods face, non tanquam eum cernere posset, not as though he could see him with his eyes.

5. Therefore I subscribe here to Osianders opinion, that he desired not to see, ipsum beatificum visionem, the verie blessed vision of Gods majestie, but onely his glorie: yet is seemeth by the Lords answer, that he craved to see, facialem visionem, the vision of Gods face, his request is, that he might have a more full sight of Gods glorie, which hitherto was hid in the cloud: so that by glorie he understandeth the lightsome brightnesse, which was overshadowed by the cloud. As S. Paul calleth the shining brightnesse of Moses face, the glorie of his countenance, 2 *Cor.*3.7. Therefore though the verie essence of God Moses could not request to see with the eyes of his flesh, yet Deum sibi clarioriforma manifestari, he desireth that God might in a more evident forme be manifested, than yet he had seene him in.

And their sense is not to be misliked, which thinke that Moses desired to see the Messiah in his glorie, whom he knew should appeare unto the world in humane shape: of which opinion this is a probable argument, because Christ in the dayes of the flesh was transfigured in mount Tabor, and was seene of Moses and Elias in shining glorie, far surpassing the Sunne, Pellicon, Lippoman. Matth.17.

QUEST. XXXV. What emboldened Moses to make this request.

Vers.18. I Beseech thee shew me thy glorie. 1. Moses is encouraged by the Lords gracious acceptance of his former petitions, to proceed yet further: first, hee intreated the Lord to pardon the peoples sinne, then that hee would vouchsafe them his gracious presence; and further, that hee would bee among them, and worke wonders still among the people, that all nations might know that Israel was gracious in Gods sight: now last of all, he desireth to see Gods essence and glorie, Ferus.

2. Like as among men, a servant seeing his master ready to grant him what he asketh, accipit audaciam plus petendi, taketh to himselfe courage and boldnesse to aske more; so doth Moses here, Lyran.

3. Moses here was set as it were upon Gods ladder, cernens uno superato gradu superesse alium, &c. hee seeing one degree or step to be behinde, after he had overcome one, giveth not over till hee came unto the top, Procop.

4. And Moses having spoken with God hitherto, as in a cloud, jam fretus intima illa familiaritate, now enjoying that great familiaritie; he desireth to see, and speake with God, submota nube, the cloud being taken aside, Borrh.

5. Tostatus thinketh, that Moses is the bolder to revive and renue this request, because he had moved it before, *vers.*13. but intermitting that request a while, hee turneth unto another, that God would goe with his people. But in that place the Latine text readeth corruptly; for Moses saith, shew me, deracheha, thy way, not, thy face.

QUEST. XXXVI. Whether Moses shewed any infirmitie in this request, to see Gods glorie.

1. Ferus affirmeth that Moses made this request; Non ex præsumptione sed ex fide & confidentia; Not of presumption, but of faith and confidence. But if Moses had asked this in faith and confident assurance, and not rather of some curiositie, the Lord would not have denied him.

2. Procopius and Gregorie Nyssenus thinketh, that God granted Moses request here: Divina vox per ea quæ negat, concedit quod petitur; The divine voice by that which is denied, granteth what was desired, but with some reservation, that Moses should have a desire to see God still: Nec enim quisquam ita videre Deum potest, ut in eo desinat videndi desiderium; For no man can so see God, that his desire shall cease to see him, &c. But it is evident by that which followeth, that God did not altogether condescend unto Moses desire; for he had asked to see that, which mans mortall nature cannot endure to behold.

3. Neither is Moses here to bee condemned of rashnesse, or presumption; for hee desired not this of vaine curiositie, but that it might be a signe of Gods grace and favour toward him and his people, because he was præco futuræ reconciliationis, to be a publisher and preacher of this reconciliation betweene God and his people, Iunius Analys. And herein Moses sheweth his great desire to increase still in the knowledge of God, which is commendable in all, Gallas. Nihil aliud fuit Mosi propositum, quam ad fidem animari, &c. And Moses propounded nothing else to himselfe, than to be animated and incouraged hereby, that he might more cheerefully goe on in his charge, Calvin.

4. Moses then in this his request, partly sheweth his infirmitie, and yet is more to bee excused: for Moses was not here led inani curiositate, with vaine curiositie, but desired this, to bee confirmed in the Lords gracious promise: yet it cannot be denied, quin hic Propheta modum excesserit, but that the Prophet here exceeded his bounds, Gallas. Patet ex repulsa inconsiderate fuisse prolapsum, &c. It is evident by the repulse which Moses had, that he was inconsiderate in his asking; yet was not fooolish curiositie that did draw from him this desire. hee propounded and set before him Gods glorie, and desired to bee confirmed in his calling: Vitiosum tamen fuit desiderium; It was notwithstanding a faultie desire; because he asked that which might have beene hurtfull unto him, for he could not have seene Gods glorie, and live, Calvin.

It was therefore commendable in Moses, that hee desired, in cognitione Dei magis & magis augeri, to increase more and more in the knowledge of God, Marbach. As Bernard speaketh of some: Qui pro fidei magnitudine inveniuntur, qui inducantur in omnem plenitudinem; Which are found worthy for their great faith, to be brought to a fulnesse (of knowledge:) talis erat Moses, qui audebat dicere, &c. such an one Bern.Serm.32.

was Moses, that was bold to say, shew thy selfe unto mee: Such was Philip, that desired the Father to be shewed them, and David, that said, Thy face will I seeke: Magna fides magna meretur, &c. magnis spiritibus magnus occurrit sponsus; A great faith is worthy of great things: to great spirits the Spouse offereth himselfe in stately manner. To this purpose Bernard.

Herein Moses desire then was to be commended, but he goeth somewhat beyond his bounds. Hereof Ambrose thus writeth excellently: Norat sanctus vates Domini, quod invisibilem Deum facie ad faciem videre non posset, sed devotio sancta mensuram super greditur, & putavit Deo etiam hoc esse possibile, ut corporeis oculis faceret, id quod est incorporeum comprehendi: non reprehensibilis hic error, sed etiam grata cupiditas & inexplebilis, &c. The holy Prophet of God knew well enough that he could not see the invisible God face to face, but his holy devotion exceedeth measure, and he thought this not to be impossible unto God, to make that to be comprehended with corporall eyes, which was incorporeall: this errour is not much to be reprehended, but his insatiable desire was gratefull and accepted, &c. In Psal.118.

Cyrill more fully toucheth this point, comparing together Moses desire here, and Philips, Ioh. 14. that Christ should shew them the Father: Studiosus quidem Philippus fuit, sed non adeo acutus, ut commode & apte, qua sit visio Dei, posset intelligere; Philip was studious and desirous, but not sharp enough to understand what the vision of God is, &c. And in the same place hee sheweth, that Philip failed in these two things, first in his understanding, for it was impossible for a man, oculis corporis Dei substantiam aspicere, with the eyes of his body to see the substance of God, and in his discretion: Non valde prudenter, cum imago & character patris verus adesset; Neither did he aske this wisely, seeing the true image and character of God Christ Jesus was present: seeing then that the vision and knowledge of the Son, sufficed to understand the nature of the father: supervacaneus iste Philippi sermo videtur: this speech of Philip seemed to be superfluous: Non tamen laude sua privandus Philippus; yet Philip is not to be deprived of his due praise, &c. And in these two things Cyrillus setteth forth his commendation: first, in respect of that which he desired, Visionem Patris cæteris omnibus rebus anteposuit; He preferred the vision of the Father before all other things: Secondly, in regard of the end; that whereas the Jewes boasted of Moses, that God spake with him in the mount, and shewed him his glorie: hee thought that the Jewes mouths might be stopped: Si Christus quoque credentibus in eum Patrem ostenderet, &c. If Christ also would shew the Father to those which beleeved in him, &c. Lib.9. super Ioan.cap 36.

In like manner Moses here is to be commended in these two things: first, ut plurimum spiritualia petit; Moses desireth all spirituall things, he desired nothing more than to see Gods glorie, which is all one with that petition, Hallowed bee thy name, Ferus. And Moses propounded unto him a good end, that hee might see Gods glorie, ut de eo populo tuo concionari queam, that I may preach thereof to thy people, Osiander.

So also in two other things Moses faileth, because, hac carne circundatus, being compassed about with this flesh, hee desired to see the greatnesse of Gods glorie: and that hee desired to see the brightnesse of Gods glorie, qui ministerium non lucis, sed umbræ teneret, who had the ministerie not of the light it selfe, but of the shadow, Borrh.

Quest. XXXVII. What the Lord meaneth by All my good.

Vers.19. I will make all my good goe before thee. 1. Some by all my good, understand all Gods creatures, which he saw in the creating of them to be good, and those hee caused to come before Moses, that in them hee might behold the glorie of God, ex Similes. But Moses which had writ the storie of the creation, therein had seene and considered Gods power before: and this is a common and ordinarie knowledge of God by his creatures: but here Moses craveth an extraordinarie demonstration of his glorie.

2. Tostatus by all the Lords good, understandeth the divers kindes of good things, bonum spirituale, both the spirituall good, which was the divine essence of God, & bonum corporale, a corporall good, which was a most glorious lightsome body, both which the Lord shewed unto Moses, quest. 18. But although it bee true, that Moses both inwardly in his minde, and outwardly with the eyes of his body, did see Gods glorie, yet the Divine Essence hee saw not; for no man can see God and live, as the Lord himselfe saith.

3. Ferus giveth this sense: thou needest not looke so high as unto my essence, inspice opera mea, inspice bona, quæ tibi feci & faciam, looke unto my workes, looke unto those good things which I have done for thee, and meane yet to doe, &c. But this sight and experience Moses had of the Lord before: he desireth to see him now in an extraordinarie manner and measure.

4. Lippoman followeth the same sense: Omne bonum meum, quod tibi donabo & isti populum, oculis tuis videbis; All my good, which I will bestow upon thee and this people, thou shalt see with thine eyes. But the demonstration here made of Gods glorie, was presently done: it cannot therefore bee referred to the benefits which the Lord intended afterward to bestow.

5. Some doe understand it of the life to come; Requiem æternam dabo tibi, in qua est omne bonum in visione Dei, &c. I will give thee everlasting rest, wherein there is all good in the sight of God, Gloss. interlin. Hugo de S. Victor.

So also Thomas Aquinas sheweth at large, how in illa felicitate, quæ provenit ex divina visione, &c. in that felicitie and happinesse, which commeth of the vision of God, all humane desire shall bee satisfied, and so God will shew them all his good: 1. Est quoddam humanum desiderium intellectuale; There is a certaine intellectuall desire of man in the knowledge of the truth which shall then be satisfied. 2. Est quoddam desiderium rationale; A certaine desire grounded on reason, as in attaining unto morall vertues: this Lib.3.cont. Gent.cap.63.

this ſhall alſo then be filled, when as reaſon ſhall be perfect without errour. 3. There is in a civill life deſired honour, and then ſhall they reigne with Chriſt. 4. And another thing is here deſired, fama celebritas, renowne and fame: and then the bleſſed Saints ſhall be famous in heaven. 5. Another thing here deſired is riches: and that bleſſed eſtate, eſt omnium bonorum ſufficientia, there is a ſufficiencie of all good things. 6. There is alſo delectatio perfectiſſima, moſt perfect delight, which is another thing ſought for here. 7. There is alſo a common naturall deſire in everie thing to deſire it owne conſervation, which then ſhall moſt abundantly be ſatisfied in everlaſting perpetuitie, which is ſubject to no change. In this manner he ſheweth how the Lord will ſhew all his good in the next life. But the Lords promiſe being here preſently performed, that what Moſes deſired, the Lord in part promiſed, and what he promiſed, he at this time ſhewed and effected: it cannot conveniently be put off to the future time.

6. Cajetan underſtandeth all this good, to be all thoſe good things, quæ continentur in ipſo Deo, which are contained in God, as his power, wiſdome, goodneſſe, juſtice, which the Lord proclaimed before Moſes: as all thoſe epithets are aſcribed unto God in the next chapter, verſ. 6, So alſo Oſiander: Revelabo tibi in verbo benignitatem; I will reveale unto thee my goodneſſe in word: that by his eares, rather than his eyes, hee ſhould know God. But it is evident in that the Lord granted Moſes to ſee his backe parts, verſ. 23. though hee could not ſee his face: that hee ſaw as well a viſion with his eyes, as heard a voice with his eares.

7. Therefore by Gods goodneſſe here is underſtood his glorie, as verſ. 22. while my glorie paſſeth by: ſo the Septuagint and Chalde tranſlate here: ſo expound R. Salom. Procop. Lyranus, Iun. Borrh. Oleaſter giveth this interpretation, I will cauſe to paſſe by all my good, that is, meipſum, in quo ſunt omnia bona; my ſelfe, in whom all good things are, which alſo ſhall be expreſſed by voice, &c. So that as Calvin well noteth: Quamvis exhibita fuerit oculis viſio, præcipuas tamen partes fuiſſe in voce; Although there was a viſion exhibited to the ſight, yet the greateſt matter was the voice, &c. Therefore God both to the ſight and hearing of Moſes made ſome demonſtration of his goodneſſe and glorie, ut omnes ejus ſenſus perculantur, that all his ſenſes might bee moved, Marbach. Cum oculis Moſis ſe ſignum objecturum promittit, tum additurum vocem, &c. He promiſeth both to object ſome viſible ſigne to his eye, and beſide to adde a voice, Gallaſ.

Quest. XXXVIII. How the Lord is ſaid to paſſe by, and why.

Verſ. 19. I will cauſe all my good to paſſe before thy face. 1. The Latine Tranſlator readeth: Ego oſtendam, I will ſhew all my good: but the Lord ſaith not ſo, for he did not ſhew unto Moſes all his goodneſſe; his face he did not ſhew, neither was Moſes able to ſee it. The Lord only ſaith, I will cauſe to paſſe by, that is, I will ſhew, veſtigia tantum meorum bonorum, onely certaine footſteps, and markes or ſignes of my goodneſſe, Vatab.

2. In that he ſaith, I will cauſe to paſſe by, it ſheweth that it was but a tranſitorie viſion; Tranſitus ſignificat viſionem exigui temporis; The paſſing by ſignifieth, that it ſhould bee but a viſion of a ſhort time, Calvin. Non fit, ut in illud figi poſſet intuitus videntis; not ſo, as if he that ſeeth could faſten his eyes upon it, but as one that haſtily paſſeth by, Cajetan.

3. Who further noteth another circumſtance, the prepoſition here uſed, gnal, ſignifieth above thy face, rather than before: thoſe things which are above us, we ſee onely on the one ſide, that which is next below: a full ſight we cannot have of thoſe things which are above.

4. The like tranſitorie ſight and glimpſe, as it were of the divine glorie, is ſet forth afterward by the like circumſtances, as that God will put Moſes in a cleft of a rocke, hee ſhall ſee but as thorow a crevie or ſmall hole; then God will cover him with his hand, and he will ſpeedily paſſe by, and in this manner hee will but ſee his back-parts: all this ſheweth that Moſes ſhould not have a full and perfect ſight of Gods glorie, but in part onely, and in ſome ſmall meaſure.

5. Procopius ſtraineth this ſenſe, I will cauſe my glorie to paſſe before thee: Tu poſt gloriam meam, quæ ab æterno eſt, creatus es; Thou waſt created after my glorie, which was from all eternitie: or I will goe before with my glorie, & tu ſequeris ut famulum decet, &c. and thou ſhalt follow as it becommeth a ſervant. But the Lord ſpeaketh not here of any ſuch tranſition of his glorie from the beginning, but his paſſing by at this time: neither did Moſes follow when God paſſed by, but was ſtill in the cleft of the rocke.

6. Auguſtine underſtandeth it myſtically, of Chriſts paſſing out of this world to his Father: Ipſe ante omnes Sanctos tranſit ad Patrem; He before all his Saints paſſed out of this world to his Father: although this may be typically ſo applyed, yet there is beſide an hiſtoricall ſenſe, how at this time the Lord paſſed by Moſes in his glorie. Quæſt. 154. in Exod.

Quest. XXXIX. How the Lord is ſaid to proclaime his name.

Verſ. 19. I will proclaime the name of Iehovah before thee. 1. Here then appeareth the great errour of the Latine tranſlation, which, chap. 34. verſ. 5. readeth, that Moſes proclaimed the name of the Lord, whereas Moſes is not there in the originall. 2. Auguſtine here taketh the active for the paſſive, and thus interpreteth it, that God would ſo bring it about, ut vocetur Deus in omnibus gentibus, that he ſhould be called God among all nations. 3. The Gloſſ. interlinear. thus expoundeth: Invocabor in nomine Filii per Prædicatores & Apoſtolos; I will be called upon in the name of my Sonne by the Preachers and Apoſtles. 4. The author of the ſcholaſticall hiſtorie thus: Faciam me vocari Deum veſtrum ex miraculis: I will cauſe my ſelfe to be called your God by my miracles. But whereas the Lord ſpeaketh here of the proclaiming of his name at this time, as it followeth afterward, chap. 34. 6. theſe three laſt expoſitions being referred to the time to come, cannot ſtand in this place. Quæſt. 154.

5. R. Salom.

5. R. Salom. hath here a fabulous conceit, that God had written on his back-parts thirteene of his names, which Moses did read as the Lord passed by: for the same word kara signifieth as well to read, as to crie out and proclaime. But beside that this conceit is frivolous, it is against the text; for the word karathi is in the first person, the Lord saith, I will proclaime.

6. Lyranus hath another curious collection, who understandeth it, de vocatione electorum in divina natura existentium; of calling the elect in the knowledge of God by their names. As though Moses in this cleare sight of Gods glorie, did see the names of Gods elect.

Burgensis confuteth this exposition, as being both against the text, for the Lord speaketh of proclaiming his owne name, not of the names of the elect: and beside, Moses asked no such thing; nor yet doth God reveale unto his servants the number of the elect.

Matthias Thoring taketh upon him in defence of Lyranus, to confute Burgensis, but his reply is verie unsufficient: the two first reasons of Burgensis are verie evident; to the third he answereth: that seeing Moses saw a representation of the Divine Essence, he saw also, relucentia in ipsa, those things which did appeare and shine in that brightnesse; and yet it followeth not that hee should see all: hee might see in that glorious representation, the election of some, though not of all: for this hee saith, was one of the errours condemned at Paris, Quod omnis videns verbum & relucentia in verbo, videt omnia, quæ verbum; That he which seeth the Word, and all things shining in the Word, doth see all which the Word seeth.

Contra. 1. But if, as they imagine, Moses then saw in Gods glorie, and now the Saints in heaven see in Christ, as in a glasse, the names of the elect, then must they see all their names: as in a glasse one cannot but see whatsoever is represented therein. 2. And yet it followeth not, that he which so seeth should see all which the Word seeth, for the Word seeth more than is represented, as they imagine, in the reflexion of the brightnesse thereof.

6. The meaning then is this: Deus promulgabit nomen suum; God will publish his name. It was a great benefit that God yeeldeth himselfe in part to be seene; but it is a greater that he revealeth himselfe by his voice: Multæ enim visiones frigida sunt, si sermo non accesserit; For many visions are but cold, if there be no word added thereunto, Calvin. Perstrepet in auribus nomen Domini, &c. The name of God shall sound in his eares, Borrh. And God will manifest himselfe in that name, in quo jam Mosi innotuit, wherein he was made knowne to Moses already, namely, Iehovah; Gallas. And beside in the hearing of Moses, recitabit omnia epitheta & cognomina, he will rehearse all his epithetes and other names, as it followeth, *chap.*34.6. Ferus, Osiander. And all this was both for Moses better understanding, that those things which were represented, per gloriosam illam, by that glorious resemblance, should more fully be declared to Moses, Burgens. As also, Vocabo coram te, ut videas manifestè, &c. I will call before thee, that thou mayest see manifestly, that which yet thou seest but darkly, Rupertus. The Lord by calling stirred up Moses attention. And further, it was a watch-word to Moses, when he should see God: the Lord, when his glorie was passed by, should then crie, transit, aut adest Dominus, now the Lord passeth by, or is present, Oleaster. Dominus est coram te, the Lord is now before thee, Vatab. And then, and not before, Moses should looke out upon God, as he passed by.

QUEST. XL. Why these words are added, I will shew mercie, &c.

Vers.19. FOr I will shew mercie, &c. 1. Oleaster giveth this reason of these words, that in this speech the Lord performeth that which he said before, that he would shew him all his good: Quod maximè in misericordia consistit; which chiefly consisteth in mercie. So also Ferus. But if all the Lords good had consisted herein, in shewing mercie, then superfluous mention should have beene made afterward of his justice, *chap.*34.7. not holding the wicked innocent, &c. 2. Osiander taketh it to be an exposition of the former words, I will proclaime my name, that is, declare what my will is toward men, in shewing mercie to those on whom I will have mercie. But this is not the whole will of God, for he doth visit the iniquitie of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth generation, as well as he reserveth mercie to thousands. 3. Tostatus thinketh, that hereby Moses is admonished not to thinke, that this grace was shewed him for his owne merits. But Moses ascribeth all to the favour and grace which hee found with God, *vers.*12.

3. Therefore it is rather yeelded as a reason of the Lords grace and favour, extended here unto Moses. 1. Which some apply thus, that the Lord hereby gave Moses like privilege, as to the Fathers, Abraham, Isaak and Iacob, that as he shewed mercie to them, so likewise he would unto Moses, that he should not need to alleage the merits of the Fathers, as he had done before, Lyranus. But Moses urged not the merits of the Fathers before, he onely insisted upon Gods promise made unto them. 2. Some thinketh that the Lord here maketh a reservation and exception of the people: that though hee shewed this favour to Moses, yet he would doe with the rest as he thought good, Gallas. 3. But Calvin commeth neerer the sense, making this a reason, why the Lord shewed this glorious vision more unto Moses, than to any other, because it was his good pleasure. So also Simler. Likewise Iunius, Non omnino & omnibus sed quibus, quando & quantum decretum est, &c. God doth not thus reveale himselfe to all, and at all times, but to whom, when, and how much he hath decreed from all eternitie. 4. Out of this place brought in upon this particular occasion, the Apostle, à singulari causa ad universalem accommodat, doth of a singular matter make a generall doctrine, *Rom.*9.15. Iun. That God cannot be thought to be unjust, si aliis præteritis alios eligat, if he chuse some, pretermitting others, Calvin. 5. And here Moses minde is elevated and lifted up to consider, who it is, in whom the Lord saith, I will have mercie, in Messia meo, in my Messiah, Borrh.

QUEST.

QUEST. XLI. Why the word is here doubled.

BUt why the ſame word is repeated, I will ſhew mercie, on whom I will ſhew mercie: 1. Auguſtine giveth this reaſon, Deus ſuæ miſericordiæ firmitatem, iſta repetitione monſtravit; God would by this repetition ſhew the ſtableneſſe and ſureneſſe of his mercie: as when Amen, Amen is doubled, and as Pharaoh had two dreames of the ſame thing. Quæſt. 154. in Exod.

2. But here is more than a bare repetition: if the Lord had ſaid, I will have mercie, I will have mercie, then there had beene nothing but a bare iteration: therefore Calvin better obſerveth, that this kinde of doubling and repeating the ſame words is uſed in all languages, ubi cauſæ inveſtigationem excludere volumus, when we will have no other cauſe ſought out, as Pilate ſaid, What I have written, I have written.

3. Though there is no great difference in the ſignification of theſe words, I will ſhew mercie, &c. and have compaſſion, &c. yet in the originall they are diſtinguiſhed: for the firſt word is chanan, which ſignifieth to give, to beſtow, to ſhew grace; the other is racham, that betokeneth to be inwardly moved with pitie and compaſſion, Oleaſter. The firſt then ſignifieth that favour which is ſeene in beſtowing of gifts; the other in remitting of ſinnes and delivering from evill.

QUEST. XLII. Of the divers kindes of mercie which the Lord ſheweth.

I will ſhew mercie. There is mercie of divers ſorts. 1. Firſt there is a generall mercie, which the Lord extendeth toward all, both good and bad, as in granting the Sunne and raine indifferently to all. 2. There is a peculiar mercie toward his owne children, which alſo is ſhewed in divers manner. 1. As in the remiſſion of great ſinnes, as David prayeth, as Pſal. 51. 1. Have mercie upon mee according to thy loving kindneſſe, &c. 2. There is mercie alſo ſeene in forgiving ſinnes of ignorance, as S. Paul ſaith, I was received to mercie, becauſe I did it ignorantly, 1 Tim. 1. 13. 3. There is a mercie, which they taſte of that are in Gods favour, and doe love him, which is ſeene not only in the remiſſion of ſinnes, but in the heaping of bleſſings upon them: as the Lord ſheweth mercie unto thouſands, upon them that love him. 4. And mercie is alſo exerciſed toward them, which being unable to performe any thing of themſelves, are thereunto aſſiſted and aided by grace, as the Apoſtle ſaith, It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that ſheweth mercie, Rom. 9. 16. This mercie here mentioned is of that kinde which is peculiar to Gods choſen, Procopius.

QUEST. XLIII. Of the divers kindes of viſions and ſights of God.

Verſ. 20. THou canſt not ſee my face. That wee may ariſe by degrees to come to the handling of Moſes Sinai ſight: firſt is to be premiſed, the conſideration of the divers wayes and kindes of the viſion or ſight of God. We are ſaid to ſee either with the eyes of our bodies, or with the eyes of our minde; and each of theſe hath a threefold diſtinction or difference: for there is of each an ordinarie, or extraordinarie ſight in this life, but the ſame imperfect, and in the next a perfect ſight: ſo there are ſix kindes of viſions in all, three of the body, and three of the minde.

Firſt, concerning the ordinarie ſight of the body. 1. It is that whereby wee ſee and behold ſenſible things, which are object to the eye, which diſcerneth nothing but that which is of a finite and circumſcriptible nature. 2. The extraordinarie, when God in viſion ſheweth him in ſome externall forme and ſhape, which is of two ſorts, either in corporali ſpecie, in ſome corporall ſhew: Quod voluntas elegit non quod natura formavit; Which it pleaſed God to chuſe not of natures forming, Auguſtine. The other is in humani corporis veritate, in the aſſumption of a true humane body: ſo Chriſt was ſeene in humane fleſh. 3. Then in the next world, when our bodies ſhall be glorified, wee ſhall ſee more perfectly, as Iob ſaith, I ſhall ſee God in my fleſh. Iob 19. 26.

Secondly, the ſight of the ſoule alſo is divers. 1. There is an ordinarie ſight, which is of two ſorts, either common, which is the ſight and knowledge of God that commeth by the creatures, Rom. 1. 20. or peculiar to the children of God, which is the ſight of him by faith, whereby the heart is purified, Acts 15. 9. and the eyes of the minde cleared.

2. There is an extraordinarie ſight and illumination by the minde, as when God did manifeſt himſelfe unto the Prophets, by inward viſions and revelations. As when Peter fell into a trance, and ſaw that foure cornerd ſheet, Acts 10.

3. And in the next life, our inward ſight of God ſhall be perfected, as Saint Paul ſaith, Now wee ſee thorow a glaſſe darkly, but then face to face: now wee know in part, but then ſhall wee know even as wee are knowne. Now in order it ſhall be diſcuſſed, by which of theſe kindes of viſion God may be ſeene and apprehended of man. 1 Cor. 13. 13.

QUEST. XLIV. Whether God may be ſeene with the eyes of the body in this life.

FIrſt, it is not poſſible to ſee God in this life with the eyes of the body. 1. For it muſt needs follow, that God ſhould be of a corporall and materiall ſubſtance, if he might be ſeene with carnall eyes; for nothing by the eyes of fleſh can bee diſcerned, but that which is viſible, finite, and circumſcriptible: but the Lord is infinite: Anthropomorphites and Andian Heretikes did hold indeed, that God himſelfe had an humane and viſible ſhape, and that man according to his body is the image of God; which hereſie is contrarie to the Scripture, which ſaith, that God is a Spirit: therefore of no bodily ſhape.

2. And God being of a ſpirituall nature, cannot be ſeene by the eyes of the body; for that which is of a ſpirituall nature, non cadit ſub ſenſus corporis, doth not come under the ſenſe of the body, Simler.

3. It is ſaid that God is love, which ſheweth his ſubſtance, not a qualitie, as our love is: then as faith, hope, and love in us cannot be ſeene, much leſſe can God.

4. The image of God in man, which is the inward renovation of the minde, cannot bee ſeene, much leſſe God himſelfe, whoſe image we beare.

5. The

5. The minde also of man is invisible, multo magis simplicissima illa & infinita mens, much more that most pure and infinite minde, Stuler.

Hom. 4. de incomprehens. natura Dei.

6. Chrysostome giveth this reason, Deus simplex omni compositione abjuncta, nulla forma aut figura effigiatus; God is of a simple nature without any composition, he hath no forme or figure, &c. But nothing is perceived of the sense, but that which is of a mixt and compound nature that hath forme and fashion.

7. Gregorie Nyssene: Est interminabilis divinæ naturæ, & interminabile comprehendi non potest; The divine nature is infinite, and not to be confined or limited, and that which is not to be limited cannot be comprehended, &c. And that God cannot be confined or determined, he thus sheweth: Quod continet majus est contento; That which containeth is greater than that which is contained: and it is also heterogeneæ naturæ, of another nature: as the fish is confined in the water, and the bird in the aire. But nothing is greater than God, and he being perfectly good, that which should confine him, being of a divers kinde, must be perfectly evill. So it would follow, Deum vinci à malo, that God should bee overcome of evill.

Super Ioan. lib. 9. cap. 36.

8. Cyrill useth this argument: God is said to have beene seene of divers of the Saints, but none of them did thinke that they saw the verie nature of God: Aliter aliud vidit, aliter Esaias, aliter Ezechiel, &c. Therefore everie one saw God after a divers sort, otherwise Esaias, after another manner Ezechiel saw him, &c. If they had seene the verie substance of God, then God must be of a divers nature and substance, for he was diversly seene.

Cyril. ibid.

9. And that it is impossible: Oculis corporis substantiam Dei aspicere; with the eyes of the body to see the substance of God, it is evident by our blessed Saviours answer unto Philip, who desired Christ to shew them the Father: He that hath seene me, hath seene the Father: insinuating thereby, that God cannot otherwise be seene of us, than in Christ his Son, who is the verie engraved forme of his person. And if Christ would not grant any such carnall vision of God unto his Disciples, who were conversant with him in the flesh, who can in this life expect it?

Ioh. 14. 9.
Heb. 1. 3.

Isai. 6. 1.

10. Whereas then the Prophet Isaiah saith, I saw the Lord sitting upon an high throne, and he is said to have beene seene of other of the Saints: wee must not thinke that they saw Gods substance with their carnall eyes, sed juxta possibilitatem humanam, non ut est, sed ut voluit se videre, but as mans nature could see him, not as hee is, but as it pleased him. Hierom, who in the same place reproveth the Jewes, who affirme that Isaias was slaine of their fathers, because he writeth he saw God with his eyes, whereas Moses saw only Gods back-parts: for seeing Moses also writeth, that God talked with him face to face, imperfecte & Mosen cum Esaia, yee might as well have killed Moses as Isaias.

Hierom. Damasen. de verb. Isaiæ.

QUEST. XLV. Whether we shall see the divine nature with the eyes of our bodies in the next life.

BUt it is a greater question, whether the Saints shall not in the next life see the Divine Essence with their bodily eyes, which some doe affirme upon these reasons. 1. Iob saith he shall see God in his flesh, Iob 19. that is, in the resurrection. 2. S. Paul also saith, that then we shall see face to face, 1 Cor. 13. 13. 3. We shall then be like unto the Angels, which doe behold the face of God. 4. Our bodies shall then be spirituall, and therefore wee shall even with our bodily eyes, see and discerne Spirits. 5. Otherwise, if our eyes should not behold God, what use should there be of our sight?

Contr. 1. The Hebrew Interpreters expound that place of Iob, of his sight of God in this life: but taking it rather to be spoken of his state and condition in the resurrection, as most of our writers doe interpret: we deny not but then the Redeemer, who is cloathed with our flesh, shall be seene of us even with these our eyes, as Iob there saith. But it is one thing to see the person of the Mediatour, another to see the divine essence and nature.

2. Saint Paul speaketh not of the sight of the bodily eyes, but of the sight of the minde, as hee expoundeth himselfe: Now I know in part, but then shall I know, even as I am knowne.

3. The likenesse & similitude which we shall have with the Angels, holdeth not in everie thing, as that we shall have the like nature or knowledge, but in that wherein the resemblance is made, as that we shall neither marrie, nor be married, nor need meat and drinke, but in that respect shall be as the Angels: and yet neither doe the Angels fully comprehend the divine nature, as afterward shall be shewed.

4. Our bodies are said to be spirituall, not as opposite to the nature of our bodies now, which shall remaine, but as set against the corruptible and earthly qualities thereof: our bodies shall be bodies still, but not earthly naturall corruptible bodies, as they are now, therefore the argument followeth not.

5. And this shall be the use of our heavenly sight: wee shall see God in his workes, but after a more cleere manner than now: we shall see the elect, we shall behold Christ himselfe.

Upon these reasons Stuler concludeth: In futura vita nos oculis corporis corpora tantum visuros; In the next life we with our bodily eyes shall see onely bodies, and not the essence of God.

Thom. super Iob cap. 19. lect. 3.

Thomas Aquine also thus interpreteth Iobs words: I shall see God in my flesh: I, consisting of body and soule; shewing, Quod suo modo visionis illius erit particeps corpus; That the body also after a sort shall be partaker of that vision; not that the eyes of the body shall see the Divine Essence: Sed quia oculi corporis videbunt Deum hominem factum; But because the eyes of the body shall see God which was made man: Videbunt etiam gloriam Dei in creatura refulgentem; They shall also see the glorie of God shining in the creatures.

But this further must bee added, that though the divine essence of God shall not bee seene of our bodily eyes then, because God is of an infinite and incomprehensible nature: yet the blessed Spirits, the Angels and Ministers of God shall bee seene of the elect: Angelorum & beatorum omnium consortio, conspectu, & colloquio fruemur: We shall enjoy the fellowship, sight, and conference of the Angels, and of of all the blessed, Bucan. For if the eyes of the young man were so opened at the prayer of the Prophet, that he saw the Lords heavenly host, which appeared in the likenesse of fierie horse and charriots: much more shall our eyes then be so cleared, as that we shall see the Angels themselves, though not in their very spirituall nature, yet in such sensible manner, as that we shall both converse, & have conference with them. How we shall see the Angels in the next life. Luk.39.9. 2 King.6.17.

QUEST. XLVI. Whether the Divine Essence can be seene and comprehended by the minde of man in this life.

NOw it followeth to be considered, seeing Gods essence cannot be seene by our bodily eyes, either in this life or the next; whether that in our minde and understanding here in this life, wee may attaine to the sight and knowledge of God: where that position of Thomas Aquine is to be held: Impossibile est animæ hominis secundum hanc vitam viventis essentiam Dei videre: It is impossible for the soule of man in this life, to see the essence of God: the reasons whereof are these.

1. Because the soule being in the body naturally, knoweth not any thing, nisi quæ habent formas in materia, but such things as have their forme in some matter, or may be knowne by such things: but the essence of God, per naturas rerum materialium, &c. by the nature of materiall things cannot be knowne, Thomas. 1.part.qu. ar.11.in Cor.

2. Almost all our knowledge, initium habet à sensibus, taketh the beginning from the sense: but God cannot be perceived by sense, Simler.

3. Ambrose likewise saith, Anima carnis hujus maculis & collutionibus obumbrata faciem Dei syncere videre non possunt; The soules being shadowed and obscured with the spots and blemishes of the flesh, cannot cleerely here see the face of God, &c. And he further giveth this reason: Qui faciem Dei videt, esse sine peccato; He that seeth the face of God, must be without sin: as our Saviour saith, Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. But none are here without sin, therefore none here can see God. In Psal.118. Matth.5.

4. Gregorie Nyssen; Proprium suum est ut omnem cognitionem excedat; It is proper and peculiar unto God, to exceed and goe beyond all knowledge: Qui vere est is cognitione non comprehenditur; He that truly is, and the cause of the being of all things, cannot be comprehended by any knowledge, &c. The minde of man being of a finite nature, cannot comprehend that which is infinite and incomprehensible.

5. Further, Bernard to this purpose urgeth that place, 1 Ioh.3.2. We know that when he shall appeare, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; whereupon he inferreth thus: Videre illum jam in hoc mundo illuminatus potest, tanquam jam in aliquo similis, sicuti est, non omnino potest, quia nondum perfectè similis; He that is illuminate may see him in this world, as in some thing like unto him; but as he is, hee cannot see him, because he is not perfectly like him, &c. If then we shall only see him as he is, when wee shall be like him, then now in this life we cannot see God, because we are not like him. Serm.31.

6. Irenæus enforceth this argument: Si neque Moses vidit Deum, nec Helias, &c. If neither Moses saw God, nor Elias, nor Ezechiel, but those things which they saw were similitudines claritatis Domini, only similitudes of divine brightnesse, and prophecies of things to come, it is manifest, quoniam Pater invisibilis, that the father is invisible; of whom the Scripture saith, Never any man saw God, &c. For if any had seene God, it is most like those great Prophets should have had a sight of him; but they saw him not otherwise than by certaine similitudes. Adverſ. hæreſ. Valentin.lib.4. cap.37.

7. Cyrillus affirmeth the same out of that place, Ioh.1.18. No man hath seene God at any time: the only begotten Son of God, &c. hath declared him: Soli consubstantiali Filio Pater visibilis est, & nulli præter eum alii; Only the Father is visible to his Son, of the same substance with him, and beside him unto none. Super Ioan. lib.1. cap.22.

8. Whereas then the Prophet Isaiah saith, that he saw the Lord, chap.5.1. and the Scripture testifieth that God spake with Moses face to face: and that the pure in heart shall see God, Matth.5.8. These places are either understood of the vision and sight of God by faith, as Ioh.14.9. He that seeth mee, seeth my Father: or else of the symbolicall sight of God, by certaine similitudes and representations: as Cyrillus calleth it, Symbolica similitudo divinæ gloriæ, a symbolicall similitude of the divine glorie: as Ezechiel also saith, it was visio similitudinis gloriæ Domini, a vision or appearance of the similitude of the glorie of the Lord. And so Bernard well concludeth, Itaque de ipso vides, sed non ipsum; Therefore in this life thou seest somewhat of God, but not God himselfe. Cyrill. ibid. Bernard. ibid.

QUEST. XLVII. Whether the Angels now, or the soules of men, shall fully see the Divine Substance in the next life.

THat the Saints in the next world shall see God, the Apostle is an evident witnesse: that when hee appeareth we shall be like him, for wee shall see him as he is: wee shall see him after a more cleare manner, than either Moses saw him in the mount, or our parents before their fall. But even then we shall not bee able fully to comprehend the divine substance of God: we shall see him, qualis est, sed non quantus est, as he is, but not all that he is, Bucanus.

1. Deus vere incomprehensibilis dicitur; God is said truly to be incomprehensible; therefore hee cannot of the creature be comprehended: Nec etiam Angelica natura comprehensibilis est; No nee cannot be comprehended of the Angelicall nature, for then he were not simply incomprehensible, Alcuinus. Lib.2. de Trinit. cap.16.

2. Chrysostome concludeth as much: Ne supernæ virtutes Deum posse videre; That the high powers (of the Angels) cannot see God, out of that place, Isai.6.2. where it is said, that the Seraphim with two of their wings covered their face: Cum de Seraphim audis oculos avertisse, pinnas visui obduxisse, &c. when thou hearest that the Seraphim turned away their eyes, and drew their wings over their sight, &c. Nihil aliud docet, nisi ejus cognitionem integram non potuisse recipere, &c. It teacheth nothing else, but that they were not capable of the full knowledge of God, neither durst behold his most perfect substance, &c. If then the Angels cannot comprehend the Divine Essence, much lesse the spirits of men. As Alcuinus inferreth: Chryſoſt. ubi ſupra.

Alcuin. ibid. inferreth: Quamvis usque ad aqualitatem Angelicam humana post resurrectionem natura perficias, videre tamen essentiam ejus plene non valet; Although our humane nature should attaine after the resurrection, to the equalitie of Angels, yet it should not be able fully to see Gods essence. So also Calvin; Licet Angeli excellentiore modo, &c. Although the Angels are said to see Gods face after a more excellent manner than men, yet they are not capable of his infinite greatnesse which would swallow them up, quæst. ex novo Testamento.

Quæst. 71. 3. Augustine also urgeth that place, Ioh. 1. 8. No man hath seene God at any time, the onely begotten Sonne, which is in the bosome of his Father, hath declared him: Sinus Patris, quid est, nisi affectus in charitate veri Patris per naturæ unionem in filium? What is the bosome of the Father, but the affection of true charitie of the Father, by the union of nature toward the Sonne, &c. Whereupon it followeth, that the Sonne only, who is of the same substance and nature with the Father, hath seene him. But the soules and spirits of the Saints are not in the bosome of God, nor of the same substance, therefore they cannot see God in his divine nature.

Bernard. ibid. 4. Further Bernard thus inferreth upon that place, 1 Ioh. 3. 2. We shall see him as he is, for we shall be like him: Non aliud est videre sicuti est, quam esse sicuti est: It is no other thing to see him as he is, than to be as he is, &c. But we shall not bee altogether like unto God, only in some sort, therefore wee shall not see God in his nature perfectly or altogether.

5. Therefore, whereas the same Bernard saith, Talis visio non est vitæ præsentis, &c. Such a vision (to see God in his nature) is not in this life present, but is reserved for the time to come, &c. And Augustine, Ad Paulinam de videndo Deo. Promittitur sanctis in alia vita: That sight is promised to the Saints in the next life, &c. they must bee understood to speake by way of comparison, that in the next life wee shall see God in his owne nature, that is, more fully and clearely than we can see him here: not that indeed the divine nature shall then be comprehended of us. There is great difference betweene the sight of God here now, and that which we shall have of God then: now our light is in us, per modum passionis transeuntis, as an impression or passion passing, as the light is in the aire: then it shall be in us, 2. 2. qu. 171. ar. 2. in Cor. per modum formæ permanentis, as a forme remaining, as the light is in the body of the Sunne, Thomas, who seemeth sometime to thinke, that the Saints shall see the divine essence in the next world. But he and the rest that so write, must bee interpreted and understood with a distinction: for as there is a two-fold sight or knowledge, una simplex, qua res aliqua tota videtur, prout est; a simple and absolute knowledge, whereby a thing is seene wholly as it is, that nothing thereof be hid. And thus God is not seene in his divine essence, no not of the Angels: there is another vision or sight called of the Schoole-men, comprehensiva, a comprehensive, or rather apprehensive vision, whereby God is attained unto and apprehended: Non qualis quantusque est, sed quatenus à natura creata cognosci vult, & potest; Not such as he is in his greatnesse, but as hee is willing and can be knowne of the creature, Simler. Pelarg.

If then the divine essence cannot be seene as it is, fully and wholly, neither of Saints nor Angels in the next life; then let it be considered how rash and inconsiderate these positions are: to call it a paradox, to say God is invisible, incomprehensible: that we shall participate with the Godhead, bee capable of the divine substance: that there is not any thing of God, which his Saints shall not see: which bold assertions have beene vented of late by a new Dogmatist; against the which I will oppose the judgement of a reverend writer and father of our Church: R. P. his Apologie, pag. 204, 205. In the life to come we shall in farre more excellent manner see God, yet not simply, neither as he is, because he is infinite, nor still finite, though changed from our corruption: So no way can God bee seene (as hee is) of any creature, either with his bodily sense, or with his minde in this life, or that to come: yea, such a measure shall bee afforded to us, as no heart can comprehend now the comfort of it, B. Babington.

Quest. XLVIII. Whether Moses here had a sight of the divine essence.

Vers. 20. Thou canst not see my face. 1. Some are of opinion that Moses saw the divine essence of God in the mount. Thomas Aquinas seemeth to incline to this opinion, upon the authoritie of Augustine: Deus supernaturaliter & super communem ordinem, mentes aliquorum in hac carne viventium, usque ad visionem essentiæ suæ elevavit, &c. God supernaturally and above the common order, hath lifted the mindes of some in the flesh to the vision of his divine essence, as Augustine saith of Moses, and Paul, 1. 2. qu. 12. art. 11. in Cor. lib. 12. super Genes. and libr. de videndo Deo, Thomas. Tostatus also affirmeth the same, that Moses saw the divine essence, though not at this instant; for otherwise God had not satisfied Moses request, neither had shewed him all his good, which he said hee would cause to passe by him.

Contra. 1. But Augustine affirmeth otherwise, that Moses here had not his full desire; Non videbat Deum in tanta familiaritate, ut desiderabat videre; He saw not God in this great familiaritie, as he desired to see him: nec desideranti fuit hoc concessum, neither was this granted unto his desire, to see the essence of God. 2. God caused all his good to passe by him, that is, as Vatablus expounded it, vestigia omnium bonorum, certaine footsteps of all his goodnesse: or as Oleaster, God himselfe passed by, in quo sunt omnia bona, in whom are all good things. The Lord both shewed unto Moses a spirituall vision, in the proclaiming of his epithetes and names, and a sensuall, in exhibiting a glorious representation; yet it followeth not that he saw his divine essence.

1. Wherefore it is the founder opinion, that Moses did not here see the divine essence it selfe, but onely some demonstration of his glorie, as his humane capacitie was able to receive.

Ibid. ubi supra. 1. Irenæus giveth instance of Moses, Helias, Ezechiel, Daniel, that none of them saw God in his divine nature and essence: concerning Moses he sheweth it out of this place, where Moses desired, manifestè videre videre Deum, to see God manifestly: but the Lord answered him in effect, that, impossibile est homini videre Deum, it is impossible for man to see God. And Helias, after the mightie winde, earthquake, and fire, heard a soft and still voice, which signified the comming of Christ in the flesh, which should be, post illam legem, quæ data est per Mosen mitis & tranquillus, &c. which should be mild and peaceable after that (rough) law, which was given by Moses, wherein hee should not breake a bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax: these were but similitudines claritatis Domini, & prophetia futurorum, similitudes of the brightnesse of the Lord, and prophecies of things to come. So Ezechiel, in that heavenly vision, saw onely the similitude of a throne, and the similitude of the Son of man upon it: and he saith, Hæc visio similitudo gloriæ Domini; This is the vision of the similitude of the glorie of the Lord, Ezech. 1. 28. So in the fierie oven wherein Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego were put, the fourth that was seene to walke with them, is said to be similis filio Dei, like to the Son of God, Dan. 4. 24. And Dan. 7. 23. it is said, As I beheld in visions by night, behold one like the Son of man came in the clouds of heaven; Out of these places Irenæus inferreth, that none of all these did see the divine nature and essence of God.

2. So also Chrysostom, Nec principatus, nec potestates in cœlestibus noverunt Dei substantiam; non item Paulus, aut Ezechiel, atque Esaias; Neither the principalities, nor the powers in heaven have knowne the substance of God; no not Paul, Ezechiel, or Esaias, &c. and this he groundeth upon these words in the Gospell; No man hath seene God at any time: he addeth further, Tum ex his, quæ Moses denegat, &c. liquidum hoc habetur; and this further is evident by that which was denied unto Moses: Cum ille sensu oculorum Deum videre concupisceret, &c. when he desired to see God with the sense of his eyes. De incomprehensib. Dei natur. hom. 4.

3. Cyrillus doth gather as much upon the Lords answer to Moses; Ille ad Mosen clare dixit, quia nemo videbit faciem, &c. He said evidently to Moses, because no man shall see my face, and live. Super Joan. lib. 2. cap. 12.

4. Ambrose also saith: Irritus quidem erat postulationis affectus, sed affectus probabilis servi; His affectionate desire was frustrate, but yet it was a reasonable desire. In Psal. 139.

5. Hierom. also is in the same minde: Faciem Dei juxta naturæ suæ proprietatem nulla videt creatura; No creature can see the face of God in the propertie of his owne nature. In Isaiam cap. 2.

6. But whereas Iacob saith, I have seene God face to face, Gen. 32. 30. which is here denied unto Moses; Thomas Aquinas well interpreteth that place, that whereas it is said, that Iacob saw God face to face, Referendum est, non ad ipsam essentiam, sed ad figuram, in quo representabatur Deus; It must be referred not unto the essence of God, but unto that figure, wherein God was represented, &c. Otherwise it is not to be doubted, but that Moses saw more than Iacob did: and there is no question, but that this was the most cleere sensible vision of Gods glorie that is to be found in all the old Testament: for none of the Fathers saw the Lords back-parts, but only Moses; Oleaster yet neither Iacob there, nor Moses here saw the divine essence: Nunc majus aliquid & præstantius obtinet, non tamen ut Deum perfecte videat, &c. Moses obtained a more excellent thing than Iacob, yet not to see God perfectly, as he is in himselfe, but as the capacitie of humane nature was able to beare, Calvin. 1 part. qu. 2. ar. 11. in Cor.

7. Alcuinus giveth this reason, why Moses, when it is said the Lord spake with Moses face to face, saw not the divine essence: for then hee would not have said afterward, Ostende mihi teipsum; Shew me thy selfe, or thy glorie: Apparuit ergo ei Deus in ea specie qua voluerat, non ipse autem apparuit illi natura propria; God therefore appeared unto him in that manner, hee would not in his owne nature, &c. Lib. 2 de Trinitat. cap. 16.

8. Simlerus addeth further: hee saw onely the back-parts of God, Non vidit igitur naturam & substantiam; Therefore he saw not his nature and substance. And whereas notwithstanding the Lord is said to have talked with Moses face to face, that is only to shew a difference betweene that cleere vision which Moses had, and other visions shewed to other Prophets, not so cleere; Simler.

9. Lyranus then here is deceived, who affirmeth, that though the vision or sight of the divine essence was not now granted to Moses; Tamen alias fuit concessa in vita præsenti; Yet it was granted at another time in this life present. But the reason here used by the Lord, that no man can see God and live, is generall excluding all men, while they live here, from the vision of Gods nature and essence. And as Tostatus reasoneth, Non videtur esse alind tempus inconvenientius, &c. There seemeth no time to be more convenient for Moses to see Gods essence in, than this, when Moses made that request unto God, qu. 17. yet Tostatus likewise is deceived, who thinketh, that Moses at this time did see the divine essence.

Quest. XLIX. Of the meaning of these words, No man shall see me and live.

Vers. 20. There shall no man see me and live. 1. Gregorie Nyssenus giveth this sense of this place, not that the sight of that glorious face should be the cause of death: Nam quomodo vitæ facies, causa mortis esse posset? For how should the face of life be the cause of death to those that approach or come neere unto it? But to shew, because the divine nature exceedeth all knowledge, that he which thinketh God to be any of those things, which are seene and knowne, vitam non habet, hath no life: Non est ergo vita quod cognoscitur; That then is not life, which is seene or knowne, and so cannot give life, &c. Hee maketh then in effect, this to be the meaning of these words, No man shall see me and live: thinke not that, which thou seest of me, to be God able to give life. But the Lord speaketh here, not of any inward opinion, but of the present sight and contemplation of God, which Moses decreed: and by face, he meaneth not any thing beside himselfe, that is seene of him, but his essence and nature, that which himselfe is: no man can see that, and live.

2. Procopius seemeth to approve this sense, that they which live here according to the flesh, cannot see God: but they may see him, Non secundum carnem ambulantes; Which walke not according to the flesh.

But Procopius may answer himselfe by a distinction, that there is, prima Dei facies, the first face of God, which is his divine essence, which is indeed invisible, & nemini mortalium visa, and never seene of any mortall creature: there is, secunda Dei facies, a second face of God, which is his grace and favour, which is seene by faith: of this sight of God our blessed Saviour speaketh, Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God, &c. But the Lord speaketh here of the sight of his first face, which is invisible, for Moses lived not according to the flesh, and yet he is denied this sight; and afterward he is granted to see the back-parts, which he could not have seene, if he had beene carnall, not spirituall.

3. Rupertus thinketh, that as before the Lord spake unto Moses in the person of the people, Propter electorum; In respect of the elect among them; I will cause all my goods to go before thee: so he speaketh this, propter reproborum, in regard of the reprobate and wicked among them, that they should not see Gods glorie, and live: because they were appointed to die.

So Rupertus maketh the force of this speech, to consist in the word Thou, thou canst not see my face, that is, the wicked and unbeleevers among the people. But this exposition cannot stand. 1. Because the reason is generall, No man shall see me, and live: no man whatsoever. 2. The emphasis lyeth in the word face, for his back-parts it is granted Moses to see. 3. And the Lord meaneth here Moses person, not in him the person of the people; as the whole narration following sheweth, how the Lord would put Moses in a cleft of a rocke, and cover him with his hand, while he passed by, &c.

4. Another exposition is this: Qui ex opposito Deum aspicit, non vivet; He which doth see Gods face, as opposite, and comming against him, shall not live: Discat homo Deum sequi; Let a man seeke to follow God, &c. not as it were to meet God in the face, or to oppose himselfe against him: for vice is opposite to vertue. So also Gregor. Nyssen.

Epist. 111. 5. Augustine thus interpreteth; No man can see God and live: Nemo potest eum in hac vita videre vivens sicuti est; No man can see him while he liveth in this life, as he is. So also Lyranus, Vatab. Iun. annot. But then this should onely be a repetition of the same thing: Thou canst not see my face, for no man living can see my face. It better containeth a reason of the Lords former answer, why Moses could not see Gods face and glorie, Quia non expediebat; because it was not expedient, Iun. in Analys. quia exitiale foret; because it would be to his destruction, Calvin.

6. Wherefore, as Gallasius well noteth: Rationem subjungit, &c. God adjoyneth a reason, why Moses would not see Gods face, because such is the imbecillitie of mans nature, Ut praclarum ejus splendorem sustinere nequeat, that it is not able to sustaine or indure his excellent brightnesse, &c. This then is set downe, as an effect or consequent of the seeing of Gods face, that it would so oppresse them, and astonish them, that they could not live after. And that this is the meaning, it appeareth both by Iacobs speech, that counted it as a singular benefit, that he had seene God face to face, and yet his life was preserved: yet indeed Iacob had not seene the very divine essence at that time. So Manoah Sampsons father said to his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seene God; they thought they had seene God, whereas it was an Angell onely which they saw. But yet by these examples it appeareth, how they did understand this saying, No man can see God, and live: Neminem posse citra mortem Deum facie ad faciem videre; That no man without perill of death, can see God face to face, Oleaster.

Gen. 32. 30.

Iud. 13. 21.

Lib. 4. adver. hæres. Valentin. cap. 37. Irenæus also confirmeth this sense out of the new Testament, as Iohn saith, when he saw that vision, Apoc. 1. vers. 17. I fell at his feet as dead, ut fieret, quod scriptum est; that it might be fulfilled, as it is written, No man can see God and live.

Lib. de bon. mor. cap. 12. Ambrose well giveth the reason hereof: Si Solis radios oculi nostri ferre non possunt, &c. If our eyes cannot indure the sight of the Sun beames, if one creature cannot behold another, sine offensione sui, without hurt of it selfe, how can any, sine periculo sui, without great danger unto himselfe, behold the glistring countenance of his Creator? Fulgor ille tanta Majestatis nos in nihilum redigeret; The brightnesse of so great a Majestie would bring us to nothing, Calvin. Simler.

7. Tostatus alloweth this sense: Immediate ut viderit, morietur; Whosoever should see Gods face, should immediately die after it. But he restraineth it onely to the sight of the bodie, because the eye could not indure to behold such an excellent object: but he saith, it cannot be understood of the seeing of the divine essence in the soule: for that, Non causat aliquam passionem in corpore: for the inward and intellectuall sight, doth not cause such a passion in the bodie, as wherewith the harmonie thereof should be dissolved, qu. 18.

Contra. 1. As though the soule of man may not be as well oppressed, and astonished with an excellent intellectuall object, such as is the essence of God, as the bodily sight may be with a sensible object? 2. And the astonishment of the soule, may also worke upon the bodie; as we see, when the soule is with griefe and care oppressed, the bodie also is therewith affected. 3. Cajetan hereof thus noteth: Quamvis excellens intelligibile non corrumpat intellectum, sed confortet illum, est tamen illi improportionatum, & excedit capacitatem illius, & hoc est opprimere illum: Though an excellent intellectuall object, doe not corrupt or destroy the understanding, but comforteth it, yet it is unproportionable to it, and exceedeth the capacitie thereof, and so doth in a manner oppresse it, &c.

QUEST. L. What place this was in the rocke, which the Lord here speaketh of.

Vers. 21. Behold there is a place by me, &c. Then shalt stand upon a rocke, &c. 1. Cajetan understandeth this place in the rocke, in a spirituall sense: Moses erecta & fixa mente elevatus, that Moses as it were lifted up with a setled and upright minde, &c. should addresse himselfe to this vision.

2. Procopius thus understandeth, Petra est Christus, & hic petra est locus apud Deum; The rocke is Christ, and this rock is that place with God, as our blessed Saviour saith, He that seeth me, seeth my father.

3. Augustine

3. Auguſtine will not have it underſtood of any materiall place: Quis enim locus non penes Deum eſt? For what place is there not with God? who is every where preſent: Eccleſiam ergo ſignificat; He therefore hereby ſignifieth his Church. Quæſt.154.

4. But it is evident by this whole deſcription, that the Lord meaneth the very rocke in Horeb, where Moſes ſhould be ſet, In rupe qua ſolco apparere; in the rocke where I uſed to appeare unto thee; Vatab. In monte Sinai, ubi conſuevi tibi loqui; In mount Sinai, where I uſe to ſpeake unto thee, Lyran. Toſtat. So alſo Chryſoſtom, Vidit & Moſes, ſed extra per cavernam & in petra; Moſes alſo ſaw God, but outwardly in a rocke thorow a cleft. In Serm. de Spirit. ſanct.

5. Fuit hæc petra corporea; This was indeed a materiall rocke, in a cleft whereof Moſes was put, but it ſignifieth the true rocke Chriſt, by whom we attaine to the true knowledge of God.

QUEST. LI. How the Lord is ſaid to cover Moſes with his hand.

Verſ.22. I will cover thee with my hand, &c. 1. Gregorius Nyſſenus thus expoundeth theſe words: Qui ad Chriſtum pervenit manu Dei tectus eſt, manus autem Dei creatrix omnium rerum virtus; He that is come unto Chriſt is covered, as with Gods hand: and Gods hand is the power, wherewith all things are created: but this ſenſe cannot ſtand; for the Lord doth not remove his hand or protection from them, which are placed in the true rocke Chriſt, as the Lord is ſaid here to remove his hand from Moſes.

2. Pelargus underſtandeth the removing of the hand, De collapſione politiæ Moſaicæ poſt adventum Chriſti, of the removing and falling of the politike ſtate of Moſes common-wealth, after the comming of Chriſt. But the text deſcribeth a thing now preſently done.

3. Simlerus thinketh it is but a phraſe of ſpeech, as we uſe to put our hand before our eyes, when we looke upon the Sun: Sic oculi Moſis teguntur; ſo Moſes eyes are hid, that they ſhould not be dazled with Gods glorie. So Iunius taketh it to be, humanitus dictum, to be ſpoken according to the uſe of men, I will hide thine eyes.

4. Toſtatus thinketh it was, quædam nubes denſa, a certaine thicke cloud, which covered the hole of the rocke, till the Lord paſſed by, quæſt.19. So alſo Calvin; Dei manus pro caligine accipitur, &c. The hand of God is taken for a miſt, and darkneſſe put before Moſes eyes, that they might not be intent curiouſly to looke further than was meet.

5. But there is nothing to the contrarie, why this may not be added further, that this cloud put before Moſes eyes, might not alſo have as it were the faſhion of an hand: Ponam quaſi figuram manus meæ ſuper te; I will put as it were the figure of my hand upon thee and hide thine eyes, Lippom. not that the hand of that glorious bodie, the back-parts whereof Moſes ſaw, did cover Moſes eyes: for it being alſo lightſome like unto the reſt of that heavenly bodie, could not hide his eyes: and Moſes ſhould firſt have ſeene the face and countenance of that bodie, before the hand had beene laid upon his eyes. But it was ſome cloud or thickneſſe of the eyes, which might be ſpread upon Moſes face as an hand.

QUEST. LII. Why the Lord covered Moſes with his hand.

AND though Moſes was put into the cleft of the rocke, yet it was neceſſary that his eyes ſhould be hid by ſuch meanes, from ſeeing the glorious face of the bodie appearing: 1. For neither could the cleft of the rocke ſo hinder Moſes ſight, but that as the Lord paſſed by in that place where the hole was, his face alſo ſhould have beene ſeene. 2. And if Moſes had ſhadowed his eyes with his owne hand, it had not been ſo ſafe: for he might have removed it as ſoone as he heard the voice. 3. Neither was the hearing of the voice a ſufficient direction, when Moſes ſhould looke out: for either he might have beheld this glorious ſight too ſoone, before the Lord was paſſed by, or ſtaied too long: therefore it was requiſite that ſome ſuch covering ſhould be put before his eyes, that by the removing thereof hee might know when it was lawfull for him to looke, Toſtat. qu.20.

QUEST. LIII. Why the Lord put Moſes in the cleft of the rocke.

BY the cleft of the roeke, wherein Moſes was put: 1. Theodoret underſtandeth, fidei oculum, &c. the eye of faith, whereby we underſtand thoſe things which cannot be ſeene with corporall eyes. 2. Rupertus thus interpreteth, Ponam te in foramine petræ, id eſt, omnem verum Iſraelitam in fide paſſionis meæ; I will put thee in the hole of the rocke, that is, every faithfull Iſraelite in the faith of my paſſion.

3. Hierom thus applieth it, Petra refugium leporibus eſt, &c. The rocke is a refuge to Conies, and Hares: Timidum animal in petra cavernas ſe recipit; A fearfull beaſt doth betake it ſelfe to the holes of the rocke. So Moſes fleeing out of Egypt, Lepuſculus Domini erat; was as the Lords Hare. In Matth. cap.3.

4. But that other application of Hierom is more fit: Vnaquæque anima per foramen, & quoſdam tenebroſas cavernas aſpicit veritatem; Every ſoule by certaine holes and darke cranies ſeeth the truth. In Eccleſiaſt. cap.12.

5. Lippoman maketh this collection: I will reveale my ſelfe before thee in great majeſtie: Ac ne præ ea concidas, ponam te in foramine petræ, ut firmus conſtes; And leſt thou ſhouldeſt be caſt downe by it, I will put thee in an hole of the rocke, that thou mayſt ſtand ſtrongly. And to the ſame purpoſe Gallaſius: Deus apponit manum, ut infirmitatem ſublevet; God putteth to his hand, to helpe his infirmitie. Simlerus addeth further, that he was put in the hole of the rocke, ne abſorbeatur ab immenſa Dei luce; leſt he ſhould be ſwallowed up of the exceeding great glorie of God, as he paſſed by.

6. But the proper hiſtoricall meaning thereof was, becauſe God would not have Moſes to ſee the forepart of that glorious bodie, which ſhould paſſe by: if he had beene abroad he might have chanced to ſee his glorious countenance; but being ſet in the rocke, Solum poterat videre ad unam differentiam poſitionis; he could but ſee one way, toward the cleft or hole of the rocke, Toſt. q.18. which ſenſe is touched by Chryſoſtom before. qu.50. And hereby myſtically alſo is inſinuated: Quod Dei cognitio continget exigua tantum ex parte, &c. that the knowledge of God is but in a very ſmall part attained unto, while we live here, Simil.

QUEST. LIII. What is understood here by the Lords back-parts.

Quæst. 154. in Exod.

Vers. 23. THou shalt see my back-parts. 1. Augustine giveth this sense: Hoc postea factum est in eis, quos significabat persona Moſis, &c. This came to passe in them, who are signified here in the person of Moses, that is, the Israelites, who, as the Acts of the Apostles shew, afterward beleeved, when Christs glorie was passed out of the world to heaven, &c. So also Rupertus, and Gloss. interlin. But here was somewhat presently and actually performed unto Moses, as is evident by the whole description, both of the place and manner.

2. Gregor. Nyssen. thus expoundeth: Docetur Moſes, &c. Moses desiring to see God, is taught how God may be seene: Sequi enim Deum corde & animo semper quocunque ducat, idipsum est totum videre; For to follow God in heart and minde alwayes, whether soever he leadeth, that is, to see God, &c. Qui autem sequitur, non faciem, sed tergum aspicit; But he which followeth seeth the backe, and not the face, &c. But this sense cannot bee received, because it taketh away all visible demonstration of Gods glorie here, which was the thing that Moses desired.

3. Procopius by the back-parts understandeth, the knowledge of God by the creatures: Invisibilia Dei ex creatione; The invisible things of God are seene by the creatures. So also Borrhaius. But this knowledge of God was ordinarie, and granted unto Moses at other times: here he hath an extraordinarie demonstration of Gods glorie according to his desire.

4. Tertullian referreth these backer or latter parts to the latter times of the Messiah: Gloria mea, quam videre desideras, posterioribus temporibus revelabitur; My glorie, which thou desirest to see, shall be revealed in the latter times. But the Lord speaketh here of some thing presently done.

5. Some by posteriora, these backer parts doe understand, Effecta & opera, the works of God, whereby he is knowne, tanquam ex posterioribus, as by the backer parts; as the Lord proclaimeth himselfe in the next Chapter by his epithetes and properties, Gallas. Lippom. Ferus. But this interpretation also taketh away all visible revelation of Gods glorie, which is intended by the letter of the text.

6. Cajetan thinketh, that hæc scripta & dicta in metaphora, these things were said and written in metaphores: and by the face he would have understood onely majus lumen, a greater light, and by the backer parts, and the removing of the hand, minus lumen infusum, a lesse infused light, &c. So he taketh all this to have beene onely a present illumination of Moses minde. But if Moses minde onely had beene illuminated, he needed not to have beene set in the cleft of the rocke, which was in that place: this placing and disposing of Moses to see, sheweth that there was an actuall visible demonstration of Gods glorie.

7. Borrhaius by these backe parts would have understood the shadowes of the Law, Quæ corpus, quod est Christi tanquam posteriora sequuntur, &c. which follow the bodie which is Christs, as the back-parts. But Moses not onely now, but before this did in the shadowes of the Law behold the mysteries of Christ: therefore this was an extraordinarie revelation of Gods glorie beside that.

In oration. de compositi. dissoluendi ratione.

8. Nazianzene by the backe or back-parts understandeth any thing whereby the Lord is shewed and made knowne unto us, Ut tamen naturam illius non contingat; so that it concerne not his very nature; like as they which cannot behold the Sun it selfe, may see the beames thereof shining in the water. So the Genevense have this annotation: My back-parts, that is, so much my glorie, as in this mortall life thou art able to see. So Iunius also seemeth to interpret it, Aliquam gloriæ meæ imperfectam imaginem; Some imperfect image of my glorie. But this had been no extraordinary thing: for Moses before this had seene Gods glorie and power divers wayes in that manner revealed unto him, as in his great works and miracles.

9. Lyranus taketh it onely for a generall and confused knowledge of God: as by the back-parts, one may be discerned that he is a man, but not that he is Socrates, or Plato, this or that man. But such knowledge of God Moses was never without, that he needed not to have made any speciall request for the same at this time.

10. It is resolved then, that there was a visible representation of Gods glorie at this time shewed unto Moses: as Calvin saith, Exhibita fuit oculis visio: A vision was shewed unto his eyes. But what kinde of sensible vision it was, there is likewise some question.

QUEST. LIV. What manner of visible demonstration this was here shewed unto Moses.

1. RAb. Cahadiagon thinketh, that this, which Moses saw, was onely an exceeding bright cloud, which on the forepart was of that shining brightnesse, that no mortall man could endure to behold it: but on the backer part it was not so bright. But the very description of face, hands, backer parts sheweth, that, that which Moses saw had some similitude and likenesse.

2. Irenæus taketh it to be the vision of a glorious bodie, but now onely promised, and performed, In novissimis temporibus, &c. quando Moses cum (Christo) confabulatus est in altitudine montis; In the latter times, when Moses talked with Christ in the top of the mount, and together with Helias saw him there transfigured. But it is evident by the text, the Lord describing the present place, where Moses should be set to see this vision, that it was presently shewed him.

3. Tostatus agreeth, that there was shewed forthwith unto Moses, quoddam luminosum corpus, a certaine bright bodie, the countenance whereof was so glorious, that Moses could not indure to behold it; which exceeding lightsome and glorious bodie he thinketh well to have beene only formed and prepared of God, not by any Angelicall power: for such glorious brightnesse exceeded the worke of any creature: neither was the other naturally capable thereof. But herein he is greatly deceived, in thinking that this bodie was assumed, not by God himselfe, but by some Angell: which he would prove both by the motion thereof, and by the speech which was uttered, both which were done successivè, successively in time, whereas the Lord worketh in an instant, quæst. 23.

Contra.

Contra. 1. It is evident in the text, that this glorious bodie and humane shape was assumed by God himselfe even the Lord Christ: both because the Lord saith, I will passe by, and he saith, thou canst not see my face: but if an Angell had stirred this bodie, it had beene an Angels face, not Gods, and an Angell had passed by, not God himselfe. 2. Seeing the Seraphims covered their face with their wings, as not being able to behold the glorie of the Lord, whom the Prophet saw sitting as upon a throne, Isai.6.1,2. how is it like the Angels should stirre and move that bodie, the glorie whereof they could not behold? 3. And seeing all things are possible unto God, hee maketh the feet to goe, and the tongue to speake, can he not much more give motion and speech at his pleasure, either with or without the ministerie of Angels?

4. Wherefore it is the most probable opinion, Deum humana effigie pertransisse; that God passed by Moses in an humane shape, Oleast. Transit in assumpta forma; he passed by in an assumed shape or forme, Osiander. And it is not unlike, but that the Lord Christ appeared now unto Moses in that glorious manner, wherein hee was transfigured in the mount, in the dayes of his flesh, when his face did shine as the Sunne: saving that Moses being not yet glorified, as hee was then, could not now endure to see his glorious countenance, as he did then: he saw now onely his backe parts, not naked, but clothed in glorious manner: both because the Lord had given a law to cover their naked parts, that they should not appeare, Exod.20.26. And that the figure might answer unto the bodie; because in mount Tabor, when Moses and Elias talked with God, not onely Christs countenance did shine as the Sunne, but his raiment also was as white as the light. Matth.17.2.

The reasons which lead me to condescend to this opinion, that such a glorious humane shape now appeared to Moses are these: 1. Because this demonstration best agreeth to the letter of the text, which must not be drawne from the plaine and historicall sense, but where there is necessitie, and some inconvenience is like to ensue of the contrarie: so that this sensible vision of God is most answerable to Moses request, and to the Lords grant and concession here made unto him.

2. The historie of Moses transfiguration in the mount in the sight of this Moses, and Helias, doth helpe also to interpret this place.

3. The end and scope of Moses desire was to receive some visible signe and seale of the Lords reconciliation with his people, which was best performed this way.

QUEST. LV. Where the Lord promised, that Moses should see his back parts.

Vers.29. Thou shalt see my backe parts, &c. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that Moses was at this time with God in mount Sinai, where the Lord promised him to see his backe parts: which he would gather out of these words of the Lord: Behold there is place by me: that is, here in this rocke wherein I now speake with thee, qu.18. But this cannot be so: for Moses was not yet called up into mount Sinai, which followeth afterward, chap.34.2. and after he went up thither to the Lord, he continued there fortie dayes, and fortie nights with the Lord, and all that while came not downe: but Moses went downe from this place to give notice to the people not to come neere the mount, chap.34.3.

2. Osiander taketh it, that all this communication was betweene the Lord and Moses in the Tabernacle, where it is said that the Lord spake with Moses face to face, vers.11. But this is not like neither: for vers.21. the Lord saith, there is a place by me: that is, not farre off in the mount, where I use to commune with thee: it seemeth then that the Lord was in some part of the mount by the description of the place in the rocke.

3. Therefore it is like, that this communication was had betweene the Lord and Moses, not in the top of mount Sinai: for then the Lord at this time would have shewed this sight, which was not done till afterward, when the Lord proclaimed his name Iehovah before Moses, which followeth in the next Chapter, chap.34.7. Gallas. But Moses went up to some part of the mountaine, the next day after the slaughter of the people, chap.32.30. where he had all this conference with God, which is declared in this Chapter, saving that it is somewhat interrupted by the inserting of that narration of the peoples laying aside of their best garments, and Moses removing of the Tabernacle out of the host, vers.7. to vers.12.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. That the contemplative life should not hinder the active.

Vers.23. After he returned to the host. Moses did not dwell in the Tabernacle, which he pitched without the host, but returned againe to the campe, after he had talked with God, to attend the businesse of the people, which sheweth that men should not be so much given to the contemplative life, as to neglect their callings, and to withdraw themselves from doing good unto others. As some in time past, for love of solitarie life, being fit for their gifts to bee imployed in the Church, did utterly refuse all kinde of calling therein. But this is not the fault of this age: Nimius ambitus jam damnandus; too much ambition in seeking of preferment in Church and Common-wealth, is now rather to be condemned, Simler. But our blessed Saviour sheweth by his example, what a good temper should be made of the active and contemplative life, who in the day time taught in the Temple, and in the night went out, and abode in the mount of Olives, there giving himselfe to prayer, Luk.21.37.

2. Doct. Grace with God, is of mercie, not by works.

Vers.12. Thou hast found grace in my sight. Oleaster hereupon noteth, that man is said to find grace: Quia eam quasi thesaurum casu invenit, non sua industria aut labore; Because he findeth it unlooked for, as a treasure, not by his owne labour or industrie, as the Apostle saith, It is not in him that willeth, or runneth, but in God that sheweth mercie. Rom.9.

3. Doct. The Lord knoweth all his Elect by name.

Vers.12. I know thee by name. This sheweth that God hath a peculiar and particular knowledge of the elect; as here Moses is knowne unto God by name. And lest any should thinke, that this was a speciall privilege unto Moses, that he was more knowne unto God, than another; Procopius addeth, I thinke it were better, ut universaliter ille locus accipiatur de omni, qui eadem, qua Moses, pollent sanctitate; That generally this place be understood of every one, that is endued with Moses holinesse, &c. So the Apostle maketh a generall doctrine of it; The foundation of God remaineth sure, and hath this seale, the Lord knoweth who are his.

2 Tim. 2.19.

4. Doct. That there is mention made in Moses of everlasting life.

Vers.20. NO man shall see me, and live. Cajetan well urgeth this place against those, which thinke there is no mention made in Moses of everlasting felicitie. For if no man should see God after this life, it had beene sufficient to say no man shall see me at all: therefore in adding, and live, hee insinuateth, Quod adempta hominis vita poterit homo videre ipsum; That when this life is taken away, a man may see him, &c. As the Apostle saith: When he appeareth we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is, &c. 1. Ioh. 3.3.

5. Doct. A difference betweene the decree of election and reprobation.

Vers.19. I will shew mercie to whom I will shew mercie. Marbachius here observeth the difference betweene election and reprobation; Electio citra respectum operum nostrorum est; Election is without the respect of our works: but, Damnatio & reprobatio non est sine operum hominis respectu; Damnation and reprobation is not without respect of mens works: for if it were otherwise, it would follow, that the absolute will of God is the cause of their damnation, which were contrarie to the Prophet, I will not the death of a sinner.

Ezech. 18.

The Apostle indeed calleth the vessels of wrath, prepared to destruction, as it is said, He hath prepared the vessels of mercie unto glorie. But yet with this difference, it is said actively, that God hath prepared them to glorie, his will and decree is the onely cause of their election, without any foresight of their works: it is of his mercie, as here the Lord saith to Moses, but the other are said passively to be prepared, because first the Lord doth, Eos in sordibus suis relinquere; leave them in their filthinesse, and upon the foresight of their sinne, decree them unto everlasting damnation. God doth, sponte praterire, of his owne will, as he electeth some, so pretermit others: but the decree of actuall condemnation, is upon the foresight of their sinne. See more Synops. pag. 822.

Rom. 9.23.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Controv. Of the corrupt reading of the Latine text.

Vers.15. WHereas the Hebrew text here readeth to this effect; If thy face goe not with us; The Latine text changeth it thus, If thou goe not: which Tostatus justifieth thus, that Hieron. Cautissime mutavit; did most warilie change it, because there should otherwise seeme to be no difference betweene the Lords answer, and Moses replie, as now there is, for by my face, the Lord might understand his Angell. But Moses is not contented, that Gods Angell goe with them, but requireth that the Lord himselfe would be their guide.

Contra. 1. If the Latine translator were cautelous in altering of the originall, reading for, If thy presence goe not, (If thou goe not) then it would follow, that it is an oversight in the originall: and what is this else, but for man to take upon him to correct the enditing of the Spirit? 2. By Gods face and presence, Moses understood, not any Angell, but God himselfe, as *vers.*20. the Lord by face understandeth himselfe: Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me and live. 3. Neither doth the difference betweene the Lords speech, and Moses replie consist in that distinction, as is shewed before, quest. 31. the like error is committed before, *vers.*13. where the Latine Interpreter readeth, Shew me thy face, for shew me thy way.

2. Controv. That our calling is altogether of grace.

Vers.19. I will shew mercie to whom I will shew mercie. Ambrose hereupon inferreth well: Quod Dei gratiam nemo praveniat merito suo, &c. That no man preventeth Gods grace by his merit: as hee further proveth by that place of the Apostle, 1 Ioh. 4.10. Herein is love, not that we loved him, but that hee loved us. And that of S. Paul, Tit. 5. Not by the works of righteousnesse, which we had done, but by his mercie he saved us: then away with the works of preparation, or merits of congruitie, that any man by his owne endevour could make a way for his calling.

Epist. 84. ad Demetriad.

3. Controv. Against free will.

FUrther, by this text may be convinced that erronious collection of Chrysostom, who seemeth to thinke that this is but a phrase, to ascribe all to Gods mercie: Quia cujus est amplius, totum esse dixit; Because all is said to be his, whose the most is: Nostrum est eligere tantum & velle, &c. For it is our part onely to chuse and will, it belongeth unto God to effect, and bring unto perfection, &c. And so he concludeth: Neq; Deus totum suum esse voluit, ne sine causa videatur nos coronare, neq; iterum nostrum, ne in superbiam incidamus: For God would neither have all to be his, lest he should seeme to crowne us without cause, nor yet all to be ours, lest we might be proud.

Lib. de grat. & liber arbit.

But Bernard better applieth that saying of the Apostle, It is not in him that willeth, &c. Is qui vult & currit, non in se, sed in eo, a quo accipit & velle & currere debet gloriari: He that willeth and runneth, must rejoyce not in himselfe, but in him, from whom he receiveth to will and runne, &c. So comparing free will will and grace together, he ſaith: Totum quidem hoc, & totum illa, ſed ut totum in illo, ſic totum ex illa; This doth all, and the other doth all, but as all is wrought in the one, that is free will, ſo all is wrought by the other, that is grace.

Hugo de S. Victor. to this purpoſe, anſwering to this queſtion, why God doth conferre his grace upon one more than upon another; hath this excellent reſolution 1. Some thinke (ſaith he) that God cannot doe otherwiſe than he doth: But this were to lay a neceſſitie upon God, who is moſt free. 2. Some affirme, that there is in ſome more than other, Quoddam ſeminarium virtutis: A certaine ſeed of vertue, which maketh him more apt to receive grace than another: but this is alſo falſe, ſeeing we are all alike by nature. 3. Some doe reſemble it thus, that grace is offered unto all, like as a man ſhould be bidden to goup and take his meat, which is ſhewed him in the top of a tower, but he cannot go up without a ladder, and ſo ſtill he muſt have one grace after another. But he miſliketh this alſo, becauſe all is aſcribed unto grace, nothing to mans endevour, as though he ſhould ſit downe, and doe nothing. 4. Some make this demonſtration, that grace is offered to a man, as when a rope is let downe into a pit, to draw one up, who putteth to his hand, and layeth hold of the rope, and ſo hee commeth up: but this he refuſeth alſo, becauſe ſomewhat here is given unto man without grace. 5. Some make grace as the ſhining of the Sunne, which cannot give one light if he ſhut his eyes: ſo all have not grace, Quia ille, cui gratia radius infunditur, claudit oculos; Becauſe he to whom grace is infuſed, ſhutteth his eyes: Unde merito illi gratia ſubtrahitur, quia ipſe ſe ſubtrahit; Whereupon grace is withdrawne from him, becauſe hee withdraweth himſelfe. 6. As he doth not reject this anſwer, ſo yet he addeth thus much further: that as in this caſe, like as when a child, that cannot goe alone, yet being held by another, findeth his legs, which he could not doe, if hee had not of himſelfe a naturall power of going, and yet all is aſcribed to him that leadeth the child: ſo he concludeth thus, Ut anima promereatur duo exiguntur gratia & naturalis potentia, &c. Two things are required, that the ſoule ſhould merit (that is, doe any thing well) grace, and a naturall faultie, yet all the power of meriting, that is, of doing well, is of grace, becauſe the naturall facultie, nihil ponit ſine gratia, can doe nothing without grace: thus Hugo. So that this is his reſolution, that mans free-will in a good act onely concurreth, as a naturall facultie, but all the goodneſſe of the action is of grace: man by his nature willeth, but to will that which is good, he cannot but by grace. In quæſtionib. ſuper Epiſt. ad Rom. qu. 338.

4. Confut. Againſt the making of images of God.

Verſ. 23. Thou ſhalt ſee my back parts. Bellarmine would prove from hence, that an image may be made of God, becauſe ſometime, corporea ſpecie viſus eſt Deus; God was ſeene in corporall ſhape. Lib. 2. de imagin. cap. 4.

Contra. 1. It followeth not, becauſe God by his authoritie could make a viſible repreſentation of himſelfe, that man therefore of his authoritie can doe it, without Gods warrant. 2. Another difference is: this viſion was ſhewed to Moſes alone, and in a ſecret place: their images are ſet up in the view of all, and in publike place. 3. This was an image paſſing, and not continuing, theirs are permanent. 4. This was of the back-parts, they picture the very glorious countenance of God.

6. Morall Obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Why God doth more ſeverely puniſh his owne people than others.

Verſ. 3. Becauſe thou art a ſtiffe-necked people, leſt I conſume thee. Hence Gallaſius inferreth, Deum ſæpe majora judicia exercere in medio Eccleſiæ; That God doth oftentimes exerciſe greater judgements in the middeſt of his Church, than in the world, becauſe their contempt is greater, having received more benefits: like as a maſter of a familie will be more offended with his owne domeſticall ſervants, if they be diſobedient, than with ſtrangers.

2. Obſerv. In time of mourning it is not fit to put on ſumptuous apparell.

Verſ. 5. Put thy coſtly rayment from thee. The humilitie of the bodie, is an argument of the lowlineſſe of the minde: it is not pleaſing unto God, that in the time of publike mourning, ſumptuous apparell ſhould be uſed: as Oleaſter complaineth of a great abuſe in the Romane Church, that when women ſhould come to confeſſe their ſinnes, Arman ſe melioribus indumentis, &c. they uſe to put on their better rayment, as if they went to a marriage feaſt. I would the like complaint might not be taken up among us, that nice and proud women, when they ſhould preſent themſelves in humilitie before God, doe decke and adorne themſelves, comming rather to be ſeene of men, than of God.

3. Obſerv. Of the efficacie of faithfull prayer.

Verſ. 15. Then he ſaid unto him, &c. Moſes giveth not over, but continueth ſtill in prayer with a devout importunitie, untill the Lord had condeſcended unto him, wherein we ſee the force of faithfull prayer, B. Babing. Teaching us, that we ſhould hold out in our prayers, and applie the Lord with our earneſt requeſts, till he give eare unto us: for the prayer of the righteous availeth much, if it be fervent, Iam. 5. 16.

4. Obſerv. Spirituall things firſt to be begged in our prayers.

Verſ. 18. Shew me thy glorie. Ferus here giveth this note: Moſes ut plurimum ſpiritualia petit; Moſes doth for the moſt part aske ſpirituall things, Which teacheth us, that in all our requeſts, wee ſhould principally beg thoſe things at the hands of God, which concerne our ſoules, as our bleſſed Saviour ſaith, Firſt ſeeke the Kingdome of God, and his righteouſneſſe, and all theſe things ſhall bee miniſtred unto you.

5. Obſerv.

5. Obſerv. Againſt the feare of death.

Verſ.20. NO man ſhall ſee me, and live. Then after death, and this life ended wee ſhall ſee God: Berrhaius hereupon well noteth, Quam preciosa res ſit mors animalis hominis, &c. What a precious thing the death of the bodie is, which bringeth us to ſee God: as S. Paul ſaith, I deſire to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt, *Philip.*1.23. Death then of a faithfull man is not to be feared.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter is ſet forth, the reconciliation it ſelfe of the Lord with his people, conſiſting of three parts. 1. The ſignes of this reconciliation going before, to *verſ.*8. 2. The ſubſtance of the reconciliation it ſelfe, to verſ. 29. 3. The ſignes which followed after Moſes was come downe.

1. There are two ſignes of this reconciliation. The firſt is externall and viſible, the preparing of the two tables of ſtone. 1. Commanded to be made by the Lord, *verſ.*1. 2. With the manner of Moſes comming up, and the reverent behaviour of the people in the meane time, *verſ.*3. 3. And Moſes obedience, *verſ.*4. The ſecond is ſpirituall, in the proclayming of the Lords name, either ſhewing his ſubſtance, Iehovah, or his properties, mercie toward the righteous, or vengeance toward the wicked, to *verſ.*7. with the effect, Moſes humbling of himſelfe, *verſ.*8.

2. The reconciliation conſiſteth of Moſes humble ſuite to the Lord, verſ. 9. and the Lords gracious anſwer; wherein the Lord ſheweth what he will doe for his people, *v.*10,11. then what he requireth of them: where are propounded: firſt, morall lawes concerning the avoiding of idolatrie, which are ſix in number, to *verſ.*17. then ceremoniall, which are three. 1. Of their anniverſarie and weekly feaſts, namely, the Sabbath, *verſ.*18,21,22,23. 2. Of their firſt fruits of their cattell, *verſ.*19,20. and of their increaſe, *verſ.*29. 3. Of the manner of their ſacrifices, not to be offered with leaven, *verſ.*26.

3. The ſignes following are two: firſt, the bringing of the ſecond tables, with their writing by the Lord, and Moſes preparation thereunto, by his fortie dayes faſt, *verſ.*28,29. The ſecond is the ſhining of Moſes face, where is deſcribed. 1. The manner thereof, verſ. 29. 2. The effects, the aſtoniſhment of the people, *verſ.*30. 3. The remedie which Moſes uſed, which was double, the inviting and calling of the people to come unto him, verſ. 31, 32. and the covering of his face, *verſ.*33. when he put it off, when he went in to ſpeake with God, verſ. 34. and when hee put it on, when he came out unto the people, verſ. 35.

2. The divers readings.

I. Verſ.6. Iehovah, Iehovah, ſtrong, I. Iohovah, Iehovah, God, B.G. cum cater. It ſeemeth rather to be an appellative, than a proper name of the Lord here, becauſe of the diſtinction, Rebia, over Iehovah, which ſeparateth it from the ſentence following.

I.V.G. Verſ.7. Not making the wicked innocent, B.G.V.I.S. better than, leaving one innocent, B. or with whom none is by himſelfe innocent, L. See the reaſon hereof, queſt. 11.

I. Verſ.10. Behold I will make a covenant: before all the people I will doe mervailes, I. better than, I will make a covenant before all the people, and I will worke, B.G. cum cater. for there is a diſtinction at covenant: and it is in the Hebrew, I will worke, not, and I will worke.

B.G.A.P. Verſ.30. His face ſhined, B. G. A. P. or, ſtreamed, V. was glorious, S. the brightneſſe thereof was multiplied, C. not, cornuta erat, was hornie, L. See afterward the queſtion upon this verſe.

I.G. Verſ.33. When Moſes had made an end of comming, &c. hee put a covering, I. or, So Moſes made an end, &c. and had put a covering, &c. G. better than, when he had made an end, &c. he put a covering, V.L.S.C. it is better tranſlated in the preterpluperfectenſe: for then Moſes had moſt need in reſpect of the peoples infirmitie, to put a vaile upon his face, when he ſpake unto them. See the 51. qu. following.

3. The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. Wherefore the ſecond tables were given.

Verſ.1. HEW thee two tables of ſtone. 1. The Lord commandeth two tables of ſtone to bee prepared, that it might bee a ſigne of his perfect reconciliation with the people, in theſe reſpects: 1. Becauſe by this appeared, that the Lord purpoſed not to deſtroy them, for then he would not have given them a law: and this was a ſigne, that God would goe before them, and be their guide ſtill, becauſe he was their ſpirituall guide in giving them direction by his law, *Toſtat. qu.*1. 2. And ſeeing the Arke was appointed to receive and keepe the tables of ſtone, it ſhewed that the Lord purpoſed, that whatſoever he had before preſcribed, concerning the making of the Tabernacle ſhould ſtand, Cajetan. 3. And that he willeth the like tables in all reſpects to be made, he thereby ſignifieth, that he would have all things to returne to their former ſtate, Simler.

2. But

2. But though God returned in grace unto them, yet in that he prepareth not theſe tables, as he did the firſt, but willeth Moſes to provide them: he would have, aliquod pœnæ veſtigium reſtare, therein ſome marks of their puniſhment to remaine: Ac ſi ſanato vulnere maneret cicatrix; as though the ſcar remained after the healing of the wound, Calvin.

3. But the people are not ſprinkled againe with bloud, as they were at the firſt, as neither now, they which fall after Baptiſme, are baptiſed againe, but it ſufficed onely theſe things to be reſtored by repentance, which were decayed by their tranſgreſſion, Ferus.

QUEST. II. Why the Lord ſaith to Moſes, Hew thee.

HEw thee. 1. R. Salomon doth gather hereupon, becauſe Moſes is bid to hew unto himſelfe, &c. that the Lord ſhewed a quarrie of Saphir ſtone, whereout Moſes hewed the tables, and ſo he is willed to hew unto himſelfe two tables of ſtone, that is, to his commoditie: for Moſes, he ſaith, became very rich by the fragments that were left in hewing of the tables. But ſeeing no ſuch thing is mentioned in Scripture, nor yet by Ioſephus, who was more ancient than R. Salomon, it is rather to be thought to be one of his fables, Lyran. and beſide, they lay an unjuſt and untrue imputation upon Moſes, as though he intended, and reſpected his owne profit; whereas all his courſes ſhew the contrarie, that hee ſought ſtill the good of the people, and not his owne.

2. Cajetan alſo hath the like note, Dola tibi, non mihi, ego enim non indigeo tua dolatione; Hew to thy ſelfe, not for me, for I need none of thy hewing, nor yet any of theſe tables.

3. But it is rather a phraſe of ſpeech in the Hebrew tongue: as, Vade tibi, ibo mihi; Goe thee, or, I will goe me: wherein the Engliſh phraſe is anſwerable unto the Hebrew manner of ſpeech. And this kinde of ſpeech is often uſed, when no profit is intended, as Numb. 13. 3. the Lord ſaith to Moſes, ſhelach leca, Mitte tibi; Send thee men, to ſearch the land: which was not to Moſes benefit, Oleaſt. So here, lecare thee, is added, ex ſuperabundanti, of abundance, more than needeth, Toſtat. qu. 2. 4. Lyranus noteth further, that becauſe Moſes had broken the firſt tables, it was juſt and right that he ſhould make new.

QUEST. III. Whether the Lord or Moſes wrote in theſe tables, and why.

I Will write. 1. God himſelfe did write the ſame words in theſe tables, the ten Commandements, which was in the former, though Moſes prepared them: and whereas it is ſaid afterward, verſ. 28. He wrote in the tables, it muſt be referred unto God, not unto Moſes: ſome make this anſwer, that God did write them, becauſe it was done by his authoritie, but Moſes miniſterialiter; Moſes miniſterially. But that is not like: for whence ſhould Moſes have theſe inſtruments, wherewith he ſhould grave theſe letters, ſeeing he carried none into the mount? Lyranus. But to this reaſon Toſtatus, who doth often without cauſe oppoſe himſelfe to Lyranus, taketh this exception: that as Moſes had inſtruments wherewith to hew out of the rocke the tables, ſo he might have other to grave with. Contra. But Moſes hewed out the tables after he was gone downe from the Lord, before he came up againe, and brought them readie hewen and made: Moſes then had no reaſon to carry any inſtruments with him.

2. The writing mentioned, verſ. 27. where the Lord ſaith to Moſes, Write thou theſe words, is underſtood of Moſes writing, not the ten Commandements, but the other lawes given in this place, in an authenticall booke, not in the tables of ſtone, Toſtat. Iunius: as further is declared in the queſtions upon the 31. chap. verſ. 18.

3. In that Moſes himſelfe hewed theſe tables, Procopius would have Chriſt the true Lawgiver ſhadowed forth; Qui ipſe carnis ſuæ lapicida; Who was the preparer and hewer out as it were of his owne fleſh. But more properly herein Moſes reſembled Chriſt, that as the firſt tables being broken, the ſecond were prepared by Moſes: ſo the law of nature being decaied in man, it is repaired in us by Chriſt, and the image of God renued in us, Simler, Ferus.

4. R. Cahadiagon ſheweth divers frivolous reaſons, why theſe ſecond tables, fuerunt digniores primis, were more worthie than the firſt: but he is convinced by this; that the firſt were both of Gods making and writing: but the latter were onely written by the Lord, and prepared by Moſes.

QUEST. IV. Whether Moſes was to be readie the next morning, and why.

Verſ. 2. BE readie in the morning, &c. 1. Cajetan thinketh, that this was not the next morning, becauſe the tables could not be hewed and finiſhed in one day: but he thinketh onely the time of the day to be noted, that he ſhould come up in the morning. But beſide that the phraſe, Be readie in the morning, or on the morrow, alwayes includeth a ſignification of the next morning following: Moſes ſhould have beene left in great doubt and ſuſpenſe when to come up, if the Lord had not aſſigned the time: as for the finiſhing of the worke, there is no queſtion, but that Moſes being thereunto appointed, and ſo enabled of God, might diſpatch it in a day.

2. Therefore Iunius opinion is rather to be received, who giveth this ſenſe, as though the Lord ſhould thus ſay to Moſes; Hodie illa expedi, Make them readie to day, that you may come up in the morning: ſo alſo Toſtatus who thinketh, that when the Lord had thus ſaid to Moſes, he deſcended and made readie the tables againſt the next day.

3. By this then it is evident, that when the Lord had all that communication with Moſes, as is ſet downe chap. 33. that Moſes was not gone up to the Lord to the mount the ſecond ſolemne time, as thinketh Toſtatus, where he continued fortie dayes more, for all that while he came not downe. See before chap. 33. qu. 55.

4. The morning is preſcribed, as Lyranus thinketh, Quia talis hora eſt convenientior, &c. becauſe that houre is more convenient to talke with God: as alſo, Quia Deus amat hilarem & obedientem ſervum; The Lord loveth cheerfull obedience, Ferus: and he is bid to come up betimes, as Toſtatus thinketh, that the people should not see what he carried, quæst. 4. But seeing that Moses spent most of the day in hewing the tables, it is not like that the people were ignorant what he did: and Simlerus thinketh rather, that the people saw Moses bearing the tables.

the

QUEST. V. Why none are suffered to come up now with Moses.

Vers. 3. Let no man come up with thee. 1. At the first time, when Moses went up to receive the Law, Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu went up with him, and 70. of the Elders, and Ioshua accompanied him still, after he had left the other: but now none is permitted to come up with him, because the Lord intended to shew unto Moses a more glorious sight, which he would have none else made partakers of but Moses. 2. This was not onely done for more reverence sake, because the Lord shewed himselfe there in some visible signe, as Lyranus: for the Lord at other times, as when he gave the Law the first time, did shew himselfe by visible signes, when yet no such prohibition was given: therefore Burgensis noteth, that this apparition was, majoris solemnitatis, of greater solemnitie, than the former: and that the Lord did now shew his secrets to Moses, which it was not lawfull for any other to see: whereupon Moses face shined at his comming downe now, and not before: therefore, curiositatis cohibendæ causa, to stay their curiositie, none are permitted to come up with Moses, Simler.

3. Here is no mention made of thunder or lightning, as in the giving of the Law: Hic omnia læta sunt; All things here are cheerfull, because this was a signe of the giving of the Gospell, Ferus.

4. Another reason hereof that none ascended with Moses, was to get him more authoritie with the people, when they see that he onely hath accesse unto Gods presence, Simler.

5. And if Moses had taken some witnesses with him, as hee did when hee smote the rocke, it had not beene so much an act of faith, as an evidence of their sight to acknowledge, thus he received the law of God. It pleased God therefore, dare aliquem locum fidei, to give some place unto faith, and yet take away all occasion of doubting: God would not have them eye witnesses of all, but to beleeve some thing. And yet there was no doubt to be made, that Moses received the law of God: for they saw Moses to carrie up the tables bare without any writing, and in the mount there was no graving instrument: beside, Moses face shined at his comming downe, which shewed, that hee had talked with God, Calvin. And the cloud in the mountaine testified that God was present, and the Lord by his owne voice before had published the law, Simler.

QUEST. VI. Why their cattell are forbidden to come neere the mount.

Vers. 3. Neither let the sheepe or cattell feed, &c. 1. Rabanus, whom Pelargus followeth, by sheepe and cattell, here understandeth, Simplices & terrenis operibus inenbantes; The simple and earthly minded, which are not fit for celestiall contemplation: but it is evident, that the text meaneth not men here (but cattell) for they were excluded before: Let not any man bee seene throughout all the mount.

2. Some thinke, that the cattell are restrained, lest by the sight of them, Moses might have beene interrupted in his contemplation: but if this had beene the reason, they should as well have beene kept off the first fortie dayes, when Moses received all those ordinances of God: and when Moses saw this glorious sight, hee was set in the cleft of the rocke, that no such object could withdraw his sight, Tostat. quæst. 4.

3. Therefore this was inquired for more reverence sake: that the very place, where the Lord appeared in this glorious manner, should be reverenced: though God be every where present, yet hee at all times, and in all places, doth not require such reverence; for then it were impossible for men to attend their necessarie worldly affaires; but onely there where it pleaseth him to manifest himselfe, as now in mount Sinai.

4. And though the cloud never departed all this time from mount Sinai, yet the Lord at sometimes shewed more conspicuous signes of his presence, as in the giving of the law: so that not at all times, they and their cattell were forbidden to come neere the mountaine. And now they are forbidden rather than before, when Moses was the first fortie dayes with God, because now the Lord shewed himselfe in more glorious manner, than at any time before, Tostat. qu. 4.

5. Beside, by occasion of the sheepe and cattell, the shepherds and heard-men might come neere also unto the mountaine, and therefore this restraint is made to stay their curiositie, Oleaster.

6. And by this, the men were admonished to be more carefull, seeing the beasts should not be spared, if they transgressed, Marbach.

7. Cajetan thinketh, that the cattell were onely kept off on one part of the mountaine, where the going up was; but rather on every side the mountaine was to be cleared, so farre as any sight might be had of that place, where the Lord appeared unto Moses, Tostat. qu. 4. For the whole mountaine was holy, because of Gods presence.

QUEST. VII. Who is said here to descend, and how.

Vers. 5. And Iehovah descended. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that an Angell of God, which he thinketh assumed that glorious bodie, which was shewed unto Moses, thus proclaimed the name Iehovah, quæst. 5. But seeing this name is not communicable to any creature, as Burgensis calleth it, nomen proprium divinum, the proper name of God: and this that here speaketh, is said to be Iehovah, could not be an Angell.

2. Therefore their opinion is sounder, which thinke this to bee the Lord Christ himselfe, the Son of God, who appeared to the Fathers, Simler. Qui & Dominus est, & Angelus Testamenti promissus; Who is both the Lord himselfe, and the great Angell of the Testament, which was promised, Lippoman. Pellican.

Pelican. For the Apoſtle ſheweth, that this Angell whom they tempted, and provoked in the wilderneſſe, was Chriſt, 1 Cor.10.9.

3. He is ſaid to deſcend, not that God doth either aſcend, or deſcend, or goe from place to place, but Symbolice, Symbolically, that is, in reſpect of the ſignes of his preſence: as here God deſcended in a cloud: likewiſe, God is ſaid to deſcend, ratione noſtri intellectus, in reſpect of our underſtanding, when he deſcendeth to our capacitie, Simlerus. And theſe are correſpondent one to the other, Moſes aſcendeth, God deſcendeth: Moſes fecit, quod præceptum erat, Deus implevit, quod promiſerat; Moſes doth as he is bidden, the Lord fulfilleth what he promiſed, Ferus.

QUEST. VIII. Who proclaimed the name Iehovah, God or Moſes.

Verſ.6. IEhovah paſſed before his face, and cried, Iehovah, Iehovah, &c. 1. The vulgar Latine readeth this in the Vocative caſe, (ſo alſo the Chalde paraphraſt) and inferreth in the former verſe, the name of Moſes, which is not in the Hebrew: Moſes invocans nomen Domini; And Moſes invocated the name of God, and putteth the verbs in the ſecond perſon, verſ.7. Which keepeſt mercie unto thouſands. So alſo Ferus, and Mathias Thoring defending Lyranus againſt Burgenſis, and Simlerus: becauſe they ſay it is not ſo fit, that the Lord ſhould be ſaid to invocate his owne name, as for Moſes to doe it.

But the Latine tranſlation, upon the which this opinion is grounded, doth evidently croſſe the originall, where verſ.5. the name Moſes is not found; neither is it put in the ſecond perſon in the Hebrew, but onely in the participle, notzer, reſerving, pokedh, viſiting, and ſo in the reſt: the word karah, alſo ſignifieth not alwayes to invocate, but to crie, call or proclaime: as Oleaſter tranſlateth, clamavit, he cried out.

2. Some thinke that God firſt ſaid theſe words, and proclaimed his titles, and names, and then, Moſes ſuum ſermonem aſſumpſit, did preſently take up the the ſame forme of ſpeech, Lippom. And thus he would reconcile the Hebrew text, and the Latine tranſlation. The like he alleageth out of the new Teſtament: that whereas one Evangeliſt, after the parable rehearſed of the husbandmen, that killed the heire, and Chriſt demanded the queſtion, what will the Lord of the vineyard doe to thoſe husbandmen? one hath, They ſaid unto him, he will come and deſtroy thoſe husbandmen: as though theſe words ſhould be uttered by the ſtanders by, Matth.21.41. yet both Mark.chap.12.9. and Luk.20.16. theſe words are rehearſed as uttered by Chriſt himſelfe. Lippoman giveth this ſolution: that after the Jewes had made anſwer in that manner to our Saviours demand, Dominus mox ſermonem reaſſumpſit; the Lord preſently reaſſumeth that ſpeech; and ſo he thinketh it is here, that firſt the Lord ſpake theſe words, and then Moſes.

But this inſtance is nothing like. 1. For the text may beare it in the Evangeliſts, that thoſe words were uttered firſt by the Jewes, and afterward by our Saviour: but here the text will not beare it, that Moſes uttered theſe words: for it is ſaid verſ.6. The Lord paſſed by and cried; He then that paſſed by Moſes, the ſame thus cried. 2. Neither yet doe the two Evangeliſts directly ſay, that thoſe words were ſpoken by Chriſt, but onely ſet downe the queſtion with the anſwer in generall: ſo that it muſt be ſupplied out of the other Evangeliſt, by whom that anſwer was made.

3. The Hebrewes doe thinke, that theſe names were proclaimed by the Lord, giving unto Moſes a forme of prayer and invocation, how to call upon him in the day of their affliction; which uſe they retaine to this day, to invocate God in this manner. As our Saviour taught his diſciples to pray, Our father which art, &c.

4. But as it cannot be denied, that the Saints in their prayers gave unto God theſe names of mercie, as Moſes did, Numb.14.18. yet the Lords ſpeciall intendment is to performe here unto Moſes, that which he had promiſed, that his glorie ſhould paſſe by him, and that he would before him proclaime the name of the Lord, both which are fulfilled in this place, Oleaſter. And this reaſon Burgenſis urgeth againſt Lyranus: that the Lord himſelfe, and not Moſes, muſt be underſtood to have proclaimed theſe names; that it may appeare how mindfull the Lord was of his promiſe unto Moſes. So alſo Toſtatus.

5. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Lord did ſhew unto Moſes his back-parts, and brought to effect all the reſt before mentioned, chap.33. But that the Scripture for brevitie ſake omitteth many things: yet by theſe things here mentioned, we are to underſtand, that God, who is moſt true and juſt in his promiſes, did accompliſh all the reſt, Toſtat.quæſt.5.

QUEST. IX. Why the name Iehovah is doubled.

Verſ.6. IEhovah, Iehovah, ſtrong. 1. Ferus by theſe three words, Iehovah, Iehovah, eel, ſtrong, underſtandeth the bleſſed Trinitie. So alſo before him, Cyrill obſerveth, becauſe it is ſaid, Iehovah proclaimed by name Iehovah, that the Father appeared in the Son, and hence proveth the divers perſons of the Father and the Son. So alſo Pelargus, Oſiander, Marbach. cont. Julian. lib.9.

2. Toſtatus thus argueth againſt theſe collections. 1. That theſe names are not peculiar unto God, as Elohim, which are aſcribed ſometimes to Angels, and ſometime to men; and therefore the Trinitie cannot well be concluded out of ſuch names, as are not peculiar unto God. 2. If the thrice repeating of the ſame name ſhould betoken the Trinitie, than when it is but twice uſed, it would as well prove a dualitie: and if it be foure times iterated, there might alſo by the like reaſon be inferred a quaternitie.

3. Therefore, although ſuch collections are not much to bee miſliked, yet the Trinitie would out of more pregnant places be proved: this doubling of the name Iehovah, was rather ſolennis teſtificatio infinitæ bonitatis, &c. a moſt ſolemne teſtification of the goodneſſe of God, Galluſ. And it ſerved to move Moſes more earneſtly to reverence and attention, Innius, Oleaſt. It may alſo ſignifie that God will be no longer unknowne unto men, Pelargus.

QUEST.

QUEST. X. Of the twelve names, and epithetes here given unto God.

1. Iehovah. Vers. 6. IEhovah, &c. The Lord giveth himselfe here twelve names and epithetes, if we count Iehovah, being doubled for two, otherwise there are but eleven: all which doe expresse his divine properties, which must be considered in their order.

1. Iehovah, Iehovah: 1. Tostatus understandeth hereby a double dominion in God, both habituall, as having dominion over all things, and actuall, in exercising the same dominion. 2. Lyranus saith he is called, Dominator, Ruler or Dominator, in populi gubernatione, in the government of the people, and Lord, in the giving of the law, and directing of the people. So the Latine translator readeth, Dominator, Domine, whereas Iehovah is twice repeated in the Hebrew. 3. But the name Iehovah, is the name of Gods essence, and it is a generall appellation, to the which the rest of the epithetes are referred, Marbach. It is the proper name of God, and it signifieth, as Damascene saith, Pelagum infinitæ substantiæ; The sea if the infinite substance: in which infiniteneſſe, cætera attributa fundantur, the rest of the attributes following are grounded, Burgens. Significat Deum à seipso existentem; It signifieth God, who hath his existence of himselfe, both bringing forth, and preserving all things, Simler. Borrhaius.

2. eel, strong. 2. God is called eel. 1. Which some interpret Deus, God: which Tostatus expoundeth, because he is secundum naturam Deus, God by nature. Lyranus, in veri cultus institutione, in the institution of the true worship. Burgensis referreth it to his divine providence. Ferus to the creation.

But it is better translated appellatively, fortis, strong, Oleaster. This name then signifieth his power, as Iehovah setteth forth his goodnesse, Borrh. His power in revenging himselfe of his enemies, and preserving his children, which commend themselves unto him, Gallas. And in performing whatsoever it pleaseth him, Marbach. As Iehovah sheweth his eternitie, so this name his infinite power, Calvin. It seemeth by the Hebrew distinction over Iehovah, that this word is suspended from the rest which follow, so that eel is one of the epithetes rather, and titles which are here given unto the Lord, than a proper name of God, as Simlerus thinketh that these, Iehovah, eel, are duo propria nomina, two proper names of God.

3. Mercifull. Mercifull, rachum. Tostatus saith, God is said to be mercifull in remitting the punishment of sinne. Burgensis understandeth it of Gods mercie toward the creatures, in that he made them, and gave them their being. But it rather betokeneth Gods inward affection of pitie, in having compassion on his children, he is mercifull, miseriis hominum compatiendo, in having a compassion of their miseries, Lyran. Ferus. Paternum erga homines affectum gerit; He beareth a fatherly affection toward men, Marbach. Pelarg. And it properly signifieth the yerning of the bowels, and inward commotion, as Ierem. 31. 20. My bowels are moved for him, I will surely have compassion on him: where the same word racham, is used, Oleaster.

4. Gracious. Gracious, channun. Burgensis referreth this to the graces which God bestoweth, supra naturam, above nature upon the creatures. Tostatus, Clementia pertinet ad culpam; Clemencie is seene in the remitting of the sinne, as mercie in forgiving the punishment. Lyranus, He is clement, offensas remittendo, in forgiving offences. So also Ferus. Some distinguish them thus: that Gods mercie is in preserving us from falling, clemencie, in restoring, and raysing up them that are fallen, ex Simler. But it seemeth not so much to be restrained, it betokenth rather generally the effect of Gods mercie and pitie, Oleaster. In not dealing with sinners as they deserve, Marbach. In receiving them to grace and favour, Pelarg. In heaping his graces and mercies upon them, Simler. And whereas many seeme to have pitie, yet either cannot, or will not helpe them that are in miserie; the Lord is not onely inwardly moved, but actually extendeth grace, Borrhaius. And thus in divers words, Gods mercie and goodnesse is commended: Quia nihil est magis proprium quam bonitas; Nothing is more proper unto him, than goodnesse and mercie, Calvin. Et quia multi effectus; And because there are many effects of the divine mercie, Ferus.

5. Slow to anger. Slow to anger, ereech aphaim: μακροθυμος, long suffering: God straightway punisheth not men, when they sinne, but spareth them, emendationem expectando, in expecting their amendment, Lyran. Peccata eorum dissimulando, as it were dissembling and winking at their sins to bring them to repentance, as hee did forbeare the old world 120. yeares, Burgens. Pœnam differendo, in deferring the punishment, Ferus. God doth not presently punish, as though he either knew not, or neglected our sinnes, but that we should come to amendment of life, Marbach. As Saint Peter sheweth, 2 Pet. 3. 9. Pelarg. This is a singular effect of Gods mercie, Oleaster.

6. Abundant in kindnesse. Abundant in kindnesse: rabb chesedh; God is so rich in mercie, that he hath more compassion of us, than we have of our selves, Tostat. He diverſly sheweth the effects of his pietie and pitie, Lyran. He is propensus ad beneficentiam, prone and readie unto mercie, Borrh. He extendeth his mercie unto all, Oleast. And he is, multæ pietatis, of great pitie towards all men, Pelargus. Multifarie impendit misericordiam, he many wayes bestoweth his mercie. 1. Sometimes when he seeth men in miserie, he hath compassion on them, as upon the Israelites in Egypt. 2. Sometime, ex gratuita voluntate, of his owne gracious will, though they be in no trouble, as Christ in mercie looked upon Paul, when he converted him. 3. Sometime hee spareth the wicked, for the righteous among them, as hee promised Abraham not to have destroyed Sodome, if ten righteous persons could have beene found among them. 4. God also spareth his people, lest the enemies should have occasion to blaspheme, as Moses intreateth God, chap. 32. 12. 5. God oftentimes sheweth mercie to a multitude, for the zeale of one righteous man, as Phinches by his zeale appeased Gods wrath toward the people. 6. Sometime the Lord considereth the frailtie and weakneſſe of man, and so forbeareth them, as Psal. 78. 38. He oft times called backe his anger, &c. for he remembred that they were flesh, Burgens.

And

And in truth, veemeth. As God is mercifull in promiſing, ſo he is moſt true, ſtable, and conſtant in performing his promiſes. Lyranus and Burgenſis underſtandeth this of Gods juſtice, verax, ideſt, juſtus, true, that is, juſt. As God is ſaid to be juſt of his word and promiſe, it may be ſo interpreted: but not as Gods juſtice and ſeverity is compared with his mercie; for that property of God is deſcribed in the next verſe: here Gods truth hath relation to his mercie and promiſes: he is verax promiſſa ſervando, true in keeping his promiſes, Ferus. God is faithfull, he deceiveth none, he cannot lye. And if Gods promiſe be not performed, it is becauſe the condition is not kept; and ſo the failing is not on Gods behalfe, but on mans: ſuch was that promiſe made to David, Pſal. 131.12. If thy ſonnes keepe my covenant, &c. their ſonnes ſhall ſit upon thy throne for ever, Toſtat. qu. 7. This mercie and truth of God, non aliter comprehendi poteſt, quam ex verbi teſtimonio, cannot be otherwiſe comprehended, than by the teſtimony of his word, Calvin. And the Lord ſpecially maketh mention here of his truth, ad conſolandum Moſem, to comfort Moſes, that hee ſhould not doubt, but that God would make good all his promiſes to Iſrael, Borrh.

7. Abundant in truth.

Verſ. 7. Reſerving mercie for thouſands. 1. Here a definit number is put for an indefinit, he meaneth all the poſterity of the faithfull, Pelarg. Hee ſheweth mercy not only to thoſe, with whom he covenanteth, ſed etiam deſcendentibus ex eis, but to thoſe which deſcend of them, Lyran. Oleaſt. As the Iſraelites now found by experience, that God reſpected them for their fathers, Borrh. And long after even in the latter times, qua ſunt valde diſtantia à temporibus patrum, which were farre diſtant from the times of the Fathers, God remembreth his mercy, as Levit. 26.41. I will remember my covenant with Iacob, &c. yea this promiſe comprehendeth all the time, both of the old and new Teſtament: for God remembring his promiſe to the Fathers, ſent his Sonne into the world; but this muſt bee underſtood of ſuch generations as doe not, obicem ponere, which are not a barre unto themſelves by their ſinne, and diſobedience, Burgenſ. Here Gods mercy reacheth unto a thouſand generations, his juſtice but unto the third or fourth, Simlerus.

8. Reſerving mercie to thouſands.

Forgiving iniquitie, tranſgreſſion, and ſinne. 1. Lyranus by theſe three underſtandeth ſinnes committed againſt our neighbour, againſt God, or againſt our ſelves. 2. Burgenſis by the firſt would have ſignified, ſinnes of infirmity; by the ſecond, ſinnes of malice; by the third, ſinnes of ignorance. 3. But thus are they better diſtinguiſhed: the firſt word ghavon, or as Oleaſter pronounceth it, aon, commeth of that root which ſignifieth to be crooked, it betokeneth crooked offences, which proceed of malice, or ex propoſito, of purpoſe; the ſecond peſhagh, is of paſhagh, which is to deale unfaithfully, ſignifieth ſuch ſinnes as are treacherouſly committed againſt God: as was the ſinne of idolatry committed againſt the Iſraelites, Toſtat. Pelarg. Such ſinnes, which proceed, ex ſuperbia; of pride, Oleaſter. Ex contemptu, of contempt, Cajetan. The third chataah, generally ſignifieth ſinne, but is more ſpecially here taken for the ſinnes of ignorance, and infirmity, Toſtat. quæſt. 7. Oleaſter, Cajetane, Pelarg. 4. Wherein appeareth Gods ſingular mercy, not only to the righteous, but to the unrighteous, Ferus. 5. Et non levibus tantùm delictis, ſed graviſſimis ſceleribus dat venam; Who only doth not pardon ſmall offences, but moſt grievous ſinnes, Calvin.

9. Forgiving iniquitie, &c.

Quæst. XI. How the Lord is ſaid not to make innocent.

By no meanes making the wicked innocent. 1. The words in the originall are thus, In making innocent, he will not make innocent: which Ferus following the Chalde paraphraſt, divideth into two ſentences: He maketh innocent, or diſmiſſeth unpuniſhed them which doe repent, yet juſtifieth not thoſe which are impenitent: but the grammaticall conſtruction will not beare this ſenſe: In abſolving, he will not abſolve: but are referred to the ſame object.

10. Epithete. Where ſee both of the reading and meaning of theſe words.

2. Oſiander underſtandeth it of ſuch as make themſelves innocent before God, whom the Lord notwithſtanding will not hold to bee innocent: but nakeh, here is not a noune, but a verbe, In making innocent, &c.

3. The Latine readeth thus, Nullus apud te per ſe innocens; None is with thee of himſelfe held to be innocent: that is, none of himſelfe, or of his owne power, can be innocent before thee. So Toſtat. qu. 8. But theſe words, with thee, and, of himſelfe, are not in the originall.

4. Lyranus thus interpreteth, that none are innocent before God, as having either actuall or originall ſinne: but the word nakeh, is here a verbe, naki, ſignifieth the innocent, the other to make innocent: it cannot therefore be thus conſtrued, the innocent he maketh not innocent: but in making innocent, he will not make innocent.

5. Burgenſis thus underſtandeth it, that the Lord holdeth not the innocent in the remiſſion of their ſinne, to be innocent, in reſpect of ſome puniſhmet, which may remaine. But daily experience ſheweth the contrary, that God, multa peccata impunita præterit, doth leave many ſinnes unpuniſhed at all: neither doth the puniſhment remaine, the ſinne being once pardoned, Calvin.

6. Oleaſter giveth this ſenſe: Vere innocentem ita percutiet, &c. Sometime hee will ſmite or correct the innocent, as though he were not innocent, as he ſheweth by the example of Iob, leſt God might ſeeme to be unjuſt in afflicting the righteous. But if God ſhould be ſaid in the ſame action, and at the ſame time to abſolve, and not to abſolve it would include a contradiction.

7. Wherefore the beſt interpretation is that which the Septuagint follow, τὸν ἔνοχον, the guilty he will not purifie: ſo that here two Hebraiſmes muſt be obſerved: firſt, the word is iterated and repeated, In abſolving, I will not abſolve, to ſhew the certainty of the thing, that is, nullo modo abſolvam, I will by no meanes abſolve, Iun. Secondly, I will not abſolve, that is, punio, I doe or will puniſh, Vatabl. And further, here muſt be ſupplied the word ſontem, the guiltie, I will not abſolve, Iun. Calvin. Gallaſ. Pelarg. As the like like place is found, Ierem.46.28. venakeh lo enakeh; in setting thee free, I will not set thee free: that is, will not hold thee altogether innocent; but will punish thee. So also Ierem.25.19. In being innocent should yee be innocent: where the same word is doubled, the meaning is, they should not be altogether innocent, Calvin.

8. Calvin also propoundeth another sense, because nikkah, sometime signifieth to cut off, it may be thus interpreted, succidendo non succidam, in cutting off, I will not cut off: and so it may be a reason of the former sentence, that God will forgive sinnes, and not cut off the sinners altogether. But he preferreth rather the former interpretation; for the other sentence ending with a perfect distinction, sheweth that the sentence following hath no dependance of it.

QUEST. XII. What the Lord visiteth for in the posteritie of the wicked.

11. Epithete. visiting iniquitie.

Vers. 7. Visiting the iniquity, &c. 1. Lest God having hitherto proclaimed his mercie might be thought not to regard the sinnes of men: the Lord now addeth, that he is also a visiter, and punisher of sinne upon the wicked, and their posterity, Ferus. 2. And by sinne here is understood, neither the act of sinne, which cannot be transmitted over unto other, but being a transitory thing resteth in the doer; nor the fault, which only goeth with the act; nor the blot, which is only in the soule of the sinner, and offender; nor yet the guilt: for if the children were guilty of their fathers sinnes, then they should for the same be everlastingly punished: therefore by sinne is meant the punishment of sinne, which is extended to their posterity, Tostat.qu.8. 3. And God usually punisheth the fathers but unto the fourth generation: as the Amorites, and Amalekites were punished after 400 yeeres, which expired in the fourth generation, Gen.15. vers.13,16. Oleaster.

QUEST. XIII. How the children are punished for their fathers sinnes.

Vers.7. The iniquity of the fathers upon the children, &c. In deciding of this question, how the sonnes are punished for their fathers sinnes, it must be considered, whether the punishment bee inflicted by man, or by God. 1. If by man the punishment bee imposed, it is either in the losse onely of temporall things, or in death: the children may justly be deprived of temporall things, as of possessions, privileges, honours, for the transgression of their parents. As by humane Lawes, treason against the Prince or Common-wealth, is punished with death in the offenders, and losse of honours and goods in their posterity. But the punishment of death cannot be inflicted upon the children for their fathers offences: as a rule is given in Deut.24.16. The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers.

2. If the punishment be inflicted by the Lord, it is either eternall or temporall: first, eternall punishment is laid upon none, but upon the party that sinneth: The same soule that sinneth shall dye, Ezech.18.4. If it be temporall, it consisteth either in the losse of some temporall benefit, or of life: if the first, not onely little ones and infants, as the Hebrewes thinke shall suffer for their fathers sinnes, but even they which are of yeeres, as the Israelites did beare the iniquity of their fathers forty yeeres in the desart: and the Jewes great and small were afflicted in the Babylonian captivity: but where the punishment of temporall death is decreed by the Lord, there onely the infants are punished for their fathers sinnes: as the children of the rebellious, Core, Dathan, and Abiram, were swallowed up with their fathers: the greater sort also perished in that destruction, but then they were such as consented thereunto, Tostat.quæst.9. So also Achan was stoned with his sonnes and daughters, for the sacrilege by him commited: where Tostatus thinketh that they were little ones: because the greater sort were not privy to his sinne, seeing he had hid the stollen things in the ground. But it is more like that they were such, as might give consent unto the sinne, and conceale it, and that the things were not hid without their privity, Iun. Or for the greater detestation of that fact, and the example of others, this exemplary punishment might be inflicted upon them, Osiander.

But here two exceptions may be taken unto Tostatus conclusions: 1. That he maketh infants liable to those sinnes of the fathers, which the Lord saith he will here visit, to the third and fourth generation: whereas onely those children which continue like haters of God, as their fathers were, and imitate their impiety, are included in this commination, as appeareth by that clause inserted in the second Commandement, of them that hate me. Againe, when infants are cut off by death, their owne originall sinne is sufficient cause thereof, which bringeth death upon them, and so infants are taken away, not onely to the fourth generation, but in other succeeding ages further off.

2. He restraineth this generall speech, visiting the iniquity of the fathers, onely unto temporall punishments beside death, whereas the Lords judgements are not to be limited to this or that kinde, but sometime by corporall death, sometime by other temporall punishments, hee doth visit the iniquity of the wicked fathers, in their evill posteritie.

QUEST. XIV. Why the posteritie of the wicked are punished for their fathers sinnes.

Vnto the third and fourth generation. There are foure answers usually made, to shew the equity of this, that the posterity of the wicked should be punished for their fathers sinnes. 1. Because God that gave life, may againe without any injustice require it againe: Nulli facis injuriam occidendo quemcunq;; He doth no wrong by slaying of any, Cajetan. 2. Non tam lugent peccata parentum, quam naturæ debitum; They doe not so much rue the sinnes of their parents, as yeeld natures debt, which God may exact, when, and of whom, and how he please, Iun. annot. Iosh.7. vers.25. 3. It must be understood of temporall punishments, which may be inflicted for the fathers sinnes, Tostat.qu.9. 4. But the best solution is, that God sheweth mercie unto a thousand generations, of them that love him, and visiteth the iniquitie quity of the fathers to the third and fourth generation of them that hate him: which words although they be not inſerted here, are added to the ſecond Commandement, *Exod.*20.

5. But Toſtatus thus objecteth to this laſt anſwer. 1. That the wicked children of good parents are found to be reſpected for their fathers, as the Lord ſuffered the wicked Kings of Judah to ſit upon the throne, for their father Davids ſake.

2. If this ſhould be underſtood of ſhewing mercie, to the vertuous ſeed, and vengeance to the wicked race: they ſhould be reſpected for their owne piety or ſinne, not for their fathers.

3. If the children are puniſhed, which are found in their owne ſinnes: how can the third or fourth generation be counted from themſelves: therefore they are puniſhed for their ſinnes, from whom the account of the generations beginneth.

4. In this ſenſe there ſhould be no difference, betweene the continuance of mercie to a thouſand generations, and of puniſhment to the fourth generation: for the wicked for their owne ſinnes, are not puniſhed only to the fourth generation, but to a thouſand alſo, *Toſtat. qu.*10.

Contra. 1. It is not denied, but that God may beſtow temporall bleſſings upon the children of the righteous, though they be wicked: but that is not generall, nor perpetuall: God ſometimes is ſo mercifull, as he was to Davids poſterity, for ſome reaſons beſt knowne to himſelfe. But this promiſe is generall, and certainly holdeth not, but where the children imitate the fathers piety.

2. The condition of them that love me, and of them that hate me, is not underſtood of the particular, but the exemplary vertues or ſinnes of the children, wherein they imitate their parents: and ſo they are both their parents, origine & exemplo, in reſpect of the originall and example, and theirs in imitation.

3. The generations are counted from him, whoſe evill example they corruptly imitate: for otherwiſe a mans private and particular ſinnes concerne but himſelfe only. So the wicked poſterity of the wicked, are both puniſhed unto the third and fourth generation, for the exemplary ſinnes of their fathers, which they imitate, and for their owne ſinnes they are puniſhed without any limitation.

4. The ſame anſwer may ſerve to the fourth objection: for the difference is in this, that mercie is extended unto the righteous ſeed of the righteous, in a double reſpect, both of the examplary vertues of their fathers, whom they imitate, and of their owne righteouſneſſe: and this without limitation, even to a thouſand generations, not that there ſhal be ſo many generations in the world, but to ſhew, that De miſericordia nunquam exhauritur, Gods mercie is never drawne drie, Vatabl. So the wicked race of the ungodly alſo is puniſhed in a double manner, for imitating their fathers ſinnes, which puniſhment extendeth not beyond the fourth generation, and for their owne ſinnes, which every one ſhall be judged for in his generation, and that for ever.

Quest. XIV. How Moſes and Ezechiel may be reconciled.

WHerefore Rupertus reſolution here is very ſound: Non portat filius iniquitatem patris, quandocunq; non imitatur; The ſonne doth not beare the fathers iniquity, when he doth not imitate his ſinne: and ſo he reconcileth Moſes and the Prophet Ezechiel, who ſaith, *The ſonne ſhall not beare the iniquitie of the father, chap.*18.20. And yet the Lord here ſaith to Moſes, that he will viſit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, &c. The Prophet ſpeaketh of ſuch children as decline their fathers evill wayes: the Lord here of ſuch as imitate their fathers impiety.

2. Cajetane giveth another ſolution: Hic eſt ſermo de pœna corporis, ibi de pœna animæ; Here the Lord ſpeaketh of the puniſhment of the body, there of the puniſhment of the ſoule. But it is evident that the Prophet ſpeaketh alſo of temporall puniſhment: as that proverbe uſed among the Iſraelites muſt be underſtood, Our fathers have eaten ſower grapes, and our teeth are ſet on edge: they doe not meane that their ſoules were puniſhed for their fathers ſinnes, but their bodies.

3. Toſtatus, as is ſhewed before, *queſt.*13. thinketh that the Prophet ſpeaketh only of puniſhment by death; and ſo the children are not puniſhed for their fathers ſinnes, only infants excepted: but this place he would have underſtood of other temporall puniſhments, which the children may ſuffer for their parents ſinnes, *Toſtat. qu.*9.

Contra. But this obſervation doth not hold: for Eli his poſterity were even cut off by death, for the ſinne of Elies houſe: it is told him by the Prophet, that there ſhould not bee an old man of his houſe, 1 Sam. 2. 32. which came to paſſe when 85. of his poſterity were ſlaine by Saul in one day, 1 Sam. 22. Therefore the former ſolution of Rupertus is the beſt. See more hereof, *chap.*20. *queſt.*7. and 8. upon the ſecond Commandement.

Quest. XV. How a thouſand generations are to be counted.

Verſ. 7. Reſerving mercie for thouſands. 1. It muſt not be taken ſtrictly and preciſely, for a thouſand generations; for ſo many there ſhall not be from the beginning of the world, to the end thereof, as may be thus ſhewed. 1. From Adam to Chriſt were not much above 4000. yeeres: Toſtatus counteth them above 5000. but he is therein greatly deceived: yet according to Saint Lukes computation, there are but 70. generations from Chriſt to Adam, and in Matthewes genealogie but 62. twenty from Adam to Abraham, and from thence to Jeſus 42. generations: if in foure thouſand yeeres and odde, there were but 70. generations, a thouſand generations according to that proportion, would require above forty thouſand. 2. Againe, if a generation be taken for an hundred yeeres, the longeſt time of a mans life, the ſumme would amount to an hundred thouſand yeeres: if it be reſtrained to that age, when a man is apt for generation, which is twenty, or twenty five yeeres, a thouſand generations will make up twenty, or twenty five thouſand yeeres.

2. Wherefore, a thouſand generations are here taken indefinitely, for many generations, Toſtatus.

For univerſa familia, the whole family of the righteous, Ferus. Signifying that Gods mercie ſhall never be exhauſt toward the righteous, and their ſeed.

QUEST. XVI. The fathers merits are not extended to their children, only Chriſts merits are extended to infinite generations.

BUt if God doe ſhew mercie unto the poſterity of the righteous, for their fathers ſake, it ſeemeth to be of merit, for the worthineſſe of their fathers; how then is it a mercie? Hereunto it may be thus anſwered.

1. There is no mans righteouſneſſe, which is ſufficient for himſelfe, much leſſe is it of ſuch force, as to extend to ſo many generations, that God for the fathers righteouſneſſe, ſhould forgive all the ſinnes of their poſterity: they were not Abrahams merits, but Gods gracious promiſe made to Abraham, which procured ſuch favour and mercie to his poſterity.

2. Only the merits of Chriſt are of ſuch infinite vertue, partly in regard of the perfection of his obedience, wherein was no defect, and partly for the worthineſſe of his perſon, being both God and man, that the force thereof indureth to all generations. But in Chriſts death there is both merit and mercie to bee conſidered: in that Chriſts death ſatisfieth fully for the ſinnes of the world, it is a worke of merit, not of mercy, in reſpect of the Redeemer: for the death of Chriſt being given for our ſinnes, is, aliquid æquivalens, of like value, fully anſwerable to Gods juſtice; therefore forgiveneſſe of our ſinnes is merited by Chriſt, not purchaſed of favour. But in reſpect of us, it is of mercie, both in that God gave his Sonne to dye for us, it ſhewed his mercy and love toward us, 1 *Ioh.*4.9. And in that Chriſt would vouchſafe to dye for us being ſinners, was his great mercie and love, *Rom.*5.8. And thirdly, that he applieth the merit of his death to us, and maketh his righteouſneſſe ours: for where no workes are, but faith, the wages is not counted by debt, but of favour, as the Apoſtle ſheweth by the contrary: *That to him that worketh, the wages is not counted of favour, but by debt, Rom.*4.4. *Toſtat. qu.*7.

QUEST. XVII. After what manner God ſheweth mercie to thouſands, and viſiteth iniquitie to the third and fourth generation.

VPon occaſion of theſe words, *verſ.*7. of Gods reſerving mercie unto thouſands, and viſiting iniquitie to the third and fourth generation: Toſtatus inferreth certaine propoſitions and concluſions, which may ſerve further for the explanation of this verſe.

1. The promiſe of ſhewing mercie to a thouſand generations, is moſt certaine, and alwayes performed: but the other viſitation to puniſh, God alwayes executeth not, becauſe he is more inclined to mercie than juſtice.

2. The children, which ſuffer for their fathers ſinnes, may beare the iniquity of many of their predeceſſors at once: as Toſtatus reckoneth fifteene perſons in foure generations, for whoſe ſinnes the childe may ſuffer: as on his fathers ſide, there are his father, his grandfather, grandmother, great grandfather, and great grandmother, and his belſer, and beldame; theſe make ſeven, and there are as many on his mothers ſide: all theſe make 14. perſons of his predeceſſors and anceſtors within foure generations, and himſelfe maketh the fifteenth: ſo likewiſe the childe may fare well for many of his good predeceſſours ſake, but they are not limited to the generations, as the other, and ſo cannot be numbred.

3. According to the greatneſſe of the righteouſneſſe, or iniquity of the fathers, ſo is mercie or judgement extended more or leſſe unto their ſeed: mercy may be ſhewed to a thouſand, that is, many generations, and ſometime it may be reſtrained to fewer, as the Lord promiſeth Iehu, that his ſeed ſhall ſit upon the throne of Iſrael but unto the fourth generation, 2 King. 10.30. And ſo the puniſhment never exceedeth the fourth generation, but it may fall out that it doth not reach ſo farre; according to the quantity of the ſinnes of the fathers, which the children imitate.

4. It is often ſeene, that the children may both be afflicted for the ſinnes of their fathers in one reſpect, and in another receive mercie: as Rehoboam for Davids ſake held the Kingdome of Judah, but for the ſinne of Salomon and his owne, he loſt the Kingdome of Iſrael.

5. The more vertuous predeceſſors one hath, the greater mercie ſhall he receive: as the bleſſing of Abraham, Iſaack, and Iacob, were more availeable, than if there had beene but one of them: and therefore Iacob ſaith to Ioſeph, *The bleſſings of thy father ſhall be ſtronger than the bleſſings of mine Elders, Gen.*49.26. for he had his fathers bleſſing, and all the reſt concurring therewith.

6. The more evill predeceſſors one hath, the greater puniſhment he receiveth, his owne ſinne alſo being added to theirs: as Salomon for his owne ſinne deſerved to be deprived of the Kingdome, but for his fathers ſake he injoyed it ſtill, yet he had trouble in his old age. But Rehoboam becauſe of Salomons ſinne, and his owne, had a greater puniſhment, the loſſe of the Kingdome of Iſrael, *Toſtat. quæſt.*10.

QUEST. XVIII. Why Moſes made haſte.

Verſ 8. THen Moſes made haſte. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke, that Moſes made this haſte, when he heard the Lord pronouncing, that he would viſit the iniquity of the fathers, to the third and fourth generation, leſt the Lord ſhould have proceeded to more generations, to the fifth or ſixth. But it is not like that Moſes would interrupt the Lords ſpeech, or that he would preſume to alter the Lords purpoſe, Toſtat. Simler.

2. Cajetane thinketh, that Moſes, à principio viſionis proſtratus eſt, from the beginning of the viſion did proſtrate himſelfe. But how could he have then ſeene this goodly viſion of the Lords back-parts, if he had beene proſtrate upon the ground?

3. But theſe were the reaſons why Moſes made haſte: being ſtricken with admiration at the preſence of God, which both by this glorious apparition, and by the Lords voice was manifeſted, hee humbleth himſelfe, himselfe, Marbach. Being thereto invited also, suavissima concione, by the most sweet and comfortable speech of the Lord, Osiander. And he maketh haste, ne omitteret opportunitatem, lest he should omit the opportunity offered: for the Lord passed by as in haste, Ferus. Like as subjects use to offer their petitions to the Prince, at his first comming into my City: quia suam præsentiam omnibus jucundam esse volunt, because they will have their presence comfortable to all, Simler.

QUEST. XIX. Of Moses prayer, the manner thereof, and of Moses perswasions used in his prayer.

Vers.9. I pray thee, &c. that the Lord would now goe with us. 1. Moses had obtained this before, but he still reneweth the same petition: Timebat enim ne superveniret impedimentum propter peccatum populi; He was afraid, lest through the peoples sinne some impediment might fall out to hinder the Lords purpose, Lyran, Tostat. And he doth renue his prayer, as our blessed Saviour prayed thrice in the garden, quia non sufficit semel orasse, because it is not sufficient to pray once, Lippom. De novo orat, &c. He prayeth also anew, because he desired new promises, Ferus.

2. Moses useth three perswasions in this his prayer: one is from the condition of the people, because they were of a stiffe necke, and had so much the more need of Gods presence to mollifie them, Iun. And so Moses returneth that upon God, as a reason of his presence, which the Lord had alleaged before as a cause of his departure, chap. 33.3. Then he intreateth the Lord by his owne mercifull nature, which was ready to give pardon. And thirdly, he putteth God in minde of his covenant, which he had made with his people to be his inheritance, Iun.

3. And Moses confesseth and saith, our sinnes, including also himselfe, because there are none perfect in Gods sight, Simler. As Daniel also prayeth, Dan. 9.5. We have sinned, and committed iniquitie, Cajetane thinketh he hath relation to Aarons sinne, for the which he intreateth: but the other sense is better.

4. Moses maketh mention only of iniquity and sinne, omitting the third, that is, transgressions, which proceed of pride, and contempt against God. Tostatus and Cajetane give this reason, because the people were not guilty of that kinde of sinne, to offend against God, ex contemptu, of contempt. But by these two all other sinnes rather are understood, Simler. For Moses would make a full and ample confession of their sinnes, that he might move the Lord to compassion.

5. Moses also wisely frameth his prayer, and groundeth it upon the Lords owne words: for as the Lord had professed himselfe, ready to forgive sinnes and iniquity; so Moses saith, pardon our iniquitie, and the Lord had said, that he reserved mercy to thousands, so Moses intreateth, that he would take them for his inheritance for ever, Ferus.

QUEST. XX. What covenant the Lord here renueth with Moses.

Vers.10. Behold I will make a covenant before all the people. 1. Cajetane seemeth to thinke, that this was the speciall covenant made with Aaron and Moses, the one to be the governour of the people, the other to be the high Priest. But Moses made no suit or request for himselfe, but only in the peoples name: and therefore the Lord meaneth that generall covenant, which he would now renue with his people: as it is evident by the ordinances which are here propounded, which concerned the people in generall, Simler.

2. Ferus seemeth to understand this covenant of that solemne league, which Moses made with the people, Deut. 29. in the land of Moab. But that was only a renuing of the covenant here made, because the people which had seene the Lords great wonders in Egypt, were all then dead: this covenant then was at this time revived, when the Lord writ the second time the Commandements in the tables of stone, which were signes of the covenant, and sent downe Moses with them unto the people, Simler.

3. There were two speciall parts of this covenant, one was absolute, that the blessed Messiah should be borne of that nation: the other was conditionall, for the inheriting of the land of Canaan, which afterward through their disobedience they were deprived of, when they went into captivity, Simler.

QUEST. XXI. Of the divers kindes of marvels.

Vers.10. I will doe marvels. There are three kinde of wonders or marvels in the world. 1. Some are such as are strange and unusuall, yet not beside the order and course of nature, but are wrought by the skill and device of men: such were those, which were called the wonders of the world: as the temple of Diana at Ephesus; Mausolus tombe; the image of the Sunne at Rhodes; and Iuppiters image at Olympus, made by Phidias; the wals of Babylon, which Semiramis made; and the Pyramides in Egypt.

2. Some are done beside the ordinary course of nature, by the operation of Spirits, but they differ from true miracles and wonders; for either they be counterfeit workes, done by the deceit and collusion of Satan: such were the Magicians serpents, that contended with Moses, and the wonders which Antichrist shall worke by the power of Satan, 2 Thessal. 2. or they are done to a false end, to confirme superstition, and false religion, such as have beene practised by superstitious Monkes in pilgrimages, and at the reliques of Saints, to hold the people in errour, Simler.

3. But the true miracles are indeed such as are wrought by the power of God, above and beyond the ordinary course of nature: and these are of three sorts, either such which only worke terrour and admiration, such as were the sound of the trumpet, and thunder, and the appearance of fire in mount Sinai, when the Law was delivered: or such as were for some necessary use, and present benefit, as the raining of Manna, the bringing forth of water out of the rocke; and such were all our blessed Saviours miracles, which alwayes tended to some profitable end: or they were such, as were sent for the destruction and punishment of the wicked; as was the opening of the earth to swallow up Core, Dathan, and Abiram: and the sudden death of Ananias and Sapphira in the new Testament, Act. 5. Simler.

QUEST. XXII. What marvels these are, which the Lord here saith he will doe.

Vers.10. MArvels, such as have not beene done in all the world. 1. Some understand these marvels to be those wonderfull signes, which should be shewed in the day of judgement: for otherwise these signes were never given unto the Jewes, ad literam, according to the letter, Gloss. interlinear. But it is evident that the Lord speaketh of such signes, as Moses and the people, among whom hee was, should see: they were presently then to be performed, and such strange and wonderfull workes the Lord shewed indeed unto his people in the wildernesse.

2. Rupertus understandeth them of the incarnation, passion, resurrection of Christ: so Ferus, of the miracles which Christ wrought in the dayes of his flesh: for otherwise, saith Rupertus, Majora signa visa sunt, &c. greater signes were seene in Egypt, than any done among that people, before Christ came. But the Lord here speaketh of such workes as he would doe by the ministery of Moses: It is a terrible thing that I will doe with thee, that is, by thy ministerie, Iun.

3. Oleaster referreth it to that familiarity which Moses had with God, like as never any had before him, or after. But that was no terrible thing, but rather gracious and favourable.

4. Tostatus understandeth these marvellous things, of the shining of Moses face, because that served specially as a signe to confirme the covenant and league made here with the people: the other wonders, which were done after in the wildernesse, being so long after, did not so properly belong to the confirmation of this covenant, qu. 11.

Contra. 1. The wonders here spoken of are such, as should be terrible: but the shining of Moses countenance was not terrible, but glorious, which they were not withstanding afraid to behold for the great glory. 2. And that was but one wonderfull worke: but these are many here spoken of. 3. And all the signes and wonders, which the Lord wrought for his people in the desart, were confirmations of his love, and evident signes of his presence.

5. Cajetane especially referreth these marvels to those terrible signes, which were specially shewed, to confirme Moses and Aaron in their office and calling, as the swallowing up of Core, Dathan and Abiram by the earth, and the burning of the rest of the seditious with fire, Numb. 16.

But as well this, as all other wonders, which the Lord did for his people, must be here comprehended, seeing the covenant was made with them all.

6. Wherefore, here are understood better all those wonders, which God wrought for the people in the desart by Moses, and afterward in Canaan under Iosua; Iun. Marbach. As the destruction of the foresaid rebellious company, the dividing of the waters of Jordan, the standing still of the Sunne, Lyran. The overthrow and subversion of the Canaanites, and the victorious conquest over them, Calvin. Balaam also spake, and God miraculously turned his cursing into blessing, Simler. To know then what these marvels were, we must learne out of the rest of the bookes following, what great things the Lord did for his people, Gallas. Osiander.

QUEST. XXIII. Why the Girgashites are here omitted.

Vers.11. I will cast out before thee the Amorites, &c. Here are only six nations of the Canaanites rehearsed, the Girgashites are omitted. 1. Lippoman thinketh this to be the reason thereof, because before the entrance of the Israelites into the land of Canaan, forte de terra illa recesserat, it may be that they were departed out of the country. But it is like that they would rather have made a league with Iosua, as the Gibeonites did, than have forsaken their country for feare of the Israelites.

2. Some thinke they are not named, because they did not fight against Iosua, Ex Tostat. quæst. 79. in Exod. 23. But the contrary appeareth, Iosh. 4. 10. where the Girgashites are rehearsed among those nations, whom the Lord would cast out before them. And none of the Canaanites, saving onely the Gibeonites, are said to have made peace with Iosuah, Iosh. 11. 19.

3. The Septuagint, whose manner is to supply out of one place, that which is wanting in another; doe here also insert the Girgashite. But this is too great boldnesse to adde any thing to the authenticall originall.

4. Wherefore, the Girgashites either being a small people, might be comprehended under the rest, Tostat. Or by a Synecdoche, when part is taken for the whole, under these nations here named, the other also are signified: which is the reason, that sometime two or three of these nations are set downe often for all the rest, Calvin.

QUEST. XXIV. How it stood with Gods justice, to destroy all the inhabitants of Canaan.

I will cast out. It may seeme both a cruell edict, decreed of God for the utter extirpation of these inhabitants of Canaan, and as cruelly to have beene executed by the Israelites. 1. The equity of God in decreeing this to be done, may thus appeare: 1. If God might rightfully assigne that country unto his people, as the earth is the Lords, and the fulnesse thereof, he may dispose of it at his pleasure, then by the same right, it was lawfull for the Lord to expell and root out the former inhabitants.

2. Yet there is another reason beside of Gods equity: the Lord had now spared them a long time, even 400. yeeres, expecting their repentance, and they waxed worse. The Lord said in Abrahams time, and to Abraham, the sinnes of the Amorites were not yet full, Genes. 15. 16. Now then after so long patience in forbearing these wicked nations, non fuit crudelitas pœna gravitate moram pensare, it was no cruelty with greatnesse of punishment to recompense the long stay thereof, Calvin.

3. The earth is said to have spued out this people for their great impiety: Si mortuo elemento intolerabilis est impietas, &c. If their impiety were intolerable to the very dead element; how much more might the Lord exercise his judgement with rigour? Calvin.

4. Againe,

4. Againe, the Lord having decreed to plant his people in Canaan, was to expell the idolatrous inhabitants, lest they might have beene a ruine, and occasion of falling to his people, Marbach.

2. And as the Lords decree was just against these wicked inhabitants, so the execution thereof by the Israelites in destroying them all, was also just. 1. Because non est hominis revocare poenam, &c. It is not in mans power to revoke the punishment decreed by the Lord, for then they should have incurred the same penalty themselves: as the Lord by his Prophet said to Ahab, who had let Benhadad goe, Because thou hast let goe out of thine hand a man whom I appointed to dye, thy life shall goe for his. Marbach. 1 King. 20.42.

2. Seeing the victory and conquest of those nations, was only of the Lord, it was just and right, ipsum leges victoriae statuere, that he should set the lawes of the victory, who were to be spared, who not: therefore the Israelites could not alter any part of Gods will on that behalfe, Gallas.

3. And if the Israelites had spared them, privassent se legitima haereditate, &c. they had deprived themselves of the lawfull inheritance, which was ordained them of God, Calvin.

QUEST. XXV. Why they were to make no compact with the Canaanites.

Vers. 12. Thou shalt make no compact with them. 1. The Israelites are specially warned to take heed of the Canaanites, to make no league with them, because they were most in danger to be corrupted by them, seeing they were not all destroyed at once, but many remained and dwelt among them, not only in Cities by themselves, as the Canaanites had their Cities in the midst of Ephraim and Manasses, Iosh. 16. 10 and 17. 16. but they dwelt among them in the same City, as the Jebusites did in Jerusalem, Iosh. 15.63. there was not so much danger to be feared by the nations which were further off, and therefore when they tooke any of their Cities, they might save their persons alive: but if it were a City of the Canaanites, they were to save none alive, Deut. 20.15, 16. Tostat. quaest. 12.

2. Another cause of this prohibition, was the great impiety and wickednesse of the Canaanites, among whom was practised all ungodlinesse: for the which cause their land spued them out, Levit. 18.28. And this reason is touched here, Lest they be the cause of thy ruine: this amity and league betweene them, might be a meanes to draw them to idolatry, Marbach.

3. Further the Lord had appointed the Canaanites to destruction, and therefore, with such as were Gods enemies no league was to be made, Simler.

4. By this meanes also, legitimo suo haereditate privarent, they should deprive themselves of their lawfull inheritance, which the Lord had promised to Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, and to their seed, Simler.

5. Duos pessimos fructus illiciti foederis numerat; He reckoneth up two very bad fruits of this unlawfull league: the land should be defiled with their altars, and superstitious monuments, which they would erect under the colour of this league: and beside, humanitatis praetextu populum corrumpent, they will corrupt the people under pretense of humanity, in calling them to their idolatrous feasts, Calvin.

6. But all kinde of league and entercourse is not forbidden, with nations of strange religion: there be foedera commerciorum causa, leagues for traffike sake, and other common necessary things, which belong unto the life; which kinde of league may be made with such, but not foedera auxiliatoria, leagues of mutuall helpe, Simler. Calvin. See more hereof, chap. 23. qu. 50.

QUEST. XXVI. Why their images were to be broken downe.

Vers. 13. And breake their images in peeces. 1. This they were commanded to doe, ut non remaneat memoria, &c. that there should no memory remaine of idolatry, Lyran. For looke what was left of those superstitious monuments, tantundem fomenti remaneret, so much leaven remained to corrupt pure religion, Gallas. 2. So that it is evident that these things were not to be transferred to Gods service, as though it were lawfull to worship the true God after that manner, wherein they worshipped their false gods; for this is added as a reason: Thou shalt not bow downe to any other god: therefore, si Iehovam in statuis colere vis, Deum alienum colis; if thou wilt worship God by images, thou dost worship a strange god, Simler. For the true God will be worshipped after that manner, which he hath prescribed, Marbach. Here then is the errour of the Romanists, that doe worship God after the superstitious rites of the Heathen. 3. Beside, if images must be broken downe, then it is not lawfull to retaine them still, though they be not professedly adored: for the very occasion of offence and stumbling must be taken out of the way. as Hezekiah brake downe the brasen serpent, which the people had superstitiously abused: this then maketh strongly against them, that tolerate images in their Churches, though they adore them not.

QUEST. XXVII. To what use images being pulled downe may be converted.

4. THe gold and silver, which came of these images, it was not lawfull for them to convert to their owne private use, Deut. 7.26. they are forbidden to bring any such abominable thing into their house, Tostat. qu. 12. Yet to publike uses, either for the service of God, or for the Commonwealth, they might be converted: as the gold and silver, and the spoile of Jericho, was put to the Lords treasury, Iosh. 6.19. though it were sinne in Achan to take that which he purloined to his owne private use, Simler.

5. It is not safe that such monuments of superstition should still be kept, though the use be discontinued: as it hath fallen out in some places in our times, that images having beene laid aside, and not defaced, were set up againe, when idolatrie was revived: the saying is, that, He that will not have a Storke returne to his house, must pull downe her nest, Simler.

And here in England, if those superstitious eels of Monkes had not beene pulled downe, it is to be feared, that those uncleane birds would have setled themselves in their nests againe. The things then consecrate to idolatrie, being so defaced, as that they cannot returne to their former use, may be converted to some other publike service.

QUEST.

Quest. XXIX. To whom it belongeth to pull downe images.

Vers. 13. BReake their images in peeces. 1. It is not sufficient then for idolatry by the preaching of the Word, to be pulled out of mens hearts; as some affirme, but the Magistrate is commanded by his authority, to remove all such stumbling blockes: as the good Kings of Judah, Ezechiah and Iosiah did, and the good Christian Emperours, Constantine, and Theodosius. 2 And this belongeth not to any private man to doe, but to leave it to the Magistrate, to whom the Lord hath committed this authority, to reforme publike abuses; yet in their private families men may reforme their households: as Iacob caused all in his house to remove from them their strange gods, Gen. 35. 2.

3. And further, as it is not lawfull for private men, by their private authority, to take upon them the publike reformation in abolishing reliques of superstition: as it was decreed in the Eliberine Councell, that if any man breaking downe an image, were slaine in the very act doing, he should not be counted a Martyr: and Theodoret writeth of one Audax a Bishop, who overthrew Persarum pyraea, the temple of the Persians, wherein they worshipped fire; which fact he commendeth not, but approveth his constancie, in that he chose rather to suffer punishment, than to restore idolatrie: yet notwithstanding they fall not under this censure, who being private men, instinctu Spiritus excitantur, are stirred up by the instinct of Gods Spirit, and moved with an heroicall spirit, to doe any such publike act: as Ambrose Epist. 29. defendeth a certaine Bishop, which had set on fire a Synagogue of the Jewes, and another, which under Julian the Emperour, was put to death for pulling downe an Altar. So some among us, and in other places have beene moved by the like spirit, to shew their detestation against idolatry publikely, in defacing of images, and disgracing the Masse, who are not rashly to be condemned, Simler.

Quest. XXX. How the Lord is said to be a jealous God.

Vers. 14. WHose name is Ielous, a jealous God. 1. Thomas Aquin. defineth jealousie to be Intensus amor non patiens consortium in amore; A fervent love, not suffering any fellowship in that which is loved: and it is of two sorts, either in that which is good, as to be jealous of Gods honour, and in this sense the Apostle saith, It is good to love earnestly alwayes in a good thing, Gal. 4. 18. and this is a good zeale or jealousie, and thus the Lord is said to be jealous, as a man is over the chastity of his wife: that his people should not commit spirituall fornication. There is a jealousie in other outward things, as in the honours of this life, as Saul was jealous over David for the Kingdome, and this is an evill jealousie.

2 Cor. 11. Lectio. 1.

2. Sometime one is jealous for himselfe, as the husband is over his wife, that shee might be chaste unto him, sometime for another: as a good servant is jealous in his masters absence, that his wife may keepe her selfe entire unto his master: as Paul was jealous over the Corinthians with a godly jealousie, to keepe them as a pure virgin for Christ, 2 Corin. 11. 2. The Lord is jealous both these wayes, in respect of himselfe, quia non potest habere parem, &c. the Divine nature can indure no equall, Cajetan. And he is said to be jealous: Si quosdam ex suis viderit miserè perditos; If he see any of his to fall away from his worship, and so be lost, Cyril.

Lib. 3. cont. Iulian.

3. But God is jealous, not as man is jealous: Non humanæ perturbationis vitio facit Deus; God is not jealous with any perturbation of minde, as man is, being unchangeable in himselfe, Augustin. Caret affectionibus Deus, &c. God is without affections: but he is said to be jealous, because he would not have any that hath knowne him, to be carried away into any evill courses, Cyril. ibid. It is therefore by a metaphor ascribed unto God, by a similitude taken from the husband, who cannot indure that the love, which his wife oweth unto him, should be imparted to another, Gallas.

August. qu. 158.

4. Beside, he is called El zelotes, a jealous God, or strong and jealous: signifying, Non impune plebem suam per alienos Deos fornicaturam; That his people shall not without punishment commit fornication with other gods, Augustin. ibid. Fortis est ad propulsandam injuriam; Hee is strong to defend his owne wrong, &c. and to punish the offenders, Cajetan. Vindex est Deus fidei ruptæ: God is an avenger of violated faith, Simler. And as the Wise-man saith, Icalousie is the rage of man, and he will not spare in the day of vengeance, Prov. 6. 34. Much more will the Lord be avenged of those which seeke his dishonour.

Quest. XXXI. Why they are commanded to cut downe the groves.

Vers. 13. And cut downe their groves. 1. The Gentiles used to plant woods and groves by their idolatrous altars: which superstitious use the Lord would not have his people to imitate; the reasons whereof were these: 1. Tostatus thinketh, that they made certaine images and figures in the barkes of trees, which they used to consule with, quæst. 13. But to this end rather, as Oleaster noteth out of R. Salom. they planted woods, that they might under the shadow of them, eat and drinke, and give themselves to all carnall pleasures. So also Lyranus. As also, they placed a certaine religion in the shadow of trees, and in the top of hils, as the Prophet Ieremie noteth, chap. 2. 20. Calvin. Therefore the Lord would not have such groves either to be planted by his people, or being planted before to stand: Iosiah is commended for his zeale, in breaking downe of the altars, and cutting downe of groves, 2 Chron. 33. 8.

2. If Abrahams example be objected, who planted a grove in Beersheba, and there called upon the name of the Lord, Gen. 21. the answer in generall is, that Abraham did not plant that wood for any religious use, the word there used is eshel, which signifieth any kinde of fruitfull tree: but the word here is ashera, which signifieth trees which are consecrated to the worship of some God, Pagnin. But in particular it may be further answered with Calvin, that the planting of this wood was tranquillæ fixæq; habitationis signum, a signe of a quiet and setled habitation: that Abraham rested in this place, and for his more commodious dwelling planted a grove: or with Pellican, out of Targ. Hierosolym. that Abraham planted fruitfull trees for hospitalitie, to entertaine strangers, that they eating of the fruit thereof, might be stirred

ſtirred up to praiſe God. Borrhaius addeth further, that Abraham here built an Altar, and ſo called upon God: the wood was not made to that end. And yet if Abraham had intended any religious uſe, in making this grove as a Temple to ſerve God in, neither was there any Law then to the contrary; nor yet doe we reade of any ſuch ſuperſtition taken up in thoſe times, as afterward.

QUEST. XXXII. Why idolatry is called fornication.

Verſ. 15. AND when they goe a whoring after their gods. 1. As there is a bodily fornication, which is an unlawfull copulation of the body with thoſe, whom men ought not to come neere: ſo there is a ſpirituall fornication: Cum mens contra debitum divini ordinis conjungatur quibuſlibet aliis rebus, &c. When the minde is beſide the divine order joyned to any other thing, than unto God: ſo there is alſo a ſpirituall chaſtity: Si mens hominis delectetur in ſpirituali conjunctione ad id, cui debet conjungi, ſcilicet ad Deum, &c. If the minde be delighted in ſpirituall conjunction to that, to the which it ought to be joyned unto, that is unto God, and doe abſtaine from all other, Thomas. Quæſt. 151. art. 2. in cor.

2. And in three things is idolatry compared to fornication. 1. In that, fides Deo data violatur, faith made to God is violated: as in bodily fornication and adulterie, the faith which each gave to other, is falſified. 2. As they which are given to carnall wantonneſſe, thinke no coſt too much that is beſtowed that way, but doe doat upon their pleaſures: ſo idololatræ ſunt prodigi in idola, &c. idolaters are prodigall upon their idols. 3. Becauſe, fornicatio cum idololatria plerunq; conjuncta eſt, fornication is for the moſt part joyned with idolatrie. As among the Gentiles, neere unto their idolatrous temples, they had their brothelhouſes: and in many of their ſacrifices, and idoll ſervices, as of Bacchus, Flora, Priapus, they uſed much obſcenity, and filthineſſe. So the Iſraelites when they coupled themſelves with Baal Peor, committed both ſpirituall and bodily fornication, Numb. 25. And how theſe two ſtill are joyned together, where Popiſh idolatry is practiſed, the hiſtories of former times, and the experience of thoſe dayes doth evidently teſtifie, Simler.

QUEST. XXXIII. How farre it is lawfull and unlawfull to eat of things conſecrated to idols.

Verſ. 15. AND they call thee, and thou eat of their ſacrifice, &c. 1. Concerning things offered unto idols of themſelves, the meat is not polluted, or defiled thereby: for an idoll, as Saint Paul ſaith, is nothing in the world, nihil habet deitatis, it hath no deity in it: it is of no power, and therefore, non poteſt ab eo derivari virtus, &c. there can no vertue be derived from it, being but made of wood, ſtone, or mettall, or ſuch like, into that, which is conſecrated to it: and ſo the creature is good ſtill, though it be ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed. And therefore ſuch meats of themſelves may as well be uſed, after they are ſo offered to idols, as before.

2. But there are certaine lets and ſcandals which may ariſe of eating ſuch things, which maketh it unlawfull. 1. The firſt let is in a man himſelfe, if he be not well perſwaded and reſolved that it is lawfull to eat ſuch things, for then he ſinneth againſt his owne conſcience: as the Apoſtle ſaith, He that doubteth is condemned, if he eat, Rom. 14. 23. 2. Then offence may be given unto the weake brethren, who againſt their conſcience ſeeing another to eat, may bee incouraged to doe the like, and ſo their conſcience is wounded: in which reſpect Saint Paul ſaith, Hee will not eat fleſh as long as the world ſtandeth, to offend his brother, 1 Corin. 8. 13. 3. An offence may be given unto the Infidels, who by our eating of their ſacrifices will judge us to favour their idols, and ſo have an evill opinion of us as diſſemblers, and condemne our liberty. Yet here a divers caſe is to be conſidered: for if the Infidels did not tell us, or ſuppoſe wee know not, that the meat was offered to idols, then it may be eaten without any offence giving: but if any man ſay, This is ſacrificed to idols, eat it not, ſaith the Apoſtle, becauſe of his conſcience that ſhewed it thee, 1 Corimb. 10. 28.

3. And as offence might grow, by eating of things ſacrificed to idols: ſee likewiſe concerning other meats forbidden by Moſes Law, great queſtion did ariſe betweene the converted Jewes, and the beleeving Gentiles: for the deciding of which controverſie, Saint Paul giveth two rules: firſt, That they ſhould not judge one another, Rom. 14. 13, that he that did eat ſhould not condemne him that would not eat: ſecondly, that they ſhould not grieve or offend one another with their eating, ibid. verſ. 15. that they ſhould abſtaine from eating ſuch things, at the leaſt in their brothers preſence. And after this the Church came together, and decreed, that for a time in regard of the weake, they ſhould abſtaine from ſtrangled and bloud, Act. 15. Taſtat. quæſt. 13.

4. But this further muſt be conſidered, that Chriſtians now have a greater liberty, than the Iſraelites had: for they are ſimply forbidden to goe unto the Gentiles feaſts, or to have any fellowſhip with them, leſt by little and little, they might be drawne to partake with them in their idolatry. But S. Paul allowed Chriſtians to goe unto the feaſts of the Gentiles, and to eat of their ſacrifices, ſo it might be done without offence, 1 Cor. 10. 27. Gallaſ.

5. And the reaſon hereof, why the Iſraelites are forbidden to communicate with the Gentiles, and to eat and drinke with them, may thus further be declared. For the communion of ſome is forbidden to the faithfull two wayes, either in pœnam illius, cui communio fidelium ſubtrahitur, for a puniſhment to him, from whom the company of the faithfull is withdrawne: as the inceſtuous young man was excommunicate among the Corinthians: or ad cautelam eorum quibus interdicitur, for their warning and heed-taking, which are ſo forbidden others company. And if ſo the faithfull be ſtrong in faith, and are more like to win the Infidels, than to be corrupted by them, they are not forbidden their company: but if they be weake, and ſuch as eaſily may be drawne away, the company of Infidels to ſuch is dangerous, Thomas. And of this ſort were the Hebrewes, who were weake and prone to idolatry, and therefore the Lord forbiddeth them all entercourſe and communion with the Gentiles. 2. 2. qu. 10. art. 9. in Cor.

QUEST.

Quest. XXXIV. Why marriages with the Idolatrous were forbidden, and in what cases.

Vers. 16. Lest thou take of their daughters to thy sonnes. 1. The Israelites were forbidden to take wives unto their sonnes, from the idolatrous Heathen, lest they might draw them also unto idolatry: men must not deceive themselves in such marriages, and thinke that they may draw their wives, or the wives the husbands rather unto the true religion, which they professe, then to be corrupted by them: For how knowest thou a man, te uxorem lucrifacturum, that thou shalt gaine thy wife to thy religion, or thou woman, that thou shalt perswade thy husband? Gallasius. Shall a man thinke himselfe more wise than Salomon, whose heart was perverted by his wives: and to please them, he fell to most grosse idolatry? Simlerus.

2. Yet it was lawfull for the Israelites to take to wives such of the Gentiles, as were converted to their religion: as is evident, Deut. 21. 13. as Boaz married Ruth, who had then imbraced the true religion and worship of the God of Israel: as she said unto Naomi, Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God, Ruth. 1. 16.

3. But the example of Mahlan and Chilion will be objected, the sonnes of Elimelech, who tooke unto them wives of the Moabites, Orpah and Ruth, who were not then converted to the faith of Israel: for then Naomi would not have bid them returne into their country, as shee did, Ruth. 1. 12. for that had beene to give them occasion to commit idolatry. Therefore this marriage is excused by the necessity of that place, where Mahlan and Chilian sojourned, namely, in Moab for the space of ten yeeres, where were no women of their religion, and so they were faine to take them wives from the Moabites.

4. Now further as it was unlawfull to take wives to their sonnes from the Gentiles, so was it also forbidden that they should give their daughters to their sonnes, Deut. 7. 3. which of the two was the more dangerous: 1. For the man is the head of the woman, and so the Israelitish wife should come in subjection to a Pagan, and by this meanes dishonour her nation. 2. The man being of greater power, might use more violent meanes to force the wife to Gentilisme, than the wife could to draw the husband. 3. The children also were more likely to be corrupted, which are brought up according to the fathers minde, Tostat. quæst. 14. An example whereof we have in that blasphemer that was stoned to death, who was the sonne of an Egyptian, and of an Israelitish woman, Levit. 24.

Quest. XXXV. Why the images are called molten gods.

Vers. 17. Thou shalt make thee no molten gods. 1. The Gentiles so called their idols, communi & populari errore, by a common and popular errour, as now among the Romanists, the common people call their images their Saints. But the wiser sort among the Heathen did not take the idols to be their gods, but only representations of them: yet that excused not their idolatry, no more than the like pretense now among the Papists, that they use images only to put them in minde of God, Simler.

2. But an idoll is farre from being God, or having any divine thing in it, that as the Apostle saith, It is nothing in the world: not in respect of the matter, but of the signification: for it neither representeth the true God, who is a Spirit, and hath no bodily shape, nor yet the false gods, which are nothing at all in the world, Marbach.

3. By one kinde of molten images all the rest are forbidden, whether they be graven, carved, painted: locutio est à parte totum significans, it is a manner of speech, taking a part for the whole, Augustin. Junius. But he giveth instance of molten images, because of the molten calfe, which they had lately made, Lyranus.

4. If it were unlawfull for them to suffer the Gentiles idols to stand, but they were to breake them downe: much more were they not to make them new, Simler. And so often is this Law repeated, because of their proneneſſe to idolatry, Tostat.

Quest. XXXVI. Why the principall feasts of the Israelites are here rehearsed.

Vers. 18. The feast of unleavened bread. 1. The Lord renuing now his covenant with his people, which was interrupted by their apostasie and falling away, doth also againe prescribe unto them these festivall solemnities, which they should observe unto him: therefore, renovato fœdere repetuntur, the covenant being renued, they are also repeated, Borrhaius.

2. Another reason of this repetition is, ne otiosus populus ceremonias Gentium amuletur, lest the idle people should have followed the ceremonies, and superstitious festivals of the Gentiles; the Lord prescribeth them certaine feasts, wherein they should be occupied in setting forth of his praise, Lippom.

3. Rupertus giveth this note: Hæc iteratio præceptorum Iudæis carnalibus de justitia sua gloriantibus æterna exprobratio est; This iteration of these precepts, is an eternall exprobration to the carnall Jewes, which doe glory in their righteousnesse, &c. Seeing Moses still insisteth in the first principles and rudiments, and carnall observations; wherein Moses is unlike unto the Apostle thus writing: Therefore leaving the doctrine of the beginning of Christ, let us goe forward unto perfection, Hebr. 6. 1.

4. Againe, another principall cause of the institution first, and now the renovation of those festivals was, ut futura mysteria saltem sub umbra venerentur; that the people as under the shadow, might in these festivals reverence the mysteries which should be revealed in time to come, Lippoman.

Quest. XXXVII. Why some feasts, and not all are here rehearsed.

And it pleased God to appoint these festivals unto the Israelites: 1. That although all our life time should be consecrate to Gods praise: yet, quia non valet humana infirmitas, because humane infirmity is not able so to doe, this continuall praising of God being reserved for the next life, it pleased him to content himselfe with certaine times appointed to that end, Tostat. qu. 14. And this God doth also, that mans

mans dulneſſe might by ſuch ſolemnities be whetted, and ſtirred up to a thankfull commemoration of his benefits, Marbach.

2. Here are the three principall morall feaſts only mentioned: the Paſſeover, the feaſt of weekes, and the feaſt of gathering fruits: though they had more feaſts, as they are rehearſed: becauſe in theſe three only, the people were bound to aſſemble together before the Lord, Toſtat.

3. And the Lord beginneth with the Paſſeover, which was the firſt inſtituted, and brought to their remembrance the greateſt benefit of their deliverance out of Egypt. And hereby was myſtically ſignified, that ſine fide paſſionis Chriſti, &c. that without faith in the paſſion and reſurrection of Chriſt, which was ſhadowed forth in the paſſeover, none could be ſaved, Lippoman.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Of the paſſeover, the rites, end, and uſe thereof.

Verſ. 18. Seven dayes ſhalt thou obſerve. In the feaſt of the Paſſeover there are foure things to be obſerved: the rite and ceremonie, the end, the morall uſe, the type and figure.

1. There are three things here preſcribed concerning the rite, and manner. Firſt, they muſt eat unleavened bread, becauſe at that time when they came out of Egypt, the Egyptians urged them to come out in haſte, ſo that they could not leaven their bread: therefore in remembrance of their affliction in Egypt, and their deliverance therefrom, they muſt keepe this feaſt with unleavened bread, and that for ſeven dayes, from the 14. day at even, untill the 21. day at even, as is preſcribed, Exodus 12. 18. the moneth alſo is preſcribed wherein they ſhould obſerve this feaſt, in the moneth Abib, which the Latine, Septuagint, Chalde interpret, ἐν μηνὶ τῶν νέων, in the moneth of new fruits, quando ſpicæ è culmis prodibant, when the eares began to ſhoot out of the hoſe, Vatabl. Not becauſe the corne began then firſt to grow, but then firſt began to be ripe, and the ſickle to be put unto it, Toſtat. This moneth fell out ſometime in the moneth of March, as if the new moone were before the 25. of March, about which time the equinoctiall was then, (when the dayes and nights are alike) ſometime in Aprill, when the æquinoctium fell out afterward: for the Hebrewes began their moneths with the new moone. And this moneth Abib was the firſt in the yeere, from the which they counted the reſt: as the Romans did begin their moneths at March, and ſo they called July and Auguſt, Quintilis, and Sextilis, the fift and ſixt moneths: this moneth Abib, was alſo called Niſan, that is, Niſim, the moneth of wonders, becauſe many wondrous things were done in this moneth, Simler. The other rites belonging to this feaſt are ſet forth at large, Exod. 12. throwout the chapter.

2. The end of this feaſt, was to call to minde the benefit of their deliverance out of Egypt, and the preſervation of their firſt borne, when all the firſt borne in Egypt were ſlaine.

3. The morall ſignification is this: by leaven is underſtood falſe doctrine, as our bleſſed Saviour giveth his Diſciples warning, to take heed of the leaven of the Scribes and Phariſees, that is, their corrupt doctrine: likewiſe, it ſignifieth the leaven of maliciouſneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1 Cor. 5. both which by the unleavened bread, they were admoniſhed to take heed of.

4. This Paſſeover was a type of our Saviour. 1. He ſuffered about the ſame time of the yeere, wherein they uſed to kill the Paſſeover. 2. The paſchall Lambe was without blemiſh, and Chriſt was without ſinne. 3. It was roſted with fire, to ſignifie the burning love of Chriſt. 4. The bloud of that Lambe was a ſigne of their corporall deliverance out of Egypt: and by the bloud of Chriſt we obtaine ſpirituall deliverance, Simler. See more of the ſpirituall application of the paſſeover, qu. 39. chap. 12.

QUEST. XXXIX. Why the firſt borne males were only due unto the Lord.

Verſ. 19. Every male that firſt openeth the wombe. 1. Theſe words, male and firſt, are not here in the text, but muſt be inſerted to explaine the text, as may be gathered, Exod. 13. 12. The males only of the firſt borne were the Lords.

2. And the reaſon hereof was: 1. Becauſe the males in their kinde were the perfecteſt: and therefore they were only to be offered in ſuch ſacrifices as were of neceſſity, as in their burnt offerings and vowes: in their free offerings, they might bring their female. 2. The firſt borne which were ſlaine in Egypt, both of men and beaſts were males, in liew whereof the Lord required the firſt borne. And that the firſt borne males were only ſlaine in Egypt, it may thus appeare: 1. Becauſe the puniſhment was anſwerable to their ſinne: that as they commanded all the males of the Hebrewes to be killed, ſo the males only of the Egyptians ſhould be deſtroyed. 2. Though in many houſes in Egypt, the firſt borne of the houſe were not males, yet the firſt borne of the maid ſervants muſt alſo be counted, as is evident, chap. 11. 5. and if neither they, nor the maſters of the houſe, had any firſt borne that were males, then either the maſter himſelfe, or the ſervant of the houſe, if he were the firſt borne was taken: and ſo it was true, that there was not an houſe in Egypt where there was not one dead, Exod. 12. 30. And as the firſt borne of men onely were ſlaine, ſo it is like the ſame proportion was obſerved in their cattell, Toſtat. qu. 15, 16.

3. The firſt borne were of two ſorts of men, and they were to be redeemed, becauſe their ſervice unto God was performed when they were living, not by their death: the beaſts were either cleane, and they were to be offered; their beſt ſervice unto God was by their death, in being ſacrificed: or uncleane, which might either be redeemed by exchange, as an aſſe by giving a lambe, Exod. 13. 18. or by that price which the Prieſt ſhould value it at, Levit. 27. 12. or elſe were to be killed: the reaſon whereof was this, that the firſt borne not redeemed, ſhould be killed, becauſe they were holy unto God, and it was not lawfull to convert them unto any private uſe, Simler.

QUEST. XL. Why mention is made only of aſſes of the uncleane beaſts.

Verſ. 20. The firſt of an aſſe, thou ſhalt buy out with a lambe. 1. Toſtatus thinketh, that concerning other uncleane beaſts, as horſes, camels, that the firſt borne were not required, becauſe the Hebrewes had had none of them in Egypt, and ſuch things of theirs only, which were preſerved at their comming out of Egypt, from the deſtruction of the firſt borne, they were to pay the firſt of them unto God: dogs and cats they had, but they came not forth with them; and yet they were ſaved alive; as he would prove by that place, chap. 11.7. that among the Iſraelites a dog ſhould not ſo much as move his tongue; which ſheweth that they periſhed not. Toſtatus hath another anſwer beſide, concerning thoſe baſe creatures, which ſhall be remembred afterward, queſt. 18. Contra. 1. It is not like that the Hebrewes had no horſe or camels, but only aſſes for carriage; ſeeing Egypt ſo much abounded with horſe, being a plaine country and full of graſſe, it cannot be thought, but they had of thoſe kinde for their neceſſary uſe. 2. And for the other, it is very like, that no living thing among the Iſraelites miſcarried, though that place prove it not: for the meaning is, that a dog ſhall not move his tongue, lecol, againſt any of the children of Iſrael, not among them, Inn. But it cannot be imagined, that the dogs, unleſſe their maſters killed them of purpoſe, which is not to be thought, would leave them, when they went out of Egypt.

2. Some Hebrewes are of opinion, that the word behemah, beaſt, the firſtlings whereof they were to give unto God, doth ſignifie, beſtias comeſtibiles, beaſts which may be eaten, and are not wilde, as chajeh ſignifieth beaſts as well not to be eaten, as thoſe that are wilde: and therefore they thinke that under that word behemah, only three kindes are ſignified, bullocks, ſheepe, and goats. But if this were ſo, then aſſes ſhould be excluded out of the Law of the firſt borne, which were not to be eaten, though not wilde; and Toſtatus alſo giveth an inſtance of ſwine, that they alſo ſhould be included, which might be eaten, and yet they were not offered, nor any thing for them, becauſe the Hebrewes brought none ſuch out of Egypt. But he faileth in this laſt inſtance: for ſwine were neither beaſts allowed to be eaten among the Hebrewes: and though they were uncleane, yet the firſt borne of them were to be redeemed, as other uncleane beaſts were. Wherefore the word behemah, rather ſignifieth all domeſticall beaſts, whether cleane or uncleane, the firſtlings whereof were due unto God: which is expreſſed here by another word, mikneh, which ſignifieth a poſſeſſion: whatſoever beaſts then were in ones poſſeſſion, he was to pay the firſt borne of them; wild beaſts then were excepted, as not being in a mans poſſeſſion. And Calvin inferreth as much upon theſe words, all the firſt borne among the children of Iſrael, chap. 13. 2. to make a difference betweene domeſticall beaſts, which were among them, and wild beaſts.

3. Simlerus thinketh, that the firſtlings of dogs were due unto the Lord, but they were to be killed, not to be redeemed at all, becauſe it is forbidden, Deut. 23. 18. that they ſhould not bring the price of a dog into the houſe of God. But it rather ſeemeth that God would not have ſuch a vile creature to be counted as due unto him at all: for then it had beene lawfull to redeeme it: as they were to redeeme all uncleane beaſts by the Law, Numb. 18.15. Therefore, ſeeing it was not lawfull to redeeme the firſtling of a dog, it followeth that the Lord challenged no right in ſuch.

4. Wherefore, concerning all uncleane beaſts, which were profitable, as horſe, camels, I agree with Iunius againſt Toſtatus, that the firſt borne of them were all due unto God, and that by the aſſe, all other like uncleane beaſts muſt bee underſtood, which Oleaſter alſo concludeth out of thoſe generall words Numb. 18.15. The firſt borne of uncleane beaſts ſhalt thou redeeme. And concerning dogs and cats, and other vile beaſts, I judge rather with Toſtatus againſt Simlerus, that they were not due at all, becauſe they were vile and of no account; which is his other anſwer: for whereas they were to exchange the foale of an aſſe with a lambe: Non erat aliquod animal immolabile tam parvi valoris, &c. There was not any beaſt for ſacrifice of ſo ſmall value, to be exchanged with any of thoſe vile and contemptible creatures.

5. Oleaſter yeeldeth two reaſons why the aſſe was to be redeemed: either becauſe it was a vile creature, or for that it was not apt for food, becauſe the ſacrifices were, cibationes Domini, as the Lords meat or food. Pellican underſtandeth it myſtically, Quia Deus ſtoliditatem aſininam abominatur; God abhorreth aſinine fooliſhneſſe and blockiſhneſſe. So Iſidore, and the Interlineaire Gloſſ. give this ſenſe, that to change an aſſe with a ſheepe, Eſt immunda vita primordia, ad innocentia ſimplicitatem convertere; Is to convert the beginnings of an uncleane life, into innocent ſimplicity. But the reaſon indeed is, becauſe ſuch beaſts were counted uncleane, and ſo more vile, whereas the Lord would have of the beſt: and being uncleane, and unapt for food, they were conſequently unfit for ſacrifice, becauſe ſome part thereof, unleſſe only in burnt offerings, was for the Prieſts food, and in ſome ſacrifices, the owner and offerer alſo had part.

Queſt. XLI. Whether the Iſraelites were abſolutely bound to keepe the reſt of the Sabbath, in earing time and harveſt.

Verſ. 21. Both in earing and harveſt time thou ſhalt reſt, &c. 1. Like as before, chap. 31. when mention was made of making the Tabernacle, the obſervation of the Sabbath is urged, leſt they might thinke, that the reſt thereof upon that neceſſary occaſion of working in the Tabernacle, might be diſpenſed with, Oleaſter: So here in this place it being required that the people ſhould goe up thrice in the yeere to the three ſolemne feaſts, they might have thought it lawfull to travell upon the Sabbath, when they went up to the Tabernacle, and therefore is that precept of the Sabbath alſo mentioned here, to take away all ſuch ſcruple, Toſtat. queſt. 17.

2. Mention is made of reſting in ſeed time and harveſt, as the moſt neceſſary workes: not as giving them liberty at other times to breake the reſt of the Sabbath: but excluſis his, videantur omnia alia excluſa, that even theſe neceſſary times being excluded, all other might ſeeme alſo to be excluded. So alſo Auguſtin. By this it is ſignified, Omni tempore Sabbato debere ceſſari; That they ought to reſt at all times upon the Sabbath.

Queſt. 160. in Exod.

3. Calvin

3. Calvin affirmeth, that this is so straitly commanded: Ut dies septimus servetur etiam sub periculo communis jacturæ; That the seventh day should be observed, even with the hazard and danger of the common losse. But Gallasius better concludeth out of Christs words, The Sabbath was made for man: that the Jewes were not tied to such necessity, in keeping the Sabbath in harvest and seed time, but that in any common and apparent danger, they might periculo occurrere, prevent it, Mark. 2. 27.

4. Some of the Hebrewes therefore understand this precept, of the carnall act of generation, which they would have here insinuated by the sowing of seed. But beside that, if the Scripture here had any such meaning, it would have expressed it in plaine words: for of such things the Scripture useth to speake exactly and plainly: this were to make matrimony and the use thereof unholy, Tostat. Though it must be confessed, that greater moderation in such carnall delights is to be used, when solemne and publike prayer is offered unto God, according to S. Pauls counsell, 1 Cor. 7. 5.

5. Therefore the better opinion is, that even the rest of the Sabbath was dispensed withall to the Israelites, in the times of seed time and harvest upon urgent necessity, to prevent some common and imminent danger: as if suddenly any inundation were feared, which breaking in, would destroy the seed or corne; or any enemies should attempt to destroy the corne, or it should chance to be set on fire, it was lawfull even upon the Sabbath, laborando succurrere, to helpe to save it by labour: for if it were lawfull to lead their cattell to water, and helpe them out of the ditch upon the Sabbath, as our blessed Saviour sheweth, Luk. 13. and 14. which concerned but the state of private men; much more for the common good was it permitted, Tostat. qu. 18. Gallas. R. Salom. thinketh it was lawfull upon the Sabbath, to gather a sheafe of corne for the first fruits. But he hath no warrant for that out of Moses.

QUEST. XLII. Whether now Christians are necessarily tyed to keepe the Lords day in seed time and harvest.

1. THe Jewes to this day thinke that these workes, to sow and reap, are by no meanes upon any occasion never so necessary, now to be dispensed with; and some Christians are as strict now in the keeping of the rest upon the Lords day. But this were to Judaize, and to enthrall our Christian liberty: and to bring us in bondage unto the service of dayes, which were appointed for mans benefit: as our blessed Saviour saith, that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, Mark. 2. 21.

2. Some on the other side give too great liberty upon the Lords day. As Calvin hath these words, writing upon Exodus, chap. 31. 13. Sabbatum, quamvis hodie non sit in usu ejus externa observatio, æternum manet ipso effectu sicut circumcisio; The Sabbath, although the externall observation thereof be not now in use, yet it remaineth in the effect, as circumcision doth, &c. This permanent effect of the Sabbath, is our cessation and rest from sinne. This seemeth to give too great liberty, to say that all externall observation of the Sabbath, that is, of the day of rest, should now be out of use: and that the Sabbaticall rest now no more remaineth, than circumcision: for this were to make it arbitrary and indifferent, whether Christians now should observe a day of holy rest unto the Lord at all, or not.

3. Oleaster goeth not so farre, but he thinketh, that though it were not lawfull for the Jewes to intermit the Sabbath then, in earing time and harvest, yet it is lawfull for Christians now. Gallasius giveth this reason, Quia ceremoniali observatione liberati sumus; Because we are freed from the ceremoniall observation of the Sabbath; and therefore he taketh it to be a needlesse question, to dispute whether Christians are now bound to keepe the day of rest in seed time, and harvest. But this is no ceremoniall thing, but morall, to abstaine from all such workes upon the Lords day, which may hinder the service of God.

4. Osiander thinketh, that by this instance of earing time, and harvest, all kinde of works were not forbidden the Jewes upon the Sabbath: but onely quotidiana illa & profana, those daily prophane works, which might hinder them from the service of God; and the same reason may seeme to hold now. But there are certaine bodily works, which are a greater prophanation of the Lords day, than the ordinary works of the calling: as to dance, to play at football, and such like, are worse than to dig or delve, as Augustine saith of the Jewes: Melius toto die ararent, quam toto die saltarent; It were better for them to plow all day, than to dance all day.

5. I therefore rather condescend to Simlerus, that thinketh these things given in instance to be lawfull now upon the Lords day, necessitate id postulante, necessity so requiring: longe arctior fuit observatio Sabbati in lege, &c. the observation of the Sabbath was more strict in the Law, than now under the Gospell, &c. But men must take heed in earing time, and harvest, that they make not a necessity without a necessity: it ought to be an urgent and extreme necessity indeed, which should cause the service of God either wholly to be intermitted, or in part hindred.

QUEST. XLIII. Why the people were charged to goe up thrice in a yeere to the feasts.

Vers. 23. THrice in a yeere shall all your men children appeare, &c. 1. There is a spirituall worship of God, which the Israelites were to exhibite unto God at all times, and in all places, but the externall service, which consisted in sacrifices, and other solemnities, was only to be performed in the Tabernacle, whither the people were commanded to resort thrice in a yeere, that whereas in their Synagogues at home, they had nothing but Moses read unto them, lest that they might by discontinuance grow into oblivion of the sacrifices, and other solemnities prescribed for the Lords service: they were commanded to that end to goe up to revive the memory of them. 2. They went up alwayes with some gift, as they were not to appeare before the Lord empty, ut populus Deo præstaret obsequium, that the people might shew their duty unto God. 3. And because there was a collection yeerely in the feast of Tabernacles, gathered of the people, toward the maintenance of the Tabernacle, and the services thereof: the people were to goe up to contribute to that end, Tostat. quæst. 20. 4. Necessarium erat ad mutuum consensum in religione fovendum; It was necessary also to maintaine a mutuall consent in religion, Gallas. Whereas, if they should have had their severall places of meeting, they might have devised new rites. 5. And by this meanes the Lords feasts were celebriora, more solemne, and kept with greater majesty. 6. Hereby also Christ and his Church was prefigured: that in him there should be but one shepheard, and one sheepfold: he should be the only Priest and Mediatour, and he should prescribe, one Faith, one Baptisme, Simler. See more hereof, quest. 36. chap. 23.

QUEST. XLIV. Who were bound to goe up to the feasts.

NOw whereas the males only were to appeare before the Lord: 1. The women are excepted, because they were unfit, both in respect of their domesticall businesse, which was to be cared for in the absence of their husbands: as also for that they might be often letted by giving sucke, or being with child: and they were not in regard of the tendernesse of their sex, to take so long a journey. And yet devout women, specially when they dwelt not farre off from the place of the Sanctuary, did use to goe up, as Anna the mother of Samuel, and the Virgin Marie, Tostat. quest. 22.

2. As for their servants, the men were bound to goe up, as well as their masters; there was one Law for both: the maids also sometime went up with their masters, but they were not bound, as Deut. 12. 18. and chap. 16. 14. both they, their sonne, daughter, servant, maid, were to rejoyce before the Lord in their solemne feasts.

3. Neither were all the males bound to go up, as the children which were not able to goe, nor yet were of discretion to understand what they there heard, or saw done, Tostatus ibid.

4. Neither were the male children bound to goe up, as soone as they began to be of discretion: as Tostatus giveth instance of our blessed Saviour, who at twelve yeeres old went up with his mother, for both that example was extraordinary; no childe at those yeeres was to be compared unto Christ: and beside, when such children went up with their parents it was voluntary, not exacted by Law.

5. Wherefore, such males must be understood, qui sub censum transibant, which passed under the summe, or account, who were under twenty, Calvin: and exceeded not fifty, as the Hebrewes thinke, Simlerus.

QUEST. XLV. Whether all the males were bound every yeere to goe up thrice to the Sanctuarie.

Vers. 24. I will cast out the nations before thee. 1. Here the Lord preventeth an objection: the people being required thrice in a yeere to goe up to the Sanctuary, might have doubted, that their enemies might have taken advantage of their absence, and so have invaded them: the Lord therefore biddeth them to be secure for that matter, for he would cast out their enemies before them, and so worke that they should not desire their land: and therefore they should not be afraid to goe up to appeare before the Lord, Gallasius.

2. Some thinke, that this Law of appearing thrice in a yeere before the Lord, did not binde, but untill such time as their borders were enlarged, quando secura universa regio futura erat, when the whole land should be quiet, Cajetane. Which Calvin thinketh was not, till God having subdued all his enemies, Sanctuarium suum locavit in Sion, had placed his Sanctuary in Sion, &c. But this is not like, that the people kept not this Law till David and Salomons time: for they were commanded to observe all the Lawes and ordinances, when they were come into the land of rest, Deut. 12. 9. So that by inlarging of their coasts, is not meant the making of them larger, but the planting of them in the land of Canaan, Tostat. qu. 22.

3. Some thinke, that this never happened unto the Jewes according to the letter, that all their enemies were subdued unto them: and therefore, in futura vita complebitur, it shall be fulfilled in the next life, Gloss. interlin. But if this had never beene performed, how should the people have beene incouraged by this promise to goe up thrice in a yeere. True it is, that there were some Canaanites still dwelling among them: yet were the nations of them destroyed, though not every particular one of the nation.

4. Some are of opinion, that this promise was made with a condition, if they did then endevour to keepe their bounds, and set watchmen and garrisons in their borders, that then the Lord would protect them, that the rest of the males might safely goe up, Ex Lippom. But when should those males which kept the garrisons have gone up? they could not then observe this Law to goe up thrice in a yeere.

5. Some thinke, that every third yeere only, they which dwelt farthest off came up to the Sanctuary, and two yeeres they were free, because mention is made of tithes to be laid up in the end of three yeeres, Deut. 14. 29. But that must be understood of another tenth part, beside that which was to be paid yeerely, vers. 22. which they were yeerely to eat before the Lord, vers. 23. and therefore that cannot stand, that every third yeere only they were bound to goe up.

6. Tostatus his opinion is, because it was both chargeable for them to goe thrice, and come thrice, that is, six times in all in a yeere; and they in that time lost their labour at home: and beside, in the space of six moneths, betweene the sixth and seventh moneths, wherein all these three principall feasts were observed, these six journeyes fell out, and within one moneth after their returne from the Passeover, they were to come up againe to the feast of the Pentecost. He thinketh therefore, that they only which dwelt neere hand, came up thrice in the yeere; they which were further off, only went up once in the feast of the Passeover, and in the seventh yeere of remission twice, in the said feast, and at the feast of Tabernacles, when they were to heare the Law read unto them, Deut. 31. 12. quest. 21. Contra. 1. The words of the precept are generall, Three times in a yeere, shall all the males appeare before the Lord, Deut. 16. 16. there are none excepted. 2. Yea speciall order is taken for them which dwelt farre off, that they might turne their offering into money, *Deut.*14.25. and every yeere they were to give the tithe of their increaſe, and eat it before the Lord.

their

7. Wherefore the truer opinion is, that all the males which were appointed to come up, aſcended thrice every yeere: whereupon it is evident, non tam longam vel latam fuiſſe promiſſionis terram, &c. that the land of Promiſe was not ſo long and large, that in the ſpace of foure moneths, or at the moſt ſix, they could come and go thrice to Jeruſalem, Lippom. For, as Hierom writeth, the land of Canaan was not above an hundred and ſixty miles long, and ſixty miles broad: allow then the furtheſt part of the land to be an hundred and twenty miles from the Sanctuary. For wee muſt not imagine, that it was placed in the utmoſt coaſts: it would aske them but a ſevennights journey to the Tabernacle, and as much homeward; that is, ſix weekes in the yeere, ſomewhat above the tenth part, which was no great matter for them to doe. Oleaſter giveth this reaſon, why the Lord would ſee all the males thrice in the yeere, quia pater cupit filios videre, &c. becauſe a father deſireth to ſee his children often, which are nurſed in another place. Like as now then in England, foure times in a yeere many come up two hundred miles to the Termes: two whereof fall out neerer together, the Summer Termes, than the Jewes two feaſts of the Paſch and Pentecoſt: So they might with more eaſe come up thrice, not much above halfe that way.

8. But yet the aſcending of the males thrice every yeere, muſt be underſtood with ſome limitations, and conditions. 1. Ceſſante infirmitate, if they were not letted and hindred by ſickneſſe; for they were not to be carried up, they muſt goe up of themſelves, Oleaſt. 2. Non obligabat tempore ſuſpecti belli; It did not binde, when there was any ſuſpicion of warre, Cajetan. If there were no danger at their ſetting forward, they were to feare no danger till they returned upon Gods promiſe: but if the enemies were at their gates, they were to intermit the feaſt, yea if it were the Sabbath, for their owne ſafegard. And theſe promiſes muſt be underſtood with a condition, if they did keepe the Law of God, their enemies ſhould have no power or deſire to invade them, Simler.

Verſ.25. Thou ſhalt not offer the bloud, &c. Theſe two verſes the 25, 26. are the ſame with verſ. 18, 19. chap. 23. therefore to that place I referre the Reader, where the 41, 42, 43. queſtions doe fully explaine the ſenſe and meaning of theſe verſes, that it is not needfull to make rehearſall of the ſame things here.

QUEST. XLVI. Whether Moſes were twice or thrice forty dayes in the mount with God.

Verſ.28. He was there with the Lord forty dayes, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Moſes was thrice forty dayes with the Lord, becauſe there is thrice mention made of Moſes being with the Lord forty dayes in the mount, *Deut.*9. *verſ.*9, 18, 25. And thus they caſt the time, that Moſes went up the third day of the third moneth, which anſwereth to our May, and that he came downe the 17. of June, and on the 18. day was the golden calfe burnt, on the 19. day he went up the ſecond time, and in the beginning of Auguſt, he was called up the third time, for to receive the ſecond tables: and ſo he came downe about the tenth day of September, which was the day of reconciliation, Borrh.

Contra. 1. There is indeed mention made, Deut. 9. thrice of Moſes being with the Lord forty dayes, and forty nights: but *verſ.*29. there is a repetition only of his ſecond being with the Lord, which Moſes ſpake of before, *verſ.*18. for otherwiſe, if as often as this is mentioned, ſo many forty dayes Moſes ſhould have beene with the Lord: he muſt have beene with him, not only thrice, but foure times forty dayes: becauſe *Deut.*10.10. the next chapter following, Moſes againe ſaith, I tarried in the mount as at the firſt time forty dayes, and forty nights, *Toſtat. cap.*33. *qu.*3. 2. It is not like that Moſes at his firſt comming downe ſtayed but one day with the people; for in ſo ſhort a time Moſes could not remove the Tabernacle without the campe, and cauſe the people to put off their beſt rayment, which things were done before his ſecond going up unto God, *chap.*33.5. to *verſ.*12. 3. And it is not like, the Lord being already reconciled to his people, whereof the writing of the tables the ſecond time was a ſigne, that Moſes came downe againſt the day of reconciliation: to that end, to reconcile the people unto God.

2. Wherefore Moſes was not thrice forty dayes with the Lord in the mount, but onely twice, which make 80. not 120. dayes. Gregorie giveth this reaſon, Moſes, ut legem percipere mereretur, bis quadraginta dies jejunavit; Moſes, that he might be thought worthy to receive the Law, faſted twice forty dayes, &c. The cauſe of Moſes faſting, was to be prepared to receive the Law: Hoc jejunium eodem quò prius pertinere ſimus, ad confirmationem legis & fœderis; This faſting of Moſes we know was to the ſame end, to confirme the Law and the covenant, Gallaſ. Seeing then Moſes received the Law but twice, and he was called up to that end to receive the tables of the Law: it muſt needs follow, that he was but twice forty dayes with God in the mount. So Helias likewiſe faſted forty dayes, qui legis inſtauranda Miniſter fuit, which was the Miniſter of reſtoring the Law, and our bleſſed Saviour faſted forty dayes to deliver the new Law of the Goſpell: therefore, as Cajetane alſo noteth, Hoc fuit ſecundum jejunium, &c. this was the ſecond (not the third) faſt of Moſes, when he went up to receive the ſecond tables. In primum Regum cap. 11.

QUEST. XLVII. Of the ſhining of Moſes face.

Verſ.29. Moſes wiſt not that the skin of his face ſhone bright, &c. 1. The Latine Interpreter readeth, Moſes knew not, quod cornuta eſſet facies, that his face was horny: whereupon grew the common errour, that Moſes is uſually pictured with hornes. And the Jewes deride the Chriſtians, becauſe they picture Moſes with hornes, more like a Devill, than a man: this errour ariſeth by miſtaking of the word keren, which ſignifieth a horne, but karan to ſhine, which is the word here uſed.

2. Some take upon them to juſtifie the Latine tranſlation: Quod emitteret radios tanquam cornua; Becauſe Moſes face ſtreamed forth beames like as hornes, *Toſtat. quæſt.*24. Lyran. Sicut & radii à Sole derivati, cornu ſpeciem præ ſe ferunt; Like as the beames of the Sunne doe caſt abroad like unto hornes, Lippoman. But I rather approve here Cajetanes judgement: Nihil cornutum ad literam ſignificatur; According to the letter, there is nothing that hath the ſignification of an horne, but rather that Moſes face did ſhine bright. So alſo Thomas, quod & melius dicitur, it is better ſaid, that his face was ſhining, than hornie.

2 Cor. 3. Lyra.

3. Toſtatus maketh mention of a certaine ignorant Rabbin, that ſaith, Moſes countenance is ſaid to be horny, becauſe it was ſo dried up with this forty dayes faſt, that nothing but the skin was left upon the bones, which did ſticke out, ut acuta velut cornua viderentur, that they ſeemed to be ſharpe as hornes. But this is affirmed without any wit or reaſon: for Moſes neither eating or drinking the ſpace of forty dayes and forty nights, was preſerved miraculouſly by God (for naturally a man cannot live without meat and drinke above fifteene dayes) then the Lord by the ſame power was able to keepe Moſes body, without any decay or diminution at all.

4. Wherefore the meaning of this place is, that Moſes face ſhined, as the Chalde paraphraſt, The brightneſſe of his face was multiplied; the Septuagint interpret δεδόξασται, his face was glorious: as S. Paul alſo calleth it the glory of Moſes countenance, 2 Cor. 3.7. So alſo reade the beſt Interpreters, Vatab. Montan. Pagnin. Oleaſt. Iunius.

QUEST. XLVIII. Why it pleaſed God to give ſuch great glorie unto Moſes countenance.

NOw it pleaſed God, to print ſuch a majeſty and ſhining glory in Moſes countenance, for theſe reaſons: 1. God did beſtow this gift upon Moſes as a ſpeciall ſigne of his favour and love toward him. 2. By this the people might be aſſured, that the Lord had heard Moſes prayers, and that he would renue his league with them, and take them into his protection. 3. And by this meanes Moſes ſhould be had in greater reverence and reputation with the people, Toſtat. quæſt. 25. Simler. 4. This was done alſo, ut lex illa valde honorata crederetur, &c. that the Law it ſelfe ſhould be held to be glorious and honourable, the Miniſter whereof was ſo glorious, Toſtat. 5. Thereby was ſignified alſo the inward illumination which Moſes had, whereby he was able to ſhine unto them in pureneſſe of doctrine. 6. It alſo ſhewed, what the righteouſneſſe of the Law is, onely a ſhining of the face, that is, of the externall works before men: it cannot afford the inward and ſpirituall juſtice in the ſight of God, Simler. 7. Ruperius by theſe ſecond tables, which Moſes brought downe with ſuch great glory, underſtandeth the glory of the Goſpell. But becauſe the Apoſtle ſetteth the glory of the Goſpell againſt the glory of the Law, and ſheweth that in reſpect of the exceeding great glory of the Goſpell, the Law was not glorious at all, 2 Cor. 3.10. I rather preferre Origens elegant collection, Nihil in lege glorioſum habet Moſes præter ſolam faciem; That Moſes had nothing glorious in the Law beſide his face: his hands were leprous by putting them into his boſome, his feet alſo had no glory, he being bid to put off his ſhooes: and ſo by that ceremony he was to deliver over the ſpouſe unto another. But in the Goſpell he appeared in the mount with Chriſt, totus glorificatus, all glorified, &c. Thus Origene elegantly ſheweth the preeminence of the Goſpell before the Law.

Homil. 12. in Exod.

8. Ambroſe ſometime thus applieth it: Vultus patris filius; The countenance of the father is the ſonne: and ſo maketh Moſes a type of Chriſt, who is the glory of the Father. But that application is more proper: Vultus Moſes fulgor eſt legis, fulgor autem legis non in litera; ſed in intellectu ſpirituali; The countenance of Moſes is the brightneſſe of the Law: the brightneſſe of the Law is not in the letter, but in the ſpirituall underſtanding, which was hid from the Jewes.

In Pſal. 118.

QUEST. XLIX. Why Moſes face ſhined more now at Moſes ſecond being in the mount than before.

1. SOme give this reaſon, why Moſes face did ſhine now at his ſecond being with God, rather than at the firſt time, becauſe then Moſes had not tam claram cognitionem, ſuch cleere underſtanding and knowledge of God, as now, which is ſignified by the ſhining of his face, Lyran.

2. Rab. Salomon ſaith, that by the laying of Gods hand upon Moſes face, it became bright and ſhining: but Moſes ſight was hindred by that meanes from ſeeing Gods great glory: and it was not the hand of that glorious body, which appeared to Moſes, but ſome miſt or cloud that was caſt before Moſes, as is ſhewed before, chap. 33. queſt. 51.

5. Gallaſius ſaith, it was illuſtre teſtimonium familiaris illius communicationis, &c. a moſt cleere teſtimonie of that familiar communication which Moſes had with God. But Moſes had familiar conference with the Lord before, for he ſpake unto him face to face, chap. 33.11.

4. Lippoman: Ex longa collocutione & converſatione cum Deo aſſecutus eſt, &c. Moſes obtained this by his long conference and converſing with God. But Moſes had ſtayed as long before with God forty dayes, and forty nights.

5. Therefore the reaſons rather are theſe: 1. This glory was given him, ad honorem legis, for the honour of the Law: but the firſt tables were broken, and therefore it was not to be given then, but now for the honour of theſe tables, which ſhould remaine. 2. Moſes had deſired that the Lord would give them preeminence before all other people: which notably appeareth in this dignity conferred upon Moſes their Governour, which never any had before. 3. But the ſpeciall efficient cauſe of this glory was, ex viſu Domini, by the ſight of the Lord: Moſes had now a more cleere ſight of Gods glory, than before, Toſtat. qu. 25. as things, which the beames of the Sunne beat directly upon, ſeeme alſo to ſhine, Simler. Oriente die rubet terra iraceo colore perfuſa; When the day ariſeth, the earth ſeemeth to ſhine red, as with ſaffron colour: and precious ſtones give a bright hue to thoſe things which are next them, Ambroſe: So that glorious body, which Moſes ſaw, lightened alſo his face. And the holy Apoſtle alluding hereunto ſaith, We all behold as in a mirror the glory of the Lord with open face, and are changed into the ſame image, 2 Cor. 3.18. So Moſes face was changed into the image of that great glory which he ſaw in the mount.

QUEST.

QUEST. L. Why the people were afraid to come neere Moſes.

Verſ. 30. They were afraid to come neere him. 1. The cauſe of this feare of the people was partly neceſſary in reſpect of their weakneſſe and infirmity, becauſe they were not able to behold Moſes face for the glory thereof, as the Apoſtle noteth, 2 Corinth. 3. 6. 2. It was partly voluntary, they would not come neere him for reverence ſake, taking that light and brightneſſe for ſome divine thing, Toſtat. qu. 26. 3. Moſes ſhining countenance was the rather a terrour to the people, peccati nuper commiſſi ſibi conſcio, being guilty in themſelves of that ſinne, which they had lately committed, Simlerus. 4. The people alſo were hereby admoniſhed, ut quiddam altius lege requirerent, that they ſhould ſeeke for ſomewhat higher than the Law, Gallaſ. 5. And this further may be conſidered, hanc illis dedecoris notam fuiſſe inuſtam, &c. that this was a marke of ignominie ſet upon them, that by their ſinne they had ſo farre ſeparated themſelves from the glorious preſence of God, that they were not able to indure the countenance of his ſervant, Calvin. 6. And herein appeareth a manifeſt difference betweene Moſes and Chriſt, the Law and the Goſpell: Contrarius ſplendor faciei Chriſti, in qua amabilis gratia refulget; The brightneſſe of Chriſts face is contrary, wherein amiable grace ſhineth, Borrhaius.

QUEST. LI. Whether Moſes covered his face before he ſpake to the people or after.

Verſ. 33. So Moſes had made an end of communing with them, and had put a vaile upon his face. 1. Calvin thinketh, that firſt Moſes talked with the people: but he was conſtrained ſermonem abrumpere, populi diſceſſu vel fuga, to breake off his ſpeech, becauſe of the peoples departure and fleeing from him, and that after he had ſpoken unto them, and inquired the cauſe of their fleeing from him, then he covered his face. But it is like that the people at the very firſt ſight of Moſes were afraid to come neere him: and that therby Moſes perceiving the reaſon covered his face. And that he had caſt the vaile on his face before he began to ſpeake, and that the people had fled from him before, it is evident, becauſe Moſes had called them unto him, as afraid to come neere.

2. Toſtatus thinketh, that as Moſes ſpake unto the people, he ſometime uncovered his face, that they might ſee his glory, and the more reverence his miniſtery, and ſometime he covered it, becauſe they were not able continually to behold that brightneſſe. But it is manifeſt, verſ. 35. that Moſes alwayes kept his face covered, till he went in to ſpeake with God.

3. Simlerus thinketh, that primum aperta facie populum allocutus eſt, at the firſt time Moſes ſpake unto the people with open face, that they might be the more moved and affected with the ſight of that glory: but after that he uſed to cover his face. But the Apoſtle ſheweth, that the people could not behold Moſes face for the glory of his countenance, &c. They did not then behold it firſt or laſt, while his face ſhined.

4. Some Hebrewes (as Lippoman writes) doe thinke that Moſes ſpake to God and to the people with uncovered face, and at all other times he covered his face: but it may be gathered out of the 35. verſe, that at all times, untill Moſes went in unto God, his face was covered. And the difference was in this, that Moſes uncovered his face before God, (for there was none to be dazled with that ſight) but when hee ſhewed himſelfe and ſpake to the people, his face was covered.

5. Therefore the truth is this, that as ſoone as Moſes perceived by the peoples feare in not comming neere, that his face ſhined, he then covered his face, and ſo ſpake unto the people: yet need wee not with Oleaſter to tranſpoſe the words: Hee put a vaile upon his face, and ſo finiſhed to ſpeake unto the people: but either wee may reade with Iunius; While he had finiſhed to ſpeake unto the people, he put a vaile: or rather to reade it in the preterpluperfect tenſe, and hee had put a covering upon his face, Geneveſ. for as Oleaſter reaſoneth, hee had moſt need then to put a vaile before his face, when he ſpake unto the people. So alſo Cajetane; in ſpeaking unto God his face was uncovered: Homines autem alloquebatur facie velata; But he ſpake unto men with vailed face, leſt that thoſe ſhining beames might have hindred their ſight.

QUEST. LII. What the vailing of Moſes face ſignifieth.

6. THe myſticall meaning of this vaile before Moſes, the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1 Corinth. 3. 13. That the children of Iſrael ſhould not looke unto the end of that, which ſhould be aboliſhed: which Auguſtine underſtandeth thus, Chriſt is the end of the Law, &c. Rom. 10. 4. Signum erat, quia in lege Chriſtum intelligi non erant; It was a ſigne, that they ſhould not underſtand Chriſt in the Law. 2. And the Apoſtle alſo maketh this a propheticall type, of the blindneſſe of the Jewes unto this day, over whoſe hearts a vaile is ſtill ſpread in the reading of the Law, that they doe not perceive the ſpirituall ſenſe thereof. 3. Origene more generally applieth it: that when Moſes, that is, the Scriptures are read, velamen ſuper cor eorum, there is a vaile over their heart that reade, but underſtand not. 4. It ſignifieth alſo the vaile of ignorance, which is ſpread upon our hearts by nature, which untill it be removed by Chriſt, we cannot underſtand the truth of God, Simler.

QUEST. LIII. How long the ſhining of Moſes face continued.

Verſ. 35. Therefore Moſes put the covering upon his face, &c. 1. Some thinke, that the glorie of Moſes countenance continued no longer, than untill he had delivered his meſſage unto the people, and declared the Lords commandements unto them. But the contrary is convinced out of the text in this place, which ſheweth, that Moſes uſed when he went in to God, to uncover his face, and when he went out to cover it: it ſeemeth then, that more than once or twice Moſes did thus. And that the ſhining of his countenance did continue ſome while after.

2. Ambroſe ſaith, Quamdiu vixit Moſes, & alloquebatur populum, velamen habuit in facie, &c. As long as Moſes lived, and ſpake unto the people, he had a covering on his face. But Ioſhuah after Moſes death spake unto them with open face: which signified, quòd venturus esset verus Iesus, that the true Jesus in Psal.118. should come, who should take away the vaile of their hearts, that turned unto him. So Ambrose. Tostatus would confirme the same by these two reasons: 1. Seeing God had given Moses this gift, not setting downe any time, how long it should continue, he would not take it away from him, but upon some evill demerite of Moses: but he continued in Gods favour so long as he lived. 2. Seeing this glory was an honour unto Moses, if the Lord had taken it from him, it would have beene as great a disgrace and dishonour, as it was before an honour.

Contra. 1. Christ also was transfigured in the mount, his face did shine as the Sunne, he continued still the beloved Sonne of God, yet that glory remained not still in his countenance, therefore that argument doth not follow. 2. And the ceasing of his glory in Moses, was no more disgrace unto him, than it was to Christ, to have his face shine before his three Apostles in the mount, and not afterward, when he came downe to the rest of his Disciples. 3. That typicall allusion betweene Moses and Ioshuah, being not grounded upon the Scripture, doth serve only for illustration, it proveth not.

3. That Moses face then had not his shining brightnesse while he lived, it is the more probable opinion, upon these reasons: 1. Signes were no longer to continue, but untill the things signified were confirmed: this shining of Moses countenance was a signe of Gods favour and reconciliation with the people; this being confirmed, and the people thereof perswaded, the signe might cease. 2. As long as Moses face shined, the people were afraid to come neere. But afterward they presumed not only to come neere him, but Core, Dathan, and Abiram resisted him to his face, *Numb.*16.3. It seemeth that then his face shined not. 3. The Apostle calleth it, δόξαν καταργουμένην, glory, which was to be abolished, 2 *Cor.*3.7. It was therefore a transient and passing, not a permanent glorie. 4. Christs glory and shining brightnesse in the mount, continued not all his life, who was greater than Moses.

QUEST. I.IV. Whether Moses face continually shined, or only at certaine times.

BUt it cannot certainly be determined, how long Moses held this brightnesse: it is like so long, till the Tabernacle which he had pitched without the host, was brought into the campe, and so the Lord was knowne perfectly to be reconciled: but of this there can be no certainty.

1. Some thinke, that Moses had not this shining in his face continually while it lasted with him, but that while hee was conversant among the people, his face did not shine; but when hee went in unto God, the brightnesse was renued, and then he came forth, and covered his face when he spake unto the people.

2. But it is evident out of the text, that Moses face continually shined, while this brightnesse remained with him: for when he went in unto the Lord, he removed the covering from his face: his face then shined before hee went in unto the Lord, for otherwise he needed not to have covered it: his brightnesse then was not renued alwayes when he went in, but he had it before. Yet it may be granted, that when he went in unto God, aliqualiter suscipiebat augmentum, it might receive some increase and augmentation, *Tostat. quæst.*28.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. God only writeth in the heart.

Vers.1. HEw thee two tables of stone, and I will write. As Moses hewed the stone, and prepared the tables, but God did write in them: So man may move, exhort, prepare, and stirre up. But God only, docet intus, teacheth inwardly, writing in mens hearts by the finger of his Spirit, Ferus. As Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God giveth the increase, 1 *Cor.*3.6.

2. Doct. Sinne is no substance.

Vers.7. FOrgiving or taking away iniquitie. If God take away iniquity and sinne, and yet spareth sinners: then there is great difference betweene sinne and the sinner: it followeth then, that sinne is not a substance, but an accident, Marbach. The Apostle defineth sinne to bee a transgression of the Law, ἀνομία, 1 Ioh. 3.4. as then justice and righteousnesse, which is obedience to the Law, is no substance, but grace infused: so sinne, which is the transgression of the Law, is an evill quality or habite, no substantiall thing.

3. Doct. Gods generall promises must be specially applied by faith.

Vers.9. PArdon our iniquity and sinne. God had proclaimed himselfe before to be mercifull, forgiving sinne. But Moses is not contented with a generall apprehension of Gods mercy, but laboureth for a particular assurance thereof: so it sufficeth not generally to know the attributes of God, nisi speciali fide applicemus, unlesse we make speciall application of them by faith, Pelarg. As S. Paul saith of Christ, Who loved me, and gave himselfe for me, *Galath.*2.20.

4. Doct. Of the right manner of praying.

Vers.8. MOses made haste, and bowed himselfe, &c. Moses here teacheth us a right forme of prayer. 1. First, though he had prayed before, yet he prayeth againe, teaching us to pray often. 2. He humbleth himselfe, bowing to the ground. 3. He prayeth in secret in the mount, lifting up his minde unto God. 4. He is not long in prayer, but compendious. 5. He prayeth not for himselfe only, but for the people. 6. He ascribeth all to Gods mercy, confessing his and the peoples sinnes. If wee follow this paterne, and president in our prayers, we cannot pray amisse, Simler.

5. Places

5. Places of Controverſie.

1. Controv. That reconciliation is not denied unto any upon their repentance.

Verſ. 1. HEw thee two tables. In this chapter is ſet downe the reconciliation betweene the Lord and his people: who although they had committed a great ſinne, yet the Lord upon their repentance receiveth them to mercie. Which confuteth the errour of the Novatians, who denied pardon or reconciliation to them, which had ſinned againſt their conſcience, Marbach. Whereas both David after thoſe two great ſinnes of adultery, and murder, and Peter after his deniall of Chriſt, were upon their repentance reſtored to Gods favour.

2. Controv. That man cannot prepare his owne heart.

Procopius giveth this note, that whereas the Lord did both prepare the firſt tables, and writ in them, it ſignified, that God firſt, ſuo ſpiritu paravit cordis tabulas, & ſuo ſpiritu impreſſit, by his Spirit prepared the tables of the heart, and by his Spirit printed them: but theſe ſecond tables of the heart, quilibet per pœnitentiam præparet, every one prepareth by repentance. But it is not in mans power to prepare his owne heart, who of himſelfe cannot thinke a good thought, 2 Cor. 3. 5. God only muſt open our heart, as he did the heart of Lydia, Act. 16. 14.

3. Controv. All ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt irremiſſible.

Verſ. 7. FOrgiving iniquitie, tranſgreſſion, and ſinne. Cajetane noteth hereupon: that, Quodlibet peccati genus veniam apud Deum invenit, &c. there is no kinde of ſinne which doth not finde forgiveneſſe with God. And whereas it is ſaid in the Goſpell, that ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt ſhall never be forgiven: it is not contrary to this: hîc eſt ſermo de venia peccatorum ex parte Dei; for here is ſpeech of forgiveneſſe of ſinne on Gods behalfe, there ex parte peccantis indiſpoſiti, on the behalfe of the ſinner which is not diſpoſed to repentance: and ſo he concludeth, that, regulariter, ordinarily, ſuch ſhall not obtaine pardon, &c. So herein he ſeemeth to concurre with Bellarmine, that ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt is not ſimply irremiſſible, ſed non ordinarie, & ut plurimum, but not ordinarily and for the moſt part.

Contra, 1. Wee grant indeed, that in reſpect of Gods omnipotencie, and al-ſufficient and abounding mercie, there is no ſinne that is unpardonable: yet in reſpect of the invincible hardneſſe of heart in ſuch impenitent ſinners, which cannot repent, it is irremiſſible. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, It is impoſſible that ſuch ſhould be renued by repentance: ſuch namely as ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt. If then it be impoſſible for any ſinne to be forgiven without repentance; and it be impoſſible for ſuch to repent, then it is impoſſible for ſuch to be forgiven. See more hereof, Synopſ. Centur. 4. error. 73.

4. Controv. The Virgin Marie not priviledged from ſinne.

Verſ. 7. ANd not making innocent. But the Latine text readeth thus, Nullus apud te per ſe innocens eſt; None of himſelfe is innocent before thee: which text, as they reade it, doth include, that none are innocent before God, and ſo conſequently that the Virgin Marie was not free from actuall ſinne, much leſſe originall: which queſtion, though it be not yet defined in the Romane Church, yet Toſtat. quæſt. 8. thinketh it more probable, that the Virgin Marie was not conceived in originall ſinne; and then he maketh this anſwer, that true it is that none is innocent before God, per ſe, of themſelves, yet with God it is all one, as in his mercie, ex nocente innocentem reddere, &c. he can make a ſinner to be innocent, ſo, ne nocens eſſet, efficere, he can bring it to paſſe, that they ſhould not ſinne at all. But the queſtion is not here, what God can doe, but what he doth. Let him, or any other Romaniſt ſhew a text of Scripture, for this privilege of the Virgin Marie, that ſhee was exempted either from originall or actuall ſinne: this only was peculiar unto Chriſt, that he was in all things like unto us, ſinne only excepted. And ſhe her ſelfe acknowledging Chriſt to be her Saviour in her ſong, ſaying, My ſpirit rejoyceth in God my Saviour; confeſſeth therein, that ſhe was a ſinner. The Romaniſts then muſt looke for ſmall thanke at the Virgin Maries hand, who would faſten upon her ſuch a blaſphemous conceit, to be free from originall ſinne. See more hereof alſo, Synopſ. pap. Centur. 2. er. 79. Heb. 2. 14. & 4. 15. Luk. 1. 47.

5. Controv. Images not to be tolerated.

Verſ. 15. BReake their images in peeces, &c. for thou ſhalt bow downe to no other god. Oſiander here giveth this corrupt note: Ubi ergo nihil eſt periculi ab adoratione, ibi nihil eſt periculi à ſtatua, &c. Where therefore there is no danger of adoration, there is no danger to be feared from any images, &c. Therefore he thinketh that ſuch images, as are not adored may ſtand. Contra, 1. Nay, the Lord in this place would have the occaſion of ſtumbling removed, and images to be defaced, leſt the people might be corrupted by them: and therefore, Deut. 7. 5. they are ſimply commanded to breake downe their images, becauſe they were an holy people unto God. 2. And if it ſhall be ſaid, that the Iſraelites were weake and prone to idolatry, and therefore are ſo charged: the Apoſtle alſo reviveth the ſame precept, Babes, keepe your ſelves from idols, 1 Ioh. 2. 21. ſhewing that even now alſo under the Goſpell, there is like danger to be feared from images and idols.

6. Controv. Chriſts and Moſes forty dayes faſt cannot be imitated.

Verſ. 28. HE was with the Lord forty dayes, &c. The Romaniſts are ridiculous, in grounding their forty dayes faſt yeerely upon this example, and our bleſſed Saviours faſting forty dayes. 1. The miracles which the Prophets and Apoſtles wrought, ſcimus nobis ad confirmationem veritatis, non ad imitationem propoſui, &c. we know are propounded unto us for the confirmation of the truth, not for imitation, Gallaſ. We may as well imitate Chriſt, in his walking upon the ſea, and other miraculous workes, as in faſting forty dayes. 2. Our bleſſed Saviour, ſo likewiſe Moſes did eat nothing at all: but they

they feed delicately in their fasts. 3. Christ fasted but once, they injoyne this fast yeerely, Gallas. 4. Christ fasted, ut Evangelio plenam fidem acquireret, to win credit to the Gospell, as Moses did to the Law: unlesse then they bring in a new Gospell, no such fast for religion sake is to be injoyned, Calvin.

7. Controv. That Henoch and Elias are not preserved in their bodies in Paradise.

Vers. 28. He did neither eat bread, nor drinke water, &c. Tostatus thinketh, that as Moses was preserved in the mount, without any naturall decay at all, forty dayes and forty nights: so Henoch and Elias are kept still in Paradise by the power of God in their bodies, to returne againe in the latter dayes, to turne the hearts of the fathers to the children, quæst. 23, 24. Contra. 1. If he meane they are kept in the terrestriall Paradise, that cannot be: for seeing all the earth was overflowed in Noahs floud, how could Henoch live there? 2. And in heaven they are not with their bodies, for Christ was the first, as Origen saith, Qui carnem evexit in cœlum; Which carried his flesh into heaven. 3. Concerning that prophecie of the comming of Elias, it was fulfilled in Iohn Baptist, as our blessed Saviour saith: If yee will receive it, this is Elias, that was to come, Matth. 11. 14. See further of this question, Synops. Centur. 5. error. 32.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. God giveth more than we aske.

Vers. 10. I will doe marvels, such as have not beene done, &c. Moses only asked of God forgivenesse, and that he would go with them: the Lord granteth more, to doe such wonders for them, as never were seene. Such is the Lords bounty, that he giveth more to his servants than they aske: as unto Salomon, that desired wisdome, he gave both honour and riches, Simler.

2. Observ. God will protect his children being occupied in his service.

Vers. 24. So that no man shall desire thy land. Such care hath God of those that are occupied in his service, that he will then most of all protect and defend them: as the Israelites, while they went up to appeare before the Lord, are promised, that no detriment should befall them in the meane time at home, Gallas. Like as when the enemies came upon the Israelites in Samuels time, while they were assembled in prayer, yet they were delivered, 1 Sam. 7.

3. Observ. God will provide all things necessary for them that serve him.

Vers. 28. He did neither eat bread, nor drinke water. While Moses attendeth upon God, he hath no need either of meat or drinke: this was miraculous, and extraordinary in Moses, yet it teacheth, that God will provide for those all things necessary, that preferre his glory and service before all other things: as our blessed Saviour saith, Matth. 6. 33. Seeke first the kingdome of God, and his righteousnesse, and all things shall be ministred unto you.

4. Observ. Gods children are not proud of their gifts.

Vers. 29. Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone bright. Lippoman hereupon noteth: Ignorat Moses propriam gloriam, &c. Moses knew not his owne glory, for the Saints doe not acknowledge their excellencie, but are humble, &c. As the Apostle saith, If any man thinke that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet, as he ought to know, 1 Cor. 8. 2.

5. Observ. God lighteneth mens hearts by prayer, and hearing the Word.

And as Moses in talking with God, had his face lightened: so in our prayers, and hearing the word of God, accenditur in mentibus nostris nova lux, &c. a new light is kindled in our mindes, as the two Disciples which went to Emmaus, felt their hearts to burne within them, while Christ opened unto them the Scriptures.

Chap. XXXV.

1. The Method and Argument.

Hitherto from the 31. chapter hath beene set forth, the let and impediment unto the worke of the Tabernacle, by the sinne of the people, and their reconciliation: now unto the end of the booke, is declared their diligence in obedience in the worke of the Sanctuary, both of the people in bringing stuffe, of the workmen and artificers in framing and working it, of Moses in approving and disposing of it.

This chapter hath three parts: 1. A rehearsall or repetition of the former charge given them: first there is an interdict and prohibition, that they worke not upon the Sabbath, to vers. 4. then a commandement and charge: 1. Concerning the people, what they shall offer, to vers. 10. 2. How it shall be ordered and disposed, and to what end, to v. 20.

2. Then there is declared how forward they were in offering; both what was brought, not only gold and silver and precious stones, but other things of lesse price, as rams skins, badgers skins: and by whom they were offered, by the men, women, and Princes, to vers. 30.

3. Then the institution of the workmen is expressed: 1. Who they were. 2. What gifts they were indued with. 3. To what end, not only to worke themselves, but to teach others, vers. 35.

2. The

2. The divers readings.

Verſ. 22. Hookes, or buttons, earings, rings, and ſtudded girdles, I. better than, rings and chaines, B. or, rings and bracelets, G.L.S.C. or, rings and aprons, A. the ornaments of the nether parts; it is not like they offered ſuch: the word is כרמז, chumaz, which Iunius interpreteth cingulas bullatas, ſtudded girdles, here, and Numb. 31.50. I.

Verſ. 34. Both him, and Aholiab, &c. that is, God hath called both him, and Aholiab, Iun. So alſo the vulgar Latine putteth it in the accuſative likewiſe, A.P. better than, in the nominative, as V.B.G.S.C. For ſo it hath no grammaticall conſtruction with the precedent ſentence. I. L.

3. The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. Why the precept of keeping the Sabbath is ſo often inculcate.

Verſ. 1. IT ſhall be unto you the holy Sabbath of reſt, unto the Lord. 1. Cajetane thinketh, that this is the reaſon, why the precept of the Sabbath is here iterated, becauſe Moſes, propoſiturus ceremonialia, being to propound ceremoniall Lawes, beginneth with the chiefeſt of them, which is concerning the Sabbath. But the preamble, verſ. 1. Theſe are the words, which the Lord hath commanded, that ye ſhould doe them, ſheweth, that Moſes ſpeaketh not only of ceremoniall, but morall duties alſo, which were to be done and performed by them, Marbach.

2. But there are two reaſons of this repetition, one, leſt they might thinke, that they might intermit the reſt of the Sabbath, becauſe of the workes of the Sanctuary: for the which reaſon this precept was urged before, chap. 31. Iun. Marbach. Pelarg.

3. The other reaſon is, becauſe this precept, religionis caput, & totum Dei cultum continet, &c. doth in a manner containe the head of religion, and the whole worſhip of God, becauſe upon the Sabbath they were taught their whole duty toward God: therefore the neglect thereof would tend to the ruine and decay of all religion, Gallaſ. Simler.

4. And this precept is ſo often inculcate to admoniſh us, Primo omnium Dei regnum quarendum eſſe; That firſt of all we muſt ſeeke the kingdome of God, Oſiander.

QUEST. II. Whether it were ſimply forbidden the Iſraelites to kindle fire upon the Sabbath.

Verſ. 3. YOu ſhall kindle no fire thorowout all your habitations, &c. 1. The Hebrewes were ſo ſtrict in keeping the very letter of this Law, that they thought it not lawfull to ſtrike fire out of a ſtone or iron, nor to light a candle but for the ſicke, nor to put out a fire: and if they made a fire to warme them by, they were not to kindle it with bellowes, but with reed, Oleaſter. And therefore the Jewes uſed to hire Chriſtians to make their fires upon the Lords day, Lippomnn. But this their ſuperſtition was convinced by their owne practice in the Tabernacle, where the Prieſts did keepe fire on the Lords day upon the Altar, which was never to goe out.

2. Some of our owne Writers thinke, that by this they were forbidden to make a fire, ad calefaciendum, to warme them by. And therefore the man that gathered ſtickes upon the Sabbath day was ſtoned to death, Gallaſ. But ſeeing the Sabbath was made for man, that is, for his good, not for his hurt: there was no doubt, but in extremity of cold, for the preſervation of their health, it was lawfull for them to warme them at the fire: the man was put to death for gathering ſtickes, not for kindling of a fire, and he did it with an high hand, that is, of an obſtinate minde, as may be gathered, Numb. 15.30.

3. Some thinke, that only ſuch kindling of fire is forbidden, ex quo lucrum ſperari poſſet, whereof they made gaine, as in furnaces and forges, Vatab. But the words are generall, that not only in their ſhops and forges, but thorowout all their habitations, they ſhould not kindle a fire.

4. Therefore, I preferre rather Cajetanes opinion: that it is not ſimply forbidden to kindle a fire, but relativè ad coquendum, with relation to the ſeething and dreſſing of their meat, which asked much buſineſſe, and great preparation: they were to prepare their meat the day before, Exod. 16.23. which ſhewed a difference betweene the Sabbath and other feſtivall dayes, wherein it was lawfull for them to dreſſe their meat, as in the Paſch, chap. 12.16.

5. R. Abraham, Aben Ezra, did hold it lawfull to kindle a fire upon the Lords day, to warme them by, though not to dreſſe their meat: whereupon the other Rabbines would have pronounced him an Heretike, and they writ a booke againſt him under the name of the Sabbath, as though the Sabbath it ſelfe had ſpoken againſt him. But as herein Aben Ezra did hit upon the meaning of the Law, yet he was deceived in another point: that though it were not lawfull to kindle a fire upon the Sabbath, from the riſing of the Sunne, to the ſetting thereof, yet they might doe it in the night before. But they uſed in the account of their feaſts, to begin from the evening before, as they began the feaſt of unleavened bread upon the 14. day at even, Exod. 16.18. They obſerved then their feaſts according to the naturall day, which contained both the day and the night, not after the artificiall, from Sunne to Sunne, Toſtat. qu. 1.

6. This precept of not kindling a fire upon the Sabbath, muſt be underſtood, extra caſum neceſſitatis, beſide the caſe of neceſſity, Marbach. For otherwiſe to kindle a fire to dreſſe meat, rather than to ſtarve, and to comfott the ſicke was not forbidden.

7. It is added thorowout their habitations, that is, their private dwellings, for otherwiſe in the Tabernacle they did kindle a fire, and doe other bodily workes, which concerned the ſervice of God, Toſtat. quæſt. 1.

QUEST.

QUEST. III. Why the Lord would have his Temple built ſumptuouſly.

Verſ. 5. LEt him bring an offering to the Lord, gold, ſilver, &c. 1. Moſes to ſhew his faithfulneſſe in executing Gods commandement, neither adding thereto, nor taking any thing therefrom, repeateth in theſe chapters, this and the reſt following, almoſt the ſame things verbatim, which were preſcribed before to be made concerning the Tabernacle, chap. 25, 26, 27, 28. Gallaſ. And therefore the Reader is to be referred to the large treatiſes and queſtions there handled, if he deſireth in any thing to be ſatisfied. 2. The people then had both ſilver and gold, and other jewels, which they brought out of Egypt with them: neither had they beſtowed all upon the golden Calfe. 3. It ſo ſeemed good unto God, that his Tabernacle ſhould be builded ſumptuouſly, ne veri Dei cultus eſſet inferior gentilium cultu, that the true ſervice of God ſhould not be inferiour unto the falſe worſhip of the Gentiles: and involutum fuit Chriſti corpus, Chriſts body was wrapped up in theſe ceremonies, they were types and figures of things to come, Simler. 4. Now ſuch ſumptuous coſt is not required in Gods ſervice, his worſhip being ſpirituall; for the body being come, the ſhadowes are ceaſed: only a comelineſſe and decencie is to be obſerved in the edifiers belonging to Gods ſervice, with ſeemely ornaments, Simler.

QUEST. IV. Whether one may offer himſelfe to the calling of the Miniſterie.

Verſ. 10. ALL the wiſe hearted ſhall come, &c. Moſes willeth ſuch as God had endued with gifts, to offer themſelves to doe the ſervice of the Tabernacle. So it is not unlawfull for thoſe, which know themſelves to be fitted and prepared with gifts, to offer themſelves in a modeſt and orderly ſort, unto the Miniſtery of the Goſpell: theſe conditions being obſerved. 1. They muſt humbly acknowledge to have received all their gifts at Gods hands, and that without his grace and helpe, no vocation or calling can proſper: as Iohn Baptiſt ſaith, A man can receive nothing, unleſſe it be given him from heaven, Iohn 3. 27. and therefore their deſire muſt be to referre all their gifts to Gods glory. 2. They muſt ſubmit themſelves with lowlineſſe to the judgement and triall of thoſe, penes quos eſt legitima vocatio, unto whom belongeth the outward lawfull calling, and approbation of men: for the Apoſtle ſaith, The ſpirits of the Prophets are ſubject to the Prophets, 1 Cor. 14. 32. 3. They muſt take heed they enter not by unlawfull meanes, as by gifts and bribery to corrupt thoſe, to whom the allowance and approbation of them belongeth, that are to enter. In this manner for one to offer himſelfe, is not to be an intruder, but ſuch an one is rather to be held as called of God, Marbach.

QUEST. V. Of the liberall and franke offering of the people.

Verſ. 21. THen all the Congregation of the children of Iſrael departed, &c. 1. In that they departed from Moſes, it ſheweth their deliberation and conſultation with themſelves, which commendeth their diſcreet liberality, that they would doe nothing raſhly: for it falleth out oftentimes, that hee qui ſubito fervore beneficus eſt, which is liberall upon a ſudden heat, doth afterward repent him. 2. They came and offered willingly, not of conſtraint, Marbach. Some thinke this is added, Every one whoſe ſpirit made him willing came, and brought, to ſhew a difference betweene the willing and unwilling: but it rather ſheweth, that there was none found, but brought willingly according to their ability. 3. As by the manner, their liberality appeareth, ſo by the perſons that offered, not onely men, but women, not the Princes only but the people, and as well the poore as the rich, Pelargus. 4. So alſo it is made manifeſt by the gifts which they offered, not onely ſilver, gold, but even the Jewels and ornaments of their bodies, earings, rings, bracelets: even the nice and dainty women were willing to forgoe ſuch things, Marbach. 5. And herein their repentance did ſhew it ſelfe, that qua luxui antea ſervierunt, &c. the things which before they abuſed to wantonneſſe (and ſuperſtition) are now conſecrated to the ſervice of the Tabernacle, Simler.

QUEST. VI. Why the women offered by themſelves.

Verſ. 22. THe men came with the women. 1. The word is ghal, which ſignifieth upon: which Oleaſter underſtandeth thus, that the women were moſt forward, and came firſt, and then the men came upon them, that is, after them. 2. Or he thinketh, mention is made of men and women to ſignifie the great throngs and companies that came, men and women together. 3. But direct mention is made of the women, to ſhew their ardent affection, in not ſparing to give their owne jewels, Marbach, And herein alſo was ſignified: Deum non aſpernari operas mulierum; That God deſpiſed not the ſervice of women toward the worke of the Tabernacle, Lippom.

4. The women offered by themſelves, but not without their husbands conſent: for all things were done in order: the ſuperſtitious women alleage, Ierem. 44. 19. That they did not powre out their drinke offerings to the Queene of heaven without their husbands: much more would not theſe devout women offer to the Lords worke, without their husbands conſent. And though the husbands onely ſhould have offered for themſelves and their wives by mutuall conſent, it had come to one effect, and ſhould have beene alike acceptable unto God: yet it contenteth the devout women better, that they offer with their owne hands. As when a ſumme was taken of the people, every one put in halfe a ſicle for himſelfe, Toſtat. quæſt. 2.

QUEST. VII. Why the workmen are named.

Verſ. 30. THe Lord hath called by name Bezaleel. 1. Marbachius thinketh, that this narration of the workmen went before the offering of the people, that they knowing who ſhould have the diſpoſing of their gifts, might be more incouraged to bring: but it is like, that as the Lord after the deſcription of the Tabernacle, and what every one ſhould bring toward it, laſt of all made mention of the workmen, chap. 31. ſo Moſes obſerveth the ſame order. 2. Cajetane ſaith, that Moſes ſignifieth, who

ſhould

ſhould be the chiefe workmen, ne oriatur contentio inter artifices, that there ſhould be no contention among the workmen. 3. But that other note of Cajetane is not ſo good: that whereas it is ſaid, Hee hath filled him with the ſpirit Elohim of God: he by elohim, underſtandeth a Iudge, that God had made him a Iudge or Umpire, relativè ad alios artifices, in reſpect of other artificers. 4. I preferre rather Oſianders collection, that, out of theſe words, Iehovah filleth him with the Spirit of God, proveth the Trinity, for there is one perſon of Iehovah, which filleth another of the Spirit wherewith he is filled, and the third of the Sonne of God, whoſe Spirit it is.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The Law of the Sabbaticall reſt, how morall.

Verſ. 3. YE ſhall not kindle a fire, &c. The Sabbath is taken two wayes, either preciſely for the ſeventh day, and ſo it was a ceremonie of the Law, and is aboliſhed, or ſimply for a day of reſt ſet apart for the ſervice of God, and ſo it is morall. For there is no nation almoſt which had not ſome feſtivall dayes, for the publike exerciſe of their religion: wherein although they diverſly erred, yet it ſheweth that it was grounded even upon the Law of nature, and conſequently was morall, that ſome time ſhould be appointed for the ſervice of God.

2. Doct. The libertie of Chriſtians is greater in the Sabbaticall reſt, than of the Iewes.

BUt yet the reſt of the Lords day is not ſo ſtrictly now injoyned, as under the Law, ſed nunc liberalius nobiſcum agit, but now under the new Teſtament God dealeth more liberally with us: ſome works are ſuch as doe hinder the ſervice of God, which are by no meanes now to be done, niſi cogat neceſſitas, unleſſe neceſſity conſtraine: other works there are, which are not ſuch an impediment unto Gods ſervice, which may be done upon the Lords day, yet ſo, as God be firſt ſerved: ſo frugalem cibum parare, to prepare frugall meat upon the Lords day, it is lawfull, but not ſumptuous, and curious diet, for that would draw away the minde from Gods worſhip, Marbach.

3. Doct. The miniſterie is to be maintained.

Verſ. 5. LEt him bring an offering. As the people then offered toward the Tabernacle, ſo now the Miniſters of the Goſpell muſt be maintained by the gifts and oblations of the people, for God hath ſo ordained, that they which preach the Goſpell, ſhould live of the Goſpell, 1 Cor. 9. 14. Simler.

5. Places of Controverſie.

1. Conf. Againſt free will.

Verſ. 21. EVery one, whoſe ſpirit made him willing. The Romaniſts doe hereupon foudly ground their errour of free will: for their willingneſſe excludeth not the grace of the ſpirit, qui intus operatur velle, which inwardly maketh willing, Marbach. It is afterward ſaid, verſ. 31. That God filled Bezaleel with the ſpirit of wiſdome: whereupon Baſil giveth this note, Ve homini illi, qui prudentiæ ſuæ cauſam Deo non adſcribat, &c. Woe unto that man, which aſcribeth not the cauſe of his wiſdome unto God.

6. Morall Obſervations.

1. Obſerv. God refuſeth not the ſmalleſt gifts of his children.

Verſ. 23. BLew ſilke, badgers ſkins. Every one brought ſomewhat toward the worke of the Tabernacle, he that had not ſilke, or gold, or ſuch like, brought rams ſkins, badgers ſkins, &c. God will accept of the meaneſt gift, which is offered with a good heart, as he commended the widowes mite, Pelarg.

2. Obſerv. What true nobilitie is.

Verſ. 34. OF the tribe of Dan. This was an obſcure tribe, but this gift of wiſdome which God beſtowed on him, made him noble: ſo as Hierom ſaith, Summa apud Deum nobilitas, claruſque eſſe virtutibus; It is high nobility with God to excell in vertue, Pelargus.

3. Obſerv. Gifts muſt be communicated by one to another.

HE hath put in his heart to teach. Many that have skill, of envy refuſe to teach others, and refuſe to have aſſociates. But theſe willingly impart their knowledge to others. So the Apoſtle exhorteth us, one to edifie another, 1 Theſſal. 5. 11.

CHAP.

Chap. XXXVI.

1. The Method and Argument.

THis chapter hath two parts: 1. Is set forth the preparation to the worke of the Tabernacle, to *vers.*8. 2. The working and making of the Tabernacle, to *vers.*38.

1. In the preparation is declared: 1. The diligence of the workmen, vers. 1. and their faithfulnesse in taking no more stuffe than sufficed, vers. 5, 6. 2. The care of Moses in calling, and incouraging the workmen, *vers.*2. his faithfulnesse in delivering unto them, all that was brought unto him, vers. 3. 3. The liberality and willingnesse of the people is set forth, in bringing more than sufficed, *vers.*3.

2. Then followeth the description of the making of the Tabernacle. 1. Of the curtaines, both the first and principall made of fine linen, blew silke, purple, and skarlet, with their strings and taches, to vers. 15. then the second curtaines of goats haire are described, with their strings and taches, to *vers.*19.

2. Then the coverings were made of rams skins, and badgers skins, *vers.*19. 3. The boords of the Tabernacle are made with their tenons, sockets and barres, to *vers.*35.

4. Lastly, the two vailes with their pillars, and the fashion thereof are described, *vers.*35. to the end.

2. The divers readings.

G. Vers.22. For the Southside full south, G. better than, on the southside, L.C.S. eum eater. For there are two words here used, temanah, and negebh, which signifie the South: or then, on the Southside, toward the right hand, L. for temanah, being put alone, is only taken for the South, *Numb.*2.10.

For the rest of the differences in the translations, where most doubt is, see before the divers readings, *chap.*26. it were both a tedious worke, and unnecessary to note all the corruptions in the Chalde, Septuagint, and Latine translation, where they doe adde to, or take from the originall: only those differences are worthy of note, which doe arise by the divers taking of the originall.

3. The questions discussed.

Quest. I. *Wherefore Moses maketh such a large rehearsall of these things before described, chap.*25,26,27.

Vers.8. They made for the Tabernacle ten curtaines, &c. 1. As the use is in publike buildings, that the workmen have a certaine inventary or plot given them, which they follow in their worke, and according unto the which they make every part: so Moses here sheweth how the workmen followed that plot and forme, which before was prescribed them, *chap.*26. Iun. Analys. This therefore was no needlesse repetition, but a necessary relation, which served for the direction of the workmen.

2. And, magni interfuit ex comparatione perspici, &c. it was to great purpose, that by this comparing of their worke with the forme and prescription, it might appeare how exactly the workmen did contrive every thing, according to the direction given them, to teach us, that nothing is to be done in Gods service according to our invention, but as the Lord himselfe hath prescribed, Calvin. Marbach.

3. Compositio Tabernaculi fuit mirabilis concio, &c. The making of the Tabernacle, was a shadowing forth of the incarnation of the Sonne of God, the true Tabernacle: these then being the types and shadowes, were at large to be rehearsed and expressed. Wherefore this must not seeme unto us, commemoratio supervacanea, a superfluous rehearsall, Osiand.

Quest. II. Why the same order is not kept in the making of the Tabernacle, which was observed in the prescription.

THis further here may be observed, that the workmen doe not keepe the same order in the framing and building of the Tabernacle, which Moses followed in the prescription, *chap.*25,26. for there in the first place are described the Arke, with the Mercie seat, the golden table, and the golden candlesticke, then the curtaines with the covering, boords, and vailes, *chap.*26. But here the first things rehearsed to be made, are the curtaines and boords: the reasons whereof are these: 1. That which is the first in the deliberation and consultation, is the last in the execution: according to that saying in schooles, Quod primum est intentione, est ultimum in executione; That which is first in the intention, is the last in the execution: so there, because the Arke was the end why the Tabernacle was made, it was first thought of in the consultation: but the Tabernacle is first made, because in the execution, the meanes which are directed to the end, are first taken in hand: to this effect Iunius in Analys. 2. There the order of excellencie is observed: the Arke with other instruments, being the chiefest things, are first named; here the order of time is followed: for the first, the Tabernacle, which was as it were the house, must be made before the Arke, which should be there placed, be undertaken, Gallas.

Quest. III. Whether the middle barre were only in the West end.

Vers. 33. He made the middle barre to shoot thorow the boords. Whether this middle barre went quite thorow the boords in the midst within, is handled at large, *quest.*22. *chap.*26. whither I referre the Reader: here only this point shall be briefely touched, whether this middle barre were only in the West end of the boords, and not on the sides.

1. Toſtatus thinketh it was only in the weſt end, becauſe it is ſaid, it went thorow from corner to corner; but on the ſides there was but one corner, where it joyned with the weſt end: neither was there any need of a middle bar for the ſides, but only in the ends to hold both the ſides together, Toſtat. qu. 2.

Contra. 1. Though the Latine Interpreter read, from corner to corner: yet the Hebrew word, hakatzeh, properly ſignifieth an end: ſo it muſt be tranſlated from end to end, as Vatab. Pagnin. Montan. Iun. Chalde, the Septuagint read (to the ſame purpoſe) from ſide to ſide. 2. The middle bar ſerved not to hold the ſides together, for to that end were the two corner boords, which were double: but to ſtrengthen the boords, and to joyne them one to another: therefore there was the like neceſſitie of this middle bar alſo in the ſides, as well as in the end.

2. Wherefore the better opinion is, unumquodque ex tribus lateribus habuiſſe talem vectem, that everie of the three ſides had ſuch a bar, Oſiander. For this middle barre was one of the five ranke of barres, which was in the middeſt: now everie ſide had theſe five orders, or rankes of barres, as is evident out of the text.

QUEST. IV. To what purpoſe the hookes upon the pillars ſerved.

Verſ. 38. Five pillars with their hookes, &c. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke, that theſe hookes ſerved to hang the ſacrifices upon, which ſhould bee offered upon ſolemne dayes. But that is not like, for theſe reaſons: 1. The pillars which the firſt veile did hang before, had alſo hookes, verſ. 36. but thither were brought in no ſacrifices. 2. If the bloudie ſacrifices had hung upon theſe hookes, they would have marred and ſpotted the veiles.

2. Therefore theſe hookes were to no other end, than for the cords to be faſtened to, whereon the veiles did ride to and fro, Oleaſter. The other queſtions out of this chapter, ſee handled before, chap. 26.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. That all things ought not to be common among Chriſtians.

Verſ. 3. They brought ſtill unto them free gifts. Whereas the people are willed by Moſes, to bring their offerings toward the worke of the Tabernacle, and afterward, when they had brought ſufficient, they are bid to bring no more: this ſheweth that all things ought not to bee common among the people of God; for then there could not be properly any gift, becauſe one ſhould not give of his owne, everie one having a like intereſt in that which was given, Marbach.

2. Doct. It is lawfull to poſſeſſe and enjoy riches.

AND further, in that ſome brought jewels of gold and ſilver, and other precious things: it is evident that it is lawfull to poſſeſſe and enjoy the riches of this world, ſo they be well gotten, and charitably uſed and employed, Marbach. Abraham was rich, not onely in cattell, but in ſilver alſo and gold, Gen. 13. 2. and Ioſeph was a rich man that begged the body of Jeſus, Matth. 27. 57.

3. Doct. Of the right uſe of riches.

BUT in the poſſeſſing of riches, ſpeciall care muſt be had of the right uſe of them, which is threefold: 1. There is a neceſſarie uſe of riches, either private, as in the education of children, and other domeſticall affaires: for he that provideth not for his owne, &c. is worſe than an infidell: or publike in civill duties, as in paying cuſtome, tribute, &c. Rom. 13. 7. and ſupporting other neceſſarie charges of the Common-wealth: and in Eccleſiaſticall, as in maintenance of the Miniſters of the Goſpell, Gal. 6. 6. 1 Tim. 5. 8.

2. There is another uſe of riches in expences, non ad neceſſitatem, ſed ad honeſtatem, not for meere neceſſitie, but for comelineſſe and honeſtie. Diogenes would not allow that any ſhould weare a gold ring, or have any other ornaments, or feed of any delicate meat, or uſe any coſtly apparrell. But as the Scriptures alloweth diverſitie of callings and degrees among men, ſo it condemneth not that everie man in his order, in his behaviour, apparrell, maintenance, ſhould bee ſutable to his degree, ſo it be done without pride and vaine-glorie: as Ioſeph being exalted to honour by Pharaoh, did weare a gold ring, fine linnen, and a golden chaine; he did alſo eat and drinke of the beſt. Geneſ. 41. 42. Geneſ. 43. 34.

3. The third uſe of riches is in liberalitie and beneficence toward the poore; with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed, Heb. 13. Marbach.

4. Doct. The uſe of Temples and Churches lawfull.

Verſ. 8. They made the Tabernacle. As the Iſraelites had their Tabernacle, ſo is it lawfull for Chriſtians to have Temples and Churches, and peculiar places for the ſervice of God: yea we refuſe not ſuch places as have beene ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed in time paſt to idolatrie, ſo they bee purged from all monuments of ſuperſtition. The good Kings of Judah did indeed pull downe the houſes of Baal, and other idolatrous temples, becauſe it was not lawfull for them to have any more temples but one, namely, that at Jeruſalem; but the caſe is otherwiſe now with us, Simler.

5. Doct. Of the Church of Chriſt, the parts, divers kindes, and the ſignes thereof.

THIS Tabernacle was a type and figure of Chriſts Church, which is a company of men acknowledging and worſhipping the true God, whom Chriſt doth regenerate and ſanctifie here with his Spirit, and purpoſeth afterward to glorifie them in his Kingdome.

This Church is either univerſall and generall, or particular. The univerſall Church, called the Catholike Church, comprehendeth the faithfull in all ages, times, and places: and it conſiſteth of two principall parts, of the triumphant Church in heaven, or the militant here in earth.

This militant Church here in earth is ſaid alſo to be holy, and without ſpot, partly by the imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, partly becauſe the righteouſneſſe thereof is begun here, and perfected in the next world. It is also the seat of truth, because it professeth Christ, the foundation of all truth, yet is it not altogether without spot in this world.

It is two wayes considered: it is visible when a multitude doe outwardly professe the faith of Christ; and in this visible Church there may be many hypocrites and carnall livers, the invisible is the company or societie onely of beleevers, who are knowne unto God, and not unto the world.

Particular Churches are so said to be in respect of particular countries, cities, or families, which all are in effect but one generall Church, as all holding of the same head Christ Jesus.

This Church is knowne by certaine marks, some which are essentiall unto it: the preaching of the Word, and puritie of doctrine, and the right administration of the Sacraments. Some which are peculiar unto it, though not so essentiall, as the practice of charitie, as our blessed Saviour saith, By this shall men know that yee are my disciples, if yee one love another: and to be exercised under the crosse: for all that will live godly in Christ shall suffer persecution, Marbach.

Ioh. 13.
2 Tim. 3.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against excessive giving to superstitious uses.

Vers. 5. The people bring too much, and more than enough, &c. Lyranus here giveth this note, Hoc possumus diebus istis dicere, &c. we may say the like in these dayes, that in many places Christian people and Princes have offered too many things to the Prelates and Ministers of the Church above necessitie, yea and against the profit of the Church, in respect of the abuse thereof. For many doe abuse the goods of the Church unto pomp, and enriching of their carnall kindred. And therefore according to the example of Moses, Superiours ought finem imponere temporalium augmentationum; to stint the augmenting of such temporall things. Thus Lyranus. And indeed in former times of superstition, the people of a blinde devotion, gave too much to the Church, which to this day by the Romane Prelacie is much abused to riot, excesse, and vaine pomp. But in these dayes charitie is waxt so cold, that the people had more need to be bid to give to the Church, than to be stinted in their giving.

2. Confut. Churches not more holy in themselves.

NOw further, though the Israelites had but one Tabernacle, and afterward a Temple, that was not, as though it were a more holy place in it selfe than other: but partly that place was commanded to maintaine order and unitie in religion: partly it was a type and figure of Christ the true Tabernacle. So Churches now, and the places appointed for Gods service, are not more holy in themselves, but they serve for comelinesse and order; for otherwise the Lord is everie where present to the prayer of the faithfull: and therefore Saint Paul willeth men, everie where to lift up pure hands, &c. Simler.

1 Tim. 2.

3. Confut. Against superfluous cost in Churches.

THough Moses Tabernacle, and afterward Salomons Temple, were sumptuously set forth with gold, that is no warrant now for Christians to adorne their Churches with gold and precious stones, as the Papists do their images. 1. That was prescribed to the Hebrewes, in regard of their infirmitie, to win them from the glorious vanities of the Heathen. 2. Most of those golden instruments had their speciall use in the service of the Tabernacle, which being now abolished, there is no longer use of any such. 3. Neither were they simply necessarie for Gods service; for then he would not have suffered the vessels of the Temple to have beene carried into captivitie. 4. They had a direct commandement from God, to make the Tabernacle in that costly and sumptuous manner: but no such charge is now given under the Gospell.

The Churches of Christians are to be kept after a comely and decent manner. But two things are here to be taken heed of: 1. That needlesse and unnecessarie cost be not laid upon Churches. Exuperius the Bishop of Tolouse, used to carrie the body of Christ, that is, the bread representing his body, in a wicker basket, and the wine in a glasse. 2. The necessitie of the living members of Christs Church, must bee preferred before the adorning of Churches. Cyrillus Bishop of Jerusalem, and Acacius Bishop of Amida among the Persians, when they saw that the people were like to be famished, melted the Church vessels, and sold them for the releefe of the poore, Simler.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Peace and concord is required among the spirituall builders of Christs Church.

Vers. 2. Then wrought Bezaleel, &c. and all the wise hearted, &c. Here is commended unto us consensio collegarum, the consent of these colleagues and fellow work-men, that they all joyne together in peace, to set forward the Lords worke, Pelarg. Which should teach the Ministers of the Gospell, that they doe not by any unnecessarie contentions breake the peace of the Church: but like as in the building of Salomons Temple, there was not heard the noise of an hammer; so much more the spirituall building of the Church, should be set forward without contention.

2. Observ. Ministers must use their gifts with discretion.

Vers. 8. Curtaines of fine twined linnen, of blue silke, purple. Origen hereupon giveth this note, Sciamus miscere aurum cum bysso, &c. quid tibi prodest, ut habeas hæc, si uti nescias, &c. Let us also know how to mingle gold with silke, &c. what doth it profit thee to have these things, if thou know not how to use them? &c. Origen commendeth the wisdome and prudence of these artificers, that thereby Ministers should learne to labour also for wisdome, with discretion to use their gifts.

3. Observ.

3. Obſerv. Faithfulneſſe is required in Officers.

Verſ. 5. THe people bring too much. Herein appeareth the faithfulneſſe of theſe work-men, which might have purloyned much to their owne advantage, but they deale moſt faithfully, not turning any thing to their owne private profit, Toſtat. qu. 2. So did Ioſhua, when he divided out the land of Canaan to the children of Iſrael, hee allotted nothing to himſelfe, neither would bee his owne carver: but when everie tribe had received his part, then they caſt out a portion for Ioſeph, Ioſh. 19.

CHAP. XXXVII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter are rehearſed ſuch things as were before declared, chap. 25. and in ſome part of the thirtieth. 1. The Arke is deſcribed with the Mercie-ſeat, which was in the moſt holy place, to verſ. 10. 2. Thoſe inſtruments are made, which were in the Sanctuarie without. 1. The table of ſhew-bread with the inſtruments, to verſ. 17. 2. The golden candleſticke, with the parts and ornaments, to verſ. 25. 3. The golden Altar with the things thereto belonging, to verſ. 29. Theſe things are more fully ſet downe, chap. 25. chap. 30. ſo that it were needleſſe to rehearſe them againe here.

2. The diuers readings.

See before the diverſitie of tranſlations, in chap. 25. with the which this chapter agreeth verbatim, almoſt word for word: unneceſſarie repetitions of the ſame things may well be ſpared.

3. The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. How the rings are ſaid to have beene in the ſides of the Arke.

Verſ. 3. HE caſt foure rings for the corners thereof. This muſt be underſtood with a double limitation or exception. 1. Properly the corners of the Arke were either above or below, where the plaine ſuperficies did meet with the corners: for a ſolid angle cannot conſiſt of fewer, quam extribus ſuperficiebus trigonis, than of three corner points. But it had beene inconvenient for theſe rings, either to be placed in the corner point above, or below: therefore here the angle or corner is taken for the meeting of the two ſides together. 2. Neither yet were they faſtened directly in the verie corner of all, where the ſides joyned together, for then the bars could not conveniently have beene thruſt thorow them: but by the corners are meant the ſides neere unto the corners, as it is ſaid afterward, that the barres were in the rings by the ſides of the Arke, Toſtat. qu. 1.

QUEST. II. Why it is ſaid, He made; where the Lord ſaid before to Moſes, Thou ſhalt make.

Verſ. 6. HE made the Mercie-ſeat, &c. The phraſe muſt be obſerved, that whereas chap. 25. the Lord ſaith to Moſes, Thou ſhalt make an Arke, thou ſhalt make a candleſticke, thou ſhalt make a table, and ſo of the reſt: here it is ſaid, He, that is, Bezaleel made the Arke, he made the table, he made the candleſticke: The reaſon hereof is to ſhew the obedience of Moſes and the people, leſt they might have beene thought to have received many precepts of the Lord, and performed few of them. In that therefore the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Thou ſhalt make, there the charge and commandement is given. But now where it is thus rehearſed, and he made, the dutifull and carefull performing is expreſſed of that which was given them in charge, Pellican.

QUEST. III. In what forme the branches of the candleſticke went up.

Verſ. 18. SIx branches came out of the ſide thereof. 1. Pellican ſeemeth to thinke that theſe branches went up, erectis calamis, with their ſtalkes upright. 2. But their opinion ſeemeth more probable, who thinke that the branches in their going up, ſemicirculos effeciſſe, made halfe circles: for both that forme and faſhion was more comely to ſight, and beſide, if they had gone upright, this inconvenience would have followed, that the lamps above where the oyle was put for the lights, would not have ſtood right up, but leaning one way, which had been unfit, both for the droppings of the oyle, and the lights would not have burned ſo cleare, nor ſo bright, if the lamps had not ſtood even and levell, Gallaſ.

The reſt of the queſtions concerning theſe inſtruments and ornaments of the Temple, which are deſcribed in this chapter, are before diſcuſſed, chap. 25. and chap. 30. in the beginning of the chapters.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Chriſt our true propitiatorie and Mercie-ſeat.

Verſ. 6. HE made the Mercie-ſeat. The Mercie-ſeat ſignified Chriſt, our true ἱλαστήριον, Propitiatorie, who hath reconciled us to God his Father. The Cherubs upon the Mercie-ſeat doe repreſent the holy Angels, whoſe miniſterie Chriſt uſeth in the government of his Church, Pelargus. As the Apoſtle ſaith, They are ſent forth to miniſter for their ſakes, that ſhall be heires of ſalvation, Hebr. 1. 14. Marbach.

2. Doct. Christ both God and man.

THe making of the Arke of wood within, and gold without, did set forth the two natures in our blessed Saviour, joyned together in one person, the divine and humane, Simlerus.

In the Propitiatorie and Mercie-seat are typically set forth the benefits, that we have by Christ: that as the Propitiatorie covered the Arke, wherein was the Law: so Christ, Legem nos accusantem tegit, doth cover and hide the Law which accuseth us, Simler.

But more particularly, the Apostle rehearseth the benefits which we have by Christ, saying, that he is made of God unto us his wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification, redemption. 1. His wisdome, in that Christ hath revealed unto us the will of his Father, to give his Sonne for us, That whosoever beleeveth in him should have eternall life. 2. He is our Justice, in that hee imparted to us both his active righteousnesse in fulfilling the Law, and his passive obedience in bearing the punishment due unto our sinne: so the Apostle saith, Christ is the end of the Law, for righteousnesse to everie one that beleeveth. 3. Christ is our Sanctification, in that hee doth not only impute unto us his righteousnesse by faith, but doth also sanctifie and regenerate us by his Spirit, inabling us in some measure to keepe his Commandements: as the Lord saith by his Prophet, I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walke in my statutes. 4. He is our Redemption, in that he hath by his innocent death appeased the wrath of God toward us, as the Apostle saith, Who shall condemne us, it is Christ which is dead, &c. Marbachius.

1 cor.1.30.
Iohn 6.39.
Rom.10.4.
Ezech.36.27.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against such heretickes as erred concerning Christs divine, or humane nature.

AS Christ is shadowed forth in the Arke, to be both God and man, so all such are condemned, which doe erre concerning the divine or humane nature of Christ.

As touching Christs divine nature: 1. Some utterly deny it, making Christ a meere man, and not to have beene before he was conceived of the Virgin Marie: in which heresie were Cerinthus, Ebion, contrarie to the Scripture, which saith, that the Word, which was made flesh, was in the beginning, &c. *Ioh.*1.1.

2. Some confesse another nature in Christ beside his humanitie, but not of the same substance with God, yet of an higher nature than any creature: so held Carpocrates, Basilides, Arrius: but our blessed Saviour himselfe saith, *I and my Father are one, Ioh.*20.30.

3. Some affirmed that Christ beside his humane nature, consisted also of a divine, yet not begotten of the Father, but making one person with God the Father, as well as being of one substance: so the Sabellians and Patropassians: whereas the Apostle saith, *God sent his Sonne made of a woman, Gal.*4.4. The person then of the Sonne, and not of the Father, was made man for us.

Concerning Christs humane nature: 1. Some affirmed that he was not a true man, but onely in outward appearance: as the Manichees, and Marcionites, who are confuted by Christs owne words, Luke 24.39. Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as yee see me have.

2. The Valentinians and Anabaptists hold that Christ had not his flesh of the Virgin Marie, but brought it with him from heaven, contrarie to the Apostle, who saith, *That hee was made of the seed of David, according to the flesh, Rom.*1.3.

3. Some taught that Christ had a true humane nature, but in respect of his body onely, not of his soule, as Apollinaris Bishop of Laodicea, who is convinced by the words of our Saviour, *Matth.*26. My soule is heavie unto death.

4. Some grant that Christ tooke upon him our whole nature, but not our humane infirmities. But the Apostle teacheth the contrarie, that Christ was in all things tempted: in like sort, (as we are) yet without sinne. There are two kinde of infirmities, some are personall, as leprosie, blindnesse, sickenesse, diseases; these Christ was not subject unto: there are naturall infirmities which doe belong unto the whole humane nature, as wearinesse, hunger, griefe, and such like: these our blessed Saviour undertooke, that he might be in all things like unto us.

Heb.4.15.

5. Some hold that Christ had a true humane nature, but after the uniting thereof, in one person to his Godhead, it was absorpt of his divine nature, which only remained: this was the heresie of Swencfeldius. But wee are otherwise taught in the Scripture, that Christ ascended in a true visible humane body, and that he shall with the same returne againe into the world at the latter day, Acts 1. Marbach.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. That we neglect not the time of grace and mercie.

Vers.6. HE made the Mercie-seat. Oleaster hereupon well observeth, that God appointed a place in the Tabernacle, from whence hee was ready to shew mercie: but hee assigned no place for judgement; whereby is signified, that now is the time of mercie, but afterward commeth judgement. We are taught hereby not to neglect the time of grace and mercie, but to seeke the Lord while hee may be found: as the Prophet saith, Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel, Amos 4. 12.

2. Observ. We must eat and drinke, as in Gods presence.

Vers.10. ALso hee made the table of Shittim wood, &c. This table, whereon was set the shew bread, which was offered in the name of all Israel; signifieth, that men is being alwayes in the presence of God, sancte uterentur donis Dei, should reverently use the gifts of God, Simler. As the Apostle admonisheth, that whether we eat or drinke, or whatsoever we doe else, all should be done to the glorie of God, 2 *Cor.*10.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this Chapter, 1. Is ſet downe the making of ſuch things as belong to the miniſterie and ſervice of the Tabernacle: firſt of the holy inſtruments, as the Altar and Laver of braſſe, with the faſhion of them, and the things thereto belonging, to verſ. 9. Secondly, of the holy place, namely, the outward Court, where theſe holy inſtruments were to be imployed and uſed, to verſ. 21.

2. In the other part of the Chapter are expreſſed: 1. The order and diſpoſing of theſe things when they were made, to whoſe charge and care they were committed, verſ. 21. 2. The matter, both whereof they were made, as gold, ſilver, braſſe, and what things were made of each of theſe metals, verſ. 23. to the end.

2. The divers readings.

Verſ. 8. Of the glaſſes of the women which came together by troupes, I. which aſſembled and came together, B. G. P. better than, which exerciſed themſelves, A. or, which faſted, S. or, prayed, C. or, watched, L. the word, צבא, tzaba, ſignifieth to gather an armie: theſe devout women came in troops together, as an armie. I. B. G.

Verſ. 21. Theſe are the things numbred, I. P. C. or, this is the ſumme, B. the things viſited, A. better than, theſe are the inſtruments, L. or this was the conſtruction of the Tabernacle, S. or, theſe are the parts, G. the word is, פקודי, pekudai, numbred, counted. See the reſt of the divers readings before, chap. 27. I. P. C. B.

3. The queſtions diſcuſſed.

QUEST. I. Whether there were more than one Laver made.

Verſ. 8. ALſo he made the Laver of braſſe. 1. R. David thinketh there were two Lavers, one whereat the Prieſts waſhed, the other wherein they waſhed and cleanſed their ſacrifices, wherof mention is made, 1 Sam. 2. 14. how the Prieſts boy would come while the fleſh was ſeething, and thruſt his fleſh hooke into the kettle, caldron, pot, or pan, and take out that which came next to hand, ex Oleaſtro.

2. But ſeeing mention here is made but of one Laver of braſſe, it is like there was no more made by Moſes direction, but this one to waſh in, which might ſerve both for the Prieſts to waſh in, as alſo to cleanſe the ſacrifices: as is before ſhewed, queſt. 25. chap. 30. whither I referre the Reader. That caldron mentioned, 1 Sam. 2. was to another end, for therein the fleſh of the ſacrifices was ſod and boiled.

QUEST. II. Of the forme and faſhion of this Laver.

COncerning the forme and faſhion of this Laver, it is deſcribed before, queſt. 24. chap. 30. where it is reſolved that it ſtood upon a ſhanke or foot, and that the Prieſts did not waſh their hands and feet in it, but that the water out of the Laver was let out by certaine pipes, as is ſeene in fountaines, and therewith the Prieſts waſhed.

Gallaſius ſetteth downe another forme: deſcribing the Laver like unto a great bowle or baſon, ſtanding upon a ſquare frame, with bars and rings on the ſides, wherewith it was carried. But this forme is inconvenient: 1. Becauſe they could not come by the water, the Laver ſtanding upon the frame, and it having no other feet of it owne, it could not ſtand of it ſelfe to hold water. 2. Neither is it like, it being a great maſſie and weightie veſſell, that it was carried by bars on the Levites ſhoulders. 3. And if it had had any ſuch bars and rings, they ſhould not have beene omitted in the deſcription: as the Arke, Table of ſhew bread, the brazen Altar, and Altar of incenſe, are ſet forth with their bars.

QUEST. III. How the brazen Laver is ſaid to be made of the womens looking-glaſſes.

HE made the Laver of the glaſſes. 1. Cajetan thinketh, that the Laver was not made of the womens looking-glaſſes: but that the Laver is for the ſmoothneſſe and brightneſſe, compared to looking-glaſſes, wherein the women might ſee themſelves. And ſo he readeth the text thus, He made the Laver of braſſe, in glaſſes: for ſo the prepoſition ב, beth ſignifieth. Herein Marbachius alſo concurreth with Cajetan.

Contra. 1. By the ſame reaſon the brazen Altar, which was covered with bright and poliſhed braſſe, might be ſaid to be made of glaſſes. 2. To what end ſhould the women behold themſelves in the Laver, as in a glaſſe: they which came of a religious devotion had no minde to tricke up themſelves there. 3. The prepoſition ב, beth, ſometime is taken for ex, of, as chap. 35. 35. to worke all manner of worke in blue ſilke, &c. that is, of blue ſilke, &c.

2. Some thinke that the women brought their looking-glaſſes, and they were ſet by the work-men into the brazen Laver: wherein the Prieſts as they waſhed might ſee whether any ſpot remained on them ſtill, Oleaſter. Lyran. Pellican. Lippom. But this had beene verie inconvenient to hang or ſet in glaſſes, where they waſhed: neither needed they to ſpie in the glaſſe, the ſpots of their hands and feet, which were alwaye in their eye.

3. Oſiander giveth this interpretation: bemareth, in the viſion and ſight of the women was the Laver of braſſe, which were to worſhip at the doore of the Tabernacle. But this had beene then added to ſmall purpose, He made the Laver in the sight, &c. and beside, the word maroth, which commeth of raah, to see, is by the most Interpreters translated glasses, L. S. C. A. P. V.

4. Some think that the Laver was made of the womens glasse-cases, which were of brasse, R. Salom. Tostat. qu. 4. But the text saith they were made of the glasses themselves, which were divers from the cases.

5. Therefore the truth is, that the brazen Laver was indeed made of the womens looking-glasses, which R. Abraham saith were made some of brasse, some of glasse, whereat the Jewish women did use to attire themselves: now these devout women renuntiant deliciis suis, doe leave their toyes, Gallas. and offer these glasses for the use of the Tabernacle; of these brazen or steele glasses was the Laver made, Iun.

QUEST. IV. How the women are said to watch at the doore of the Tabernacle.

Vers. 8. OF the women that assembled, &c. the word is tzaba, which signifieth to assemble as an armie. 1. R. Salom. hath this conceit, that these women were those which in Egypt, when their husbands were kept under with labour, that they were unlustie for procreation, did attire and make themselves handsome by their glasses, thereby to allure their husbands to have company with them, not for lust, but procreations sake, by which meanes all that generation, which made a goodly host, were borne; and therefore they are said to lye as it were in warfare at the doore of the Tabernacle, because they were mothers of all the warriours. But beside, that this opinion is otherwise improbable, so many thousand women could not watch at once at the doore of the Tabernacle.

2. Oleaster thinketh they are so called here, and 1 Sam. 2. The women that watched or warfared, because they were the wives and women of those which went to war: but there were six hundred thousand men of war then in Israel: all their wives could not assemble together.

3. The Septuagint interpret it of them that fasted, the Chalde of them which came thither to pray, the Latine translateth, qua excubebant, which kept watch.

4. But the best interpretation is, of such women as came thither in troopes and companies, like unto an armie, and had devoted themselves to Gods service, leaving their vanities, offered their glasses wherein they had delighted, Iun. Gallas.

QUEST. V. Of the meaning of these words, the height in the breadth.

Vers. 18. THE height in the breadth was of five cubits. 1. The Latine Interpreter thus readeth, the height of five cubits: but here the word which signifieth breadth is omitted. 2. Some doe thus read, five cubits in height and breadth: so the Chalde, Septuagint, and Genevens. But seeing the breadth and height of the curtaine was all one, this had beene a superfluous addition in that sense. 3. Therefore it is better thus expounded, altitudo, qua ex latitudine sumitur, the height which is taken by the breadth, Vatab. Iun. So that it is an explanation, what is to bee counted the height; that which is the breadth of the curtaine lying, is the height of it standing, or hanging.

QUEST. VI. What ministerie of the Levites is here understood.

Vers. 21. WHich was appointed, &c. for the ministerie of the Levites, by the hand of Ithamar. 1. Some understand this of the appointing out of the worke by Ithamar as the chiefe, and the Levites under him, tanquam ratiocinia scribentibus, as writing and taking the account, Cajetan. But as Calvin well writeth, here Moses speaketh, Non tantum de fabrica, sed de perpetua conservatione ministerii, not only of the fabricke and framing of the Tabernacle, but of the perpetuall conservation and keeping of it, wherein consisted the ministerie and service of the Levites.

2. Tostatus by the Levites understandeth not only the inferiour sort, who were properly called Levites, but the Priests also. So likewise Iun. And Tostatus reason is, because not the Levites onely, but specially the Priests did minister in the Tabernacle, quest. 4. But Ithamar appointed not the Priests their offices, he was only set over the Levites, as the Gershonites and Merarites, to appoint them their services and offices, when the Tabernacle was to be removed, Numb. 4. 25, 28.

3. Therefore with Lyranus, Simlerus, and Osiander, by the Levites are better understood only the inferiour Levites beside the Priests, to whom by the hand of Ithamar, that is, by his appointment, the charge of these things was committed, when the Tabernacle was to be taken downe, or set up.

QUEST. VII. Whether the gold or silver only were given according to the number of the people.

Vers. 25. BUt the silver of them that were numbred, &c. That the silver only is to bee referred to them that were numbred, and not the gold, or other things which were offered, it may bee thus shewed. 1. They which were numbred were not charged to bring any gold, but silver. 2. The rich and poore, which went under the number, gave everie one alike, halfe a shekel a peece: but in their voluntarie offerings, some offered more, some lesse. 3. The offering of the halfe shekel was required of everie one, and never refused: but for the other voluntarie offerings, they were charged, chap. 36. to bring no more: the summe of an hundred talents, and of 1775. shekels just answereth to the number of 603550. men, counting for everie one halfe a shekel: for 603550. halfe shekels make 301775. shekels, that is, an hundred talents, whereof everie one contained 300. shekels, and 1775. shekels, Lyran. So that it is evident by this account, that not the gold, but silver onely was brought in, according to the number of the people, Tostat. qu. 5. So also Cajetan.

QUEST. VIII. When the people were first numbred.

1. THis numbring of the people was not made so soone, as Simlerus thinketh, in the 30. chapter: for that was onely the charge and commandement which God gave unto Moses in the mount, who was not then come downe: and it is not like that Moses numbred the people at his first comming downe, because the Lord was offended with them, and they were not yet reconciled.

2. Therefore

2. Therefore it is more probable, that this ſumme of the people was not taken, till Moſes began the worke of the Tabernacle: for it was to that end, that the people ſhould contribute toward the worke thereof. Now Moſes did not take this worke in hand till his ſecond comming downe from God; where hee had ſtayed twice fortie dayes: hee went up in the beginning of the third moneth, and came downe about the middeſt of the fourth moneth, which anſwereth to our June: and then ſtaying a few dayes in the camp, he went up againe and remained fortie other dayes with the Lord, and ſo came downe about the beginning of the ſixth moneth, which is Auguſt, and then this collection was made.

QUEST. IX. Whether this numbring of the people, and that Numb. 1. were the ſame.

NOw whereas the people were againe numbred, Numb. 1. ſome take that numbring of the people and this for all one, becauſe the verie ſame ſumme of the people is there taken 603550. Numb. 1.46. which is collected here. But that is no good argument, for that numbring of the people following not many moneths after this, and agreeing in the ſame number, ſheweth that there was no decay among the people all this time.

2. Wherefore it is more like, that Moſes there numbred the people againe, Simler. as may appeare by the divers time: for this numbring of the people was in the firſt yeare of their departure out of Egypt, becauſe the Tabernacle was ſet up the firſt day of the firſt moneth in the ſecond yeare, chap. 40. 17. and the people were numbred before that, to contribute to the Tabernacle. But that other account of the people was on the firſt day of the ſecond moneth, in the ſecond yeare of their comming out of Egypt, Numb. 1.1. Toſtatus qu. 6.

QUEST. X. How many pound weight a talent had, and how many ſicles went to a pound.

Verſ. 25. The ſilver was an hundred talents. Which made ſix hundred thouſand halfe ſicles, anſwerable to the ſix hundred thouſand that were numbred, for everie one halfe a ſicle, that is, three hundred thouſand ſicles: ſo that it is evident out of this place, that a talent contained three thouſand ſicles: an hundred talents making three hundred thouſand ſicles.

1. Ioſephus valueth the talent of the Sanctuarie at an hundred pound, which they call mina: by which account there muſt be allowed thirtie ſicles unto a pound, which maketh fifteene ounces: for there muſt not be above three thouſand ſicles in a talent. Lib. 3. de antiq. cap. 7.

2. Oleaſter maketh the talent of the Sanctuarie an hundred and twentie pound, double to the common talent: ſo alſo Iunius, and moſt Hebrewes, and hee alloweth an hundred and twentie ſicles to a pound: but by this reckoning we ſhall have above twelve thouſand ſicles in a talent, which muſt not be admitted.

3. Iunius putteth an hundred and twentie pound to the talent of the Sanctuarie, Annot. Exod. 25. and to everie pound he alloweth an hundred ſicles, Annot. Ezech. 45.12. but then there will be about twelve thouſand ſicles in a talent, whereas here there are reckoned but three thouſand.

4. The moſt allow ſixtie ſicles to a pound, grounding their opinion upon that place, Ezech. 45.12. where it is uſually tranſlated, the ſhekel ſhall be twentie gerahs: and twenty ſhekels, and five and twentie ſhekels, and fifteen ſhekels ſhall be your maneh, or pound, Ribera, Montanus, Geneveuſis, following David Kimhi. But there cannot goe ſo many ſhekels to a great talent, which is held to containe an hundred and twentie pound: for then we ſhall have above ſix thouſand ſicles in a talent: and beſide, ſixtie ſhekels make thirtie ounces, which both in the account of the Hebrewes and Greeks exceedeth the weight of a pound.

That place in Ezechiel proveth no ſuch thing: for to what end ſhould ſuch divers ſums be named, of 20.25.15. ſhekels, to make up the weight of the maneh, or pound: the meaning is, that all thoſe ſeverall peeces of coyne, ſome of twentie, ſome of twentie five, ſome fifteene ſhekels, and the pound it ſelfe ſhould be valued according to the ſhekel, containing twentie gerahs, Iun.

5. Montanus valueth the talent at a thouſand eight hundred ſicles, which make nine hundred ounces. But it is evident out of the text here, as is before ſhewed, that everie talent had three thouſand ſicles, which make a thouſand five hundred ounces. Lib. de menſur. ſacris de chicar.

6. Vatablus ſetteth the uſuall and common pound at ſixtie ſicles, Annot. Ezech. 45.12. but the pound of the Sanctuarie hee taketh to have contained more. Montanus thinketh otherwiſe, that the uſuall pound weighed but twentie five ſicles, and that the great pound contained ſixtie ſicles. But to put ſixtie ſicles, which make thirtie ounces to a pound, cannot be ſhewed (as I thinke) to have beene uſed in any countrey. Montan. ibid. de mineb.

7. Lyranus finding ſo much uncertaintie in the juſt valuation of the talent, leaveth it as a thing doubtfull to be determined; becauſe the waights of gold and ſilver doe much varie in continuance of time. Lyran. in Exod. 25.39.

8. Simlerus will have the talent either to containe ſixtie pound, and everie pound fiftie ſicles, or the talent to be valued at fiftie, and everie pound at ſixtie ounces, and ſo the talent ſhall containe in all three thouſand ſicles: but, as it is alleaged before, I cannot finde amongſt the divers weights, which have been, and are uſed in divers places, that any pound was ſet at thirtie ounces: there is the mina Alexandrina, the pound of Alexandria, which weighed twentie ounces: mina Ptolemaica, the pound of Ptolemais, which had eighteene ounces; mina Medica, the Phyſitians or Apothecaries pound, at ſixteene ounces; and the uſuall Attike pound, which contained an hundred drachmaes, whereof eight goe to an ounce, which make twelve ounces and an halfe, but none of theſe reach unto thirtie ounces.

9. Wherefore before the reſt I preferre the opinion of R. Salom. who alloweth unto the talent of the Sanctuarie an hundred and twentie pound, that is, a full or large hundred: for the word chicar, which we tranſlate a talent, Hebræi dicunt centenarium, the Hebrewes call an hundred weight, Lyran. And unto everie pound he giveth 25. ſicles, and no more, which make twelve ounces and an halfe, the juſt Romane pound. And ſo Montanus thinketh, that the uſuall pound contained an hundred drachmæ, or zuzim, which was the fourth part of a ſicle, and the eighth part of an ounce. So alſo the Chalde for the fourth part of an ounce, read zuzim, 1 *Sam.*9.8. And thus in a juſt account, reckoning 25. ſicles to a pound, and the talent at an hundred and twentie pound, there will be found in everie talent three thouſand ſicles.

way

The greateſt objection againſt this account is this, becauſe where it is ſaid, 1 *King.*10.17. That three pound of gold went to a ſhield: in another place, 2 *Chron.*9.16, three hundred ſhekels of gold are ſaid, to go unto a ſhield: by comparing of which places, Iunius doth confidently inferre, that a pound called in Hebrew maneh, did containe an hundred ſhekels.

Annot. in Ezech. 45.12. To this objection three anſwers may be made. 1. Vatablus ſeemeth to thinke, that there were divers kindes of weights, the leſſe at ſixtie ounces, and the greater which contained more: but beſide, that it is not like, that divers weights and meaſures were allowed among the Iſraelites, which the Wiſeman condemneth, ſaying, That divers weights and meaſures were an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 20.10. There is no reaſon why theſe ſhields being made for civill and prophane uſes, and were laid up not in the Temple, but in Salomons houſe in Lebanon, ſhould be accounted to bee made after the great weight of the Sanctuarie.

2. Vatablus hath another anſwer beſide, that the three hundred peeces of gold were in value, not in weight three pound of gold: ſo that in one place the weight is ſpoken of, in the other the valuation: the like difference is to be ſeene in our ſilver coyne: for a pound in value and eſtimation is twentie ſhillings, but in weight there goeth thrice ſo much to a pound.

3. It may further alſo be anſwered, that whereas the word ſhekel is not in the originall, but is inſerted by way of interpretation, as well ſome other peece may be underſtood, as the drachma, the dram, called in Hebrew drachemonim, *Nehem.*7.72. not much unlike in ſound to the Greeke and Latine word: the Syrian Tranſlator calleth it zuz, Luke 15. 8. and ſo the Chalde Paraphraſt, as is ſhewed before, it was equall in weight and value to the Romane denaire, or penny, an hundred of them juſt made a pound, called an hundred denarii, or penny, *Matth.*18.28. Iun. I ſee no inconvenience why the word drachma, being an uſuall peece of gold, ſhould not rather bee ſupplyed, than the ſicle which was a coyne of ſilver onely, as thinketh Montanus.

4. And further, it may be thus objected, that if an hundred ſhekels went to a pound, as Iunius taketh it, how can his other opinion ſtand, in allowing and hundred and twentie pound to the talent? for then the ſumme of ſicles in a talent will amount to twelve thouſand, contrarie to Moſes account here, who onely giveth unto the talent three thouſand ſicles. If any better anſwer may bee found out, to reconcile thoſe places, I will willingly embrace it, in the meane time I doe reſt in this. And whereas queſt.47. chap.25. I ſeemed to encline to their opinion, who put ſixtie ſicles to the pound, I now upon the reaſons before alleaged, doe rather ſubſcribe unto R. Salom. with others, that the minah or pound had but 25. ſicles, becauſe otherwiſe counting the great talent at an hundred and twentie pound, as the moſt doe ſet it, Iunius, Oleaſter, Vatablus, with others: wee ſhall not finde out the juſt ſumme of three thouſand ſicles, which Moſes here alloweth to the talent.

QUEST. X. The ſum of the gold and ſilver offered to the Tabernacle, as it is valued with mony now currant.

THe ſum then of the gold and ſilver which was here offered toward the worke of the Sanctuarie was this, as it is rated with money now currant in other places. Georgius Agricola valueth the talent of gold at 22928. Hungarian peeces of gold: ſo that 25. talents will make 664912. Hungarian peeces: and 730. ſicles will amount to 5579. Hungarians: all the ſum of gold of Hungarian money is 670491. the hundred talents of ſilver, will ariſe to 203600. peeces of Hungarian gold, ex Simler. Which together with the valuation of the braſſe, which is ſet at 2036. Hungarian peeces will make eight tun of gold: Pelargus, Marbachius ſetteth the whole ſum at five tun of gold and an halfe. So alſo Oſiander.

Iunius ſummeth the gold, which was 29. talents, and 730. ſhekels, which make ſo many halfe ounces, 360450. dollars, counting the dollar at an ounce: the ſilver which was an hundred talents, and 1775. ſhekels amounteth in his account to 192887. dollars.

Oſiander thus eſtimateth the gold, 145. Rhene peeces of gold make a pound: ſo that the whole ſum of gold here named, will riſe to 299235. Rhene peeces of gold: and the ſilver he reckoneth at 149887. dollars. But as Iunius exceedeth in his reckoning, ſo Oſiander commeth ſhort: for 301775. ſhekels, which is the ſumme of the contribution ſilver, make 150887. that is, halfe ſo many dollars or ounces, and halfe a ſhekel.

But according to the valuation of our Engliſh money: the ſumme of gold, which is 29. talents, 730. ſhekels, counting the talent at an hundred and twentie pound, and 25. ſhekels to a pound, will make 3509. pound weight of gold, and five ſhekels. And a pound of gold, counting it at twelve ounces, and an ounce of gold ſet but at fiftie ſhillings, will make thirtie pound of ſterling money, the whole ſumme will amount to above an hundred thouſand pound ſterling. And the ſumme of ſilver which maketh 301775. ſhekels, that is 150887. dollars or ounces of ſilver, at five ſhillings the ounce, will ariſe to thirtie five thouſand, foure hundred ſeventie and odde pounds.

QUEST. XI. What things were made of ſilver.

Verſ.27. THere were an hundred talents of ſilver to caſt the ſockets of the Sanctuarie. 1. The ſockets were in all an hundred: for everie boord had two ſockets, the boords were twentie on each ſide, and eight in the weſt end, all which had 96. ſockets: then the foure pillars which were ſet before the moſt holy place, whereon hanged the firſt veile, had foure ſilver ſockets or footſtals, which make up an hundred. Taſtanus here is much deceived, who ſaith there wanted ſilver of this contribution money, to make the ſockets for the five pillars in the entrance of the Tabernacle, queſt. 6. for their ſockets were of braſſe, not of ſilver, chap. 26. 37. 2. Beſide, the Latine Tranſlator is here deceived, who ſaith, that of the 1775. ſhekels of ſilver, fecit capita columnarum, hee made the heads of the pillars: but if the heads of the pillars, which were in all ſixtie on the ſides and ends of the outward Court had beene of ſilver, this ſum of ſilver would not have ſufficed; for the heads would have required as much ſilver as the ſockets: they were then the hookes only and knops of the pillars which were made of ſilver, not the heads which might notwithſtanding be covered with thin plates of ſilver, as is before ſhewed, chap. 27. queſt. 15.

ſockets

QUEST. XII. Of the quantitie of braſſe which was offered.

Verſ. 29. ALL the braſſe of the offering was ſeventie talents, and two thouſand foure hundred ſhekels, &c. 1. The Septuagint here readeth corruptly, three hundred and ſeventie talents, where ſeventie talents are onely mentioned in the originall. 2. As great an errour is committed in the vulgar Latine tranſlation, by not right diſtinguiſhing of the words, as Cajetan well obſerveth: for whereas the words ſtand thus in the originall, ſeventie talents, and two thouſand, &c. the Latine text thus readeth, talents ſeventie two thouſand, whereas talents in the Hebrew is after ſeventie, and there is a diſtinction at talents, which doth diſtinguiſh it from two thouſand following, which muſt be referred to the ſicles: and this errour being ſo apparent, I wonder much that Montanus followeth this reading. 3. The braſſe was not ſo much as the ſilver: the reaſon whereof is, becauſe there were an hundred ſockets of the pillars and boords which were made of ſo many talents of ſilver: but of the braſſe ſixtie five ſockets only were made; for ſo many pillars there were, five ſtood in the entrance of the Tabernacle, and ſixtie compaſſed the outward Court, twentie on each ſide, and at each end ten. 4. Cajetan hereupon obſerveth well, that the pillars were of wood, not of braſſe; for then a greater maſſe of braſſe ſhould have beene required toward the making of them.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. God will have order in his Church.

Verſ. 9. FInally he made the Court, &c. The three parts of the Tabernacle, the outward Court, into the which the people were admitted; and the Sanctuarie, where the Prieſts only miniſtred; and the moſt holy place, into the which only the high Prieſt entred, doe ſhew that God would have order obſerved in his Church. Chriſt alone is he that hath opened a way into the moſt holy place for us: inſtead of the Prieſts he hath conſtituted Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, Paſtors: and the large outward Court ſignifieth the Church and Congregation of the faithfull, Simlerus. And ſo as the Apoſtle ſaith, God is not the author of confuſion, but of peace, 1 Cor. 14. 33.

2. Doct. Our knowledge is not perfect here.

THe drawing of a veile before the moſt holy place, ſheweth that our knowledge is not perfect here: but that when this veile is removed, and we are entred into the moſt holy place of heaven, then ſhall we know as we are knowne, but now we ſee in a glaſſe, 1 Cor. 13. 12. Simler.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Of the difference of the Law and Goſpell, whether they differ in matter and ſubſtance.

BEcauſe the outward Court, and other parts of the Tabernacle, were figures of the new Teſtament under Chriſt, Marbachius here taketh in hand, to ſhew the difference betweene the old Teſtament and the new, and that in three reſpects, as the word Teſtament is diverſly taken.

1. The Teſtament firſt ſignifieth the covenant and league which God maketh with his people, to bee their God, and they to be his people: wherein the new and old Teſtament doe much differ. 1. The one was given by Moſes, the other by Chriſt. 2. The one was propounded upon condition of their obedience, if they kept the Law, the new Teſtament requireth faith and beleefe. 3. That was conſecrated by the bloud of beaſts; but the new Teſtament is confirmed by the bloud of Chriſt. 4. That had but types and ceremonies, which are now aboliſhed: the new Teſtament hath the verie body and ſubſtance. 5. The one was peculiar to the Iſraelites only, the other is generall to all beleevers.

2. The old Teſtament and the new are diſtinguiſhed in time: that was before the comming of Chriſt, the new Teſtament comprehendeth the time ſince. And ſo they differ, modo patefactionis & revelationis, in the manner and meaſure of revelation and opening Gods will: all things are more plainly opened in the new Teſtament.

3. The old Teſtament is taken for the Propheticall writings, the new for the Apoſtolicall: and ſo they differ, becauſe the old receiveth light of the new, and cannot well be underſtood without it.

Hitherto Marbachius proceedeth well: but yet he addeth thus much further, that the new Teſtament and the old differ in ſubſtance and matter, becauſe they have divers and contrarie effects, and hee findeth fault with them, which affirme that there is the ſame ſubſtance of their Sacraments and ours.

Contra. 1. The divers and contrarie effects, as becauſe the Law worketh terrour, the Goſpell comfort, prove not a diverſitie of ſubſtance: the Sunne worketh contrarie effects, it hardeneth the clay, and mollifieth the wax, yet the ſubſtance is the ſame: the difference of the worke is in the divers nature of the things: ſo the Law worketh terrour in reſpect of the infirmitie and weakneſſe of our fleſh: the Goſpell bringeth comfort, our hearts being mollified by the Spirit. 2. Chriſt is the end of the Law, and the Law is a ſchoole-maſter to bring us unto Chriſt: therfore the matter and ſubſtance is the ſame, but the manner, condition and qualities are divers. 3. Saint Paul sheweth, that Christ was the substance of their Sacraments, as he is of ours: They did all eat the same spirituall meat with us, 1 Cor. 10. 3. yet our Sacraments doe after a more lively manner exhibit Christ, than he was represented in the Legall Sacraments.

condition

6. Morall observations:

1. Observ. They that truly turne unto God, must forsake their vaine delights.

Vers. 8. HE made the laver of the glasses of the women. These devout women are content to leave their vaine toies, their looking-glasses and other such delights, and now resigne themselves wholly unto Gods service, and thinke nothing too good to bestow upon the same. So they which are truly converted unto God will forsake their vanities, wherein they before delighted: as Zacheus left his unconscionable and deceitfull trade, wherein he had gathered much by extortion, and other fraudulent meanes, Luke 19.

2. Observ. We must be liberall toward the maintenance of Gods service.

Vers. 25. THe silver was an hundred talents, &c. The great liberalitie of the Israelites is here commended, which gave such a great masse of silver and gold toward the building of the Tabernacle, which teacheth us not to bee sparing or close handed, in giving toward the maintenance of Gods house, service, and servants, Simler. Remembring what the Apostle saith, He that soweth sparingly, shall reape sparingly, and he that soweth liberally, shall reape also liberally. 2 Cor. 9. 6.

CHAP. XXXIX.

1. The Method and Argument.

IN this chapter: 1. A rehearsall is made of the vestures and garments of the Priests which were made by the work-men, as, 1. The Ephod, with the things thereunto belonging, vers. 8. 2. The brest-plate, with the parts and ornament, vers. 22. 3. Then the robe of the Ephod with the bels, vers. 27. 4. Then the coats, miter, bonets, girdles, vers. 30. 5. Lastly the golden plate, vers. 30.

2. Then it is shewed how all these things were exhibited to Moses, which the work-men had made, vers. 42. and how Moses approved them, vers. 43.

2. The divers readings.

For the differences in the translation, the Reader likewise must have recourse here to the 29. chapter, wherewith this chapter agreeth both in order, and in the verie words.

3. The questions discussed.

COncerning the severall garments which were made for the high Priest and for the inferior Priests, the description, forme, and fashion of them, with the mysticall signification, because they are handled before at large, chap. 28. thither I referre the studious Reader. Some questions here follow out of the second part of this chapter.

QUEST. I. At what time the worke of the Tabernacle began, and when it was finished.

Vers. 32. THus was all the worke of the Tabernacle, &c. finished. 1. It is evident that the Tabernacle was all finished, and made an end of in the first yeare of Israels departure out of Egypt, because it was set up in the first day of the first moneth of the second yeare, chap. 40. 17. all the worke then was dispatched before it could be set up. 2. The time also may by conjecture be gathered, when this work began, which was at Moses second comming downe from the mount, in the end of the fifth moneth, which was July, or in the beginning of the sixth moneth, namely, August. As further may bee shewed thus: In the beginning of the third moneth, about the fourth day of the moneth, was the Law delivered in mount Sinai, after that Moses was twice fortie dayes with the Lord, which make above two moneths and an halfe, and some dayes Moses spent among the people before his second going up, when he caused the golden Calfe to be broken in peeces, and burned, and removed his Tabernacle without the host, and caused the people to put off their best raiment, and to shew their sorrow: so that all this could not bee done with Moses staying twice with the Lord in the mount, in lesse than three moneths: namely, the third, fourth, and fifth. Then as soone as Moses was come downe with the second tables, he called all the people together, and charged them with all which the Lord had commanded him; and then immediately they began to worke upon the Tabernacle. To this effect Tostat. qu. 3.

3. So that the whole time which was spent in the making of the Tabernacle, was the space of seven moneths, as Tostatus thinketh: they began in the beginning of the sixth moneth, and finished in the end of the twelfth. But Vatablus holdeth that Moses came downe from the mount the second time, about the tenth day of Tisri, which answereth to our September, and then in the Autumne he thinketh the Tabernacle began to be made. And this seemeth to be the more probable, for Tostatus to bring Moses second comming downe to the end of the fifth, or the beginning of the sixth moneth, maketh

but

but two or three dayes betweene Moses first comming downe, which was, as hee thinketh, about the seventeenth day of the fourth moneth, namely June, and his going up, which hee gheſſeth to have beene upon the eighteenth day, and then hee ſtayed fortie dayes more to the end of July, or the beginning of Auguſt the ſixth moneth.

But all that which is rehearſed to have beene done in the one and thirtieth Chapter, which came betweene his firſt comming downe, and his ſecond going up, as the peoples mourning in putting away their beſt apparrell, the removing of the Tabernacle by Moſes without the hoſt, his uſuall conference with God in that Tabernacle: all theſe things could not be done in the ſpace of two or three dayes, leſſe cannot be well allowed than halfe a moneth: ſo that it was in all likelihood toward the end of the ſixth, or beginning of the ſeventh moneth, when Moſes came downe; and as ſoone as he came downe, he began the worke of the Tabernacle.

4. The place alſo is evident, where the Tabernacle was made and ſet up, which was while they encamped about mount Sinai, where they lay almoſt a whole yeare: for thither they came in the beginning of the third moneth, in the firſt yeare, and departed thence on the twentieth day of the ſecond moneth, in the ſecond yeare, Numb. 10. 11.

5. They then are deceived, which thinke the Tabernacle to have beene made before Moſes ſecond going up unto the Lord: of which opinion are Rupertus and Calvin: for it is not like, if it had beene finiſhed ſo long before, that Moſes would have deferred the ſetting of it up ſix or ſeven moneths. See more hereof, queſt. 12. chap. 33. with other reaſons there alleaged againſt their opinion.

QUEST. II. Why they brought their worke to Moſes.

Verſ. 33. AFterward they brought the Tabernacle to Moſes. 1. Becauſe fuit quaſi ſequeſter, &c. he was as a Mediator between God and his people. And therefore it was fit, that as he had received the commandement from God, and given them direction, ſo hee ſhould have the approbation of the worke, Simler. 2. Beſide, the people had choſen him themſelves to goe between the Lord and them, and therefore hee was meet to bee an Arbiter and Judge in theſe things. 3. And the people in offering their worke to the judgement and approbation of Moſes, therein ſhew their obedience to Gods commandement, and their faithfull diligence, in performing all things as the Lord had commanded them.

QUEST. III. How Moſes is ſaid to have bleſſed them.

Verſ. 43. AND Moſes bleſſed them. 1. Toſtatus referreth this not unto the perſons that wrought in the Tabernacle, and brought theſe things but unto the things themſelves, which hee bleſſed, that is, as it were conſecrated and applyed unto the ſervice of God, queſt. 3. But the conſecration of theſe things followeth afterward. When hee had ſet up the Tabernacle, then Moſes anointed and ſanctified it, Numb. 7. 1. Neither is it like that Moſes ſeeing that they had done everie thing as the Lord commanded would diſmiſſe the people without a publike commendation of them, and an approbation of their worke.

2. Vatablus underſtandeth that Moſes bleſſed the people, yet he thus expoundeth it, laudavit eos, he praiſed and commended them: but to bleſſe is more than to praiſe or commend. 3. Gallaſius taketh it, pro gratiarum actione, for Moſes giving thankes unto God: as holy men uſed to give God the praiſe when they had finiſhed any great worke. But here is more ſignified than thankſgiving unto God: for Moſes bleſſed them. 4. Oſiander taketh it for Moſes prayer, whereby hee craved of God to beſtow upon them both ſpirituall and temporall bleſſings. 5. Simlerus ſo underſtandeth it, that Moſes hereby declared unto them, Deum eorum obſervantiam gratam habere, &c. that God accepted of their ſervice. 6. But as Calvin well noteth, whom Marbachius followeth: non fuit ſimplex precatio, ſed merces adiecta promiſſio, it was not ſimply a prayer, but alſo a promiſe of reward. Moſes aſſured them hereby, that God would recompence their faithfull ſervice. So alſo Pelargus.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. No will-worſhip is acceptable unto God.

Verſ. 1. THey made the holy garments for Aaron, as the Lord commanded. This clauſe Simlerus noteth to be repeated ſeven times; Pelargus, nine ſeverall times in this chapter: which ſheweth that the work-men did not ſwerve a jot from that direction, which Moſes gave them from the Lord: whereby all Gods ſervants are admoniſhed, ut ſe contineant intra limites verbi Dei, &c. that they containe themſelves within the limits of Gods word, and bring nothing into the ſervice of God of their owne invention, Simler. For this the Apoſtle calleth ἐθελοθρησκείαν, will-worſhip, or voluntarie religion, Col. 2. 23.

2. Doct. Of the union of the divine and humane nature of Chriſt, and the abundant graces conferred upon his humanitie.

ALL the holy garments for Aaron. Aaron was herein a type of our bleſſed Saviour, and theſe goodly and beautifull raiments did ſhadow forth thoſe heavenly graces, which were powred upon Chriſt beyond meaſure, in whom the fulneſſe of the Godhead dwelleth bodily, Coloſſ. 2. 9. by which uniting of the divine and humane nature, Chriſt as man was endued with plentifull and abundant grace. Here then two things are briefly to be explaned, the union of theſe two natures of Chriſt in one perſon, and the communication of theſe graces.

Concerning this bleſſed union: 1. The humane nature of Chriſt aſſumed not the divine, but the divine aſſumed and tooke unto it the humane nature: the divine nature of Chriſt was a perſon ſubſiſting of it ſelfe from all beginning in the union of the bleſſed Trinitie: the humane had no ſubſiſtence of it ſelfe, before it was so assumed, but as soone as it began to be, it was assumed into the unitie of the person of the Son of God: so that this humane nature consisting of body and soule, which Christ assumed, became the peculiar body and soule of the Sonne of God, as the Apostle saith, that God purchased the Church with his owne bloud, Acts 20.28. 2. But in this uniting of these two natures of Christ, we must take heed of two errours: 1. That by uniting them we imagine not either any of the natures to be absorpt or aboliſhed, or that there is a confusion of natures, as in the commixtion of water & honey, neither of them retaining the same name or nature, or that out of these two natures, a third commeth forth, compounded of them both, as in the commixtion of the elements. 2. Neither is this uniting to be too much extenuated: as to thinke the union to consist only in assistance, as the Angell stood by Peter, Act. 12. or onely in a certaine conjunction, as when two divers metals are put together: But they are so united, as that the properties of both natures remaine, and yet there is but one ὑποστάσις, one person subsisting of them both: like as the body and soule are united together, and the fire and red hot iron.

before

Concerning the communication of graces: 1. The divine nature received not any increase of grace, as it can have no imminution, being in it selfe most perfect and unchangeable. But the humane was perfited by this union, and received increase of gifts.

2. The graces communicated are either created and finite, or uncreated and infinite: the created and finite graces, as wisdome, knowledge, holinesse and the rest, are not in Christ, as he is man, the essentiall properties of the Deitie, but effects only thereof infused into Christs humane nature, being finite and created, as the humanitie it selfe was. 3. Yet they are given unto Christ without any limitation and measure, as in the Saints they are limited and given by measure. 4. These graces were not all at once in the highest perfection appearing in Christ, in the dayes of his flesh, but they received increase, because of the infirmities of the humane nature, which he assumed: as it is said, Luke 2.52. that Iesus increased in wisdome. But after Christ was glorified, they then shined in Christ in the greatest perfection.

Beside these finite and created gifts, there are other which are not finite, neither can bee referred to the first sort: as the universall dominion over all creatures, the power of remitting sinnes, of judging the world, adoration, vivification, infinite glorie: 1. These being peculiar to the divine nature, yet by vertue of this union are communicated even unto the man Christ, who is made heire of all things, and Judge of the world, and whose flesh giveth life.

2. But these divine gifts are not formally and essentially in the humane nature, nor as the first gifts, for this were to make the two natures equall, and to confound their properties.

3. Yet is it more than a verball communicating: for as Nazianzene saith, Talis est communicatio, qualis est unio; Such is the communication, as is the union. As the one is reall, though not essentiall, so is the other: like as in iron made red hot with fire, neither hath the iron lost its former qualities of coldnesse, blacknesse, which returne unto it againe; and yet it giveth light, heateth and burneth, not by any essentiall physicall qualitie infused into it, but by the reall union and conjunction of the fire: so the Godhead shineth, and worketh really in the humane nature of Christ.

4. The divine nature then of Christ worketh not now by it selfe alone, as before his incarnation, sed cum ea & per eam, &c. but with it, and by it, it exerciseth and sheweth it selfe. So the humane nature of Christ, est vivifica, omniscia, omnipotens, quickeneth, knoweth all things, is omnipotent, not formally and essentially by it selfe, τῷ εἶναι, in it owne being, as the Godhead doth, but τῷ ἔχειν, in having the divine nature inseperably united unto it, by the vertue whereof it doth all these things, even as the hot iron burneth and heateth by the vertue of the fire which is in it.

5. As before was shewed, that the gifts and graces conferred upon the humane nature of Christ, did not appeare in their perfection all at once: so this communion of these divine properties, did not wholly shew it selfe in the dayes of Christs flesh: for though the Godhead was united to the humanitie in the verie first conception, yet exhibuit operationem suam, it did somewhat restraine the operation thereof, because of the worke of our redemption: Divina natura in Christo quievit, ut humana mori posset; The divine nature did rest in Christ, that the humane might die.

6. But Christ after his ascension, is said to sit at the right hand of God, neither in respect of the divine nature, which was never absent from thence, nor yet as though his humane nature did not sit there before, seeing in the verie conception the humane nature was united to the divine: but because then the power and kingdome of Christ was made manifest to all the world, which before lay hid in him: the divine nature, plene operante, working now fully by the humane, & humana virtute illius omnia administrante, and the humane by vertue thereof administring all things. To this purpose Marbach.

But in this his declaration which I have abridged, somewhat must be qualified: for there is in Christ betweene his divine and humane nature, a communication reall and personall; the graces created and finite, are really communicated to Christs humanitie, as his wisdome, knowledge, holinesse: but the gifts which are infinite and peculiar unto God, as to be omnipotent, omnipresent, knowing all things, are imparted only personally: as the man Christ is omnipotent, omnipresent, and knoweth all things, but not the manhood of Christ: for our blessed Saviour himselfe, (that is, in his humanitie) knoweth not of the day and houre of his comming to judgement, Mark. 13.32. And this further is to be considered, that the manhood communicateth not any propertie to the Godhead in Christ really, for the divine nature receiveth nothing, but giveth all, but onely personally, and as we say, in concreto, not in abstracto, as Marie is called the mother of God Christ, not of his Godhead: and God suffered for us, but not the Godhead; but the Deitie of Christ communicateth to his humanitie, both really and personally.

5. Places of controversie.

1. Controv. Of the apish imitation of the priestly garments among the Heathen.

Vers. 1. They made the holy garments of Aaron. Gallasius heere noteth the superstitions of the Gentiles, which imitated in their idolatrous services, the glorious apparell of Aaron. As Numa King of the Romans, who raigned there 800. yeares after the giving of the Law, prescribed the like apparell to his Priests, as a pictured and wrought coat, with a plate of brasse, which the Priest did weare upon his breast, and a stately bonnet with a high top upon his head: which things either were received by imitation from the Hebrewes, or invented by Satan, to adulterate the rites and ceremonies instituted by God.

2. Controv. Of popish priestly apparell.

Simlerus by occasion of this place, sheweth the superstition of the Romanists in their priestly apparell: as Aaron had an Ephod, a robe, a linen coat, a bonet: so their Priests have an albe, a stoale, a delmatike, and their Bishops forked miters beside, and the Pope a triple crowne, imitating, yea rather exceeding Aarons coronet which was but a golden plate set upon his miter. And whereas all these were types and shadowes of the glorious priesthood of Christ: they, as though Christ were not yet come, doe retaine this typicall priestly apparell still: and as not contented that God hath given unto his Church, the true and perfect high Priest Christ Iesus, they set up one in his place to be his Vicar here in earth, and universall Bishop over the whole Church. Thus they rob Christ of his honour, deriving that unto themselves, which was fulfilled in Christ: converting the substance of Christs glorious priesthood, to a vaine earthly pompe, Simler.

Simlerus in the same place toucheth two other questions. 1. Whether Ministers are to be distinguished by any apparell, in their civill and ordinarie conversation. 2. Whether any peculiar kind of vesture is to be used in divine service.

3. Controv. Whether Ministers may be prescribed a fashion of civill apparell.

VPon the first question he determineth thus. 1. That in it selfe the garment is an indifferent thing: and that as the Apostle saith, The kingdome of God is not meat and drinke, Rom. 14. 17. so neither doth it consist in apparell. 2. The Priests under the Law were onely prescribed, what apparell they should weare in their Ministerie, not in their civill conversation. 3. So that it is not necessarie that Ministers should be discerned by their habit, but that it is indifferent in it selfe, for them to weare what kind of apparell they thinke good, so that these two inconveniences be avoided, that they neither exceed in the matter or fashion of their apparell, otherwise than becommeth the gravitie of their persons, and holines of their profession: nor yet place any superstition in their habit, as the Monkes and Friers did. 4. But where the Magistrate prescribeth an oder of apparell for comelinesse sake, because Christian religion taketh not away humane policies: omnino Magistratui parendum erit, the Magistrate must altogether be obeyed. 5. Yea if such a forme of garment be commanded by the Magistrate, as was used in poperie, being appointed only for a civill use, not for any religion, resistance is not to be made: for neither are all such things polluted, because they were used in poperie: and some things though used in poperie, yet were not by them invented. 6. But the chiefe care of the Magistrate ought to be, that Ministers be discerned from the people, non pileo, sed pietate, not by their cap, but by their pietie and integritie of life.

4. Controv. Whether a peculiar forme of Church garment should be prescribed and used.

COncerning the other question, whether a peculiar forme of garment should be prescribed for the publike Ministerie: first, none of any sound judgement, thinke any such thing to be necessarie: for the garment of it selfe is an indifferent thing, and the example of the Priests, which had their garments appointed them, doth not bind Ministers now under the Gospell: there are then two principall opinions hereof.

1. Some thinke that no peculiar garment ought at all to be prescribed for the publike Ministerie: because this was a legall observation, and the priestly garments were types of Christ, the bodie being then come, the types and figures should cease; and to keepe some of the legall ceremonies, should bind us unto all.

2. These were the inventions of Antichrist, therefore to be rejected.

3. The outward glorie of the vestiments, doth affect the eye of the beholders, and so hindreth their meditation.

Some affirme the contrarie, that where the Magistrate commandeth a set forme of vesture for the Church, he is to be obeyed. 1. Because of themselves garments are indifferent, and therefore such things must be borne with, lest other things more necessarie bee hindered.

2. This kind of Ecclesiasticall vesture must not simplie be condemned, for this were to judge some reformed Churches, which doe use them.

3. The Apostles for peace sake did suffer some ceremonies to remaine, therefore some thing must be yeelded unto, that the course of the Gospell be not hindered.

And to the former reasons they make this answer. 1. That some things were used among the Iewes, which still are retained, as the paying of tithes, neither are such things kept now as types and ceremonies, but as they have a profitable and seemely use: neither doth it follow, that if some things then used under the Law be now admitted, all the rest should.

2. Neither are all things instituted in poperie held to be impious: many things consecrated to idolatrie among the Heathen, were converted by the Christians to good uses.

3. If veſtures be of themſelves not impious, but indifferent; they whoſe minds are therby withdrawne are in fault themſelves, the thing is not to be blamed.

So Simlerus reſolution is this: he approveth rather their ſentence, which would not have ſuch things revived in the Church, ſed Apoſtolicam ſimplicitatem retinendam dicunt, but hold rather the Apoſtolike ſimplicitie to be retained. But if the Magiſtrate do urge ſuch things, then he would have it done with theſe limitations: 1. That it be ad commoditatem & concordiam Eccleſiæ, for the commoditie and concord of the Church. 2. Vt ſpectetur decorum, that it be decent and comely. 3. That the minds of the weake bee not offended with ſuch things. 4. That it may be granted to the Miniſters, to inſtruct the people concerning ſuch things. 5. That ſpeciall care be had, ne ſuperſtitio obtrudatur Eccleſiæ, that ſuperſtition be not brought into the Church. 6. That chiefely the true comelines of the Church bee reſpected, which conſiſteth not in ſerico & auro, ſed ædificatione, in ſilke and gold, but in edifying. To this purpoſe, Simlerus.

6. Morall obſervations:

1. Obſerv. The praiſe of God to be ſought, not of men.

Verſ. 33. They brought the Tabernacle to Moſes. As theſe workmen endevoured to approve their worke unto Moſes, ſo we ſhould moſt of all ſeeke to have the approbation of Chriſt. Some propound unto themſelves vaine glorie, as the Phariſies in giving almes; ſome profit, as Iudas: but we ſhould ſeeke the praiſe and approbation of God, Simler. As the Apoſtle ſaith, Hee that praiſeth himſelfe is not allowed, but hee whom God praiſeth, 2. Corinth. 10. 18.

2. Obſerv. God approveth cheerfull obedience in his ſervice.

Verſ. 42. According to every point that the Lord had commanded, &c. ſo the children of Iſrael made, &c. The ſingular obedience of the workmen of the Tabernacle, may bee ſhame unto Chriſtians, that are ſo negligent in Gods ſervice, Simler. We ſhould ſay with the Prophet David, One thing have I deſired of the Lord, that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the daies of my life, Pſal. 27. 4.

3. Obſerv. They which take from the Church are accurſed.

Verſ. 43. Moſes bleſſed them. As well the workmen, as thoſe that offered. If ſuch be bleſſed which brought unto the Tabernacle, then they which doe not onely bring nothing, but take away from the Church, ſuch things as have been beſtowed thereon, are accurſed, Marbach. As Achan was that ſtole the wedge of gold, which ſhould have gone to the Lords treaſurie, Ioſh. 6. 19.

Chap. XL.

1. The Method and Argument.

Hitherto from the 35. chapter is ſet forth the framing and working of the Tabernacle, and the things thereunto belonging: now in this chapter, the erection of the Tabernacle is deſcribed, with the diſpoſing of everie part thereof, and the Lords approbation: there are three parts of the Chapter.

1. The Lord giveth Moſes commandement, and direction what he ſhould doe. 1. He is bid to erect the Tabernacle, and to bring in every thing thereunto belonging, to verſ. 8. 2. Hee is commanded to conſecrate both the Tabernacle, and the things therein, with oyle, verſ. 12. 3. Then to conſecrate Aaron, and his ſonnes, to verſ. 15.

2. Then the execution followeth: 1. Moſes ſetteth up the Tabernacle, with the boords and coverings, verſ. 18, 19. 2. He bringeth in ſuch things as were to be placed in the moſt holy place, verſ. 20, 21. then hee diſpoſeth thoſe things, which belonged to the outward part of the Sanctuarie, as the table of ſhew bread, the candleſticke, the golden Altar, to verſ. 27. 3. He placeth ſuch things as were in the outward Court, the braſen Altar, and the Laver, ſhewing the uſe thereof, to verſ. 33. And laſtly hee reareth up the outward Court round about, verſ. 33.

3. The Lords approbation followeth, which was partly by an extraordinarie ſigne, the cloud filled the Temple, ſo that Moſes could not enter, verſ. 34. partly by an ordinarie, the aſcending, and going of the cloud before them, verſ. 35, 36, 38.

2. The divers readings.

L. Verſ. 1. The Lord had ſpoken, I. better than, then the Lord ſpake, &c. B.G. cum cæter. for the Lord did not ſpeake to Moſes upon the firſt day of the moneth, but before, that he ſhould begin to ſet it up then.

A.P.V.G. Verſ. 2. In the day of the firſt moneth, even the firſt of the moneth, G.A.P.V. better than, in the firſt day of the firſt moneth, B. or, the firſt moneth, the firſt day of the moneth, L.C. or, in one of the firſt moneth, in the firſt day of the moneth, S. For in theſe readings the order of the words in the originall is not kept: in the ſeaſon of the firſt moneth, I. but the word is, bejom, in the day of the firſt moneth.

3. The

3. The questions discussed.

QUEST. I. When the Lord spake unto Moses to set up the Tabernacle.

Then the Lord spake, &c. 1. The Lord spake not to Moses, as some thinke, upon the first day of the first moneth, because the Lord biddeth him upon that day to set it up: the Lord would have said, to day thou shalt set it up, if he had spoken to Moses the same day, and not have set him the day and moneth: Moses indeed would have omitted no time after the Tabernacle was finished: yet that sheweth not, that presently upon the Lords commandement he went about it, for he was to expect the time, which the Lord had limited: where no time is set, there obedience is presently required.

2. Neither yet is it like, that the Lord thus spake unto Moses, the next day before, for then he would have said, to morrow shalt thou set up the Tabernacle: the day and moneth needed not to be expressed.

3. Wherefore it is more probable, that the Lord knowing what time all the worke of the Tabernacle should be finished, spake unto Moses some few daies before, that upon the first day of the first moneth he should begin to set up the Tabernacle, Tostat. qu. 1.

QUEST. II. Why so often rehearsall is made of the Tabernacle and the parts thereof.

Vers. 3. How shalt put therein the Arke of the Testimonie, &c. 1. Here againe in this chapter are rehearsed in order the things, as they should be ordered and placed in the Tabernacle. The most Interpreters omit these six last chapters, as Procopius, Ferus, Borrhaius with other, because they containe but a rehearsall of the things before described in the former chapters. But seeing the Spirit of God vouchsafed so often to make mention of the same things, we must not take this repetition to be unnecessarie, for there is nothing in the Scripture superfluous, Simler. 2. And for this cause is this rehearsall made, because the things before were confusedly spoken of, but now they are set downe in their order, how everie thing shall be placed, Iun. Analys. 3. And another reason of the repetition may be this: here the instruments of the Tabernacle are described together with the use: as the table with the bread, the candlesticke with the lampes, the Laver with water: because presently upon the erection of the Tabernacle, all these things were to be ministred in, at the consecration of the Priest, Tostat. qu. 3. 4. It was necessarie also, that these things should be rehearsed: Ut tempus erectionis Tabernaculi, & usus illius diceretur à Deo; That both the time of erecting the Tabernacle, and the use thereof should be (knowne and) said to be of God, Cajetan.

QUEST. III. Why all the parts of the Tabernacle are not said to be alike sanctified.

Vers. 9. That it may be holy. 1. Heere are divers degrees of sanctifying noted: it is said of the brasen Laver only, thou shalt sanctifie it, of the Tabernacle, thou shalt sanctifie it, and it shall be holy: but of the Altar it is said, thou shalt sanctifie it, and it shall be most holy: because it was not onely sanctified in it self to holy uses, but it sanctified other things, as the sacrifices which were laid thereupon, Cajetan. 2. By this difference is signified the divers degrees of sanctification in the Church: Christ is the Altar most holy, by whom all his members are sanctified: for their sake he sanctified himselfe upon the Altar of the crosse: as our blessed Saviour himselfe saith, For their sakes sanctifie I my selfe, that they may be sanctified through the truth, Ioh. 17. 19. the Church now is sanctified, but it shall not be perfectly holy, till it be admitted into the heavenly sanctuarie, Simler.

QUEST. IIII. Whether it be lawfull for one to sue for a Bishopricke, or benefice, or other Ecclesiasticall preferment.

Vers. 12. And thou shalt bring Aaron, and his sonnes. Tostatus heere moveth a question, whether it be lawfull to seeke or desire any office or calling of the Church. Wherein his resolution is this: 1. It must be considered whether the place which is sued for, be onus vel honor, a place of burthen, and labour, or of honor: of the first, it is not unlawfull for one to offer himselfe, as to take Orders, so he be not unfit thereunto, because to be admitted to Orders, simplie is a place of labour: but to sue for a Bishopricke or a benefice, because the one hath honour and profit annexed, the other maintenance and living, he holdeth it to be a deadly sinne. And therefore it was the old use in the consecration of Bishops, to aske of him that was consecrated, utrum velit Episcopatum; whether he would have a Bishoprike: who was twice to say, nay: but if any such desired a Bishopricke, induceret illum ad mentiendum, he that asked such question should enduce him to lie. Thus farre Tostatus proceedeth well.

2. But whereas that place of the Apostle will be objected, If any man desireth the office of a Bishop, he desireth a good worke, 1 Tim. 3. 1. he answereth, he desireth indeed bonum opus a good worke, but not bene, he desireth it not well: whereas the Apostle in these words, as Hierom expoundeth them, Ad operis desiderium, non ad honoris ambitum provocat, doth rather provoke and stir up unto the desire of the work, not ambitiously to seek the honour, &c. The Apostle then in these words reprehendeth not, but alloweth their desire, which affect the callings of the Church, rather, prodesse quam praesse, to profit others than to rule, as Augustine saith, Epist. 204. ad Donatum.

3. Wherefore, this further may be added, that in seeking or desiring the places and offices of the Church, there are two extremes to be shunned, the one was the fault of former times, when they which otherwise were well qualified, and enabled for Ecclesiasticall functions, did altogether decline them, and utterly refused to take that calling upon them: as one Arsenius, when he should have been ordained a Presbyter, cut off one of his eares, and threatned, if they would not let him alone, to cut out his tongue, to make himselfe altogether unfit for that calling. The other fault is incident to this age, ambitiously to sue and seeke for the preferments of the Church: such an one was Diotrephes, who loved to Ioh. Epist. 2. v. 9.

have preeminence. Wherefore that a meane may bee kept in desiring the places in the Church: three things must bee considered. 1. Hee that hath any mind to an Ecclesiasticall calling, must first examine himselfe, whether hee bee fitted and enabled with gifts, and that in an humble opinion, not in a blind selfe-love: but such an one as is not furnished with gifts, sinneth in putting himselfe forward to that place, for the which he is not meet. 2. He must propound unto himselfe as the chiefe and principall end, the glorie of God, and the edifiing of the people, and not for maintenance or living sake offer himselfe. 3. Hee must take heed that he use no indirect or unlawfull meanes, by flatterie or briberie to creepe in, and intrude himselfe. 4. These conditions being well observed, and these times withall considered, wherein partly because of the great number, and choice to bee had of sufficient men, but most of all, because vertue and learning is not duely respected, and rewarded, preferment is not offered unasked and undesired: he that desireth a place in the Church, as the Apostle saith, desireth a good thing: and therein is not to be discommended.

QUEST. V. When the Tabernacle began to be set up.

Vers. 17. THow was the Tabernacle reared up the first day of the first moneth. &c.

1. Cajetane hereupon noteth that the Tabernacle was set up, before one yeare was expired since their comming up out of Egypt, whence they departed upon the fifteenth day of the first moneth; so that there wanted fifteene daies of a full yeare. This collection is verie evident out of the text, and therefore Lippoman following the Septuagint, had no reason to reject it.

2. Simlerus thinketh, that the Tabernacle which could not be set up in one day, was begun to be set up before, and now finished on the first day of the moneth, which used to be a solemne day: and it is like, they kept not that solemnitie untill the Tabernacle was erected. But it is evident by the text, that Moses began now only to set up the Tabernacle, upon the first day of the first moneth, because the Lord appointeth that day for Moses to set it up in, vers. 2. therefore he began not before. And the day wherein they began to set it up, might be kept as a solemne day, as well as the day wherein it was finished: yet it may be thought that the feast of the new moone was not yet observed, the Priests being not yet consecrated, to whose office it belonged to solemnize that day with sacrifices.

3. R. Salomon saith there were two erections and setting up of the Tabernacle, one was quotidiana, every day, when it was set up in the morning, and taken downe againe at night: the other was stabilis erectio, the sure or firme erecting of it, which continued till the campe removed: the first erecting of it began seven daies before, but the second solemne and stable erecting, was upon the first day of the first moneth. Contra. This is the Rabbines owne device, that the Tabernacle was every day set up, and taken downe againe: for it is contrarie to the text, which saith, that the cloud of the Lord was upon the Tabernacle by day, and fire by night, vers. 37. untill the cloud ascended, and then they went forward: but if the Tabernacle were taken downe in the night, the fire could not rest upon it.

4. Calvine taketh this erecting of the Tabernacle, for the removing of it from without the campe, where it was set up, and bringing of it within the host: for his opinion is, that the Tabernacle was set up before Moses going up the second time into the mount, when he removed it without the host, chap. 33.7. Contra. But that Tabernacle was not this great Tabernacle, but another, where Moses used to consult with God, as is further shewed in the handling of that place. And the great Tabernacle was made after Moses second comming downe, as it is set downe in storie which without great necessitie is not to be transposed: and as soone as the work was finished, they brought it to Moses, and then the Lord spake to Moses to set it up.

5. Wherefore I encline rather to thinke, that Moses according to the Lords commandement, began onely upon the first day of the first moneth to set up the Tabernacle, and so continued untill he had finished, for in one day it was not all set up: as it may be gathered, chap. 7. 1. When Moses had finished the setting up of the Tabernacle: hee did not then begin, and finish in one day.

QUEST. VI. What Testimonie was put into the Arke.

Vers. 20. HE tooke and put the testimonie in the Arke, &c. There were in, and beside the Arke, these foure things, the tables of the Law, the pot of Manna, Aarons rod, and the booke of the Law, which Moses writ: but none of these are heere understood by this Testimonie, but only the tables of the Law. 1. The pot of Manna was a testimonie of Gods mercie, that he had fed the Israelites with the bread of heaven, fortie yeares in the wildernesse: but that was not this Testimonie; for Aaron is bid to take the pot of Manna and put it there, chap. 16. 33. who was not yet consecrated Priest. 2. And for the same reason, Aarons rod, though it were a testimony, that God had chosen Aaron & his seed for the priesthood, yet it was not this Testimonie: for at that time, when Aarons rod budded, he was the high Priest, but at the erection of the Tabernacle Aaron was not yet consecrated. 3. Neither was the booke which Moses writ, this Testimonie; for that is supposed to bee the booke of Deuteronomie, which was not yet written: and that booke was given by Moses to the Levites, by them to be put in the side of the Arke, Deut. 31. 26. but this Testimonie was put by Moses himselfe in the Arke. 4. Therefore this Testimonie was no other, than the tables of the Law, called the tables of the Testimonie, chap. 31. 18. and 34. 29. which were so named, because they testified Gods will unto the people, and were witnesses and testimonies of the league and covenant, which the Lord made with his people, Tostatus quæst. 6.

QUEST. VII. Whether the tables of the law were put into any other Arke beside the Arke of the Testament.

Vers. 20. HE put the Testimonie in the Arke. 1. R. Salom. thinketh, that the tables of the Law were put into another Arke, which Moses made, and when the Arke with the Mercie seate was finished, finiſhed, then he put them into that: for there were ſeven moneths betweene Moſes comming downe with the ſecond tables, untill the Tabernacle was erected, when, and not before, Moſes put them into the Arke of the moſt holy place: it is not like, that all that time the tables were kept without an Arke: and Deut. 10. 5. Moſes ſaith, I made an Arke of Shittim wood, and hewed two tables of ſtone, &c. There was then one Arke made before Moſes hewed the tables of ſtone. 2. But this Arke heere mentioned by Moſes, was none other than that, which was made by Bezaleel for the tables of ſtone: for Moſes ſaith, Deut. 10. 5. there they be, they were at that time, long after the erecting of the Tabernacle, in the ſame Arke before mentioned: but that was the Arke of the Sanctuarie. And during all that time, after Moſes comming downe, the tables of the Law were kept in ſome convenient place, till the Arke was made: ſo that it is not neceſſarie to imagine any other Arke beſide that, Toſtatus qu. 7.

QUEST. VIII. When the Prieſts were conſecrated, whether at the erecting of the Tabernacle or after.

Verſ. 27. And burnt incenſe thereon. Moſes did ſupplie the office of the Prieſts in burning of incenſe, ſetting up the lampes, offering ſacrifices upon the braſen altar, at the erecting up of the Tabernacle, becauſe as yet Aaron and his ſonnes were not conſecrated. 1. Some thinke, that their conſecration began together with the erecting of the Tabernacle, and ſo continued ſeven daies, and the eighth day their conſecration was finiſhed, as is ſet forth, Levit. 8. 8. and then began the Princes their offerings for twelve daies together, Numb. 7. and ſome will have theſe ſeven daies to end at the firſt day of the firſt moneth of the ſecond yeare, ſome to begin then, as Toſtat. qu. 2. But neither of theſe can ſtand: for as ſoone as Moſes had made an end of conſecrating the Tabernacle, the Princes the ſame day began to offer, Numb. 7. 2. But they offered not before the people were numbred, for they were the Princes over them that were numbred. Now theſe Princes with their people, were not numbred before the firſt day of the ſecond moneth of the ſecond yeare, Numb. 1. 1. therefore the erecting of the Tabernacle was not finiſhed, and the Prieſts conſecrated in the ſpace of ſeven daies, immediately before the firſt day of the firſt moneth, or immediately after.

2. R. Salom. hath a conceit, that there was a double erecting of the Tabernacle, one was every day for ſeven daies, in which time the Prieſts alſo had their ſeven daies of conſecration, which ended upon the firſt of the firſt moneth: and then there was another ſolemne erection of the Tabernacle to continue, when the Princes began to offer. But this Rabbinicall conceit is confuted before, qu. 4. neither did the Princes offer in the firſt, but in the ſecond moneth, as is ſhewed before.

3. Some thinke that Aaron was firſt conſecrated, before the Tabernacle, that he might conſecrate it, and the other things thereunto belonging. But it is evident in the text, that Moſes is commanded to anoint the Tabernacle himſelfe, and all things therein, Simlerus.

4. Yet it is not to be ſuppoſed, that the whole Tabernacle, and all the implements and veſſels thereof were ſanctified, before Aaron and his ſonnes were conſecrated: for immediately after that Moſes had made an end of ſanctifying the Tabernacle, and the inſtruments therof, the very ſame day began the twelve Princes of the tribes to offer: the ſumme of whoſe offering for ſacrifice was twelve bullockes, twelve rammes, twelve lambes for a burnt offering, twelve hee-goats for a ſin offering, 24. bullocks, 60. rammes, 60. lambes, 60. hee-goats for peace offerings, Numb. 7. 8. 88. all theſe could not bee ſacrificed by Moſes alone: therefore it cannot be, but that Aaron and his ſonnes were conſecrated before the Princes brought their offerings.

5. I incline therefore to Iunius opinion, that after Moſes had conſecrated the Tabernacle with the inſtruments thereof, then laſt of all hee conſecrated the Altar with the inſtruments thereof, and becauſe the Prieſts office was moſt exerciſed about the altar, at the ſame time alſo their conſecration concurred with the ſanctifying of the Altar, or went immediately before. And this may bee gathered, that the Altar was laſt of all conſecrated, and ſomewhat after the reſt; becauſe they are diſtinguiſhed, the anointing of the Tabernacle, and all the inſtruments thereof, and the anointing of the Altar with the inſtruments thereof, Numb. 7. 1.

6. Seeing then that the Princes began to offer, immediately after the Altar was anointed, which was the ſecond day of the ſecond moneth, for upon the firſt day of the moneth the people were numbred, Numb. 1. 1. and they were ſo numbred before the offerings began, Numb. 7. 2. it is like, as Iunius well noteth upon that place, that the firſt moneth was ſpent in the erecting of the Tabernacle, and the conſecrating thereof.

QUEST. IX. Why the Prieſts were commanded to waſh their hands and their feet.

Verſ. 31. So Moſes and Aaron and his ſonnes waſhed their feet thereat, &c. 1. The literall reaſon why they were commanded to waſh their hands and their feet, was this: that ſeeing it was meet, that they which ſhould handle the holy things, ſhould approach even with pure hands, in reſpect of outward cleanneſſe: theſe parts are eſpecially commanded to be waſhed, becauſe the hands with handling & touching of things, and the feet with walking, are moſt apt of all the parts of the bodie to gather ſoile.

2. There might be uncleanneſſe alſo in other parts of the bodie as by nocturnall pollutions, by the flux of ſeed, and ſuch like: but in theſe caſes the partie was uncleane ſometimes onely to the even, ſometimes for the ſpace of ſeven daies, Levit. 15. 13, 18. The Prieſt therefore when any ſuch uncleanneſſe was upon him, could not enter into the Sanctuarie at all: the waſhing of his hands and feet then at the braſen Laver would not ſerve the turne. But though they were free from all other kinds of uncleanneſſe, yet they were to waſh their hands and feet alwaies when they went into the Tabernacle.

3. The ſpirituall reaſon of the waſhing the hands and feet is this: by the hands are underſtood the workes and operations; by feet, the affections of the soule: Ministers, and generally all that approach and draw neere unto God, must be both of cleane heart, and of cleane waies and workes, when they come before God: as for the hands, the Apostle willeth, that everie where men should lift up pure hands: and concerning the feet, the Preacher saith, Take heed unto thy feet, when thou entrest into the house of God.

1. Tim. 2. 8. Eccles. 4. 17.

QUEST. X. What cloud this was which covered the Tabernacle.

Vers. 34. Then the cloud covered the Tabernacle, &c. 1. This was not another cloud beside that which was called the pillar of the cloud, as some thinke, but the very same, both because of the appearance of it by night, as fire, as the other seemed as a pillar of fire in the night: as also there was the same use of this cloud, to direct them in their journeyes, as of the pillar, Exod. 13. 21. Tostat. qu. 10.

2. Some thinke, while the people camped about mount Sinai, that this cloud vanished away; which was the cause why the people desired gods to go before them: and that now, as soone as the Tabernacle was made it appeared againe. But that is not like, for chap. 13. 22. it is said, that the Lord took not away the pillar of the cloud by day, &c. And seeing the Manna did fall every day, which was an evident signe of Gods presence among them, though the cloud had not been in their sight, that had been no cause to move them to desire a guide, Simler.

3. This cloud, which before also did direct them, now commeth somewhat nearer, and sitteth upon the Tabernacle: Nova hic gratia accessio commendatur in certiore symbolo, &c. this accession of new grace and favour, is commended by a more certaine and evident signe, Calvin.

4. This cloud before rested upon the other Tabernacle, which Moses had removed without the campe: but now the great Tabernacle being built, the Lord doth chuse it as his seat, Tostat. qu. 10.

QUEST. XI. How the glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle.

The glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle. 1. The Lord giveth here a double testimonie of his presence, for the approbation of this worke made by his appointment; there was a cloud without, and intus splendor gloriæ Dei, within the brightsome glorie of God, Gallas. For so the Apostle calleth the shining of Moses face, the glorie of his countenance, 1. Cor. 3. Oleaster. 2. By this was signified both the presence of Christ in his Church, because this cloud filled the Tabernacle within, and the Lords protection of his Church, the cloud covered it without, Marbach. 3. And as the glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle: so in Christ, who is the true Tabernacle, the Godhead dwelleth bodily and essentially, Osiander. 4. Though the glorie of the Lord filled the earthly Tabernacle, yet his glorie remained still in heaven: onely the Lord vouchsafed there a visible signe of his presence, that they might know him to be neere unto them as often as he was called upon, Calvine.

QUEST. XII. Why it pleased God to make the cloud a signe of his presence.

IT hath pleased God diversly to use the clouds as symboles and signes of his presence: so he set his bow in the clouds, as a signe of his favour: he went before his people in a cloud: Christ was transfigured in the mount in a bright cloud: when he ascended, a cloud tooke him out of their sight, and he shall come againe in the clouds to judge the quicke and the dead.

2. First, as the cloud engendreth raine, doth shelter from the heat of the Sun; so Christ by the influence and raine of grace doth comfort his Church, and protecteth it in the heat of persecution, Simler. Secondly, as the fire heateth, giveth light, and purgeth; so Christ by his Spirit worketh all these in his Church, comforting, illuminating, and purifying the same, Pelarg.

QUEST. XIII. Why Moses could not enter into the Tabernacle.

Vers. 35. Moses could not enter into the Tabernacle, because the cloud abode there, &c. 1. Tostatus confuting Lyranus, who thinketh that Moses did not enter into the Tabernacle, propter reverentiam, because of the reverence of the place, and not for that the thicke cloud did hinder his sight, affirmeth the contrarie: that Moses rather entred not, because of the thicke cloud. But seeing that this was a lightsome cloud, and therefore is called the glorie of the Lord, it was not the thicknes of the cloud, that could have been an impediment to Moses: he therefore rather forbeareth to enter of reverence: as when it was said unto him, while the fire burned in the bush, come not hither, &c. Exod. 3.

2. Moses entred into the thicke cloud in mount Sinai, but here he cannot enter. Pellican maketh this the reason, because now Moses representeth the people of the Iewes, to whom the glorie of the Lord in the Tabernacle was as a cloud. But he as well represented the person of the people, when he went up to receive the Law for them: therefore that is no reason. The cause then is this, Moses durst not ascend up unto God into the mount uncalled, he waited six daies in the mount, and the seventh the Lord called unto him, chap. 24. 16 at this time therefore, it was not lawfull for Moses to come neere, being not called, or bidden so to doe, Gallas.

3. And by this meanes, the Lord would have his Tabernacle afterward reverenced of all, into the which Moses had no entrance at this time, for the great glorie of the Lord: as for the same cause at the dedication of Salomons Temple, the glorie of the Lord so filled the house, that the Priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud; the glorious light whereof they could not endure. And thus the Lord would have his house reverenced because of his presence.

4. But the cloud did not alwaies thus fill the house, but at this time the Lord did it to sanctifie the Tabernacle with his presence. The cloud had three positions or places: sometime it was within the Tabernacle, then none could enter, as heere, and Numb. 12. when the cloud stood at the doore of the Tabernacle, when the Lord called to Aaron and Miriam: or it rested upon the Tabernacle, then Moses and Aaron might enter, but the campe removed not: but when the cloud was lift up altogether from the Tabernacle, then the campe went forward, Lyran.

QUEST.

QUEST. XIV. In what order the campe marched.

Vers. 36. THe children of Iſrael went forward. 1. The order how they marched is ſet forth, Numb. 2. the whole hoſt was divided into foure ſquadrons and ſtandards: in the firſt quarter on the Eaſt was Iudah, with Iſſachar and Zebulun: on the South was Ruben, Simeon and Gad: on the North was Dan, with Nepthali and Aſher: on the Weſt ſide behind, marched Ephraim, Manaſſes and Benjamin. 2. And theſe went forward in ſuch order, that neither the ſtandards were mingled together, nor yet the tribes under the ſame ſtandard, nor the families in the ſame tribe: but the ſtandards, tribes, and families kept their diſtinct order. 3. In the middeſt of the hoſt went the Tabernacle, with the hoſt of the Levites round about: Moſes and Aaron with the Prieſts before, the Gerſanites behind, the Merarites on the North, and the Caathites on the South, Gallaſ. But howſoever it was with the reſt, it is verie like that Moſes went firſt, becauſe he gave direction when the campe ſhould ſet forward, Calvin.

QUEST. XV. Why it is called the Lords cloud, and of foure miraculous things in it.

Vers. 38. THe cloud of the Lord. Though all the clouds, and whatſoever elſe is in the heaven and earth bee the Lords, yet this cloud after a more ſpeciall manner is ſaid to bee the Lords, becauſe of theſe ſpeciall and extraordinarie properties which it had, which were ſignes of the Lords ſpeciall preſence. 1. The place and ſituation of it was extraordinarie, for clouds remaine not neere the earth, becauſe by the reflexion of the beames of the Sun, they are apt to be diſperſed; but this cloud reſted upon the Tabernacle. 2. Other clouds continue not, they are ſoone diſperſed, and diſſolved: but this cloud remained in their ſight for the ſpace of fortie yeares. 3. It was immoveable and immutable, not ſubject to the force and violence of the winds and weather, whereas other clouds are carried of the winds. 4. It had an extraordinarie motion: it was neither moved, motu naturali, by any naturall motion, as the vapors and clouds aſcend, nor motu raptus, by the rapt and ſwift motion of the heavens, as the clouds that are aloft follow the motion of the celeſtiall ſpheres: nor yet motu violento, by a violent motion, as the clouds are forced of the winds: for ſometime this cloud moved againſt the wind: but it had motum progreſſivum, a kind of progreſſe, and walking motion, ſometime forward, ſometime backward, ſometime on the right hand, ſometime on the left, as it pleaſed God to point out the journeies of his people, Toſtat. qu. 13.

Concerning other queſtions of the Tabernacle, as how it was ſituated in the Court whether juſt in the middeſt, as being diſtant 35. cubits from the Eaſt end, and as many from the Weſt, which is the opinion of Toſtatus, qu. 14, or rather it was fiftie cubits diſtant from the Eaſt end, ſo that the forepart of the Court was a juſt ſquare, of fiftie cubits on each ſide, as thinketh Lyranus, which is the more probable. See this handled before, qu. 13. chap. 27. Aslikewiſe of the whole forme and faſhion of the Tabernacle, with the inſtruments thereof, ſee qu. 25. chap. 27. To thoſe places I referre the Reader, not thinking it neceſſarie to repeate the ſame things againe.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. All things in the Church muſt be done in order.

Vers. 3. THou ſhalt put therein the Arke. In that the Lord appointeth Moſes in what order the Tabernacle ſhould be ſet up, and every thing placed therein, it ſheweth, that both in the doctrine and diſcipline of the Church, all things ſhould be done in order, Simler. For God is not the author of confuſion, as the Apoſtle ſaith, who willeth all things to bee done honeſtly and by order. 1 Corinth. 14. 33. 40.

2. Doct. The Sacraments depend not of the worthines of the Miniſter.

Vers. 9. THou ſhalt take anointing oyl. Moſes anointeth the Tabernacle, not Aaron, who was appointed to be the Prieſt: to teach us, that ſignes and Sacraments receive not their ſtrength and vertue from the dignitie of the Miniſters, but from the inſtitution of God, Simler.

3. Doct. How the Lord was preſent in the Tabernacle.

Vers. 34. THe glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle. God was not ſo preſent in the Tabernacle, as though that place could containe or comprehend his glorie: for he dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, but becauſe there it pleaſed him to ſhew ſome viſible ſignes of his preſence: God is ſaid to be preſent three waies: 1. After a generall manner, by his power, as he is in every place. 2. More ſpecially by his grace, and ſo he is preſent only to the faithfull. 3. The third kind of preſence is, qua nobis in Chriſto adeſt, whereby God is preſent in Chriſt, who aſſumed the humane nature unto his Divine, in the unitie of perſon; hæc eſt præſtantiſſima præſentia Divinitatis, this is the moſt excellent preſence of God in Chriſt, both God and man, Simler. In that God is preſent with us, to whom our nature is united in one perſon.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That Chriſts humanitie is not every where preſent.

BUt heere we refuſe and reject that fourth kind of preſence of Chriſt even in his humanitie, as the Lutheranes hold, whereof Marbachius thus writeth. That the divine nature of Chriſt cauſeth, that his humanitie, which by the propertie of it owne nature, which it reteineth for ever, can be but in one place at once, ſit vbiq; & maxime in Eccleſia, ſhould be everie where, and moſt of all in his Church: his reaſon is, becauſe the Godhead being everie where, ipſam unionis cauſa gloriæ ſuæ participem facit, maketh the humanitie for the union ſake partaker of his glorie. Contra. 1. This aſſertion of Marbachius includeth a contradiction: for how doth Chriſts humane nature retaine the naturall propertie thereof for ever, in being but in one place at once, if it be every where by vertue of the Godhead? 2. If by vertue of this union, union, the humane nature can doe all, which the Deitie doth; then the humane nature should be absorpt, and as it were changed into the Divine. 3. There is a mutuall communication of the properties betweene the two natures of Christ, but such as destroyeth not the true properties of either: but if this propertie of the Deitie were communicated to the humane nature, to be everie where, the humanitie of Christ should be altered in nature, being without the true propertie thereof, which is to be but in one place at once. 4. And as the reason of this assertion is not sound; so the conclusion it selfe of Christs omnipresence in his humanitie is contrarie to the Scriptures: for Saint Peter saith, Whom the heavens must containe, untill the time that all things be restored.

See more of this matter, chap. 39. doct. 2. 6 Act. 3. 21.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious hallowing of Churches.

Vers. 9. Thou shalt take the anointing oyle. 1. From this example of Moses anointing of the Tabernacle, the Romanists would warrant their consecrating of Churches, with oyle and other ceremonies: and they hould it as a principle, that it is not lawfull to say Masse in a Church not hallowed.

2. By such ceremonies and rites, they say religion and devotion is stirred up in mens minds.

3. By such hallowing devils are expelled.

4. Constantine when he had built a Chruch, called thither the Nicene Fathers to consecrate it.

5. Christ vouchsafed to be present at the dedication feast in Ierusalem. Contra. As we condemne not a Christian dedication, blessing and sanctifying of things, without superstition: as David dedicated his house which he had newly built, Psal. 30. in the title: which kind of sanctifying is done partly by prayer grounded upon Gods word, as the Apostle sheweth, 1 Timoth. 4. 5. partly by the sober and right use of such things, when they are employed to a good end: as the Churches of Christians are hallowed and sanctified by the word of God, and exercises of religion there used. So yet such superstitious consecrations, as with oyle, tapers, crossings, and such like, we utterlie condemne.

1. There is no hallowing or sanctifying of any thing, without the warrant of Gods word, 1 Timoth. 4. 5. but they have no word for such ceremonies to bee used. 2. They make more account of their owne traditions, than of Gods institution: for every Priest may baptise, but their Bishops onely hallow Churches. 3. They commit idolatrie by this meanes, in dedicating Churches to Saints, and so take away part of Gods honour. 4. They make these ceremonies a part of Gods worship, and ascribe spirituall vertue unto them, for they give indulgences and pardons of sinnes, by the vertue of such hallowed Churches.

The former reasons are of no force. 1. The typicall ceremonies of the Law, such as was the anointing of the Tabernacle, doe not bind us now, they are abolished. 2. True devotion and religion, cannot be stirred up in the mind by humane rites and observations, which are not grounded upon Gods word. 3. By the same reason, if by their anointing devils are driven out of Churches, it were good that all houses and other places were anointed, to drive away evill spirits: but our Saviour sheweth that devils are cast out by prayer and fasting, therefore not by such toyes. 4. Constantines Church was consecrated by the prayers, and thanksgiving of the Christian Bishops, not by any such superstitious usages. 5. The dedication of the Temple was a legall observation and concerneth us not now: neither doth it follow, because Christ observed it that it is to be kept still: for he was also circumcised, to shew his obedience to the Law, Simlerus.

Matth. 17. 21.

3. Confut. That there is not in Orders imprinted an indeleble character.

Vers. 15. The anointing shall bee a signe, that the Priesthood shall be everlasting unto them. Tostatus out of this place would inferre, that in orders, as likewise in Baptisme, there is imprinted an indeleble character in the soule, which can never be blotted out: as these were but once anointed during their life to minister in the Priesthood, qu. 4.

Contra. 1. This place proveth no such thing: for it is not spoken of the anointing of their persons, which could be for no long continuance, but of the anointing and consecrating of Aaron and his posteritie for the priesthood perpetually: the anointing and consecrating of the Fathers, could not print an indeleble character in their posteritie. 2. This indeleble character or badge, which they say is by Baptisme, and Orders imprinted in the soule, and can never be blotted out, is but a device of their owne: for what badge or marke of Iudas Apostleship could remaine, when hee had betrayed his Master, and manifestly shewed himselfe to be the child of perdition? or what could be imprinted in Simon Magus soule by Baptisme? of whom Saint Peter saith, He had no part nor fellowship with them, and his heart was not aright in the sight of God, Act. 8. 21. See more of this controversie, Synops. Cent. 2. error. 98.

4. Confut. Outward succession not alwaies required in the Ministerie.

Vers. 13. Thou shalt bring Aaron, and his sonnes, &c. The Romanists make this speciall exception against the Ministers of the Gospell, that they can shew no lawfull succession, which is required in an ordinarie calling, nor yet miracles to prove their extraordinarie calling, therefore they hold their calling to be none at all.

Contra. 1. Aaron was the Lords high Priest, not by succession from any other but by consecration from Moses, the civill governour at Gods appointment: and so no doubt, but Princes, reformers of religion by their authoritie may establish Ministers and Preachers thereunto rightly called. 2. Everie extraordinarie calling was not confirmed by signes, as divers of the Prophets are not found to have wrought miracles. 3. And though it were granted that the calling of the first Ministers of the Gospell, were in respect of the manner extraordinarie, yet because for the matter and doctrine it is not new, but the same which the Apostles preached, there need no miracles, seeing the same faith was before ratified and sealed by the miracles wrought by the Apostles, Simlerus. See Synops. Centur. 1. err. 20.

6. Morall

6. Morall obſervations.

1. Obſerv. Not to come before the Lord without due preparation.

Verſ. 31. They waſhed their hands. By this ceremonie was ſignified, that none ſhould aſſemble, or draw neere unto God with impure and unwaſhen affections, Oleaſter. As Moſes alſo was bid to put off his ſhooes, when hee drew neere unto the fire burning in the buſh. So the Apoſtle will have men to examine themſelves, before they come unto the Lords table, 1 Cor. 11. 28.

2. Obſerv. Gods houſe is to be reverenced.

Verſ. 34. The glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle. God ſhewed ſuch glorious ſignes of his preſence, to the end his Tabernacle ſhould be the more reverenced of all, Marbach. As Iacob ſaid, Gen. 28. 17. How fearefull is this place! this is none other than the houſe of God. So David alſo ſaith, Pſal. 5. 7. In thy feare will I worſhip toward thy holy Temple.

3. Obſerv. The greater gifts one hath, the more hee ſhould humble himſelfe.

Verſ. 35. So Moſes could not enter. Moſes the more familiarly the Lord vouchſafed to ſpeake unto, tanto ſe humiliorem præbet, &c. ſheweth himſelfe ſo much the more modeſt and humble: he will not preſume to enter into the Tabernacle, where Gods preſence was, though at other times the Lord had admitted him to familiar conference. This example teacheth men, that the more excellent gifts they have, they ſhould ſo much more ſhew themſelves humble and lowly, Gallaſ. As Saint Paul, though he laboured more than all the Apoſtles, yet confeſſeth, He was the leaſt of the Apoſtles, and not worthie to be called an Apoſtle. 1 Cor. 15. 9.

Verſ. 36. When the cloud aſcended, the children of Iſrael went forward. Oleaſter hereupon giveth this good note: Beatus homo, quem direxeris Domine, & qui non ſe movet, niſi ſignum ei oſtenderis, &c. Happie is the man, whom thou directeſt O Lord, and who will not ſtirre, unleſſe thou ſhew him a ſigne, &c. We muſt waite then upon God for his direction, as the eyes of the ſervants looke unto the hand of their maſters. Pſalm. 123. 2. And as the campe of Iſrael removed at the lifting up of this cloud, ſo by Gods direction I have begun, and by his gracious bleſſing finiſhed this long and laborious worke (this fifth of Iune, Anno 1608.) To whom in all humbleneſſe of ſoule, and with bended knees of my heart, I doe onely aſcribe the praiſe thereof: and now as at the ſeeling of this cloud, the campe ſtayed, ſo heere I reſt for this time, untill by the aſcending of the cloud, that is, the further motion and direction of Gods Spirit, I ſhall be raiſed to march on ſtill by thoſe heavenly ſtations of the Scriptures toward the celeſtiall Canaan; Amen.

1 Timoth. 1. 17.

Now unto the King everlaſting, immortall, inviſible, unto God only wiſe, be honour and glorie for ever and ever, Amen.

FINIS.

THE TABLE OF THE QVESTIONS HANDLED IN THIS COMMENTARIE.

Certaine Generall questions out of the whole booke explained.

1. QUest. Concerning the inscription of the booke.
2. qu. Of the computation of yeares comprehended in the storie of Exodus.
3. qu. Whether Moses were the writer of this booke.
4. qu. Whether Moses Iudiciall lawes doe now necessarily binde the Civill Magistrate.

Questions upon the first Chapter.

1. QUest. Why the twelve Patriarkes are so often rehearsed.
2. qu. VVhy Iacobs sonnes are not alwaies rehearsed in the same order.
3. qu. How they are said to bee seventie soules, that went downe with Iacob into Egypt.
4. qu. Of the wonderfull multiplying of the Israelites in Egypt:
5. qu. In what time the Israelites so exceedingly increased.
6. qu. By what meanes the Israelites increased.
7. qu. Who this new King was, that knew not Ioseph.
8. qu. VVhy this Pharaoh is called a new King.
9. qu. The causes of the affliction of the Israelites.
10. qu. Of the hard affliction of the Israelites.
11. qu. Of the cities Pithom and Rameses, which the Israelites built for Pharaoh.
12. qu. How many yeares the affliction of the Israelites is supposed to have continued.
13. qu. The reasons why the Lord suffered his people to be afflicted in Egypt.
14. qu. Whether the Midwives were Egyptians or Hebrew women.
15. qu. Why Pharaoh only giveth his cruel charge to two Midwives.
16. qu. Whether the Midwives made a lie, and are therein to be justified.
17. qu. How the Lord is said to make them houses.
18. qu. Whether the Midwives onely were temporally rewarded.

Questions upon the second Chapter.

1. QUest. Of Amram, Moses father.
2. qu. Why it is said he went and tooke.
3. qu. Of Iacobed Moses mother, whether she were aunt, or cosine german to Amram.
4. qu. Why such marriages were tolerated in those daies.
5. qu. When Amram married his wife.
6. qu. Of the time of Moses birth, compared with the times before, and the times after.
7. qu. Of the antiquitie of Moses, who is found to be the most ancient of all writers, either sacred or prophane.
8. qu. VVhether the name of Moses were knowne unto the Gentiles before Christ.
9. qu. How Moses is said to bee a proper child, and by Whom he was hid.
10. qu. The Arke wherein Moses was put, whereof it was made, and where placed.
11. qu. Whether Moses parents did well in exposing him.
12. qu. Of the education of Moses, and his adoption to be Pharaohs daughters sonne.
13. qu. Whence Moses had his learning, of the Egyptians only, or of the Grecians also.
14. qu. VVhat kind of learning Moses received of the Egyptians.
15. qu. VVhence the Egyptians received their learning.
16. qu. VVhy it pleased God that Moses should be instructed in the Egyptian learning.
17. qu. VVhy Moses had this name given him.
18. qu. Of Moses visiting his brethren.
19. qu. Whether it were lawfull for Moses to kill the Egyptian.
20. qu. Why Moses, though warranted from God, yet useth great secresie, and circumspection in his businesse.
21. qu. How Moses is said heere to feare, seeing the Apostle denieth that he feared the King.
22. qu. Why Moses sufferings are called by the Apostle, the rebukes of Christ.
23. qu. Why Pharaoh sought to slay Moses.
24. qu. The causes why Moses lived in exile and banishment forty yeares.
25. qu. Of Midian, what countrie it was and where situat.
26. qu. Rahuel, Iethro, Hobab, whether they were the same.

27. qu. Whether Rahuel were Prince or Priest of Midian.
28. qu. Whether Rahuel were an idolatrous Priest, or a Priest of the true God.
29. qu. Why Zipporah is called an Æthiopesse.
30. qu. In what sense Moses sonnes were borne unto him.
31. qu. To whom the right of imposing names upon the children belongeth.
32. qu. Whence the name of Gershom is derived.
33. qu. What Pharaoh it was that died, while Moses was in Midian.
34. qu. Whether the crie of the Israelites proceeded from true repentance.

Questions upon the third Chapter.

1. Quest. How long Moses kept his father in lawes sheepe, what he did in the mountaine and to what end he was so exercised.
2. qu. Of the mount Choreb, whether it was the same with mount Zion, also why Moses went thither, and why it is called the mountaine of God.
3. qu. Of the vision of the bush.
4. qu. Of the flame of fire that burned in the bush.
5. qu. What is meant by the burning of the fire without consuming the bush.
6. qu. Whether it were an Angell, or God himselfe, that appeared unto Moses, and whether he that appeared were Michael the Prince of the people of God.
7. qu. What made Moses to draw neere to behold this strange sight.
8. qu. Why the Lord doubleth Moses name in calling him.
9. qu. What the putting off the shooe meaneth.
10. qu. Why the Lord calleth himselfe the God of Abraham, Isaak, and Iacob.
11. qu. Why Moses hid his face.
12. qu. How this text is alleaged by our Saviour in the Gospell, to prove the resurrection of the dead.
13. qu. Why our Saviour in the Gospell specially urgeth this place against the Sadducees.
14. qu. How God is said heere to descend.
15. qu. In what respect the land of Canaan is called a large countrie.
16. qu. Of the great fruitfulnes of the land of Canaan, and of the wonderfull fruit of Palæstina, called the apples of Paradise.
17. qu. Whether the fruitfulnes of the land of Canaan do yet continue.
18. qu. Whether the Canaanites were a peculiar people by themselves.
19. qu. How many nations of the Canaanites, and why they were cast out.
20. qu. What made Moses so unwilling to take his calling upon him.
21. qu. What signe it is which the Lord promised to Moses.
22. qu. Why Moses enquireth after Gods name.
23. qu. Of the best reading of these words, I am; that I am.
24. qu. What the name is, which the Lord heere giveth himselfe.
25. qu. Of the meaning of the name Eheie, and whether Plato and other Philosophers received any light from Moses bookes.
26. qu. Of the name of God Iehovah, whether it be ineffable.
27. qu. Why Moses is bid to gather the Elders together.
28. qu. Why they make request but for three daies journey.
29. qu. How the people is said to have sacrificed in the wilderness.
30. qu. How it is said Pharaoh should not let them go, no not with strong hand.

Questions upon the fourth Chapter.

1. Quest. Whether Moses offended in charging the people.
2. qu. What the first signe meaneth, of turning the rod into a serpent.
3. qu. What is signified by the leprosie of Moses hand.
4. qu. What kind of leprosie Moses hand was stricken with.
5. qu. Whether the third signe of turning water into bloud, were shewed at this time.
6. qu. Whether in these miracles there were a substantiall change.
7. qu. Whether Moses indeed had an impediment of speech, and what it was.
8. qu. How God is said to make the deafe and dumbe.
9. qu. How and wherefore the Lord was present with Moses mouth.
10. qu. Whom Moses meaneth that hee would have sent.
11. qu. Whether Moses sinned in his so often refusall, seeing God was angrie with him, and wherein Moses sinned, and how God is angrie with his children.
12. qu. Why Aaron is called the Levite.
13. qu. How Moses is said to be as God to Aaron.
14. qu. Whether Moses did well being called of God, in taking his leave of his father in law.
15. qu. Why Moses concealed from Iethro the principall end of his going.
16. qu. Whether God spake to Moses in Midian beside that vision in Horeb.
17. qu. Of Moses wife and children, and of his provision for his journey.
18. qu. Why Moses staffe is called the rod of God.
19. qu. How God is said to harden Pharaohs heart: that God, man, and Satan, are said to harden the heart, but diversly.
20. qu. How Israel is called the first borne sonne of God.
21. qu. Who smote Moses in the Inne, and how.
22. qu. For what sin the Lord would have killed Moses.
23. qu. Whether the Israelites transgressed, in omitting circumcision forty yeares in the wilderness.
24. qu. What moved Moses to deferre the circumcision of his child.
25. qu. Why the Lord meeteth Moses by the way, and not before.
26. qu. Whether Zipporah circumcised her sonne with a sharpe knife.
27. qu. Whether both Moses sonnes, or one only were uncircumcised, and upon what occasion.
28. qu. At whose feete Zipporah, and what shee cast.
29. qu. Why Zipporah called Moses, husband of bloud.
30. qu. Whether those words of Zipporah rehearsed againe, were uttered by Zipporah, or by Moses the writer.
31. qu. How Zipporah knew that Moses was stricken for the neglect of circumcision.
32. qu. Who it was that departed from Moses.
33. qu. Of the mysticall application of the historie.
34. qu. What manner of faith it was which the people had in beleeving Moses.

Questions

Questions upon the fifth Chapter.

1. QUest. Why the Lord sent Moses so often to Pharaoh.
2. qu. Whether Moses and Aaron went in alone to Pharaoh.
3. qu. Whether Pharaoh were altogether ignorant of God.
4. qu. Why mention is onely made of going three dayes journey.
5. qu. What other things were said and done by Moses before Pharaoh.
6. qu. In what sense Pharaoh saith, they were much people.
7. qu. Why they used straw in making of bricke.
8. qu. Whether Moses sinned in expostulating with God.
9. qu. How the Lord is said to afflict his people.

Questions upon the sixth Chapter.

1. QUest. Of the divers names which are given unto God in the Scripture.
2. qu. Of the divers kinds of names given unto God.
3. qu. Of the excellencie of the name Jehovah.
4. qu. Whether the name Jehovah, bee understood of Christ.
5. qu. Of the right pronuntiation of the name Jehovah.
6. qu. Whether the name Jehovah be ineffable, that is, not to be pronounced.
7. qu. How the Lord was not knowne by his name Jehovah, to Abraham, Isaak, and Jacob.
8. qu. Why the Genealogie of Reuben, Simeon, and Levi is inserted.
9. qu. How Reuben is said here to be the first borne.
10. qu. Of the age of Levi.
11. qu. Of the age of Kohath.
12. qu. Of the age of Amram.
13. qu. Why the sonnes of Korah and Ithamar are set downe.
14. qu. Why Aaron tooke a wife of the tribe of Judah.
15. qu. How Moses without ostentation setteth forth his owne commendation.
16. qu. In what sense Moses saith he was of uncircumcised lips.

Questions upon the seventh Chapter.

1. QUest. The divers appellations of the name of God.
2. qu. In what sense Moses is called Aarons God.
3. qu. In what sense Aaron is called Moses Prophet.
4. qu. Why the tribes of Israel are called Armies.
5. qu. Of Moses age.
6. qu. Whether Pharaoh asked a signe, and whether a signe may be required.
7. qu. Of the divers names of the Egyptian Magicians here used.
8. qu. Of divers kinds of Magicke.
9. qu. Of the first author and inventor of art Magicke.
10. qu. Who were the ringleaders and chiefe of the Egyptian Magicians; where also of the place where Jannes and Jambres were buried.
11. qu. Whether things done by magicke and inchantment, are in truth, or in shew onely.
12. qu. What things are permitted to Satan to doe.
13. qu. How divers wayes Satans power is limited.
14. qu. Whether the devill by his owne power can cause thunder and lightning.
15. qu. Of the power of spirits in naturall works, and of divers strange and admirable works in nature.
16. qu. What works in naturall things are forbidden unto spirits to doe, and how Satan two wayes maketh things to appeare that are not.
17. qu. Whether Satan can raise the spirits and soules of the dead; where these particulars are handled. of the fabulous reports of the Heathen, of the imagined force of Necromancie. 2. Reasons against Necromancie. 3. In what cases the dead have been raised and appeared.
18. qu. Why Satan doth counterfeit the spirits of the dead.
19. qu. Of the divers kinds of miracles.
20. qu. Of the difference betweene true miracles and false.
21. qu. Whether the Sorcerers brought forth true serpents.
22. qu. By what meanes Satan deluded Pharaoh with a shew of serpents.
23. qu. Why the Lord suffered the Sorcerers of Egypt, to shew such contrarie signes.
24. qu. Whether Pharaoh being deceived by the Magicians false signes, be thereby excusable.
25. qu. Of the number of the plagues of Egypt.
26. qu. Of the greatnesse of the plagues of Egypt, how the Egyptians were every way punished.
27. qu. Where the plagues of Egypt, and to what place they were sent, at the first.
28. qu. At what time the plagues were sent upon Egypt.
29. qu. In what time all the plagues were finished.
30. qu. Whether the good Angels or the Lord were the ministers of the Egyptian plagues.
31. qu. For what ends and causes the Lord wrought such wonders in Egypt.
32. qu. Who were exempted from the plagues of Egypt.
33. qu. Whether the Egyptians, which cohabited with the Israelites in the land of Goshen, were exempted from the plagues.
34. qu. Of the diversitie in the manner of the plagues.
35. qu. Of Pharaohs divers and variable behaviour.
36. qu. Why the Lord sent divers plagues upon Pharaoh, not cutting him off at once.
37. qu. Why Aaron is sometime the minister of the plagues, and not Moses.
38. qu. Why the first plague beginneth in the water.
39. qu. Of the greatnesse of the first plague.
40. qu. Whence the Sorcerers had the water, which they also turned into bloud.
41. qu. What shift the Egyptians made for water, during the first plague.
42. qu. Whether the raine that fell were turned into bloud.
43. qu. Whether the Sorcerers did turne the waters into true blood.
44. qu. How this first plague was staied.
45. qu. Of the application and use of this first plague.

Questions upon the eighth Chapter.

1. QUest. What kinde of frogs the second plague brought upon Egypt.
2. qu. Of the greatnesse of this plague of frogs.

3. qu. From whence this great abundance of frogs came.
4. qu. In what place, and how the Sorcerers brought forth frogs.
5. qu. Why Pharaoh calleth now for Moses, and not before.
6. qu. Why Moses saith to Pharaoh, Take this honour to thee.
7. qu. Whether Moses tempted God in prescribing the time of removing the plague.
8. qu. Of the use and application of the plague of frogs.
9. qu. Why Pharaoh appointeth Moses to morrow.
10. qu. Why the Lord did not remove the frogs quite.
11. qu. The difference of the third plague of lice, from the former.
12. qu. Whether the third plague was of lice.
13. qu. Why the Lord plagued the Egyptians with lice.
14. qu. Why the Lord by the stretching forth of Aarons rod brought forth lice.
15. qu. Why the sorceres could not bring forth lice.
16. qu. What the Sorcerers understand by the finger of God.
17. qu. Whether the Sorcerers had any feeling of Gods power.
18. qu. By what power Sorcerers doe worke, and how the devils sometime be cast out by the power of the devils.
19. qu. Why spirits prescribe constellations to bee observed, and delight in corporall and externall visages.
20. qu. Whether it be ordinarie for lice to breed out of the slime of Nilus.
21. qu. Why Moses is bid to meet Pharaoh by the water.
22. qu. Why there is no mention made in this miracle of Moses rod.
23. qu. What manner of Sorcerers were sent in the fourth plague.
24. qu. Of the name of Beelzebub the god of flies.
25. qu. Whether the land of Goshen were exempted from the former plagues.
26. qu. What things were an abomination to the Egyptians.
27. qu. Whether Moses were ignorant what kinde of beasts they should sacrifice to God in the desart.

Questions upon the ninth Chapter.

1. QUest. Why Pharaoh is so often sent unto, whom the Lord did foresee that he would not heare.
2. qu. Why Moses in bringing the plagues, doth not alwaies use Aarons rod.
3. qu. Why the Lord punisheth the Egyptians in their cattell.
4. qu. Why the Lord doth not alway exempt his people from temporall calamities.
5. qu. In what sense all the cattell of Egypt are said to have died.
6. qu. Whether Pharaoh sent into Goshen in the other plagues.
7. qu. Why Pharaoh calleth not to Moses here to pray.
8. qu. Whether this plague were naturall, or supernaturall.
9. qu. Why Moses is the Minister of the sixth plague.
10. qu. Of the plague of boyles, and the manner thereof.
11. qu. Why the Magicians are smitten with ulcers.
12. qu. Of the hardning of Pharaohs heart.
13. qu. What plague the Lord threatneth to destroy Pharaoh with.
14. qu. In what sense the Lord saith, I have kept thee.
15. qu. Whether the plague of haile were supernaturall.
16. qu. Whether there useth to be no raine or haile in Egypt.
17. qu. Of the meaning of those words, Since the foundation of Egypt.
18. qu. Of the greatnesse of this tempest of haile.
19. qu. How Moses knew that Pharaoh dissembled.
20. qu. What kinde of graine was not smitten with the haile.

Questions upon the tenth Chapter.

1. QUest. Why Moses is bid to goe to Pharaoh, notwithstanding his heart was hardened.
2. qu. How Moses is said to be a snare to the Egyptians.
3. qu. Of Pharaohs wish, Let the Lord so be with you.
4. qu. Of the nature of Locusts, and whether this plague were extraordinarie.
5. qu. Of the greatnesse of this plague of Locusts.
6. qu. Why sometime Moses, sometime Aaron stretcheth out the rod.
7. qu. What kinde of winde it was, which brought the Locusts.
8. qu. Whether this plague of Locusts were incomparable, and not to be matched.
9. qu. In what sense it is said, the Locusts devoured that which was left.
10. qu. Why the plague of Locusts is called a death
11. qu. Of the mysticall application of this plague of Locusts.
12. qu. How Moses turned himselfe, going out from Pharaoh.
13. qu. Of the cause of darknesse of the Egypt.
14. qu. How it is said, the darknesse was felt.
15. qu. How the Israelites had light in their dwellings.
16. qu. Whether the Egyptians used in the time of this darknesse, any candle or fire light.
17. qu. How it is said, No man rose up from his place.
18. qu. When Pharaoh sent for Moses, whether after the darknesse was removed, or afore.
19. qu. Of the greatnesse of this punishment of three dayes darknesse.
20. qu. Of the mysticall application of this three dayes darknesse.

Questions upon the eleventh Chapter.

1. QUest. When the Lord spake these words to Moses.
2. qu. Why the overthrow of Pharaoh in the red sea, was counted none of the plagues.
3. qu. Whether God used the ministerie of good or bad Angels, in the slaughter of the first borne.
4. qu. Whether one Angell, or many were used in this destruction.
5. qu. Upon whom this plague in smiting the first borne was executed.
6. qu. Whether in every house the first borne were slaine.

7. qu. Why the Lord destroyed the first borne.
8. qu. VVhy the first borne of the cattell also are destroyed.
9. qu. How the gods of the Egyptians were judged.
10. qu. How the Israelites escaped the destruction of the first borne.
11. qu. The mysticall application of the last plague upon the first borne.
12. qu. Of the generall application of these ten plagues: the ten plagues of Egypt compared with the ten benefits which the children of Israel received in the wilderneſſe.

Divers queſtions concerning the hardneſſe of heart.

13. QUeſt. What the hardneſſe of heart is.
14. qu. Whether God bee the efficient and working cauſe of the hardneſſe of heart.
15. qu. God otherwiſe hardneth, than by way of manifeſtation.
16. qu. God doth not harden the heart onely by permiſſion.
17. qu. Whether hardneſſe of heart bee of God, as it is a puniſhment of ſinne, where Pererius is refuted, that miſliketh Auguſtins diſtinction.
18. qu. How God is ſaid to harden the heart by patience and long-ſuffering.
19. qu. Wherefore the Lord uſeth patience and long-ſuffering toward the wicked.
20. qu. How God is ſaid to harden by the ſubtraction of his grace.
21. qu. How God is ſaid, occaſionaliter, by miniſtring occaſion, which the wicked abuſe, to harden the heart.
22. qu. God is ſaid to harden the heart, as the event is taken for the cauſe.
23. qu. How diverſly in Scripture the termes of blinding and hardning are taken.
24. qu. How divers waies the Lord forſaketh thoſe which are hardened.
25. qu. God hardeneth otherwiſe than by foreſeeing.
26. qu. Whether God may be ſaid to doe thoſe things, which he diſpoſeth of to a good end.
27. qu. God otherwiſe hardeneth, than as a generall mover of the heart.
28. qu. How God is ſaid indeed to harden the heart.

Queſtions upon the twelfth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. When the Lord ſpake to Moſes.
2. qu. Whether it were a new inſtitution for the beginning of the yeare, or the renning of the old.
3. qu. How that moneth is ſaid to be the beginning of moneths.
4. qu. Of the name of the firſt moneth.
5. qu. VVhen the firſt moneth of the Hebrewes tooke beginning.
6. qu. VVhy the lambe was commanded to bee prepared foure dayes before.
7. qu. VVhether a lambe were killed in every houſe, and how many went to the eating of a lambe.
8. qu. VVhether beſide the Paſchal lambe, there were any other ſolemne ſacrifice.
9. qu. Of the divers acceptions and takings of the word evening.
10. qu. Of the time when the Paſſeover ſhould bee killed, betweene the two evenings.
11. qu. VVhether the Paſſeover were killed in the firſt evening, when the fourteenth day began, or in the latter.
12. qu. VVhether it were not indifferent to uſe a lambe or goat for the paſſeover.
13. qu. Why it is added that it ſhould be a male.
14. qu. Of the generall ſignification of the rites of the Paſſeover.
15. qu. The particular application of the rites and ceremonies of the Paſchal lambe. 1. Of the eating of the fleſh. 2. It muſt not be eaten raw. 3. Of the unleavened bread. 4. Of the ſowre and bitter herbs. 5 Of the roſting of the lambe whole together. 6. Of the not reſerving of any thing till the morning. 7. Of the girding of their loynes. 8. Whether the Hebrewes ſtood in the firſt Paſſeover. 9. Whether Chriſt ſtood or ſate at the eating of the Paſſeover.
16. qu. Whence the word Paſch is derived.
17. qu. Wherefore it was called the Paſch or Paſſeover.
18. qu. The divers ſignifications of the word Paſch.
19. qu What things are generally commanded, concerning the keeping of the daies of unleavened bread.
20. qu. Why they were injoyned to eat unleavened bread.
21. qu. Why ſeven dayes are limited for the keeping of the feaſt of unleavened bread.
22. qu. Whether the fourteenth or fifteenth day were the firſt of the ſeven.
23. qu. In what ſenſe the firſt day of the ſeven was called holy.
24. qu. Of the ſecond ſolemne day of the Paſch.
25. qu. Whether the ſeventh day were more ſolemne than the firſt.
26. qu. Why the ſeventh day is called a day of reſtraint.
27. qu. Why he that did not eat unleavened bread, was to be cut off.
28. qu. Why none uncircumciſed were admitted to the Paſch.
29. qu. Whether the ſervant might be compelled to be circumciſed.
30. qu. Why none of the fleſh was to be carried out of the houſe.
31. qu. Why a bone of the Paſchal lambe ſhould not be broken.
32. qu. What rites of the Paſſeover might be diſpenſed withall, and what not.
33. qu. What ceremonies the Jewes doe hold themſelves tied unto at this day.
34. qu. Whether the ſprinkle were of hyſſop, or of roſemary, or ſome other thing.
35. qu. Whence they tooke the blood which they laid upon the doore-poſts.
36. qu. Why they are forbidden to goe forth of their doores.
37. qu. How the ordinance of the Paſſeover is ſaid to be for ever.
38. qu. Of the divers applications of the ſenſe of the Scripture.
39. qu. Of the particular myſticall applications of the Paſchal lambe, and the rites thereof. 1. Of the day and moneth. 2. Of the ſetting apart of the lambe vpon the tenth day. 3. How Chriſt is compared to a lambe. 4. Of the blood of the lambe, how it reſembled Chriſts blood. 5. Of the ſignification of leaven, and ſowre herbs. 6. Of the eating with the loynes girt, and ſhooes on the feet, and the ſtaffe in the hand.

40. qu. How Pharaoh is ſaid here to have called unto Moſes.
41. qu. Whether the Hebrewes asked to borrow of the Egyptians their jewels.
42. qu. Whether the Hebrewes did any wrong in ſpoyling the Egyptians of their jewels.
43 qu. Whether the Egyptians asked the jewels before the laſt plague, or after.
44. qu. What kinde of favour it was, which the Lord gave the Iſraelites in the ſight of the Egyptians.
45. qu. Why the Lord inricheth his people with the Egyptians ſubſtance.
46. qu. Of which of the Egyptians they asked, and who of the Iſraelites, and what.
47. qu. Of the myſticall application of the Iſraelites ſpoyling of the Egyptians.
48. qu. Of the number of the Iſraelites that went up out of Egypt.
49. qu. Of Rahmeſes, from whence the Iſraelites went.
50. qu. Of Succoth where the Iſraelites pitched their tents, going out of Egypt.
51. qu. What this mingled companie was, that went with the Iſraelites out of Egypt.
52. qu. What moved theſe divers ſorts of people to goe out of Egypt with Iſrael.
53. qu. Whether the Iſraelites went out of Egypt in the evening, in the night, or in the morning.
54. qu. Whether the Iſraelites dwelt in Egypt more than foure hundred yeares.
55. qu. That the Iſraelites dwelt not foure hundred yeares onely in Egypt.
56. qu. That the Iſraelites dwelt onely two hundred yeares in Egypt.
57. qu. That the Iſraelites were not in bondage and ſervitude in Egypt, all the foreſaid terme of two hundred yeares.
58. qu. That Moſes underſtandeth all the time of the ſojourning of Iſrael, and the Fathers in Egypt, and in Canaan.
59. qu. Why their dwelling in Egypt is onely named, the reſt being alſo underſtood.
60. qu. When the foure hundred yeare muſt take beginning.
61. qu. When the terme of 430. yeares endeth.
62. qu. How the terme of foure hundred yeares prefixed to Abraham, and Moſes ſumme of 430. yeares, doe agree together.
63. qu. When the foure hundred yeares prefixed to Abraham muſt take their beginning.
64. qu. The time of the Hebrewes departure out of Egypt, compared with the Chronologie of the Heathen.

Queſtions upon the thirteenth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. How the firſt borne were accounted that were conſecrated unto God.
2. qu. In what ſenſe the firſt borne are ſaid to bee the Lords.
3. qu. Why the law of the Paſſeover is repeated.
4. qu. Whether Abib were the proper name of a moneth.
5. qu. Why the Iſraelites are charged to keepe the Paſſeover in the land of Canaan, and not before.
6. qu. Whether the keeping of the Paſſeover were the cauſe of their deliverance, or that the cauſe of the other.
7. qu. How theſe things ſhould be as ſignets upon their hands; and of the ſuperſtition of the Iewes in their fringes and frontlets.
8. qu. Of the redeeming of the firſt borne of uncleane beaſts.
9. qu. Of the conditions required in the firſt borne of cleane beaſts.
10. qu. Of the law of the redeeming of the firſt borne of men.
11. qu. Of the ſpirituall application of the law of the firſt borne unto Chriſt.
12. qu. Whether the neereſt way from Egypt to Canaan, were thorow the Philiſtims country.
13. qu. Why the Lord counſelleth to prevent dangers.
14. qu. Whether the like danger of warre feared with the Philiſtims, did not befall the Iſraelites with Amilek.
15. qu. Of the reaſons why the Lord led his people about by the wilderneſſe.
16. qu. Whether the Iſraelites came up armed out of Egypt, or five in a ranke.
17. qu. Whether the reſt of the Patriarks bones were removed with Joſephs.
18. qu. Who it was that appeared in the cloud, and how.
19. qu. Of the divers properties of the cloud.
20. qu. How this cloud differed from other clouds.
21. qu. When the cloud began firſt to appeare.
22. qu. When the cloud and fierie pillar ceaſed.
23. qu. Of the foure great miracles which the Lord wrought for his people in the deſart.
24. qu. Whether the cloud alſo ſerved to ſhelter them from the heat of the Sunne.
25. qu. Whether the cloud and fierie pillar were two in ſubſtance, or but one.
26. qu. Whether it were a true naturall fire that gave them light by night.
27. qu. Whether the pillar of the cloud were moved by any naturall motion.
28. qu. Of the times of removing and ſtaying of the cloud.

Queſtions upon the fourteenth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Of the place where they are commanded to pitch.
2. qu. Why the Lord would have them pitch in ſo diſcommodious a place.
3. qu. How Pharaoh had word where the Iſraelites camped.
4. qu. Of Pharaohs chariots and horſe-men, and whether there were any foot-men in this hoſt.
5. qu. How the Iſaelites are ſaid to come out with a ſtrong hand.
6. qu. Whether the Iſraelites cried unto God in faith.
7. qu. Of the great ſinne of the people in expoſtulating with Moſes.
8. qu. Whether Moſes did ſuffer the people at this time to paſſe without reproofe for their murmuring.
9. qu. When the Lord ſpake theſe words mentioned to Moſes.

10. qu. When Moſes cried vnto God, and how, and for what.
11. qu. How the Angell is ſaid to remove.
12. qu. What winde it was, which did blow vpon the red ſea.
13. qu. At what time of the night the ſea was diuided, where Pererius is confuted, which thinketh that the Iſraelites ſtaied fiue or ſix houres vpon the ſea ſhore before they entered.
14. qu. Whether one way were made in the ſea, or twelue wayes, for euery tribe one.
15. qu. Which of the tribes firſt entred into the red ſea.
16. qu. Whether the Iſraelites went thorow the midſt of the red ſea, or onely a part of it.
17. qu. Of the diuiſion of the red ſea, not the worke of nature, but altogether miraculous; where Joſephus report of the Pamphylian ſea, giuing way to Alexander the great, is examined.
18. qu. The diuiſion of the red ſea, and of the riuer Iordan compared together.
19. qu. Of the blindneſſe of the Egyptians, running headlong vpon their owne deſtruction.
20. qu. Why the Lord looked in the morning toward the Egyptians.
21. qu. By what degrees the finall ſubuerſion of the Egyptians was wrought in the red ſea.
22. qu. Of the number of the Egyptians that periſhed.
23. qu. Whether Pharaoh himſelfe were drowned in the ſea.
24. qu. Whether the Iſraelites were all gone ouer, when the Egyptians were drowned.
25. qu. Why the Egyptians dead bodies were caſt vpon the ſhore.
26 qu. Of the red ſea, whence it is ſo called.
27. qu. Of the fabulous reports of the Heathen writers, concerning the cauſes of the departure of the Hebrewes out of Egypt.
28. qu. Of the compariſon betweene the red ſea and Baptiſme.
29. qu. How the people are ſaid to beleeue Moſes, or in Moſes.

Queſtions upon the fifteenth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Of the authoritie and excellencie of Moſes ſong.
2. qu. In what order Moſes, the children of Iſrael, and Miriam ſang this ſong.
3. qu. The end of the ſong of Moſes.
4. qu. Why the Scripture ſpeaketh ſo much againſt horſe vſed in battell.
5. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to be the ſtrength and ſong of his King.
6. qu. Whether God appeared in any viſible ſhape vnto the Iſraelites at the red ſea.
7. qu. In what ſenſe Moſes ſaith, hee would build the Lord a Tabernacle.
8. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to be high.
9. qu. In what ſenſe the Lord is ſaid to be a man of warre.
10. qu. Why now it is ſaid, his name is Jehovah.
11. qu. Of the names of the Captaines ſet ouer threes.
12. qu. What is meant by the blaſt of his noſtrils.
13. qu. Of the vaine boaſting of the Egyptians.
14. qu. What are the ſtrong, before whom the Lord is preferred.
15. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to bee fearefull in praiſes.
16. qu. Wherein the Egyptians are compared vnto lead.
17. qu. How the earth is ſaid to haue ſwallowed them.
18. qu. How the Lord will lead and carrie his people.
19. qu. What is meant here by Gods holy habitation.
20. qu. What nations ſhould be afraid of the Iſraelites.
21. qu. Why the Lord is ſaid to plant his people.
22. qu. In what ſenſe the Tabernacle of the Iewes, was called a firme and ſure Tabernacle, and how long the Temple continued at Ieruſalem.
23. qu. Of the meaning of theſe words, For euer and euer.
24. qu. Whether the 19. verſe be a part of Moſes ſong.
25. qu. Whether the Iſraelites went ſtraight ouer the red ſea.
26. qu. Of the diuers kinds of women-ſingers mentioned in the Scripture.
27. qu. Whether women did at any time publikely propheſie.
28. qu. Why Miriam is ſaid to be the ſiſter of Aaron, and not of Moſes.
29. qu. Why Miriam taketh a timbrell.
30. qu. Whether the women came with pipes beſide timbrels, or with dancing.
31. qu. Of the lawfulneſſe of Inſtruments of muſike.
32. qu. Of dancing.
33. qu. Whether Miriam did ſing the whole ſong, or repeated onely the beginning.
34. qu. Whether the deſart were ſimplie a deſart and barren place.
35. qu. The deſart of Shur and Etham were all one.
36. qu. Of the place of Marah.
37. qu. Of the grieuous ſin of murmuring.
38. qu. Of the diuers murmurings of the children of Iſrael.
39. qu. Whether the wood had any vertue, that Moſes caſt into the water.
40 qu. Wherein the miracle conſiſted of healing the waters.
41. qu. Why the Lord vſed this meanes in healing the waters.
42. qu. Of the myſticall ſignification of this tree.
43. qu. What lawes and ordinances the Lord here gaue his people.
44. qu. Why the Lord at this time gaue his people a law.
45. qu. Who is ſaid here to tempt.
46. qu. Of the diuers kinds of temptations.
47. qu. Of the difference betweene good and bad temptations.
48. qu. Wherein the Lord at this time proued his people.
49. qu. What diſeaſes of Egypt he meaneth.
50. qu. Whether Job being a righteous man felt not of the diſeaſes of Egypt.
51. qu. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I am thy healer.
52. qu. Of the fountaines and Palme trees in Elim.
53. qu. Of the myſticall ſignification of the twelue fountaines, and ſeuentie Palme trees.
54. qu. Of diuers errors and ouerſights of Joſephus.

Queſtions upon the ſixteenth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Of the deſart of ſin.
2. qu. Of the time when the Iſraelites came into the deſart of ſin.
3. qu. Whether all the children of Iſrael murmured.
4. qu. How they are ſaid to have murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron here, and afterward againſt the Lord.
5. qu. Of the grievous murmuring of the Iſraelites.
6. qu. How the Iſraelites are ſaid to have ſit by the fleſhpots of Egypt.
7. qu. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, he will raine bread from heaven.
8. qu. Why they are commanded every day to gather this bread.
9. qu. How the Lord is ſaid by this, to have proved his people, and to what end.
10. qu. Why the fleſh was given in the evening, the bread in the morning.
11. qu. Whether the rocke were firſt ſtricken to bring out water, or the fleſh and bread firſt ſent.
12. qu. Why Moſes biddeth Aaron to ſpeake to the people, and doth it not himſelfe.
13. qu. How the people are bid to draw neere before the Lord.
14. qu. What cloud it was wherein the Lord appeared.
15. qu. When the Lord thus ſpake to Moſes.
16. qu. What manner of fowles were ſent, whether they were Quailes.
17. qu. Whether the comming of Quailes were a naturall worke.
18. qu. Whether this ſtorie of the ſending of the Quailes, and that Numb. 11. be all one.
19. qu. Whether the Manna were a kinde of dew.
20. qu. Whether the Manna were a naturall meteor.
21. qu. Whether the Manna lay about the campe onely, and not within it.
22. qu. Whence it was called Manna.
23. qu. Why the Manna is ſaid to be the bread of Angels.
24. qu. Of the meaſure Gomer, how much it contained.
25. qu. How one meaſure of Manna ſufficed for every ones eating.
26. qu. Why a Gomer was appointed for every head.
27. qu. Whether the people tranſgreſſed, in gathering ſome more, ſome leſſe.
28. qu. How it came to paſſe that none had over, that gathered more, nor none had any lacke, that gathered leſſe.
29. qu. How the Manna grew to bee corrupt with wormes.
30. qu. How the Sun is ſaid to wax hot, and of the melting of Manna.
31. qu. How they gathered twice ſo much upon the ſixt day.
32. qu. What moved the Rulers to come and tell Moſes, that the people had gathered double.
33. qu. Of the meaning of the 23. verſe, and whether they dreſſed upon the ſixth day, that which was reſerved for the ſeventh.
34. qu. Whether the obſervation of the Sabbath were now firſt inſtituted.
35. qu. Of the reſt of the Sabbath.
36. qu. The deſcription of Manna, the quantitie, faſhion, colour, and taſte thereof.
37. qu. Whether the Manna had a divers reliſh, according to every ones taſte.
38. qu. When Moſes ſpake to Aaron, concerning the pot of Manna, to be ſet before the Lord.
39. qu. By whom this clauſe was added of the Iſraelites eating of Manna forty yeares.

Queſtions upon the ſeventeenth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Why ſome manſion places are omitted here.
2. qu. Of penurie and want of water, which the Iſraelites here indured.
3. qu. Why it pleaſed God to prove his people with thirſt.
4. qu. How the people are ſaid to tempt God.
5. qu. Of Moſes feare, leſt he ſhould be ſtoned.
6. qu. Why Moſes is bid to take the Elders with him.
7. qu. Why Moſes is bid to take his rod.
8. qu. Whether it be all one ſtorie of ſmiting the rocke, Exod. 17. and Numb. 20. or divers.
9. qu. Of the mount Choreb.
10. qu. Whether the water out of the rocke did ſtill follow the Iſraelites.
11. qu. What nation the Amalekites were, and how they ſet upon Iſrael.
12. qu. The reaſons which moved the Amalekites to ſet upon the Iſraelites.
13. qu. Why Moſes goeth not himſelfe to battell, but appointeth Joſhua.
14. qu. Whether this Hur were the ſonne of Caleb.
15. qu. Whether Moſes lifted up his hands in prayer.
16. qu. How Moſes hands were heavie.
17. qu. Of the ſupporting and bearing up of Moſes hands.
18. qu. What this Amalek was, and of whom deſcended.
19. qu. What booke this was wherein Moſes is commanded to write this ſtorie.
20. qu. Why Moſes is commanded to rehearſe it to Joſhua.
21. qu. Whether Amalek were wholly deſtroyed by Saul.
22. qu. Of the building of the Altar, and the name thereof.
23. qu. Of the meaning of theſe words, Thy hand is upon the throne of Jah.

Queſtions upon the eighteenth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Whether Jethro and Rehuel, or Reghuel, were the ſame man.
2. qu. How Jethro heard what the Lord had done for Moſes and Iſrael.
3. qu. The cauſes which moved Jethro to come unto Moſes.
4. qu. When Moſes had ſent Zipporah away.
5. qu. Of Moſes two ſonnes.
6. qu. How Moſes was delivered from the ſword of Pharaoh.
7. qu. At what time Jethro came to Moſes, before the Law given in mount Sinai, or after.
8. qu. Wherefore Jethro ſent before to Moſes.
9. qu. Of the manner of Moſes entertainment.
10. qu. Why Moſes declareth all theſe things unto Jethro.

11. qu. Of Jethro his joy and rejoycing.
12. qu. Whether Jethro had before this, the knowledge of the true God.
13. qu. Of the meaning and true reading of the 11. verse.
14. qu. Whether Jethro offered himselfe burnt offerings.
15. qu. In what sense they are said to eat bread before the Lord.
16. qu. How the people came to Moses, to aske of God.
17. qu. Why the Lord would have Moses to take his direction from Jethro.
18. qu. What causes Jethro would have reserved to Moses.
19. qu. Of the qualities and properties required in good Magistrates.
20. qu. How the Rulers over thousands, hundreds, &c. are to be counted.
21. qu. Of the number of these Officers, and of their continuance and succession.
22. qu. The difference betweene Moses office, and the rest.
23. qu. Of the meaning of these words, And God command thee.
24. qu. In what sense the people are said to goe quietly to their place.
25. qu. Whether these Officers were chosen by Moses.
26. qu. Whether these Officers were of equall authoritie, or one subordinarie to another.
27. qu. Of the difference betweene these Officers, and the seventie Elders, Numb. 10.
28. qu. At what time Jethro tooke his leave of Moses.

Questions upon the nineteenth Chapter.

1. QUest. Of what yeare this was the third moneth.
2. qu. What day of the moneth the same day was.
3. qu. Whether this first day of the third moneth, were the 47. day from the Passeover.
4. qu. Of the place where they incamped.
5. qu. Whether the Israelites incamped on the East side of the mount Sinai.
6. qu. How Moses is said to goe up unto God.
7. qu. Why both these names of Jacob and Israel are joyned together.
8. qu. How the Lord is said to carrie them upon Eagles wings.
9. qu. How they are said to bee the Lords chiefe treasure.
10. qu. How they are said to be a Kingdome of Priests.
11. qu. By what reasons the Lord perswaded the people, and why.
12. qu. Whether the people unfeinedly here promise obedience.
13. qu. How the Lord is said to come in the thicke cloud, when, and in what thicke cloud it was.
14. qu. Why the Lord talketh with Moses in the hearing of the people.
15. qu. Why Moses is said twice to have reported the peoples words unto God.
16. qu. Why they are bidden to wash their garments.
17. qu. Whether this were the third day of the moneth, when the law was given.
18. qu. Whether the fifteenth day of the moneth were one of the fifties, which went before the giving of the law.
19. qu. Whether our Saviour with his disciples and the Iewes, kept the Passeover together.
20. qu. How the Apostles Pentecost, and the Iewes Pentecost, fell out all upon one day.
21. qu. How the Lord is said here to descend.
22. qu. Whether Jehovah Christ Iesus appeared not in the old Testament, but onely, or usually the Angels.
23. qu. Whether it were Jehovah the Lord Christ, or an Angell that came downe upon mount Sinai.
24. qu. Why the people are forbidden to come up into the mountaine.
25. qu. Why hee shall bee killed that toucheth the mountaine.
26. qu. Why no hand was to touch him that came neere the mountaine.
27. qu. Why the beast that toucheth the mountaine is commanded to be slaine.
28. qu. Whether at any time it were lawfull for the people to goe up to the mountaine.
29. qu. Why Moses is not set downe to have reported all to the people, which was given him in charge.
30. qu. With what water they washed their cloaths.
31. qu. Why they are commanded not to come at their wives.
32. qu. Why Moses maketh such an ample and full declaration and description of the Lords glorious appearing in mount Sinai.
33. qu. Why it pleased the Lord, in this trouble and fearefull manner, to appeare with thunder and lightning.
34. qu. Whether this thunder and lightning were naturall.
35. qu. Why the Lord appeared in a thicke cloud.
36. qu. Of the blowing of the trumpet at the giving of the law, what it signifieth.
37. qu. Of the different manner of the delivering the law and the Gospell.
38. qu. What it was that Moses spake, and the Lord answered.
39. qu. Whether God himselfe, or an Angell spake to Moses in the mount.
40. qu. Why Moses is commanded to charge the people againe.
41. qu. What Priests are here understood.
42. qu. Why Moses replieth as unwilling to go downe.
43. qu. Why the Lord, not withstanding Moses answer, still chargeth him to goe downe.
44. qu. Why Aaron is bid to come up with Moses, wherefore he went up, and when.

Questions upon the twentieth Chapter.

1. QUest. Whether this be a Commandement, I am the Lord.
2. qu. Of the distinction and difference of the lawes of Moses in generall.
3. qu. Of the validitie of the lawes, Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall, which are abrogated, which are not.
4. qu. Of the difference betweene the Morall, and Evangelicall law.
5. qu. Of the manifold use of the law, in the fourefold state of man.
6. qu. Why it pleased God now, and not before to give his written law to the world.

7. qu. How the Lord spake all these words, and why.
8. qu. Why it pleased God himselfe to speake to his people, in the giving of the Law.
9. qu. Of the division of the Morall Law.
10. qu. Whether foure Commandements, or three onely belong to the first table.
11. qu. Whether all morall precepts, as of loving of God, and our neighbour, bee reduced to the Decalogue.
12. qu. Of generall rules to be observed in expounding the Commandements.
13. qu. Why the Commandements are propounded negatively.
14. qu. Of the speciall manner of accenting and writing observed in the Decalogue, more than in any part of the Scripture beside.
15. qu. Why this preamble is set before, I am Jehovah thy God.
16. qu. Why their deliverance out of Egypt is here mentioned.

Questions upon the first Commandement.

1. QUest. Whether it is better read, strange gods, or other gods.
2. qu. Why they are called strange gods.
3. qu. Whether any kinde of externall idolatrie be forbidden in the first Commandement.
4. qu. Of the meaning of these words, Before me.
5. qu. What reasons ought chiefely to move us to acknowledge the Lord onely to be our God.

Questions upon the second Commandement.

1. QUest. What a graven image is.
2. qu. What things a similitude must not bee made of to worship.
3. qu. Of the difference betweene bowing downe, and serving.
4. qu. In what sense the Lord is called a jealous God.
5. qu. Of the titles which the Lord here giveth himselfe, and wherefore.
6. qu. Of the generall commination & promise annexed.
7. qu. How it standeth with Gods Justice to punish the children for the fathers sins.
8. qu. Why mention is made of the third and fourth generation.
9. qu. Why mercie is promised to be shewed to a thousand generations.
10. qu. How men are said to hate God.

Questions upon the third Commandement.

1. QUest. What is signified by the name of God, and how diversly it is taken.
2. qu. That it is more to abuse the name of Iesus, than simplie of God.
3. qu. How many wayes the name of God is taken in vaine.
4. qu. What is required in taking of a right oath.
5. qu. Whether men be bound to sweare often.
6. qu. Whether it be lawfull to use cursing.
7. qu. For what things an oath is not to be taken.
8. qu. Whether all kinde oaths are to be kept.
9. qu. Of the commination added to the third Commandement.

Questions upon the fourth Commandement.

1. QUest. Of the order of the fourth Commandement, why it is put after the other.
2. qu. Why it is said onely in this Commandement, Remember, &c.
3. qu. VVhy the Lord thought good to appoint a day of rest, and that upon the seventh day.
4. qu. VVhether the precept of keeping the Sabbath, were altogether ceremoniall.
5. qu. To observe one day of seven unto the Lord is morall.
6. qu. VVhat things in the Sabbath were ceremoniall, what morall.
7. qu. VVhat it is to sanctifie the Sabbath day.
8. qu. Of the labouring six dayes, whether it bee a Commandement.
9. qu. VVhat works are permitted to be done upon the Sabbath.
10. qu. VVhy the children, servants, and cattell are commanded to rest.
11. qu. VVhat strangers were injoyned to keepe the Sabbaths rest.
12. qu. Why a reason is added to this Commandement.
13. qu. How the Lord is said to have rested.
14. qu. Of the changing of the Sabbath, from the seventh day, to the first day of the weeke.
15. qu. How the Lord is said to have blessed and sanctified the day.

Questions upon the fifth Commandement.

1. QUest. Whether this precept belong to the first table.
2. qu. VVhy the precepts of the second table are said to be like unto the first.
3. qu. VVhy the precept of honouring parents, is set first in the second table.
4. qu. VVhy speciall mention is made of the mother.
5. qu. VVhether the child is more bound to the father or mother.
6. qu. Why the Lord commandeth obedience to parents, being a thing acknowledged of all.
7. qu. VVho are comprehended under the name of fathers and mothers.
8. qu. VVhy the Lord here useth the name of father and mother, to signifie the rest.
9. qu. VVhat is meant by this word Honour.
10. qu. Certaine doubts removed, how, and in what cases parents are to be obeyed.
11. q. In what sense Christ biddeth us hate our parents.
12. qu. How farre children are bound to obey their parents.
13. qu. At what age it is most convenient for men to marrie to get children.
14. qu. VVhether the reciprocall dutie also of parents toward their children be not here commanded.
15. qu. VVherein the dutie of parents consisteth toward their children.
16. qu. VVhether all the duties of mercie and charitie are commanded in this precept.
17. qu. Of the true reading and meaning of these words, That they may prolong it.
18. qu. In what sense the Apostle calleth this the first Commandement with promise.

19. qu. Why the promise of long life is made to obedient children.
20. qu. What other blessings are promised under long life.
21. qu. This promise of long life did not onely concerne the Iewes.
22. qu. Whether long life simplie be a blessing, and to be desired.
23. qu. VVhy wicked and disobedient children are suffered to live long.
24. qu. How this promise of long life is performed, seeing the righteous seed are many times soone cut off.

Questions concerning the dutie of Subjects unto Civill Magistrates.

23. QUest. Of the dutie of Subjects toward their Prince.
24. qu. How farre Subjects are to obey their Governours.
25. qu. Whether it had beene lawfull for David to have killed Saul: against Bucanus.

Questions upon the sixth Commandement.

1. QUest. Why this precept is set before the other that follow.
2. qu. Whether it be here forbidden to slay any beast.
3. qu. Of the divers kinds of killing.
4. qu. How the soule is killed by evill perswasion.
5. qu. That it is not lawfull for a man to kill himselfe.
6. qu. The inward murder of the heart forbidden.
7. qu. What things are to be taken heed of in anger.
8. qu. Of rayling and reviling.
9. qu. VVhether beating and wounding, though there be no killing, be not forbidden here.
10. qu. VVhy actuall murder is such an haynous sinne before God.
11. qu. How diversly murder is committed.
12. qu. Of the divers kinds of murder.
13. qu. Magistrates are not guiltie of murder, in putting malefactors to death.

Questions upon the seventh Commandement.

1. QUest. Of the order and negative propounding of this Commandement.
2. qu. Whether the uncleane desire of the heart be forbidden in this precept.
3. qu. Other acts of uncleannesse beside adulterie here forbidden.
4. qu. Of the sinnes of unnaturall lust.
5. qu. VVhy some kinde of uncleannesse, is not forbidden by humane lawes.
6. qu. Of the greatnesse of the sinne of adulterie.
7. qu. Adulterie as well forbidden in the husband, as in the wife.
8. qu. VVhether adulterie be a more grievous sinne in the man, or in the woman.
9. qu. VVhether adulterie be now necessarily to be punished by death.
10. qu. VVhether it be lawfull for the husband to kill his wife taken in adulterie.
11. qu. Simple fornication, whether a breach of this Commandement.
12. qu. Spirituall fornication is not a breach of this precept.
13. qu. Of the lawfulnesse and dignitie of mariage.
14. qu. Of the espousals and contract of mariage, with the difference, and divers kinds thereof.
15. qu. Of mariage consummate, and the rites and orders therein to be observed.
16. q. What conditions are required in lawfull mariage.
17. qu. Of the ends of the institution of matrimonie.
18. qu. Of the mutuall matrimoniall duties betweene man and wife.
19. qu. VVhether mariage be left indifferent to all.

Questions upon the eighth Commandement.

1. QUest. Whether the stealing of men onely be forbidden in this precept.
2. qu. Of the order and phrase used in this precept.
3. qu. Of the generall heads of the things here prohibited.
4. qu. Of Sacrilege.
5. qu. Whether it bee lawfull to convert things consecrated to idolatrie, to other uses, sacred or prophane.
6. qu. Of the sacrilege of spirituall things.
7. qu. Of Simonie.
8. qu. Of common theft, with the divers kinds thereof.
9. qu. Of the divers kinds of transactions and contracts.
10. qu. Of the divers kinds of fraud and deceit used in contracts.
11. qu. Of unlawfull and cosening trades.
12. qu. How this precept is broken by procuring our neighbours hurt.
13. qu. Of the abuse of mens goods and substance, another generall transgression of this precept.

Questions upon the ninth Commandement.

1. QUest. What it is to answer a false testimonie.
2. qu. Whether false testimonie in judgement be here onely forbidden.
3. qu. How divers wayes a false testimonie is borne.
4. qu. Who is to be counted our neighbour.
5. qu. What conditions must concurre to convince one of falsehood.
6. qu. Of the divers kinds of lies.
7. qu. Some cases wherein the truth is not uttered, and yet no lie committed.
8. qu. How the truth may bee uttered, and yet this Commandement broken.
9. qu. Of the divers kinds of false testimonies.
10. qu. Of a false testimonie in matters of religion.
11. qu. Of falsehood and error in Arts.
12. qu. How falsehood is committed in judgement.
13. qu. Of the danger of bearing false witnesse in judgement.
14. qu. Of the detorting and wresting of words to another sense: another kinde of false testimonie.
15. qu. Of the violating of faith in leagues and covenants.
16. qu. Whether are more grievous, publike or private false witnesse bearing.
17. qu. Of the divers kinds of private false testimonies.
18. qu. Of a false testimonie which a man giveth of himselfe.

Questions

Queſtions upon the laſt Commandement.

1. QUeſt. The laſt precept, whether two or one.
2. qu. What manner of concupiſcence is here forbidden, and how this precept diſſereth from the former.
3. qu. whether involuntarie concupiſcence having no conſent of the will, is here forbidden.
4. qu. Why there is no precept to direct the inward paſſion of anger, as of coveting.
5. qu. Whether ſinne properly conſiſt in the internall or externall act.
6. qu. The law of Moſes did not onely reſtraine the hand, but the minde.
7. qu. Whether any morall and naturall duties were to be reſtrained by poſitive law.
8. qu. Of the perfection and ſufficiencie of the Morall law.
9. qu. Of the abrogation of the law.

Queſtions upon the reſt of this twentieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. In what ſenſe the people are ſaid to have ſeene the voices, which are properly heard, and not ſeene.
2. qu. What is meant here by voices, whether the thunder or other voices.
3. qu. VVhether there were a ſound of the trumpet beſide the voices.
4. qu. Of the feare of the people, and their going backe.
5. qu. VVhy, they deſire that Moſes would ſpeake unto them.
6. qu. VVhy the people are afraid they ſhall die.
7. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to come unto them, and why.
8. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to tempt and prove his people.
9. qu. VVhy the people ſtood afarre off, and where.
10. qu. How Moſes is ſaid to draw neere to the darkneſſe.
11. qu. VVhy the Lord ſaith he ſpake unto them from heaven.
12. qu. Why this precept is repeated, of not making any graven image.
13. qu. Of the meaning of theſe words, Yee ſhall not make with me.
14. qu. VVhy mention is made onely of images of ſilver and gold.
15. qu. VVhy the Lord commanded an Altar of earth to be made.
16. qu. VVhy the Altar was not to be made of hewen ſtone.
17. qu. VVhy the lifting up of the toole is ſaid to pollute the Altar.
18. qu. How Jeremie is made to agree with Moſes, who ſaith the Lord commanded not any thing concerning ſacrifices.
19. qu. Of the difference betweene burnt offerings, and peace offerings.
20. qu. Whether it was lawfull to ſacrifice in no other place, than before the Arke, or Tabernacle.
21. qu. Whether it was lawfull to ſacrifice before the Arke, & at the Tabernacle, while they were aſunder.
22. qu. How long the Arke was ſevered from the Tabernacle.
23. qu. Of the removing of the Tabernacle.
24. qu. Of the places where it was lawfull, or unlawfull to ſacrifice.
25. qu. How God is ſaid to come and goe, and how he is ſaid to be in the world.
26. qu. Whether it were not lawfull to goe up by ſteps to the Altar.
27. qu. Why they were forbidden to uſe ſteps up to the Altar.
28. qu. Of the abominable Idoll of the Gentiles, called Priapus, and the filthie uſages thereto belonging.
29. qu. Why the ſecret parts are counted uncomely.

Queſtions upon the one and twentieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Of the neceſſitie of the Iudiciall lawes.
2. qu. The difference of the Morall, Iudiciall, and Ceremoniall lawes.
3. qu. How the Ceremonials are abolished.
4. qu. How far the Iudicials are now to be retained.
5. qu. Why theſe lawes are called Iudgements.
6. qu. How Moſes propounded theſe lawes, by ſpeaking, or by writing.
7. qu. Why the Iſraelites were called Hebrewes.
8. qu. How the Hebrewes became ſervants.
9. qu. The difference betweene Hebrew ſervants and ſtrangers.
10. qu. Of three kinds of libertie, and how ſervitude is agreeable to the law of nature.
11. qu. How theſe ſix yeares are to be accounted.
12. qu. The reaſons why they ought to ſet their ſervants free.
13. qu. Why the ſpace of ſix yeares is limited for their ſervice.
14. qu. How the ſervant is ſaid to come in with his bodie.
15. qu. What manner of wife the maſter was to give to his ſervant.
16. qu. Whether ſuch ſeparation betweene the ſervant and his wife were lawfull.
17. qu. Why the ſervant was brought before the Iudges, and what doore he was ſet to.
18. qu. Of the divers kinds of puniſhments uſed among the Iſraelites.
19. qu. What is meant here by Ever.
20. qu. When the ſervant was to goe out free in the ſeventh yeare, when in the fiftieth yeare.
21. qu. Certaine caſes put, when the yeare of Iubile came before the yeare of remiſſion.
22. qu. Whether it were lawfull among the Iſraelites, for the parents to ſell their children.
23. qu. In what ſenſe it is ſaid, She ſhall not goe out as other ſervants.
24. qu. Whether it muſt be read, betrothed, or betrothed not.
25. qu. How ſhee was to be redeemed.
26. qu. Why it was not lawfull to ſell their maids to ſtrangers.
27. qu. What the meaning is of theſe words, He hath deſpiſed her.
28. qu. What kinde of betrothing is here underſtood.
29. qu. Whether it were lawfull to take another wife to the former.
30. q. Of the true reading and meaning of the 10. verſ.
31. qu. What theſe three things are mentioned in the text.

32. qu. Whether maid ſervants were ſet free in the ſeventh yeare, and not ſometime before, ſometime after.
33. qu. The ſummarie ſenſe of this law, concerning maid ſervants.
34. qu. Of the end, ſcope and intent of this law.
35. qu. What kinde of ſmiting is here meant.
36. qu. Why the murtherer was to die the death.
37. qu. In what ſenſe the Lord is ſaid to offer a man into ones hand.
38. qu. What places of refuge were appointed.
39. qu. Why the Lord appointed places for ſuch to flie unto.
40. qu. What is to be counted wilfull murder.
41. qu. Of the difference betweene voluntarie, and involuntarie murder, and the divers kinds of each.
42. qu. Why the wilfull murderer was to be taken from the Altar.
43. qu. What manner of ſmiting of parents is forbidden.
44. qu. Of the grievous ſin of paricide.
45. qu. The law of manſtealing expounded.
46. qu. The reaſon why manſtealing was puniſhed by death.
47. qu. What kinde of curſing of parents is here underſtood.
48. qu. What manner of ſtrife the law meaneth.
49. qu. What puniſhment the ſmiter had, if he which were ſmitten died.
50. qu. What ſhould become of the ſmiter, if the other died after he walked upon his ſtaffe.
51. qu. Of the equity of this law, in bearing of the charges.
52. qu. Who ſhould beare the charges, if a ſervant had done the hurt.
53. qu. What ſervants this law meaneth, and what kinde of chaſtiſement is forbidden.
54. q. The meaning of this clauſe, For he is his money.
55. qu. Whether this law meane the voluntarie, or involuntarie hurt done to a woman with child.
56. qu. Whether the death of the infant be puniſhed, as well as of the mother.
57. qu. Whether this law extendeth it ſelfe to infants which miſcarie, being not yet perfectly formed.
58. qu. Why the action is given unto the husband.
59. qu. Whether the law of retalion be literally to be underſtood.
60. qu. Whether the law of retalion were juſt and equall.
61. qu. Of ſervants freedome for the loſſe of an eye or tooth.
62. qu. What manner of ſmiting and goaring of a beaſt, is here underſtood.
63. qu. Why the ox that goareth was commanded to be ſtoned to death.
64. qu. Why the fleſh of the ox was not to be eaten.
65. qu. In what caſe the owner is to die, when his ox goareth any to death.
66. qu. Whether the owner might redeeme his life with money.
67. qu. What ſervants this law meaneth, Hebrewes or ſtrangers.
68. qu. Why a certaine ſumme of money is ſet for all ſervants.
69. qu. What kinde of welles this law meaneth, where, and by whom digged.
70. qu. How the live and dead ox are to be divided, where they were not of equall value.

Queſtions upon the two and twentieth Chapter.

1. Queſt. Of the divers kinds of theft.
2. qu. Why five oxen are reſtored for one, and for a ſtollen ſheepe but foure.
3. qu. Of the divers puniſhment of theft, and whether it may be capitall.
4. qu. Why the theefe breaking up might be killed.
5. qu. How it is made lawfull for a private man to kill a theefe.
6. qu. After what manner the theefe was to be ſold.
7. qu. Why the theefe is onely puniſhed double, with whom the thing ſtollen is found.
8. qu. How man is to make recompence of the beſt of his ground.
9. qu. Of the breaking out of fire, and the damages thereby.
10. qu. Why the keeper of things in truſt, is not to make good that which is loſt.
11. qu. How the fraud in the keeper of truſt, was to be found out and puniſhed.
12. qu. What is to be done with things that are found.
13. qu. How this law of committing things to truſt, differeth from the former.
14. qu. How the cauſe of theft differeth from other caſualties in matters of truſt.
15. qu. Whether it were reaſonable, that the matter ſhould be put upon the parties oath.
16. qu. What was to bee done, if the thing kept in truſt were devoured of ſome wilde beaſt.
17. qu. Of the law of borrowing and lending, when the thing lent is to be made good, when not.
18. q. Why ſuch a ſtrait law is made for the borrower.
19. qu. Why the hirer is not to make good the thing hired, as when it is borrowed.
20. qu. Whether the fornicator by this law is ſufficiently puniſhed.
21. qu. Why the woman committing fornication, bee not as well puniſhed by the law.
22. qu. What kinde of dowrie this law ſpeaketh of.
23. qu. How this law differeth from that, Deut. 22. 29.
24. qu. What was to be done, if the fornicator were not ſufficient to pay the dowrie.
25. qu. What if the fornicator refuſed to take the maid to wife.
26. qu. Whether this law were generall, without any exception.
27. qu. How farre this poſitive law againſt fornication doth binde Chriſtians now.
28. qu. Why the law doth require the conſent of the father to ſuch mariages.
29. qu. Why next to the law of fornication, followeth the law againſt witchcraft.
30. qu. What kinde of witchcraft is here underſtood.
31. qu. Whether love may be procured by ſorcerie.
32. qu. Whether witches can indeed effect any thing, and whether they are worthie to bee puniſhed by death.
33. qu. Of the odious ſinne of beſtiall and unnaturall luſt.
34. qu. The reaſons why men are given over to unnaturall luſt.
35. qu. What is meant by ſacrificing to other gods.
36. qu. Whether idolatrie now is to bee puniſhed by death.

37. qu. Why idolatrie is judged worthie of death.
38. qu. Of kindneſſe, how to be ſhewed toward ſtrangers and why.
39. qu. Why widowes and Orphanes are not to be oppreſſed.
40. qu. How and by what meanes prayers are made effectuall.
41. qu. Why uſurie is called biting.
42. qu. What uſurie is.
43. qu. Of divers kinds of uſuries.
44. qu. That uſurie is ſimplie unlawfull.
45. qu. Certaine contracts found to be uſurie, not commonly ſo taken.
46. qu. Whether all increaſe by the lone of money be unlawfull.
48. qu. Whether it were lawfull for the Iewes to take uſurie of the Gentiles.
49. qu. What garment muſt bee reſtored before the Sun ſet, which was taken to pledge, and why.
50. qu. Who are underſtood here by gods, and why.
51. qu. VVhy the Magiſtrate is not to be reviled, and with what limitation this law is to be underſtood.
52. qu. VVhether S. Paul tranſgreſſed this law, Act. 23. when hee called the high Prieſt painted wall: and whether indeed he did it of ignorance.
53. qu. VVhat is underſtood here, by abundance of liquor.
54. qu. Of the difference of firſt fruits and tithes.
55. qu. Of the divers kinds of tithe.
56. qu. Reaſons why tithes ought to be payed.
57. qu. VVhether this law bee underſtood of the redemption of the firſt borne, or of their conſecration to Gods ſervice.
58. qu. VVhy the firſt borne of cattell were not to bee offered before the eighth day.
59. qu. Of the meaning of this law, whether it were myſticall, morall, or hiſtoricall.
60. qu. VVhy they are forbidden to eat fleſh torne of beaſts.
61. qu. Of the uſe and ſignification of this law.

Queſtions upon the three and twentieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Of rayſing or reporting falſe tales.
2. qu. What it is to put to the hand to be a falſe witneſſe.
3. qu. How great a ſin it is to be a falſe witneſſe.
4. qu. VVhether in this law we are to underſtand, the mightie, or the many.
5. qu. How the poore is not to be eſteemed in judgement.
6. qu. How perſons are accepted in judgement, and how far the poore may be reſpected.
7. qu. VVhy mercie is to bee ſhewed toward the enemies oxe and aſſe.
8. qu. VVhether it is to bee read, Thou ſhalt helpe him, or, lay it aſide with him.
9. qu. How the poore mans cauſe is perverted in judgement.
10. qu. Againſt lying in judgement, and how it may be committed.
11. qu. VVho are meant here by the juſt and innocent.
12. qu. In what ſenſe God is ſaid not to juſtifie the wicked.
13. qu. VVhether a Iudge ought alwayes to follow the evidence, when he himſelfe knoweth the contrarie.
14. qu. A Iudge is not bound of his knowledge to condemne a man, not found guiltie in publike judgement.
15. qu. VVhat a dangerous thing it is for a Iudge to take gifts.
16. qu. VVhether all kinde of gifts are unlawfull.
17. qu. VVhy ſtrangers are not to bee oppreſſed in judgement.
18. qu. Of the divers feſtivals of the Hebrewes.
19. qu. VVhy the land was to reſt the ſeventh yeare.
20. qu. What the poore lived upon in the ſeventh yeare.
21. qu. VVhether the ſeventh yeare were generally neglected in Iſrael, 490. yeares together, as Toſtatus thinketh.
22. qu. Why the law of the Sabbath is ſo oft repeated.
23. qu. VVhat manner of mention of ſtrange gods is here forbidden.
24. qu. VVhy it is forbidden to ſweare by the name of ſtrange gods.
25. qu. Whether a Chriſtian may compell a Iew to ſweare by his Thorah, which containeth five bookes of Moſes.
26. qu. VVhether a Iew may be urged to ſweare by the name of Chriſt.
27. qu. VVhether a Saracen may be urged to ſweare upon the Goſpell, or in the name of Chriſt.
28. qu. VVhether a Chriſtian may ſweare upon the Iewes Thorah.
29. qu. That it is not lawfull for a Chriſtian to ſweare upon the Turkes Alcaron, or Mahomets thigh, nor for a Turke himſelfe.
30. qu. VVhy three feaſts are onely named, wherein they had more.
31. qu. Of the feaſt of the Paſſeover.
32. qu. VVhy Pentecoſt is called the feaſt of the firſt fruits.
33. qu. How the feaſt of Tabernacles is ſaid to bee in the end of the yeare.
34. qu. VVhich were the three feaſts wherein they were to appeare before the Lord.
35. qu. VVho were bound to appeare before the Lord, whether their ſervants.
36. qu. To what end the people were commanded to meet together.
37. qu. Why the people were not to appeare emptie before the Lord.
38. qu. In what place they appeared before the Lord, while the Arke and Tabernacle were aſunder.
39. qu. VVhat ſacrifice here is commanded, not to be eaten with unleavened bread.
40. qu. When the Paſſeover was to be killed.
41. qu. Wherefore they were to eat onely unleavened bread in the Paſſeover.
42. qu. VVhat firſt fruits are here mentioned in this law.
43. qu. VVhat it is to ſeeth a kid in the mothers milke.
44. qu. VVho is underſtood here to be this Angell.
45. qu. VVhy in this place the prohibition of Idolatrie is inſerted.
46. qu. VVhat manner of promiſes are here made, and why.
47. qu. VVhat is underſtood by the hornets.
48. qu. VVhy God did caſt out the Canaanites all at once, before the Iſraelites.
49. qu. Of the bounds and limits of the land of promiſe.

50. qu. Whether it be lawfull to make a league with nations, which are enemies to true religion.
51. qu. What it is to sinne against God.

Questions upon the foure and twentieth Chapter.

1. QUest. Whether this Chapter bee transposed in part, or in whole.
2. qu. What these seventie Elders were.
3. qu. Why Moses went up into the mount alone.
4. qu. VVhether all the people in generall were assembled.
5. qu. Why the Lord requireth the peoples consent to his lawes.
6. qu. What lawes they were which Moses wrote in a booke.
7. qu. Whether Moses rose up the next morning.
8. qu. Whether there were twelve pillars beside the Altar.
9. qu. Whether the names of the tribes were written in these stones.
10. qu. Whether the tribe of Levi were here reckoned among the twelve tribes.
11. qu. VVho were these young men which sacrificed.
12. qu. Why they offered no offerings.
13. qu. In what sense the Prophet Amos saith, They offered no sacrifices.
14. qu. Of the number of the sacrifices here used.
15. qu. How this place agreeth with that Hebr. 9. 19.
16. qu. VVhat is understood by the sprinkling of the bloud.
17. qu. What is meant by the dividing of the bloud into two parts.
18. qu. Whether all the people were besprinkled with the bloud.
19. qu. VVhen Moses and Aaron with the rest went up.
20. qu. Wherefore those went up with Moses.
21. qu. How they are said to have seene God.
22. qu. Wherein the place under Gods feet is said to be like to Saphir.
23. qu. In what sense the Lord is said not to lay his hand, and upon whom.
24. qu. Why they are said to eat and drinke.
25. qu. Whether this were a new Commandement, or the other mentioned, vers. 1. 2. repeated.
26. qu. What is signified by Moses going up to the mountaine.
27. qu. Of the tables of stone, whereof they were made, and wherefore given.
28. qu. Why Joshua went up with Moses.
29. qu. What became of Joshua after Moses left him.
30. qu. Wherefore Moses left Aaron and Hur in his place.
31. qu. How the cloud covered the mountaine, and what it signified.
32. qu. How the Lord appeared in fire, and of the meaning thereof.
33. qu. Whether the six dayes before mentioned, were part of the fortie dayes.
34. qu. Wherefore Moses fasted fortie dayes and fortie nights.
35. qu. What Moses did in the mount, those fortie dayes and fortie nights.

Questions upon the five and twentieth Chapter.

1. QUest. Of the diversitie of ceremonies, and the reason of the institution thereof.
2. qu. What time Moses erected the Tabernacle, whether before the receiving of the tables of the Law, or after.
3. qu. Why these oblations are called terumah, an heave offering.
4. qu. VVhy the Lord saith, Receive an offering for me.
5. qu. VVhether this free offering was the same, which was imposed upon them afterward, chap. 38. 26.
6. qu. Of the blew, purple, and skarlet colour.
7. qu. VVhat sheſh was, which the most doe translate, silke.
8. qu. VVhether they used badgers skins.
9. qu. VVhat kinde of wood, the wood Shittim was.
10. qu. VVhence they had their Shittim wood.
11. qu. VVhy no iron was used in the Tabernacle.
12. qu. To what uses these things served, which were offered.
13. qu. Of the use of the oyle and spices.
14. qu. Of the mysticall and morall application of these divers oblations.
15. qu. Of the signification of the Sanctuarie, and wherefore it was ordained.
16. qu. How the Lord is said to dwell in the Sanctuarie.
17. qu. VVhether Moses saw a patterne of the Tabernacle in the mount.
18. qu. Of the excellencie and dignitie of the Arke, and why it was made.
19. qu. Of the bignesse of the Arke, and how the cubit is to be taken here.
20. qu. VVhether the rings and barres were in the length or breadth of the Arke.
21. qu. Whether any thing were in the Arke beside the tables of stone.
22. qu. Of the spirituall, and mysticall signification of the Arke.
23. qu. Of the covering of the Arke, what fashion it was of, whether it covered the Arke, or hung over.
24. qu. Of the signification of this word Cherub.
25. qu. VVhat forme and fashion these Cherubims were of.
26. qu. VVhy they are called Cherubim and Seraphim.
27. qu. On which side of the Arke the Cherubs were placed.
28. qu. VVhether the Cherubims stood upon the ground, or upon the Mercie seat.
29. qu. The difference betweene the Cherubims which Moses made, and those which Salomon set up.
30. qu. Of the places where the Lord used to speake with Moses.
31. qu. VVhether God himselfe, or an Angell spake from the Mercie seat.
32. qu. Of the spirituall signification of the propitiatorie.

33. qu. Of the matter whereof the table was made.
34. qu. Of the forme and faſhion of the table.
35. qu. Of the placing of the two crownes, and the border of the table.
36. qu. How the table of ſhew-bread was carried.
37. qu. Of the diſhes and cups belonging to the table, the uſe and number of them.
38. qu. Of the foure kinds of veſſels in particular, which ſerved for the table.
39. qu. VVhy it was called the ſhew bread, or face bread.
40. qu. Of the order and quantitie of theſe loaves.
41. qu. Of the myſticall ſignification of the table of ſhew bread.
42. qu. Of the forme and faſhion of the candleſticke.
43. qu. Of the place where the candleſticke ſtood.
44. qu. Whether the candleſticke were made to Moſes hand.
45. qu. Of the inſtruments belonging to the candleſticke.
46. qu. How much a talent was.
47. qu. Of the myſticall application of the candleſticke.

Queſtions upon the ſix and twentieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Of the name of the Tabernacle, and which part of the Sanctuarie was properly ſo called.
2. qu. Why the Lord appointed a Tabernacle to be erected, and that in the wilderneſſe.
3. qu. VVhy the Lord would not yet have a Temple built.
4. qu. Of what ſtuffe theſe curtaines were made.
5. qu. Of the manner of worke uſed in theſe curtaines.
6. qu. Whether every curtaine were coupled by ſtrings one to another, or five onely to five.
7. qu. Of the lamps and ſtrings, how they were ſet and placed in the curtaines.
8. qu. How theſe firſt curtaines were diſpoſed in the Tabernacle, and how they hanged.
9. qu. Of the difference and diverſitie betweene the firſt curtaines and the ſecond.
10. qu. How the ſecond curtaines were diſpoſed, and of the doubling of the ſixth curtaine.
11. qu. The great curtaine of the ſecond ſort, conſiſting of ſix ſingle curtaines, what place of the Tabernacle it covered.
12. qu. What was done with the cubit which was overplus on the two ſides.
13. qu. Of the two outward coverings, whether they went all over the Tabernacle.
14. qu. Of the myſticall application of the coverings.
15. qu. How thicke the boords of the Tabernacle were.
16. qu. Whether the tenons were in the ſides, or in the bottome of the boords.
17. qu. VVhy three ſides onely were covered with boords.
18. qu. Of the ſockets and footſtalles, their number, and whether they were faſtened in the ground.
19. qu. Of the two corner boords, what breadth they were of.
20. qu. How the corner boords were joyned as twinnes.
21. qu. Of the order and number of the bars.
22. qu. Whether the middle barre went thorow the boords within.
23. qu. Of the myſticall ſenſe of the boords, with their ſockets and barres.
24. qu. Of the vaile which hanged before the moſt holy place.
25. qu. VVhat taches or hooks the vaile hanged under.
26. qu. In what part of the Tabernacle the vaile was hanged up, and why.
27. qu. Why the Table was ſet on the North, and the candleſticke on the South.
28. qu. VVherein the firſt vaile and the ſecond differed.
29. qu. Why the firſt vaile had no Cherubims, as the other.
30. qu. What vaile of the Temple it was, which was rent in the paſſion of our bleſſed Saviour.
31. qu. Of the myſticall ſenſe of theſe vailes.

Queſtions upon the ſeven and twentieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Why the Lord commanded an Altar to be made, and of the bigneſſe thereof.
2. qu. How fire was made upon the Altar framed of wood.
3. qu. Whether the Altar were made of boords.
4. qu. How this place agreeth with that, Exod. 20. 25. where the Altar is preſcribed to be made of earth, or unwrought ſtone.
5. qu. What the hornes of the Altar were, and to what uſe.
6. qu. Of the veſſels and inſtruments belonging to the Altar.
7. qu. Whether all the inſtruments were of braſſe.
8. qu. Whether the grate made to the Altar were ſet within or without.
9. qu. Of the rings of the Altar, whether they were put to the grate, or to the Altar.
10. qu. Of the myſticall interpretation of the Altar.
11. qu. VVhether one Court were made, or two or more.
12. qu. Why the Court was made, and of what largeneſſe.
13. qu. How the Tabernacle was ſituated in the middeſt of the Court.
14. qu. Of the hangings which compaſſed the Court, the faſhion and bigneſſe of them.
15. qu. Of the ſituation and placing of theſe pillars.
16. qu. Of the gate of the Tabernacle.
17. qu. Whether any of the lay people were admitted into the outward Court.
18. qu. Whether all the inſtruments of the Tabernacle were of braſſe.
19. qu. Of the myſticall application of the Court.
20. qu. What manner of oyle they are willed to bring.
21. qu. Whether the lamps burned in the Tabernacle both day and night.
22. qu. What is meant by the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and whether it be ſo rightly called.
23. qu. Whether it belonged to Aaron onely to dreſſe the lamps.
24. qu. Of the myſticall application of the lamps and oyle thereof.

25. qu. Of the description and situation of the whole Tabernacle.
26. qu. Whether every part of the Tabernacle had a spirituall signification.
27. qu. The spirituall use of the whole Tabernacle, and the parts thereof.

Questions upon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

1. Quest. Wherefore the Lord instituted a Priesthood.
2. qu. Why Aaron was chosen to be the high Priest.
3. qu. Wherein the Priesthood of Christ, and of Aaron agree, and disagree.
4. qu. Why Christ is called a Priest after the order of Melchisedeck, and not of Aaron.
5. qu. Why these Priestly garments are commanded to be made.
6. qu. Of the cunning men that wrought in the Tabernacle.
7. qu. Whether this gift of cunning and wisdome remained in the workmen after the Tabernacle was finished.
8. qu. Of the number of the Priestly garments, and ornaments.
9. qu. What garments were peculiar to the high Priests, what common.
10. qu. Which garments were put on first, which last.
11. qu. Whether the Priestly garments might at any time be carried and used out of the Tabernacle.
12. qu. Whether the high Priest did well in meeting Alexander in his Priestly attire.
13. qu. Of the maner whereof the holy garment should be made.
14. qu. Of the name of the Ephod, and the divers kinds thereof.
15. qu. How Gedeon offended in making an Ephod.
16. qu. Of the fashion of the Ephod.
17. qu. Of the two Onyx or Sardonix stones, why they are called stones of remembrance.
18. qu. Of the mysticall application of the Ephod, and the two precious stones.
19. qu. Why it was called the breast-plate of judgement.
20. qu. Of the fashion of the breast-plate.
21. qu. Of the twelve precious stones, their names, colours, qualities, and congruitie with the twelve tribes.
22. qu. That it is not now certainly knowne what these precious stones were, their qualities and signification.
23. qu. How many rings the breast-plate had, and how placed.
24. qu. What is meant by the forepart thereof.
25. qu. Whether the breast-plate were ever or never unlosed, and loosed from the Ephod.
26. qu. Whether the high Priest went into the most holy place in his glorious apparell.
27. qu. What the Urim and Thummim were.
28. qu. How judgement was given by the Urim and Thummim.
29. qu. Whether the high Priest used to aske counsell of God, by the Urim, or Ephod, and what Ephod it was.
30. qu. Of the mysticall application of the Priestly pectorall, with the Urim and Thummim.
31. qu. Of the robe of the Ephod, the fashion and matter thereof.
32. qu. Of the bels which hung in the skirts of the robe.
33. qu. Why the sound of the bels was to be heard.
34. qu. Of the mysticall application of the robe.
35. qu. Of the golden plate, the fashion thereof, inscription, and fastening.
36. qu. How Aaron is said to beare their iniquities.
37. qu. The mysticall signification of the golden plate.
38. qu. Of the imbroidered coat, the fashion and making thereof.
39. qu. Of the high Priests miter.
40. qu. Of the girdle of needle worke, and imbroidered.
41. qu. How the high Priests attire differed from the apparell of the inferiour Priests.
42. qu. Whether Aaron did alwayes put on the common Priestly garments.
43. qu. What it is to fill the hands of the Priests.
44. qu. Of the fashion and use of the linnen breeches.
45. qu. How this precept and charge concerning the linnen breeches agreeth with that law, Exod. 23. 26.
46. qu. Of the mysticall application of the inferiour Priests garments.

Questions upon the nine and twentieth Chapter.

1. Quest. Why it pleased God to have the Priests thus consecrated.
2. qu. Why the Calfe is said to bee the sonne of a bullocke.
3. qu. Why a Bullocke, two Rammes, and other things were offered at Aarons consecration.
4. qu. Why Aaron and the Priests were called to the doore of the Tabernacle.
5. qu. Why Aaron and the rest are washed and how.
6. qu. Of the Priestly apparell which Aaron put on, and why the girdle is omitted.
7. qu. How Aaron was anointed, and with what.
8. qu. How the ordinance of the Priesthood is said to be perpetuall.
9. qu. The spirituall application of Aarons manner of consecration.
10. qu. Why the Priests lay their hands upon the head of the beast.
11. qu. Of the divers kinds of sacrifices, and why some kinde of beasts were taken for sacrifice, and not other.
12. qu. Why the blood was laid upon the hornes of the Altar.
13. qu. What became of the blood which was powred at the bottome of the Altar.
14. qu. Why the fat was burned upon the Altar, and how.
15. qu. Why the flesh, skinne, and dung was burned without the host.
16. qu. Of the mysticall application of the sacrifice of the bullocke, with the rites thereof.

17. qu. VVhy the ſacrifice for ſinne was offered firſt.
18. qu. How the blond of the burnt offering was beſtowed upon the Altar.
19. qu. Why the hornes of the Altar are not here touched with blond.
20. qu. Why the dung in the ſinne offerings being an uncleane thing, was preſcribed to be burned.
21. qu. Why the burnt offering was ſo called, and how it differed from other ſacrifices.
22. qu. VVhy the burnt offering is called a ſweet ſavour.
23. qu. Of the myſticall ſenſe of the ramme of burnt offerings.
24. qu. Of the third ramme, why it is called the ramme of conſecration.
25. qu. Why the blond was put upon the right eare, thumbe and toe of Aaron.
26. qu. How the blond was ſprinkled upon the Altar round about.
27. qu. How the blond and oyle was ſprinkled upon their garments, without ſpotting.
28. qu. The myſticall ſignification of the ramme of conſecration, with the rites thereof.
29. qu. How theſe things were put into the Prieſts hands, and ſhaken to and fro.
30. qu. Whether Moſes were indeed a Prieſt.
31. qu. Whether Aaron had the breaſt and ſhoulder of the ramme of conſecration.
32. qu. What difference there was betweene the ſhake offering, and heave offering.
33. qu. What is here underſtood by the heave offering.
34. qu. Of the myſticall application of the ſhaking to and fro, and of the breaſt and ſhoulder of the ramme given unto the Prieſts.
35. qu. Of the conſecrating of Aarons ſucceſſor in his garments.
36. qu. By whom the high Prieſts ſucceeding Aaron were conſecrated.
37. qu. Whether Eleazar was conſecrated after the manner here preſcribed.
38. qu. What ſervices the high Prieſt was bound to doe in the Sanctuarie.
39. qu. Of other rites belonging to the ramme of conſecration.
40. qu. Whether all theſe rites were of the neceſſitie of the conſecration.
41. qu. Why the conſecration of the Prieſts continued ſeven dayes.
42. qu. Whether all the ſacrifices the firſt day, were iterated ſeven dayes together, or the ſacrifice for ſinne onely.
43. qu. To what end the ſinne offering was offered every day of the ſeven.
44. qu. How the Altar was cleanſed, and why.
45. qu. How the Altar ſanctified whatſoever touched it.
46. qu. Of the dayly ſacrifice, with the rites thereof.
47. qu. How much the Hin contained.
48. qu. Of the ſpiritual application of the Altar, and dayly ſacrifice.
49. qu. How the Lord appointed with the children of Iſrael.
50. qu. What the Lord promiſeth to ſacrifice.
51. qu. What is meant here by Gods glorie.
52. qu. How the Lord is ſaid here to ſanctifie Aaron.
53. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to dwell among them.

Queſtions upon the thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Why the narration of the making of the golden Altar is tranſpoſed.
2. qu. Wherefore the Altar of incenſe had hornes coming out of it.
3. qu. Wherein this Altar of incenſe differed from the other.
4. qu. How the incenſe was burned upon the golden Altar.
5. qu. Of the placing of the bars, and how the Altar was carried.
6. qu. Where the Altar of incenſe was placed.
7. qu. What the Apoſtle meaneth by the golden Cenſer, which the moſt holy place is ſaid to have.
8. qu. Why incenſe was commanded to be burned morning and evening.
9. qu. Whether any of the lamps burned by day.
10. qu. What things were inhibited to be offered upon the golden Altar.
11. qu. Whether the high Prieſt entred more than once in a yeare upon any occaſion into the moſt holy place.
12. qu. How Aaron made reconciliation upon the hornes of the Altar.
13. qu. The ſpirituall ſenſe of the Altar of incenſe.
14. qu. How this Altar of incenſe differed from Salomons.
15. qu. Whether it were lawfull to number the people, and wherein David offended.
16. qu. Whether this collection of many were commanded onely at this time, or were to continue.
17. qu. VVhy this money was collected, and to what end.
18. qu. How much the ſicle of the Sanctuarie and halfe ſicle was.
19. qu. Whether there were divers kinds of ſhekels.
20. qu. Of the halfe ſhekel which Chriſt paid for tribute, what it was, and how it came to bee paid for tribute.
21. qu. Why they were numbred onely from twentie yeares old.
22. qu. Why the poore pay as much as the rich.
23. qu. Whether all theſe things were declared to Moſes at once.
24. qu. Of the faſhion of the braſen Laver.
25. qu. Of the uſe of this braſen Laver.
26. qu. Of the myſticall application of the Laver, wherein the Prieſts waſhed.
27. qu. The difference betweene Moſes Laver, and Salomons great Sea of braſſe.
28. qu. Of the ſpices that went toward the making of the oyntment.
29. qu. Of the manner of making and compounding this holy oyntment.
30. qu. Of the uſe of this oyntment in anointing the Tabernacle.
31. qu. How all that touched the Tabernacle became holy.
32. qu. When and how Aaron and his ſons were anointed.

33. qu. Who are understood here, by the name of the children of Israel, whether the Levites also are there comprehended.
34. qu. Of the forbidden uses, whereunto this oyntment should not be put.
35. qu. Whether the anointing of Kings were not against this law.
36. qu. What it is to be cut off from his people.
37. qu. The spirituall application of this holy oyntment.
38. qu. Of the spices whereof the holy perfume was made.
39. qu. What is understood here by the word Sammim, spices.
40. qu. Of the composition and manner of making this perfume.
41. qu. Of the spirituall application of this incense.
42. qu. How the Lord talked with Moses in the Mercie seat, whether in any visible shape.

Questions upon the thirtie one Chapter.

1. QUest. How the Lord is said to call Bezaleel by name.
2. qu. Whether Caleb the sonne of Jephunch, were grandfather to this Bezaleel.
3. qu. Whether this Hur were the same before mentioned, chap. 24. 14. supposed to bee Moses brother in law.
4. qu. Of the age of Bezaleel.
5. qu. Of the difference betweene the gifts of wisdome, understanding and knowledge.
6. qu. Whether all the kinds of works are rehearsed here, which were necessarie for the Tabernacle.
7. qu. Whether the wise in heart received a new gift, or increase rather of the old.
8. qu. Why Moses was not made fit to doe the worke of the Tabernacle.
9. qu. Of the garments of ministration, what they were.
10. qu. The spirituall signification of the furnishing of Bezaleel, and Aholiab with gifts.
11. qu. Why the precept concerning the Sabbath, is here renued.
12. qu. Why it was more forbidden to labour in the building of the Sanctuarie upon the Sabbath, than for the Priests to sacrifice.
13. qu. How the Sabbath is said to be a signe, that the Lord did sanctifie them.
14. qu. The reasons why the Sabbath must bee observed.
15. qu. What death is meant in this phrase, He shall die the death.
16. qu. Why the seventh day is called Sabbath Sabbaton.
17. qu. How the observation of the Sabbath is perpetuall.
18. qu. Whether the world were made successively in time, or in an instant.
19. qu. How the Lord is said to have rested, and from what.
20. qu. What works are to bee rested from upon the Lords day, what not.
21. qu. Whether Moses received the directions concerning the Tabernacle.
22. qu. Why Moses stayed fortie dayes in the mount with the Lord.
23. qu. Why the Lord gave the written law.
24. qu. Why the Lord gave the law to the Israelites, and to no other people.
25. qu. Why the Lord delivered onely two tables of the law.
26. qu. Why the tables were made of stone.
27. qu. What is meant here by the finger of God.
28. qu. Whether Moses did write upon the tables.
29. qu. How the law is said to have beene ordained by Angels.

Questions upon the two and thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUest. Whether Moses had signified unto the people, when he would returne.
2. qu. Whether the Egyptians were the first beginners and motioners of this idolatrie.
3. qu. The occasions of idolatrie in generall, and particularly of the idolatrie of the Israelites here.
4. qu. Of the divers faults and infirmities at once here committed by the people.
5. qu. Why the people say unto Aaron, rise.
6. qu Of the divers kinds of idolatrie.
7. qu. Why they say, Make us gods, not god.
8. qu. How the Israelites would have their god to bee made to goe before them.
9. qu. Why the people came to Aaron, rather than to Hur, his fellow Governour.
10. qu. Whether at this time the Israelites wanted the presence of the cloud.
11. qu. Why they say they knew not what was become of Moses.
12. qu. Why Aaron had them pull off their earings, Quæst. 141. in Exod.
13. qu. Whether Aarons sinne is here to be excused, Epist. 83.
14. qu. Of the greatnesse of Aarons sinne.
15. qu. Why is pleased God to suffer Aaron to fall.
16. qu. Why the golden Calfe is said to bee fashioned with a graving toole.
17. qu. Why Aaron caused the likenesse of a Calfe to be made, rather than of any other thing.
18. qu. Whether the Israelites thought indeed the golden Calfe to be the God, that delivered them.
19. qu. Why Aaron proceeded to build an Altar before the golden Calfe.
20. qu. How Aaron proclaimed a holy day unto the Lord.
21. qu. Of the sacrifices, who, and what was offered upon the Altar that Aaron made.
22. qu. What is meant, in that it is said, They rose to play.
23. qu. Whether this sinne of Aaron, and the Israelites can any way be excused.
24. qu. Of the lawfulnesse of play, and recreation, and how it must be moderated.
25. qu. Why the Lord biddeth Moses get him downe.
26. qu. Why the Lord saith to Moses, Thy people.
27. qu. Of the greatnesse of the sinne of the Israelites, as the Lord himselfe describeth it.
28. qu. Why they are called a people of a stiffe necke.

29. qu. Why the Lord did not prevent the ſinne of the people at the firſt.
30. qu. Why, and in what ſenſe the Lord ſaith to Moſes, Let me alone.
31. qu. VVhether the Lord changed his minde in ſaying, I will deſtroy them, and yet deſtroyed them not.
32. qu. How the Lord promiſed to make a great nation of Moſes.
33. qu. Of Moſes prayer in generall, and the manner thereof.
34. qu. Of the reaſons which Moſes uſeth in his prayer.
35. qu. Why the Egyptians were more like thus to object, than any other nation.
36. qu. In what ſenſe the Egyptians would ſay, The Lord brought them out to ſlay them.
37. qu. Why Moſes maketh mention in his prayer, of Abraham, Iſaak, and Jacob.
38. qu. How the Iſraelites are promiſed to poſſeſſe the land of Canaan for ever.
39. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to repent.
40. qu. Whether Moſes at this time were kept in ſuſpence, or indeed obtained pardon for the people.
41. qu. VVhat was written in the tables of ſtone.
42. qu. Why there were but two tables, neither more nor fewer.
43. qu. How the tables were written on both ſides.
44. qu. Why the tables are called the worke of God.
45. qu. How many precepts each table contained.
46. qu. Whether the writing of the tables, were the firſt writing in the world.
47. qu. Where Joſhua ſtayed, all the while Moſes was in the mount.
48. qu. Whether Joſhua firſt heard the noiſe.
49. qu. Why Moſes anger was kindled at the ſight of the Calfe, and not before.
50. qu. Whether Moſes ſinned in his anger.
51. qu. Whether Moſes offended in breaking the tables of the Law.
52. qu. What the breaking of the tables ſignified.
53. qu. In what part the tables were broken, and what became of the fragments.
54. qu. Why the tables were broken at the bottome of the mount.
55. qu. Whether the Calfe were burned to powder in the fire.
56. qu. Why the powder of the golden Calfe is caſt into the river.
57. qu. How the Iſraelites were brought to drinke of the water, and why.
58. qu. Wherefore the people were compelled to drinke the powder of the Idoll.
59. qu. Whether by the drinking of the water, any viſible ſigne of difference was made among the people, who had moſt deepely offended about the golden Calfe.
60. qu. How farre Moſes fact herein is to bee imitated.
61. qu. How Moſes maketh Aaron the author and cauſe of his ſinne.
62. qu. Why Idolatrie is called a great ſinne.
63. qu. Why Moſes onely rebuked Aaron, and forbeareth further puniſhment.
64. qu. What things are to be commended in Aarons confeſſion, what not.
65. qu. Whether Aaron diſſembled, in not confeſſing plainely, that he made the Calfe.
66. qu. In what ſenſe the people are ſaid to be naked.
67. qu. Why Moſes ſtood in the gate, and what gate it was.
68. VVhether all the Levites were free from conſenting unto this idolatrie.
69. qu. Of the authoritie which the Levites had to doe execution upon the idolaters, and the rules preſcribed them.
70. qu. VVhether the Levites did not make ſome difference among the people, as they went and killed.
71. qu. VVhy none came unto Moſes, but onely of the tribe of Levi.
72. qu. Of the number of them which were ſlaine, whether they were three thouſand, or twentie three thouſand, as the vulgar Latine readeth.
73. qu. How the Levites are ſaid to conſecrate their hands.
74. qu. Of the time when Moſes came downe from the mount, and when he returned againe.
75. qu. VVhy Moſes urgeth the greatneſſe of their ſinne.
76. qu. Why Moſes ſpeaketh as it were doubtfully, If I may pacifie him, &c.
77. qu. Why Moſes againe intreateth the Lord, ſeeing he was pacified before, verſ. 14.
78. qu. What booke it was, out of the which Moſes wiſhed to be raced.
79. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to have a booke.
80. qu. VVhether any can indeed be raced out of the booke of life.
81. qu. Of the two wayes, whereby we are ſaid to bee written in the booke of life.
82. qu. VVhether Moſes did well in wiſhing to bee raced out of the booke of life.
83. qu. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I will put out of my booke.
84. qu. What day of viſitation the Lord meaneth here.
85. qu. When the Lord plagued the people for the Calfe.
86. Of the difference betweene the act of ſinne, the fault, ſtaine, and guilt.
87. qu. How God may juſtly puniſh twice for one ſinne.

Queſtions upon the three and thirtieth Chapter.

1. Queſt. At what time the Lord uttered his commination.
2. qu. Whether the narration of Moſes Tabernacle in this Chapter be tranſpoſed.
3. qu. How God ſaith he will ſend his Angell, and yet not himſelfe goe with them.
4. qu. Why the Lord ſaith, hee will not goe with them himſelfe, leſt he ſhould conſume them.
5. qu. What ornaments they were, which the people laid aſide.
6. qu. Why in publike repentance they uſed to change their habit.
7. qu. Why the Lord thus ſpake unto Moſes.
8. qu. In what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, I will come upon thee.

9. qu.

9. qu. VVhether the people put off their ornaments twice.
10. qu. In what sense the Lord saith, That I may know.
11. qu. Why it is said, They laid aside their good rayment: From the mount Horeb.
12. qu. What Tabernacle Moses removed out of the campe.
13. qu. Why Moses pitched his Tabernacle without the host.
14. qu. How farre from the campe this Tent was removed.
15. qu. VVhat is called the Tent of the Congregation.
16. qu. Why the people stood up unto Moses, and looked after him.
17. qu. Whether there were two clouds or one, to cover and conduct the host.
18. qu. Why the Lord spake to Moses in a cloud.
19. qu. How the Lord spake to Moses, face to face.
20. qu. Why Joshua is here called a young man.
21. qu. Whether is here understood Joshua, not to have departed from the Tabernacle.
22. qu. When the Lord thus said to Moses.
23. qu. How Moses desireth to know, whom the Lord would send with them, seeing hee had promised before to send his Angell.
24. qu. Whether the sole government and leading of the people, were here given to Moses, without the administration of Angels, as Burgensis thinketh.
25. qu. When and where God thus said to Moses.
26. qu. How the Lord is said to know Moses by name.
27. qu. What Moses meaneth, saying, Shew me the way.
28. qu. In what sense Moses saith, That I may finde grace, &c. which he was assured of.
29. qu. What is understood by Gods presence.
30. qu. What rest the Lord promised to Moses.
31. qu. Whether Moses here rested in Gods answer, or begged any thing further.
32. qu. Why Moses addeth, Carrie us not hence, seeing even in that place they had need of Gods protection.
33. qu. Why it is added, people upon the earth: People upon the earth, Gen. 25.
34. qu. Whether Moses desired to see the very divine essence of God.
35. qu. VVhat imboldned Moses to make this request.
36. qu. Whether Moses shewed any infirmitie in this request to see Gods glorie.
37. qu. What the Lord meaneth by All my good.
38. qu. How the Lord is said to passe by, and why.
39. qu. How the Lord is said to proclaime his name.
40. qu. Why these words are added, I will shew mercie, &c.
41. qu. Why the Lord is here doubled.
42. qu. Of the divers kinds of mercie, which the Lord sheweth.
43. qu. Of the divers visions and sights of God.
44. qu. Whether God may be seene with the eyes of the bodie in this life.
45. qu. Whether wee shall see the divine nature with the eyes of our bodies in the next life.
46. qu. Whether the divine essence can bee seene, and comprehended by the minde of man in this life.
47. qu. VVhether the Angels now, or the soules of men, shall fully see the divine substance in the next life.
48. qu. VVhether Moses had a sight of the divine essence.
49. qu. Of the meaning of these words, No man shall see me and live.
50. qu. VVhat place this was in the rocke, which the Lord here speaketh of.
51. qu. How the Lord is said to cover Moses with his hand.
52. qu. VVhy the Lord covered Moses with his hand.
53. qu. VVhy the Lord put Moses in the cleft of the rocke.
54. qu. VVhat is here understood by the Lords backparts.
55. qu. VVhat manner of visible demonstration this was, here shewed unto Moses.
56. qu. VVhere the Lord promised, that Moses should see his back-parts.

Questions upon the foure and thirtieth Chapter.

1. Quest. VVherefore the second tables were given.
2. qu. VVhy the Lord saith to Moses, Hew thee.
3. qu. VVhether the Lord or Moses wrote in these tables, and why.
4. qu. VVhether Moses was to bee readie the next morning and why.
5. qu. VVhy none are suffered to come up now with Moses.
6. qu. VVhy their cattell are forbidden to come neere the mount.
7. qu. VVho is said here to descend, and how.
8. qu. VVho proclaimed the name Jehovah, God or Moses.
9. qu. VVhy the name Jehovah is doubled.
10. qu. Of the twelve names and epithetes here given unto God.
11. qu. VVhat the Lord visiteth for in the posteritie of the wicked.
12. qu. How the children are punished for their fathers sinnes.
13. qu. Why the posteritie of the wicked are punished for their fathers sinnes.
14. qu. How Moses and Ezechiel may bee reconciled.
15. qu. How a thousand generations are to bee counted.
16. qu. The fathers merits are not extended to their children, onely Christs merits are extended to infinite generations.
17. qu. After what manner God sheweth mercie to thousands, and visiteth iniquitie to the third and fourth generation.
18. qu. Why Moses made haste.
19. qu. Of Moses prayer, the manner thereof, and of Moses perswasions used in his prayer.
20. qu. VVhat covenant the Lord maketh with Moses.
21. qu. Of the divers kinds of marvels:

22. qu.

22. qu. What marvels thoſe are which the Lord ſaith he will doe.
23. qu. Why the Gargaſhites are here omitted.
24. qu. How it ſtood with Gods juſtice to deſtroy all the inhabitants of Canaan.
25. qu. Why they were to make no compact with the Canaanites.
26. qu. Why their images were to be broken downe.
27. qu. To what uſe images being pulled downe may be converted.
29. qu. To whom it belongeth to pull downe images.
30. qu. How the Lord is ſaid to be a jealous God.
31. qu. Why they are commanded to cut downe the groves.
32. qu. Why idolatrie is called fornication.
33. qu. How farre it is lawfull and unlawfull to eat of things conſecrated to Idols.
34. qu. Why mariages with the idolatrous were forbidden, and in what caſes.
35. qu. Why the images are called molten gods.
36. qu. Why the principall feaſts of the Iſraelites are here rehearſed.
37. qu. VVhy ſome feaſts and not all are here rehearſed.
38. qu. Of the Paſſeover, the right ends and uſe thereof.
39. qu. Why the firſt borne males were onely due unto God.
40. qu. Why mention is made onely of aſhes of uncleane beaſts.
41. qu. Whether the Iſraelites were abſolutely bound to keepe the reſt of the Sabbath in earing time and in harveſt.
42. qu. VVhether now Chriſtians are neceſſarily tied to keepe the Lords day in ſeed time and harveſt.
43. qu. Why the people were charged to goe up thrice in a yeare to the feaſts.
44. qu. Who were bound to goe up to the feaſts.
45. qu. Whether all the males were bound every yeare to goe up thrice to the Sanctuarie.
46. qu. Whether Moſes were twice or thrice fortie dayes in the mount.
47. qu. Of the ſhining of Moſes face.
48. qu. Why it pleaſed God to give ſuch great glorie to Moſes countenance.
49. qu. Why Moſes face ſhined more now at his ſecond being in the mount.
50. qu. VVhy the people were afraid to come neere Moſes.
51. qu. Whether Moſes covered his face before hee ſpake to the people, or after.
52. qu. What the vailing of Moſes face ſignifieth.
53. qu. How long the ſhining of Moſes face continued.
54. qu. Whether Moſes face continually ſhined, or onely at certaine times.

Queſtions upon the five and thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. VVhy the precept of keeping the Sabbath is ſo often inculcate.
2. qu. VVhether it were ſimplie forbidden the Iſraelites to kindle a fire upon the Sabbath.
3. qu. VVhy the Lord would have his Temple built ſumptuouſly.
4. qu. Whether one may offer himſelfe to the calling of the Miniſterie.
5. qu. Of the liberall and franke offering of the people.
6. qu. Why the women offered by themſelves.
7. qu. Why the workmen are named.

Queſtions upon the ſix and thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Wherefore Moſes maketh ſuch a large rehearſall of thoſe things before named.
2. qu. Why the ſame order is not kept in the making of the Tabernacle, which was obſerved in the preſcription.
3. qu. Whether the middle barre were onely in the weſt end.
4. qu. To what purpoſe the hooks upon the pillars ſerved.

Queſtions upon the ſeven and thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. How the rings are ſaid to have beene in the ſides of the Arke.
2. qu. Why it is ſaid, He made, where the Lord ſaid before to Moſes, Thou ſhalt make.
3. qu. In what forme the branches of the candleſticke went up.

Queſtions upon the eight and thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. Whether there were more than one Laver made.
2. qu. Of the forme and faſhion of the Laver.
3. qu. How the braſen Laver is ſaid to be made of the womens looking-glaſſes.
4. qu. How the women are ſaid to watch at the doore of the Tabernacle.
5. qu. Of the meaning of theſe words, The heighth in the breadth.
6. qu. VVhat miniſterie of the Levites is here underſtood.
7. qu. Whether the gold or ſilver onely were given according to the number of the people.
8. qu. When the people were firſt numbred.
9. qu. Whether this numbring of the people, and that Numb. 1. were the ſame.
10. qu. The ſumme of the gold and ſilver offered to the Tabernacle, as it is valued with money now currant.
11. qu. What things were made of ſilver.
12. qu. Of the quantitie of braſſe which was offered.

Queſtions upon the nine and thirtieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. At what time the worke of the Tabernacle began, and when it was finiſhed.
2. qu. Why they brought their worke to Moſes.
3. qu. How Moſes is ſaid to have bleſſed them.

Queſtions

Questions upon the fortieth Chapter.

1. QUeſt. When the Lord ſpake unto Moſes to ſet up the Tabernacle.
2. qu. Why ſo often rehearſall is made of the Tabernacle, and the parts thereof.
3. qu. Why all the parts of the Tabernacle are not ſaid alike to be ſanctified.
4. qu. Whether it be lawfull for one to ſue for a Biſhopricke, or other Eccleſiaſticall preferment.
5. qu. When the Tabernacle began to be ſet up.
6. qu. What Teſtimonie was put into the Arke.
7. qu. Whether the tables of the law were put into any other Arke, beſide the Arke of the Teſtament.
8. qu. When the Prieſts were conſecrated, whether at the erecting of the Tabernacle, or after.
9. qu. Why the Prieſts were commanded to waſh their hands and feet.
10. qu. What cloud this was which covered the Tabernacle.
11. qu. How the glorie of the Lord filled the Tabernacle.
12. qu. Why it pleaſed God to make the clond a ſigne of his preſence.
13. qu. Why Moſes could not enter into the Tabernacle.
14. qu. In what order the campe marched.
15. qu. Why it is called the Lords cloud, and of foure miraculous things in it.

The end of the Table.

THE

THE EXPLANATION AND RECONCILIATION

of that point of theft, handled pag. 3. and pag. 5. of this Commentarie.

WHereas pag. 3. lin. 32. Piſcators opinion is miſliked, which would not have ſimple theft puniſhed by death, and yet, pag. 5. lin. 13. the ſame ſeemeth to be affirmed: in the firſt place underſtand by ſimple theft, ſuch theft as concurreth not with another ſin, as theft, violence and ſuch like: in the other, that is called ſimple theft, which is onely upon extreame neceſſitie, and committed in ſimplicitie. In the firſt ſenſe, ſimple theft may be puniſhed by death, not in the ſecond.

Neither in that place, pag. 5. is any exception taken to the lawes of the Realme, as too rigorous againſt ſimple theft: but it is maintained, that the lawes of the land intend not the puniſhment of * death for ſuch ſimple theft, as is more at large ſhewed, pag. 412. queſt. 3. chap. 22. but alloweth the favour of the booke. Onely a requeſt is made to Reverend Iudges, that too great exactneſſe bee not required in reading, of ſuch ſimple Clearks. But it will be objected, that ſuch as ſteale for neceſſity, being once acquitted, and burnt in the hand, if they be deprehended in the like againe, do die for it: and therefore the law of the land puniſheth ſimple theft with death. The anſwer is, that now it is not ſimple theft, being joyned with obſtinacie, and cuſtome in ſinne.

* That he which ſtealeth onely to ſatisfie his hunger, is not to die for it by the fundamentall lawes of this Realme, is evident in Bracton, and other law bookes, as is well knowne to thoſe which profeſſe the law.

Againe, it will be objected, that women ſtealing for neceſſitie, being not admitted to the privilege of their booke, though they ſteale onely for neceſſitie, doe ſuffer death for ſuch theft. It may be anſwered, that in women, ſuch kinde of theft argueth great boldneſſe and impudencie, to whom their naturall ſhamefaſtneſſe and impotencie ought to be a bridle, more than unto men, and therefore in them it is a greater fault: and yet if the like favour were extended to them, as to men in the like caſes, no great inconvenience need to be feared. Thus much in this place I thought good to adverti ſe the Reader of, leſt there might be any miſtaking.

This laborious and painfull worke was finiſhed by the Lords gracious aſſiſtance, the fifth of Iune, Anno Domini 1608. ætatis Authoris, 46. Prayſed be God our heavenly Father, with the holy Spirit, through Chriſt Ieſus our moſt bleſſed Lord and Saviour for ever, Amen.

FINIS.